Article 7(2). Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from such labour. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that awareness-raising activities were undertaken in Vientiane, Vang Vieng, Savannakhet and Champasak, targeting associations, entrepreneurs, employees working in the tourism sector, hotels, guest houses, restaurants, boat operators, entertainment shops, souvenir shops, tourist transport service units and taxi drivers. The participants were provided with information about the Anti-Human Trafficking Law and a Guide to help victims of human trafficking. The Government further indicates that there is a hotline to report trafficking in persons and another one for the counselling and protection of women and children. To further raise-awareness and prevent children from falling victim to these worst forms of child labour, the Government states that a programme informing of the effects and dangers of human trafficking is regularly broadcast on television and on the radio. The Committee notes, from the Government's report on the application of Convention No. 29, that 277 victims of trafficking were assisted (including 225 women). It notes however that the information is not disaggregated by the age of the victims.

The Committee further notes, from the Government's report to the HRC, that in order to address the root causes of human trafficking, awareness-raising campaigns on the danger of human trafficking were targeted to all members of society, especially women and children, and focused on people living in border areas and high-risk villages. Campaigns have reached 83 target areas, covering 451 villages, amounting to 17,274 people including 8,805 women. Trainings were organized for the mass media to enhance the effectiveness of advertisements against human trafficking and illegal migration and annual events were held on the World Day against Trafficking in Persons with the participation of government agencies, stakeholders and civil society organizations. The Government adds that it provides all necessary assistance to victims of trafficking. The Lao Women's Union (the Counseling and Protection for Women-Children Centre) is the main organization for the provision of free physical and psychological rehabilitation and phone counselling, and also receives reports of human trafficking cases. The Lao Women's Union also set up Counselling Offices for Women and Children in all 17 provinces and in the capital city of Vientiane, as well as 148 districts across the country. In addition, the Government indicates that it established another temporary Shelter Centre for victims of trafficking in Louangnamtha Province. Furthermore, the Government states that it improved the coordination among state agencies and CSOs in a more harmonious manner in order to provide urgent and timely assistance to the victims (A/HRC/WG.6/35/LAO/1, 11 November 2019, paras 34–36). The Committee welcomes the efforts of the Government and requests it to pursue its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of trafficking as well as commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector and to continue to supply information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the measures taken to provide child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation with appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social integration, including the number of child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation who have been removed and provided with support and assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL), received with the Government's report.

The Committee notes that the Labour Code of 23 September 1946, as last amended in 2010, is currently in force in the country. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that a new draft law amending the Labour Code (draft Labour Code) has been finalized after several consultative meetings with employers and workers and the participation of the ILO. The draft Labour Code has been sent to the Council of Ministers in April 2022, but its adoption has seen delays due to the ongoing crises in the country, including the persistent changes in governments. The Committee notes with concern, however, that the Government has been referring to the revision of the Labour Code for more than a decade. In this context, the Committee hopes that the necessary measures will be taken to ensure that the revision of the Labour Code is completed as soon as possible and that it will take into consideration the Committee's comments to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide full details of steps taken or envisaged in this regard and to provide a copy of the new Labour Code, once adopted.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working in the informal economy. Following its previous comments, in which the Committee had noted that the Labour Code applies only to work performed under an employment relationship (by virtue of sections 1, 3 and 8 of the Code), the Committee notes the Government's indication that most child labourers are either Lebanese or refugees who work in unregulated sectors and secluded places.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the CGTL identifies as a priority the support of bodies responsible for inspection to monitor the employment of young persons, as well as ensuring more rigorous monitoring and inspection of labour.

The Government indicates that while there are general inspections under way, the problem remains that the Labour Code does not give powers to labour inspectors to visit the informal economy, where most child labour is found. Moreover, the Government indicates that there is a grave shortage of inspectors to curb child labour, which has consequently resulted in an upsurge in the number of children engaged in economic exploitation.

The Committee observes that the Government does not provide information regarding whether the new draft Labour Code will apply to children who work outside of an employment relationship, such as self-employed children or children working in the informal economy. The Government indicates, however, that the Committee's comments will be taken into account in the framework of the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to: (i) ensure that the draft Labour Code includes provisions ensuring its application to self-employed children and children working in the informal economy; and (ii) strengthen the role and capacities of the labour inspectorate in terms of monitoring and detecting child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 2(2) and (3). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 19 of the draft Labour Code, it is prohibited to employ young persons before the age of 15, thus raising the minimum age for employment or work from 14, as was specified by Lebanon at the time of ratification and is provided for under section 22 of the Labour Code in force. Furthermore, the Committee takes note of the adoption, on 7 July 2022, of Decree No. 9706 on regulating and determining the conditions for free compulsory education, which provides for compulsory education from ages 6 to 16.

The Government indicates that, taking into consideration the Committee's previous comments regarding the application of Article 2(3) of the Convention, it will raise the minimum age for employment or work to 16 years, instead of the 15 years provided for under section 19 of the draft Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the provisions envisaged in the new draft law amending the Labour Code regarding the minimum age for employment or work and whether this age will be raised to 15 or 16 years.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. The Committee recalls that the current Labour Code provides that "vocational training establishments may derogate from the provisions of articles 22 and 23 on condition that the adolescent is not under full twelve years of age (...)" (section 25). The Committee recalls that sections 22 and 23 of the Labour Code concern the minimum age for employment or work, and the minimum age for hazardous work and that, accordingly, children under the general minimum age for employment or work may engage in vocational training and apprenticeships, even in hazardous conditions, under the conditions provided for in these sections of the Labour Code. The Committee underlines that, under Article 6 of the Convention, children must be at least 14 years of age to undertake vocational or technical training in undertakings (apprenticeships). It also recalls that this exception to the minimum age for employment or work does not apply to hazardous work.

The Committee notes that section 45 of the draft Labour Code provides that "training contracts" whereby "the employer in a commercial, industrial, craft, professional or agricultural establishment shall undertake to provide complete vocational training consistent with the principles of the profession" may be concluded only with persons of at least 15 years, provided that the safety and morals of the concerned juvenile are fully safeguarded. The Committee expresses the firm hope that section 45 of the draft Labour Code, setting a minimum age of 15 years for entry into an apprenticeship, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention, will be adopted in the very near future.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference to sections 25 and 28 of the draft Labour Code, which provide for certain conditions of working time and occupational safety and health (handling of heavy loads) when employing a young person, that is, over 15 years of age. The Government indicates that, while the Ministry of Labour consulted with occupational safety and health experts regarding the preparation of a list of light work activities, it is of the view that such a list could lead to more hazardous risks than those arising from regulating working conditions. The Committee understands, from this statement and the provisions of the draft Labour Code, that the Government does not appear to envisage regulating light work for children over 13 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether it intends to adopt a statute or regulation formulating the conditions in which and number of hours during which light work may be undertaken as of the age of 13, and determining these types of light work activities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL) received with the Government's report.

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Trafficking. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the Ministry of Justice does not have the statistical information requested regarding the number of cases, prosecutions and convictions for the offence of child trafficking under the Anti-Trafficking Act No. 164, 2011.

The Government further provides information, in its report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), on the measures taken in the area of training as regards trafficking in persons. In particular, the Committee notes that the Directorate of Internal Security Forces delivers training sessions to its personnel on conducting investigations involving women and children, as well as specialized courses on standard operational procedures and tools for protecting children who are at risk. In the area of victim protection, the Government indicates that the Anti-Human Trafficking Bureau collaborates with a number of international organizations and associations to secure extra protection to victims of trafficking in safe shelters in secret locations. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that cases of trafficking of children under the age of 18 are detected and that investigations and prosecutions are conducted against the perpetrators. In this regard, it strongly encourages the Government to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement bodies to combat child trafficking, including the Internal Security Forces, as well as to take measures to ensure that information is compiled on these investigations and prosecutions, as well as on the number and nature of convictions and penalties imposed. Finally, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to strengthen its measures to ensure that child victims of trafficking are provided with appropriate rehabilitation and reintegration services. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and results achieved on all these points.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that, while section 3 of Annex No. 1 of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 on hazardous work prohibits illicit activities (pornography and the production or trafficking of drugs) for minors under the age of 18, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Justice does not have statistical information regarding its application in practice. Yet, the Committee observes that the Government indicates, in its report, that the dire economic situation has increased the likelihood of girls, in particular, being drawn into prostitution and the potential for children in general to be caught up in the sale, spread and use of narcotic substances. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the application in practice of the provisions of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 prohibiting the engagement of children for prostitution or pornographic purposes or for illicit activities. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that statistical information on any prosecutions and convictions made with regard to the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances or for illicit activities, is made available and to provide this information with its next report.

The Committee further notes the Government's information that section 30 of the new draft law amending the Labour Code (draft Labour Code) will prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, the production of pornography or pornographic performances, as well as for illicit activities. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the progress made in the adoption of the new Labour Code and to provide a copy of the relevant new provisions prohibiting and penalizing the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for prostitution, the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and for illicit activities.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Refugee children. Following its previous comments, in which the Committee took note of the many Syrian refugee children who were not enrolled in school and who were working in hazardous conditions in the agricultural and urban informal sectors, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding certain measures taken to protect child refugees from the worst forms of child labour, such as including Syrian children among the commitments of the National Action Plan to Eliminate the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NAP-WFCL) in 2017.

However, the Committee notes that according to the 2019 "Survey on Child Labour in Agriculture in the Bekaa Valley of Lebanon: the Case of Syrian Refugees", undertaken by the American University of Beirut, around 70 per cent of refugee children in the Bekaa Valley between the ages of 4 and 18 are working, and 75 per cent of them are employed in the agricultural sector and prone to the hazardous exposures encountered in agricultural work. Moreover, Syrian and other refugee children are facing important difficulties in accessing education.

The Committee takes note of the Lebanon Crisis Response Plan (LCRP), which is a joint plan launched in 2015 between the Government of Lebanon and its international and national partners and the Government's main response to support displaced Syrians, vulnerable Lebanese and Palestinian refugees. The Committee notes that the LCRP continues to be implemented in a holistic, comprehensive and integrated manner to achieve the following strategic objectives: (1) ensure the protection of displaced Syrians, vulnerable Lebanese and Palestinian refugees; (2) provide immediate assistance to vulnerable populations; (3) support service provision through national systems; and (4) reinforce Lebanon's economic, social and environmental stability. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to continue and strengthen its efforts to protect refugee children from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of refugee children who have benefited from the initiatives taken in this regard, including those who have been supported through education. To the extent possible, please provide such information disaggregated by age, gender and country of origin.

Children in street situations. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the existence of the National Action Plan to End Street Begging by Children (NAP-ESB) of the Ministry of Social Affairs (MSA), which seeks to end child begging by ensuring legal protection for children on the streets, building capacity to protect them, rehabilitating and reintegrating them, and conducting outreach regarding the problem. The Government indicates that the latest census on children in street situations dates back to 2016 and was conducted by the MSA as part of the NAP-ESB, which shows that there were more than 15,000 children in the streets, 65 per cent of whom were Syrian, 5 per cent Lebanese, and 30 per cent of various nationalities or undocumented origins.

The Committee takes notes in this regard that a form was developed and is being used and submitted to the MSA every six months by all local and international associations working to address the issue of child begging, in which is indicated the number of children that have been supported. The Government states that such associations have succeeded in removing from the streets 9 per cent – out of a total of 6,000 children across the country who have been reached – and return them to school or enrol them in non-formal education. The Government also indicates that a study has been prepared that proposes solutions to constrain and prevent parents from sending their children on the streets. Proposals include such ideas as making cash assistance to families in need conditional upon their children's education, or providing a practical and effective foster environment or a family that might serve as an alternative for any child who has been subjected to exploitation. The Committee also takes note of the Government's detailed information regarding the measures that the MSA continues to implement in the field of child protection, including within the Strategic Plan for the Protection of Women and Children that is being implemented since 2014 and has been extended until 2027 in partnership with UNICEF. The Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children in street situations from the worst forms of child labour, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social reintegration, in the framework of the NAP-ESB and of general child protection measures adopted by the MSA. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, including the number of children in street situations who have been provided with educational opportunities and social integration services through these or other measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Liberia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption, on 15 June 2022, of the Hazardous Work List for Children in Liberia, adopted pursuant to section 21.4(b) of the Decent Work Act, 2015. This comprehensive list defines the sectors and tasks in which children under 18 years of age may not be engaged in, and the tasks in which children aged 16 and 17 years may engage in, provided safety measures are in place including adequate training and supervision. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Regulation setting the Hazardous Work List for Children, including the number and nature of violations regarding young persons engaged in hazardous work.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes with concern, from the 2022 Education Sector Analysis, published by the Government in collaboration with UNESCO, that both overall enrolment and the proportion of learners in public schools have decreased. The Education Sector Analysis highlights that net enrolment: (1) decreased at the primary level from 49 per cent in 2015 to 43 per cent in 2020; and (2) stayed the same for the lower secondary level, at 14 per cent. The Committee notes, from the 2021 United Nations Entity for Gender Equality's (UN Women) Country Profile on Gender Equality, 2021, that: (1) the civil wars and consequent economic crises (specifically the Ebola crisis in 2014 and the COVID-19 pandemic) have led to the persistence of obstacles for girls and women's access and participation in education; (2) in 2019, one-third of the population had no access to education, 31 per cent of the population attained primary education, and 36 per cent attained secondary and tertiary education, a gap which deepens in relation to geographic location (urban versus rural areas) and gender. In 2019–20, 52 per cent of children in urban areas and 32 per cent of children in rural areas were attending primary school. For secondary school, 34 per cent of children were attending in urban areas compared to 12 per cent in rural areas; (3) when working in rural areas, teachers endure challenging working conditions and limited support that is reflected in the lack of infrastructure and teaching materials, as well as disproportionate student-teacher ratios and multi-age and multi-level learners; and (4) the long distances required for children to attend schools in rural areas is a hindering factor that prevents them from accessing education.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has experimented with partnership schools as a way of improving school enrolment and attendance. The partnership schools have given attention to digitization and standardization, while raising external funds to help bolster teacher salaries in the schools they run. The Committee also notes, from the Government's report to the United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC) Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, that the Ministry of Education provided hot meals to 280,709 school children in 1,316 pre-primary, primary, and community schools across the 15 counties (A/HRC/WG.6/36/LBR/1, 24 August 2020, para. 58). The Committee also notes the 2022 Annual Reports of the United Nations Development Programme and UNICEF, from which it notes that: (1) the Government launched in October 2022 the Accelerated Community Development Programme (ACDP) to help reduce poverty and inequalities by creating employment opportunities for persons helping to build or repair basic infrastructures such as schools and health centres. The ACDP will help reduce inequalities that exist between urban and rural areas by improving access to basic social and economic infrastructures such as health and education; (2) following the Transforming Education Summit (TES) and a follow-up conference on national education in December 2022, the Government expressed its commitment to increase the budget for education; and (3) a new Education Sector Plan (ESP 2022-2025) was developed. While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee once again strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access of all children to free basic education. It requests the Government to provide: (i) information on the concrete measures taken or envisaged in this regard, aimed, in particular at increasing the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and lower secondary levels, and reducing school drop-out rates; (ii) information on the impact of the new Education Sector Plan 2022-2025; and (iii) updated statistical information on the results obtained, disaggregated by age and gender.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes from the 2019-2020 Demographic and Health Survey of the Liberian Institute of Statistics and Geo-information Services, that 32 per cent of children aged 5 to 17 years were engaged in economic activities or domestic work, at or above the threshold defined for their age group. Among those, 30 per cent of children worked in dangerous conditions. The most frequently reported hazardous condition was carrying heavy loads (15 per cent), followed by working with dangerous tools or operating heavy machinery (7 per cent). The Survey indicates that the percentage of children engaged in hazardous work grows with the age of the child, from 21 per cent among those aged 5 to 11 years to 48 per cent among those aged 15 to 17 years. The Government indicates that, through partnerships, including with the United States Department of Labour ATLAS Project, the number of children engaged in child labour, including in hazardous work, is expected to decrease. Considering the large number of children under 18 years of age who are engaged in hazardous work, the Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to protect children from these worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide up-to-date statistics and other information on the nature, extent, and trends of the worst forms of child labour. Noting that the Government does not provide information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed. To the extent possible, all information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Maldives

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2013)

Previous comment

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory education. Regarding the Committee's request that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure compulsory education up to 16 years, in line with the minimum age for admission to employment or work in the country, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, in accordance with section 14 of the new Education Act, 2020, every child between 4 and 16 years of age living in the Maldives is required to complete compulsory education. In addition, section 21(b) of the Child Rights Protection Act 19/2019 provides that parents and the State must ensure the provision of compulsory primary and secondary education to all children.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the detailed list of hazardous types of work that children under 18 are not allowed to participate in under any circumstances, adopted through the General Regulation on Child Rights Protection (R70-2020) of 2020 (section 10). These include, for example, any work that may have a negative impact or pose a threat to their health, physical, mental or spiritual development; construction work; work involving hazardous chemicals and explosives; work in garages, carpentries and warehouses; mechanized fishing activities; selling products that contain tobacco; work at an operating port; and certain jobs in the tourism sector.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 26(b) the Child Rights Protection Act 19/2019, like section 6 of the Employment Act, provides that children under 16 years of age may be employed in connection with training associated with their education or development. The Committee notes that no minimum age is specified in this regard. The Committee recalls that, under Article 6, while the Convention does not apply to work done by children or young persons in schools for general, vocational or technical education or in other training institutions, it applies to work done by children under the age of 14 years in undertakings in the context of an apprenticeship. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the minimum age for entering into an apprenticeship is not below 14 years. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Article 9. Penalties and labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Labour Relations Authority (LRA) identified 26 cases of child labour in 2019, 35 cases in 2020, 25 cases in 2021 and 39 cases in 2022. The Government indicates that all cases had "parental consent", except for one case identified in 2021. Employers who are found to be in violation are advised to comply within a specified time frame. If the employer fails to comply by the deadline, the LRA will take administrative action against the employer. A referral letter is also sent to the Ministry of Gender, Family, and Social Services (MGFSS) if any child under the age of 18 is working in violation of the Employment Act and the General Regulation on Child Rights Protection (2020/R-70). The Committee notes the Government's indication that only one case identified without parental consent in 2021 was referred to the MGFSS. The employer in question was asked to comply with the Employment Act. As the employer complied within the time frame specified, no further administrative action was taken.

While taking note of this information, the Committee stresses: (1) that violations of the Employment Act regarding the minimum age for admission to work and employment should not be contingent upon the consent of the parent; and (2) that Article 9(1) of the Convention requires Member States to take all necessary measures, including the provision of appropriate penalties, to ensure the effective enforcement of its provisions. The Committee also recalls that even the best legislation only takes value when it is applied effectively (General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, para. 410). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed, regardless of parental consent. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard, as well as to continue to provide information on the application in practice of section 12 of the Employment Act, including the number and nature of violations identified and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2013)

Previous comment

Article 3(b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, pornography or pornographic performances and penalties. Prohibition. The Committee previously noted that the Special Provisions Act to Deal with Child Sex Abuse Offenders, 2009, provided for a penalty of up to 25 years of imprisonment for the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, pornography or pornographic performances (sections 17 to 19). It also noted that the Penal Code of 2014 provides for a penalty of imprisonment of not more than eight years for soliciting or facilitating child prostitution (section 621) and of not more than two years for child pornography (section 622). The Committee notes, according to the Crime Statistics communicated by the Government, that there were 145 cases of sexual offences in the third quarter of 2020, which include one case of prostitution and 128 other sexual offences. It is indicated that victims include 80 children under the age of 14 and 43 children aged 15 to 17. In the fourth quarter of 2020, there were 130 sexual offence cases, including six cases of prostitution and 89 other sexual offences, implicating approximately 64 children under the age of 14 and 29 children aged 15 to 17 years. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are conducted of persons who have used, procured or offered a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, as well as to continue providing information on the number of cases pertaining to sexual offences, while indicating more specifically the number of cases relating to the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution or pornography, in application of the sections of the Special Provisions Act mentioned above.

Criminal responsibility of children. The Committee previously noted that children who had been victims of sexual offences might be criminalized according to Shariah Law, including the charges of zina, which signifies voluntary sexual intercourse outside a marriage relation. In this regard, section 7 of the Special Provisions Act to Deal with Child Sex Abuse Offenders, 2009, (“sexual offences carried out by children”) provides that sexual offences carried out by a child remain an offence, and that a child over 13 years of age who commits such an offence is liable to detention for a period of up to five years. While noting that section 53 of the Penal Code provides that children aged 15 to 18 are presumed to comply with the defence of immaturity in sexual offence cases, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that child victims of sexual exploitation are treated as victims and not criminals.

The Committee notes that section 11 of the Child Rights Protection Act 19/2019 provides that every child under 18 years of age shall have the right to protection from sexual exploitation, which includes protection from being “forced into prostitution” and other acts of exploitation and being used in the creation or production of pornographic material. It observes, however, that children could still be treated as offenders in cases where they are used, procured or offered for prostitution, if they are not “forced” to do so. The Committee once again refers to its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions and underlines that children who are used, procured or offered for prostitution should be treated as victims, and not as offenders who have committed a criminal offence (para. 510). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who are under the age of 18 years are treated as victims rather than offenders. To this end, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 7 of the Special Provisions Act to Deal with Child Sex Abuse Offenders, 2009, is amended so that children under 18 years of age who are victims of prostitution or other types of commercial sexual exploitation are not criminalized and/or imprisoned.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 133 of the Drugs Act, according to which any person who causes a child below 18 years of age to participate in the commission of an offence under the Act should be punished by the maximum penalty determined for that offence, which could be life imprisonment. The Committee notes with regret an absence of information on this point. It notes the Government's information that if a child is used for the purpose of drug trafficking, the Maldives Police Service (MPS) will refer the case to the Child and Family Protection Service (CFPS), and the person who has engaged the child faces criminal charges under section 133 of the Drugs Act. The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2019 UNDP report on "Youth vulnerability in the Maldives", drugs are a serious and growing problem in the country. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent the involvement of children in drug-related activities and to ensure the effective enforcement of the Drugs Act. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 133 of the Drugs Act, with regard to the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties which have been applied for the offence of the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production or trafficking of drugs.

Clause (d) and Article 4. Hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2015)

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. Children working in family enterprises. Recalling that under Article 2(1) of the Convention, no children under the minimum age (15 years) shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, and in the absence of information from the Government, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend section 23 of the Federal Labour Act, which prohibits the employment or work of children under the age of 15 years for work outside the family, to also apply to all children working within family enterprises or performing domestic work within the family.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of hazardous types of work. Regarding the determination of hazardous types of work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee notes, from the 2019 National Survey on Child Labour (ENTI), that 19.3 million children aged 5 to 17 years perform domestic chores in their family. It also notes the Government's reiterated statement, in its report, that there is no exception to the minimum age for admission to work, set at 15 years. Noting the high number of children under the age of 15 years engaged in family and domestic work who are often not remunerated, the Committee encourages the Government to regulate light work, in conformity with Article 7(1) and (3) of the Convention, which provides that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is not likely to be harmful to their health or development, and shall prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken.

Labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes, from the 2019 ENTI Survey that: (1) a total of 3.3 million children aged 5 to 17 years are engaged in child labour, representing 11.5 per cent of children; (2) 900,000 children aged 5 to 14 years are working; (3) child labour is prevalent in agricultural activities, forestry, hunting and fishing (31.6 per cent), mines, construction and industry (24.5 per cent), commercial and sale activities (14 per cent), and street selling (7.9 per cent); and (4) despite a steady decrease in the number of children aged 5 to 15 years working since 2007, it increased in 2019 (6.9 per cent of children aged 5 to 15 years were working in 2007, 4.6 per cent in 2013, 3.6 per cent in 2017 and 4.1 per cent in 2019).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between December 2018 and June 2022, the Decent Work Unit of the Labour Inspectorate carried out 111,847 inspections relating to general working conditions, which included child labour inspections, and it detected no cases of child labour. The Committee notes with concern that despite the recent increase in the number of children working under the minimum age of 15, no cases of child labour were detected by the labour inspectorate. Noting that while the ENTI Survey indicates an increase in child labour and that the labour inspections have not detected cases of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to follow-up on the information derived from the Survey by taking the necessary measures to monitor and identify cases of child labour and to provide information on the results achieved in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide updated information on the number of children under the age of 15 years engaged in child labour and those under 18 years of age engaged in hazardous work, as well as the number and the nature of the violations detected and the investigations conducted. In so far as possible, the information provided should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Mexico (CTM) and the Authentic Workers' Confederation of the Republic of Mexico (CAT), communicated by the Government in its report.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication, in its report, that the National Guard benefitted from a wide range of training activities to improve its skills and detection capabilities of crimes of sale and trafficking of minors, including for purposes of commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee takes note of the annual reports of the Secretariat of Security and Civil Protection (SEGUR) on the crime rate at the national level, in which it notes that: (1) in 2022, there were 802 investigations relating to the crime of trafficking in persons and 13 cases of trafficking of minors. Of these 13 investigations, eight convictions were handed down; (2) in 2021 there were 625 investigations for alleged trafficking in persons and 29 investigations for trafficking of minors; and (3) in 2020 there were 558 investigations for trafficking in persons and 21 investigations for trafficking of minors.

From the Government's report on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee notes the actions of the Office of the Special Prosecutor dealing with violence against women and trafficking in persons (FEVIMTRA) to improve the detection, care of victims and prosecution for crimes of trafficking in persons in general. These actions include, the adoption and implementation of: (1) the Protocol to prevent, suppress and punish trafficking in persons, especially women and children, supplementing the United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime; (2) the Protocol for the Use of Procedures and Resources for the Rescue, Assistance, Care and Protection of Victims of Human Trafficking; and (3) the National Protocol for Inter-institutional Coordination for the Protection of Girls, Boys and Adolescents Victims of Violence.

The Committee further notes, from the Government's report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) that, in collaboration with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), it is developing a National Information System on Human Trafficking (SINTRA), which will allow the registration, consultation, monitoring and analysis of information on cases of trafficking in persons (CRC/MEX/6-7, 18 December 2020, para. 240). Noting the various measures taken by the Government, including within the framework of the SEGUR and the FEVIMTRA, the Committee requests it to: (i) continue its efforts; (ii) carry out an evaluation of all these measures; and (iii) provide information on their impact. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that any person who engages in the trafficking of children is subject to in-depth investigations and robust prosecutions. Noting the absence of information on the penalties imposed, it also requests the Government to provide information on the criminal penalties imposed for the crime of trafficking of children.

Article 3(b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) in December 2019, the Ministry of Tourism, the Ministry of Interior, and the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare, adopted the road map for the prevention and fight against sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, trafficking of minors and child labour in the travel and tourism industry. The road map is a commitment to develop actions aimed at strengthening the tourism industry and promoting mechanisms to identify cases, promote and implement effective responses to guarantee a compliance framework in the travel and tourism sector, as well as to comply with the Government's international commitments on this issue; (2) the Strategy for the Care and Protection of Indigenous Children and Children of Afro-Mexican Descent 2022-2024 includes a strategic component focused on protecting children against all forms of discrimination and violence, including sexual exploitation. It further notes that the Government provides data disaggregated by type of offence and by gender, on 101 convictions, between July 2018 and June 2022, for crimes relating to the corruption of minors, child prostitution and child pornography, with sentences ranging from 2 to 43 years imprisonment; and (3) in 2021, investigations were carried out on 149 cases of child pornography, 64 cases of trafficking for sexual exploitation, and 10 cases of prostitution of minors and persons with disabilities, but it is not clear if these cases were prosecuted and if convictions were handed down. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to combat child sexual exploitation, including prostitution and child pornography, particularly by ensuring that thorough investigations are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied against the perpetrators. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the impact of such measures; and (ii) the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed for violations relating to child prostitution and child pornography.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 47(VI) of the 2014 General Act on the rights of girls, boys and young persons was amended by a 2022 Decree to provide that the central, federal and municipal authorities shall: "take the necessary measures to prevent, address and penalize cases in which children over 15 years of age are engaged in work that may harm their health, education or impede their physical or mental development, labour exploitation, the worst forms of child labour, forced labour and slavery". The Committee also notes with interest the amendment by Decree of 2022 of section 176(II)(8) of the Federal Labour Law, which considers as hazardous work the following activities: "Agriculture, forestry, sawing, hunting and fishing, use of chemicals, handling of machinery, heavy vehicles, and those determined by the competent authority".

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2019, 1.1 million children aged 5 to 17 years were working in hazardous activities, of whom 72.9 per cent were boys and 27.1 per cent girls. It notes the Government's statement that between 2017 and 2019, there was a decline in the number of children engaged in hazardous work of 138,645 children. However, the Committee notes from the 2019 National Survey on Child Labour (ENTI) that, in 2019, there were: (1) 1.1 million children aged 15 to 17 years engaged in hazardous work; (2) 0.7 million children aged 5 to 15 years engaged in hazardous work; and (3) 1.2 million children aged 5 to 17 years engaged in unpaid domestic work in their own homes under inadequate conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the root causes of the engagement of children in hazardous work. It also again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that no children under 18 years of age are engaged in work likely to harm their health, safety or morals. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information, disaggregated by gender, age and sector of activity, on the number of violations detected and the penalties imposed in this respect.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Trafficking. The Committee notes the observations of the CTM and the CAT in which they express the need for the Government to intensify its efforts in the detection of and fight against the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's information on: (1) the adoption of the National Programme to prevent, punish and eradicate crimes relating to trafficking in persons and to protect and assist victims of these crimes 2022–24; and (2) the continued actions taken by FEVIMTRA in accordance with the four objectives of the National programme.

With regard to prevention, the Government provides detailed information on the FEVIMTRA's awareness-raising activities to the general public and its action to strengthen the capacities of the personnel responsible for dealing with the victims of trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures, including within the framework of the National Programme to prevent, punish and eradicate crimes relating to the sale and trafficking of children and to protect and assist the victims of these crimes.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in and removing them from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the National Project for the strengthening of shelters that provide assistance to victims of trafficking, in collaboration with the UNODC. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) between 2018 and 2022, it was possible to provide comprehensive support to 93,780 children in 460 municipalities; (2) there is no precise data indicating how many children were removed from the worst forms of child labour and socially reintegrated with their families, but the vast majority of these children were reintegrated in the education system; (3) the FEVIMTRA, through its Specialized Shelter for women victims of violence and crime assisted 167 children between 2015 and 2020; and (4) the Specialized Shelter offers a multidisciplinary care scheme that guarantees coverage of the basic needs of its residents and assists each victim in a personalized manner for their recovery.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, in July 2021, the Additional Protocol for the Search of Children and Adolescents was approved, a tool to allow authorities to coordinate their efforts in the search of disappeared children, which: (1) includes actions for the search of children deprived of liberty for the purpose of trafficking, exploitation and recruitment; and (2) mandates the authorities to search for children in this situation and ensure their protection and physical and emotional integrity. Noting the time-bound and effective measures taken by the Government to remove children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, the Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures in this regard. It also requests it to continue providing information on the number of children removed from these worst forms of child labour and then rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee notes the adoption of the Action Plan of Mexico, in the framework of the Global Alliance to put an end to all forms of violence against children. The Action Plan envisages actions for the protection of children against commercial sexual exploitation through the development of a strategy involving all three levels of Government (central, federal and municipal), the private sector and civil society organizations with eight strategies: (1) interinstitutional coordination; (2) legislative harmonization; (3) training to strengthen the protection; (4) data generation; (5) campaigns and awareness actions; (6) safe environments; (7) complaint services and attention to victims; and (8) prevention of the Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Girls, Boys and Adolescents.

The Committee notes that, in December 2020, the Executive Secretariat of the National Protection System of Children and Adolescents (SIPINNA), in cooperation with the Programme of the European Union for social cohesion (EUROSociAL) began working on the design of the Strategy for the Prevention of Sexual Exploitation of Children and Adolescents (ESCNNA) in Mexico, a process that materialized with the signature between both instances in November 2021 and the publication of the Strategy in April 2022, which has the objective of implementing intergovernmental actions in collaboration with families, communities, the media and private sector, to eradicate the commercial sexual exploitation of girls, boys and adolescents.

The Committee also notes the Government's participation in: (1) the Regional Initiative for a Latin America and Caribbean Free from Child Labour; and (2) meetings and commissions of the Regional Action Group of the Americas for the prevention of sexual exploitation of children in travel and tourism (GARA). The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts and encourages it to pursue international cooperation with neighbouring countries to eliminate the commercial sexual exploitation of children and trafficking for that purpose. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken in terms of the number of children removed, to the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by gender and age.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information on the implementation of the National Programme for the Development and Protection of Children for 2017–21, communicated in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182). Achievements include the adoption of a decree pursuant to which enterprises are implementing child-friendly policies, such as day care options or parents' councils, and several training initiatives on child labour either aimed at empowering children and parents or benefiting labour or state inspectors and crime prevention officials. The Committee also takes note of the Government's information that, in 2019, it expanded the coverage of the "Child Money Programme", which contributes to income poverty reduction. In 2021, the programme covered a total of 1.2 million children.

The Committee notes that, in the framework of the EU-funded ILO Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project, both a qualitative (2022) and a quantitative (2021–22) studies on child labour were conducted. According to these studies, 207,951 children aged 5–17 years were engaged in economic activities, representing approximately 24.3 per cent of the total population of children of this age. Of these children, 138,500 (16 per cent of all children) were found to be in situations of child labour: 78,268 were aged 5 to 12 years; 2,049 were aged 13–14 years and working 14 hours or more per week; and 58,183 were in hazardous work. The quantitative study reveals that children in child labour are mostly found in the agricultural sector and rural areas fetching water and gathering firewood. The qualitative study reveals that parents of children in hazardous work are often not aware of the conditions in which their children are found working, and that the most common hazards reported include exhaustion, heavy lifting, extreme temperatures, and injuries. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to redouble its efforts, in collaboration with the social partners, for the elimination of child labour in all sectors, and requests it to provide information on the progress made in this regard and the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated information on the nature, extent and trends of child labour in the country, especially in the agricultural sector.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Informal economy. Regarding the Committee's previous request that the Government modify its draft Labour Law to ensure that the protections provided are extended to children working outside of an employment relationship, the Committee notes with interest that the scope of application of the revised Labour Law of 2021 has been extended to employment relations beyond the formal economy. The revised Labour Law provides that all workers in the formal and informal economy, job seekers and trainees at work including self-employed, herders, members of a partnership or a cooperative, apprentice and interns shall enjoy the basic rights set out in section 5.1, which includes the prohibition of child labour and elimination of the worst forms of child labour. It further provides that a state labour inspector is obliged to supervise and ensure compliance with labour law provisions on the employment of minors (section 162.3.1), while guaranteeing labour inspectors' power to freely access enterprises, organizations and workplaces that are subject to inspection without prior notice (section 162.2.1) and supervise the employment conditions of employees in the formal and informal economy (section 162.2.7).

The Committee further notes the Government's information that, following the adoption of the revised Labour Law, public awareness-raising and training of relevant civil servants, including child protection and labour inspectors, employers and trade union representatives were conducted with the support of the ILO, benefiting 1,092 officials in 2021. The Committee also takes note of the information provided by the Government in its report under Convention No. 182 regarding the inspections carried out by inspection and investigation agencies. It notes in particular that, from May to November 2022, joint inspections organized for early identification and prevention revealed 14 children found engaging in child labour, who then received child protection services. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the labour inspection services to enable them to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, including children working on their own account or in the informal economy, including in agriculture. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and nature of violations found related to child labour, including in the informal economy.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the revised Labour Law has not established a link between the minimum age for admission to employment and the age of completion of compulsory schooling. While section 142.1 of the revised Labour Law sets the minimum age for employment at 15, in line with Mongolia's specified minimum age for work and employment, the Law on Education, 2002, provides that the age of completion of compulsory basic education is 16 years (section 46.2.3). On the other hand, the Law on Primary and Secondary Education, 2002, sets the length of compulsory education at nine years, starting from the age of six (sections 7.2 and 12.4). This would make education compulsory up to the age of 15 years. The Committee once again recalls that, pursuant to Article 2(3) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to employment (currently 15 years) should not be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the age of completion of compulsory schooling is harmonized throughout its national legislation. If the age for completion of compulsory schooling retained is higher than 15 years, the Committee requests the Government to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work accordingly.

Article 7(1) and (3). Light work and determination of light work activities. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the revised Labour Law regulates light work by permitting children aged 13 and above to engage in light work with the consent of their legal representatives, and provided that such work does not negatively affect the child's health, growth and development or hinder their education (section 142.3). Moreover, pursuant to section 142.4 of the revised Labour Law, the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection has defined the types and conditions of light work permissible for children aged 13 years or above by Order of the Minister for Labour and Social Protection No. A/123 dated 10 June 2022, with the support of the ILO T4DW project.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the revised Labour Law provides that a person under the age of 15 years may only be employed in artistic performances, sports and advertisements with an individual permit issued by a child rights inspector and based on the written consent of the child's legal representatives (parents, guardian), hours of work and other conditions of employment (section 142.5). Moreover, new amendments to the Law on Child Protection provide that a child's participation in cultural and sports events, artistic performances and sports competitions must be in circumstances where the child's growth, development, health and moral development are not negatively affected (section 9.1); and require measures to not interrupt the child's schooling and address any learning gaps resulted from such participation (section 9.2).

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that section 142.6 of the revised Labour Law requires an employer to keep a register of employees under the age of 18 years by recording their parent's names, and their first name, date of birth, assigned duties, expected duration of employment and conditions of work; and to notify respective local government bodies in charge of labour issues and labour inspection within 10 days from the date of establishing such employment relationship.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Child trafficking. The Committee notes that, as opposed to previous years when it was not able to identify cases of child trafficking, the Government indicates that between the beginning of 2017 and July 2022, 237 victims of trafficking were identified, among which 95 were children under the age of 18, under section 13.1 of the Criminal Code. The Government specifies that, in 2020, the police investigated 14 human trafficking cases with 18 defendants and 40 victims, and in 2021, 9 cases with 19 defendants and 20 victims (19 children). Of those, 5 cases are in investigations, 2 cases in prosecutions and 2 cases in judicial process. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking all the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and effective prosecutions of individuals who engage in the trafficking of children are carried out. It requests the Government to continue providing information in this respect, including statistical information on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed on perpetrators.

Article 3(d). Hazardous work. Horse jockeys. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's detailed information, in its report, regarding the measures it continues to take in order to improve the protection of the rights and safety of child jockeys, including the updating of standards on protective equipment, the registration of child jockeys, and the allocation of accident insurance payouts. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it is taking measures of identification, investigation and referral to legal authorities to implement Resolution No. 57 of 2019, which prohibits the organization of horse races from 1 November to 1 May every year, and that state child rights inspectors have been monitoring the implementation of the Resolution and that fines were imposed on those who have held horse races in violation of its provisions. The Committee also notes that the Minister of Labour and Social Protection adopted the "List of jobs prohibited to minors under 18 years of age" by Order No. A/122 of 2022, which provides that children under the age of 18 cannot be engaged in "professional horse racing" (section 2.1.14.1) and in "horse racing, horse race short distance and long-distance pre-training from the 1st of November to the 1st of May every year".

However, the Government indicates that the Law on Naadam Festival was amended in June 2022 to raise the minimum age for jockeying from 7 to 8 years of age.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the 2022 qualitative Child Labour Study published by the National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia in collaboration with the ILO EU-funded Trade for Decent Work Project, while it has been claimed that the prohibition of horse racing from 1 November to 1 May each year is strictly adhered to, child jockeys and horse trainers have confirmed that short-distance races, training races and horse racing for betting are still organized throughout the year. Moreover, the quantitative Child Labour Survey 2021-22, the key findings of which were launched in June 2023, indicate that 1,200 children took part in races and help trainers take care of the racehorses. In its report, the Government also indicates that children continue to be used as child jockeys, with 3,814 child jockeys found in 82 horse races nationwide as at June 2022; 27 of these races were organized by provincial and soum governors and 50 were organized for special occasions and offering ceremonies without permission from the authorities.

The Committee further observes the detailed information contained in the 2022 qualitative child labour study regarding the conditions of child jockeying, which illustrate its inherently hazardous nature. For instance, while statistical data showed a decreased number of injuries due to falling off horses, fatalities and injuries remain a matter of concern. On average, 34.6 children per month were injured due to falling off horses from January to April and September to December in 2019 and 2020, while this number increased to 1,282 children per month from May to October. Out of those children injured due to falling off horses, 46.5 per cent fell off so-called ordinary horses and 53.5 per cent fell off racehorses in 2019 and 2020. The study also indicates that child jockeys are not brought to the hospital for what are considered “minor” injuries, such as concussions, skin tears and bleeding, as a result of which many injuries are not reported. Similarly, while the Government indicates that there were 2.8 times less horse races in 2019 than 2018, and that the number of injured child jockeys decreased accordingly, the Committee observes that the Government itself reports that there were still 448 injured child jockeys in 2019.

The Committee notes with deep concern that, despite the health and safety measures adopted by the Government, children under 18 years of age continue to be engaged in work which is clearly harmful to their health and safety, as reflected by the number of child jockeys who continue to suffer serious injuries. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government to prohibit professional horseracing to children under the age of 18, the Committee notes with regret that children from the age of 8 years can still legally race horses in short distance and long-distance pre-training from 1 November to 1 May every year.

The Committee therefore once again draws the Government’s attention to Article 3(d), which states that work which, by its nature and the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children under 18, constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and that, by virtue of Article 1 of the Convention, member States are required to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee also recalls that Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190 addresses the possibility of authorizing the employment or work of young persons as from the age of 16 under strict conditions that their health and safety be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that measures should be taken to raise the minimum age for admission to hazardous work to 16 years, even if the required protective conditions are adequately provided (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, para. 380). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take measures, as a matter of urgency, to ensure that the Law on Naadam Festival is amended to prohibit the engagement of children as child jockeys until at least 16 years of age in all circumstances and throughout the year. Where jockeying is performed by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that such work is only carried out in accordance with the strict conditions set out in Paragraph 4 of Recommendation No. 190, namely that the health and safety of such young persons be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in that activity. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that these laws are effectively applied in practice through rigorous inspections, effective prosecutions and penalties against those engaging children in horse jockeying, and to provide information in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee, having previously noted that school dropouts affected children from rural areas more than children from urban areas, notes the Government's information according to which it is taking several measures to combat and prevent school dropouts. Such measures include: (1) the plan to eliminate learning loss of students 2021-22 by the Ministry of Education and Science; (2) the training of school teachers to accommodate different learning styles and needs of students at risk of dropping out; (3) the operationalization of the Education Management Information System which monitors students' learning outcomes and tracks their transfers; and (4) the implementation of the "Green light" action guideline to support children alienated from the classroom and who have suffered physically or mentally during the COVID-19 pandemic. Furthermore, the Committee takes note of the programmes adopted by the Government to improve its education system, in particular Mongolia's Long-Term Development Policy Vision 2050 to advance education equity, efficiency and outcomes, and the Education Sector Mid-Term Development Plan 2021-30, two policies of which are to enhance the quality and relevance of the education system and to increase equal access and inclusiveness.

While taking note of this, the Committee observes that new challenges are emerging regarding access to education in Mongolia, in particular due to the effects of climate change. A 2019 UNICEF report on "The impact of climate on education in Mongolia" indicates that climate trends, including more extreme winter conditions, heavier summer precipitation (leading to flash floods), and more extreme summers all have a significant impact on Mongolia's education sector. The main impacts include reduced access to education – especially in the harsh, cold winters when roads are impassable or too dangerous, and after flash floods when roads are destroyed – as well as missing school or dropping out of school due to health complications (particularly in winter). These trends result in lower attendance rates, and potentially impact learning outcomes. Livelihood concerns are also widespread with herding families being particularly dependent on favourable weather conditions to make a living and obtain sufficient income to send children to school. In addition to these concerns, schools have also reported insufficient access to water and sanitation facilities, food insecurity and access to energy as important issues that affect students' well-being during climate-related disasters. Considering that education is key to preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to adopt and effectively implement the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the educational system, in order to ensure that all children have equal access to free basic education, in particular those impacted by climate trends, and continue reducing the risk-factors leading to school dropouts. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and the results obtained, particularly with regard to increasing school attendance rates and reducing school drop-out rates, in primary and lower secondary education.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work and application of the Convention in practice. Children working in informal artisanal activities and other sectors. The Committee recalls that informal artisanal activities and formal artisanal activities involving five employees or fewer, are excluded from the application of the Labour Code under section 4. Therefore, section 143 of the Labour Code, which sets a minimum age of 15 years for employment or work, does not apply to these sectors. In this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government, in its report, indicating that the bill concerning conditions of work and employment in activities of a purely traditional nature, prohibiting work for children under 15 years of age in this sector, was amended and referred to the Secretariat-General of the Government in 2017. It indicates that in 2022, consultations on the bill were resumed by the Department of Economic Inclusion of Small Enterprises and Employment, with the Department responsible for handicrafts and the Moroccan Federation of Chambers of Handicrafts. However, the Government indicates that the adoption process has been delayed by another bill concerning the exercise of artisanal activities, as well as the exceptional circumstances imposed by the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that one of the conditions for obtaining the national quality label for handicrafts is the non-employment of children under 15 years of age. This measure seeks to promote quality among craftworkers and enterprises in the artisanal sector. The Government also indicates that it will continue to fund the apprenticeship training programme, in accordance with the provisions of section 6 of Act No. 12-00 on vocational training, which requires beneficiaries to be over 15 years of age. The Committee reiterates the firm hope that the bill concerning conditions of work and employment in activities of a purely traditional nature will be adopted in the very near future and requests the Government to send a copy when it has been adopted. It requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour, especially in the artisanal sector.

Child domestic workers. As regards the issue of child domestic labour, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 9(1). Penalties. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that labour inspectors recorded 509 observations relating to child labour and removed 13 children under 15 years of age from child labour and 37 children aged 16 to 18 from hazardous work. Moreover, in 2021, the Department responsible for labour signed eight partnership agreements with civil society associations in this regard. As part of the implementation of these agreements, a total of 332 children under 15 years of age were removed from child labour and 180 children aged 16 to 18 were removed from hazardous work.

However, the Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has not sent any information on the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed on persons violating provisions giving effect to the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern that, despite the fact that it has been raising this issue since 2005, the penalties for violating the prohibition on the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work still do not constitute an adequate deterrent to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention concerning hazardous work. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that all persons who employ children under 18 years of age in hazardous work are prosecuted and incur penalties that constitute an effective and adequate deterrent, in accordance with Article 9(1) of the Convention and in line with the more severe penalties envisaged in section 151 of the Labour Code. The Committee also encourages the Government to address the root causes of child labour in the country.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the type of violations of the Convention detected by the labour inspection services, the number of persons prosecuted for each type of violation and the penalties imposed, particularly in relation to the provisions giving effect to the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3(a) and (d) and 7(1) of the Convention. Forced or compulsory labour, hazardous work and penalties. Child domestic labour and penalties. Begging. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on the number and nature of violations detected, the number of prosecutions and the penalties imposed on persons who engage children under 18 years of age in domestic work in hazardous or abusive conditions. The Committee requests the Government to take appropriate measures to combat child domestic labour, including through the effective implementation of section 6 of Act No. 19-12, which establishes 18 years as the minimum age for employment as a domestic worker, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice against persons who subject children under 18 years of age to domestic labour in hazardous or abusive conditions. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations detected, the number of prosecutions and the penalties imposed.

Article 3(a). Trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government with regard to the adoption of Decree No. 2-17-40 of 6 July 2018, establishing the composition and operating procedures of the National Commission for the Coordination of Measures to Combat and Prevent Trafficking in Human Beings.

The Committee also notes the Government's information that between 2017 and 2020, a total of 723 individuals were prosecuted for trafficking in persons, of whom 523 were men and 200 women, and among whom 626 were Moroccan and 97 foreigners. In 2019, a total of 68 persons were sentenced to imprisonment, including: 7 persons for more than 10 years; 17 persons for 6–10 years; 19 persons for 3–5 years; 8 persons for 1–2 years; and 17 persons for less than 1 year.

The Committee notes, from the 2022 report of the National Commission for the Coordination of Measures to Combat and Prevent Trafficking in Human Beings, that between 2017 and 2020, a total of 719 victims of trafficking in persons were recorded, of whom 414 were men and 305 women. Among these victims, 536 were Moroccans and 183 foreigners. A total of 367 persons were victims of sexual exploitation, 44 of forced labour and 63 of begging, among other forms of exploitation. However, the Committee notes the absence of specific data on the age of the victims of trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation in practice of Act No. 27-14 concerning action against trafficking in persons, including information on the number of child victims of trafficking, disaggregated by gender and by age, as well as the number and nature of convictions and criminal penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic labour. The Committee notes the Government's indications that in 2021, the Ministry for Economic Inclusion, Small Business, Employment and Skills (MIEPEEC) concluded eight agreements with associations with a view to combating the worst forms of child labour. In this regard, a total of 180 children of 16 to 18 years of age were removed from hazardous work, of whom 45 (38 girls and 7 boys) were removed from domestic labour. The Government also indicates that MIEPEEC has stepped up its actions to promote decent work in Morocco through the "MAP16 Maroc" project, which focuses on child labour in domestic and hazardous work at the national level, as well as in the regions of Rabat/Salé, Marrakesh/Safi and Kenitra/Gharb. These actions include awareness-raising and advocacy campaigns, the dissemination of tools summarizing rights and obligations under Act No. 19-12 establishing the conditions of work and employment of domestic workers, as well as training for MIEPEEC partner associations in the area of action against child labour between 2018 and 2020, to improve their methods of working with target groups. Furthermore, in 2021, the General Confederation of Moroccan Enterprises, with the ILO, created an online platform, "Iltesam", as part of the Moroccan Private Sector Initiative to Combat Child Labour. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts with regard to the identification, removal and reintegration of children under 18 years of age working as domestic servants who are victims of economic or sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2013)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the military authorities' information, in their report, that a Committee and Working Committee on the Prevention of the Six Grave Violations were established to prevent those six grave violations against children in armed conflict, including the recruitment or use of children as soldiers. It also notes the military authorities' indication that it has implemented the National Action Plan on the Prevention of Killing, Maiming and Sexual Violence against Children in Armed Conflict (2020-2021), and that this National Action Plan has been renewed and is being implemented in 2022-2023. Moreover, the Committee notes that the Child Rights Law, 2019, contains a chapter (XVII) on children and armed conflict, in which the measures that should be taken by the governmental departments, governmental organizations, armed forces and armed groups, to respect, protect and fulfil the rights of children affected by armed conflict are enumerated (section 60). Section 61 of the Law provides that anyone who recruits or uses children in armed conflict or coerces or summons children by force to transport food, weapons and supplies, commits an offence. Moreover, sections 63 and 64 prohibit the recruitment and use of children under 18 into military service by the Tatmadaw (Myanmar military) or into other groups. Penalties for these offences, both imprisonment and fines, are provided for under sections 103(b) and 104 of the Act.

The Committee notes, however, that several UN sources point to the continued use and recruitment of children by armed forces and groups. According to the Report of the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict of 4 January 2022, until the end of January 2021, the Special Representative was accelerating her engagement with the Government, led by the National League for Democracy, and the Tatmadaw armed forces on ending and preventing the recruitment and use of children. The Tatmadaw had issued four military directives prohibiting the use of children in armed conflict, and developed a roadmap with UN support to end and prevent this practice, but dialogue between the Special Representative and the Tatmadaw was halted after the military takeover on 1 February 2021. Moreover, in March 2021, the de facto authorities announced their intention to revise the July 2019 Child Rights Law, thereby risking an erosion of current protection standards. In the most recent annual report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, the Tatmadaw, including the integrated border guard forces, was relisted for the recruitment and use of children, following its failure to end and prevent the ad hoc use of children in non-combat roles (A/HRC/49/58, paras 10-11).

Furthermore, in his 14 June 2022 report entitled "Losing a generation: how the military junta is devastating Myanmar's children and undermining Myanmar's future", the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar indicates that he has received various reports that the recruitment and use of children by the Myanmar military has indeed increased since the coup (A/HRC/50/CRP.1, para. 61). Second-hand accounts suggest that, at least in certain parts of the country, junta officials and junta-aligned armed groups have placed demands on villages or households to produce a certain number of recruits, without safeguards to ensure that children are not enlisted. The Special Rapporteur also received credible reports of the recruitment of children by some ethnic armed organizations since the coup, as well as of the use of children as forced labour by these armed groups, including to carry military supplies in conflict zones (paras 65 and 66). The Special Rapporteur also received reports from several sources that many children are living, working, and fighting with units from the newly formed People's Defense Forces (PDFs). Often these children are making weapons, serving food, or acting as lookout guards. It is also likely that children have been involved in fighting with PDFs (para. 67).

In this regard, according to the most recent report of the Secretary General on children and armed conflict of 23 June 2022, the United Nations verified 503 grave violations against 462 children (390 boys, 69 girls, three of unknown gender) in Myanmar. Among other grave violations, the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 280 children (260 boys, 20 girls), some as young as 12, attributed to the Tatmadaw (222), Kachin Independence Army (KIA) (50), Restoration Council of Shan State/Shan State Army – South (RCSS/SSA-South) (6), Shan State Progress Party/Shan State Army (SSPP/SSA) (1), and the Arakan Army (AA) (1), in Rakhine (203), Kachin (40), Shan (16), Mon (13), Chin (2), Kayah (1), Magway (1), Mandalay (1), Sagaing (1), Taninthayi (1) states and regions and in Yangon (1) (A/76/871 – S/2022/493, paras 131 and following). While the Secretary General noted the intention of the Tatmadaw to continue implementing the 2012 joint action plan on the recruitment and use of children, he was extremely concerned by the continued high number of children used, predominantly in Rakhine (para. 140). The Secretary General also took note of, and expressed his concern about, other grave violations being perpetrated against children in the context of armed conflict in Myanmar, such as killings and maiming, abductions, attacks on schools and hospitals, and detention and denial of due process.

The Committee must deeply deplore the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in Myanmar, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. It recalls that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, Member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. The Committee urges the military authorities to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed forces and armed groups in Myanmar. The Committee also urges the military authorities to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of all persons found guilty of recruiting children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict and to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, pursuant to the Child Rights Law, 2019. The Committee requests the military authorities to provide information on the number and nature of investigations carried out against the perpetrators of these crimes, as well as on the number of prosecutions conducted, and the number and nature of penalties imposed.

Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes that, in addition to the provisions of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law of 2005 (Anti-Trafficking Law) criminalizing the sale and trafficking of children and youth, the Government has adopted the Child Rights Law, 2019, section 48(a) of which provides that no child shall be forced to work or be employed in the worst forms of child labour, which include the sale and trafficking of children. The military authorities indicate, in this regard, that, between January 2017 and May 2022, there were 278 cases of child trafficking, and that the trafficking of children is being prosecuted both under the 2005 Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law and the 2019 Child Rights Law.

The Committee observes, however, that the military authorities do not provide statistics on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied. It also points out that humanitarian crises, such as armed conflicts can lead to an increase in trafficking in persons (Inter-Agency Coordination Group against Trafficking in Persons (ICAT), "Trafficking in persons in humanitarian crises", Issue brief #2, 2017). Taking into consideration the current situation of protracted conflicts in Myanmar, the Committee therefore urges the military authorities to intensify their efforts to combat child trafficking and to ensure, in this regard, that in-depth investigations and prosecutions are conducted against the perpetrators. It once again requests the military authorities to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed pursuant to section 24 of the Anti-Trafficking Law, as well as pursuant to section 48(a) of the Child Rights Law.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the military authorities' information that, in 2019, the enrolment rates in the age group 10–15 years was 68.69 per cent for boys and 75.59 per cent for girls.

The Committee notes in this regard that, according to a report of the Global Partnership for Education of 4 January 2022 on continuing education for crisis-affected children in Myanmar, despite implementing the National Education Strategic Plan (NESP) (2016-21) with a focus to undergo major transformation, Myanmar is continually facing challenges in ensuring quality education for all children. Moreover, three factors have been adding fuel to a long-standing crisis: (1) the protracted conflicts in various parts of the country that have been ongoing for decades; (2) the COVID-19 crisis which the Ministry of Education has not yet been successful in addressing; and (3) the military takeover which has had immediate impacts and will continue to plague an already dire learning crisis.

Months into the COVID-19 crisis which resulted in nation-wide school closures, it was quite evident that long-term impacts on education would be faced by children throughout the country, especially for those already marginalized. In December 2020, the World Bank reported that less than 40 per cent of children enrolled in school in February 2020 had been engaged in learning activities with lower rates for children in the bottom wealth quintile. The military takeover has further derailed the return to school, and no doubt increased the negative impacts on learning. The report further reveals that school closures are most risky for children from marginalized households who are more likely to be drawn into child labour, and that fears for the safety of children going to school have been heightened by the ongoing conflict, leading to education stakeholders observing unprecedented levels of school dropouts.

Similarly, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar notes, in his report of 13 June 2022, that the combined effect of the COVID-19 pandemic and the military coup have massively disrupted education in Myanmar (A/HRC/49/76, paras 71, 72). In May 2021, 12 million children were estimated to have missed more than a year of schooling because of the COVID-19 pandemic. Moreover, even after pandemic restrictions were lifted in late 2021, many teachers stayed away from the classroom as part of the civil disobedience movement, and many families made the decision to not send their children to government-run schools. Armed conflict, displacement and other security concerns have also impeded access to education. Attendance rates for government schools are estimated to be below 50 per cent. Junta forces have also occupied and attacked schools in conflict areas, further disrupting education and threatening the lives of student and teachers.

The Committee must therefore express its deep concern at the significant number of children who are deprived of basic education due to the many crises affecting the country. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the military authorities to take measures to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access for all children to free basic education. In this regard, the Committee requests the military authorities to take the necessary measures, to increase school enrolment, attendance and completion rates at the primary and secondary levels. It requests the military authorities to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and to provide updated statistical information on school enrolment, attendance and completion rates.

Clause (b). Provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children in armed conflict. The Committee notes with regret that the military authorities do not provide any information on the removal of children from the armed forces or groups and their rehabilitation and social integration. It notes that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 23 June 2022, the detention of children for alleged association with armed groups continues: the United Nations verified the detention of 87 children (75 boys and 12 girls) by the police and the Tatmadaw for their alleged association with armed groups. In addition, a boy who had been detained by the Tatmadaw since September 2020 was released in 2021 (A/76/871 – S/2022/493, para. 133). The Secretary-General expressed concern at the increase in the number of cases of detention of children, and their being denied due process, called for the implementation of the 2019 Child Rights Law, and urged the Tatmadaw to immediately release detained children and recalled that children should be treated primarily as victims. In this regard, the Committee observes that the Child Rights Law calls for all charges against children involved in armed conflict (except serious offences) to be dropped immediately, and for these children to be handed over to the Department of Social Welfare for reformation and care at a Training School, Shelter or Temporary Care Station (section 60(e)). The Law also requires measures to be taken to provide appropriate assistance for the education, rehabilitation and reintegration of children recruited or used in armed conflict, in order to restore their physical and psychological well-being (section 60(h)). The Committee therefore urges the military authorities to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed forces and armed groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It asks the military authorities to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children removed from armed forces and armed groups and socially integrated.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of types of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years, which the Government has been referring to since 2011, has not yet been adopted. The Government indicates, in its report, that the list will be gazetted once the amendments to the Labour Act are completed. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the list of types of hazardous work is adopted without further delay. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the list, once adopted.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the regulations on the light work activities permitted to children between 12 and 14 years of age have not yet been adopted. The Government indicates that the list will be gazetted once the amendments to the Labour Act are completed. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the above-mentioned regulations are adopted soon, so as to determine the light work activities permitted to children between 12 and 14 years of age, as well as the number of hours during which and the conditions under which such employment may be undertaken. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the regulations on light work, once adopted.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2023.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2023), regarding the application of the Convention by Nepal.

Articles 3(a), (b) and (d) and 7(2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and time-bound measures to provide direct assistance for their removal and rehabilitation and social integration. The Conference Committee requested the Government to eliminate the worst forms of child labour, notably in bonded labour in agriculture, commercial sexual exploitation in the entertainment industry and bonded labour in the brick kiln industry. It further requested the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from these worst forms of child labour and provide adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including through access to free, basic and quality education.

Similarly, the IOE, while commending the efforts made by the Government to provide assistance, observed that the Government should continue its efforts to ensure that all child victims of forced labour, exploitation in brick kilns or commercial sexual exploitation, receive appropriate rehabilitation and social integration services, including access to education.

Child bonded labour (in agricultural-based bonded labour practices and domestic work). The Committee takes note of the information shared by the Government in its report according to which an integrated act on forced labour has been drafted, and that it will come into force in the near future. In addition, in the framework of the Five-Year Strategic Plan (2021/22-2026/27) of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MoLESS), regular labour inspections will be undertaken to ensure that no child is employed in forced labour. Regarding the reintegration of former victims of forced or bonded labour, the Government indicates that families living in the far West of Nepal have been prioritized. In the framework of the ILO project "A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labour" (Bridge Project II), the Government has supported 1,115 former bonded labourers and also supported the rehabilitation and education of their children. The Ministry of Education, Science and Technology also continues to provide scholarships to freed Kamaiyas, Haliyas and Haruwa-Charuwas (agricultural-based bonded labour practices), while residential support was provided by this Ministry to 3,421 marginalized students, including freed Kamlari girls (offering girls for domestic work to families of landlords). The Government indicates that such actions will continue to be implemented. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that all child victims of bonded labour receive appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social integration, including access to education, and to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Commercial sexual exploitation. Regarding the Committee's previous observation that an estimated 13,000 people engaged in the adult entertainment sector started working as children under 18 years of age, the Committee notes the Government's indication that statistics on this issue are unavailable and that a data system will be developed to monitor and report on the exact number of children in the entertainment industry. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to develop and put in place as soon as possible a data system on children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, including in the entertainment industry, and to provide the statistics collected, once they are available. The Committee also requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to eliminate this worst form of child labour, to remove the identified child victims of commercial sexual exploitation and to provide them with the appropriate assistance to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, as a matter of urgency.

Hazardous work in brick kilns. The Committee notes the Government's indication that children in this worst form of child labour continue to be identified and rescued through the interventions of various sectors, and that these interventions will continue in the future. For instance, the Government indicates that the joint efforts of the local governments and of a non-governmental organization led to six children (two girls and four boys) being rescued from the brick kiln industry, reintegrated with their families and given support for their education.

While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee recalls that a 2021 report on the employment relationship survey in the brick kiln industry in Nepal exposed that 10 per cent of workers in brick kilns were children (approximately 17,738 child workers), as well as the prevalence of labour exploitation in this sector. The Committee therefore urges the Government to redouble its efforts to prevent all children under 18 years of age from working in the brick kiln industry and remove child victims from this worst form of child labour and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken, as well as on the number of inspections undertaken in brick kilns, violations detected with regard to children engaged in hazardous work in this sector, and penalties assessed.

Articles 5, 7(1) and 7(2)(b). Monitoring mechanisms, penalties and direct assistance for child victims of the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking. The Conference Committee requested the Government to redouble its efforts to combat the trafficking of children and to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Nepal Police and the High-level task force to prevent and control the incidence of trafficking and illegal migration.

Similarly, the IOE states in its observations that the Government must continue its efforts to combat the trafficking of children because of its extreme seriousness and provide information on the actions taken and their results.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that 422 police personnel were capacitated as regards combating human trafficking in 2022–23. The Government also indicates that the Anti-Trafficking Bureau of the Nepal Police is preparing to establish offices in all seven provinces, and that it is developing awareness-raising measures to sensitize communities of the risks and consequences of child trafficking through, for example, informative documentaries. As regards the withdrawal of children from trafficking, the Government indicates that bi-monthly coordination meetings between governmental and non-governmental organizations have been taking place with a view to ensuring effective interventions, and that 152 victims of trafficking, including 12 children, were rescued in 2022–23. In addition, the Child Helpline, which provides counselling, legal aid, information, rescue and temporary shelter facilities for child victims of trafficking and vulnerable children, and the Missing Children Service Centres (MCSCs) which operate in partnership with the Nepal Police and provide support and services to child victims of trafficking and exploitation, continue to be operational. The Government indicates that the expansion of the MCSCs to all provinces is planned, in collaboration with the National Child Rights Council. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking in children and to rescue child victims of trafficking and rehabilitate and socially integrate them. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures and activities undertaken in this regard by the Nepal Police, the High-level task force, the Child Helpline and the MCSCs, and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Conference Committee requested the Government to improve the functioning of the education system to facilitate access to free, basic and quality education for all children, particularly girls and indigenous children, and to take measures to increase the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates and reduce school dropout rates.

The Government indicates in this regard that the Ministry of Education is continuing to implement programmes to provide free meals and textbooks, as well as to offer residential scholarships. The Government indicates that the basic level (grades 1 to 8) enrolment rate has reached 96.1 per cent and that 77.1 per cent of students have completed basic level education in 2022. The Government intends to continue implementing all current actions, increase the Girls Scholarships and conduct campaigns to promote girls-friendly and violence-free schools. In addition, in the framework of the second National Master Plan on the Elimination of Child Labour (2018-2028) of the MoLESS, actions are planned with regard to improving education, such as ensuring the prevention of dropouts through bridging programmes and the expansion of vocational education. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to facilitate access to free, basic and quality education for all children. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken and the results achieved with regard to increasing the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates and reducing the school drop-out rates, as well as specific information as concerns girls and indigenous children.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Niger

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labour has still not been adopted and that the process is still receiving technical and financial support from the ILO through the MAP16 project on measurement, awareness-raising and policy engagement to accelerate action against child labour and forced labour. The Government indicates in its report that a national consultant has been recruited to support the process and a number of workshops are planned which will contribute to the finalization, validation and adoption of the Plan of Action. In this regard, the Committee notes that in May 2023 the consultant undertook a documentary analysis of national sectoral policies and programmes contributing to action on the root causes of child labour, which should serve as a framework for discussion with key actors to update the set of public policies and related legislative texts and identify the strategic pillars of the National Plan of Action to Combat Child Labour. The analysis also indicates that several public policies exist and are being implemented in Niger which should contribute to combating the deep-rooted causes of child labour in the country. These include the Economic and Social Development Plan 2022–26, the Agricultural Policy 2016 and the National Population Policy 2019–35. However, the Committee observes that these policies do not specifically address child labour and that, according to the analysis, the complexity of the phenomenon of child labour in Niger requires relevant strategic planning to guarantee the intersectionality of interventions and allow the identification of priorities and the roles and responsibilities of institutional actors in action to combat child labour in order to make it more dynamic and better adapted to the national context.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the analysis, the determining factors of child labour in Niger include the poverty and vulnerability of households, demographic pressure on the school system and other factors, such as traditional practices which are prejudicial to children. The Committee also notes that a 2022 UNICEF report analysing risks and impacts on children in Niger sets out in detail the risks that affect or could affect the well-being and development of children, and which could potentially be an obstacle to the achievement by Niger of its international commitments, including the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). These risks include the impact on children and services of climate change, environmental risks (and particularly floods, desertification, epidemics and storms) and conflict, internal and external displacement, shocks and stress. The Committee observes that climate change and other risk factors can increase the incidence of child labour, and the circumstances in which it occurs. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Plan of Action is prepared and adopted in a manner that takes into account and addresses the root causes of child labour in the country, namely: the poverty and vulnerability of households, demographic pressure on the school system, traditional practices that are prejudicial to children, as well as other risk factors, such as the impact of climate change, conflict and migratory movements. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in terms of the progressive elimination of child labour in the country.

Article 2(1). Scope of application, labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, in which the Committee expressed deep concern at the number of children who have not reached the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years who are working in the informal agricultural sector, often in hazardous conditions, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, although the Labour Code does not cover informal work or own account work, nothing prevents labour inspectors from intervening in these sectors and that in practice they are increasingly active in the informal economy. The Government adds that, within the framework of the project to provide support and advice for migration policy (APM/GIZ) negotiated by the Ministry of Employment, Labour and Social Protection, resources and equipment have been provided to the labour inspection services (IT equipment, computers, vehicles, and so on) and labour inspectors have benefited from training on international legal instruments protecting human rights.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the results achieved within the framework of the project to reduce child labour through sustainable agriculture in Niger, including: (1) the establishment of regional dialogue frameworks for the actors involved on child labour in agriculture in four regions; (2) capacity-building for actors at the communal, departmental and regional levels in relation to action to combat child labour in agriculture through awareness-raising and training activities; and (3) the preparation of a study on occupational risks and health in agricultural work, which led to the development of a guide with recommendations relating to a list of hazardous types of work in agriculture, stock-raising and the environment (fishing). The Committee further notes that the activities of the MAP16 project in Niger include not only those related to the adoption of the Plan of Action, but also the strengthening of action to combat child labour in agriculture and the building of the institutional capacities of the principal stakeholders (National Steering Committee, child labour cells, labour inspection and the social partners). The Committee once again requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that all children who work, including work outside a formal employment relationship, as is the case of children who work in the informal economy, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection services, as well as any other supervisory bodies involved, so as to improve their direct interventions in the informal economy, particularly in the agricultural sector, and to provide information on the measures adopted and the results achieved in this context.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Further to its previous comments, in which it drew the Government's attention to the fact that the age of completion of compulsory schooling of 16 years in Niger is higher than the minimum age for admission to employment of 14 years, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it undertakes to take the Committee's comments into account in the revision of Act No. 2012-45 of 25 September 2012 issuing the Labour Code. The Committee once again emphasizes that Article 2(3) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to employment shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and that, if the minimum age for admission to work or employment is lower than the school-leaving age, children may be encouraged to leave school as they are allowed by law to work (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, para. 370). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the general minimum age for admission to employment or work in order to link it to the age of completion of compulsory schooling, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising another matter in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government, in its report, relating to the activities implemented as part of the ILO Bridge Project, From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labour, in place since 2015. This project has, inter alia, supported the development of training modules and the organization of training workshops for various officials of the judicial system (justice system officials, police and gendarmerie). The Committee notes, in this regard, that according to a 2022 outlook report of the International Organization for Migration (IOM), the IOM and the National Agency to Combat Trafficking in Persons (ANLTP) – a key organization at the national level working against trafficking in persons – worked together to ensure that three decentralized ANLTP offices in the cities of Zinder, Koni and Diffa were operationalized. IOM's support of these offices enabled the ANLTP to advance with its national strategy of operational presence in these three cities, with a view to establishing its operational presence in Niger's eight regions, which facilitates its interventions to prevent and combat trafficking in persons throughout the country, while prosecuting perpetrators.

The Committee notes that the Government included with its report the 2020 edition of the yearbook of statistics for 2015–19 of the Ministry of Justice, which covers statistics on the number of victims of trafficking and of perpetrators prosecuted, which were gathered during the years mentioned. According to the statistics, 54 perpetrators of child trafficking were brought before the courts and tried in 2017 but a ruling was handed down for only one of these perpetrators. The Committee notes, however, that 147 child victims of trafficking were registered in 2017, as well as 57 in 2015, 30 in 2016 and 31 in 2018. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 16 May 2019, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC) expressed its concern at the low rate of application of the legal provisions relating to the sale and trafficking of persons (CCPR/C/NER/CO/2, para. 34), in particular Ordinance No. 2010-086 of 16 December 2010 on combating trafficking in persons in Niger, which prohibits all forms of sale and trafficking and establishes prison sentences of from ten to 30 years in cases where the victim is a child.

The Committee is therefore bound to note with deep concern the low number of persons prosecuted given the extent of the trafficking phenomenon in the country. Recalling that the penalties provided for are only effective if they are enforced, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, to ensure that in-depth investigations and thorough prosecutions are conducted against perpetrators of violations relating to the sale and trafficking of children. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made to this end, and to provide updated statistics on the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed in cases of child victims of trafficking.

Articles 3 and 7(1). Sanctions. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the 2020 edition of the yearbook of statistics for 2015–19 of the Ministry of Justice, nine perpetrators of the exploitation of begging were brought before the courts and tried, and rulings were handed down to 15 such perpetrators in 2018. The Committee notes, however, that the HRC, in its concluding observations of 16 May 2019, said that it was concerned about the specific situation of talibé children handed over to marabouts in Qur'anic schools and forced to beg (CCPR/C/NER/CO/2, para. 44). The Committee also notes that, according to the 2022 IOM report, of the 565 victims of trafficking identified between January 2017 and July 2021, 23 per cent were cases of the exploitation of begging, all of which involved children. The Committee is therefore bound to note that the exploitation of children remains a problem in practice. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that thorough investigations are followed through, prosecutions are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect and the results achieved.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). Hazardous work and the determination of hazardous types of work. Children working in mines and quarries. The Committee, having previously noted Decree No. 2017-682-PRN/MET/PS of 2017, which contains a revised list of dangerous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age, including a prohibition on employing children under 18 years of age in gold panning and other artisanal mining, notes the Government's indication that Order No. 070/MME/DM of 2004 defining the code of conduct on artisanal mining exploitation sites also prohibits children under 18 years of age from being engaged in the worst forms of labour in the artisanal mining exploitation sites. However, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 4 June 2018, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights said that it was concerned about the number of children who are economically exploited in mines, in particular in hazardous conditions (E/C.12/NER/CO/1, para. 46). Additionally, in its concluding observations of 21 November 2018, the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) also said that it was seriously concerned that child labour continues to be widespread, including in quarries and gold mines (CRC/C/NER/CO/3-5, para. 43). The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure the effective implementation of the national legislation protecting children against underground work in mines and against work in gold panning and other artisanal mining, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard, and the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and taking account of the special situation of girls. Access to free and universal basic education. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information relating to the measures taken to increase school enrolment rates, particularly for girls, such as the adoption in 2019 of several orders aimed at improving school conditions for girls and their protection. Other measures reported by the Government include a remedial programme at both primary and secondary level, which should benefit 250,000 pupils, and an accelerated catch-up programme for young people not in school and refugees (at least 45 per cent girls) through bridging classes and alternative education centres.

The Committee also notes that Niger has also adopted the sectoral plan for education and training for 2014–24, within the framework of which it reaffirms its commitment to prioritize education and training. The plan sets out a series of priorities, including improving basic quality education, recruitment of teachers and the development of incentive programmes to encourage girls to go to and remain in school.

The Government has also adopted the national strategy for the acceleration of education and training for girls and women in Niger 2020–30, the aim of which is to address the challenge of girls' education in rural areas, where the proportion of girls in school is small. To that end, there are plans to promote girls' attendance in school and completion of schooling, combat gender-based violence in schools, and take in the children who are not in school. According to a literature review of the national sectoral programmes and policies that help to tackle the root causes of child labour of 2023, conducted by a consultant as part of the ILO's MAP16 project, it is expected that the percentage of girls enrolled in primary school will rise from 45.9 per cent in 2018 to 50 per cent in 2030, that the rate of girls who complete primary school will rise from 62.2 per cent in 2018 to 74.2 per cent in 2030, and that girls' dropout rate in the first year of secondary school will decrease from 28.7 per cent in 2018 to 5 per cent in 2030. The Government also indicates that the strategy provides for the building of boarding schools in rural areas and that, in this regard, the President of the Republic has committed to building 100 boarding schools by 2026.

While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern that the school enrolment rates remain low and the dropout rates high. The Committee also notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 21 November 2018, expressed concern about the disparities between girls and boys in terms of rates of enrolment in and completion of primary school, despite the recent progress; the high percentage of out-of-school children; and urban and rural disparities in access to school (CRC/C/NER/CO/3-5, para. 38). Furthermore, according to the United Nations Human Rights Office of the High Commissioner's quarterly public note on trends in the human rights situation in Niger, 1 September–31 December 2022, a lack of safety has jeopardized the right to education and pushed thousands of children in Niger outside the school system (para. 12). For example, as of 12 September 2022, according to the departmental authorities, 240 schools accommodating at least 21,637 pupils in the Tillabéry region had already been closed in the department of Téra. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country, taking into account the special situation of girls. In this regard, it also once again requests the Government to ensure the increase in school enrolment rates and the reduction of school dropout rates, and to adopt further measures to re-enrol in school the thousands of children pushed outside the school system due to a lack of safety. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the measures taken and the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children in street situations. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the protection of children in street situations is provided through the Framework Document on Child Protection (DCPE) and that these children are among those who have received protection services. The Committee notes, however, that children in street situations cannot be clearly identified in the categories of children having received protection services, according to the statistics provided by the Government for 2021.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the CRC, in view of the reports of large numbers of children in street situations, recommended that Niger undertake a systematic assessment of the situation of children in street situations and take measures to ensure their protection, including a comprehensive policy to address the root causes of the phenomenon, define preventive and protective measures that establish annual targets to reduce the number of children in street situations (CRC/C/NER/CO/3-5, para. 45). The Committee once again recalls that children in street situations are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, and requests the Government to take measures to protect them and to ensure their rehabilitation and reintegration in a targeted manner. It requests the Government to provide specific information on the results achieved in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2023. The Committee also notes the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) observations received on 20 September 2023. It requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2023), regarding the application of the Convention by Nigeria.

The Committee further notes, from the Government's report, that the Government, Nigeria Employers' Consultative Association (NECA), Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC) and Trade Union Congress (TUC) met on 4 October 2023 to deliberate the conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Government and social partners were in consensus that the issues raised by the Conference Committee needed to be addressed and indicated that their recommendations will be submitted to the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) in its next meeting. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made by the NLAC regarding the implementation of the recommendations of the Conference Committee.

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery and effective and time-bound measures. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups in the country, the Conference Committee deeply deplored the current situation where children were being forcibly recruited by armed groups for use in armed conflict. It urged the Government to put a stop, in law and practice, to the forced recruitment or use of children into armed groups and to ensure the full and immediate demobilization, rehabilitation and integration of all children who are forced to join armed groups. It also urged the Government to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict are carried out.

In its observations, the ITUC expresses deep concern about the grave violations and abuses against children in conflict areas in Nigeria, including child abductions and the use of children as carriers of person-borne improvised explosive devices. It notes that the situation of conflict and insecurity instigated by Boko Haram and other terrorists and vigilante groups is responsible for exposing children to the menace. The ITUC takes note of the action taken by the Government to address the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict but encouraged the Government to do its utmost in addressing its obligations in this regard under the Convention. The IOE shares the concern expressed by the Conference Committee.

The Government indicates, in its report, that: (1) it takes due note of the conclusions of the Conference Committee and that it is improving the enforcement of existing laws and policies and putting in place measures to prevent children under the age of 18 from being admitted into the armed forces; (2) the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act, 2015 (TPPEA Act), prohibits and penalizes the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict (under section 19, perpetrators of trafficking of persons for the purpose of forced or compulsory recruitment for use in armed conflict are liable to no less than seven years of imprisonment and a fine of not less than one million Nigerian Naira (approximately US$1,300)); and (3) child victims of forced recruitment are adequately rehabilitated and socially integrated through the assistance of the Ministry of Humanitarian, Disaster Management and Social Development and the Ministry of Women's Affairs, which ensure the provision of access to mental healthcare and psychological support services to support conflict affected children and their families.

While taking due note of this information, the Committee observes that in the latest conclusions on children in armed conflict in Nigeria of the United Nations Security Council of 29 September 2023, the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict made a public statement in which it strongly condemned the continued recruitment and use of children, and strongly urged armed groups to immediately and without preconditions release all children associated with them and to hand them over to the relevant civilian child protection actors in coordination with the respective Nigerian authorities. It urged all parties to end and prevent the further recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, including the re-recruitment of children who have been released (S/AC.51/2023/2, para. 4(f), (n)). Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to pursue and strengthen its measures to put a stop to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years into armed groups and ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of all perpetrators of this worst form of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard, as well as on the number and nature of penalties applied, including through the implementation of section 19 of the TPPEA Act. The Committee further requests the Government to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children who have been forcibly recruited into armed groups, to strengthen its measures to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to provide concrete information on the results achieved.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and penalties. The Conference Committee expressed concern at the persistence of child trafficking, particularly of girls for the purpose of domestic servitude and sexual exploitation and boys for the purpose of child begging. It urged the Government to combat child trafficking by ensuring that the perpetrators of these acts are identified and prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in law and practice.

In its observations, the ITUC highlights concerns that Nigeria remains a source, transit and destination country for victims of trafficking, with the internal trafficking of girls for the purposes of domestic servitude and sexual exploitation and boys for the purpose of child begging remaining rampant. Both the ITUC and the IOE request the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child trafficking.

The Committee takes note of the data shared by the Government regarding the number of cases of trafficking, apprehended suspected traffickers and victims rescued. In particular, it notes that from January 2022 to September 2023, 1,577 child victims of trafficking were rescued, while 1,607 suspected traffickers were apprehended, and 132 perpetrators were convicted. The Committee observes that this data does not show, however, how many cases, prosecutions and convictions concerned child trafficking specifically.

The Committee further takes note of the detailed information on the measures taken to combat trafficking, including child trafficking. It notes that the institutional organ which coordinates actions to combat trafficking in Nigeria, the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP), intervenes through a five-pronged strategic approach, including policy and prosecution. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the development and implementation of the National Action Plan on Human Trafficking 2022-26 (NAP-HT), which contains a component on prosecution, law enforcement and access to justice. Objectives under this component include improving the capacity of prosecutors and the knowledge of judges on human trafficking; strengthening the collaboration among law enforcement agencies to improve detection and response to cases; and strengthening joint investigations and intelligence gathering between foreign intelligence agencies and NAPTIP. Moreover, the Government indicates that it is strengthening NAPTIP through the inauguration of State Task Forces against human trafficking in 23 states and the establishment of NAPTIP offices in 28 states. The Committee requests the Government to continue its measures to combat child trafficking by pursuing its capacity-building efforts by the NAPTIP and under the NAP-HT with a view to ensuring that the perpetrators of these acts are identified and prosecuted. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures being implemented in this regard, and on the results achieved regarding child trafficking cases specifically, including the number and nature of penalties applied to the perpetrators.

Article 7(2)(a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education and special situation of girls. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to improve the functioning of the education system to facilitate access to free quality basic education for all children, particularly girls and children in street situations. It also requested the Government to take measures to increase the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels and to decrease the school drop-out rates.

The ITUC observes that the Government must do all in its power to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour by expanding access to free basic education and paying particular attention to girl child education in that regard. While taking note of the initiatives to improve enrolment of children in schools as a preventative measure, it notes that there are still major challenges with net attendance which was still low at about 70 per cent and 10.5 million out-of-school children, 60 per cent of them in northern Nigeria where children's access to free basic education is seriously being hampered due to conflict.

The Committee takes note of the Government's detailed information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved. As regards ongoing programmes, the Committee notes that the Universal Basic Education Commission (UBEC) of the Federal Ministry of Education carries out various activities and programmes aimed at enhancing the enrolment of children in schools. These include:

- With regard to improving access to education for girls: the Adolescent Girls Initiative for Learning and Empowerment (AGILE) project, a new initiative of the Government, supported by the World Bank, aimed at improving secondary education opportunities for girls aged 10 to 19, and the Second Chance Programme, to address some of the challenges faced by girls due to the conflict;
- With regard to safety in schools: the National Policy on Safe School Initiative to protect school children in war-torn areas and the National Policy on Safety, Security and Violence-Free Schools and its implementing guidelines to set a standard for comprehensive school safety plans; and
- With regard to out-of-school children: the Framework of Action on Out-of-School Children, adopted in 2022 to address the challenge of the increasing number of out-of-school children, and the Open Schooling Programme (OSP) to address this challenge by promoting enrolment, retention and completion of basic education in a flexible education system. The OSP is about to be piloted in 18 states and the Federal Capital Territory.

The Committee notes that, according to information available on the UNICEF website, the Government is indeed taking measures to improve access to education and learning opportunities for children, with tangible results. Nevertheless, according to the Nigeria Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey (MICS), published in 2022, about seven out of every ten children (68 per cent) of intended age for primary education are attending primary school or higher, while about five out of every ten children (47 per cent) of intended age for senior secondary education are attending senior secondary school or higher. Completion rates are at 73 per cent in primary education and 68 per cent in junior secondary education, and the percentage of out-of-school children at primary and junior secondary levels remain at an approximate 25 per cent. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system, to facilitate access for all children to free basic education and to ensure that children remain in school. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation and results of the measures taken, in particular as regards increasing the school enrolment and attendance rates and decreasing the school drop-out rates.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children in street situations. The Conference Committee urged the Government to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children in street situations, including almajiri children (children in Islamic schools who are also sent out to beg). The Conference Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including by the Almajiri Special Education Project.

Regarding the Almajiri Special Education Project, the Government indicates that the Federal Ministry of Education has conducted a regional stakeholder meeting to ascertain the number of almajiri and street children who were returned to their states of origin, but that the statistics and information regarding what was done for their reintegration have yet to be released. In addition, the Committee takes note of the adoption of the National Commission for Almajiri and Out-of-School Children Education Act, 2023, which establishes this National Commission. The objectives of the National Commission include the formulation of policies and guidelines in all matters related to almajiri and out-of-school children and the provision of funds for research and the preparation of reliable statistics. Moreover, the National Commission shall establish almajiri and out-of-school children education centres at such places as the Commission may determine. The Committee urges the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure the effective implementation of the National Commission for Almajiri and Out-of-School Children Education Act, 2023, and to provide information on the progress made and the number of almajiri and other children in street situations who, as a result, have been rehabilitated through education. It also requests the Government to provide information on the statistics obtained through the regional stakeholder meeting regarding the number of almajiri children who have been returned to their state of origin, and on the measures taken to ensure their reintegration into society, through the Almajiri Special Education Project.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children in street situations. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the problem of children in street situations is still current. According to the Government, these children do not live in the streets, but the economic situation of their families and lack of parental care is such that they beg, wander and work on the streets. The largest percentage of children found in the streets are Romas, followed by children of Macedonian, Albanian, Turkish and other nationalities. Their most common activities include collecting objects and other small work-related activities, but also begging, theft and prostitution.

The Government shares information on the measures taken to address this issue. Firstly, it is taking measures to improve the well-being of children generally, which includes children in street situations, through a comprehensive reform of the social and child protection systems 2018–19, which includes the preparation of a new Law on Social Protection and amendments to the Law on the Protection of Children, aimed at redesigning the social protection system and reducing poverty, especially child poverty. The Government is also taking measures to protect children in street situations by helping their parents through awareness-raising, education and employment. Moreover, the Government indicates that a Protocol for intersectoral cooperation for dealing with street children was adopted in 2022, the preparation of which was led by the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy (MoLSP), along with the Ministries of Interior, Justice, Education and Science, and Health, and non-governmental organizations. In addition, the Government indicates that the MoLSP, in coordination with the Ministry of Interior, formed mobile teams within the centres for social work that prepared monthly plans to conduct field visits in order to suppress the phenomenon of begging. The Government indicates that, in 2022, 90 new cases of children in street situations were registered, 22 warnings to parents issued, and 60 children placed in day care centres while 4 were placed in small group homes.

The Committee notes, however, that according to the report of the Group of Experts on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings on North Macedonia of 2023 (GRETA report, para. 173), the work of the mobile teams and day care centres and other programmes to reduce the school dropout and increase the number of children enrolled in school have not significantly reduced child begging or the number of children in street situations, especially among Roma children. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to protect children in street situations from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved, particularly in terms of the number of children removed from the streets and who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration.

Roma children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding the measures it is taking to promote the right to education of the Roma community. In particular, the Committee notes that the Government has developed and adopted the new Strategy for Inclusion of Roma 2022-2030, in the framework of which national action plans were drawn up for the realization of their most pressing rights, such as education, health, housing and employment. The Government also indicates that the Ministry of Education continues to increase funds for the support and implementation of Roma educational policies through its two- budget programme, which ensures an increase in the coverage of Roma children in primary education; a reduction in the number of students who drop out of school; a reduction in the number of Roma students enrolled in schools for children with special needs; a fight against social exclusion; and the promotion of intercultural education. Other measures shared by the Government, in its report, include the increase of Roma educational mediators and the awarding of scholarships to Roma high school students (5,122 in total between 2017-18 and 2022-23).

While taking note of these measures, the Committee takes note of the 2018-19 UNICEF Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, according to which, while primary and secondary school attendance rates are high among the general population, only 39 per cent of Roma children were attending secondary education. According to a 2020 UNICEF Analysis on the situation of women and children in North Macedonia, children from Roma communities continue to face barriers to regular and quality education and training: an estimated 10 per cent of children from Roma communities do not regularly attend primary school. Taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures to ensure the protection and social inclusion of Roma children, and to facilitate their access to free basic education. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the results and assessment of the implementation of the Strategy for Inclusion of Roma 2022-2030. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the results achieved through its various measures related to education, particularly with regard to increasing school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates for Roma students.

The Committee is also raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) received on 31 August 2023. It requests the Government to reply to these observations.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication, in its report, that the Balochistan Employment of Children (Prohibition and Regulation) Act was adopted on 5 May 2021. It prohibits the employment of a child (defined as a person under 14 years) in employment, whether paid or unpaid or in any economic activity (section 3(3)). The Committee further notes that the Islamabad Capital Territory (ICT) administration is continuing its efforts to revise the provisions of the Employment of Children Act, 1991, with the ILO's support, to introduce a minimum age of 14 years for admission to employment or work.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the revised Employment of Children Act, 1991, of the ICT, which establishes a minimum age of 14 years for admission to employment or work, will be adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 3(1) and (2). Hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 3(1) of the Balochistan Employment of Children (Prohibition and Regulations) Act, 2021, prohibits the employment of persons under 18 years of age in hazardous occupations. Parts I and II of the Schedule also set out non-exhaustive lists of prohibited hazardous occupations and processes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in Punjab and Sindh, work is underway to consolidate all labour laws into a labour code. In the framework of this labour law review, the Committee notes that efforts are underway to update the current list of hazardous occupations and work in these provinces. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the existing laws prohibiting the employment of young persons under the age of 18 years in hazardous types of work and occupations in Balochistan, Sindh, Punjab and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KPK), including the number and nature of violations regarding young persons engaged in hazardous work, as well as the convictions and penalties imposed. With regard to the revision of the Employment of Children Act, 1991, of the ICT, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft law prohibits the work of young persons under the age of 18 years in hazardous types of work and to provide information on any progress made on its adoption.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's statement that in ICT, labour inspectors require comprehensive training on child labour issues and that it is seeking ILO technical assistance in this regard. The Government further indicates that in Punjab and Sindh, labour inspectors receive regular trainings to enhance their capacities, including on child labour laws. In Punjab, in 2022, labour inspectors carried out 67,930 inspections of factories, shops and establishments to identify child labour and bonded labour, out of which 1,067 cases were reported to the police. The Committee notes the Government's information that 897 cases of forced labour were investigated by the Punjab Prosecution Department and that 664 cases were prosecuted, out of which 60 individuals were convicted. However, it notes that the Government does not indicate how many of these cases involved child victims. In Sindh, a total of 10,927 inspections were conducted under the Sindh Prohibition of Employment of Children Act, 2017, out of which 60 cases of child labour were found and prosecuted.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, under section 17 of the Balochistan Employment of Children (Prohibition and Regulation) Act, 2021, whoever employs a child or permits a child, adolescent or young person to work in contravention of the Act shall be punishable by imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year or a fine which may extend to PKR 100,000 rupees (approximately US$350) or both. The Government indicates that three cases were tried on the basis of section 17 and that two of them were dismissed and a fine of PKR 2,200 was imposed (approximately US$7) for the other case. The Committee further notes the Government's information that, in Balochistan: (1) the number of child labour inspectors will be increased; (2) labour inspectors received training on child labour and forced and bonded labour by the ILO in March 2022; and (3) further training was provided by UN Women in May 2022.

The Government indicates that, in KPK, to strengthen the labour inspection mechanism, various initiatives were undertaken, including: (1) the creation of new Labour Offices and new posts. Since 2010, the number of Labour Offices has increased from 9 to 34 and the number of labour inspectors increased from 40 to 133, whereas the total staff of the labour inspectorate increased from 165 to 591; (2) the creation of seven new offices for tribal districts with a total of 70 staff; (3) an ongoing Annual Development Schemes, "Enabled Directorate of Labour Khyber Pakhtunkhwa for Better Service Delivery" to strengthen the Labour Department and the labour courts for better and efficient service delivery; and (4) training of labour inspecting staff on various labour issues including child labour and forced labour as well as international labour standards. Finally, the Government indicates that under the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Prohibition of Employment of Children Act, 2015, in 2022, 368 cases of violations were found which resulted in various penalties being imposed for a total of PKR 385,862 (approximately US$1,300).

Once again, the Committee observes that the fines imposed are very low and do not appear to be sufficiently effective and dissuasive. The Committee further notes, from the observations of the APFTU made under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that child labour legislation is often violated because of the poor labour inspections and enforcement, and that the limited resources of the labour inspectorate do not permit the proper detection of forced and child labour. The Committee urges the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate, and requests it to continue providing information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties imposed relating to the employment of children. It also requests the Government to continue to strengthen its measures to ensure that persons who violate the above-mentioned laws are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that Pakistan participated in the Asia Regional Child Labour (ARC) ILO Project which aims to reduce vulnerability to child labour and enhance the protection of children from exploitation through, inter alia, the collection of data on child labour, capacity-building of stakeholders for the enforcement of relevant laws and advocating with businesses to eliminate child labour from supply chains. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that child labour surveys are in progress in Balochistan and KPK. The Committee takes note of the Gilgit-Baltistan Child Labour Survey (CLS) 2018–19 Report and the Punjab CLS 2019–20 Report, published by the Pakistan Bureau of Statistics. The Gilgit-Baltistan CLS Report shows an overall child labour incidence of 13.1 per cent. More specifically, child labour is at: (1) 4.2 per cent among children aged 5 to 9 years, including 2.6 per cent in hazardous work; (2) 16.4 per cent among children aged 10 to 13 years, including 12.4 per cent in hazardous work; and (3) 23.7 per cent of children aged 14 to 17 years are engaged in hazardous work. The Gilgit-Baltistan CLS Report also highlights that: (1) most children in child labour work in the agricultural, forestry and fishing industry and are employed in elementary occupations; (2) industry wise, for boys, construction is the industry with the largest share of children exposed to health hazards, while for girls it is highest in the agriculture, forestry, and fishing industry; and (3) the most reported reason of the main respondents for letting their child work is to support household needs. From the Punjab CLS Report, the Committee notes that: (1) overall 13.4 per cent of children aged 5 to 14 years are engaged in child labour and 47.8 per cent of these children are working under hazardous conditions; and (2) 30.8 per cent of children aged 15 to 17 years are engaged in hazardous work. The Committee also notes the Sindh Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2018–19 which shows that: (1) 9.7 per cent of children aged 5 to 11 years are engaged in child labour; and (2) 20.6 per cent of those aged 12 to 14 years are engaged in child labour.

Once again, the Committee must express its deep concern at the significant number of children under the minimum age who are still engaged in child labour, including in hazardous work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including through continued cooperation with the ILO, and to provide information on the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical information on the nature, extent, and trends of child labour, including the child labour surveys for Balochistan and KPK once available.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU) received on 31 August 2023. The Committee also notes the observations of the Pakistan Mine Workers Federation (PMWF) received on 7 September 2023 relating to the alleged absence of implementation of the laws on the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 3(a) and 5 of the Convention. Debt bondage and monitoring mechanisms. The Committee recalls that the main implementation mechanisms for the laws on the abolishment of bonded labour are through District and Provincial Vigilance Committees (DVCs and PVCs) which aim to enforce the legislation, oversee rehabilitation of victims and to aid district and provincial administrations in implementing the relevant legislation. The Committee notes that the Government provides a copy of the newly adopted Balochistan Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 2021, and that it indicates that the draft Balochistan Forced and Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Rules, 2023, are under notification process; once notified, DVCs in Balochistan will be created. The Government explains that, in the meantime, the Provincial and District Anti-Human Trafficking and Anti-Bonded Labour Monitoring Committee operates in Balochistan and monitors the implementation of the laws on the abolition of bonded labour. The Committee notes, from the Government's report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that: (1) in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KPK), DVCs have been established in every district of the province (members are composed of the police department, labour department, social welfare and a representative of the prosecution) and that no bonded labour was identified in 2022; (2) in Punjab, 27 complaints of bonded labour were lodged in DVCs by aggrieved brick kilns workers, all of which were resolved amicably through the DVCs; (3) in Punjab, a PVC was established to monitor the work of DVCs; and (4) in Sindh DVCs were established in every district.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in Punjab, 170 First Investigation Reports (FIRs) were registered by the police on the basis of sections 3 and 7 of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2018, relating to bonded child labour. The Committee notes with regret however that no information is provided on whether the FIRs lead to prosecutions. The Committee notes, from the information provided by the Government, that labour inspections in Balochistan and KPK have not found any case of forced labour or bonded labour in 2022, and that there is no information provided for Sindh, Punjab or the Islamabad Capital Territory (ICT).

The Committee also notes, from the 2023 Report of the National Commission for Human Rights of Pakistan (NCHR) on "The Issue of Bonded Labour in Pakistan", that: (1) bonded labour is especially prevalent in the rural and agricultural sectors, particularly in the brick kiln sector in Punjab and the tenant farms in Sindh; (2) many brick kilns continue to function without registration, contrary to the Factories Act, 1934, which negatively impacts workers and encourages the misuse and exploitation of the poor; (3) existing laws regarding bonded labour, including the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 1992, and subsequent provincial legislation, fail to protect labourers due to weak implementation; (4) the primary hope for change lies in the implementation of judicial rulings and the passing of new legislation, particularly with regard to agricultural tenancy rights and brick kilns; and (5) the NCHR formulated detailed recommendations such as the need to improve access to justice for bonded labourers, revising the brick kiln registration process, enhancing the capacities of the DVCs and prohibiting the work of children in brick kilns. With regard to the issue of registration of brick kilns, the Committee takes due note of the Government's information that, in Sindh, 746 brick kilns have been registered under the Sindh Factories Act, 2015, employing 14,352 workers, and that 16 unions of brick kiln workers have also been registered. In light of this information, the Committee once again requests the Government to intensify its efforts to eliminate child debt bondage, including: (i) through the effective implementation of the laws abolishing bonded labour; (ii) by establishing DVCs in all the provinces and strengthening their capacity as well as the capacity of the law enforcement officials responsible for the monitoring of child bonded labour; and (iii) by continuing its efforts to ensure that all operating brick kilns are registered. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, including the number of child bonded labourers identified by the DVCs and other law enforcement officials, the number of violations reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to implement the detailed recommendations of the National Commission for Human Rights in its 2023 report.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2). Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures. Child domestic workers. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the ICT Domestic Workers Act, 2021, which: (1) prohibits the engagement children of less than 16 years in domestic work (section 3); (2) prohibits the employment of a domestic worker under the bonded labour system or forced labour system (section 4(a)); and (3) imposes the respect of other child labour laws. The Committee notes the proposed ICT Domestic Workers Amendment Bill, 2022, in which it is proposed that the minimum age for domestic work be raised to 18 years. The Committee further notes with interest that the Balochistan Employment of Children (Prohibition and Regulation) Act, 2021, includes child domestic work in the list of hazardous occupations prohibited to children under the age of 18 years. The Government also indicates that the draft Sindh Domestic Workers Act is under preparation.

The Committee notes, from the Punjab Child Labour Survey, that 1.8 per cent of children aged 5 to 14 years and 2.6 per cent of children aged 15 to 17 years are engaged in domestic work. The Committee further notes with concern, from the ILO Publication Research Brief: Child labour in domestic work in Pakistan (June 2022), that although there are no reliable statistics on child labour in domestic work in the country, a research study undertaken by the ILO determined that one in every four households in Pakistan employs a child in domestic work, predominantly girls, aged 10 to 14 years. The study further determines that children engaged in child labour in domestic work are frequently exposed to hazards including electrical shocks, dust, noise, heat, allergens, etc. Those engaged on a live-in basis are likely to face the most hazards, be called on at any time and work continually with no fixed hours. Finally, the Committee notes the recommendations made, including: (1) articulate a strategic plan or roadmap to eliminate child labour in domestic work; (2) raise awareness of the legislation on domestic work; (3) gather reliable data; and (4) provide rehabilitation services for children and their families. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Sindh Domestic Workers Bill will be adopted in the near future. It also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to regulate domestic work in the KPK province. The Committee further requests the Government take the necessary measures to raise awareness of the newly adopted legislations on domestic work and protect and withdraw child domestic workers from exploitative and hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved to this end, as well as on the application in practice of these laws, including by indicating the number of cases detected as well as the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education and the special situation of girls. The Committee notes, from the APFTU's observations, that although the Constitution provides for free and compulsory education for all children, there are not enough schools and too many children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in Punjab, it launched the pilot project "Disengaging children from labour and referring to school", under which 5,000 children will be removed from the worst forms of child labour and reintegrated into school. The Committee also notes, from the 2023 ILO Publication Results from the CLEAR Cotton Project that 1,600 children were withdrawn or prevented from entering child labour through accelerated schooling programmes to eventually reintegrate mainstream schools. It also notes, from the Government's report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), the various measures taken to improve access to education for all, including: (1) the preparation of a uniform education system for all to ensure equitable access to quality education across the country; (2) the increase of expenditures in the education sector in Balochistan; (3) the launch of the Waseela-e-Taleem Programme, a conditional cash transfer programme for poor families; (4) the adoption and implementation of the Punjab Education Sector Reforms Programme, which aims to provide missing facilities for girls, such as toilets and free textbooks, and offers stipends to girls from grades 6 to 10; (5) in Sindh, the Government provided stipends to 420,000 girls to encourage their education; and (6) Balochistan developed its second Education Sector Reform Plan 2025 and is introducing a school nutrition programme in 132 primary schools in remote areas (CRC/C/PAK/6-7, 3 August 2023 paragraphs 5, 27, 43, 44, 230, 232).

The Committee notes, from the Punjab Child Labour Survey 2019-2020 that 84.6 per cent of children aged 5 to 14 years attend school (86.1 per cent of boys and 82.8 per cent of girls); 9.8 per cent have never attended school (8 per cent of boys and 11.7 per cent of girls). According to the Gilgit-Baltistan Child Labour Survey 2018-2019, 82.3 per cent of children aged 5 to 17 years attend school (87.5 per cent of boys and 76.8 per cent of girls). The Sindh Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2018-2019 shows that the net attendance rate of children in primary school is 40.4 per cent (42.6 per cent for boys and 38.1 per cent for girls). The Committee further notes, from the UNICEF Country Office Annual Report 2022, that despite significant improvements in overall school participation, an estimated 22.8 million children aged 5 to 16 years are out of school (representing 44 per cent of children). More girls are out of school than boys at every level. Only 70 per cent of children entering primary school are estimated to reach Grade 5, with considerable provincial differences. The 2022 floods damaged or destroyed 48,259 schools, which resulted in more than 12 million children's education being interrupted. The Committee notes that the Federal Education Ministry, in cooperation with UNICEF, finalized the Education Cannot Wait Multi-Year Response Plan (2022-2024) which works to ensure improved access to education at all levels, increase the resilience of the infrastructure and provide special support for girls.

While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its concern at the significant number of children, especially girls who are out of school. Recalling that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve access to free basic education for all children, taking into account the special situation of girls. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, and to provide statistical information on the results achieved, particularly with regard to increasing school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates and the number of out-of-school children. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Papua New Guinea

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National Policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation indicating the existence of child labour in agriculture, street vending, tourism and entertainment. The Committee also noted that according to the rapid assessment conducted by the ILO in Port Moresby, children as young as 5 and 6 years of age were working on the streets under hazardous conditions. In this regard, the Committee urged the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation of working children and to ensure the effective elimination of child labour.

The Committee notes from the Government's report the adoption of the National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labour in Papua New Guinea 2017–2020 (NAP), which is based on four strategic objectives: (i) mainstreaming child labour and worst forms of child labour in social and economic policies, legislation and programmes; (ii) improving the knowledge base; (iii) implementing effective prevention, protection, rehabilitation and reintegration measures; and (iv) strengthening the technical, institutional and human resource capacity of stakeholders. The NAP envisages the establishment of a National Coordinating Committee on Child Labour and a Child Labour Unit within the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations to provide institutional oversight and the coordination and management of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is currently working towards the establishment of a National Steering Committee under a government funded child labour project. This project is focused on delivery of the key target outcomes of the NAP. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how, following the adoption of the NAP, child labour has been mainstreamed in national social and economic policies and programmes with a view to achieving its progressive elimination. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in relation to the establishment of a Child Labour Unit within the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations, as well as the National Coordination Committee as envisaged by the NAP.

Article 2(1). Minimum age for admission to employment. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, even though the Government had declared a minimum age for admission to employment of 16 years upon ratification of the Convention, section 103(4) of the 1978 Employment Act permits the employment of children above 14 years of age during school hours when the employer is satisfied that the person no longer attends school. The Committee also noted that section 6 of the 1972 Minimum Age (Sea) Act permits children above 15 of age to be employed at sea. In addition, according to section 7 of that Act, the Director of Education can grant an approval for the employment of a child above 14 years of age for service at sea when it is considered that such work will be for the immediate and future benefit of the child. The Committee noted the Government's indication that it was undertaking a review of the Employment Act and the Minimum Age (Sea) Act to address issues related to the minimum age. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it aims to complete the reform by finally adopting the Employment Act. Noting that the Government has been referring to the review of the Employment Act and the Minimum Age (Sea) Act for a number of years, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that section 103(4) of the 1978 Employment Act and sections 6 and 7 of the 1972 Minimum Age (Sea) Act are harmonized with the minimum age declared at the international level, which is 16 years of age.

Article 2(3). Age of compulsory education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the absence of legislation making education compulsory. The Committee also noted the absence of a provision in the Education Act 1983 specifying the age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee notes with regret an absence of information from the Government concerning measures taken to provide for compulsory education. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to provide for compulsory education for boys and girls up to the minimum age for admission to employment of 16 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to, and determination of hazardous work. The Committee had previously noted that according to section 104(1) of the 1978 Employment Act, no person under 16 years of age shall be employed in any employment, or in any place, or under working conditions that are injurious or likely to be injurious to his health. In this regard, the Committee recalled that according to Article 3, paragraph 1, of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons shall not be less than 18 years. The Committee notes from the Government's report under Convention No. 182 that issues relating to the minimum age for hazardous work, as well as the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years will be addressed during the review of the Employment Act and the consideration of the proposed Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) legislation. The Committee also notes that the NAP included among the relevant actions and outputs the development and dissemination of a list of hazardous work or occupations that is culturally sensitive and practical. The Committee urges the Government to ensure, within the framework of the review of the Employment Act and adoption of OSH legislation, that hazardous work is prohibited for children under the age of 18 years. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure the adoption of a list of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, in consultation with the organisations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the authorization of the performance of hazardous types of work for persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years is subject to the conditions established under Article 3(3) of the Convention, namely that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the conditions of work for young people would be examined through the Employment Act review and that the legislation relating to occupational safety and health would be reviewed to ensure that hazardous work does not affect the health and safety of young workers. Noting the absence of information on this point, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the employment of young persons between 16 and 18 years to perform hazardous types of work is subject to the conditions laid down in Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 9(3). Registers of employment. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the absence of a provision in the 1978 Employment Act requiring the employer to keep registers and documents of employed persons under the age of 18 years. It also noted that section 5 of the Minimum Age (Sea) Act requires the person in charge of a vessel to register the name, birth and terms and conditions of service of persons under 16 years of age that are employed on board. In this regard, the Committee had recalled that Article 9(3) of the Convention requires employers to keep registers containing the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom they employ or who work for them and who are less than 18 years of age. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that this issue would be addressed within the review of the Employment Act. The Committee notes with regret an absence of information on this point. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that employers are obliged to keep registers of all persons below the age of 18 years who work for them, including of those working on ships, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

While noting the Government's indication that it is focusing on a labour law reform to ensure consistency and conformity of its national legislation with international labour standards, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take into consideration the Committee's comments on discrepancies between national legislation and the Convention. In this regard, the Committee invites the Government to consider technical assistance from the ILO to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted that the Criminal Code only provided protection to girls trafficked for the purpose of sexual exploitation and that there appeared to be no provisions protecting boys or prohibiting the sale and trafficking of children for the purpose of labour exploitation. In this regard, it noted the Government's indication that it was addressing this issue through the adoption of the People Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Bill which would amend the Criminal Code to include a provision prohibiting human trafficking, including children under the age of 18 years, for labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee, therefore, urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the People Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Bill, without delay.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that the People Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Bill, which contains a specific provision prohibiting the sale and trafficking of all children for labour and sexual exploitation, has been enacted as the Criminal Code (Amendment) Act of 2013. The Committee notes that section 208C(2) of the Criminal Code (Amendment) Act of 2013 makes it an offence to recruit, transport, transfer, conceal, harbour or receive any person under the age of 18 years with the intention of subjecting them to exploitation. The penalties include imprisonment for a term not exceeding 25 years. The term “exploitation” as defined under section 208E includes prostitution or other forms of sexual exploitation, forced labour or services, and slavery and servitude. The Committee notes that according to a report entitled Transnational Organized Crime in the Pacific: A Threat assessment, 2016 by the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC report), Papua New Guinea is a key source and destination country for men, women and children trafficked for forced labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the Criminal Code (Amendment) Act, in particular to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out for persons who engage in the trafficking of children, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offences related to the trafficking of children under 18 years of age pursuant to section 208C(2) of the Criminal Code (Amendment) Act.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted that the national legislation does not specifically prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. It noted the Government’s indication that the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities would be dealt with in the People Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Bill.

The Committee notes the Government’s statement that the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities are interpreted as slavery or practices similar to slavery and are severely penalized under section 208C(2) of the Criminal Code (Amendment) Act of 2013. The Committee, however, notes that section 208C(2) deals with offences related to trafficking in children and does not constitute a prohibition on the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 3(c) of the Convention, the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and is therefore prohibited for children below 18 years of age. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, and sanctions envisaged. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee notes the Government’s information that one of the key activities identified for implementation under the recently adopted National Action Plan to Eliminate Child Labour 2017–20 is to formulate a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years. With regard to the minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (e). Taking into account the special situation of girls. 1. Child victims of prostitution. The Committee previously noted that, according to the findings of the rapid assessment conducted in Port Moresby an increasing number of girls were involved in prostitution. The most common age at which girls were engaged in prostitution was 15 years (34 per cent), while 41 per cent of the children were involved in prostitution before the age of 15 years. The survey report further indicated that girls as young as 10 years were also involved in prostitution. The Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children, particularly girls under 18 years of age from prostitution, and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. The Committee notes from the UNODC report that children’s involvement in prostitution is substantially increasing in Papua New Guinea, and an estimated 19 per cent of the country’s labour market is comprised of child labourers many of whom are subject to prostitution and forced labour. The Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the prevalence of the prostitution of children in Papua New Guinea. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children, particularly girls under 18 years of age from prostitution, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

2. "Adopted" children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observation of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that indebted families sometimes pay off their dues by sending children – usually girls – to their lenders for domestic servitude. The ITUC indicated that “adopted” children usually worked long hours, lacked freedom of mobility or medical treatment, and did not attend school. The Committee also noted the Government’s indication that the practice of “adoption” is a cultural tradition in Papua New Guinea. In this regard, the Committee noted the Government’s reference to the Lukautim Pikinini Act of 2009, which provided for the protection of children with special needs. The Committee requested the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure, in law and in practice, that “adopted” children under 18 years of age are not exploited under conditions equivalent to bonded labour or under hazardous conditions.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government report contains no information on this point. The Committee notes that Lukautim Pikinini Act of 2015, which repealed the Lukautim Pikinini Act of 2009, contains provisions to protect and promote the rights and well-being of all children, including children in need of protection and children with special needs who are vulnerable and subject to exploitation. This Act establishes penalties including imprisonment and fines to any person who causes or permits a child to be employed in hazardous conditions (section 54); or abuses, ill-treats or exploit children (section 78); or unlawfully subjects a child to a social or customary practice that is harmful to a child’s well-being (section 80). The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures, including through the effective implementation of the Lukautim Pikinini Act, to ensure, that “adopted” children under 18 years of age are not exploited under conditions equivalent to bonded labour or under hazardous conditions, taking account of the special situation of girls. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, including the number of children who have been prevented and withdrawn from such exploitative situations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers Authentic (CUT-A), received on 29 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s detailed information, in its report, on the measures taken to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including: (1) digitalization of the register of working adolescents, to allow for real-time data on the activities of adolescent workers, hours of work and enterprises employing adolescents. This new system, according to the Government, has also prevented the engagement of adolescents in hazardous work in some cases; (2) development of a model for the identification of risks of child labour (MIRTI), a tool which allows for the identification of the territories most vulnerable to child labour, in order to define in which areas to concentrate preventive efforts; (3) in 2021, 61.2 per cent of children in situation of poverty benefitted from the Tekopora programme by receiving conditional cash transfers; and (4) implementation of “20 Commitments for Children and Young Persons”, in which Commitment No. 15 aims to eradicate child labour, its worst forms, and protect adolescent work.

The Committee notes, from the observations of the CUT-A, the concerns that the Government has not provided information on the implementation and results of the National Strategy for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers 2019–24 (ENPETI).

The Committee notes the Government's information that, according to the permanent household survey of 2022, 6 per cent of children aged 10 to 17 years are engaged in child labour, with a higher percentage of children in child labour in rural areas (8.3 per cent in rural areas and 4.5 per cent in urban areas), and more boys than girls engaged in child labour (8.5 per cent of boys and 3.3 per cent of girls). The Committee welcomes the significant decrease in child labour, from 22 per cent in 2015 to 6 per cent in 2022. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts towards the progressive elimination of child labour and to provide information in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide specific information on the implementation of the ENPETI and the results achieved.

*Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work. Domestic work. With regard to the engagement of children in hazardous domestic work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee notes that the CUT-A once again insists that: (1) labour inspection controls are not effective with regard to young persons whose work involves sports and artistic performances; and (2) the Government continues to not follow the recommendations of the Southern Common Market (MERCOSUR) relating to the prevention and elimination of child labour in artistic settings. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on this point. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that children under 14 years of age who participate in artistic performances only do so on the basis of individual authorizations issued by the competent authorities, which limit the number of hours of work and the conditions in which it is permitted, in accordance with Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers Authentic (CUT-A), received on 30 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 3(a) and (b), and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, and penalties. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, the adoption of the National Plan for the Prevention and Fight against Trafficking in Persons 2020-2024 (through Decree No. 4473 of 2020). From the National Plan, the Committee notes that children continue to be trafficked, and in 2019, 177 child victims were identified (144 girls and 33 boys). The Committee also notes, from the website of the Public Ministry, that during 2020, the Prosecutor's Office received 915 reports of child pornography. The Committee notes, from the website of the National Observatory for Childhood and Adolescence (ONNAP), that in 2022, the ONNAP recorded 7,327 cases of violations against children, including 1,861 cases of child pornography, 138 cases of pimping and 66 cases of child trafficking.

The Committee takes note of the detailed activity report in the framework of the national coordination of the Inter-institutional Table for the Prevention and the Fight Against Trafficking in Persons provided by the Government. The activity report provides information relating to trainings, seminars and awareness-raising activities provided to Government officials and the general public, undertaken between 2019 and 2022. The Government further indicates that, in 2020, the Ministry of Women published a "Guide for addressing information on trafficking in persons", to raise awareness on the definitions and concepts of trafficking in persons contained in Act No. 5788/2012. The Committee further takes note of the summaries of judicial decisions provided by the Government, with details of convictions and penalties imposed. With regard to child trafficking, the Government indicates that 16 convictions were handed down in 2019, 3 convictions in 2020, 26 convictions in 2021 and 2 convictions in 2022. The Committee notes the observations of the CUT-A indicating that the number of convictions is extremely low. The CUT-A also indicates that the number of investigations of trafficking cases is decreasing: 53 investigations were initiated in 2021, compared to 106 investigations in 2020 and 141 investigations in 2019.

The Committee notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW), the following concerns: (1) that the Government has not yet achieved satisfactory standards in its fight against trafficking in persons; (2) that children, especially those living on the street in the tri-border area, continue to be subjected to exploitation; and (3) over the small number of convictions for trafficking in persons, particularly trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation (CMW/C/PRY/CO/2, 3 June 2022, para. 67). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to strengthen its efforts and to continue taking immediate and effective action to ensure the elimination in practice of the sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years of age, including within the framework of the National Plan for the Prevention and Fight against Trafficking in Persons 2020-2024. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to this end, and on the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of offences reported, investigations conducted, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed regarding trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Plan for the Prevention and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons 2020-2024, aims to strengthen institutions and improve inter-institutional coordination. The Committee takes note of the Government's information on trainings provided to the Public Ministry, the National Police, the Directorate of Migrations, the Ministry of Women, the Ministry of Children and Young Persons (MINNA) and the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS), with the aim of strengthening the capacities of law enforcement agencies to detect cases of trafficking. The Committee further notes the Government's reiterated information on existing complaints mechanisms, including: (1) a toll-free hotline "Fondo Ayuda 147" of the MINNA; (2) an online complaints procedure; and (3) the possibility of reporting trafficking in persons to the Ministry of Women via a hotline, email or online.

Moreover, the Committee notes that the CUT-A: (1) once again expresses concerns that government controls are still very weak in the face of the trafficking in children phenomenon; (2) reiterates that the secure online complaint system is not operational and that the Government has not provided information on the number of reports received and dealt with; and (3) indicates that reports of child trafficking received through these complaint mechanisms do not lead to investigations and prosecutions, and are thus insufficient to protect children from trafficking. Referring to paragraph 626 of its General Survey on the fundamental Conventions of 2012, the Committee observes that, due to the multidimensional nature of child trafficking, several different monitoring institutions play an important role in this regard. The Committee considers that collaboration and information sharing between these various institutions is essential for preventing and combating trafficking in children. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including within the framework of the National Plan 2020-2024, to improve the cooperation between different national agencies to combat trafficking in children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end, including to ensure the proper cooperation between law enforcement agencies and the ministries running the various complaints mechanisms.

Articles 6 and 7(2). Programmes of action and effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from becoming engaged in and removing them from the worst forms of child labour, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Plan for the Prevention and Fight Against Trafficking in Persons 2020-2024, aims to: (1) prevent trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation; (2) provide assistance to persons affected; and (3) prosecute and convict perpetrators.

The Committee further notes the Government's reference to Resolution MDS No. 837/2021, which approves the protocol for responding to requests from other public institutions to include persons and families who are in a vulnerable situation in the programmes and projects of the Ministry of Social Development, as a preventive measure. The protocol provides detailed information on the steps that should be taken when caring for persons in situations of vulnerability, including victims of trafficking and children in street situations (reception, placement and follow-up action to ensure the social integration of the concerned people). The Committee notes the information provided on the actions of the Ministry of Women to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of women victims of trafficking. The Committee also notes that the MTESS provides detailed information on the training provided to four adolescent victims of trafficking, to facilitate their entry in the labour market. The Committee notes, from the 2022 Annual Management Report of the MINNA, that the Comprehensive Care Programme for Victims of Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (PAIVTES), implemented in collaboration with the Public Ministry and shelter homes, educational institutions and other stakeholders, provided assistance to 67 child victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation in 2022.

The Committee notes the observations of the CUT-A indicating that child victims of trafficking do not receive the proper and necessary assistance and that many of them are re-victimized. In this regard, the CUT-A refers to 24 Paraguayan child victims of trafficking identified in Brazil between March and July 2020 who were revictimized due to the lack of proper assistance by authorities. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent the trafficking of children and their commercial sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to this end, including within the framework of the National Plan for the Prevention and Fight against Trafficking in Persons 2020-2024, and to provide information on the impact of such measures. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children from these worst forms of child labour, including within the framework of the PAIVTES, with an indication of the number of children who were removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Article 7(2)(d). Children at special risk and labour inspection. Children engaged in hazardous domestic work – the “criadazgo” system. The Committee previously noted that 11 per cent of children between 10 and 17 years of age worked in domestic service, two-thirds of them under the criadazgo system (children living and working in domestic service in the houses of others in exchange for food, board and education), making them very vulnerable to exploitation and work in hazardous conditions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) in 2020, it launched a campaign to raise awareness against the criadazgo system (El criadazgo #NoEsNormal); and (2) it adopted, in 2022, Act No. 6881 regulating the modalities of alternative care of children in residential entities and residences with educational purposes of a private nature in the Western Region (Chaco), which requires educational entities to protect children from all forms of exploitation to refrain from entrusting them with domestic tasks. The Committee further notes, from the Government's report on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that the MTESS provides regular awareness-raising sessions for the benefit of domestic workers on their labour rights, including through the publication of an informational pamphlet on domestic work. However, the Committee notes that neither the awareness-raising sessions nor the pamphlet address the issue of the criadazgo system nor the prohibition of child domestic work of Act No. 5407/15, which sets the minimum age for domestic work at 18 years.

With regard to labour inspection, the Government provides a copy of Memorandum DGIF 306/2023 summarizing inspections undertaken in 2021 in the Chaco region. However, the Committee notes with concern that, once again, the Government fails to provide information on actions taken by the labour inspectorate and the specific penalties imposed in the context of the criadazgo system, as previously requested. The Committee notes the reiterated observations of the CUT-A indicating that the use of children, especially girls, as domestic workers remains widespread throughout the country, especially in remote regions such as Chaco and the northern region. The CUT-A further indicates that: (1) the Government has so far not adopted any measures or taken any action to improve the working conditions of these children; and (2) there needs to be effective labour inspection to ensure the application of Act No. 5407/15. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate to effectively detect situations of child domestic work, including in the criadazgo system. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the application of Act No. 5407/15 in practice, including by indicating the number of reported violations relating to the engagement of children under 18 years in domestic work and the penalties imposed; and (ii) the measures taken or envisaged to protect and remove these children from the worst forms of child labour, and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 1 September 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 3(a) and (b), 5, 7(1) and 7(2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour,, penalties, programmes of action and effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, to remove them from these forms of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale, trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that Supreme Decree No. 008-2022-MINCETUR amends the Regulations of Act No. 28868 to introduce higher fines for tourist establishments (hotels and restaurants) and travel agencies who fail to take appropriate actions to prevent and report cases of children being subjected to commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons and its forms of exploitation up to 2030 was approved by Supreme Decree No. 009-2021-IN and seeks to guide the Government's actions at all three levels (national, regional and municipal) in the development of interventions against trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes, from the Analysis Report No. 5 of the Public Ministry "The response of the Public Ministry to human trafficking", published in collaboration with the ILO, that between 2015 and 2021, 375 child victims of trafficking were identified, most of them aged between 13 and 17 years (317 children), with a higher proportion of girls than boys (227 girls and 141 boys). The Committee notes that this report sets out the modalities of recruitment of the victims (parents, seduction, job offer), how the victims were detained (locked-up, physical and psychological violence, retention of identification papers), as well as the locations of exploitation (bars, public streets, night clubs, factories). The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Office of Rationalization and Statistics of the Public Ministry, in 2022, registered 40 cases of sexual exploitation of a child, 43 cases of benefitting from the sexual exploitation of a child, 17 cases of management of the sexual exploitation of a child, 13 cases of use of a child for commercial sexual exploitation, 7 cases of promotion of sexual exploitation of a child, and 146 cases of child pornography. The Committee takes note of the list of judicial cases relating to trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation, which includes information about the convictions handed down and the penalties imposed, but it notes that this information is not disaggregated by the age of the victims.

The Government indicates that the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Tourism (MINCETUR), intervenes in the field of prevention of sexual exploitation of children and adolescents in tourism, and that, in collaboration with regional entities, it organizes awareness-raising events on the issue and encourages the subscription of the Code of Conduct for the prevention of sexual exploitation of children among tourism service providers. The Government also reports that, in 2021, four preventive actions on trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation were undertaken and benefitted 251 persons. In 2022, 235 preventive actions were undertaken, in the form of talks and workshops on trafficking in persons, reaching 6,000 persons. In 2023, 14 preventive actions were undertaken, benefiting 350 persons.

With regard to the rehabilitation of child victims of trafficking, the Government indicates that, in 2022, Special Protection Units elaborated and approved 21 individual work plans with a component of reintegration of a child or adolescent victim of trafficking. The Government adds that the Protection and Assistance Programme for Victims and Witnesses of the Public Ministry, in addition to providing support for prosecutorial work, also provides a number of services to victims of trafficking, including meals, clothing, medical services and accommodation. In the framework of this programme, between 2019 and 2022, 3,154 victims of trafficking were provided with assistance, including 1,442 children.

With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Comprehensive Programme for Family Wellbeing (INABIF) has six residential reception centres specifically designed for the reception of children and adolescent victims of trafficking. The Government indicates that, currently 74 minors are residing in these Centres and receiving comprehensive care services. These Centres welcomed a total of 280 underaged child victims of trafficking in 2021, and 206 child victims in 2022. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the National Aurora Programme, through the Women's Emergency Centres (CEM), attended to 68 victims of trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation in 2021, including 41 children, and 102 victims, including 81 child victims in 2022. The Committee notes that the CATP, in its observations, indicates that the preventive actions of the Aurora programme are limited because of its limited budget and that, for 2024, the Aurora Programme's budget was reduced by 40 per cent. The CATP further observes that the efforts deployed by the Government are insufficient to address the issue of trafficking in the country and that there is a general lack of awareness of the various national policies by the population. The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), that the country continues to be a country of origin, transit and destination for trafficking in persons, in particular women and girls, for the purposes of sexual exploitation, including online and sex tourism (CEDAW/C/PER/CO/9, 1 March 2022, paragraph 27). The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent the trafficking of children and their commercial sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to this end, including within the framework of the National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons and its forms of exploitation up to 2030, and to provide information on the impact of such measures. The Committee further requests the Government to continue providing information on: (i) the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions relating specifically to the offences of child trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children; and (ii) the measures taken, including within the framework of the Protection and Assistance Programme for Victims and Witnesses of the Public Ministry and the Residential Reception Centres of the INABIF, to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to free children and young persons who are victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, with an indication of the number of children who were removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Hazardous types of work and effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, to remove them from these forms of child labour, and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Child labour in artisanal mines. The Committee notes that, under section 58 of the Code of Children and Young Persons, adopted in 2022, it is prohibited to employ adolescents (defined as a person aged 12 to 17 years) in underground work, in activities that involve carrying heavy loads or toxic substances. The Committee further notes with interest the Government's indication that Supreme Decree No. 009-2022-MIMP sets out a list of hazardous work and activities prohibited to children under the age of 18 years in which the engagement of minors in mining activities (including underground work and quarries) is prohibited. The Government adds that this includes artisanal mining.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, following labour inspections in mines and quarries, the National Supervisory Authority of Labour Inspection (SUNAFIL) detected four cases of child labour in 2021 and two cases in 2022. The Committee notes however that no information is provided on the follow-up to these cases and whether they lead to prosecutions, convictions and penalties. The Committee also notes with concern that, once again, the Government has not provided information on the measures taken in practice to remove children from this worst form of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It further notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (CCPR), in its concluding observations, requested the Government to redouble its efforts to eradicate child labour, particularly in extractive industry and illegal mining (CCPR/C/PER/CO/6, 5 April 2023, para. 41). The Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous work in artisanal mines and to ensure the removal, rehabilitation and social integration of those already engaged in such work. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, including by indicating: (i) the impact of any preventive measures taken or envisaged; and (ii) the number of children and young persons who have been removed, rehabilitated and socially integrated. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of Supreme Decree No. 009-2022-MIMP, by indicating the number of reported violations with regard to the engagement of children under the age of 18 years in the mining and quarrying sector, and to include information on whether the violations detected led to prosecutions, convictions and penalties.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying children at special risk. Indigenous children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Programme on Action Platforms for Social Inclusion (PAIS) has been articulating intersectoral and interinstitutional interventions directed towards indigenous communities, and that a number of actions were directly targeted towards children aged below 14 years, such as online reading services, health services and language interpretation services. The Government also states that it does not have information on the implementation of the previously mentioned National Plan for Intercultural Bilingual Education: A vision for 2021, but that it will provide such information once it is available. The Committee notes, from the UNICEF Peru Country Office Annual Report of 2022, that because of the COVID-19 pandemic, students of indigenous origins have seen their language gap increase. The Committee also notes that the CCPR, in its concluding observations, expressed concern over the vulnerability of indigenous persons and Afro-Peruvians and the persistent structural discrimination directed against them, particularly women and girls, in the areas of education and employment (CCPR/C/PER/CO/6, 5 April 2023, para. 16). The Committee further notes, from the ILO publication of 2023 "Issue Paper on child labour and education exclusion among indigenous children", that in 2020: (1) 2 per cent of children aged 14 years were engaged in hazardous work, compared to 4 per cent of indigenous children of the same age; and (2) 17.5 per cent of indigenous children aged 14 years were out of school. The Committee also notes that the Issue Paper refers to the widespread sexual exploitation of indigenous girls in mining areas. Recalling that children of indigenous communities are at particular risk of becoming engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts and to continue taking measures, particularly in the field of education, to protect them from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide: (i) information on the impact of the measures taken, including in the framework of the National Plan for Intercultural Bilingual Education: A vision for 2021; and (ii) updated statistical data on the engagement of indigenous children in child labour and its worst forms.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working on their own account or in the informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, between 2018 and 2022, the Government, through the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE), undertook the task of profiling child labourers. The Government states that, between 2018 and 2022, a total of 620,556 child labourers were profiled by the DOLE, 614,808 of them were referred to appropriate agencies for the provision of necessary services, and out of these, 138,460 were provided with educational assistance, medical assistance, legal assistance, counselling, birth registration, feeding programmes, school supplies, hygiene kits, and food packs through Project Angel Tree. In addition, the families of these children were included in the Pantawid Pamilyang Pilipino Programme (4Ps) and received livelihood assistance, emergency employment, job placement/employment facilitation, financial assistance, medical assistance and housing assistance, with the aim of further preventing and eliminating child labour. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes it does not indicate the proportion of profiled child labourers who were working in the informal economy or on their own account, nor does it provide information on the measures taken specifically to address the situation of children working in the informal economy.

The Committee notes the Government's information that, in 2020, the DOLE inspected 14,741 establishments, during which violations of child labour laws have been identified in four establishments (which concerned: employing a child below 15 years of age; child pornography; long hours of work; night work; and hazardous work). The Government indicates that administrative proceedings are being undertaken by the DOLE against the two establishments, while the others two establishments have already corrected the noted violations. For 2021, the DOLE inspected a total of 58,805 establishments, six establishments violated child labour laws (namely: long hours of work; hazardous work; and employment of a child below 15 years of age without a work permit). In 2022, the DOLE inspected a total of 81,314 establishments, and found that eight establishments were found engaging children below 18 years of age in hazardous work. The Government indicates that the child labourers found during inspections were employed in the following industries: fishing, manufacturing, accommodation and food service activities, construction, and wholesale and retail trade. The Government indicates that for 2021 and 2022, all violations were corrected and children were removed from the workplace. It adds that in 2021, one establishment was permanently closed by the DOLE due to the death of a 17-year-old. In 2022, two establishments were ordered to close for engaging children in hazardous work which resulted in injury and for engaging a minor in prostitution.

While taking note of the activities of the labour inspectorate, the Committee observes that the establishments inspected were in the formal economy, and that no information is provided on the inspections in the informal economy. The Committee further notes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations, urged the Government to intensify labour inspections and training of investigators, particularly in the informal economy (CRC/C/PHL/CO/5-6, 26 October 2022, paragraph 38(c)). Recalling that a high number of children involved in child labour were found in the informal economy, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to better monitor children working in the informal economy and on their own account. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and to continue to provide information on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate and the penalties imposed, including in the informal economy. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of profiled child labourers who were removed from child labour and to indicate how many of them were working in the informal economy or on their own account.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the DOLE issued Department Orders Nos. 2163 and 2174, on 27 October 2020, which provide that one of the requirements for the application of issuance of a license to operate a private employment agency is a Notarized Affidavit of Undertaking, stating that the applicant shall "denounce and never support nor engage in any or all acts involving illegal recruitment, trafficking in persons, violation of Anti-Child Labour Laws or crimes involving moral turpitude or similar activities".

The Government further indicates that it continues to implement: (1) the Special Programme for Employment of Students (SPES), requiring the participating employer to comply with the general labour standards and occupational safety and health standards, and not to engage the SPES beneficiaries below 18 years of age in any hazardous work or undertaking as provided for under existing child labour-related laws, rules and regulations (in 2022, there were 128,284 beneficiaries, and 36,313 beneficiaries in 2023); (2) the Strategic Helpdesks for Information, Education, Livelihood, and other Development Interventions (SHIELD) Programme Against Child Labour, which has been allotted a total budget of 21,066,048 Philippine pesos for 2023 (approximately US$370,000); (3) the DOLE Integrated Livelihood and Emergency Employment Programme (DILEEP) which provides livelihood assistance to parents of child labourers; and (4) the Sagip Batang Manggagawa Quick Action Teams (SBW QATs) which conducted seven rescue operations where 99 child labourers were removed from hazardous and exploitative working conditions.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the progress made in the implementation of the Philippine Programme Against Child Labour (PPACL) 2020–22: (1) meetings of the National Council Against Child Labour (NCACL) and adoption of resolutions; (2) efforts to mainstream the programmes to address child labour at the local level. There are currently 14 functional Regional Councils Against Child Labour; and (3) international and local engagements and partnerships, such as the Action Pledge of the Philippines for the 2021 International Year for the Elimination of Child Labour and the 5th Global Conference on the Elimination of Child Labour. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that an assessment workshop was conducted in September 2022 to evaluate the results of the PPACL 2020–22, identify gaps and challenges, and come up with recommendations for the next Strategic Framework and Action Plan. The outputs of the assessment workshop served as initial recommendations for the next PPACL Strategic Framework. Subsequently, on a special meeting held in March 2023, the Council members approved the PPACL Strategic Framework 2023–28, and during a planning workshop in April 2023, the Action Plan for the PPACL Strategic Framework 2023–28 was formulated and adopted.

The Government further indicates that the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) launched the Bata Balik Eskwela in order to: (1) talk with and counsel children who had engaged in child labour and had stopped schooling, (2) conduct family therapy, and (3) liaise with partners including Barangay (village) Councils, school administrators, teaching personnel and civil society organizations. The Committee notes, that the DSWD, in collaboration with the ILO, developed a Module on Child Labour to raise the awareness of parents on the negative effects of child labour on their children and on their families' future, and to teach them how to end this problem in their own homes and communities. The Committee notes that these efforts resulted in the removal of 148,331 children from child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, according to data provided by the Philippine Statistics Authority (PSA), the estimated number of children in child labour was 597,000 in 2020, 935,000 in 2021 and 828,000 in 2022. Despite noting the decrease in child labour between 2021 and 2022, the Committee notes with concern the significant increase in child labour compared to 2020.

The Committee notes, from the website of the PSA that a majority of children in child labour are boys (66.2 per cent) and that 61.6 per cent of children engaged in child labour are between 15 and 17 years of age and engaged in hazardous work. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to progressively eliminate child labour, including in hazardous work. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including within the framework of the Philippine Program Against Child Labour 2022–24 and on the results achieved.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, the adoption, in 2022, of: (1) Republic Act No. 116481, which provides for higher penalties if the victim is under 16 years of age in cases of child trafficking and child prostitution; and (2) Republic Act No. 11862, which strengthens the protection of children from exploitation and trafficking by expanding the definition of trafficking to include not only forced labour, slavery and other forms of exploitation but also online sexual exploitation of children. The law also penalizes internet intermediaries who knowingly or by gross negligence allow their internet infrastructures to be used for the purpose of promoting trafficking in persons.

The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government on certain decisions of the Supreme Court of 2020 to 2023 penalizing trafficking of children. The Government adds, that between 2003 and 2023, out of 4,666 trafficking cases filed in courts, 2,558 cases involved underaged victims. Among these, there were cases of trafficking for the purpose of prostitution and sexual exploitation, online sexual exploitation of children and child labour. In the same period, the Government indicates that a total of 778 convictions for child trafficking were handed down, involving 4,210 victims.

The Committee notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) the concerns about the widespread trafficking in children that reportedly increased during the COVID-19 pandemic (CRC/C/PHL/CO/5-6, 26 October 2022, para. 40). The Committee further notes, from the 2023 preliminary observations on the visit to the Philippines by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children, that the country remains a source and destination country for child trafficking, sale, sexual exploitation and forced labour and that there is a lack of, or limited information on, the scale of the incidence of child trafficking and how child victims are exploited. While welcoming the efforts of the Government to ensure that child traffickers are prosecuted and convicted, the Committee requests it to pursue its efforts and to continue to provide information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions and convictions, and to include information on the penal sanctions imposed in cases related to the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on any assessment made of the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, including the extent of trafficking in children in the country.

Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Republic Act No. 11188 of 2019 mandates the Council for the Welfare of Children (CWC) to maintain and improve the database of children in situations of armed conflict and requires the CWC to submit a regular three-year implementation report to the Office of the President and the Congress. The Committee notes however that no information is provided on the content of the database and on how it will be used to prevent the engagement of children in armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation. The Committee further takes note of the indication of the Government that the Inter Agency Committee on Children in Situations of Armed Conflict (IAC-CSAC) developed and approved, on 30 September 2020, the Protocol on Handling and Treatment of Children in Situations of Armed Conflict.

The Protocol lays down the procedure that government representatives shall observe after obtaining physical custody of a child affected by armed conflict. The Protocol also provides for the reintegration and monitoring of the child with their family and community as a culmination of the rehabilitation process. The Government adds that, to ensure the provision of a holistic response to children in situations of armed conflict, it conducted a series of Nationwide Clustered Orientations, reaching a total of 3,139 child protection actors in the public and private sectors across 17 regions. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) signed a strategic plan to protect children in armed conflict in 2021, in coordination with the United Nations Task Force on Monitoring and Reporting, which includes undertakings, commitments, benchmarks and activities for the AFP to perform and fully comply with its obligations under International Human Rights Law. The Committee also notes that the Government carried out various awareness-raising campaigns, in which children previously affected by armed conflict intervened to share their experience.

The Committee notes, from the report of the Office of the Special Representative of the UN Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, that there was a decrease in the number of grave violations against children in situations of armed conflict compared with the previous report published in 2020. However, the report identifies the recruitment and use of 11 children (10 boys and 1 girl) attributed to the New People's Army (NPA), Abu Sayyaf Group and Dawlah Islamiyah-Maute Group (A/77/895-S/2023/363, 5 June 2023, paras 6 and 300). While taking note of the decrease in the number of children recruited for use in armed conflict and that the AFP appears to no longer recruit children, the Committee nevertheless notes with concern the continued use and recruitment of children by armed groups. It therefore urges the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed groups, including by ensuring that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out to facilitate the imposition of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that children receive the necessary and direct assistance for their removal and rehabilitation and social integration. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in maintaining and improving the database on children in armed conflict, under Republic Act No. 11188, and to indicate how the database is used to ensure that no child is forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict.

Articles 3(b), 7(1) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and penalties. Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these worst forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and reintegration. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes that Republic Act No. 116481 of 2022 penalizes the hiring, employing, using, persuading, inducing or coercing of a child (defined as a person below the age of 18 years) to perform in obscene exhibitions and indecent shows. In addition, the Government also adopted Republic Act No. 11930 of 2022 which defines unlawful and prohibited acts committed through offline and online platforms and increases the responsibilities and accountabilities of the private sector, such as social media platforms, electronic service providers and internet, and financial intermediaries with relation to child sexual abuse and exploitation. In May 2023, the Government signed the Implementing Rules and Regulations of the Republic Act No. 11930. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) in coordination with UNICEF established a comprehensive electronic case management system that will provide a simple process of documentation, intervention and collaborative response. The Government indicates that the project is at its initial stage but that the digital Integrated and Electronic Case Management System will be widely used by children and social protection agencies. The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the CRC, the launch of the #StopChildPornPh campaign and the launch of the eProtectKids hotline for reporting child sexual material online, such as child pornography. However, the CRC expressed concern over the increase in online sexual exploitation of children, especially in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, the lack of efforts to address it, and the low rates of reporting, intervention, investigation, prosecution and conviction in cases of child sexual exploitation (CRC/C/PHL/CO/5-6, paras 22 and 42). While noting that certain awareness raising measures have been undertaken to address the commercial sexual exploitation of children, the Committee once again requests the Government to take immediate and effective time-bound measures to remove child victims of commercial sexual exploitation from this worst form of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the results achieved in this regard; (ii) the progress achieved in launching the Integrated and Electronic Case Management System and the results in facilitating the intervention of authorities in cases of commercial sexual exploitation of children; (iii) the results of the eProtectKids hotline, including by providing the number of complaints received and any follow-up action undertaken; and (iv) the application in practice of the Anti-Child Pornography Act and Republic Acts Nos. 11862 and 11930, by indicating the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions imposed in cases of child commercial sexual exploitation.

Articles 3(c) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, and time-bound measures. Children engaged in drug trafficking. The Committee notes, from the 2021 Annual Report of the Philippine Drug Enforcement Agency (PDEA) that minors continue to be used by drug syndicates. In that year, a total of 599 children, aged 10 to 17 years (52 per cent aged 17 years), were rescued by the PDEA and other law enforcement agencies during drug operations, most of them (433 children) were used for pushing illegal drugs. The report briefly states that these children were turned over to the local social welfare and development offices for proper intervention. Noting the absence of relevant information provided by the Government on the measures taken to address the issue of children engaged in drug trafficking, the Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children from being engaged in this worst form of child labour and to continue to take measures to rescue them. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to this end, as well as on the measures taken to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of children rescued and those who were provided with direct assistance, as well as on the number of children reached by preventive activities, including by the previously mentioned Standard Training in Extensive Anti-Drug Prevention Education (SK STEP-UP).

Articles 3(d), 4(1), 7(1) and 7(2)(b). Hazardous work, penalties and time-bound measures. Child domestic workers. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that Department Order No. 217 of 2020 requires applicants for a license to operate a private employment agency for domestic workers to submit a notarized affidavit of undertaking stating that they "shall denounce and never support nor engage in any or all acts involving illegal recruitment, trafficking in persons nor any violation of anti-child labour laws". The Committee notes the Government's repeated information that there is a Joint Memorandum Circular on the Protocol on the Rescue and Rehabilitation of Abused Kasambahay (domestic worker) but observes that the Government does not provide information on the application in practice of the Protocol or on the implementation of the road map for the elimination of child labour in domestic work. The Committee further notes the Government's general indication that, between 2018 and 2022, 614,808 child labourers were removed from child labour and received the necessary rehabilitation services, but the Government does not indicate how many of these child labourers were engaged in hazardous working conditions in domestic work. The Committee further notes that the CRC, in its concluding observations, urged the Government to intensify labour inspections and training of investigators, particularly regarding kasambahay (domestic workers) and ensure the imposition of sanctions in case of violation of the legislation (CRC/C/PHL/CO/5-6, 26 October 2022, para. 38(c)). The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary and time-bound measures to protect child domestic workers from the worst forms of child labour, to remove them from such labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the results achieved, including in the framework of the road map for the elimination of child labour, by indicating the number of child domestic workers who have been protected or withdrawn from child labour and rehabilitated; and (ii) the number and nature of penalties imposed on persons who subject children under 18 years of age to domestic work in hazardous or exploitative conditions, in application of the Domestic Workers Act, 2013.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee takes note of the Government's report, of the observations of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) and of the Government's reply to these observations, all received on 28 September 2022. The Committee also takes note of the detailed observations of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU), received on 7 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply to the observations of the KCTU.

Articles 3 and 6 of the Convention. Hazardous work and apprenticeships. The Committee notes that the Republic of Korea currently has an "on-the-job training" (OJT) system for 12th graders (typically 16–17-year-olds) attending specialized vocational high schools and a "work-study combination" (WSC) system for 11th and 12th graders (typically 16 to 18 years of age) at apprenticeship high schools.

The Committee observes that the KCTU essentially alleges that the OJT and WSC systems cannot be regarded as vocational or technical training in the practical sense because they are mainly used to increase the early employment rate of students in vocational or apprenticeship high schools rather than to provide learning and skills to the trainees involved. Moreover, according to the KCTU, trainees often work in unsafe conditions, leading to occupational accidents, and they are often unsupervised and receive little to no actual training.

The Committee notes the KCTU's allegation that the OJT system, despite being regulated through the Vocational Education and Training Promotion Act, exposes youth to poor working environments without sufficient guidance. Issues raised by the KCTU regarding the OJT system include weak occupational safety and health implementation and a lack of oversight during training and a lack of effective management and supervision. The KCTU also observes that trainees are exposed to dangerous working conditions. Of the youth dispatched to companies for on-the-job training, some are assigned to very risky environments with many hazards, such as those related to construction, machinery, chemical engineering, and electricity. Many of these OJT participants do not receive sufficient occupational safety education prior to such an assignment and are therefore often involved in industrial accidents while performing their work. The Committee notes, from the observations of the KCTU, that there were six industrial accidents involving on-the-job trainees in 2019 and five in 2020, many of which involved serious injury. The KCTU observes that, given the high likelihood that less major accidents were not reported due to the nature of on-the-job training, the actual total number of industrial accidents is very likely higher. The KCTU also provides information on a 2021 accident that led to the death of an on-the-job trainee while he was diving to remove barnacles from the hull of a leisure boat at a yacht marina. Not only is diving work classified as an occupation prohibited to young persons under 18, under section 65 of the Labour Standards Act (and other regulations), but it was reported that at the time of the accident, the trainee had no diving-related qualifications, certificates, experience or skills.

With regard to the WSC system, the KCTU indicates that, according to the Act on Work-study Combination at Industrial Sites (the “WSC Act”), “work-study combination” refers to a program of vocational education and training that an employer (“participating company”) provides on- and off-site to “participating employees” on performing their duties. The issues raised by the KCTU regarding this system include the fact that this type of training occurs in a corporate environment in which proper training cannot be provided to participating employees (due for example to the small size of a majority of participating companies and to the lack of on-site trainers); that the work at participating workplaces has little to do with school lessons and learning, and often requires no skills; and that participating employees are exposed to danger. The KCTU alleges that there are also safety issues within the training programmes of the WSC system, that a report from a full-scale survey inspecting the operation of apprenticeship schools in South Jeolla (Jeonnam) Province showed that only 79.7 per cent of participating employees answered that they had received safety education from their companies, and that 15.6 per cent of them work without safety equipment or have to buy their own safety equipment. As many as 33.7 per cent of the respondents answered that they themselves or a friend had been injured while working. One-third of participating employees directly or indirectly experienced an industrial accident.

The Committee further notes that the FKTU, in its observations, indicates that the industrial accident death of the trainee in 2021 has highlighted a serious issue that is currently emerging as a social problem in the Republic of Korea: the working conditions and protection measures for “student labourers”/“student youth workers”. In this regard, the FKTU indicates that the Government announced the launch of the “Additional Improvement Plan for Occupational School Field Practice to Secure Safety and Rights”, on December 2021, which itself identifies the three major issues in the training systems: (1) lack of systematic management, supervision and support to ensure the safety of students; (2) low awareness of the field training for students on-site; and (3) insufficient conditions for education-centered field training, and the lack of environment for the expansion of opportunities. The FKTU indicates that, in this regard, the plan aims to promote field training safety, expand the protection of field trainees’ rights and interests, and reinforce the foundation for field training operations. The FKTU observes that the details on the implementation status of such improvement measures should be provided by the Government.

Finally, the Committee notes that, in the Government’s reply to the FKTU’s observations, the Government states that, while it deeply shares the need for the prevention of occupational accidents for students in technical education and is taking measures to ensure the occupational safety and health of on-the-job trainees, this issue is not under the scope of the application of the Convention, because Article 6 excludes from the scope of coverage of the Convention work done by young persons in schools for general, vocational or technical education or other training institutions.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the minimum age of for apprenticeships and vocational training in Korea appears to be 16 years and that, therefore, trainees are generally over the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee recalls, however, that while work done in the course of vocational training or apprenticeships is not covered by the provisions of the Convention, this relates only as regards the minimum age requirement, namely that children under the minimum age may perform work if it is in the framework of vocational education or apprenticeships (the latter for children over the age of 14). However, the requirements of Article 3 of the Convention, regarding protection from hazardous work, apply to all children and young persons, including those engaged in vocational training or apprenticeships (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 385).

The Committee therefore notes with concern the situation regarding the lack of safety and adequate training and supervision given to trainees. The Committee recalls that Article 3(1) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardise the health, safety or morals of young persons shall not be less than 18 years. While Article 3(3) of the Convention allows certain hazardous types of employment or work to be performed as from the age of 16 years, this is provided that certain conditions are met: (1) the organizations of employers and workers concerned must have been consulted beforehand; (2) the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned must be fully protected; and (3) they must have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee further recalls that these conditions must be applied to all workers, including young persons in the course of their apprenticeship or vocational training. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that trainees under the age of 18 years are not engaged in hazardous types of work, particularly those prohibited to children under the age of 18 in accordance with section 65 of the Labour Standards Act and/or other regulations. If trainees over the age of 16 years are engaged in certain types of hazardous work in the course of their apprenticeship or vocational training, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to ensure that the performance of these hazardous tasks is authorized only as prescribed by Article 3(3) of the Convention, namely that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they receive adequate, specific instruction or training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard, as well as on the consultations held with the concerned organizations of employers and workers on this issue.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee notes the Vocational Education and Training Promotion Act, which serves as the basis of the OJT system, provides that the state and local governments shall guide and supervise on-the-job training (section 7). Regarding its operation, the Minister of Education, the Minister of Employment and Labour, and metropolitan/provincial superintendents may provide guidance or conduct inspections, such as ordering vocational education and training institutions and on-the-job industries to report or submit materials as necessary or having relevant civil servants perform field inspections (section 25). The KCTU alleges that while on-site inspections in the framework of the OJT system can be conducted along with the Korea Occupational Safety and Health Agency or the Korea Industrial Safety Association (when they request to join the inspection first), they are usually carried out by a labour attorney alone, who visits only once and ticks each box either “good” or “poor” on the checklist, in accordance with the “2022 Company Coaching Project Manual for On-the-job Training of Vocational High Schools”. The FKTU indicates that the manual asks labour attorneys to focus more on “guiding” companies or “explaining” the system so that the companies can carry out on-the-job training, rather than expecting strict adherence to the checklist items.

With regard to the WSC system, the KCTU indicates that one of the reasons why participating companies do not provide a safe training environment for participating employees is that the WSC Act itself does not obligate companies to do so. Even if an industrial accident occurs, the designation of the company as a participating company is not cancelled, and the company either receives a corrective order or their designation may be temporarily suspended (section 14(1)3 of the WSC Act). Participating companies are required to take safety measures in accordance with the Occupational Safety and Health Act, but if they fail to fulfil this obligation, the penalty is only a fine not exceeding five million won (approximately US$3,725) (section 42(2)2 of the WSC Act).

The Committee recalls that Article 9(1) of the Convention requires that all necessary measures, including the provision of appropriate and sufficiently dissuasive penalties, be taken by the competent authority to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of this Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all persons who, in the framework of the OJT or WSC systems, either:

- employ children between the ages of 16 and 18 in hazardous work without respecting the conditions of safety and training, or
- employ children under 18 years of age in types of hazardous work that are prohibited in accordance with section 65 of the Labour Standards Act and/or other regulations,

Incur effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties, and not only warnings or guidance, in accordance with Article 9(1) of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the type of violations of the Convention detected by inspections in both systems, and the number and nature of penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Republic of Moldova

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Unions of Moldova (CNSM), received on 17 August 2022.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working in the informal economy and self-employed children. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that labour inspections concerning 26 employees under the age of 18 were carried out in 2021. In total, 31 violations of the national legislation in relation to work of young persons under 18 years were detected. This included, amongst others, violations of sections 46(3) (employment of persons under 15 years of age); 71 (use of undeclared work); and 253(1) (employment of young persons under 18 years without conducting a medical examination) of the Labour Code. The Government also indicates that labour inspectors submitted four contravention minutes to the courts which led to the adoption of three court decisions sanctioning the employers with fines.

The Committee recalls that in its detailed comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), it noted the decrease in the number of inspections carried out by the State Labour Inspectorate, including in agriculture, and of workers covered by inspection controls as well as the restrictions on the undertaking of labour inspections. While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is guaranteed to all children working outside a formal employment relationship, such as self-employed children or children in the informal economy. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to better monitor children working both in the formal and in the informal economy, particularly in the agricultural sector. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities carried out by the State Labour Inspectorate in relation to child labour, including the number of labour inspections carried out, the number and nature of cases detected, and any follow-up measures taken.

Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 46(3) of the Labour Code, which allows children over 15 years of age to conclude work contracts with the written permission of their parents, or legal representatives, provided that this does not impair their health, education, development or vocational training, is in line with Article 2(3) of the Convention which sets out a minimum age for admission to employment or work of not less than 15 years.

The Committee recalls once again that as per Article 2(1) of the Convention, a Member state which ratifies the Convention shall specify, in a declaration appended to its ratification, a minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee further recalls that, upon ratifying the Convention, the Government declared 16 years to be the minimum age for admission to employment and that, consequently, pursuant to Article 2(1) of the Convention, children under that age may not be admitted to work except in light work, which may be undertaken in the conditions set out in Article 7 of the Convention. The Committee also notes that the CNSM, in its observations, indicates that the provisions of section 46(3) of the Labour Code should be adjusted, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to ensure that no person under the minimum age specified by the Government (16 years) shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, except for light work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that, in the context of the revision of the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 years, discussions would be undertaken with regard to adopting a list of light work activities that may be carried out by children of 14 years of age, pursuant to section 11(2) and (3) of the Child Rights Act of 1994. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government's report concerning its previous request to provide information on the progress made with regard to the adoption of a list of light work activities that may be carried out by children of 14 to 16 years of age. The Committee also takes note of the CNSM's observations pointing out the importance of the adoption of such a list.

The Committee recalls that, under Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine the activities in which light work may be permitted and shall prescribe the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to determine the types of light work activities that may be undertaken by children from 14 to 16 years of age, as well as the number of hours and the conditions in which such light work may be undertaken. It asks the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that in 2021, 13 prosecutions were initiated under section 206 (trafficking of children) of the Criminal Code, following which 6 indictments were filed in court and 25 persons were sentenced to imprisonment. The Committee also notes that according to the 2020 report of the Group of Experts on Action Against Trafficking in Human Beings (GRETA) on the implementation of the Council of Europe Convention on Action against Trafficking in Human Beings by the Republic of Moldova, an increasing number of trafficking cases concerned children from rural areas communicating via social networks or websites offering job opportunities. The GRETA further indicated challenges in the investigation of such cases due to lack of evidence (para. 199). The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that all cases of child trafficking are subject to thorough investigations with a view to ensure that perpetrators are prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of section 206 of the Criminal Code in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2021, 22 child victims of trafficking, including 21 girls and 1 boy, were identified. According to the Government, 19 child victims were trafficked within the Republic of Moldova, including for the purposes of labour exploitation (7 child victims) and sexual exploitation (1 child victim). The Government also indicates that the assistance and protection centres for victims of trafficking provided 19 children with assistance services in 2021. In addition, the Public Association International Centre "La Strada" provided various services to child victims of trafficking, including medical and psychological assistance.

The Committee notes the Report on Observance of Child's Rights in 2021 of the People's Advocate (Ombudsman) of the Republic of Moldova indicating that a mechanism for intersectoral cooperation in identifying, assessing, referring and assisting child victims and potential victims of violence, neglect, exploitation and trafficking (adopted by the Government's Decree No. 270 of 2014) is often not applied or is applied defectively in practice (page 52). The Committee further notes that in its 2020 report, the GRETA urged the Moldovan authorities to strengthen their efforts to improve the identification of, and assistance to, child victims, in particular by strengthening the capacity of child protection professionals (para. 205). The GRETA also urged the authorities to ensure that all child victims of trafficking, including children older than 14, are in practice afforded special protection measures (para. 151). The Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to ensure that all child victims of trafficking are removed from the worst form of child labour and provided with appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been removed and provided with assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes with regret the Government's information in its report that there have been no legislative developments and therefore, section 7(2) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act of 1938 as amended (EWYPC Act), continues to exempt work in an industrial undertaking or ship in which only members of the same family are employed. Once again recalling that the Convention applies to all types of work or employment, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the protections provided under the EWYPC Act are extended to all types of work by children, including in an industrial undertaking or ship in which only members of the same family are employed. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the minimum age for employment is 16 years, according to section 18(1) of Chapter 296 of the National Insurance Act of 1986. The Committee notes, however, that this provision does not concern the minimum working age but relates to the requirement of persons aged 16 to 60 years to be insured under the Act.

The Committee recalls that section 3(1) of the EWYPC Act sets the minimum age for work or employment at 14 years. It therefore notes that the age of completion of compulsory education (set at 16 years under Part III of the Education Act of 2006) continues to be higher than the minimum age for work or employment. In this regard, the Committee notes, from the Government's report submitted to the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review of the Human Rights Council, the Government's indication that an Employment Relations Bill has been prepared which will include a clause to increase the statutory minimum age from 14 to 16 years (A/HRC/WG. 6/39/VCT/1, 15 October 2021, paragraph 138). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the general minimum age for admission to employment or work in order to link it with the age of completion of compulsory schooling, in conformity with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard, including through the adoption of the Employment Relations Bill.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to and determination of hazardous work. With regard to the minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there have been no legislative developments. Noting the absence of progress in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that work done in the context of an apprenticeship or vocational training is regulated and provides for: (i) a minimum age for entry into apprenticeships; (ii) the types of work in which an apprenticeship may be undertaken; and (iii) the conditions under which an apprenticeship may be undertaken and performed. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Previous comment

Articles 3(d) and 4(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, that once again there has been no progress to prohibit the employment of children under the age of 18 years in hazardous work nor to determine the types of hazardous work prohibited to children below 18 years of age. The Committee further notes that the Government provides no information on the results of the consultations, ongoing since 2013, which were intended to amend the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act (EWYPC Act) to bring it into conformity with Articles 3(d) and 4(1) of the Convention. The Committee therefore notes with regret that section 3(1) of the EWYPC Act continues to permit the employment of children in all types of work and employment, including hazardous types of work, from the age of 14 years (except for the prohibition on night work in industrial undertakings under section 3(2)). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation: (i) prohibits the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work; and (ii) determines the types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in this regard, including the status of any ongoing consultations with social partners and other stakeholders to this end.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that children were found to be engaged in hazardous work, including in the agricultural sector, the commercial sex industry and the illicit trade in drugs. It notes that the Government, in reply to its previous request, merely indicates that no new statistical information is available with regard to the implementation of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls the importance of providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice and emphasizes the necessity to ensure that sufficient and up-to-date data on the prevalence of the worst forms of child labour are made available to determine the magnitude of child labour and, in particular, its worst forms (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions of 2012, para. 647). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of children involved in the worst forms of child labour are made available. It requests the Government to provide information on the nature, extent and trends of the worst forms of child labour, the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2008)

Previous comment

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory education. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, that the Labour and Employment Relations Amendment Act, 2023, amended section 51 of the Labour and Employment Relations Act, 2013, by raising the minimum age for work or employment from 15 to 16 years. It notes with satisfaction that the minimum age for work or employment is now aligned with the age of completion of compulsory education, in line with Article 2(3) of the Convention.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. With regard to the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of types of light work activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour and Employment Relations Amendment Act, 2023, introduced amendments to section 51 of the Labour and Employment Relations Act, 2013, consistent with the requirements of Article 7(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes with interest that section 51(2), as amended, sets the minimum age for light work activities at 13 years, with the requirements that such work: (1) is not likely to be harmful to the health and development of the child; (2) does not affect the child's attendance at school or vocational training or prevent or interfere with school attendance, active participation in school activities or the child's education development; and (3) complies with regulations. The Committee further notes, from the Government's report on the application of Convention No. 182, that a draft Labour and Employment Relations Regulation, 2023, is in the final stages before adoption. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Labour and Employment Relations Regulation, 2023, includes: (i) provisions to ensure the determination of light work activities; (ii) the conditions in which light work may be permitted; and (iii) the number of hours during which such employment of children may be undertaken.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2008)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the COVID-19 pandemic and the change of government administration led to a delay in the adoption of the Crimes Amendment Bill, 2020. The Committee recalls that the Bill proposes to amend the definition of a child for the purposes of section 82 of the Crimes Act, 2013, (on the prohibition to sell, deliver, exhibit, print, publish, create, produce or distribute any indecent material that depicts a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct) from a person under the age of 16 years to all persons aged under 18 years. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Crimes Amendment Bill, 2020, is adopted, without delay, so that the prohibition of section 82 of the Crimes Act, 2013, on the production and distribution of indecent materials depicting children will include children between 16 and 18 years of age. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, following the adoption of the Labour and Employment Relations Amendment Act, 2023, a draft Labour and Employment Relations Regulation, 2023, has been prepared and is in the final stages before adoption. The Government adds that the draft Regulation contains a list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Labour and Employment Relations Regulation, 2023, containing a list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 will be enacted and enforced without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Reaching out to children at special risk. Children working as street vendors. The Government indicates that, despite some delays due to the COVID-19 pandemic, substantial work was undertaken towards the adoption of the Child Care and Protection Bill. The Committee recalls in particular that, under section 55(1) of the Bill, no child under the age of 14 years shall be permitted to sell any goods on the streets or in any public places, while no child who is below the age requiring compulsory attendance at school is permitted to sell goods on the streets or in any public places after 7 p.m. on any day. The Government further indicates that the Samoa Inter-Agency Essential Services published and disseminated a “Guide for responding to gender-based violence and child protection”, which outlines the referral pathway for services in response to cases of violence against children, including cases of labour exploitation of children. The Committee also notes the 2022 Rapid Assessment Survey of Child Vendors in Samoa, undertaken with the collaboration of the ILO and UNICEF. The Survey identified and interviewed 135 child street vendors (51 girls and 84 boys) to understand the characteristics of child vendors, including their age, education status, level of education, social and economic background and reasons for engaging in street vending. The Government adds that the data collected will contribute to evidence-based policy development. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to identify and protect children engaged in street trading from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) the measures and results achieved in this regard; (ii) the measures taken or envisaged following the publication of the 2022 Rapid Assessment Survey of Child Vendors in Samoa; (iii) how the Inter-Agency’s “Guide for responding to gender-based violence and child protection” has facilitated the provision of direct assistance for children engaged in street trading; and (iv) the number of child street vendors who have been removed from the worst forms of child labour and provided with assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. With reference to its earlier comments, the Committee notes the information contained in the Government’s report, according to which the principle actors concerned are not well versed in the national policy on child labour, which has prevented the successful implementation of the action foreseen under the National Framework Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (PCNPETE 2012–17). The Government also adds that the PCNPETE has not received sufficient funding to apply the established strategy effectively.

The Committee notes the action undertaken with the support of the ILO through its International Programme on the Elimination of Child Labour. Other partners at operational level also participated in implementation of the PCNPETE, through action to withdraw and rehabilitate children in child labour, including the NGOs Concept and La Lumière in the Diouras at Kédougou and in the Saint-Louis fishing sector. In that instance, the children subject to child labour are cared for by local child protection mechanisms, established as part of the National Child Protection Strategy.

The Committee notes that although the last national survey on child labour dates from 2005, the Government does collect data, in particular by drawing up forms for distribution to the labour inspectors in the four PCNPETE pilot regions. The Committee again requests the Government to continue to combat child labour through implementing the PCNPETE. It also requests the Government to provide information on the various projects launched by other actors that may have an impact on the elimination of child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that sufficient updated data on the situation of child workers are available, for example using the data-collection forms, until the holding of a new national survey on child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on results in this regard.

Article 2(1). Minimum age for admission to employment or work. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the bill amending section L.145 of the Labour Code on the minimum age for admission to work was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 2 January 2019, but that the Government has not provided a copy thereof, nor of the ministerial orders that it mentions.

The Committee notes that the Government refers to that the technical revision of Orders Nos. 3,748 to 3,751 of the Ministry of Labour, which will raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work from 15 to 16. Given that the Committee has been commenting on the bill amending section L.145 of the Labour Code on the minimum age of admission to employment or work for over 15 years, the Committee once again firmly hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation is amended, as soon as possible, to bring it into conformity with the Convention and only providing for exemptions from the minimum age of admission to employment and work strictly in cases prescribed in the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to keep it informed of the revision of Orders Nos. 3,748 to 3,751.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the project “Ensemble vers la Réforme du Travail” (Together towards Labour Reform), conducted under the partnership established between the ILO International Training Centre, Turin, the German Society for International Cooperation and Senegal and which aims to create a continuous training system for labour inspectors. This system targets a number of labour inspectors to represent each region and who will form a group of focal points known as “Task Force”, in order to reinforce the capacities of the entire labour inspection service in Senegal. During 2022, seven activities based on the ILO training methodology were undertaken. The project directly targets very small, small and medium-sized enterprises in the formal and informal economies of Senegal. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the reinforcement of the labour inspection service undertaken to ensure monitoring of child labour, particularly in the informal economy, and to ensure that these children receive the protection provided under the Convention.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it highlighted a contradiction between section 1 of Order No. 3748/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 relating to child labour, which provides that the minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work is 18 years, and Order No. 3750/MFPTEOP/DTSS of 6 June 2003 establishing the nature of the hazardous types of work prohibited for children and young persons, which allows persons under 16 years of age to perform certain types of hazardous work.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it reiterates its commitment to correcting all points in the legislation that do not conform with the Convention through legislative reform, only providing for exemptions from the minimum age of admission to employment and work strictly in cases prescribed in the Convention. However, the Committee notes with deep concern that the legislative reform announced is still ongoing. Recalling once more that it has been raising this question since 2006, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention without delay, in order to ensure that children of less than 16 years of age cannot be engaged in work in underground mines and quarries. The Committee also urges the Government to ensure that the conditions provided under Article 3(3) of the Convention are fully guaranteed for young persons between 16 and 18 years of age engaged in the hazardous types of work covered by Order No. 3750 of 6 June 2003, including that they have received adequate specific instructions and training in the particular types of hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide copies of the regulatory texts concerned once they have been adopted.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children for economic exploitation and forced labour. Begging. With regard to its previous comments, in which the Committee expressed its concern at the persistent exploitation of talibé children and deplored the low number of prosecutions under section 3 of Act No. 2005-06, it notes the Government's intention in its report to adopt a draft Children's Code rapidly. This draft, under its section 118, provides for the creation of a complaints mechanism for children, entitled "Children's Defender". According to the provisions, the Children's Defender may be contacted by different parties: the children themselves, their legal representatives, the medical and social services, or any other person or association informed of the violation of the child's rights. The Children's Defender is also empowered to act on her or his own initiative on being informed of violations of the rights of the child.

The Committee also notes the information in the report submitted by Senegal to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, published on 8 December 2022 (CRC/C/SEN/6-7, para. 68), according to which that Committee requested the National Statistics and Demography Agency to conduct a study "on the status of data collection on begging".

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information on the number of children engaged in begging, and on the number of prosecutions filed under section 3 of Act No. 2005-06. Recalling that the penalties established are only effective if they are applied in practice, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure the effective enforcement in practice of section 3 of Act No. 2005-06 and the punishment of persons who use talibé children under 18 years of age for begging for economic exploitation. The Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts for the effective reinforcement of the capacities of the officials responsible for the enforcement of the law and to ensure that the perpetrators of these acts, as well as State officials who fail to investigate such allegations, are prosecuted and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice on those who are convicted. The Committee again requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed under Act No. 2005-06. It also requests it to provide information on progress regarding the report on "the status of data-collection on begging".

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and the provision of assistance to remove them from these forms of child labour. Talibé children. Projects and programmes for the removal of children from the streets. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report regarding the activities undertaken to support the social reintegration of children in street situations. The Ministry of Child Protection provided 24 families and 15 Koranic schools (daaras) with kits containing food, hygiene products and other products. Moreover, 60 families were enrolled in the National Family Security Grants Programme, and 15 daaras which came forward voluntarily were funded through micro-projects to accompany families in their return to the area they left from and to build their self-sufficiency.

The Committee also notes that besides the plan for the removal of children from the street, the Ministry of Child Protection has drawn up two different projects: the project to support, remove and rehabilitate street children, with a pilot phase to be developed in the Dakar region; and the programme to promote the removal and socioeconomic reintegration of street children, currently at the fund-raising phase. The Committee requests the Government to continue to reinforce the relevant programmes to be able to remove child victims of begging for exclusively economic purposes and ensure their lasting rehabilitation and social integration, particularly by ensuring effective follow-up to the children's removal from the streets. The Committee also requests the Government to transmit information on the measures taken in this regard and to provide statistics on the number of talibé children withdrawn from the worst forms of child labour that have benefited from rehabilitation and social reintegration.

Project to modernize daaras. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report, according to which the Ministry of Education, through the project to improve the quality and equity of basic education (the PAQEED project) has developed strategies including: (1) implementation of the modern daaras curriculum, integrating memorizing the Koran, religious education and basic elementary school competencies; and (2) implementation of an investment programme aimed at the construction, rehabilitation and fitting out of daaras so as to create a physical and pedagogical environment propitious to good quality education.

The Committee also notes the information according to which other projects aim to promote implementation of the PAQEED project by integrating support for daaras, in collaboration with international entities such as the Islamic Development Bank, the World Bank, UNICEF and the United States Agency for International Development.

However, The Committee notes with regret that the bill establishing the status of daaras, introduced first in 2010, then reintroduced in 2013 and approved by the Council of Ministers in 2018, has not yet been adopted. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the project to modernize daaras through the above programmes, as well as the results achieved. Finally, the Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the bill establishing the status of daaras is adopted in the near future and it requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which this bill, when it has been adopted, will contribute to the modernization of daaras and will protect talibé children from forced begging.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that: (1) information on court decisions relating to the application of the Convention is not readily available but that the Government is working on collecting this information; and (2) the most recent statistical data on the application of the Convention dates back to 2011. The Committee also notes that the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 6 (MICS 6) 2017 has not been updated. It notes the Government's request for ILO technical assistance for the collection of statistical data on child labour.

The Committee further notes that the Government does not provide information on the adoption of the Child Labour Action Plan, as mentioned in its previous report, nor does it provide information on the implementation of the National Child Welfare Policy and the National Child Protection Strategy. Recalling the large number of children involved in child labour, including in hazardous work, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) prevent and eliminate child labour within the country, including through the adoption of a national policy to this end; and (ii) ensure that sufficient data on children engaged in child labour is made available. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the adoption of the Child Labour Action Plan; (ii) the measures taken to implement the National Child Welfare Policy and the National Child Protection Strategy; (iii) any other measures taken towards the progressive elimination of child labour; and (iv) the nature, extent and trends of child labour in the country, including in hazardous work and in the informal economy

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work and determination of these types of work. The Committee notes the Government's information on the adoption of the Employment Act, 2023. Recalling that, under the Employers and Employed Act of 1960, children from the age of 16 years were permitted to perform underground work, the Committee notes with satisfaction that the Employment Act: (1) prohibits the work of a child under the age of 18 years in any work that is likely to jeopardize his/her health, safety, physical, mental, moral or social development or to interfere with his/her education (section 95(4)); (2) prohibits the engagement of a child under 18 years of age in underground work (section 95(2)); and (3) explicitly repeals the Employers and Employed Act (section 116).

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Employment Regulations, 2023, are in the final stages before adoption. It notes with interest that section 23(2) of the draft Regulations determines the types of hazardous work which are prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, in accordance with section 95(4) of the Employment Act. The Committee notes that this includes, but is not limited to, work within the mining and quarrying industries. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that section 23(3), establishing a list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years is retained during the enactment of the Employment Regulations.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. The Committee notes that, under section 24(3) of the draft Employment Regulations, 2023, a child may be employed in hazardous types of work, provided the employer ensures the safety, well-being, and protection of the child from exploitation or harm, and that adequate supervision, appropriate working conditions and compliance with child protection guidelines be maintained. The Committee notes that this exemption: (1) does not determine a minimum age; and that (2) while requiring that the safety and health of young persons be ensured, it does not require that they also receive adequate specific vocational training in the relevant branch of activity.

The Committee further notes that section 24(2) of the draft Regulations provides that, the Minister of Labour and Social Security, upon receipt of an application, may authorize, on a case-by-case basis, a child to perform hazardous types of work, provided it is in the framework of an approved vocational training programme, apprenticeship or training institution. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, even in the context of an apprenticeship or vocational training, exemptions permitting young persons under 18 years to perform hazardous types of work should be limited to those who are at least 16 years of age. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that sections 24(2) and (3) of the draft Employment Regulations, 2023, are modified to: (i) set a minimum age of at least 16 years for exemptions to the general prohibition of children under 18 years of age to perform hazardous work, including in vocational training and apprenticeships; and (ii) ensure that, in all cases, they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity, in addition to ensuring that their health, safety and morals be fully protected.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that: (1) section 99 of the Employment Act explicitly sets the minimum age to commence an apprenticeship with a craftsman at 14 years or after completion of basic education; and (2) sections 100 to 103 provide for the conditions under which an apprenticeship may be performed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 99 of the Employment Act, including on the number of violations reported and the penalties imposed.

Article 7(1) and (3). Age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee notes with interest that the Employment Act: (1) sets the minimum age for engagement of a child in light work at 13 years (section 96(1)); and (2) defines light work as work which is not likely to be harmful to the health or development of the child and does not affect the child's attendance at school or the capacity of the child to benefit from schoolwork (section 96(2)). However, the Government also indicates that the legislation does not provide the conditions in which light work may be permitted or the number of hours during which such employment may be undertaken. The Committee also notes that the draft Employment Regulations do not set out a list of light work activities. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Employment Regulations, 2023, include: (i) provisions to ensure the determination of light work activities; (ii) the conditions in which light work may be permitted; and (iii) the number of hours during which such employment of children may be undertaken.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking in children. The Committee notes with interest, from the Government's report, the adoption of the Anti-Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling Act, 2022, which replaces and repeals the Anti-Human Trafficking Act, 2005. The new Act provides for more dissuasive penalties, including not less than 25 years' imprisonment for persons convicted of trafficking (section 12). The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not reply to its previous requests for statistical information on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed regarding the trafficking of children under 18 years. It notes, from the Government's report on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that the Government is working on collecting data on court decisions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of offenders are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to collect and provide information on the application of the Anti-Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling Act in practice, including statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed regarding the trafficking of children under 18 years.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work. Concerning the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work and determination of the types of hazardous work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. National Task Force on Anti-Human Trafficking. The Committee notes that the Government merely repeats the information previously provided, namely that: (1) training has been widely conducted for border patrol agents; (2) a Family Support Unit within the Sierra Leone police force has been established across the country to deal with matters relating to offences against children and young persons; and (3) it established a Fast-Track Court for Sexual Offences (Sexual Offence Mobile Court). The Committee further notes, that the Anti-Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling Act, in its sections 2 to 10, sets out the responsibilities and functions of the National Task Force on Anti-Human Trafficking, including: implementing and enforcing the Act; receiving and investigating reports of activities of human trafficking; monitoring migration patterns; initiating measures to inform and educate the public about the causes and consequences of human trafficking; collecting, storing and publishing data on human trafficking; cooperating with foreign governments; advising the Government; assisting victims; and publishing its annual report. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the activities of, and results achieved by, the National Anti-Task Force on Human Trafficking to combat trafficking in children, including on the specific measures taken to: (i) implement the Anti-Human Trafficking and Migrant Smuggling Act; (ii) investigate reports of child trafficking; (iii) raise awareness among the public on the causes and consequences of trafficking in children; (iv) collect and publish data on trafficking in children; and (v) collaborate with other governmental agencies to this end. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the annual report of the Task Force. The Committee once again requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the scope, functions and operationalization of the Family Support Unit of the Sierra Leone police; and (ii) indicate if the Sexual Offence Mobile Court has allowed for the prosecution of cases of trafficking in children.

National Technical Steering Committee, Child Welfare Committees and National Commission for Children. Noting the absence of information provided by the Government, the Committee once again requests it to: (i) strengthen national, state, district and community level monitoring mechanisms to combat trafficking in children; and (ii) provide information on the activities of the National Commission for Children, and the National Technical Steering Committee on preventing and combating trafficking in children, as well as the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Solomon Islands

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2012)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 and requests the Government to reply to them. It also notes the discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2022) regarding the application of the Convention by Solomon Islands in the absence of the Government.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Articles 3(a) and (b), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and commercial sexual exploitation, monitoring mechanisms and sanctions. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee took positive note of the steps taken by the Government to bring its national legislation in conformity with the Convention, including with respect to the use, procuring and offering of children for prostitution, but expressed its deep concern about the persistence of the sale and trafficking of children, particularly girls, for sexual exploitation purposes. The Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure that cases concerning the sale and trafficking of children are duly investigated, prosecuted, and sanctioned, and to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement bodies for this purpose.

The Committee notes that the ITUC refers in its observations to the existence of evidence of cases of sale and trafficking of children by their parents to foreign workers for sexual purposes, including in nightclubs, motels, logging camps, and fishing vessels, as well as to the absence of information on measures of prevention, inspection, investigation, and prosecution of this practice.

The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the IOE points out to the need to continue adopting measures, as a matter of priority, to sensitize the community on this matter and to reinforce the capacities of the labour inspectorates, operators of the criminal justice system, social workers, and the private sector to effectively eliminate this worst form of child labour. It also encourages the Government to continue working with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations and international development cooperation organizations to prevent the use and procuring of children for prostitution.

The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to one criminal case concerning child pornography which ended in the conviction of the offender. It further notes, the Government's indication that the Sexual Assault Unit within the Police Force investigates cases related to child commercial sexual exploitation. However, it notes that the Government does not provide information on cases related to the sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation or the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution that have been investigated, prosecuted, and punished. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to reinforce the capacities of the law enforcement bodies (including the police force, prosecutors, and judges) to ensure that: (i) thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons who engage in the sale or trafficking of children and/or the use, procuring and offering of a child for prostitution; and (ii) sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed on the offenders. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of prosecutions, legal proceedings, convictions, and penalties imposed for trafficking of children for sexual exploitation (section 145 of the Penal Code (Amendment) (Sexual Offences) Act 2016 and section 77 of the Immigration Act 2012), and for using, procuring or offering a child for prostitution (sections 141(2) and 143 of the Penal Code (Amendment) (Sexual Offences) Act 2016).

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to adopt, without delay, legislation prohibiting the use, procuring, or offering of a child under the age of 18 years for the production and/or trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it will consider this matter to be included in the national penal legislation. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a person under 18 years for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). List of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that the Government was developing a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 with the technical support of the ILO. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to adopt without delay, in consultation with the social partners, a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 years.

The Committee notes that the ITUC calls on the Government to finalize, in consultation with the social partners, the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 49 of the Labour Act (which prohibits the work of persons under the age of 18 years in underground mines, on ships, as a trimmer or stroker, or during the night in any industry) is still applied pending the adoption of a list of types of hazardous work. The Government indicates that a copy of the list will be sent once it has been tabulated and adopted, in collaboration with the social partners. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to finalize a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Education Strategic Framework (ESF) 2016–2030, which sets out as a long-term objective achieving full completion to quality and relevant primary and junior secondary (age 13 to 15) education for all. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC refers to the disparities in access to and the quality of education between urban and remote areas. It also notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure access to free basic education to all children, particularly children from poor and disadvantaged families as well as children living in remote areas.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Gross Enrolment Ratio for primary and junior secondary education remains stable and in line with the population growth. At primary level, the Gross Enrolment Ratio increased from 136 to 142 per cent over 2016–20, signalling that over-age students were enrolled in schools. However, there was a five per cent increase in out-of-school children between 2018 to 2019 (from 8 to 13 per cent). The Government adds that one of the measures taken by the Ministry of Education to keep children in school was to abolish the sixth year exam in 2019 to allow students to advance into the seventh year of education (junior secondary education). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to facilitate access to free basic education (both primary and lower secondary education) by all children, particularly children from poor and disadvantaged families and those living in remote areas. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical information on school enrolment, completion and drop-out rates for primary and lower secondary education.

Application of the Convention in practice. With regard to the Conference Committee's and the Committee's request for updated statistical data on situations of worst forms of child labour, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it will intensify its efforts to implement a database containing statistical information on the nature, extent, and trends of the worst forms of child labour; the number of children protected by measures giving effect to the Convention; as well as the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties imposed. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to provide this information in its next report.

The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in relation to the issues raised in this observation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Somalia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's first report and the observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU) received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Government indicates in its report that article 29 of the Provisional Constitution of 2012 provides for the right of children to be protected from armed conflict and not to be used in armed conflict (paragraph 6). In addition, it indicates that the Somali National Army issued a general staff Order (No. 1), stating that children under 18 years of age may not enlist in the army.

The Committee notes that the draft Labour Code of 2019 provides, in its section 7 entitled "Slavery and forced labour and recruitment of children into the armed forces", for the prohibition of forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict, which is considered as a form of forced or compulsory labour. The penalty for offenders under this provision is a fine or imprisonment for a term of not less than three years and not exceeding ten years, or to both a fine and imprisonment.

According to the Government, the Somali National Army has benefited from human rights training and continuous sensitization to combat the use of children in armed conflict. However, the Government states that gaps exist in law enforcement areas to adequately protect children from the worst forms of child labour, especially in parts of the country that the Government does not control. It indicates the detection of cases of recruitment of children by non-state armed groups, including for use as spies, when opening and closing checkpoints, and to join their armed groups. In 2017, Al-Shabaab extremists intensified its campaign of forced recruitment of children as young as 8 years old. According to the Social Protection Policy of 2019, the recruitment of children by armed groups has included the threatening of elders, teachers in Islamic religious schools, and communities in rural areas with attacks if they did not provide thousands of children as young as 8 years old for use in armed conflict. The observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU) received on 1 September 2018 also stated that children were forcibly recruited and used by militias and Al-Shabaab extremists as soldiers.

The Committee notes that, according to the Report of the UN Secretary-General on Children and armed conflict of June 2020, the recruitment and use in armed conflict of 1,442 boys and 53 girls were verified in 2019, with some children as young as 8 years old. Al-Shabaab remained the main perpetrator but government security forces, regional forces and clan militias also recruited and used children. A total of 1,158 cases of abduction of children were verified, mainly for the purpose of recruitment and use in armed conflict, as well as 703 cases of children killed or maimed, and more than 200 cases of girls being raped and are victims of sexual violence. The Secretary-General underlined the growing number of violations attributed to government security forces (A/74/845-S/2020/525, paragraphs 137, 139, 140, 142 and 145). Moreover, the Committee notes that, in her report of 24 December 2019, the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict specified that in Somalia, where the highest figures for sexual violence were verified in 2019, girls were sexually abused during their association with armed forces and groups, and forcibly married to combatants. She also stated that abduction was the primary way for Al-Shabaab to forcibly recruit children for use as combatants in Somalia (A/HRC/43/38, paragraphs 27 and 32). The Committee must deplore the continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in Somalia, especially as it entails other violations of children's rights, such as abductions, killings and sexual violence. While recognizing the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the existence of an armed conflict and armed groups in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by armed forces and armed groups in Somalia. The Committee also urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of all persons found guilty of recruiting children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict and to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of investigations carried out against the perpetrators of these crimes, as well as on the number of prosecutions conducted, and the number and nature of penalties imposed.

Articles 6 and 7(2)(a) and (b). Programmes of action and effective time-bound measures for prevention, assistance and removal. Children forcibly recruited for use in armed conflict. The Government indicates that it signed a roadmap to end recruitment and use of children in conflict, in 2019.

The Committee notes that, in its report of March 2020 on Children and armed conflict in Somalia, the UN Secretary-General specified that this roadmap, aiming at accelerating the implementation of the action plans of 2012 on preventing and combating the recruitment and use and the killing and maiming of children, includes renewed commitments to strengthening the legislative framework, to capacity-building and awareness-raising for security forces, and to the screening of troops. The roadmap also provides for the creation of regional working groups on children and armed conflict, in order to implement the action plans at the Federal member State-level (S/2020/174, paragraphs 65 and 69). The Committee notes that the United Nations Assistance Mission in Somalia (UNSOM) specified that the roadmap to end recruitment and use of children in conflict details measures to release children associated with armed forces, and reintegrate them into their communities.

The Committee further notes that the UN Secretary-General indicated in its report of March 2020 that the Government was drafting a national strategy aimed at preventing child recruitment and facilitating the release and reintegration of children associated with armed groups, and a national strategy on assistance to victims aiming at supporting survivors of armed conflict, including children affected by conflict (S/2020/174, paragraph 67).

According to the report of the Government to the Committee on the Rights of the Child of October 2019, the National Programme for the Treatment and Handling of Disengaged Fighters focuses on outreach, reception, screening, rehabilitation and reintegration of children previously engaged in conflict (CRC/C/SOM/1, paragraph 362). However, according to the Report of the Secretary-General on Children and armed conflict of June 2020, 236 children were detained in 2019 for alleged association with armed groups by national and regional security forces (A/74/845-S/2020/525, paragraph 138). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children removed from armed forces or groups are treated as victims rather than offenders. It also requests the Government to provide information on the adoption and implementation of the above-mentioned national strategies to prevent child recruitment, facilitate the release and social reintegration of children associated with armed groups, and assist them, including any special attention that has been paid to the removal, rehabilitation and social integration of girls. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the National Programme for the Treatment and Handling of Disengaged Fighters has been applied to children recruited in armed groups and the armed forces.

Article 7(2). Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Government indicates that the restoration of free education is one of its priorities. It has provided opportunities for free schooling in some regions, adding that 22 free schools have been established in the country. The Government wishes to implement programmes to enable more children to return to school.

The Committee notes that, according to the Social Protection Policy, there are low school enrolment rates throughout the country, and girls' enrolment rates are significantly lower. Almost 47 per cent of children from 6 to 17 years of age are not enrolled in school. In 2015, the primary school net attendance rate was estimated at 21 per cent for girls and 30 per cent for boys (page 7). The Federal Government of Somalia, together with the World Food Programme, is implementing a school feeding programme covering more than 20 per cent of primary schools across the country. In the Federal member States, school feeding is carried out in partnership with the Ministry of Education (page 15). It improves children's school attendance and food security (page 34).

The Committee also notes that the National Employment Policy of 2019 states that the National Education Policy and the National Education Sector Strategy Plan are essential in revising the education system, which was completely destroyed by the conflict (page 7). The National Employment Policy indicates that the private sector is the largest provider for education (page 10).

The Committee further notes that the report of the World Bank Group of August 2019 underlines that Somalia's allocations to education as share of the national budget are about 1 per cent. The Federal member States also spend little of their own resources on education (page 32).

In its report on Children and armed conflict of June 2020, the UN Secretary-General stated that, with 64 attacks on school in 2019, Somalia has one of the highest numbers of attacks of school. Incidents included the abduction of teachers and pupils, the killing of and threats against teachers, and the destruction and looting of facilities (A/74/845-S/2020/525, paragraph 141). Considering that education is key in preventing children from the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to improve access to free basic education of all children, including girls. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made regarding access to free basic education, including on the implementation of the National Education Policy and the National Education Sector Strategy Plan. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates at primary and secondary level, as well as on the school drop-out rates.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sudan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application, labour inspectorate and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that efforts by the State bodies in collaboration with civil society organizations were ongoing to tackle the phenomenon of child labour. It also noted the establishment of Family and Child Police Protection Units to monitor child labour as well as the development of special labour inspection programmes in the informal and the agricultural economy. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken in collaboration with the civil society organizations to ensure the elimination of child labour; the actions taken by the labour inspection to investigate and monitor child labour, particularly in the informal economy; and on the measures taken by the Family and Child Police Protection Units to monitor child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the civil society organizations are actively involved in celebrating the International day for Protection of Children, annually. The Government also indicates that the Family and Child Police Protection Units are entrusted to adopt programmes and activities for the protection of family and children from all forms of violations which are in accordance with the existing legislation and obligations under the international and regional conventions. The Government further indicates that an action plan for the management of inspections relating to the monitoring of child labour has been formulated and is awaiting implementation.

The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government concerning the percentage of children between the ages of 5-17 years involved in child labour in each of the states. Accordingly, the state of East Darfur indicates the highest percentage with 49.4 per cent, followed by South Darfur, Central Darfur, South Kordofan and Blue Nile with 48.2 per cent, 45.1 per cent, 41.4 per cent and 38.1 per cent, respectively as compared to the state of Khartoum with 7.5 per cent. In this regard, the Committee notes from the ILO publication of 2019 entitled, Child Labour in the Arab Region: A Quantitative and Qualitative Analysis that Sudan is one of the countries across the Arab region showing the highest rates of child labour with 12.6 per cent among children aged 5-14 years. Among children aged 5-14 years, 18.1 per cent are involved in paid non-family work, 19.9 per cent in self-employment and 62 per cent in unpaid family work with agriculture being the predominant sector of activity (67.5 per cent), followed by the service sector (23.4 per cent) and the industrial sector (9.1 per cent). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its concern at the significant number of children below the minimum age who are involved in child labour in Sudan. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, with particular focus on the States of South Darfur, Central Darfur, South Kordofan and Blue Nile. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard, including the measures taken in collaboration with the civil society organizations, and the programmes adopted by the Family and Child Police and Protection units. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the implementation of the action plan for the management of inspections monitoring child labour, including measures to strengthen the capacities and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to the agricultural and informal economy where child labour is more prevalent. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts to reduce the number of out-of-school children under 14 years of age and to provide statistical information on the results achieved.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the European Union (EU) has been funding several programmes to improve the quality of education in eastern Sudan and the southern states and for the displaced populations, including funding for the education and vocational training projects in the states of Khartoum, Gedaref and Kassala. The Committee notes from a UNICEF report "New Horizons for Education in Sudan" of 2020 that Sudan has one of the largest numbers of out-of-school children in the Middle East and North Africa Region. An estimated over three million children, aged 5–13 years are not in school. Noting with concern that a high number of children under 14 years are out-of-school in Sudan, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system thereby reducing the number of out-of-school children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including information on the EU funded programmes, and the statistical information on the results achieved, particularly with respect to increasing the school enrolment rates and reducing the drop-out rates.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). Slavery and practices similar to slavery. 1. Abductions and the exaction of forced labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various legal provisions in Sudan which prohibit the forced labour of children (and abductions for that purpose), including article 30(1) of the Constitution of 2005, section 32 of the Child Act of 2004, and section 312 of the Penal Code. However, the Committee noted under several reports of the United Nations bodies, such as the report of the Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict, that cases of abduction of children for labour exploitation had been reported including in Abyei, Blue Nile and South Kordofan. In this regard, it noted the Government's indication that special courts were set up to eliminate the practice of abduction and that psychological and social support, education, work opportunities, and skills training were also provided to children who had been abducted. The Committee urged the Government to continue to strengthen its efforts to eradicate abductions and the exaction of forced labour from children under 18 years of age, and to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken to this end.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the National Committee for Combating Human Trafficking (NCCT) continues its efforts to eliminate the practice of abduction. It also notes that the NCCT developed a National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking 2018-2019 which includes abduction as one of the means of trafficking in persons. Moreover, the Transitional Constitution of 2019, under article 47 prohibits all forms of slavery and states that no person shall be subject to forced labour.

The Committee, however, notes from the Report of the Secretary General on Children and Armed Conflict (A/74/845-S/2020/525, of 9 June 2020) that in Darfur, 18 children (15 boys and three girls) were reported to have been abducted for ransom or forced to work as cattle herders by the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid faction (SLA-AW) and other unidentified armed elements (paragraph 162). It further notes from the Report of the Secretary General on the situation in the Sudan and the activities of the United Nations Integrated Transition Assistance Mission in the Sudan (S/2020/912) of 17 September 2020 that the African Union-United Nations Hybrid Operation in Darfur verified 364 incidents of grave violations, including rape, sexual exploitation and abduction affecting 77 children (37 boys and 40 girls). This report further states that owing to the lack of resources and capacities on the ground, access to justice and accountability responses for child victims of grave violations remains limited (Annex I, paragraph 20). Noting with concern the high incidence of grave violations involving children, including abductions for forced labour, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of offenders abducting children under 18 years for forced labour are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the activities undertaken by the NCCT in eliminating the practice of abduction of children for forced labour and the results achieved.

2. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the legislation, including the Child Labour Law, the Police Law, and the Civil Service Law specify that no child under 18 years of age shall be recruited in the army, and that penalties are imposed in cases of recruitment. It also noted the Government's statement that various measures had been taken to prevent child recruitment in the armed forces including the signing by the Government with the UN in March 2016, of an Action Plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by its security forces. The Committee, however, noted with deep concern the persistence of the practice of recruiting and using children under the age of 18 years by armed forces and groups. It urged the Government to take immediate and effective measures to put a stop in practice to the compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict by armed forces and groups as well as to take the necessary measures to implement the action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children in the armed forces.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the action plan is being implemented and mechanisms for its implementation have been established at the ministerial and technical levels as well as in many of the states affected by armed conflict. The Government also indicates that command orders prohibiting the recruitment of children were issued by the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Rapid Support Forces (RSF). In this regard, the Committee notes from the Report of the Secretary General on Children and Armed Conflict of 9 June 2020 that in Darfur, the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of three boys by the Sudan Liberation Army-Abdul Wahid (SLA-AW) and is in the process of verifying 14 alleged cases of recruitment and use of children by the RSF. The Committee further notes the Secretary General's statement welcoming the engagement by the Government with the United Nations for the screening of 1,346 RSF soldiers in South and West Darfur, during which no child was identified (A/74/845-S/2020/525, paragraphs 158 and 169).

The Committee notes the information contained in the Report of 17 September 2020 of the Secretary General on the situation in the Sudan and the activities of the United Nations Integrated Transition Assistance Mission in the Sudan that the transitional Government of Sudan signed a peace agreement with the SRF alliance and the Sudan Liberation Army (SLA)-Minni Minawi faction, and a joint agreement on principles was signed with the SPLM-N Abdelaziz Al-Hilu faction (S/2020/912, paragraphs 8 and 9). In this regard, the Committee notes the statement made by the UN Secretary General in a press release on the formal signing of the peace agreement on 3 October 2020 that the signing of the Juba Peace Agreement signals the dawn of a new era for the people of Sudan. It is a milestone on the road to achieving sustainable peace and inclusive development. While welcoming the peace agreement concluded by the transitional Government and the rebel groups, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that no child under the age of 18 years shall be used or recruited for armed conflict. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to continue to take effective measures, in collaboration with the UN bodies operating in the country, to effectively implement the Action Plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children in the armed forces. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons who have recruited or used children under 18 years for armed conflict or persons who continue to do so and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on them. It requests the Government to supply information in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Measures to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information concerning the various measures adopted by the Ministry of Education to facilitate access to education. Moreover, it noted from the statistical information provided by the Ministry of Public Education, an increase in the primary school enrolment rates from 57.5 per cent in 2000 to 73 per cent in 2015 and secondary school enrolment rates from 24.1 per cent to 37.1 per cent during the same period. The Committee encouraged the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country.

The Committee notes that according to the statistics provided by the Government, in 2018, the gross enrolment rate in grade 1 was 86.9 per cent and in basic education and secondary education, it was 73.5 per cent and 39.9 per cent, respectively. An estimated 71,301 children (34,255 girls and 37,046 boys) dropped out of basic education in 2018. The Committee also notes that the Government adopted the Education Sector Strategic Plan (ESSP) 2018-2023 which covers interventions aimed at increasing access to pre-school and quality deliver; increasing access to equity in formal basic and secondary education; improving quality and enhancing retention in basic education; and improving learning and skills development in secondary education. The Committee notes from the ESSP document that though more children are accessing school today, the system is slowed down by high drop-out rates rendering the achievement of universal basic education a big challenge for Sudan. The retention rate dropped from 67 per cent in 2009 to 62 per cent in 2017. The ESSP document further states that according to the 2017 Humanitarian Needs Overview, 1.7 million children and adolescents out of the 4.8 million people in need of humanitarian assistance need basic education services, including 56 per cent internally displaced people (IDPs), 7 per cent refugees, 5 per cent returnees and 32 per cent vulnerable residents. The Committee notes that the ESSP interventions are expected to increase the enrolment rates in basic education by 16 per cent and in secondary education by 7 per cent between 2018 and 2023. The Committee notes with concern the low enrolment rates and the high drop-out rates at the primary and secondary education levels. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country by improving access to basic education for all children, including the IDPs, refugees and vulnerable children. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken within the framework of the ESSP and the results achieved, particularly with regard to increasing school enrolment rates and reducing school drop-out rates. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child soldiers. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to supply information on the number of child soldiers removed from armed forces and groups and reintegrated through the actions undertaken by the Disarmament and Demobilization Commission.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Disarmament, Demobilization and Reintegration (DDR) Commission has developed programmes and measures that enable demobilized children to make the transition from life in a military environment to civilian life and play a key role, as civilians, through their acceptance by their families and communities. The Committee also notes from a report of the United Nations Development Programme that the DDR Programme in Sudan aims at creating conducive environments for the peaceful reintegration of ex-combatants and associated groups. Since its launch, more than 25,000 individuals were demobilized, 31,000 reintegrated and 85 projects were established to help community stabilization. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed conflict and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken within the framework of the DDR Programme to remove children from armed conflict and reintegrate them as well as the number of such children removed and reintegrated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Syrian Arab Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the ongoing conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic has had an alarming impact on children. It noted that the number of children affected by armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic has more than doubled, going from 2.3 million to 5.5 million, and the number of children displaced inside the Syrian Arab Republic has exceeded 3 million.

The Committee takes note of the Government's information in its report on the provisions of national legislation that give effect to the provisions of the Convention. However, the Committee notes that, according to the 2015 UNICEF report entitled "Small Hands, Heavy Burden: How the Syria Conflict is Driving More Children into the Workforce", four and a half years into the crisis, as a result of the war, many children are involved in economic activities that are mentally, physically or socially dangerous and which limit or deny their basic right to education. The report indicates that there is no shortage of evidence that the crisis is pushing an ever-increasing number of children towards exploitation in the labour market. Some 2.7 million Syrian children are currently out of school, a figure swollen by children who are forced to work instead. Children in the Syrian Arab Republic were contributing to the family income in more than three quarters of households surveyed. According to the report, the Syria crisis has created obstacles to the enforcement of national laws and policies to protect children from child labour, one of the reasons being that there are too few labour inspectors. In addition, there is often a lack of coherence between national authorities, international agencies and civil society organizations over the role of each, leading to a failure in national mechanisms to address child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its 5th periodic report submitted to the Committee on the Rights of the Child published on 10 August 2017 (CRC/C/SYR/5, para. 203), that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MoSAL), in collaboration with the Syrian Authority for Family and Population Affairs (SAFPA) and in cooperation with other stakeholders, developed a National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NPA-WFCL). The Government also indicates that, in collaboration with UNICEF, the SAFPA conducted a survey on the worst forms of child labour in two industrial towns, Hassia in Homs and Haouch el Blas in Damascus.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee must once again express its deep concern at the situation of children in the Syrian Arab Republic who are affected by the armed conflict and driven into child labour, including its worst forms. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures in the framework of the implementation of the NPA-WFCL to improve the situation of children in the Syrian Arab Republic and to protect and prevent them from child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, as well as the results of the surveys conducted in Hassia and Haouch el Blas.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar practices. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the Syrian Arab Republic had adopted a series of legislative reforms such as Law No. 11/2013 which criminalizes all forms of recruitment and the use of children under the age of 18 years by armed forces and armed groups. It noted, however, that numerous armed groups in the Syrian Arab Republic, including the Free Syrian Army affiliated groups (FSA), the Kurdish People Protection Units (YPG), Ahrar al-Sham, Islamic State in Iraq and Sham/the Levant (ISIS/ISIL) and other armed groups were reportedly recruiting and using children for logistics, handling ammunition, manning checkpoints and as combatants.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that armed terrorist groups recruit children and involve them in violence and exploit them sexually. The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Syrian Arab Republic of 9 June 2016 (A/70/919, paragraphs 50–52), from early 2015, UNICEF verified 46 cases of recruitment (43 boys, one girl, two unknown): 21 were attributed to ISIL, 16 to non-state armed opposition groups, five to armed groups affiliated with the Government, two (including a girl) to YPG, and two to government forces. UNICEF reported that children were increasingly recruited at younger ages (some as young as 7 years old) by non-state armed groups. Children's participation in combat was widespread and some armed opposition groups forced children to carry out grave human rights abuses, including executions and torture, while government forces allegedly submitted children to forced labour or used them as human shields. The Secretary-General also refers to reports from the OHCHR, according to which ISIL publicly announced, on 11 December 2015, the already known existence of a children's section among its ranks, the "Cubs of the Caliphate". The OHCHR also received allegations that ISIL was encouraging children between 10 and 14 years of age to join, and that they were training children in military combat.

The Committee further notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 20 April 2016 (2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, A/70/836-S/2016/360, paragraphs 148–163), a total of 362 cases of recruitment and use of children were verified (the Secretary-General indicates that the figures do not reflect the full scale of grave violations committed by all parties to the conflict), and attributed to ISIL (274), the Free Syrian Army and affiliated groups (62), Liwa' al Tawhid (11), popular committees (five), YPG (four), Ahrar al-Sham (three), the Nusrah Front (two) and the Army of Islam (one). Of the verified cases, 56 per cent involved children under 15 years of age, which represents a significant increase compared with 2014. The Secretary-General further indicates that the massive recruitment of children by ISIL continued, and that centres in rural Aleppo, Dayr al-Zawr and rural Raqqah existed that provided military training to at least 124 boys between 10 and 15 years of age. Verification of the use of child foreign fighters increased as well, with 18 cases of children as young as 7 years of age. In addition, the recruitment and use of children as young as 9 years of age by the Free Syrian Army was also verified, as well as the recruitment of 11 Syrian refugee children from neighbouring countries by Liwa' al-Tawhid, and the YPG continued to recruit boys and girls as young as 14 years of age for combat roles. Recruitment and use by pro-government groups was also verified, with five cases of boys being recruited by the Popular Committee of Tallkalah (Homs) to work as guards and conduct patrols. In addition, there were allegations of the use of children by government forces to man checkpoints.

The Committee must once again deeply deplore the use of children in armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. It once again recalls that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take measures, using all available means, to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and groups. The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, pursuant to Law No. 11 of 2013. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down against such persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted that, with approximately 5,000 schools destroyed in the Syrian Arab Republic, the resulting sharp decline in children's education continued to be a matter of great concern among the population. This report also indicated that more than half of Syrian school-age children, up to 2.4 million, were out of school as a consequence of the occupation, destruction and insecurity of schools.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict (paragraph 157), the number of schools destroyed, partially damaged, used as shelters for internally displaced persons or rendered otherwise inaccessible has reached 6,500. The report refers to information from the Ministry of Education, according to which 571 students and 419 teachers had been killed in 2015, and from the United Nations that 69 attacks on educational facilities and personnel were verified and attributed to all fronts, which killed and maimed 174 children. The Committee further notes that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic of 5 April 2016 (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraphs 50–53), a further 400,000 children were at risk of dropping out of school as a direct result of conflict, violence and displacement. While basic education facilities were in place in the displacement centres visited by the Special Rapporteur, such centres, often using school buildings, offer only limited educational facilities.

According to the same report, UNICEF is working with local partners to reach some 3 million children and has implemented an informal education programme to reduce the number of children out of school. The inter-agency initiative "No Lost Generation" is a self-learning programme aimed at reaching 500,000 children who missed out on years of schooling. In areas hosting high numbers of displaced children, UNICEF is also rehabilitating 600 damaged schools and creating 300 prefabricated classrooms to accommodate 300,000 additional children. The Committee further notes that, according to UNICEF's 2016 Annual Report on the Syrian Arab Republic, UNICEF's interventions in education, focusing on quality, access and institutional strengthening, contributed to an increase in school enrolment from 3.24 million children (60 per cent of school-age population) to 3.66 million (68 per cent) between 2014–15 and 2015–16. These efforts also resulted in a decrease in the number of out-of-school children from 2.12 million (40 per cent) in 2014–15 to 1.75 million (32 per cent) in 2015–16.

Nevertheless, the Committee notes that, in his report, the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons declares that the challenge of providing even basic education access to many internally displaced children is immense and many thousands of children are likely to remain out of education in the foreseeable future (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 53). The Committee is, therefore, once again bound to express its deep concern at the large number of children who are deprived of education because of the climate of insecurity prevailing in the country. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to improve the functioning of the educational system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all Syrian children, especially in areas affected by armed conflict, and giving particular attention to the situation of girls. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard.

Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children affected by armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic had become common and that a great majority of the children recruited are trained, armed and used in combat.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the competent authorities in the Syrian Arab Republic seek to care for children recruited in armed conflict and to help them return to ordinary life. However, the Committee notes with deep concern that the situation in the Syrian Arab Republic has not changed and that not only are there no reports of children having been withdrawn from armed forces and groups in the 2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict but that, according to this report, children continue to be recruited and used in armed conflict. The Committee, therefore, strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in armed conflict and to rehabilitate and integrate former child combatants. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children rehabilitated and socially integrated.

2. Sexual slavery. The Committee previously noted that ISIS abducted hundreds of Yazidi women and girls, most of whom were sold as “war booty” or given as “concubines” to ISIS fighters, and that dozens of girls and women were transported to various locations in the Syrian Arab Republic, including Al Raqqa, Al Hasakah and Dayr az Zawr, where they were kept in sexual slavery.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government’s report on this issue. It notes that, according to the report of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic of 15 June 2016 entitled “They came to destroy: ISIS Crimes Against the Yazidis” (A/HRC/32/CRP.2), ISIS has sought to destroy the Yazidis through such egregious human rights violations as killings, sexual slavery, enslavement, torture and mental harm. The report indicates that over 3,200 women and children are still held by ISIS. Most are in the Syrian Arab Republic where Yazidi girls continue to be sexually enslaved and Yazidi boys indoctrinated, trained and used in hostilities. The report reveals that captured Yazidi women and girls over the age of 9 years are deemed the property of ISIS and are sold in slave markets or, more recently through online auctions, to ISIS fighters. While held by ISIS fighters, these Yazidi women and girls are subjected to brutal sexual violence and regularly forced to work in their houses, in many instances forced to work as domestic servants of the fighter and his family. The Committee deeply deplores the fact that Yazidi children continue to be victims of sexual slavery and forced labour. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove Yazidi children under 18 years of age who are victims of forced labour and sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, and the number of children removed from sexual exploitation and rehabilitated.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Internally displaced children. The Committee previously noted that, by early 2013, there were 3 million children displaced and in need of assistance inside the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic of 5 April 2016 (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 67), the extent of the conflict and displacement has had a massive impact on children, many of whom have experienced violence first-hand and/or witnessed extreme violence, including the killing of family members and/or separation from family members. The Special Rapporteur indicates that child protection concerns and issues, including child labour resulting from parents’ loss of livelihood, trafficking, sexual and gender-based violence and early and forced marriage, continue to be reported. Children have also been recruited and used by different parties to the conflict, both in combat and support roles. Observing with concern that internally displaced children are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tajikistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to amend the provisions of the national legislation to ensure that the minimum age for admission to employment or work is 16 years, as specified by the Government at the time of ratification. The Government replies in its report that the minimum age for admission to employment of 15 years established by section 21(2) of the Labour Code of 2016 is in line with Article 2(3) of the Convention, which states that the minimum age for admission to employment or work shall not be less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling and, in any case, shall not be less than 15 years. The Government further indicates that the age of completion of compulsory schooling is 15 years in Tajikistan, and raising the minimum age for admission to employment could contribute to unemployment and social tensions, given the high proportion of youth population in the country. The Government however indicates that the issue of the minimum age for admission to employment will be discussed in the framework of the elaboration of the bill amending the Labour Code.

The Committee recalls that in accordance with Article 2(1) of the Convention, the Government specified the minimum age for admission to employment of 16 years at the time of ratification of the Convention. Recalling that the Convention does not permit the lowering of the minimum age once specified, the Committee notes with concern that the minimum age for admission to employment remains set at 15 years in Tajikistan. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 21(2) of the Labour Code of 2016 into conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention by raising the minimum age for admission to employment to 16 years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the State Supervisory Service for Labour, Migration and Employment (SILME) has a separate plan of inspections carried out jointly with law enforcement agencies to monitor compliance with the labour legislation on the employment of young persons and to prevent child labour. In this respect, 309 inspections were carried out by the SILME, in cooperation with local authorities, prosecutors, tax authorities and the media during 2016–22. The inspections identified 511 cases of child labour, involving 324 boys and 187 girls. The identified violations of the labour legislation included the absence of a written employment contract or written parental consent to employ a young person as well as non-compliance with working hours regulations. Referring to its detailed comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the SILME to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, particularly in the informal economy. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspections related to child labour that have been carried out by the SILME as well as on the number and nature of violations detected, and the penalties applied.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee notes the Government's reference to section 21(3) of the Labour Code of 2016, which allows for the conclusion of an employment contract with parental consent with children under 15 years of age to take part in theatrical performances, filmmaking, concerts, circus programmes and other creative performances that do not involve harm to their health or moral development and do not disrupt their education. According to the Government, these provisions of the Labour Code have direct effect and there is no need for additional regulations.

The Committee recalls that Article 8 of the Convention allows the participation of children under the minimum age for admission to employment or work in artistic performances only subject to the granting of a permit by the competent authority in individual cases. Permits so granted shall limit the number of hours during which and prescribe conditions in which such employment or work is allowed. The Committee therefore points out that section 21(3) of the Labour Code does not ensure the full application of the provisions of Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary measures to regulate the participation of children under the minimum age for admission to employment or work in artistic performances, in line with the requirements of Article 8 of the Convention.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Government indicates that the child labour monitoring system, which aims to identify and prevent child labour, has proven to be an effective mechanism in Tajikistan. More than 900 children aged between 15 and 17 have been identified and removed from child labour by the child labour monitoring committees. The work of the child labour monitoring committees also includes conducting awareness-raising activities and facilitating young people's access to vocational education and training. The Government also refers to the latest available data indicating that the number of working children fell by 10 per cent between 2012 and 2016. The Government further indicates that the next national child labour survey is scheduled for the second half of 2023. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts towards the progressive elimination of child labour, including in hazardous work, and to continue to provide information on the number of children identified and removed from child labour by the child labour monitoring committees. It also requests the Government to provide information on the findings of the next national child labour survey, including updated statistics on the nature, extent and trends of child labour.

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clauses (a) and (d). Compulsory labour and hazardous work in agricultural activities. The Committee notes with regret the absence of specific information in the Government's report with respect to the Committee's previous comments on the need to ensure the prohibition of compulsory labour and hazardous work for children under the age of 18 in the cotton harvest. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of national legislation prohibiting compulsory labour and hazardous work for children below the age of 18 years in the cotton harvest. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on any monitoring of child labour during the cotton harvest, as well as information on the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and special situation of girls. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes the Government's indication that measures have been taken to facilitate children's access to compulsory quality education to prevent the involvement of children in the worst forms of child labour. The Committee takes note of the National Strategy for Education Development for the period up to 2030 (Strategy) adopted by the Government's Decree No. 526 of 2020. The Committee observes that the Strategy aims to extend the coverage of compulsory quality education and to reduce school drop-out rates. According to section 93 of the Strategy, although the number of children enrolled in compulsory education is relatively high, there are cases of dropouts with significant gender disparities. In the 2019–20 school year, 47 per cent of girls were enrolled in primary education (grades 1–4) and 51 per cent in lower secondary education (grades 5–9).

The Committee notes that, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern about the high dropout rate in secondary education, particularly among girls and children in rural areas (E/C.12/TJK/CO/4, para. 54). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the educational system and to facilitate access to free basic education, particularly of girls. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect, including on the implementation of the National Strategy for Education Development for the period up to 2030, and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Togo

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1984)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the adoption of the National Action Plan to combat child labour and its worse forms (NAP 2020–24). The six strategic pillars of the NAP are: (1) reinforcement of the legal and institutional framework to combat child labour; (2) information, awareness-raising and social mobilisation; (3) education and training; (4) protection, follow-up, and care for child victims and those at risk of the worst forms of child labour; (5) monitoring and repression; and (6) coordination and evaluation of the NAP. A mid-term and final review of the NAP is foreseen. Implementation is undertaken by the Ministry of Labour through the National Steering Committee on combatting child labour.

The Committee also takes note of the data contained in the report of the Understanding Children's Work programme, referenced in the NAP, that around 719,000 children of less than 15 years of age are economically active, and 214,000 children of 15 to 17 years of age are reported to be engaged in the worst forms of labour. Moreover, according to the 2017 UNICEF Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey, a total of 38.5 percent of girls and 38.4 per cent of boys between 5 and 17 years of age are engaged in child labour. While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee is bound to express its concern at the persistently large number of children working in Togo, including in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore requests the Government to reinforce its efforts and to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the results obtained under the NAP 2020–24, particularly through the evaluation to be undertaken for that purpose.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee notes the information from the Government according to which between 2019 and 2022, apart from induction training of labour inspectors provided by the National School of Administration, at least one inspector a year was trained at the African Regional Labour Administration Centre. Nevertheless, the Government stresses that only the induction training contains a module on child labour, and that it is struggling to mobilize the means of offering specialised training, such as on child labour. It adds that several factors, among them the security crisis in the north of Togo, have had a negative impact on the budget allocated to the social services, which in turn has hampered the labour inspectorate's ability to conduct data collection on child labour and in drawing up the training plan for inspectors. While taking account of the crisis in the north of Togo, the Committee again requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection, including in the informal economy, to identify children working below the minimum age for admission to employment. It requests the Government to provide information in this respect as well as on the inclusion in the training plan for training on child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the data gathered using the labour inspection services' data-gathering system concerning child labour, including statistical information on the number and nature of reported violations, and the penalties imposed in the event of violations.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 11 of Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS of 22 May 2020, determining the hazardous types of work that children are prohibited from performing in order to guarantee that the hazardous work provided for under this Order can only be performed by children of at least 16 years of age, and that the health, safety and morals of children between 16 and 18 years of age performing types of work figuring among the hazardous types listed in Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS are fully guaranteed and that these children have received adequate specific training in the relevant branch of activity.

The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report, that the social partners are currently being consulted on the reformulation of section 11 of Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS of 22 May 2020, to ensure that the hazardous types of work provided for by the Order shall only be performed by children of at least 16 years of age and that strict conditions of protection and training are respected. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress achieved concerning the amendment of section 11 of Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS of 22 May 2020. It also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the health, safety, and morals of children between 16 and 18 years of age performing certain types of hazardous work (under Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS) are fully guaranteed and that these children have received adequate specific training in the relevant branch of activity, as provided under Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. The Committee takes good note of the new Labour Code of 2021 (Act No. 2021-012 of 18 June 2021), as well as the provisions of section 122 under which an apprenticeship contract shall only be concluded with a person under 15 years of age on authorization by the labour inspector, and section 123, under which the conditions relating to the conclusion and performance of the apprenticeship contract shall be determined by the legislation in force.

However, the Committee notes with regret that the draft code on apprenticeship, which determines the conditions with which an apprenticeship contract shall comply and by virtue of which such a contract shall not start before the age of compulsory schooling and in no case before 15 years of age, is currently going through technical validation, and has not yet been adopted. The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures so that the code on apprenticeship is adopted without delay, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect, as well as a copy of the texts once they have been adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

Article 3(a) and Article 7(1) and (2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and penalties. Effective and time-bound measures for prevention, assistance and removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee notes the information according to which the anti-trafficking unit participates in training magistrates and judicial police officers on trafficking and child labour issues. The unit hears child victims of trafficking in order to open up investigations and constitute files for the prosecution of the authors of these crimes.

The Committee also notes Decree No. 2021-104/PR of 29 September 2021 on the establishment, mandate and functioning of the National Commission on combatting trafficking in persons (CNLTP) and the appointment and installation of its members in February 2023.

It also takes good note of the Government statistics from 2019, which show that child protection structures registered a total of 1,723 child victims of cross-border trafficking, including 182 children taken to police and gendarmerie stations. A total of 609 children were victims of internal trafficking, of which 45 were taken to police stations. A total of 551 child victims of trafficking were socially reintegrated through school enrolment and 182 received vocational training. Likewise, between 2020 and 2021, a total of 33 boys and 114 girls were victims of cross-border trafficking, including 22 Beninese children and 125 Togolese children. In 2022, a total of 41 children, of which 16 were girls, were repatriated and taken into care by the Government of Togo.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the COVID-19 sanitary crisis has had a serious impact on removing children and taking them into care and explains the lack of information for the 2020–22 period.

While noting that the restrictions caused by the COVID-19 pandemic had an impact on removing children and taking them into care, the Committee notes with regret the Government's statement that information on the number and nature of convictions handed down and penalties imposed is not available. The Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations are carried out, and prosecutions brought in trafficking cases involving persons under 18 years of age. The Government is requested to provide detailed information on the convictions handed down and on the criminal penalties imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results of the anti-trafficking unit in removing children from this worst form of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration.

Article 3(a) and (d) and Article 7(2)(b). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures. Child domestic work. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the effective application of the national legislation (Order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS of 22 May 2020) to ensure that children under 18 years of age did not perform domestic work.

The Committee notes that under the National Action Plan to combat the worst forms of child labour 2020–24, attached to the report, ratification of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), is envisaged and that an order on domestic work is to be drafted by the Ministry of Public Service, Labour, Administrative Reform and Social Protection.

However, the Committee notes the information in the minutes of the sitting of the Committee on the Rights of the Child which examined the periodic report submitted by Togo under the Convention on the Rights of the Child (OHCHR, press release, 15 September 2023), according to which the situation regarding child labour in Togo, and in particular the domestic work performed by children, was considered to be of concern. The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the effective application of the national legislation so that children under 18 years of age do not perform domestic work, giving full application to order No. 1556/MPFTRAPS of 22 May 2020, determining the types of work prohibited for children and, in practice, do not work under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions. In this respect, it once again urges the Government to provide information on the application of the provisions relating to these worst forms of child labour, including statistics on the number and nature of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and criminal penalties imposed. Moreover, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take immediate and effective measures to remove child victims of the worst forms of child labour from domestic work and requests it to provide detailed information on the measures taken and on the number of children effectively removed from these worst forms of child labour and socially rehabilitated.

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to UNAIDS, the number of HIV/AIDS orphans was put at 84,000 in 2018. The Committee observes that the Government's response contains no updated statistical information on HIV/AIDS victims or orphans, as the statistics provided by the Government in its report date from the Demographic and Health Survey of Togo 2013-2014.

The Committee notes that the Strategic Framework for care of orphans and other vulnerable children in the context of HIV/AIDS in Togo 2010 to 2015 serves as the national instrument and strategic plan that determines and guides interventions, and that the Government and other actors have developed different strategies and mechanisms to ensure that HIV/AIDS orphans are not engaged in the worst forms of child labour. However, it notes with regret the absence of information on the different measures taken and progress made under the strategic plan and the mechanisms put in place.

The Committee further notes with concern that, according to UNAIDS, the number of UN/AIDS orphans is put at 80,000 for 2022. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that HIV/AIDS orphans receive such protection as to prevent their engagement in the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to supply information on the measures taken and the results achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2010)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 31 August 2023. It also takes note the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023, as well as the Government's reply received on 27 October 2023. The Committee also takes note of the report on the implementation of the 2023 Roadmap for cooperation between the ILO and the Government of Turkmenistan (implementation report), produced following the visit of the independent ILO mission on the observance of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers during the 2023 harvest.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous work in the cotton sector. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue taking effective measures to ensure that children under 18 years are not engaged in hazardous work or subject to forced labour in the cotton sector, including during the school holidays or their time out of school. Moreover, the Committee observes that, in the context of the discussion of Turkmenistan's application of the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), at the 111th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2023, the Conference Committee urged the Government to reinforce its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of students in state-sponsored cotton production, in consultation with the social partners and in the context of the ongoing ILO assistance, through the development of an action plan to that end.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the measures taken to reduce manual cotton harvesting, including by children, such as the increase of agricultural machinery and efforts taken to create conditions for decent work for cotton pickers. Most significantly, the Committee takes note of the measures taken in the framework of the implementation of the Roadmap for cooperation between the ILO and the Government of Turkmenistan, adopted in March 2023 as a result of several ILO high-level technical assistance missions. The Government indicates in this regard that: (1) an analysis has been carried out of Turkmenistan's current legislative framework with regard to the application of international labour standards and the resulting draft legislative acts that were submitted to Parliament; (2) there are ongoing efforts to produce a qualitative study of recruitment practices for the cotton harvest; (3) a seminar was held with the participation of representatives of the relevant ministries and agencies and social partners to identify the key elements of a national action plan to align the labour inspection system in Turkmenistan with ILO standards; and (4) the Parliament is actively engaging in public awareness-raising activities. Moreover, the Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the ITUC observations, which consists of information prepared by the National Center of Trade Unions of Turkmenistan (NCTU). The NCTU indicates that, together with local trade unions, it conducted trainings and seminars on international labour standards, including Convention No. 182, in the regions, with the participation of the local authorities.

The Committee notes from the ITUC's observations that, despite the commitments taken by the Government of Turkmenistan, forced labour practices in cotton production are unfortunately still prevalent on a massive scale in the country. With regard to the forced labour of children specifically, the ITUC states that, while child labour was not directly organized by the State, it was used in the 2022 harvest, driven by both poverty and the forced labour system. The ITUC shares examples of specific instances in which child labour was used for cotton picking, and adds that independent monitors reported that children, some as young as eight, were paid to work as “replacement pickers,” hired by public sector employees forced to either pick or hire someone else; others were sent as replacement pickers by parents or relatives who were forcibly mobilized; and still others joined the harvest to earn money for their families.

Moreover, the Committee notes that, with the acceptance of the Government, an independent ILO observance mission of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers, by ILO staff and independent consultants recruited by the ILO, took place during the 2023 harvest in October 2023. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the implementation report, initial findings from this observance mission indicate that children below the age of 15 were observed working in many of the cotton fields visited across the country.

While taking due note of the Government’s collaboration with the ILO in the framework of the Roadmap and during the observance of the cotton harvest in 2023, the Committee must note with deep concern that children under the age of 18, and even below the age of 15, continue to work in the cotton fields in Turkmenistan in hazardous conditions and, in some instances, forcibly. The Committee therefore urges the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of forced and hazardous child labour in cotton picking. In this regard, it urges the Government to continue to engage in cooperation with the ILO and the social partners, within a cooperation framework, to ensure the full application of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this respect, including measures taken to monitor the cotton harvest, strengthen record-keeping in educational institutions, apply sanctions against persons who engage children in the cotton harvest, and further raise public awareness on this subject.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination prior to work underground and periodic re-examinations of persons under 21 years of age. The Committee refers to its previous comments, as well as to the information provided by the Government in its report, and takes note of the following provisions currently in place in Ugandan law:

- Section 21 of the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 2006: Every employer shall provide for the supervision of the health of the workers exposed or liable to be exposed to occupational hazards due to pollution and other harmful agents in a working environment. This includes a pre-assignment medical examination and periodic medical examinations, and applies to all employees, irrespective of their age.
- Sections 33 and 97 of the Employment Act of 2006: The Minister may by regulations require persons over the age of 18 years seeking employment involving exposure to hazards specified by regulations to undergo a medical examination before being engaged by an employer and at regular intervals thereafter.
- Section 13 of the Employment (Employment of Children) Regulations No. 17 of 2012: A child under 18 years of age shall undergo a medical examination before engaging in any job, and the medical examination shall be repeated every six months following employment. Moreover, a child who undergoes an initial medical examination shall receive a medical certificate certifying him or her as medically fit, the model of which is represented in the fourth schedule of the regulations.

The Committee once again recalls that, by virtue of Article 2(1) of the Convention, a thorough medical examination, and periodic re-examinations at intervals of not more than one year, for fitness for employment shall be required for the employment or work underground in mines of persons under 21 years of age. The Committee observes that, while the provisions above-mentioned provide for the medical examination and periodic re-examinations of all workers under the age of 18, as well as of all workers exposed to occupational hazards due to pollution and other harmful agents, workers between the ages of 18 and 21 working underground in mines remain unprotected. The Committee recalls with deep regret that it has been raising this issue since 2013. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to provide for the medical examination and periodic re-examination for fitness for employment or work underground in mines of persons between 18 and 21 years of age. In this regard, it once again requests the Government to indicate whether any regulations concerning the medical examination of persons over 18 years of age seeking employment or work underground in mines, have been issued pursuant to sections 33 and 97 of the Employment Act.

Article 3(2). Mandatory X-ray examination of the lungs during initial medical examination. The Committee has been drawing the Government's attention since its first report on the application of the Convention by Uganda, in 1990, on the need to legislate that, on the occasion of the initial medical examination for fitness for employment or work underground in mines of persons under 21 years of age, and, when regarded as medically necessary, on the occasion of their subsequent re-examinations, an X-ray film of the lungs shall be required, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in that regard, that for the application of section 33(2) of the Employment Act, 2006, where a medical examination is required for persons over the age of 18 seeking employment involving exposure to hazards, X-rays are implied as a means of medical examination.

However, the Committee observes with deep regret that, currently, the medical examinations referred to under section 33 of the Employment Act, 2006, have not yet been regulated by the Minister of Labour, at least in the sector of underground mining, and that while X-rays may be implied as a means of medical examination, they are not required by law. Considering that the Committee has been underlining this issue for more than 30 years, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, by law, that all young persons under the age of 21 undergo the medical examinations and re-examinations for fitness for employment or work underground in mines required by the Convention and, at the same time, that these examinations include an X-ray of the lungs, in accordance with Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the Government's information, in its report, on the measures taken to combat child labour in the country. In particular, the Committee notes that the National Steering Committee on Child Labour (NSCCL) was established in 2021, which meets every quarter and is purposed to advise on, and monitor, issues related to child labour. The Government also indicates that the National Action Plan on the elimination of child labour 2020/21 – 2024/25 (NAP II) has been adopted and is being implemented. Aligned with the National Development Plan (NDPIII), NAP II aims to create an enabling environment for the prevention, protection, rehabilitation and reduction of the risk of children removed from work being pushed or pulled back into child labour. According to the Government, the NAP II prioritizes the review of national child labour policy to increase access to social protection, education, skills development and social services for children or households and communities affected or at risk of child labour.

The Government further indicates that the “ACCEL-Accelerating Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in the supply chain of tea and coffee in Africa” project was implemented by the Government, social partners and civil society organizations from 2018 to 2023. This regional project aims to address the root causes of child labour with an overarching goal of accelerating the elimination of child labour in Africa through targeted actions in selected supply chains. During phase I of the project, for instance, the promotion of strong engagement by the Federation of Ugandan Employers resulted in direct engagement of individual companies’ corporate social responsibility departments in supporting communities to combat child labour. The second phase of the ACCEL Africa project, which will run from 2023 to 2028, aims to catalyse the eradication of child labour in Africa, including in Uganda, by fortifying existing systems that address root causes. Building on the success of the first phase, the second phase will expand its efforts and foster an integrated approach to eliminate child labour, including through strengthening the national institutional framework, scaling up pioneering approaches focusing on social protection, decent work and youth employment, and promoting knowledge-sharing and partnerships.

The Committee notes, however, that, according to the 2019–20 National Household Survey of the Uganda Bureau of Statistics (UBS), in part due to the strict school closures during the COVID-19 pandemic, child labour rates for children between the ages of 5 and 17 increased from 14 per cent prior to the pandemic to 22 per cent, amounting to a total of 2,702,000 children in 2020. Moreover, according to a press release by the UBS of April 2021, a baseline report from the Bureau has indicated that child labour in the two districts of Hoima and Kikuube stood at 26 per cent (74,000 children), and that three out of ten of these children were engaged in hazardous work or worked for longer hours. The root causes of child labour in these regions were the general lack of awareness among the communities and ignorance of the negative impact of child labour, as well as the need for children to contribute to household income and food security. Moreover, according to an ILO brief on Child Labour and Forced Labour in Uganda of February 2023, which refers to the latest National Labour Force Survey, the incidence of child labour increased to 39.5 per cent, or 6.2 million children, in 2022. The brief reports that child labour is the highest among the age bracket 5 to 11, with 58 per cent of these children in child labour, while 19.8 per cent of the 6.2 million children in child labour are between 12 and 17 years of age and occupied in hazardous occupations or industries, hazardous working conditions or long hours of work. Child labour is mostly found in many economic sectors, but predominantly in the agricultural sector (sugar cane, rice, tea, coffee, tobacco, livestock and fishing).

While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its deep concern at the significant number of children engaged in child labour, including hazardous work, which increased dramatically in just a few years. The Committee strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour by children under the minimum age for employment or work, as well as for all children engaged in hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on the root causes of the increase in child labour in the country, and to indicate the measures taken to address the situation according to international labour standards in force in the country. In this regard, it requests that the Government provide detailed information on the implementation of the NAP II and of the ACCEL Africa project, and on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to continue to supply information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly statistics, disaggregated by age and sector of activity, on the situation of children engaged in child labour in the country.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s information, according to which it continues to take measures to strengthen the monitoring of child labour. In the framework of the NAP II, the Government is recruiting, training and orienting district Labour Officers on the elimination of child labour, including in hazardous work. There are currently over 175 Labour Officers who have been recruited across the country. Moreover, some projects are implemented to benefit Labour Officers with means of transport to monitor child labour-related matters and enforce the existing labour laws.

The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide information or data on the number of child labour violations identified through inspections or the number or nature of penalties applied and assessed for child labour violations. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Annual Labour Inspection report of 2022 is being compiled, and that it will be shared as soon as it is published. Considering the significant increase of the incidence of child labour in the country, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its measures to ensure that the labour inspectorate is adequately trained and possesses the necessary resources to be able to detect cases of child labour, as well as to ensure that the regulations providing for penalties in the case of a violation of the provisions on the employment of children and young persons are effectively implemented. It also requests the Government to continue providing information in this regard and to communicate a copy of all recently published Annual Labour Inspection reports, ensuring that these include information on the number and nature of violations involving children detected by the labour inspectorate.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the recent significant increase in the incidence of child labour in the country, which was at 14 percent prior to the pandemic and is now estimated at 6.2 million children, or 39.5 percent of all children in the country. It observes with deep concern that the highest incidence in child labour is found among those who are between the ages of 5 and 11 years of age (58 percent of working children), while 19.8 per cent of the 6.2 million children in child labour are between 12 and 17 years of age and occupied in hazardous occupations or industries, predominantly in agriculture, and in hazardous working conditions and long hours of work. The Committee also observes with regret that no information is available regarding the number of child labour violations identified by the labour inspectorate.

The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 109 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 112th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Hazardous work in mines. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government's report on the situation of children working in mines under particularly hazardous conditions, despite the fact that section 8 of the Children's (Amendment) Act of 2016 prohibits hazardous work, and that the list of hazardous occupations and activities in which the employment of children is not permitted (first schedule of the Employment of Children Regulations of 2012) includes mining.

The Committee notes that, according to a 2020 World Bank report on the State of the Artisanal and Small-Scale Mining Sector, it is estimated that 12,000 children under the age of 14 are engaged in artisanal and small-scale gold mining (ASGM) in Uganda. These children undertake tasks such as digging in deep open pits, carrying stones to and operating grinding machines, and washing the ground ore. The report reveals that the work in ASGM is considered a worst form of child labour due to the harsh working conditions, handling and exposure to toxic chemicals and vulnerability of young women and girls to sexual and gender-based violence. Poverty is one, but not only, driver for child labour in mining:

a lack of decent work for adults, and lack of access to quality education are also contributing factors. To tackle these challenges, in 2017, civil society organizations and UNICEF, together with electronic companies, launched a five-year project “Joint Forces to Tackle Child Labour – From Gold Mine to Electronics”, which uses an area-based approach with interventions in the concerned communities and gold mines as a strategy to address the worst forms of child labour. This approach includes the involvement of community stakeholders, investment in education, and the improvement of household income and mine productivity. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of the Children’s (Amendment) Act of 2016 and of the Employment of Children Regulations of 2012, so as to prevent children under 18 years of age from working in mines, and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and subsequent rehabilitation. It also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the “Joint Forces to Tackle Child Labour – From Gold Mine to Electronics” project, as well as of any other project or measure aimed at protecting children from hazardous work in the mining sector, and on the results achieved.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Orphans and children in vulnerable situations (OVCs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is taking measures to improve the living conditions and resilience of the most vulnerable parts of the population, including children, by investing in social protection systems and decent work, as well as contributing to the promotion of sustainable and inclusive social economic development. This is done, in particular, through the decent work and social protection project being implemented by the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development in collaboration with Enabel (the Belgian federal government’s development agency).

The Committee further notes that the protection of OVCs is also included in the policy objectives of the National Child Policy 2020 (NCP), which has replaced the National Orphans and Other Vulnerable Children Policy. According to the document of the NCP, at least 11 per cent of the children under the age 18 years in Uganda have lost one or both parents; about half of them are orphaned as a result of AIDS, and it is estimated that 18.7 per cent of refugees are orphaned children. While taking note of certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern that the number of OVCs due to HIV/AIDS in Uganda who are at particular risk of becoming involved in the worst forms of child labour remains estimated at 660,000, according to the UNAIDS estimates of 2022. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. In this regard, and in light of the significant number of OVCs in the country, it encourages the Government to take specific measures for the protection of OVCs from the worst forms of child labour, including through the NCP. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved.

Child domestic workers. The Committee observes with regret that, once again, the Government does not provide information on the protection of child domestic workers in Uganda who, despite the legislative prohibition of the engagement of children under 18 in several activities and tasks in the sector of domestic work, are found in large numbers to be engaged in hazardous domestic work. The Committee notes that, according to a document from the Global Fund to End Modern Slavery entitled “Decent Work for Ugandan Domestic Workers: Findings and Recommendations for Funders”, the use of child labour in domestic work in Uganda is pervasive, and there is a need to address the root causes of child labour in domestic work, including targeted poverty reduction interventions for families and targeted interventions to keep vulnerable children enrolled in school. According to this document, there is also a need to improve the legal framework and enforcement of laws applicable to domestic workers. Once again recalling that children in domestic work are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, including hazardous work, the Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure their protection, including through the enforcement of the applicable legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of child domestic workers engaged in hazardous work who have been identified, withdrawn and rehabilitated and socially integrated as a result of the initiatives taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's information, in its report, that following the resignation of the Government in March 2020, the draft-law on labour No. 2708 that was submitted to the Verkhovna Rada of Ukraine in November 2019 was automatically revoked. The Committee is aware that the new Government in office has prepared another draft-law on labour in 2022, which has received technical comments from the Office; however, it appears that the Cabinet of Ministers may propose another draft project in 2024. According to the Government, therefore, the current Labour Code of Ukraine of 1971 continues to be in force. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the revised Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its comments are taken into consideration in the framework of this ongoing legislative review.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously took note of the 2019 conclusions of the European Committee of Social Rights, under the European Social Charter, that in view of the available statistics of that Committee on the number of children aged 5 to 14 years involved in child labour or hazardous work, the prohibition of employment under the age of 15 was not guaranteed in practice. The Committee also took note of the restrictions and limitations on labour inspections (by virtue of Act No. 877-V of 2007) and requested information on the activities undertaken by the labour inspection services regarding child labour. The Committee notes with regret the lack of information in the Government's report on this issue. The Committee once again requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that effective labour inspections in the area of child labour are conducted in practice. It requests the Government to provide concrete information on the activities undertaken by the labour inspection services in this respect, including the number of labour inspections carried out, the number and nature of cases detected, the number of penalties imposed and any other follow-up measures taken.

Regarding the restrictions and limitations on labour inspections imposed by Act No. 877-V of 2007, the Committee refers to its comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129).

Minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee recalls that under section 188(2) of the Labour Code, children of 15 years of age are exceptionally authorized to work with the consent of their parents or guardians. Section 188(2) of the Labour Code therefore allows young people to carry out an economic activity at an age lower than the minimum age for admission to employment or work specified by Ukraine upon ratifying the Convention, namely 16 years. The Committee recalls that an exception to the minimum age under the Convention is only permissible as regards light work, in line with the conditions as defined in Article 7(1) of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee observes that section 14(2) of the 2022 draft-law on labour provides that a worker is at least 16 years of age, and does not appear to contain a provision similar to section 188(2) of the current Labour Code. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, during the revision of the Labour Code, to ensure that no person under the age of 16 years may be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, in conformity with Article 2(1) of the Convention, except for light work as authorized under Article 7(1) of the Convention.

Articles 3(3) and 6. Authorization to perform hazardous work from the age of 16 years and vocational training. The Committee once again recalls that, by virtue of section 2(3) of the Order of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine No. 46 of March 1994, persons under the age of 18 years pursuing vocational training may perform hazardous types of work under certain conditions, without specifying a minimum age. The legislation in force therefore does not explicitly prohibit children between 14 (the age of admission to vocational training) and 16 years to perform hazardous work during vocational training. The Committee once again emphasizes that that young persons below 16 years of age engaged in apprenticeships must not undertake hazardous work and that measures should be taken to raise the minimum age for admission to hazardous work to at least 16 years, even if the required protective conditions are adequately provided.

The Committee observes in this regard that section 18(3) of the 2022 draft-law on labour provides that employment agreements that involve hazardous work may only be concluded with persons over the age of sixteen years, provided that they have received sufficient specialized training and that it does not harm their health, safety, learning process, physical, spiritual and moral development. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a provision – like section 18(3) of the 2022 draft-law on labour – provide for a minimum age of 16 for the performance of hazardous work, under the conditions of safety and training provided for under Article 3(3) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that such a provision explicitly applies to the work in vocational training that is allowed under section 2(3) of Order No. 46 of 1994 of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 5 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and monitoring mechanisms. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee once again notes the absence of information, in the Government's report, regarding the investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children. The Committee refers to the Government's report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), according to which the new challenges Ukraine is facing as a result of war increase the risk of human trafficking to virtually all segments of the population, but that combating this scourge remains one of the priorities of the National Police. The Government indicates that, in 2022, the National Police of Ukraine detected 134 cases of human trafficking; eight criminal offences under section 149 of the Criminal Code of Ukraine (human trafficking) were detected where the victims were children. Eight such offences were registered in the first five months of 2023. The Committee observes that the number of registered criminal offences for child trafficking remains low, and that information regarding the number of perpetrators of child trafficking who have been prosecuted and convicted remains sparse. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard and on the number and nature of penalties imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes the lack of information in the Government's report regarding the measures taken to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, particularly children in areas of armed conflict, internally displaced children and Roma children. The Committee notes with concern that that the ongoing war in Ukraine appears to have had serious ramifications on children's access to free basic education. A UNICEF press release of 24 January 2023 reports that the war has disrupted education for more than 5 million children, and that the impact of 11 months of conflict only compounds the two years of lost learning due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and more than eight years of war for children in eastern Ukraine. According to another UNICEF press release of 29 August 2023, children across Ukraine are showing signs of widespread learning loss as the war, preceded by the COVID-19 pandemic, have left students facing a fourth year of disruption to education. Moreover, according to the UNICEF website, only a third of schoolchildren in Ukraine are fully learning in-person. Two-thirds are struggling to learn online or through a mixture of online and in person classes. UNICEF is therefore working with governments and partners on the ground in Ukraine and countries hosting refugee children and families to help increase access to quality learning. This includes supporting the inclusion of children in national education systems and providing multiple learning pathways for children not currently enrolled. While noting the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee once again strongly encourages the Government to take measures to facilitate access to free basic education for all children and improve the quality of education for all students at the primary and lower secondary levels. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken and results achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Night Work of Young Persons (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 6) (ratification: 1933)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), received on 30 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 12 of the Convention. Prohibition of night work by young persons in industrial undertakings and legislation. The Committee previously noted that the Basic Labour Act of 2012 no longer contained a provision prohibiting night work by young persons, unlike the Basic Labour Act of 1997. It therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into compliance with the Convention.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA, according to which the Government has not taken any measures to prohibit the night work of young persons under 18 years of age, despite the fact that minors are increasingly vulnerable and prone to working, at all hours of the day and night. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication, in its report, that it is not necessary to amend the legislation since, under article 23 of the Constitution, international treaties have the force of law in the internal legal system of the country. The Government adds that, in practice: (1) no authorization has been granted by the Children's and Young Persons' Protection Councils to workers aged 14 years and above for the performance of night work; and (2) the labour inspectorate has not found any instance of young persons in night work. However, the Committee notes, from the joint observations of the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA, that the night work of children is frequent, not inspected by any government agency, and does not appear in official statistics. The Committee once again recalls that Article 2(1) of the Convention prohibits the employment during the night of young persons under 18 years of age in any industrial undertaking other than an undertaking in which only members of the same family are employed, except in the cases provided for in Article 2(2). Therefore, the Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has not taken any measures to prohibit night work by young persons in industrial undertakings. In addition, it recalls that, under Article 12 of the Convention, each Member that ratifies the Convention agrees to take such action as may be necessary to make its provisions effective. Since child labour seems to have bypassed the formally established channels for its authorization, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to reduce child labour in the informal economy and to provide information on the causes and results. Further, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into compliance with the Convention without delay by reintroducing a provision prohibiting the night work of young persons under 18 years of age, in order to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention. If such a provision were to include special grounds on which exceptions to the prohibition of night work by young persons may be granted, as previously provided for by section 257 of the Basic Labour Act of 1997, the Committee requests the Government to supply information on these special grounds and the conditions under which such permission may be given, indicating in particular the age of the young persons and the types of work they are authorized to perform.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1987)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), received on 30 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy, labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, that: (1) there is an increase in the number of working adolescents registered between 2020 and 2023; (2) from a total of 29,931 labour inspections undertaken between January 2020 and July 2023, the labour inspectorate detected 58 work entities in which children under the age 14 years were found to be working and these entities were ordered to stop such practices; (3) no case was detected involving a young person under the age of 18 years in hazardous work; (4) the National Plan for Comprehensive Protection of Children and Adolescents 2021–26, developed by the National Committee for the Rights of Children and Adolescents (IDENNA), envisages the development of measures to protect children from labour exploitation; and (5) the "Plan for the prevention and reduction of early pregnancy in teenagers" is a coordinated interinstitutional effort to address what the Government considers to be an important factor which can lead to child labour.

The Committee notes, from the observations of the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA that: (1) child labour is increasing, including in hazardous conditions and especially in the informal economy; (2) an estimated 12 per cent of children are engaged in child labour in hazardous conditions; (3) 22 per cent of children aged 6 to 17 years do not attend school in order to work and contribute to the livelihood of the family; (4) there is a lack of official statistics on child labour; and (5) there is no publicly available information on the National Plan for Comprehensive Protection of children and adolescents 2021–26. The Committee notes, with regret that: (1) the Government does not provide information on the measures taken to progressively eliminate child labour, whether under the above-mentioned plans or in the framework of the previously mentioned national system of guidance for the comprehensive protection of children and young persons; (2) once again, the Government does not provide any statistical information on child labour; and (3) the Government does not provide information on labour inspection activities in the informal economy. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) strengthen the capacity and extend the reach of the labour inspection services to better monitor the work performed by young persons in the informal economy; and (ii) ensure that sufficient up-to-date data on the nature, extent and trends of child labour, including in hazardous work and the informal economy, is made available. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken to this end; (ii) any measures taken or envisaged, to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including in the context of the National Plan for Comprehensive Protection of children and adolescents 2021–26 or any other policy, and the impact of such measures; and (iii) the number and nature of infringements detected by labour inspectors, including in the informal economy, and the penalties imposed.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee notes that the Government once again states that it considers that its legislation prohibits all forms of hazardous work to children under 18 years and that the Children's and Young Persons' Protection Councils do not authorize young persons to be engaged in hazardous work in practice. The Government indicates that, although section 96(1) of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons, provides that the national executive authority may determine minimum ages higher than 14 years for types of work that are hazardous or harmful to the health of young persons, section 96(2) goes on to say that, in any event, persons between 14 years and under 18 years, "shall not engage in any type of work that is explicitly prohibited by law". Therefore, according to the Government, persons under the age of 18 years are explicitly prohibited from engaging in hazardous types of work.

The Committee notes that the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA observe that the Government has not taken any measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that, even though the regulations on safety and health conditions prohibit hazardous or unhealthy activities for young persons under 18 years of age, section 96 of the Act of 1998 leaves open the possibility for the national executive authority to determine a minimum age under 18 years for types of work that are hazardous or harmful to the health of young persons. In light of this information, the Committee notes with concern that the Government has not taken any measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that: (i) section 96 of the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons is amended to expressly prohibit the engagement of young persons under the age of 18 years in hazardous work; and (ii) that any exceptions to the prohibition on hazardous work authorized by the Act of 1998 concerning the protection of children and young persons, only apply to young persons between 16 and 18 years of age and only under the conditions laid down in Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), received on 30 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the judicial authorities registered, in 2022, a total of 55 victims of trafficking, including 10 children under 18 years of age. In that same year, judicial proceedings were initiated against 212 persons for alleged involvement in trafficking in persons, and 54 persons were convicted for trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation, pornography, forced prostitution, forced labour and irregular adoption. The Committee also notes that the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA observe that the number of trafficking cases registered by the criminal courts and the number of child victims of trafficking identified appear to be low compared to the magnitude of the problem.

The Committee further notes that the Government does not provide information on the status of the draft bill against trafficking in persons. It notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW), that there is no time frame for the adoption of the bill on the prevention and punishment of the crime of trafficking in persons and comprehensive assistance to victims (CMW/C/VEN/CO/1, 27 October 2023, para. 46). The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) the concerns about: (1) the limited measures to prevent, prosecute and punish cases of trafficking in persons, in particular women and girls, for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour; and (2) the lack of disaggregated data on trafficking in women and girls into and out of the country (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/9, 31 May 2023, para. 27). The Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts and take the necessary measures to ensure: (i) the adoption of the draft bill against trafficking in persons; (ii) that any person who engages in the trafficking of children is subject to in-depth investigations and robust prosecutions; and (iii) the collection of up-to-date data on the extent and nature of child trafficking in the country. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed for violations relating the trafficking of children under the age of 18 years. Insofar as possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

Articles 3 and 7(2). Worst forms of child labour and effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in, and removing them from, the worst forms of child labour, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking. The Committee notes that, between 2022 and May 2023, the National Committee on the Rights of Children and Young Persons (IDENNA) provided assistance to 17 child victims of trafficking (14 girls and 3 boys) to help them locate their families. The Committee also notes the Government's information on some assistance provided to children, but it is not clear how many of these children were victims of trafficking: 1) the National Office for Comprehensive Attention to Victims of Violence (ONAIIV), between January and February 2023, provided assistance to 304 victims of crimes of violence; and 2) 110 children and young persons were welcomed in Centres of Immediate Attention and other shelter homes, and received comprehensive care services.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the IDENNA carries out monthly awareness-raising campaigns on social networks to prevent and protect children from trafficking and child abuse. It notes, from the observations of the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA, the adoption of Presidential Decree No. 4.540 of 2021, approving the National Plan against Trafficking in Persons 2021-2025. However, the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA observe that: (1) the Government should provide detailed information on its contents and implementation; (2) there is a lack of governmental evaluation of the effectiveness of the plans developed; and (3) the IDENNA should communicate the results of its actions, through reports and data.

The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the CMW, the establishment of: (1) in 2020, a Special Division of the Ombudsperson's Office for the Protection of Migrants, Refugees and Victims of Trafficking in Persons; and (2) in 2021, a National Council to Combat Trafficking in Persons to follow-up, evaluate, implement and monitor the National Plan against Trafficking in Persons 2021-2025 (CMW/C/VEN/CO/1, 27 October 2023, para. 6). The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the CEDAW, the concern about the absence of protocols for the early identification of victims of trafficking and their referral to appropriate services (CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/9, 31 May 2023, para. 27). In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any new information on the ongoing revision of the protocol for assistance to victims of trafficking by the National Office against Organized Crime and the Funding of Terrorism (ONCDOFT). While noting certain measures taken by the Government to combat trafficking in children, the Committee notes with concern that the Government, once again, does not provide information on the results achieved. The Committee requests the Government to carry out an evaluation of the measures taken, including in the framework of the National Plan against Trafficking in Persons 2021-2025, regarding the prevention and combating of trafficking in children. The Committee also requests the Government to pursue its efforts and to provide detailed information on: (i) the measures taken to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of child victims of trafficking and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration; (ii) the number of child victims of trafficking who benefitted from these measures; and (iii) the status of the revision of the protocol for assistance to victims of trafficking by the ONCDOFT.

Article 3(d). Children engaged in hazardous mining activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the "Misión Piar", created in 2005, is a social programme which seeks to improve the lives of people in mining by providing comprehensive assistance to miners, including by developing programmes for the promotion and defence of the rights of women and children and any other measures which contribute to reducing the risk of child labour while promoting decent work, and a safe and healthy working environment. It notes, that the UNETE, CTV, CTASI, CUTV, FAPUV, CGT and CODESA, in their observations: (1) indicate that there is no labour inspection in illegal mines; and (2) that illegal mining in the Arco Minero del Orinoco has been ongoing for many years, that the forced labour of boys is increasing in this region, and that the Government is not taking any measures to put an end to it. The Committee requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children from engaging in hazardous mining activities, to remove them from these activities and to provide them with rehabilitation services. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard, including within the framework of the "Misión Piar" and on the results achieved, by providing information on the number of children removed and who received direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Yemen

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and practical application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various initiatives, policies and measures adopted by the Government, in cooperation with the ILO, employers, workers and civil society organizations, to combat child labour. However, the Committee noted from an ILO survey that more than 1.3 million children between the ages of 5 and 17 were involved in child labour. It further noted from the Yemen Humanitarian Situation Report of March 2017 that more than 9.6 million children were affected by armed conflict in the country with over 1.6 million children who were internally displaced. Noting with deep concern at the large number of children below the minimum age for admission to employment or work who are involved in child labour, the Committee urged the Government to take immediate and effective measures to improve the situation of children in Yemen and to protect and prevent them from child labour, including through the adoption of the national action plan to combat child labour.

The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government representative, during the discussion at the 108th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2019, concerning the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), by Yemen that it has adopted an Action Plan, 2019–26 to combat child labour. The objectives of this Action Plan include: (i) to prevent child labour and protect children; (ii) to ensure social protection to children who end up in the labour market; (iii) to ensure that the monitoring bodies are better able to intervene in cases of child labour; (iv) to increase vocational training; (v) to undertake a study on child labour; and (vi) to adopt a national policy against child labour. The Committee also notes the Government's information in its report that, in cooperation with UNICEF, it is implementing a project for the care and rehabilitation of vulnerable children affected by the conflict as well as a national child protection plan, which contain social protection measures for children. It also notes the Government's information that an estimated 9,941 vulnerable children have benefited from the care and rehabilitation project. Moreover, a National Protection Committee, chaired by the Minister of Social Affairs and Labour and comprising representatives from various governmental bodies and relevant international organizations, has been established. The National Protection Committee provides an effective forum for discussion and exchange of views in order to stimulate cooperation in the fields of social protection, including child protection.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the consequences of the conflict have extended to child labour. It also notes the Government's reference to the UNICEF report, which states that the worsening economic situation and loss of source of income by many families has resulted in around 2 million children dropping out of school to enter the labour market. It is anticipated that the crisis will have the effect of increasing the scale of child labour and an estimated between 1–3 three million children will have no social protection and will be vulnerable to numerous forms of exploitation. In this regard, the Committee notes from the UNICEF Humanitarian Situation Report of Yemen of June 2019 that an estimated 12.3 million children are in need of humanitarian assistance in the country. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee must express its deep concern at the situation of children in the country wherein a high number of children are involved in child labour and who are vulnerable to such exploitation. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed conflict in the country, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation of children in Yemen and to protect and prevent them from child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including the measures taken within the framework of the Action Plan 2019–26, and the results achieved. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including statistical data on the employment of children and young persons.

Article 6. Minimum age for admission to apprenticeship. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the draft Labour Code which contains provisions setting a minimum age of 14 years for apprenticeship and the Ministerial Order No. 11 which would be amended to set a minimum age of 14 years for apprenticeship, would be adopted soon.

The Committee notes from the Government's report that the draft Labour Code and the Ministerial Order No. 11 has not been adopted. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions under the draft Labour Code and the Ministerial Order No. 11, which establish a minimum age of 14 years for apprenticeship, will be adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 29 August and 1 September 2019, respectively. It also notes the Government's report and the detailed discussion which took place at the 108th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2019, concerning the application by Yemen of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

Article 3(a) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that in 2012, a Presidential Decree prohibiting the recruitment of children in the armed forces was adopted. It also noted the Government's statement that the action plan to put an end to the recruitment and use of children by the armed forces, which was concluded in 2014 with the Special Representative of the United Nations Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, was hindered due to the worsening of the armed conflict since 2015. The Committee further noted from the UNICEF report entitled Falling through Cracks: The Children of Yemen, March 2017 that at least 1,572 boys were recruited and used in the conflict, 1,546 children were killed and 2,458 children were maimed. Moreover, the Report of the Ministry of Human Rights, 2018, reported an increasing number of conscripted children, about 15,000, by the Houthi militias and their methods of mobilizing these children to fight on front lines. According to the report, children recruited by this group were forced to use psychotropic substances and drugs and had been used to penetrate the Saudi borders. They were also trained to use heavy weapons, to lay landmines and explosives and were used as human shields. The Committee deeply deplored the use of children in armed conflict and strongly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and groups.

The Committee notes the observations of the IOE that the situation of children in Yemen is of concern, due to the involvement and recruitment of children in armed conflict. The Committee also notes that the ITUC, in its observations, states that due to the intensification of the conflict in 2015, the action plan developed in 2014 and the 2012 Presidential Decree banning child recruitment in armed conflict remain moot.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions, urged the Government to implement the action plan of 2014 to end the recruitment of children by armed forces.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that it is in the process of concluding an agreement with the ILO Regional Office for Arab States in Beirut to implement a two-year project designed to prevent the recruitment and exploitation of children in armed conflict. This project will target 300 children in the three governorates of Sanaa, Lahij and Hajjah. The Committee notes, however, from the Report of the UN Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict, June 2019 (A/73/907-S/2019/509) that in 2018, the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 370 children with the majority recruitment attributed to Houthis (170) and Yemeni Government forces (111). Of the total number, at least 50 per cent of the children were below 15 years and 37 per cent of them were used in active combat. For the first time the United Nations verified the recruitment and use of 16 girls between the ages of 15 and 17 by the Houthis. It also notes that the Secretary-General expressed concern at the violations against children committed by the armed groups, particularly the persistently high levels of recruitment and use, maiming and killing and denial of humanitarian access to children. The Committee further notes from the Report of the Secretary-General that a road map was endorsed by the Government in 2018 to expedite the implementation of the 2014 action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and to call for the immediate release of all children from its ranks. While noting some of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its deep concern at the continued use and recruitment of children by armed groups and forces and at the current situation of children affected by armed conflict in Yemen, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to continue to take measures, using all available means, to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and groups, including through the effective implementation of the national action plan to put an end to the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict, 2014. It also urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down against such persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, that the net school enrolment rates in Yemen was low with 76 per cent (82 per cent boys and 69 per cent girls) in primary education and 40 per cent (48 per cent boys and 31 per cent girls) in secondary education. It also noted from the UNICEF Yemen Situation report that according to the findings of the Out-of-School Children Survey conducted by UNICEF in Al Dhale governorate, 78 per cent of the 4,553 children who dropped out of school were girls. The Committee accordingly urged the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, especially girls, by increasing the school enrolment rates at the primary and secondary levels and by decreasing their drop-out rates.

The Committee notes the observations made by the IOE that the widespread conflict and the risk of attacks on schools as well as the recruitment or abduction of children for combat purposes all play a significant role in separating children from their right to a basic education free from interference or harm. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, in its conclusions, urged the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure equal access to free basic education for all children of school age.

The Committee notes the Government's reference to various sector-based strategies formulated to develop education in order to meet its obligations under the 2000 Dakar Framework for Action of Education for All and Millennium Development Goals. The Committee notes, however, that except for the Strategic Vision 2025, all the strategies indicated have been outdated. The Government also states that measures to implement strategies to develop education are under way. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that as a result of the various measures taken by the Government, the school enrolment rates at primary and secondary level have increased substantially. Moreover, measures have been taken to repair damaged schools in liberated areas and to provide the necessary means to ensure continuity of education. In this regard, the Committee notes from the UNICEF Humanitarian Situation Report of Yemen that during the first half of 2019, UNICEF's Education Programme have supported the construction of 97 semi-permanent classrooms in 33 schools which provide alternative learning opportunities to 18,159 internally displaced children; completed the rehabilitation of 13 affected schools; provided 21,891 new student desks in 500 schools; and provided school bags and other essential materials to 15,251 children to support and encourage access and reduce economic barriers to schooling. However, the Committee notes from the UNICEF report of March 2018, that since the escalation of conflict in 2015, more than 2,500 schools are out of use with two-thirds damaged by attacks, 27 per cent closed and 7 per cent used for military purposes or as shelters for displaced people. Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's admission that many problems prevent the Government from carrying out its educational development policies, such as the population dispersal, the difficult economic and social circumstances, the prevalence of certain customs and traditions, including the early marriage of girls, high levels of vulnerability, poverty and the ongoing war in the country. The Committee notes from the UNICEF report of March 2019 that out of seven million school-aged children, over two million children are already out of school. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must once again express its deep concern at the large number of children who are deprived of access to education because of the climate of insecurity prevailing in the country. Considering that education is key in preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, especially girls, by increasing the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels and by decreasing their drop-out rates. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Report of the Ministry of Human Rights, 2018, that workshops and civil society campaigns on the rehabilitation of children withdrawn from armed conflict were carried out and rehabilitation centres were opened for such children. Hundreds of children recruited by militias were released and provided with medical care. This report further indicated that the Government of Yemen, in cooperation with the Arab Coalition and the International Committee of the Red Cross and UNICEF, received 89 children who were recruited by the Houthi militia and deployed along the borders, out of which 39 children were rehabilitated and returned to their families. The Committee urged the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that children removed from armed groups and forces receive adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes that in its conclusions, the Conference Committee urged the Government to provide information and statistics on the number of children engaged in armed conflict, the number of those liberated and provided with rehabilitation and reintegration services.

The Committee notes the Government's information that at present there are no data and information on the number of children released from military camps and rehabilitated and reintegrated in the community. However, the Government indicates that a database on affected children and the services provided to them will be launched in cooperation with UNICEF. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure the establishment of the database relating to the number of children withdrawn from armed conflict, rehabilitated and reintegrated to the community. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as on the information on the number of children who have been withdrawn and rehabilitated. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken to remove children from armed groups and forces and to provide adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including reintegration into the school system, vocational training, or alternative learning opportunities wherever possible and appropriate.

2. Abandoned and street children. The Committee notes that the Government representative of Yemen, during the discussion at the Conference Committee, stated that the country faces several challenges and one of those being the increasing number of abandoned children and children begging. The Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect abandoned children and child beggars from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and to provide them with the appropriate assistance and services for their rehabilitation and reintegration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the preliminary 2018 Zambia Child Labour Survey Report (ZCLSR), conducted by the Zambia Statistical Agency (ZSA) shows a widespread child labour situation in Zambia – especially in the rural and agricultural sectors. The ZSA estimated that 955,301 children were in child labour, 97.7 per cent of whom were in the 5–11 age group. The study further indicates that 67 per cent of these children were in rural areas (636,366), while the other 33 per cent were in urban areas (318,935). In terms of gender distribution, girls represented 56.9 per cent of the children in child labour. Out of the total estimated number of children in child labour, about 96 per cent (919,520) were in unpaid work (fetching water or firewood, washing, cleaning, etc.). The ZSA further reported that 26,063 children were in hazardous work, and that the agriculture, forestry and fishing sub-sectors that dominate the rural economy account for 58 per cent of children in hazardous work. The other industries with some sizable number of children in hazardous work include construction (11 per cent), other services (10 per cent), households as employers (10 per cent), and manufacturing (8 per cent). The Committee further notes, from the Government's information in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) that the Government has revised the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2010–15 (NAP-I) and adopted and is now implementing the NAP 2020–25 (NAP-II). According to the document of the NAP-II, despite important strides, the prevalence of child labour in Zambia remains high in the rural and peri-urban areas due to high levels of poverty, and this situation has been worsened with the advent of the COVID-19 pandemic.

In this regard, as indicated in the document of the NAP-II, and in contrast with the NAP-I, the new NAP adopts a pragmatic approach to progressively eliminate widespread child labour. The NAP II uses practical cost-effective steps to strengthen cooperation and coordination among relevant child rights protection stakeholders and focus on reigniting an integrated policy response to child labour. The Government and other child labour partner institutions will adopt a coordinated multi-stakeholder approach to implement child labour relevant policies, programmes and interventions towards a rights-based strategic framework centered on the following NAP-II priority strategies: (1) strengthening inclusive and equitable human development and scaling-up access to education, health and other poverty-reducing services; (2) strengthening social protection systems; (3) promoting decent work opportunities for adults and youth; (4) strengthening child protection through institutional coordination; (5) strengthening and harmonizing the legislative framework; and (6) improving child labour awareness.

While noting the measures taken by the government, the Committee must express its concern over the significant number of children involved in child labour, including in hazardous work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the root causes of the increase in child labour in the country, and encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour by children under the minimum age for employment or work, as well as for all children engaged in hazardous work. In this regard, it requests that the Government provide detailed information on the implementation of the NAP II, and on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to continue to supply information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly updated statistics, disaggregated by age and sector of activity, on the situation of children engaged in child labour in the country.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee notes with regret that, despite the Committee's raising of this issue since 2011 and the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 2017, the Education Act of 2011 has not yet been amended to provide for an age of completion of compulsory schooling of 15 years, in line with Article 2(3) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, while section 17 of the Education Act of 2011 provides that parents shall enrol their child who has attained the school-going age at an educational institution and ensure the child's attendance, it neither defines the school-going age nor indicates the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

The Committee observes that, in its report, the Government once again states that progress on the process of revising the Education Act has been stalled, because the revision came at a time when the Ministry of Education began reviewing its National Education Policy. The Government indicates that the revision of the Act will only be finalized after Cabinet approval is granted for the revised National Education Policy. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the age of completion of compulsory education for all children is set at 15 years, thereby linking it to the minimum age for admission to employment or work. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee observes with regret that the types of light work permitted to children between the ages of 13 and 15, pursuant to sections 80 and/or 137(n) of the Employment Code Act No. 3 of 2019 and to the Statutory Instrument No. 121 of 2013 on the Prohibition of Employment of Young Persons and Children (Hazardous Labour) Order (S.I. No. 121 of 2013), have yet to be determined by statutory instrument. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, by statutory regulation, the determination of light work activities permitted to children of 13 to 15 years of age, in application of the Employment Code No. 3 of 2019.

Labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that it has established the Monitoring and Evaluation (M&E) Unit in the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MoLSS) with the mandate to monitor child labour interventions in the country. Moreover, the Government indicates that it is intensifying labour inspections, including child labour inspections in the informal economy. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the information communicated by the Government in its report under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), according to which it is taking measures to adequately resource the Labour Inspectorate, including by employing 46 new Labour Inspectors, bringing the total number to 176, and by providing funds to support field stations which go towards labour inspections. The Committee further notes that, in the framework of the NAP-II, one of the priority objectives is to ensure the more effective application of legislative frameworks to fight child labour, and that this includes the integration of child labour inspections in routine labour inspections to strengthen child labour detection and regulatory enforcement actions. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacities and expand the activities of the labour inspectorate, including in the framework of the NAP-II, to enable it to monitor child labour in all sectors, particularly in the informal economy. It requests the Government to continue to provide specific information on the results achieved by the Labour Inspectorate in this regard, particularly the number of children in child labour it has been able to identify, the number and nature of violations detected, and the penalties imposed. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the M&E Unit of the MoLSS.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children, monitoring mechanisms and penalties. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the activities it has undertaken, in particular in the framework of the National Action Plan on Human Trafficking, Mixed and Irregular Migration 2018-21. For instance, the Government indicates that capacity-building was conducted on human trafficking for the benefit of 19 frontline officials and 30 gender officers from various Government ministries and civil society organizations. In addition, the Committee takes note of the detailed information provided by the Government under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), regarding the activities and trainings undertaken by the National Prosecution Authority (NPA), which is the principal authority for all prosecutors in the country. The Committee further notes that, in the framework of the new National Policy on Human Trafficking and Smuggling of Migrants 2022-25 (NAP-TiP), one main objective is the enhancement of the capacity of the criminal justice system to investigate, identify and prosecute human trafficking cases effectively and efficiently by 2026.

The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide information on the investigations and prosecutions of perpetrators of child trafficking, despite the fact that a total number of 2,782 cases of trafficking (including of cases involving child victims) were handled by the District Social Welfare Officers between January 2020 and June 2023. During the first quarter of 2023, 80 cases were recorded, including 23 cases involving child victims. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 27 June 2022 (CRC/C/ZMB/CO/5-7, para. 42), noted the increasing number of child victims of trafficking in border areas and recommended that Zambia strengthen the training of professionals concerned with identifying and referring child victims of trafficking and take urgent measures to investigate, penalize and prevent commercial exploitation of children, particularly girls. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that cases of trafficking of children under the age of 18 for labour or commercial sexual exploitation are detected, and that investigations and prosecutions are conducted against the perpetrators. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, in the framework of the NAP-TiP or otherwise, and the results achieved, including with regard to the number and nature of convictions and penalties imposed.

Articles 3, 7(1) and 7(2). Worst forms of child labour, penalties and direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous work. Mining. The Committee notes that, according to section 3 of the Prohibition of Employment of Young Persons and Children (Hazardous Labour) Order, 2013 (Statutory Instrument No. 121 of 2013), the employment of children or young persons in work involving exposure to lead (h) or in underground work (bb) is prohibited. Yet, the Committee observes that according to a press release of 10 May 2022, found on the website of the Ministry of Community Development and Social Services (MoCDSS), entitled “Child labour worries Government”, the MoCDSS has expressed concern about the increase in the number of children engaging in labour in the mining sector. Similarly, in a press release of 24 May 2022 found on the website of the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights entitled “Experts of the Committee on the Rights of the Child Ask Zambia about the Exposure of Children to Lead Contamination in Mines and about Child Marriage”, reports the serious concern expressed by the CRC about the use of child labour in artisanal mining and the exposure of these children to high-level lead contamination. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of Statutory Instrument No. 121 of 2013 as regards the prohibition of the employment of all children under 18 in underground work in mines, and to provide information on inspections undertaken, violations detected and penalties imposed in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken or envisaged to protect children from becoming engaged in such hazardous work and removing those who are involved in this worst form of child labour and providing for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Following its previous comments, the Committee observes that the preliminary 2018 Zambia Child Labour Survey Report (ZCLSR) estimated that out of 6,035,481 children aged between 5 and 17 years, 1,308,994 children had never attended school (i.e. one in five children). Of the children who had never attended school, 77 per cent were in the rural areas and 54 per cent were boys. Some of the main reasons the 2018 ZCLSR respondents gave for the high proportion of children who had never attended school relate to inadequate public spending on primary education.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it continues to implement the Free Education for All Policy, which extends from early childhood to secondary education, and introduced school subsidies on user fees, and that this has positively impacted school attendance. The Government also continues to implement a series of interventions to promote schooling and reduce drop-out rates, in particular for girls, children in vulnerable situations and children living in rural areas. These include the “Keeping Girls in School” initiative (social cash transfers targeting girls from extremely poor households); the Improved Learner Support systems, which are school support structures aimed at improving learner retention; and the Stakeholders Engagement and Collaboration, which is a collaborative effort between the Government and civil society partners to ensure that school dropouts are given an opportunity to come back to school (by 2020, the programme had expanded its operations across four provinces, covering 62,611 girls). The Committee further notes that, under the National Action Plan for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2020-2025 (NAP-II), one of the priorities is to increase access to education through increased enrolment and retention of children at school. This is to be done, for instance, through cash transfer schemes to the benefit of identified vulnerable households, the scaling up of school feeding programmes and the allocation of 20 per cent of the budget to education.

The Committee notes, however, that the CRC, in its concluding observations of 27 June 2022, expressed concern about, among others: (1) the persistently high dropout rates, particularly among girls, due to teenage pregnancy, child marriage, discriminatory traditional and cultural practices and poverty; (2) the enrolment and retention rate disparities between boys and girls in primary and secondary school, particularly in rural areas; and (3) the negative impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on access to education, particularly for children from poor households and children with disabilities (CRC/C/ZMB/CO/5-7, para. 37). The Committee therefore once again strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system through measures aimed at, inter alia, reducing the school drop-out rates, particularly of girls, and increasing the enrolment and attendance rates in primary and lower secondary education. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in the framework of the NAP-II and the results achieved in terms of statistics on school enrolment, attendance and drop-out rates.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Bursary Support programme to OVCs continues to be implemented. This intervention provides financial support to orphaned and vulnerable learners who have dropped out of school or are at risk of dropping out of school due to socio-economic factors. The Committee, however, notes with concern that according to 2022 UNAIDS statistics, there remain an estimated 580,000 child orphans due to AIDS in Zambia, representing a considerable increase since the Committee last took note of the estimated 470,000 child orphans due to AIDS in 2018. Recalling that children orphaned by HIV/AIDS and OVCs are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that they are protected from the worst forms of child labour and to facilitate their access to education. It requests the Government to provide information on the specific effective and time bound measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved in terms of number of OVCs who have benefited from such measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equality of opportunity and treatment

Afghanistan

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the International Organisation of Employers (OIE) received on 1 September 2023.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) of the International Labour Conference in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention as well as the following conclusions of the Conference Committee.

The CAS noted with deep concern the repeated failure of the Government to respond to the Committee's comments since 2019.

The CAS expressed its very deep concern at the significant deterioration of the situation of women and girls, including the situation of vulnerable groups of women, and other minorities since 2021.

The CAS deeply deplored the discriminatory prohibitions, bans and restrictions based on sex imposed on girls and women since 2021, which adversely impact on their ability to enjoy fundamental human rights and freedoms. The CAS also deplored the lack of legal framework explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds set out in the Convention, in all aspects of employment and occupation, as well as the lack of access to non-discriminatory formal justice mechanisms and effective remedies, in line with the Convention.

Taking into account the discussion, the CAS urged that, in consultation with the social partners, effective and time-bound measures be taken to:

- remove without delay all bans, discriminatory practices and unequal treatment based on sex imposed on girls and women to prohibit, limit or impede their access to secondary and higher education, vocational training, employment and all types of occupations in all sectors, and provide information to the Committee of Experts on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved;
- put in place the necessary laws, policies and implementation strategy to prevent and address violence and harassment against girls and women, and provide information to the Committee of Experts on the measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved;
- amend section 9 of the Labour law in order to explicitly define and prohibit in law direct and indirect discrimination in line with the Convention;
- ensure access to non-discriminatory formal judicial mechanisms and effective remedies;
- organize activities and implement a campaign to raise public awareness of the principles of non-discrimination and equality protected under the Convention;
- provide information on the adoption of all the above-mentioned measures on any progress made in that regard, as well as the results achieved on the equal participation of women in employment and occupation, including by providing statistical information, disaggregated by sex and occupation, on the participation of girls and women in education, vocational training and employment;
- develop a multidisciplinary and multi sectoral action plan to combat discrimination in employment, occupation and education, with ILO technical assistance and in close cooperation with the social partners and other relevant civil society organizations. In addition, coordinate with other UN agencies operating in the territory.

The CAS also called for specific action to be taken in order to facilitate access to education and vocational training and promote employment opportunities of persons with disabilities, in particular girls and women.

The CAS decided to include its conclusions in a special paragraph of its report.

The Committee notes that the ITUC notes with great concern the structural discrimination suffered by women in Afghanistan, that blatantly hinders their access to education, training and employment. According to the ITUC, this situation follows a phase, prior to the takeover by the Taliban in 2021, during which some improvements were recorded towards democratization and promotion of the status of women. The organization adds that, prior to 2021, under the previous administration: (1) 64 women were elected to parliament and 17 to the Senate; (2) four women were nominated in the cabinet; (3) there were four women ambassadors in embassies and 261 women judges in the courts and judiciary; (4) 1,500 women were working as defense lawyers, 2,500 women as journalists in private free media, and 3,650 women in the security forces; (5) 3.5 million girls were engaged in education; and (6) thousands of women were working in the private sector, who altogether constituted 30 per cent of the labour force in the Afghan labour market.

The Committee further notes the ITUC's indication that, since 2021, the course of the progress made by the country was reversed and women and girls have been silenced and excluded from the public sphere. Since September 2021, Afghan girls over the age of twelve have been banned from going to school. Currently, 80 per cent of Afghan girls and young women who are eligible for school numbering about 2.5 million have been thrown out of school. Some 30 per cent of girls in Afghanistan do not have primary education, and even when girls are allowed to go to school, teaching is limited due to the lack of female teachers. In December 2022, university education for women was suspended until further notice, affecting more than 100,000 female students. Women are no longer allowed to work, including in the civil service. They are prohibited from traveling within and outside the country. The Afghanistan Labour Code, the Elimination of Violence Against Women Law, the Regulation of Women's Protection Centres and the Child Rights Protection Law which stipulated fundamental rights, equality of treatment and opportunities between men and women are no longer applicable. In 2021, the Ministry of Women's Affairs was closed and replaced by the Ministry of Prosperity and Prohibition. The Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission has been dissolved and twenty decrees have been announced by the Taliban to impose its religious beliefs, as well as its way of life, attire, and ethics based on its interpretation of Sharia Law. Specialized courts for the elimination of violence against women and public prosecutors' offices have been closed, depriving women of access to justice. The economic crisis has worsened the situation of women, minors and other vulnerable groups in the country. Since 2021, 97 per cent of the population has been living below the poverty line. Forced marriages including of minors, as well as child labour of boys and girls engaging in hazardous works have increased.

The ITUC also alleges that the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Trans, Queer, Intersex plus (LGBTQI+) community in the country continue to face grave human rights violations perpetrated by the Taliban, including threats, targeted attacks, sexual assaults, arbitrary detentions, and other violations. Many members of this community remain fearful that such discriminatory practices by the Taliban will continue to escalate, including the use of the death penalty against those in same sex relations and who therefore remain in hiding, fearing for their lives.

Under the subtitle "discrimination based on political opinion", the ITUC also indicates that: (1) journalists faced growing restrictions including arbitrary arrest, unlawful detentions, and torture in response to reporting that criticized the Taliban, leading many to self-censorship; (2) some were beaten and faced other forms of torture while detained; (3) many fled the country; and (4) women television reporters were forced to almost cover their faces completely. The space for civil society organizations to document and report on human rights shrank significantly and independent human rights groups were unable to work freely. According to the ITUC, the Taliban have dismantled any space for peaceful assembly, demonstration or gathering. Taliban police use excessive and unnecessary force against demonstrators, and peaceful protesters are arbitrary arrested, detained, tortured and forcibly disappeared. Detained protesters face physical and psychological torture.

The leaders of the trade union centre, NUAWA, have been forcibly displaced and live outside Afghanistan. It is impossible for NUAWA and their members to operate or pursue normal activities to redress gender-based violations. The Supreme Labour Council and the commission for disputes resolution at work have ceased to function. Social dialogue is non-existent.

The ITUC also highlighted the comments of the Committee of Experts, namely the inadequate definition of the concept of discrimination in Afghan law and the lack of mechanisms for access to formal justice and urged that immediate action be taken to give effect to the conclusions adopted by the CAS in June 2023. The Committee deeply deplores the current situation faced by women and girls in the country depriving them of education and employment opportunities. The Committee urges the de facto authorities to address this unacceptable situation and to respond without delay to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards as well as to the observations from the ITUC.

The Committee notes that, in its communication, the IOE reiterates the opening and closing statements of the Employer members as well as the statement of the Employer member of France during the discussion that took place in the CAS in June 2023 as well as the conclusions adopted by the CAS which are reproduced above. It further notes the IOE's request to take duly into account all the information provided when examining the application in law and practice of the Convention.

The Committee further notes that the IOE expressed the hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention, in line with the conclusions of the CAS and in close consultations with the most representative employers' organization in Afghanistan. The Committee requests the de facto authorities to provide their comments in this respect.

The Committee notes the report of the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, which concludes that: (1) Afghan women and girls have been restricted from participation in most areas of public and daily life by the introduction of progressively more severe and discriminatory edicts, policies and other pronouncements; (2) these measures deny the rights of women and girls to access education, to work and to freedom of movement and impact access to health and other essential services; (3) in addition to the restrictions imposed by the policies themselves, their implementation has involved further violations of human rights; (4) The exclusion of women lawyers and judges from the legal system, along with the abolition of specialized Elimination of Violence Against Women prosecution units and courts, affects the rights of women and girls to obtain legal representation, equality before the law and access to justice; and (5) over two years on from their takeover of the country, there has been systematic regression of the rule of law and human rights in Afghanistan, particularly with regard to the rights of women and girls (A/HRC/54/21, 11 September 2023, paragraphs 32, 67, 69 and 74).

It also notes the recommendations of the High Commissioner to the de facto authorities to: (1) promptly rescind discriminatory edicts and decrees which curtail women and girls' human rights and fundamental freedoms, enable their access to secondary and tertiary education and work, respect their freedom of movement and cease interference with other aspects of their daily lives; (2) in view of review of applicable laws being undertaken, ensure that all legislation applicable in Afghanistan is in line with international human rights law; (3) ensure access to justice and right to a remedy for survivors of gender-based violence through the formal justice system; and (4) promote and protect fundamental freedoms by replacing restrictive policies with human rights compliant ones (A/HRC/54/21, paragraph 75).

The Committee notes that, in a communication dated 27 August 2023, the de facto authorities indicated their commitment to the application of ILO Conventions and its reporting obligations. They also pointed out that the conclusions of the CAS were examined and, as per the decree of the Emir, a report under the Convention would not be submitted in 2023 due to insufficient time to reply but rather in 2024.

In these circumstances, the Committee notes with regret that the requested report was not received and firmly hopes that the announced report for 2024 will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments, which read as follows:

Articles 1(1)(a), 2 and 3 of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Restrictions on women's access to education, vocational training and employment. The Committee notes that since August 2021, high-level United Nations (UN) bodies have expressed deepest concern regarding the increasing deterioration of human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and girls in the country (UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, Statement, Urgent Debate on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, 1 July 2022; UN Security Council, Statement on the situation in Afghanistan, 24 May 2022; and High Commissioner for Human Rights, A/HRC/49/24, 4 March 2022). According to these bodies, as a result of the policies and practices adopted, severe restrictions have been imposed on women's and girls' freedom of movement, access to education, vocational training and employment. The Committee notes, more particularly, that: (1) since August 2021, women have been excluded from the workforce. They are also absent from the public administration, where all members are men; (2) since September 2021, women and girls have been denied access to secondary and higher education. Even where girls have been allowed to attend schools, instruction has been restricted due to the absence of women teachers; (3) the Ministry of Women's Affairs and the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission have been disbanded; and (4) specialized courts addressing the elimination of violence against women and prosecution offices have also been closed, thus leaving women without access to justice. The Committee notes that, in its resolution 50/14 on the situation of human rights of women and girls in Afghanistan, adopted on 8 July 2022, the Human Rights Council specifically: (1) condemned in the strongest possible terms all human rights violations and abuses committed against all individuals, including women and girls, in Afghanistan, including all forms of discrimination and violence, including sexual and gender-based violence; (2) called upon the Taliban in particular to reverse the policies and practices that currently restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of Afghan women and girls, to ensure that women and girls have opportunities and access to inclusive and quality education at all levels, equal to those afforded to men and boys, and to immediately open schools for girls of all ages; and (3) called for measures to ensure that victims of sexual and gender-based violence have access to justice and to effective remedies and reparations (Human Rights Council resolution 50/14, A/HRC/RES/50/14, 14 July 2022). Furthermore, the Committee notes from the recent report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan that: (1) "the restrictions on Afghan women are disproportionately affecting their ability to sustain themselves, thereby further diminishing their enjoyment of other basic rights"; (2) "in early 2021, about 17,369 women-owned businesses were creating over 129,000 jobs, over three-quarters held by women, and many more unregistered women-owned businesses operated in the informal economy [and] by March 2022, 61 per cent of women had lost their job or income generating activities ..."; (3) "in the informal sector, women can no longer take products to market due to movement restrictions and the closure of many women's markets"; (4) "women who continue to work often face harassment and abuse"; (5) "women have been excluded from the de facto justice system"; and (6) "female civil servants, except those doing jobs in health, security and education which cannot be carried out by men, were directed to stay home until conditions enable them to return to work in accordance with Sharia, although their male counterparts were called back" (A/HRC/51/6, 9 September 2022, paragraphs 38 and 39). The Committee strongly deplores the discriminatory prohibitions, bans and restrictions based on sex imposed on girls and women, in particular regarding their access to, and remaining in, education, vocational training and employment, both in the public and private sectors, and on their enjoyment of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as their exposure to sexual and gender-based violence. The Committee therefore strongly urges that all steps be taken to: (i) remove without delay all bans, discriminatory practices and unequal treatment based on sex imposed on girls and women to prohibit, limit or impede their access to secondary and higher education, vocational training, employment and all types of occupations in all sectors; and (ii) prevent and address violence and harassment against girls and women. The Committee asks for information on the measures taken to that end and the results achieved on the equal participation of women in employment and occupation, including by providing statistical information, disaggregated by sex and occupation, on the participation of girls and women in education, vocational training and employment in both the public and private sectors.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in its 2020 report to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), the Government indicated that a draft Anti-Discrimination Law had been developed, which defines direct and indirect discrimination and prohibits discrimination in employment and occupation (CERD/C/AFG/2-16, 27 July 2020, paragraphs 28 and 47). Recalling that the prohibition of discrimination in section 9 of the Labour Law is formulated in very broad terms, the Committee asks that all necessary measures be taken to explicitly define and prohibit in law direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin), as well as any other grounds determined in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, in accordance with Article 1(1)(b), covering all aspects of employment and occupation, both in the private and public sectors. The Committee asks for information on any progress made in that regard.

Article 1(1)(b). Discrimination against persons with disabilities, in particular women and girls. The Committee recalls that, while section 15 of the Law of Rights and Benefits of Persons with Disabilities provides for equal rights for persons with disabilities in terms of social, economic and educational participation, in practice, persons with disabilities had very low education and employment levels. The Committee notes that, in its resolution 50/14 on the situation of human rights of women in Afghanistan, the Human Rights Council expressed deep concern at the situation currently faced by girls and women with disabilities who are often subject to multiple, aggravated or intersecting forms of discrimination and disadvantages (A/HRC/RES/50/14, 14 July 2022). The Committee calls once again for specific actions to be taken in order to facilitate access to education and vocational training and promote employment opportunities of persons with disabilities, in particular girls and women, both in the private and public sectors.

Monitoring and enforcement. The Committee notes that, in her March 2022 report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed specific concerns about the fact that, "since August 2021, the previously operating legal and justice systems became dysfunctional, with little clarity as to applicable laws and the side-lining of justice sector personnel. Since then, the de facto authorities have gradually sought to resume the functioning of a country-wide justice system and courts under Islamic law with numerous appointments at the de facto ministry of justice" and de facto courts and initiated "an ongoing review of formal law's asserted compliance with both Islamic Law and with the objectives and policies of the new de facto administration. In the meantime, de facto authorities continued administering justice in lieu of the former judiciary in a decentralized manner in consultation with religious scholars, elders, and local communities" (A/HRC/49/24, 4 March 2022, paragraph 60). The Committee wishes to recall that Afghanistan has a binding legal obligation to uphold the fundamental human rights and freedoms guaranteed in customary international law and human rights treaties that the country is signatory to, including the Convention which it has ratified. The Committee therefore urges that all steps be taken to ensure access to non-discriminatory formal justice mechanisms and effective remedies and to organize activities to raise public awareness of the principles of non-discrimination and equality.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee previously noted that section E8(1) of the Labour Code of 1975 did not give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. Noting that the National Labour Board had reviewed the Labour Code and that a report had been submitted to the relevant authority for action, it requested the Government to report on the progress made in this regard. In its report, the Government indicates that it is envisaged that the revised text of the Labour Code will set out the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, which should not only provide for equal remuneration for men and women working in the same occupations, but also for equal remuneration for work carried out by men and women that is different in nature but of equal value. Upon revision by the National Labour Board, the upgraded text of the Labour Code will be subject to amendment after the process of public consultation is completed. The Government adds that the National Labour Board will ensure that the Labour Code does not contravene this Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made towards the amendment of the Labour Code to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention and, in the meantime, on any measures taken or agreements and policies adopted providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Remuneration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the use and definitions of the terms “wages”, “gross wages”, “remuneration” and “conditions of work” in sections A5, C3, C4(1) and E8(1) of the Labour Code. It noted that, while the definition of “gross wages” appeared to be in accordance with the definition of remuneration set out in Article 1(a) of the Convention, it remained unclear whether section C4(1) prohibiting sex discrimination with respect to wages covered the gross wage. It noted the Government’s indication that the terms “wages”, “gross wages” and “remuneration” were used interchangeably in practice, but emphasized that these various terms were often understood to have distinct meanings, thus potentially giving rise to confusion. Noting the ongoing review of the Labour Code, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that the revised text would harmonize the provisions of the Labour Code relevant to wages and remuneration, and include a clear definition of “remuneration” in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the National Labour Board will consider a definition for the term “remuneration” (as opposed to the interchangeable use of the terms “wages” and “gross wages”), which will cover not only the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary, but also any additional emoluments payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or kind, by the employer, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. This will ensure that there is no potential for confusion. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the amendment of the Labour Code in order to include a clear definition of remuneration in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination – National extraction and social origin. For a number of years, the Committee has been noting the absence of an explicit prohibition of discrimination on the basis of national extraction and social origin in the national Constitution and the Labour Code. The Committee has been asking the Government to ensure that workers are protected in law and in practice against direct and indirect discrimination on the basis of national extraction and social origin, in all aspects of employment and occupation, and to monitor emerging forms of discrimination that may result in or lead to discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of these grounds, and to report in detail on the progress made. The Government indicates in its report that the process of revising the Labour Code is still ongoing and the National Labour Board is currently considering provisions aimed at defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, as well as including all grounds of discrimination, namely race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Government adds that, once finalized, these proposals will be made available for public consultation. The Committee firmly hopes that the amendments to the Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and will include specific provisions ensuring and promoting the protection of workers against direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, and with respect to all the grounds of discrimination set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention.

Article 2. General observation of 2018. Regarding the above issues and more generally, the Committee would like to draw the Government’s attention to its general observation on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction adopted in 2018. In the general observation, the Committee notes with concern that discriminatory attitudes and stereotypes based on the race, colour or national extraction of men and women workers continue to hinder their participation in education, vocational training programmes and access to a wider range of employment opportunities, resulting in persisting occupational segregation and differences in remuneration for work of equal value. Furthermore, the Committee considers that it is necessary to adopt a comprehensive and coordinated approach to tackling the obstacles and barriers faced by persons in employment and occupation because of their race, colour or national extraction, and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for all. Such an approach should include the adoption of interlocking measures aimed at addressing gaps in education, training and skills, providing unbiased vocational guidance, recognizing and validating the qualifications obtained abroad, and valuing and recognizing traditional knowledge and skills that may be relevant both to accessing and advancing in employment and to engaging in an occupation. The Committee also recalls that, in order to be effective, these measures must include concrete steps, such as laws, policies, programmes, mechanisms and participatory processes, and remedies designed to address prejudices and stereotypes and to promote mutual understanding and tolerance among all sections of the population. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its general observation of 2018 and requests the Government to provide information in response to the questions raised in that observation.

Equality for men and women. Access to education, vocational training and employment. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take concrete steps to collect, analyse and provide statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of men and women in education and the various vocational training courses offered, as well as statistics on the number of men and women who have filled vacancies following such training, including for jobs traditionally held by the other sex. The Committee also urged the Government to provide detailed information on recent initiatives to promote women's participation in courses and jobs traditionally held by men, including up-to-date information on the courses offered by the Gender Affairs Department and the Ministry of Education, as well as the Institute of Continuing Education. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a comparative analysis was done on the participation of men and women in various vocational training courses in institutions such as the Ministry of Education, the Antigua and Barbuda Institute of Continuing Education (ABICE), the Antigua State College (ASC), the Directorate of Gender Affairs, the Antigua and Barbuda Hospitality Training Institute (ABHTI), the Department of Youth Affairs (DYA) and the Gilbert Agricultural Rural Development (GARD) Centre. The Government states that statistics indicate that there is still a striking disparity in the participation of women in professions traditionally occupied by men. However, women are slowly participating to a greater extent in technical and skilled occupations. It is envisaged that the institutions mentioned above will endeavour to engage in strategic planning that will encourage more women to access training so as to enter technical professions which are traditionally occupied by male workers. Currently, most institutions are actively involved in open-day activities geared towards attracting persons to the programmes provided and in spending time in counselling persons to access the training that best suits them. However, the Government states that there is little initiative specifically designed to encourage women to participate in areas traditionally dominated by men. The Committee notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) recommended adopting effective measures to combat horizontal and vertical occupational segregation in both the public and private sectors, including through professional training and incentives for women to work in traditionally male-dominated fields of employment (CEDAW/C/ATG/CO/4-7, 14 March 2019, paragraphs 36(a) and 37(a)). The Committee asks the Government to provide statistics, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of men and women in education at all stages and the various vocational training courses offered, as well as on the number of men and women who have filled vacancies following such training, including for jobs traditionally held by the other sex. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the manner in which it promotes women's participation in courses and jobs traditionally held by men.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in relation to the majority opinion adopted in August 2023 supporting a Bill which provides, among other measures, for the amendment of section 172 of the Employment Contract Act to prohibit discriminatory treatment in respect of income, inclusion and promotion of workers on grounds of sex, sexual characteristics, gender, gender identity and expression, sexual orientation, parental responsibility or family responsibilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress in the adoption of the above Bill.

Indigenous peoples. With reference to the adoption of measures to guarantee equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for both indigenous men and women, the Government indicates that: (1) labour skills training has been provided to the indigenous population through the Training and Employment Insurance Scheme and the More and Better Youth Employment Programme; (2) the National Afro-descendancy and Human Rights Programme has been implemented, which ensures the access to public policies of the Afro-Argentinian, Afro-descendent and African population; and (3) various vocational capacity building activities and training courses have been organized for the learning of trades by indigenous persons. With reference to assistance to victims of discrimination, the Government indicates that the responsible body is the National Institute to Combat Discrimination, Xenophobia and Racism (INADI). In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the report on the complaints received by the INADI in 2008–19, the complaints for discrimination against indigenous peoples represented 0.3 per cent of all the complaints received in 2018 and 2019. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the specific measures adopted within the context of the National Afro-descendancy and Human Rights Programme to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for indigenous men and women; and (ii) the impact of the measures adopted (for example, statistics on the labour market participation of indigenous workers, disaggregated by economic sector and sex). The Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169).

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not seize the opportunity of the revision of the Labour Code in September 2019 and May 2023 to bring section 178 of the Labour Code in full conformity with the principle of the Convention that is to include the concept of work of equal value in its legislation. It wishes to stress once again that the concept of “work of equal value” lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 673). The Committee further draws the Government’s attention to the fact that “work of equal value” for women and men can: (1) be performed under different working conditions; (2) require different qualifications or skills; (3) require different levels of effort; and (4) involve different responsibilities. When determining the value of jobs, while examining different jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor. Determining the value is about the overall value of the job when factors such as working conditions, qualifications or skills, effort and responsibilities are considered together. The Committee therefore stresses the importance of assessing the “value” – that is, namely the worth of a job for the purpose of determining remuneration – through objective job evaluation, which is used to establish classification of jobs and the corresponding salary scales without gender bias. The Committee asks the Government to: (i) take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression and effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention; and (ii) ensure that the determination of work of equal value is based on objective job evaluation, using criteria such as qualifications and skills, responsibility, efforts and conditions of work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) concerns regarding the reporting process implemented under the Workplace Gender Equality Agency that it is neither rigorous nor detailed enough, as companies do not have to disclose actual pay data, but merely to tick a box advising whether or not they have an equal remuneration policy in place. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that a review of the Workplace Gender Equality Act 2012 was undertaken in 2021 to consider how progress on gender equality in workplaces could be accelerated and reporting for employers to the Workplace Gender Equality Agency (WGEA) could be streamlined. Following the publication of the WGEA report, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act 2022, which implements a number of the recommendations of the 2021 Review, namely by: (1) changing the object of the Fair Work Act and introducing “the need to achieve gender equality in the workplace by ensuring equal remuneration for work of equal or comparable “value”, eliminating gender-based undervaluation of work and providing workplace conditions that facilitate women’s full economic participation” (Part 4 Schedule 2); (2) the establishment and requirement of an Expert Panel to make determinations regarding substantive gender pay equity matters (Part 6 Schedule 1); (3) the prohibition of pay secrecy clauses in contracts of employments, which are used to prohibit employees from divulging and discussing their pay with others (Part 7 Schedule 1); and (4) expanding the right to flexible work for employees. In addition, it notes with interest the adoption of the Workplace Gender Equality Amendment (Closing the Gender Pay Gap) Act 2023 which further implements some of the recommendations of the 2021 Review of the Workplace Gender Equality Act, including: (1) the new requirement of the WGEA to publish gender pay gap information of relevant employers (with 100 or more workers); and (2) setting of “gender equality standards” (Division 2). The Committee welcomes these legislative developments and requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken or envisaged to give effect to the principle of the Convention and to indicate how the legislative developments have impacted the reporting process and addressed the ACTU’s previous observations.

Queensland. In reply to the Committee’s previous request, the Government indicates that the Equal Remuneration Principle (ERP), established in 2002, was codified and incorporated into the Queensland Industrial Relations Act 2016, and therefore, the ERP continues to operate as a guiding principle for the decisions of the Queensland Industrial Relations Commission (QIRC). The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the Five-year Review of the Industrial Relations Act 2016 (IR Act 2016) identified the persistence of gender pay inequality as a central issue in collective bargaining.

The Government indicates that proposed amendments are currently in front of Parliament to update the good faith bargaining requirement set out in section 173 of the IR Act 2016 to give the negotiating parties the opportunity to understand and address the gender pay gap relating to the proposed agreement at the outset of bargaining. The amendments will require the parties to provide detailed wage-related information on the gender pay gap as soon as practicable after bargaining commences. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) the practical implementation of the Industrial Relations Act 2016 and the Industrial Relations Regulations 2018, including on the application of the ERP by the Queensland Industrial Relations Commission to ensure equal remuneration for work of equal “value” in awards, agreements and through equal remuneration orders in accordance with the obligations imposed by the Convention; and (ii) any difficulties encountered in the implementation of the Act and the Regulations, as well as the measures taken or envisaged to overcome them.

Victoria. The Committee notes the adoption of the Gender Equality Act 2020 (GE Act), which came into effect in March 2021, and which now requires Victorian public sector organisations to take positive action towards promoting workplace gender equality and to consider and promote gender equality in their policies, programmes and services. The GE Act applies to around 300 Victorian public sector organisations that have 50 or more employees (defined entities), including universities and local councils. The Committee indicates that the GE Act sets out seven gender equality indicators that represent the key areas where workplace gender inequality persists and where reasonable and material progress towards gender equality must be demonstrated (section 16). One of the indicators is equal remuneration for work of equal or comparable “value” across all levels of the workforce, irrespective of gender (section 3). Entities with obligations under the GE Act (defined entities) are required to conduct a workplace gender audit every four years which requires them to collect and report data on the gender equality indicators, including the gender pay gap (section 11). Defined entities are also required every four years to use their audit data to inform strategies and measures to address the gender pay gap and other gender equality indicators in their Gender Equality Action Plans (GEAP) (section 10). The Committee notes the establishment of the Commission for Gender Equality in the Public Sector (CGEPS) to support the Public Sector Gender Equality Commissioner (Commissioner), who is responsible for education, overseeing the implementation of the GE Act, enforcing compliance and playing a key leadership role in promoting gender equality in Victorian workplaces and communities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Gender Equality Act 2020, including: (i) how the adoption of the GE Act has impacted the gender pay gap in the public sector in Victoria; and (ii) the implementation of the GE Act by the CGEPS and the Commissioner, in particular specific strategies and measures undertaken to address any identified gender pay gaps.. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the measures in place to ensure that the principle of the Convention is applied to public entities with less than 50 employees.

Western Australia. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Industrial Relations Legislation Amendment Act 2021 (IRLA Act), which amends the Industrial Relations Act 1979 (IR Act) to include new equal remuneration provisions. The new equal remuneration provisions in Part II Division 3B of the IR Act enable the Western Australian Industrial Relations Commission (WAIRC) to make an equal remuneration order on application from a range of parties, including an individual employee or a group of employees. The Committee notes that the IRLA Act defines equal remuneration as “equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal or comparable value”. Pursuant to section 50A of the IR Act, the WAIRC is also formally required to include an equal remuneration principle in the statement of principles it issues each year when reviewing and adjusting minimum rates of pay for employees in the State industrial relations system. The equal remuneration principle must be applied whenever the WAIRC is determining an application for an equal remuneration order or is otherwise dealing with an equal remuneration matter. The Government adds that when the WAIRC is satisfied that an employee does not receive equal remuneration, it must make a remuneration order. An equal remuneration order may direct any action that the WAIRC considers appropriate, including (but not limited to): (1) reclassifying work; (2) establishing new career paths; (3) implementing changes to incremental pay scales; (4) providing for an increase in remuneration rates; and (5) reassessing definitions and descriptions of work to properly reflect the value of the work. An equal remuneration order may introduce equal remuneration measures immediately, or progressively in stages. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, in 2019, the WAIRC introduced an equal remuneration principle in its statement of principles to assist parties in furthering equal remuneration matters. The Government also indicates that, following enactment of the IRLA Act, minor revisions were made to the equal remuneration principle in 2022, to ensure it remains consistent with the new equal remuneration provisions of the IR Act. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the IRLA Act, including on the number of equal remuneration orders made by the WAIRC relating to the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) received with the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments and enforcement. Gender equality. Federal level. The Committee notes with interest the following legislative amendments: (1) the Sex Discrimination and Fair Work (Respect at Work) Amendment Act 2021 which amends the Australian Human Rights Commission Act 1986, and changes the threshold from 6 to 24 months for the discretion to terminate a complaint made under the Sex Discrimination Act 1984 since the alleged unlawful discrimination occurred; (2) the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act 2022, which amends the Fair Work Act by, inter alia: (a) widening the scope for employees to request flexible work; (b) extending the right to unpaid parental leave; (c) adding breast feeding, gender identity and intersex status as prohibited grounds of discrimination; and (d) clarifying how and when a 'special measure' clause in an enterprise agreement will be considered as not being discriminatory and when it must cease to exist; (3) the Anti-Discrimination and Human Rights Legislation Amendment (Respect at Work) Act 2022, which further amends the Sex Discrimination Act 1984, the Australian Human Rights Commission Act 1986, the Workplace Gender Equality Act 2012, the Age Discrimination Act 2004, the Disability Discrimination Act 1992 and the Racial Discrimination Act 1975. This Amendment Act introduces, among many other measures, a positive duty on the Australia Human Rights Commission (AHRC) in relation to discrimination and expands its powers to investigate into any matter relating to systemic or suspected systemic discrimination, and to ensure compliance with the legislation; and (4) the Workplace Gender Equality (Matters in relation to Gender Equality Indicators) Instrument 2013 (No. 1), to facilitate reporting by employers to the Workplace Gender Equality Agency, following a review of the Workplace Gender Equality Act 2012 undertaken in late 2021.

The Committee notes the information provided by Government in its report according to which, the Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC) received 3,113 complaints under federal anti-discrimination and human rights laws between 2020–2021. The AHRC finalized 2,624 complaints during this period and conducted approximately 1,517 conciliation processes of which 70 per cent were successfully resolved. Complaints about employment made up 72 per cent of all complaints under the Sex Discrimination Act. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) any new legislative developments or amendments made to the federal anti-discrimination laws; and (ii) the application in practice of the above-mentioned legislative amendments and their impact in achieving effective equality of opportunity and treatment in occupation and employment.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on religion. Inherent requirement of the job. State level. Victoria. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that it has amended the Equal Opportunity Act 2010 to provide that religious organizations and educational institutions are prohibited from discriminating against people on the basis of protected attributes such as sexuality, gender identity or marital status when making employment decisions (new sections 82A and 83A). The Act now allows religious bodies and educational institutions to discriminate only against employees or potential employees on the basis of religious belief or activity where conformity with religious beliefs is an inherent (defined as "core, essential or important") requirement of the job and the discrimination is reasonable and proportionate in the circumstances. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on how the amendment to the Equal Opportunity Act has been applied in practice, by providing examples of cases where the "inherent requirement" test was successfully used by an employer to discriminate against an employee or potential employee as well as cases where courts or agencies have rejected an employer's assertion of the test.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that following a national inquiry into sexual harassment, the AHRC published, in 2020, the "Respect@Work Report", which found that 33 per cent of Australian employees have experienced sexual harassment in the workplace in the past five years (39 per cent of women and 26 per cent of men). While employees in some types of workplaces were more likely to experience harassment than others, the Report concluded that sexual harassment occurs in every industry, in every location and at every level, in Australian workplaces. The Committee notes that the Respect@Work Report made 55 recommendations addressed to all levels of government, the private sector and the community in order to reduce the prevalence of sexual harassment in workplaces, and provide greater support when it does occur, including 12 recommendations that call for the amendment of some of the Commonwealth legislation. The Committee notes that the ACTU welcomes the Government's commitment to implement the recommendations of the inquiry in full. To this end, the Committee notes with interest the adoption, in November 2022, of the Anti-Discrimination and Human Rights Legislation Amendment (Respect at Work) Act 2022 which implements some of the 12 legislative recommendations of the Respect@Work Report. Among the changes, the Committee notes: (1) the introduction of a positive duty on employers and persons conducting a business or undertaking (PCBU) under the Sex Discrimination Act 1984 to take reasonable and proportionate measures to eliminate, as far as possible, sexual harassment, sex-based discrimination and harassment, hostile work environments, and related victimization (section 47B and C); and (2) the lower threshold to establish "harassment on the ground of sex" under the Sex Discrimination Act requiring that the relevant conduct be "demeaning" and no longer "seriously demeaning". The Committee also notes that the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act 2022 implements all remaining legislative amendments recommended by the Respect@Work Report, including: (1) introducing a vicarious liability of the employer for the sexual harassment by an employee, unless they took all reasonable steps to prevent sexual harassment; and (2) amending the Fair Work Act 2009 to set out a dispute resolution process in which an aggrieved person may apply to the Fair Work Commission to deal with the dispute and/or make a "stop sexual harassment order" (Part 8 Schedule 1). The Committee also notes the information provided on the various actions undertaken by the AHRC and the Sex Discrimination Commissioner to prevent and address sexual harassment in the workplace. It notes that, in 2021, Safe Work Australia published national guidance material to assist employers across Australia in preventing and responding to workplace sexual harassment as well as a tailored information sheet to assist small businesses in preventing workplace sexual harassment. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government according to which, between 2020 and 2021, the AHRC received 503 complaints under the Sex Discrimination Act, 252 of these complaints alleged sexual harassment (26 per cent). The largest number of these complaints occurred in the area of employment (67 per cent). 61 per cent of the total complaints lodged under the Sex Discrimination Act were successfully resolved through conciliation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the new legislative provisions regarding sexual harassment, including by providing information on the number, nature and outcome of any cases or complaints of sexual harassment dealt with by the labour inspectors, the Fair Work Commission, the courts or any other judicial or administrative competent authority, and the impact of these measures on the prevalence of sexual harassment in Australian workplaces. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide information on any additional activities undertaken by the Australian Human Rights Commission, the Sex Discrimination Commissioner and the Fair Work Commission to address sexual harassment.

Sexual orientation. The Committee notes with interest that the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act 2022 introduces “gender identity” and “intersex status” as prohibited grounds of discrimination (Part 9 Schedule 1). It notes the Government’s indication that between 2020 and 2021, the AHRC received 504 complaints under the Sex Discrimination Act, of which 69 related to gender identity, 2 to intersex status and 30 to sexual orientation; 67 per cent of all complaints received over this period related to employment discrimination. The Committee also takes due note of the statistical data provided by the Government on court cases in the different states and territories. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Fair Work Act, as amended in 2022, including by continuing to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of any complaints or cases alleging discrimination on the grounds of gender identity, sexual orientation and intersex status in employment and occupation dealt with by the labour inspectors, the courts or any other judicial or administrative competent authority.

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin. Indigenous peoples. Federal level. For a number of years, the Committee has been expressing concern regarding restrictions on the rights of indigenous peoples to land and property recognition and use. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Native Title Legislation Amendment Act 2021 (Amendment Act 2021) which amends the Native Title Act 1993 and the Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act 2006, was passed in 2021, introducing a number of changes, including: (1) the possibility to make applications for compensation in relation to more areas where native title rights and interests have been impacted; (2) new functions of mediations to the National Native Title Tribunal; and (3) all court matters relating to the Corporations (Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander) Act must be commenced in the Federal Court. The Government adds that extensive consultation was undertaken on the development of the Amendment Act. During its consultation, the Government received submissions from, and conducted meetings with, a wide range of stakeholders in the native title system, including native title representative bodies, registered native title bodies corporate and other Indigenous stakeholders. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, as of 29 July 2022, approximately 80 per cent of native title determinations had been made by consent (566 determinations made in total). The Government states that native title has now been recognized over more than 42 per cent of Australia’s land mass and over more than 91,000 square kilometres of Australia’s seas. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the Indigenous Rangers Programme and Indigenous Protected Areas (IPA) Programme assists First Nations people to manage land in accordance with Traditional Owners’ objectives. In addition to supporting connection to the land and culture, the Government indicates that these programmes provide economic opportunities for First Nations peoples, and environmental outcomes to benefit all Australians. Finally, the Committee notes the Closing the Gap Strategy 2023, a formal commitment by federal, state and territory governments to achieve equality for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples within 25 years, in which Outcome 15 is that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people maintain a distinctive cultural, spiritual, physical and economic relationship with their land and waters. There are two targets under this outcome: (1) Target 15a: by 2030, a 15 per cent increase in Australia’s landmass subject to Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people’s legal rights or interests; and (2) Target 15b: by 2030, a 15 per cent increase in areas covered by Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people's legal rights or interests in the sea. The Government indicates that, as of July 2023, the data shows that Target 15a is on track to be met. Despite the Government's indication that substantial areas of sea claims are progressing and that it is expected that the data for target 15b would be on track in the next reporting period, the Committee notes from the 2023 Closing the Gap Report that Target 15b has improved but still not enough for the target to be met. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts, in collaboration with indigenous peoples and other relevant stakeholders, to ensure that indigenous peoples have access to land and resources to allow them to engage in their traditional occupations and access employment without discrimination. It therefore asks the Government to continue to provide information on any further steps taken to this end, including by providing information on the implementation of the Indigenous Rangers' Programme and IPA Programme, in as much as it relates to access to vocational training, to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment of indigenous peoples. Constitutional recognition. The Committee previously noted the Government's commitment to recognizing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the Constitution. The Committee further notes that in a recent referendum the Australian people rejected the proposal to change the Constitution by inserting "recognition of the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples as the First Peoples of Australia" and the establishment of "the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Voice". The Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding any actions taken in relation to these matters following the result of the referendum.

National policy and programmes for indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a new National Agreement on the Closing the Gap Strategy came into effect on 27 July 2020. It notes however, from the Closing the Gap Annual Report of 2023, that many of the targets set out are "not on track" to be met by 2031. For example, Target 4, which aims to increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children assessed as developmentally on track in all five domains of the Australian Early Development Census to 55 per cent by 2031, is reported as "not on track" and has actually worsened from 35.2 per cent in 2018 (the baseline year) to 34.3 per cent in 2021. Also, for Targets 5, 6 and 7, which aim to increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth (15–24 years) who have completed secondary school and/or are in employment, high education or training, the report indicates that while improvements have been achieved, it is not enough for the targets to be met. The Committee takes due note that Target 8, which refers to the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people between 25 to 64 years who are employed, shows a "good improvement" (from 51 per cent in 2016 (the baseline year) to 55.7 per cent in 2021) with the national target of 62 per cent on track to be met. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that it has committed to replacing the Community Development Programme (CDP) with a new programme with real jobs, proper wages and decent conditions – developed in partnership with First Nations People. The Government adds that the new programme will increase economic opportunities and jobs in remote areas and give more control to communities to determine local projects that support economic development. The Committee notes, from the ACTU's observations, that it welcomes the Government's commitment to end the CDP, which it considered to be discriminatory against First Nations Peoples. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it is adapting its First Nations-specific employment investments to ensure it is fit for purpose, supports economic recovery and aligns with the change to mainstream employment services. The Government refers to the Indigenous Skills and Employment Program (ISEP), which is an investment that was announced in the 2021–22 Budget, and that is expected to contribute to closing the gap in employment by supporting pathways to meaningful and sustainable employment for First Nations People through flexible, locally informed investment.

State level. The Committee notes the range of initiatives being undertaken in some of the states and territories to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of indigenous peoples and to address discrimination. It notes that several states, such as Queensland, New South Wales and Western Australia, continue to implement affirmative actions to enhance the employment of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples in the public sector in particular. Among these, the Committee takes note of the Queensland Women's Strategy 2022-27, which includes a focus on elevating First Nations women as well as strengthening women's overall economic security and includes a specific commitment to work to break down barriers to employment for First Nations women. In light of the persistent disadvantaged position of indigenous peoples in education and employment, the Committee asks the Government to pursue its efforts and to provide information on: (i) any assessment carried out on the impact of the different measures undertaken to enhance indigenous peoples' access to the labour market, as well as on any corrective measures taken or envisaged as a result; (ii) any progress made in meeting the Closing the Gap targets, in particular concerning employment, education and vocational training; (iii) the implementation of the ISEP, including details of the contribution it has made to the Closing the Gap targets; and (iv) the policies and programmes implemented to address discrimination and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for indigenous peoples at the federal, state and territory levels, as well as on their impact.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Federal Chamber of Labour (BAK) and the Austrian Federal Economic Chamber (WKÖ), which were attached to the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Gender pay gap. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the gender pay gap has been decreasing continuously for the last ten years but that it remains very high compared to the rest of the European Union (EU) members (second highest, at 18.8 per cent in 2021 (EU average was 12.7 per cent) according to Eurostat). According to a report from the European Commission, this results from a mix of root causes such as gaps in childcare facilities and adequate day care for school children, a very unequal distribution of paid and unpaid work between women and men, and a high rate of part-time work among female workers. Statistics Austria Office notes that 49.6 per cent of them were working part-time in 2021, compared to 11.6 per cent for men (EU averages were 29.5 and 9.3 per cent respectively), and when looking more specifically at active part-time rates of persons between 25 and 49 years with children under 15, the figures strikingly stand at 72.8 per cent for women and 6.8 per cent for men. The Committee also notes the observations made by the BAK as well as the European Commission and the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) regarding the impact of this pay gap on women's pension benefits (the gender pension gap standing at over 40 per cent) (European Commission, European network of legal experts in gender equality and non-discrimination, Country Report Austria on gender equality, 2022, pages 10, 22 and 44; and CEDAW/C/AUT/CO/9, 30 July 2019, paragraphs 32(a) and 37). The Committee notes that the Government refers to various measures adopted to reduce the structural factors contributing to the large gender pay gap, such as training courses to promote the access of women to non-traditional occupations as well as initiatives to inspire more girls to take science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) subjects; special assistance for those returning to work after a career break for family reasons; and women's career centres to offer individual advice. It also provides examples of measures adopted in the provinces in this regard. In light of the significant gender pay gap in the country, the Committee wishes to stress that, it is important to deal with the persistent underlying causes of pay inequality that still need to be addressed in the country, in addition to the ones already identified above. A comprehensive approach to the reduction and elimination of pay disparity between men and women involving societal, political, cultural and labour market interventions is required. In that regard, the Committee observes that the Directive (EU) 2023/970 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 10 May 2023 to strengthen the application of the principle of equal pay for equal work or work of equal value between women and men through pay transparency and enforcement mechanisms (“EU Pay Transparency Directive”) entered into force on 6 June 2023, and that EU Member States must implement it within three years. In view of the remaining significant gender pay gap, the Committee requests the Government: (i) to step up the measures taken to further reduce the gap (in this regard, it refers the Government to the range of proactive measures taken by member States to implement the Convention and described in its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions on fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 720-730); and (ii) to provide information on those measures and the results achieved. Please provide information on the transposition of the EU Directive on Pay Transparency into the national legal framework and its implementation.

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee takes note of the Government’s statement that targeted reforms are being implemented to close the gender pay gap, and that pay reforms were implemented in 2019 to increase the minimum pay and eliminate the gender pay gap. The Committee also notes that, according to the data provided by the Government, in 2021, women’s average monthly wage was at AZN558 while men earned AZN847.7. The Government thus indicates that, in 2021, women’s average monthly earnings represented 65.8 per cent of that of men (a gender pay gap of 34.6 per cent), compared to 54 per cent in 2018 (46 per cent). While taking note of this progress, the Committee notes that the difference in earnings between men and women remains high. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the gender pay gap may be explained by the fact that women are responsible for housework and family responsibilities and that they prefer to be employed in comparatively light work that requires less responsibilities and are thus paid less than jobs with more responsibilities and higher pay. In this regard, the Committee once again refers to paragraphs 712 and 713 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, relating to occupational gender segregation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, at the start of 2017, women continued to be overrepresented in certain sectors, including in education (where women represented 68.5 per cent of the workforce), health and social care (73.1 per cent) and leisure, entertainment and the arts (59.9 per cent). The Government further indicates that: (1) women prefer to work in low-paid sectors such as health and social services, leisure, entertainment and the arts, education, and real estate services; and (2) over the last 10 years, the share of women in management positions has stood at an average of 10-11 per cent, with a growth rate of only 0.5 per cent. The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), the continued existence of horizontal and vertical segregation in the labour market, as well as barriers to women’s access to management positions, higher-paid jobs and decision-making positions (CEDAW/C/AZE/CO/6, 12 July 2022, paragraph 31). Once again recalling that pay inequalities may arise due to the segregation of women and men into certain sectors and occupations, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to reduce the wide gender wage gap and address its underlying causes, including any prevailing stereotypes regarding women’s preferences or suitability for certain jobs. In this regard, the Government is requested to provide information on: (i) awareness-raising activities and sensitization initiatives aimed at deconstructing views attributing specific skills, roles and occupations to girls, boys, women or men; (ii) steps taken to promote the participation of more women in male-dominated sectors and jobs, as well as of more men in female-dominated sectors and jobs; and (iii) statistical data on the distribution of women and men in the different sectors of economic activity, occupational categories and positions and their corresponding earnings, both in the private and public sectors.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that, as part of the improvement of the national law and its further harmonization with the requirements of the Convention, the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection has drafted a law amending the Law on Gender Equality of 2006, which has been submitted for approval of the relevant government bodies. The Government indicates that the proposed law will amend section 9, on equal remuneration, and will provide that: "Workers who work in the same workplace, have the same level of qualifications and perform the same or different work of the same value in the same working conditions, must receive equal pay, bonuses and other financial incentive payments for equal work irrespective of their sex". The Committee notes that the proposed amendment does not give full expression to the principle of the Convention. Indeed, the proposed draft law, if adopted, would still require workers to work in the same workplace, have the same level of qualification, and perform the same work or different work of same value but in the same working conditions, for the principle of equal remuneration to apply. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that "work of equal value" for women and men can: (1) be performed under different working conditions; (2) require different professional skills; (3) require different levels of effort; and (4) involve different responsibilities. When determining the value of different jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor taken into consideration. Determining the value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account together. In this regard, the Committee once again refers to paragraphs 672 to 675 and 677 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention by ensuring that equal remuneration for women and men is guaranteed not only for work that is "equal", "the same" or "similar", but also for work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value; and (ii) to ensure that measures are taken to implement this principle in practice, including through collective agreements.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibition of discrimination. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls that section 16(1) of the Labour Code provides for an open list of prohibited grounds of discrimination (using the wording "and other factors unrelated to the professional qualifications, job performance, or professional skills of the employees") but does not explicitly mention the grounds of "colour" and "national extraction" (i.e. a person's place of birth, ancestry or foreign origin). It notes from the Government's report that section 8 of the Law on Employment of 29 June 2018 guarantees equal opportunities to all, irrespective of race, ethnicity, religion, language, gender, family situation, social origin, place of residence, financial situation, convictions and membership of political parties, trade unions and other voluntary organizations, in the exercise of their right to work and to freely choose their employment. The Committee further notes the Government's repeated indication that a draft law amending the Labour Code will amend section 16(1) of the Labour Code, by inserting "family responsibilities" in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), that while the constitutional and legislative framework contain anti-discrimination provisions, there is no comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation and policy framework (E/C.12/AZE/CO/4, 2 November 2021, paragraph 18). In this regard, the Committee recalls that where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen the legislative protection against discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation by including “colour” and “national extraction” (enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention) as prohibited grounds of discrimination in section 16(1) of the Labour Code. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved towards the amendment of section 16(1) of the Labour Code, which aims to insert “family responsibilities” in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. Private sector. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government to take effective measures to address the significant occupational gender segregation in the labour market, and to improve women’s participation rates in sectors or occupations in which they are under-represented. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that there was a particular focus on widening women’s opportunities to find employment or start a business in the ILO Decent Work Country Programme for 2016–2020. It also notes the adoption, in 2018, of the Employment Strategy of Azerbaijan for 2019–2030, which, according to the Government, pays particular attention to supporting women’s employment and ensuring gender equality. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, in 2017, women represented 48.7 per cent of the labour force and men 51.3 per cent, and that the unemployment rate among women was 6 per cent and 4.2 per cent among men. It also notes that, in 2017, women continued to be over-represented in low-paid sectors such as health and social services (75.1 per cent of women versus 24.9 per cent of men) and education (71.4 per cent of women versus 28.6 per cent of men). The Committee notes the Government’s indication that women account for 53.6 per cent of all scientific workers. Women also represent 45 per cent of secondary school pupils; 48.2 per cent of students in vocational technical education; 48.4 per cent of students in secondary specialist education; and 48.4 per cent of students in higher education and on doctoral programmes. The Committee notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the persisting horizontal and vertical segregation of women and girls in education. The CEDAW also expressed concern: (1) over the persistent barriers to justice for women and girls, including limited knowledge of their rights and the remedies available to claim them, limited capacity of the judiciary and law enforcement officials to apply the Convention and persistent gender stereotypes among the judiciary; (2) that the relevant national action plans, benchmarks and timelines have not yet been finalized or adequately resourced, in particular the draft national action plan on gender equality; (3) over the persistence of patriarchal attitudes and discriminatory stereotypes concerning the roles and responsibilities of women and men in the family and in society, considering women primarily as mothers and caregivers, which impede progress in advancing gender equality; (4) over the absence of a comprehensive strategy to address discriminatory gender stereotypes, and the absence of capacity-building for media professionals and public officials on the use of gender-sensitive language; (5) over the persistence of discriminatory gender stereotypes and stereotypical portrayals of women in educational materials, advertisements and the media; (6) over the concentration of women’s entrepreneurship in low-profit sectors, such as wholesale and retail trade and agriculture, and home-based entrepreneurship; and (7) that older women, women and girls with disabilities, women and girls belonging to ethnic minority groups, internally displaced women and girls, and refugee, asylum-seeking and migrant women and girls continue to face intersecting and aggravated forms of discrimination (CEDAW/C/AZE/CO/6, 12 July 2022, paragraphs 11, 15, 21, 29, 35 and 39). The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) that, despite the Government’s efforts to develop a policy framework to promote gender equality, the unequal distribution of unpaid domestic and care responsibilities between men and women remains a significant barrier to gender equality (E/C.12/AZE/CO/4, 2 November 2021, paragraph 20). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take steps to: (i) address effectively and without delay gender stereotypes and occupational gender segregation, including through awareness-raising activities; and (ii) adopt targeted measures to improve the participation rates of women in those economic sectors and occupations in which they are under-represented, including by encouraging girls and young women to choose non-traditional fields of studies and career paths and enhancing women's participation in vocational training courses leading to employment with opportunities for advancement and promotion. It also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the results achieved by any measures taken to these ends, in the framework of the Employment Strategy of Azerbaijan for 2019–2030 or otherwise; and (ii) the adoption, implementation and results of the National Action Plan on Gender Equality 2019–2024.

Exclusion of women from certain occupations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, with the aim of broadening women's opportunities for employment, draft amendments to the Labour Code have been drawn up and submitted for consideration by the Cabinet of Ministers in July 2022. The Committee notes with interest the adoption, in November 2022, of the Law on amending the Labour Code, deleting section 241 of the Labour Code, which previously contained a general prohibition for all women to work in hazardous occupations and workplaces. It notes that, under the new sections 211 and 240 of the Labour Code, the employment of pregnant women and women with children under the age of one year remains prohibited in "productions [and] professions (positions) with harmful and difficult working conditions, as well as underground works". The Committee further notes with interest the adoption of Cabinet of Ministers Decision No. 172 of 31 May 2023, which repeals Decision No. 179 of 1999, and thus reduces the list of occupations in which pregnant women and women with children below the age of one year cannot be employed, from 700 to 204 occupations. The Committee refers to paragraph 86 of its 2023 General Survey on Achieving Gender Equality at Work, and recalls that lists of types of work or occupations prohibited because of the danger they pose to health, including reproductive health, should be determined on the basis of an assessment based on scientific evidence and progress, as well as technological developments, showing that there are specific risks to the health of women and, if applicable, of men. The Committee requests the Government to continue to review periodically the provisions relating to the protection of persons working under hazardous or difficult conditions and ensure that they are aimed at protecting the health and safety of both men and women at work, while considering gender differences with regard to specific risks to their health.

Article 3(d). Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. Public sector. The Committee notes the Government's statement that a growing number of women are employed in the public administration and the judicial system every year. It notes from the data provided by the Government that women are still largely underrepresented in the public sector (as of January 2021, there were 2,203 women and 3,286 men employed in auxiliary posts; for administrative posts in the fourth to seventh categories, there were 4,520 women and 14,955 men, and in the highest three categories, there were 616 women and 1,092 men). The Committee also notes, from the Government's report to the CEDAW, that the percentage of women judges has increased from 12.3 per cent in 2018 to 15 per cent in 2019 (CEDAW/C/AZE/6, 31 October 2019, paragraph 112). However, the Committee notes, from the concluding observations of the CEDAW that women are still under-represented in decision-making positions, including in the National Assembly, academia, the judiciary, the public service and the foreign service. The CEDAW also expressed concern at the lack of targeted measures, including temporary special measures, to increase women's representation in public life (CEDAW/C/AZE/CO/6, paragraph 27). The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to improve the representation of women in the public service, including in the judiciary and higher-level and decision-making posts. It requests the Government to provide: (i) information on the results of the actions taken and progress made in this respect; and (ii) updated statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the distribution of men and women in the public sector, including the judiciary.

Equal opportunity and treatment of ethnic and national minorities. Since 2005, the Committee has repeatedly raised concerns regarding discrimination faced by members of ethnic minorities in the fields of employment and education. It notes the Government's general statement that the National Employment Policy does not allow discrimination on the grounds of religion or ethnicity, and that therefore, there are no statistics on employment disaggregated by religion or ethnicity. The Committee also notes the Government's indications that: (1) section 5 of the Law on Education of 19 June 2009, guarantees the right to education irrespective of gender, race, language, religion, political beliefs, ethnicity, social situation, origin or health-related abilities; (2) in certain provinces, school books are published in the local language; and (3) the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection has not received any reports of discrimination in the workplace or in employment promotion on the grounds of ethnicity. However, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed concern that: (1) there is a lack of comprehensive statistics on the demographic composition of the population, disaggregated by ethnic or national origin, limiting the ability to properly assess the situation of such groups, including their socioeconomic status, and any progress achieved by implementing targeted policies and programmes; (2) teaching of the languages of ethnic minorities is reduced in school programmes to a few hours per week or relegated to extracurricular classes, and there are insufficient human and financial resources for teaching these languages in schools and insufficient availability of school textbooks; (3) only a few members of ethnic minorities are part of the judiciary; and (4) there is a lack of detailed information on the presence of ethnic minorities in the public sector, elected bodies, and decision-making and high-ranking positions, particularly among women (CERD/C/AZE/CO/10-12, 22 September 2022, paragraphs 6, 24 and 26). The Committee therefore requests the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment of members of ethnic and national minorities and stateless persons, in education, vocational training and employment, including in engaging in their traditional activities; (ii) collect and analyse information on their situation in the labour market, as well as on the impact of the measures previously implemented in this regard; and (iii) provide such information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee notes that the Government neither provides the requested information to allow it to assess the gender wage gap in the country, nor does it indicate the steps taken to determine the underlying causes for wage differentials between women and men, and the measures taken to address these differentials. It also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), that concerns remain over: (1) the disproportionately high unemployment rate among women, notwithstanding their higher level of educational attainment; (2) the continued occupational segregation in the labour market; (3) the concentration of women in low-wage jobs in the formal and informal sectors; and (4) the large amount of unpaid and unrecognized work done by women, which does not count towards their eligibility for retirement and other work-related benefits (CEDAW/C/BHS/CO/6, 14 November 2018, paragraph 35). The Committee requests, once again, the Government to take all the necessary steps to: (i) determine and address the underlying reasons for wage differentials between men and women, such as occupational gender segregation; and (ii) indicate the measures taken or envisaged to address these differentials in various occupations, particularly in the higher-level occupational category of senior officials and managers. To fully assess the extent of the gender pay gap, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide statistical information on the earnings of men and women in the various economic sectors in the public and private sectors as well as any available statistical data on the gender pay gap.

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that efforts are being made towards the adoption of a bill amending the Employment Act. However, it notes with concern the Government's statement that no progress was made to amend section 6 of the Employment Act, 2001, which unduly limits the scope of "work of equal value" to work performed in the same establishment, requiring substantially the same skill, effort and responsibility, and which is performed under similar working conditions. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that "work of equal value" for women and men can: (1) be performed under different working conditions; (2) require different professional skills; (3) require different levels of effort; and (4) involve different responsibilities. When determining the value of different jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor taken into consideration. Determining the value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account together. It also recalls that the application of the Convention's principle is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the same establishment or enterprise. It allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or enterprises, or between different employers. In this regard, the Committee refers to paragraphs 672–677 and 697 of its General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012. Recalling that the Committee has been asking the Government to bring its legislation in line with the requirements of the Convention since 2004, it once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) amend section 6 of the Employment Act, 2001, in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; (ii) ensure that the legislation allows for the comparison not only of jobs in the same establishment and requiring substantially the same skills, efforts and responsibility, and performed under similar working conditions, but also of work of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value, and provides for a broad definition of "remuneration" as set out in Article 1(a) of the Convention; and (iii) provide information on the progress achieved to this end.

Article 2. Determining rates of remuneration. Public service. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government, including the Government of Bahamas Salaries Book for 2016, which indicates the applicable pay scales for employment in the civil service, and the Human Resources Policies Document (2017). From the information provided, the Committee notes that it remains unclear how the "minimum of the salary scale" is determined. The Committee therefore asks the Government to: (i) provide information on the manner in which the "salary scales" are determined in the civil service, including on the method and criteria used to establish them; and (ii) provide a copy of the most recent Salaries Book.

Articles 2(2)(c) and 4. Collective agreements. Cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the repeated indication from the Government that it does not have anything to report on this point and requests the Government to: (i) take measures to encourage the social partners to discuss the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value and to include provisions to that effect in the collective agreements; (ii) provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard; and (iii) provide copies of collective agreements which apply the principle of the Convention.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. Recalling that the concept of "equal value" requires some method of measuring and comparing the relative value of different jobs and that there needs to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria, the Committee once again requests the Government to take steps to: (i) develop and use objective job evaluation methods; and (ii) provide for objective job evaluation including the time frames proposed for their implementation.

Awareness-raising and enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there have not been any courts of law or tribunals that have handed down any decisions with regard to the principle of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee refers to paragraphs 870 and 871 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions. The Committee asks the Government to: (i) examine whether the applicable substantive and procedural provisions, in practice, allow claims to be brought successfully; (ii) take measures to raise awareness of the relevant legislation, to enhance the capacity of the competent authorities, including judges, labour inspectors and other public officials, to identify and address cases of discrimination and unequal pay; and (iii) provide information on any activities undertaken in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee takes note of the Government's statement, in its report, that the National Tripartite Council and the Department of Labour are reviewing the Employment Act with the hope of prohibiting discrimination on the basis of all the grounds specified in Article 1(1)(a). However, the Committee notes with concern that the Government has been referring to its intent to amend the law to this effect since 2012 and that no improvement has been reached so far to include "colour", "national extraction" and "social origin" in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination. The Committee recalls that where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to amend the Employment Act of 2001 accordingly so as to include the grounds of "colour", "national extraction" and "social origin". In the meantime, it asks the Government to provide: (i) information on the specific steps taken to ensure protection against direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation, in practice, on the basis of the above grounds; and (ii) a copy of any judicial decision relating to cases of discrimination in employment and occupation.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the ratification, by the Government, of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) in November 2022. The Committee further notes that, according to section 26 of the Sexual Offences Act 2010, is guilty of the offence of sexual harassment: (1) a prospective employer who importunes or solicits sexual favours from another person; (2) any person in a position of authority over, or being a co-worker of, another person in any place of employment and who importunes or solicits sexual favours from that person; or (3) any person who importunes or solicits from a person in a position of authority any benefit or advantage against the promise of sexual favours. The Committee recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 792). The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the above-mentioned amendment of the Employment Act will also include provisions: (i) defining and prohibiting sexual harassment at work in all its forms (quid pro quo and hostile environment), in relation to all aspects of employment; (ii) covering all workers in all economic sectors; and (iii) envisaging the adoption and implementation of prevention measures and complaint, investigation and penalty mechanisms at the enterprise level. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the number, nature and outcome of complaints filed on the basis of section 26 of the Sexual Offences Act 2010, and the penalties imposed; and (ii) any preventive and awareness-raising measures implemented, in cooperation with the employers' and workers' organizations, to combat sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Department of Labour is developing a Gender Unit under the guidance of the Organization of American States, geared towards fostering awareness of employment inequalities and encouraging employers to create safe working environments for all employees. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it has created an International Labour Relations Unit, dedicated to liaising with international bodies to ensure awareness of all issues relative to persons in the world of work, including gender, and that this creates the framework to ensure that the gender divide in traditionally male jobs is lessened. The Committee notes that no further information is provided: (1) to indicate how it is addressing occupational segregation between men and women in practice, including through the activities of the International Labour Relations Unit; and (2) in reply to its previous requests. It notes, from the 2019 Labour Force Survey, the persisting occupational segregation in the country: 510 women and 18,790 men working in the construction sector; 22,860 women and 16,855 men working in hospitality sector, and 6,290 women and 12,300 men working on transport, storage and communication. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to: (i) provide detailed information on the measures taken to address the occupational segregation of men and women and to promote women's participation in a wider range of training courses, including those traditionally undertaken by men; and (ii) indicate, including by means of statistics disaggregated by sex, the results achieved by the adoption of any measures to promote women's access to a wider variety of jobs which have better career prospects in the public and private sectors.

Article 5. Special measures. In the absence of information provided by the Government in this regard, the Committee reiterates its request that it indicate whether it has taken or intends to take positive measures pursuant to article 26(4)(d) of the Constitution, to promote the employment of women or certain disadvantaged groups and to provide information on any measures adopted in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Gender wage gap. For a number of years, the Committee has been asking the Government to adopt measures in order to address the persistent gender wage gap. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the gender wage gap has decreased from 23.4 per cent in 2014 to 21.5 per cent in 2016. It notes with regret that the gender wage gap increased back to 25.4 per cent in 2017. The Committee once again notes the persistent gender wage gaps in certain sectors: for example, in 2017, women's average monthly wage was 76.9 per cent of that of men in industry, 74.7 per cent in finance sector and 76.3 per cent in repair of cars and motorcycles. It notes that the gender wage gap tends to be higher in sectors traditionally dominated by men and lower in sectors in which women dominate (such as in agriculture, where women's average monthly wage was 88.7 per cent of that of men). The Government once again states that the existing gender wage gap is primarily due to the high proportion of men working in sectors of the economy that feature "unsafe and unhealthy" working conditions and intensive work and therefore high wages, such as industry, construction, transport and communication. In order to increase women's employment opportunities, including in highly paid sectors of the economy, the Government indicates that it is revising the list of heavy manual jobs and jobs with "unsafe and/or unhealthy" working conditions in which women may not be employed, in accordance with Decision No.35 of 12 June 2014 of the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection. In this regard, the Committee recalls the importance of taking measures to protect the safety and health of all workers regardless of their gender, while taking account of gender differences with regard to specific risks to their health and refers to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Government also indicates that, since gender mainstreaming in education and the media is an effective tool for eliminating gender stereotypes, various aspects of training and education on gender issues are included in professional development and retraining courses for teachers who work with children, adolescents, and young people. The Committee asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to reduce the increasing gender wage gap and its underlying causes, including any prevailing stereotypes regarding women's preferences or suitability for certain jobs, for example through awareness-raising activities and sensitization initiatives aimed at deconstructing views attributing specific skills, roles and occupations to girls, boys, men or women which are key to promoting the presence of more women in male-dominated sectors and jobs, as well as of more men in female-dominated sectors and jobs. It asks the Government to continue to provide: (i) information on the measures taken or envisaged to improve the access of women to a wider range of job opportunities, including in higher-level positions and in sectors in which they are currently prohibited to work in; and (ii) up-to-date statistics on the wages of women and men, including sex disaggregated data by industry and occupational category.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee recalls that for a number of years now it has drawn the Government's attention to the need to amend section 14 of the Labour Code as the definition of discrimination it contains (any "other circumstances not related to a worker's professional abilities and not determined by the nature of his or her professional role") does not expressly prohibit indirect discrimination. It notes with concern that the Government reiterates that this definition includes indirect discrimination. The Committee once again urges the Government to amend section 14 of the Labour Code to provide for an explicit prohibition of indirect discrimination, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also reiterates its request to the Government that it provide copies of any judicial or administrative decisions relating to cases of indirect discrimination in violation of section 14 of the Labour Code.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with concern the Government's statement that it considers section 170 of the Penal Code, which provides for criminal liability for sexual harassment and violations of sexual freedom, to provide an adequate protection against sexual harassment in the workplace, despite the Committee's indications that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in sexual harassment cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. Likewise, the Committee considers that addressing sexual harassment only through criminal proceedings is normally not sufficient, due to the sensitivity of the issue and the higher burden of proof, which is harder to meet, especially if there are no witnesses (which is often the case) (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 792). The Committee therefore urges once again the Government to strengthen the legislative protection against sexual harassment in the workplace, both by employers and co-workers, and to indicate any progress made in this respect. In the meantime, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate any practical measures taken to address both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment, including through awareness-raising activities.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Supreme Court has examined the preliminary draft Labour Code and made observations which have been examined by the Government. The Government also indicates that: (1) a re-examination of the whole Labour Code is planned; and (2) the draft Labour Code which is being updated takes account of social origin as a ground of discrimination. In view of the foregoing, the Committee asks the Government to take the opportunity provided by the re-examination of the draft Labour Code to ensure that all forms of direct and indirect discrimination based, as a minimum, on all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (including colour, national extraction and social origin) are included in the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the Labour Code reform and to send a copy of the text of the new Code once it has been adopted.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that, like the previous definition, the new definition of sexual harassment contained in new section 548 of Act No. 2018-16 issuing the Penal Code, as amended and completed by Act No. 2021-11 of 20 December 2021 issuing special provisions for the punishment of gender-related offences and for the protection of women, still only covers one form of sexual harassment (quid pro quo sexual harassment). In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) even though this new definition does not specifically refer to harassment arising from a work environment which is hostile, intimidating, degrading or offensive, it should be pointed out that new section 549 (which provides that any form of sexual harassment constitutes an offence) criminalizes all forms of harassment without exception; and (2) data on sexual harassment cases which have been prosecuted in the courts have been requested from the Ministry of Justice and Legislation but have not yet been supplied. In view of the foregoing, the Committee regrets the fact that the Government has not taken the opportunity provided by the adoption of Act No. 2021-11 to include harassment arising from a work environment which is hostile, intimidating, degrading, offensive or humiliating in the definition of sexual harassment. Furthermore, the Committee welcomes the protective clauses introduced by Act No. 2021-11, amending Act No. 2017-05 of 29 August 2017 establishing the conditions and procedure for recruitment, job placement and contract termination, adding a new subparagraph to section 27, under which any resignation or agreement of the parties resulting from sexual harassment shall be deemed to be a dismissal, and to section 30, under which any dismissal following sexual harassment shall always be deemed to be wrongful when these offences are established by the competent criminal court. The Committee once again requests the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to amend the definition of sexual harassment contained in new section 548 of Act No. 2018-16 issuing the Penal Code, as amended in 2021; and (ii) clarify how the provisions of the Penal Code, in particular the above-mentioned section, align with those of Act No. 2006-19 of 2006 on punishing sexual harassment and protecting victims (in particular section 1, which defines sexual harassment). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 27(6) and 30(2) of Act No. 2017-05 in practice (cases of resignation, dismissal or other forms of contract termination resulting from sexual harassment). In order to protect workers effectively, the Committee once again asks the Government to: (i) include in the Labour Code a clear definition and explicit prohibition of sexual harassment in all its forms (quid pro quo and hostile work environment harassment); and (ii) adopt specific provisions for effective mechanisms to prevent, sanction and remedy sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue providing information on: (i) the measures taken to raise awareness among workers and employers about sexual harassment; and (ii) any cases of sexual harassment dealt with by labour inspectors or magistrates.

Article 2. Measures to promote equality between men and women. Private sector. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government, which had indicated that the issue of gender parity was one of its priorities, to continue to take specific measures, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, to combat social burdens and sexist stereotypes and prejudices concerning the vocational aptitudes and abilities of women, and the role of women and men in employment and in society at large, especially in rural settings, and to take measures to combat horizontal and vertical segregation in the labour market, whereby women are confined to certain sectors or occupations, which are often poorly paid, or to subordinate posts. Noting that the Government merely states that it takes note of the recommendation, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to promote gender equality in the private sector and to provide information on the measures adopted to this end. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the study on equal opportunities which had been envisaged in order to draw up an action plan in this regard.

Public service. The Committee notes the Government's indications that recruitment in the public service takes place according to equitable and impartial procedures, in accordance with the General Public Service Regulations, and recruitment competitions do not exclude any male or female candidate. It also notes the data disaggregated by sex which indicate that only 22 per cent of ministers and 13 per cent of heads of cabinet are women. The Committee regrets the fact that the Government has not provided data on public service staff disaggregated by sex other than those relating to these high-level posts. The Committee invites the Government to examine the composition of the public service workforce in the light of the principle of gender equality in order to determine the actions to be taken to achieve genuine equality between men and women and ensure better representation of women at all levels of the public service, including through training. The Committee also requests the Government to provide available statistics, disaggregated by sex, on the staff of the public service at all levels of responsibility.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Gender pay gap. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on various measures to promote gender equality in employment and occupation, and also the statistical information on access to various levels of education for girls and women. In order to be able to identify trends in the gender pay gap in the country, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on the remuneration received by women and men, if possible disaggregated by branch of activity and occupation, and on any data available on the gender pay gap.

Recalling that one of the underlying causes of the gender pay gap is often gender-related occupational segregation (where women tend to be concentrated in certain jobs and occupations which, in turn, are often characterized by lower pay and worse professional prospects), the Committee refers in this regard to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Government reports the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 4401 of 2020, which provides that "the State shall promote the entry of women into employment and also the same remuneration for women and men for work of equal value" (section 5(I)) and that "it shall be prohibited to consider differences or justify the existence of a wage gap through aspects directly or indirectly linked to the fact of being a woman, on grounds of pregnancy, maternity, paternity, breastfeeding or family responsibilities" (section 7(I)). This Decree is applicable in entities of the State and other public institutions, and to natural and legal persons in the private sector that have the status of employer (section 2(II)).

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Government indicates that, under Supreme Decree No. 4401 of 2020, work of equal value is defined as "work which has substantial similarities in duties, effort, skill and responsibility, and which is performed under similar conditions" (section 3(b)). The Committee observes that this definition includes several of the factors which the Committee considers quite appropriate for objective job evaluation, such as effort, responsibilities and working conditions. However, it observes that this definition does not include qualifications as an evaluation factor and appears to be limited to work performed "under similar conditions", which would be too restrictive in terms of the principle of the Convention (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 675 and 700; and the ILO's "Equal pay: An introductory guide", pages 31–32 and 38–46). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which Decree No. 4401 of 2020 is applied in practice and, in particular: (i) indicate whether objective job evaluations have been carried out or whether a specific procedure has been established for this; (ii) clarify whether "qualifications" are taken into account as a factor for comparing work of the same value and in what way; and (iii) provide information on any measures taken to enable a comparison of the value of work done under different conditions.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a total of ten cases involving the levelling up of wages were handled pursuant to Supreme Decree No. 4401. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any cases involving the levelling up of wages that have occurred pursuant to Supreme Decree No. 4401 and their outcome.

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee notes that there is a lack of availability of up-to-date statistical information disaggregated by sex regarding the remuneration received by women and men, and their participation in the labour market. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that appropriate data and statistics are crucial in determining the nature, extent and causes of unequal remuneration, to set priorities and design appropriate measures, to monitor and evaluate the impact of such measures and make any necessary adjustments in order to better promote the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 891). To allow an assessment to be made regarding the gender pay gap in the public and private sectors, the Committee asks the Government to: (i) collect and compile statistical information disaggregated by sex regarding the distribution of women and men in different occupational categories or sectors of the economy, and their respective levels of earnings; (ii) conduct research or studies on the gender pay gap, if any, and its underlying causes; and (iii) provide such data and information. The Committee asks the Government to consider taking measures to promote equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, including measures to address any underlying causes of pay differentials, such as vertical and horizontal job segregation and gender stereotypes.

Articles 1, 2(2)(a) and 3. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Definition of remuneration. Objective job evaluation. Legislative framework. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been drawing the Government's attention to the lack of legislative expression of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It notes that the Employment Act only provides that “[i]n formulating its recommendations to the Minister, the [Labour Advisory] Board shall take into account [...] the desirability of eliminating discrimination between the sexes in respect of wages for equal work” (section 133(2)(b)), which is narrower than the principle of the Convention. With a view to ensuring that women and men have a legal basis for asserting their right to equal remuneration for work of equal value with their employers and before the competent authorities, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to review the Employment Act, to: (i) give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; (ii) introduce a broad definition of the term “remuneration” in line with Article 1(a) of the Convention; and (iii) introduce provisions promoting the use of objective job evaluation methods free from gender bias, to fully implement the principle of the Convention. It also asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection from discrimination. Grounds of discrimination. Aspects of employment covered. Legislative framework. The Committee recalls that the 2010 Amendment to the Employment Act of 1982 (restricting the grounds on which employers may terminate a contract of employment): (1) removed the grounds of “national extraction” and “political opinion” from the list of prohibited grounds of termination of employment (section 23(d)); (2) inserted three new prohibited grounds (sexual orientation, health status and disability); and (3) inserted a provision prohibiting termination of the employment contract on the ground of “any other reason which does not affect the employee’s ability to perform that employee’s duties under the contract of employment” (new section 23(e)). It also recalls the “Code of Good Practice: Employment Discrimination” published in 2008, the purpose of which is to eliminate discrimination at the workplace and promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that there was no change in the labour legislation. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to review the Employment Act of 1982 as amended to ensure that: (i) section 23(d) prohibits explicitly discrimination based on “political opinion” and “national extraction”; and (ii) the protection against discrimination is extended to all aspects of employment and occupation, including recruitment and terms and conditions of employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide updated information on: (i) the steps taken to review the Employment Act in this regard; (ii) the extent to which the “Code of Good Practice: Employment Discrimination” is applied, in particular regarding workplace policies formulated by employers; and (iii) the application of section 23(e) of the Employment Act by the administrative or judicial authorities, indicating the grounds invoked and the sanctions applied.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee has consistently stated that sexual harassment is a serious manifestation of sex discrimination and is to be addressed within the context of the Convention. In this regard, it recalls the absence of legislative provisions prohibiting sexual harassment in employment and occupation in the private sector, while including such provision in respect of the public service (section 38 of the Public Service Act, 2008). It further recalls the “Code of Good Practice: Sexual Harassment at the Workplace”, which was also published in 2008 and provides guidance to employers as well as the National Strategy to End Gender-Based Violence in Botswana for the period 2014–2020. Referring to paragraphs 789 to 794 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee asks the Government to: (i) consider including in the labour legislation a clear definition and prohibition of sexual harassment (both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment) in employment and occupation as well as preventive measures and remedies; and (ii) provide specific information on any practical measures taken or envisaged to prevent and address sexual harassment against both men and women workers, such as awareness-raising campaigns or research, in the framework of the National Strategy to End Gender-Based Violence or otherwise. Recalling that the Code of Good Practice provides that employers should establish procedures to lodge sexual harassment grievances, the Committee asks the Government to indicate if such procedures have been put in place by employers since the adoption of the Code and, if so, to provide examples of such procedures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that the 2008 Labour Code, in the same way as the 2004 Labour Code, does not clearly reflect the principle of the Convention since, even though it explicitly establishes the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value (section 182(3)), it also provides for equal wages for workers irrespective of sex “under equal conditions of work, vocational qualifications and output” (section 182(1)). The Committee drew attention to the fact that the coexistence of these two provisions may be a source of confusion or even conflict when applying the principle in practice. The Committee notes that the Office has been providing technical assistance for more than 15 years with regard to bringing the legislation into conformity with the international labour standards ratified by Burkina Faso, in particular: (1) in 2007, when it provided a “technical note on Act No. 033-2004 issuing the Labour Code” before the latter was revised in 2008; (2) in 2014, when it supported the “study on the alignment of national law and practice with the ILO fundamental and governance Conventions” and a “national validation workshop” in relation to this study, which concluded with the adoption of a road map accompanied by a time-bound action plan; and (3) in 2017, when it provided “technical comments on the bill issuing the Labour Code”. In this regard, the Committee notes that a draft bill issuing a new Labour Code was adopted by the Council of Ministers on 7 September 2022 and was due to be submitted to Parliament for adoption. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the new Labour Code and to provide a copy if it has been adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the new Labour Code will take account of the technical comments provided by the Office at the Government’s request, particularly with regard to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value.

Article 2. Application of the principle in practice. In its reports, the Government indicates that, according to figures available in 2018, the average gender wage gap in the public sector is approximately 20 per cent and that, in the formal private sector, more than one third of women are paid less than the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) compared with 17.8 per cent of men. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that this situation does not mean that women are victims of discrimination but that they are employed in sectors of employment which are less well paid than sectors where men are employed or that they are frequently engaged in the informal economy. The Government indicates that, in order to tackle these inequalities, it has implemented a number of specific programmes for women: (1) the “Subprogramme for increasing revenue and promoting decent employment for women and young persons” (PARPED); (2) the “Special job creation programme for young persons and women” (PSCE/JF); and (3) the “Programme for promoting economic autonomy for young persons and women” (PAE-JF). The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the impact of these programmes and on the activity of the special kiosk for the promotion of women’s entrepreneurship, which has enabled 25,000 women to benefit from financing. The Committee underlines the fact that horizontal occupational segregation (that is, channeling men and women into different types of activity and employment) and vertical occupational segregation (that is, different levels of responsibility for men and women) are indeed causes of discrimination of which women are mostly the victims (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 710–714). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to specifically combat occupational segregation in the labour market and thereby enable women to have access to better paid jobs, occupations and positions, into sectors of activity dominated by men, and to make occupational gender diversity a priority in its employment policy.

Article 3. Objective evaluation of jobs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the classification process launched before 2018 with a view to the preparation of an operational directory of occupations and jobs (ROME), which aimed to establish the basis for the objective evaluation of jobs, has been interrupted because of budgetary constraints. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, to finalize a method for the evaluation of jobs based on objective and non-discriminatory criteria which go beyond the qualifications and experience required for a job, and to promote the use of this method in both the public and the private sectors.

Monitoring and enforcement. The Government indicates that labour inspectors' control sheets do not enable information to be collected on infringements recorded according to sex and occupational category but that it is planned to revise the control sheets in order to take account of these observations. Recalling the importance of gender-specific data in combating discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that this information can be collected by labour inspectors when they record infringements, particularly in connection with equal pay for work of equal value. The Committee invites the Government also to provide information on any court rulings dealing with the gender pay gap.

Statistics. The Committee notes that the statistics communicated by the Government do not provide details regarding the number and type of infringements recorded. However, it notes the Government's indication that women, being the most disadvantaged in terms of education and training, are the worst affected by unemployment in urban areas; that the gender pay gap is even more pronounced in jobs in agriculture; and that young women have little access to the "modern" sector (only 3.8 per cent are in this sector compared with 9 per cent of young men). The Committee invites the Government to continue its efforts to collect statistical data disaggregated by sex and refers the Government to its general observation of 2006 on the Convention, which provides guidance on useful types of statistical data. It requests the Government to continue providing available statistical data, disaggregated by sex.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Gender pay gap and occupational gender segregation, including employment in the informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, regarding the adoption of the National Plan for Gender Equality for 2021-2025 (PNIG), through Resolution No. 1/2022 of 5 January 2022, which sets as main objective the achievement of women's autonomy in three areas, including economic autonomy and autonomy in decision-making. It notes that the PNIG acknowledges that women: (1) still have a greater burden of unpaid work; (2) are poorer; (3) work mostly in the informal sector; and (4) consequently lack social protection coverage and access to finance. As regards the concentration of women in the informal economy, with low salaries and lack of social protection coverage, the Committee notes that, according to the National Institute of Statistics (INE), excluding agriculture, in 2022, more women than men were still in informal employment (45.9 per cent compared to 43.2 per cent, respectively). Observing the lack of information provided by the Government on the implementation of the National Strategy for 2017–20 to encourage the transition from informal to formal employment, the Committee however notes that, in 2021, in the context of the “Jov@Emprego” project, implemented in collaboration with the ILO, the “Sucupira50 pilot project” was implemented with a view to strengthen the capacities of 50 women entrepreneurs and support the growth and formalization of their businesses. Welcoming this initiative, the Committee notes that the Second National Sustainable Development Strategy for 2022-2026 (PEDS II) highlights the difficulties faced by women in accessing the formal labour market which constitute an important barrier to women’s economic empowerment. According to the INE, the employment rate of women decreased from 45.5 per cent in 2017 to 43.3 per cent in 2022 (compared to 58.7 per cent for men) and remains particularly low in rural areas (29.2 per cent in 2022). The Committee notes the persistent occupational gender segregation with women being still overrepresented in certain sectors, such as trade (22.3 per cent), hospitality (13.1 per cent), domestic work (12.9 per cent) and education (10.4 per cent). In 2022, women were still mainly represented in elementary occupations (33.8 per cent) and personal services (31.0 per cent), while only 3.1 per cent of them were employed in decision-making positions (INE, Continuous Multi Objective Survey - IMC, 2022). The Committee further notes, from the statistical information provided by the Government, that, in the private sector, women are mostly concentrated in lowest remuneration levels (78.0 per cent of women in the four lowest remuneration levels compared to 64.5 per cent of men; while only 3.1 per cent of women were in the four highest remuneration levels compared to 4.4 per cent of men). In the public sector, a higher proportion of women are in higher remuneration levels, while this proportion is still lower than those for men (18.8 per cent of women in the four highest remuneration levels compared to 25.7 per cent of men). Welcoming the efforts made by the Government to provide information on the distribution of men and women in the different remuneration levels, the Committee observes that the data provided does not reflect the average remuneration of men and women or the overall magnitude of the gender pay gap, which does not enable the Committee to fully assess the extent and nature of wage differentials between women and men in practice. It notes, from the 2022 Global Gender Gap Report from the World Economic Forum, that the estimated earned income of women was still 29.2 per cent lower than those of men, in 2022. In light of the substantial wage differentials between women and men and the persistent lack of legislation that fully reflects the principle of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to take proactive measures in order to identify and address the underlying causes of pay differentials between men and women, such as occupational gender segregation and gender stereotypes, in both the formal and informal economy, and to promote women’s access to a wider range of jobs with career prospects and higher pay, in particular in rural areas. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures implemented to that end, including in collaboration with employers’ and workers’ organizations; (ii) any programmes or activities implemented to enhance the transition from informal to formal employment, which will be especially important for women; and (iii) the earnings of men and women, in both the public and private sectors, if possible disaggregated by sector of economic activity.

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. Recalling the absence of legal provisions that fully reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that several awareness-raising activities have been carried out regarding gender equality and equal pay, including in collaboration with the ILO in the context of the Trade for Decent Work Project (T4DW). The Government adds that, in June 2022, a tripartite workshop was held, in collaboration with the ILO, in order to formulate a roadmap on equal pay. Welcoming this information, the Committee however observes that no information is provided on the implementation of the roadmap. It further notes that, in its last national report published in 2020, the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenship (CNDHC) specifically recommended the incorporation of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value into the Labour Code, in line with ILO Convention No. 100.

The Committee notes that, in March 2023, the Social Concertation Council (CCS) reaffirmed the need for a third revision process of the Labour Code and that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value was invoked during a parliamentary debate on the revision of the Labour Code on parenthood, as a means to address gender inequalities in the labour market. The Committee again draws the Government's attention to the fact that article 62 of the Constitution and section 16 of the Labour Code are not sufficient to ensure the full application of the principle enshrined in the Convention which is fundamental to tackling occupational gender segregation in the labour market, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompassing work of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 672–675). The Committee urges the Government to take the opportunity of the revision of the Labour Code to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any progress made in that regard and the provisions adopted; (ii) any proactive measures taken to raise awareness of the meaning and scope of application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value among workers, employers and their organizations, as well as among law enforcement officials; and (iii) the manner in which section 15(1)(b) of the Labour Code, which provides that "equality at work" includes the right to receive a special compensation which is not allocated to all workers but which is based, among other grounds, on sex, is implemented in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee recalls that section 15(1)(a) of the Labour Code does not provide for protection against discrimination on the ground of "national extraction", nor does it define and prohibit indirect discrimination in employment and occupation. In this regard, it notes the Government's statement, in reply to the Committee's previous comments, that no information is available to present an overview of the manner in which article 24 of the Constitution, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of "lineage" and "origin", has been interpreted in practice. The Committee, however, notes the Government's indication, in its report, that, in 2021, the National Commission for Human Rights and Citizenships (CNDHC) elaborated, in collaboration with various institutions and organizations, a draft legislation that aims specifically at prohibiting direct, indirect and multiple discrimination, including on the ground of "national extraction". The Committee welcomes this information and notes that, according to the information available on the CNDHC's website, this draft legislation was forwarded to the National Assembly in March 2022. The Committee asks the Government to take every necessary steps to ensure that workers are protected, both in law and practice, from both direct and indirect discrimination on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including national extraction. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, in particular regarding the draft anti-discrimination legislation elaborated by the CNCDH.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. Regarding the implementation of measures and programmes undertaken in order to combat stereotypes and discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction, in particular with regard to remuneration of migrant workers which was considerably lower than those of nationals, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the assessment of the implementation of the Second National Action Plan for Immigration and Social Inclusion of Immigrants (2018–20) is being finalized and that a Third National Action Plan is still being prepared. The Committee notes that the High Authority for Immigration (AAI) replaced the Directorate General for Immigration in July 2020, under the terms of Decree-Law No. 55/2020 of 6 July 2020 and is responsible for coordinating and implementing immigration policies and measures, with special focus on creating and monitoring an integrated system for integration of immigrants. In 2022, the AAI launched a website with information on immigrants' rights available in four languages, as well as a radio programme on existing legal instruments to prevent and address racial discrimination. In that regard, the Committee welcomes the fact that the Second National Action Plan for Human Rights and Citizenship (2017–22) provides for a specific awareness-raising campaign on racism, xenophobia and discrimination against immigrants in order to decrease the number of situations of racial discrimination or xenophobia. It further notes that in its National Programme for 2021-26, the Government plans to: (1) consolidate the structure of the AAI with the effective setting-up of Local Units for Immigration; (2) deepen knowledge on the migratory situation, dynamics and trends in the country and its impact on society and economy; and (3) develop strategies for immigrants in vulnerable situations in order to prevent and address discrimination based on colour, nationality, language, ethnic origin or religion. Welcoming the measures planned by the Government, the Committee however notes that since 2018 no data has been made available regarding employment of immigrants, in particular in the context of the Annual Statistical Survey carried out by the National Institute of Statistics (INE). Recalling that the Labour Code only confers equality of rights and duties to migrant workers in a regular situation and that no protection is explicitly afforded by the national legislation on the ground of "national extraction", it further notes the Government's statement that the CNDHC received complaints whose victims of discrimination were immigrants mostly from African countries but that such complaints represented a small proportion among the total number of cases received annually by the CNDHC. In this regard, the Committee refers to its pending comments on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29). The Committee notes that, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW) expressed concern about: (1) persistent discriminatory attitudes against migrant workers; (2) reports that migrant workers are paid considerably less than their Cabo Verdean counterparts who perform the same work; (3) the fact that alleged violations are rarely investigated; and (4) the fact that alleged perpetrators are not prosecuted or convicted. The CMW also remained seriously concerned about reports that migrant workers employed in the agricultural and fishing sectors, including from China, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Nigeria and Senegal, may be subjected to extremely poor working conditions and be vulnerable to forced labour, and that the General Labour Inspectorate has not detected any situation of forced or compulsory labour in the country (CMW/C/CPV/CO/1-3, 2 June 2022, paragraphs 27, 37 and 45). The Committee notes with concern this information. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take every necessary steps to address stereotypes and prejudices as well as discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction in order to effectively ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, in particular in the agricultural and fishing sectors and regarding their remuneration. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures and programmes implemented in that regard, including in the framework of the National Programme for 2021-26 and any new Immigration and Social Inclusion Action Plan, and any follow-up actions and results; (ii) any public awareness-raising activities undertaken on the relevant legislative provisions, the procedures and remedies available, targeting in particular migrant workers; and (iii) the number, nature and outcome of any cases or complaints of discrimination against migrant workers dealt with by the labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authorities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Articles 1(a) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the definition of “wage” set out in section 103 of the Labour Law of 1997 excludes healthcare, legal family allowance, travel expenses and benefits granted exclusively to help the worker do his or her job, and thus is narrower than the definition of remuneration under the Convention. Noting that the Government’s report does not contain information in response to its previous request, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to amend the Labour Law in order to bring the definition of “wage” in line with Article 1(a) of the Convention for the purpose of applying the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 106 of the Labour Law provides for equal wages for workers for “work of equal conditions, professional skill and output ... regardless of their [...] sex [...]”, which is narrower than the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention. The Committee emphasizes that the concept of “work of equal value” permits a broad scope of comparison, including but going beyond, equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value overall. It further draws the Government’s attention to the fact that “work of equal value” for men and women can: (1) be performed under different working conditions; (2) require different professional skills; (3) require different levels of effort; and (4) involve different responsibilities. When determining the value of different jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor taken into consideration. Determining the value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account together. While factors such as “conditions” and “professional skill” mentioned in section 106 of the Labour Law are clearly relevant in determining the value of jobs for the purpose of equal remuneration, they do not have to be “equal” and may not be sufficient by themselves to assess the overall value of jobs. In addition, the Committee observes that the criteria of “output” relates more to the performance appraisal of the individual worker which is different from the objective job evaluation. In this regard, the Committee stresses the importance of assessing the “value” – that is, namely the worth of a job for the purpose of determining remuneration – through objective job evaluation, which is used to establish classification of jobs and the corresponding salary scales without gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skills, efforts, responsibilities and working conditions. It also makes it clear that differential rates between workers are compatible with the principle of the Convention if they correspond, without regard to sex, to differences determined by such evaluation. Noting that, once again, the Government’s report does not contain information in response to its previous request, the Committee urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is duly reflected in the Labour Law; and (ii) ensure that the determination of work of equal value is based on objective job evaluation, using objective criteria such as qualifications and skills, responsibilities, efforts and working conditions. It asks the Government to provide specific information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour and national extraction. Indigenous peoples. For many years, the Committee has been asking the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that indigenous peoples can engage in their traditional occupations if they so choose, and have access without discrimination to the material goods and services necessary to carry out these occupations, including land and other natural resources. The Committee has solicited, in particular, information on the implementation of the 2001 Land Law, the 2009 Sub-Decree on procedures to register indigenous communal land, as well as the policy on the registration of, and right to use, indigenous communal land, and the policy on indigenous peoples' development. It has also asked for information on the practical application of the Inter-Ministerial Circular No. 001 of 31 May 2011 on interim measures protecting lands of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. The Committee recalls that the above-mentioned legislation and implementing decrees provide for a three-steps procedure to be complied with in order to claim and obtain collective communal land titles for indigenous peoples. They encompass, firstly, the recognition of the community by the Ministry of Rural Development as an indigenous community; secondly, the registration of the said community with the Ministry of Internal Affairs as a legal entity; and, thirdly, the application by the registered community to the Ministry of Land Management, Urban Planning and Construction for the registration of their communal land title. The Committee notes from the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia that: (1) as of 2020, 30 indigenous communities had received collective land titles from the Ministry of Land Management, Urban Planning and Construction; (2) a total of 131 communities received recognition of their status from the Ministry of Interior; (3) 151 communities received recognition of their indigenous identity from the Ministry of Rural Development; and (4) the existing land titling process remains cumbersome and slow to secure protection for indigenous peoples, largely undermining procedural safeguards rendered by current national legislation (A/HRC/45/51, 24 August 2020, paragraphs 32 and 33). The Committee further notes the deep concerns expressed recently by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) about reports of dispossession, displacement and relocation of indigenous peoples from their land and territories, including natural, protected areas that they have traditionally occupied, often without respecting their right to be consulted with a view to obtaining their free, prior and informed consent. The CESCR also expressed concern about the complex and slow process for the registration and demarcation of indigenous peoples' land and the lack of effective mechanisms for protecting their rights related to their lands, territories and resources, particularly when those have not been registered in ongoing land acquisition processes (E/C.12/KHM/CO/2, 27 March 2023, paragraph 14). Furthermore, the Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC) remains concerned about shortcomings in the implementation of the legal framework and safeguards in place for the protection of the right of indigenous peoples to use and occupy their land and territories (CCPR/C/KHM/CO/3, 18 May 2022, paragraph 42). Likewise, the United Nations Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed concerns about the current land titling process, which is too lengthy and bureaucratic and therefore prevents some indigenous groups from being able to efficiently register their collective land (CERD/C/KHM/CO/14-17, 30 January 2020, paragraph 27). Finally, the Committee notes that the Government accepted the recommendation made through the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the Human Rights Council that it should simplify the allocation of community land to indigenous peoples (A/HRC/41/17/Add.1, 18 April 2019, paragraph 2).

The Committee recalls that unsecure land tenure and biased approaches towards the traditional occupations engaged in by certain ethnic groups, which are often perceived as outdated, unproductive or environmentally harmful, continue to pose serious challenges to the enjoyment of equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of occupation, for many of them. It emphasizes that promoting and ensuring access to material goods and services required to carry out an occupation, such as secure access to land, and access to credit and resources, without discrimination, should be part of the objectives of a national policy on equality. Any discriminatory law and practice affecting access to and performance of an occupation, contrary to the equality policy, must be repealed in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention (see 2018 general observation of the Committee on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction, page 6). The Committee also wishes to stress that one of the main issues faced by indigenous peoples relates to the lack of recognition of their rights to land, territories and resources, undermining their right to engage in traditional occupations. Recognition of the ownership and possession of the lands they traditionally occupy and access to their communal lands and natural resources for traditional activities is essential (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 768). In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective steps to ensure that indigenous communities enjoy equal opportunity and treatment in respect of the occupation of their choice. These steps should cover their access to productive resources, market facilities and inputs, such as technology and financial services, and, in particular, to the lands and resources that they traditionally occupy or use. Pending the issuance of the land titles, whether under the Inter-Ministerial Circular No. 001 of 31 May 2011 or otherwise, the Committee requests the Government to adopt measures to protect their access to and use of such lands and resources. It encourages the Government, in cooperation with the social partners and the interested groups, to make an assessment of the current situation of indigenous peoples in employment and occupation, including in the context of local or rural development programmes affecting their activities, and the main obstacles they face to the full enjoyment of equality of opportunity and treatment. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed information on the number of: (i) requests for land titling filed by the registered communities; (ii) land titles issued under the relevant legislation; and (iii) communities registered, and awaiting the issuance of their land titles. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO with regard to the matters raised above.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. As in the past, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the legislation in a number of provinces and territories does not give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. More specifically, it recalls that: (1) the legislation in Nunavut does not appear to contain any provision regarding the principle of the Convention; (2) the Human Rights Acts applicable in Alberta, British Columbia, Newfoundland and Labrador and the Northwest Territories limit the application of the principle of equal remuneration to the exercise of the "same", "similar" or "substantially similar" work; and (3) the Pay Equity Acts in force in Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, while recognizing the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value in the public sector, do not apply in the private sector. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report does not provide information on any initiatives undertaken in these jurisdictions with a view to giving full legislative expression to the concept of work of equal value. The Committee once again urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation gives full expression to the concept of work of equal value, so that the principle of the Convention is applied in all provinces and territories, in both the public and private sectors. It therefore once again asks the Government to provide detailed information on the concrete steps taken, in each province and territory, to ensure conformity with the Convention, including any consultations with the workers' and employers' representatives, as well as the representatives of the provinces and territories.

Article 2. Legislative developments. Federal level. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that, on 31 August 2021, the Federal Pay Equity Act as well as the Pay Equity Regulations entered into force. The Pay Equity Act requires federally regulated private and public sector employers with at least 10 employees to develop, periodically review and update a pay equity plan (sections 6, 12 and 13). It also requires companies with unionised employees, as well as companies with 100 or more employees, to establish a pay equity committee composed of employer's and employees' representatives, whose role consists in developing and reviewing a pay equity plan (sections 16, 17 and 19). The plans established by the employers or the pay equity committees must first identify "job classes" (i.e. positions with similar duties, responsibilities and qualifications) that are predominately male or female, then determine the compensation associated with each job class according to the value of the work performed (sections 31–46). If pay gaps are identified between predominately male job classes and predominately female job classes, employers must implement ongoing wage adjustments as needed and make retroactive lump-sum payments for the gaps identified (sections 47–63). Furthermore, the Pay Equity Act establishes a Pay Equity Commissioner (section 104), who has the power, among other things, to order an employer to conduct internal audits (sections 118–124), issue administrative monetary penalties for non-compliance with the law (sections 125–146), as well as investigate complaints alleging contravention of the Pay Equity Act and issue orders to implement a pay equity plan or to pay compensation and interest (sections 149–160). While the Committee welcomes these legislative developments, it observes that the provisions of the Pay Equity Act do not apply to the governments of Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut, until a date that may be specified by the Governor (section 10). The Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the application of the federal Pay Equity Act in practice, including information on the number of companies covered by this Act and the number of companies that have proceeded to wage adjustments or retroactive lump-sum payments in application of pay equity plans; (ii) communicate statistical data on the number, nature and outcome of any complaints submitted to the Pay Equity Commissioner, as well as on any penalties imposed or compensations awarded; and (iii) provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to extend the application of the Pay Equity Act to the governments of Yukon, the Northwest Territories and Nunavut.

Provinces. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in Quebec, the Pay Equity Act was amended in April 2019, with a view to improving the pay equity audit process conducted by employers with at least ten employees every five years. The amendments provide, among other things, that the correction of the gender pay gaps identified during the pay equity audit process must now be retroactive to the date that led to the pay gap. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, in April 2022, Ontario has enacted the Supporting Retention in Public Services Act (SRPSA), which authorises the provision of funding for employers to enhance the compensation paid to employees for the purpose of supporting public services. The Government explains that, while the SRPSA does not change the existing pay equity obligations of employers, it deems wage enhancements to be attributable towards pay equity gaps that may exist to help public sector employers to meet their obligations under the Pay Equity Act. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the application in practice of the 2019 amendments to Quebec's Pay Equity Act, including information on the number of companies which have proceeded to retroactive corrections of gender pay gaps identified during the pay equity audit process; and (ii) the impact of Ontario's 2022 Supporting Retention in Public Services Act (SRPSA) on helping public sector employers to fulfil their obligations under the Pay Equity Act. Please also provide up-to-date information on any other legislative measures taken or envisaged at the provincial level to ensure the application of the principle of equal pay for men and women for work of equal value.

Equal pay for work of equal value of residential welfare workers in Quebec. Indirect discrimination. The Committee takes note of the collective agreement signed by the Quebec's Minister of Health and Social Services and the RESSAQ in February 2022, which includes provisions on the job classification methods applied to residential welfare workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the grounds of political opinion and social origin. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Act (CHRA) does not give full expression to the principle of the Convention, as it does not prohibit discrimination based on social origin (or social condition) and political opinion in employment and occupation. It has also repeatedly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation applicable to specific provinces and territories, since: (1) the legislation in Alberta, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Nunavut, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Yukon does not include "social origin" (or "social condition") as a prohibited ground of discrimination in employment and occupation (in Manitoba, it is the ground of "social disadvantage" that is prohibited); and (2) the legislation in Alberta, Nunavut, Ontario and Saskatchewan does not prohibit discrimination on the ground of "political opinion" in employment and occupation. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report still provides no information on any initiatives undertaken, at the federal or the provincial level, to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. The Committee once again urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary steps to amend the CHRA with a view to including both social origin (or social condition) and political opinion as prohibited grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation, as required under Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It further urges the Government to indicate the steps taken to this effect in the provinces and territories that have not yet included them as prohibited grounds of discrimination in their legislation, and to report on the progress made. It also again asks the Government to provide information on the manner in which workers are protected in practice against discrimination on the grounds of social origin and political opinion.

Article 2. National equality policy. The Committee recalls the Government's indication that the federal Government is not in a position to develop and implement laws, regulations, policies and programmes at the federal level with respect to matters such as employment discrimination, where the provinces and territories exercise jurisdiction. The Committee encourages the Government to cooperate with employers' and workers' organizations with a view to promoting the development of a coherent national policy on equality in employment and occupation at the provincial and territorial level. Please provide information on the steps taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Articles 2 and 3. Occupational gender segregation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2018, it introduced the Gender Results Framework (GRF), which represents Canada's vision for gender equality and measures the country's ability to meet various objectives regarding this issue. One of the general goals set by the GRF is "economic participation and prosperity [for women]", mainly through: (1) increased labour market opportunities for women, especially women in under-represented groups; (2) better gender balance across occupations; and (3) more women in higher-quality jobs, such as permanent and well-paid jobs. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government on the measures undertaken and the investments made at the provincial level to advance women's representation in skilled trades and technical professions. In Alberta, for example, the Government has recently invested 2.9 million dollars to support skills development training for women in Information Technology (IT) and Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM) fields. Despite these developments, the Committee observes from the data available on the website of Statistics Canada that the participation rate of women has remained stagnant since 2017 (61.5 per cent) and that the employment rate has only slightly increased (58.3 per cent in 2022 compared to 57.9 per cent in 2017). The data also show that women are still over-represented in certain lower-paid occupations, such as health occupations (79.6 per cent women), while they remain significantly under-represented in management occupations (35.3 per cent women). In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to a study entitled “A Labour Market Snapshot of Black Canadians during the Pandemic”, published by Statistics Canada in February 2021, almost one third of employed Black women (31.7 per cent) worked in health care and social assistance in January 2021, and over four-fifths (81.2 per cent) of these women were immigrants. The same study also shows that employed Black women were also under-represented in management occupations (4.3 per cent), compared with non-visible minority women (6.9 per cent). Consequently, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the specific measures undertaken, within the framework of the Gender Results Framework as well as at the provincial level, to effectively address gender-based occupational segregation (both horizontal and vertical), and urges the Government to take all necessary measures to promote the access of women, especially Afro-Canadian women, to a wider range of employment and training opportunities in areas traditionally dominated by men, and to report on the results achieved.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comment, the Government indicates that it seeks to review equal pay legislation and that a number of parliamentary motions are being considered. These include Bulletin No. 9322-13 (the text of which refers to equal pay for work of “equal value”) and the draft consolidating Bulletins Nos. 10576-13, 12719-13 and 14139-34 (which refers to equal pay for equal work or “work to which equal value, function or responsibility is attributed”). The Committee trusts that section 62bis of the Labour Code will be amended in the near future and that it will give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of “equal value”.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1971)

Previous comment

The Committee received observations from the Single Central Organization of Workers of Chile (CUT-Chile) on 13 September 2018 containing allegations of acts of discrimination on the basis of political opinion in a context of a change of government. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CUT has also made a representation under article 24 of the ILO Constitution containing the same allegations. The Committee notes that an ad hoc tripartite committee of the ILO Governing Body examined the representation and made conclusions and recommendations. The Governing Body concluded the procedure at its session in March 2023 (GB.347/INS/18/5).

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Legislation. The Committee notes that, according to the database of the Chamber of Deputies of Chile, the Bill to amend section 349 of the Code of Commerce which, when adopted, will allow married women who are not covered by the separate property regime to conclude a commercial partnership agreement without the need for special authorization from their husband, is still going through the second constitutional procedure (Bulletin

No. 7567-07). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 349 of the Code of Commerce.

Article 2. Pensions. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the 2021 report “Gender gaps in the Chilean social insurance system, direct and indirect factors” (“Brechas de género en el sistema previsional chileno: factores directos e indirectos”), prepared by the Department of Social Insurance Studies of the Subsecretariat for Social Insurance, the establishment of different retirement ages by sex (65 years for men and 60 years for women) and the use of mortality tables differentiated by sex are two parameters which particularly affect gender gaps in pensions. The report indicates that women have to finance a longer period of retirement than men as their statutory retirement age is lower and their life expectancy upon retirement is higher, which requires them to distribute their lower savings over a longer period of retirement than men, implying that their pensions are lower. The Committee observes that, according to the information published by the Government and the Pensions Supervisory Authority, a project is being carried out to reform the pensions system in the country. In this regard, the Committee refers to its General Survey of 2023 on achieving gender equality at work, paragraph 400. The Committee encourages the Government to take the opportunity of the current reform of the pensions system to adopt measures with a view to ensuring respect for the principle of equality between men and women in relation to pensions, such as the adoption of mixed mortality tables and the equalization of the retirement ages of men and women.

Previous comment

Articles 1(b), 2 and 3 of the Convention. Work of equal value. Concept and application. For a number of years now, the Committee has indicated that the principle of “equal pay for equal work” in the Labour Law, the Labour Contract Law as well as the 1994 Notice on the Description of Certain Regulations of Labour Law does not encompass the principle of “work of equal value” set out in Article 1(b) of the Convention. The principle enshrined in the Convention encompasses not only the same work, or work in the same occupation or activity, performed by men and women under the same conditions and specifications, but should also allow for the comparison of work traditionally performed by men (for example, construction work) and women (for example, nursing) that is of an entirely different nature, but which may or may not be of equal value. The Committee also points out that the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the same establishment or with the same employer (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673–697). The Committee notes that section 45 of the Law of the People’s Republic of China on the Protection of Women’s Rights and Interests (2022 Revision, which was adopted on 30 October 2022), reproduces, without changes, the provision included in the earlier version of the Law at article 24, which stipulated that equal pay for equal work shall be applied to men and women alike. Concerning the application of the principle of the Convention, the Committee notes that, in its report, the Government informs that the Ministry of Human Resources and Social Security provides guidance to employers on establishing a salary distribution system in line with the principle of the Convention, without discriminating between workers on the basis of gender. The Government also reiterates that enterprises are entitled to determine the wage levels and their distribution, provided that they comply with relevant laws. The Committee considers that it remains unclear the extent to which the national wage fixing system reflects the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, given that the principle of the Convention is currently understood to cover only “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work and is not fully reflected in relevant legislation. In this regard, the Committee notes from the report of the ILO-UN Women seminar on gender equality and the future of work in China, held in July 2020, that the meaning of “equal pay for work of equal value” has not been understood by the Chinese society including tripartite constituents, the academia, and Chinese women’s organizations (page 31). Furthermore, the Committee notes the absence of information on the implementation of objective job evaluation methods, including in the context of the “job-post wage system”.

The Committee underscores that a clear understanding of the concept of “work of equal value” is essential to ensuring the full application of the Convention and refers the Government to its 2006 general observation on the subject. It recalls that “value”, in the context of the Convention, refers to the worth of a job for the purpose of fixing remuneration. While Article 1 indicates what cannot be considered in determining rates of remuneration, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation to determine value, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. Comparing the relative value of jobs in occupations which may involve different types of skills, effort, responsibilities or working conditions, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall, is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the failure to recognize the value of work performed by women and men free from gender bias (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 675). The Committee also emphasizes that legal provisions that are narrower than the principle laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 679). In light of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government: (i) to take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, so that it covers not only situations where men and women perform the same work, but also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature and which is nevertheless of equal value, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard; (ii) to take appropriate measures, in cooperation with workers’ and employers’ organizations, to ensure that the national system for wage setting fully reflects the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard; and (iii) to provide detailed information on any progress made in implementing objective job evaluation methods in the public and private sectors, including in the context of the “job-post wage system”. It also strongly recommends that the Government makes every effort to promote the public understanding of the principle of the Convention and asks it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard in cooperation with the social partners. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (notification: 1999)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Equal pay for work of equal value. Legislation. Previously, the Committee brought to the Government’s attention the inconsistencies existing between the Portuguese and Chinese language versions of section 57(2) of the Labour Relations Law (No. 7/2008), which are equally authoritative. While the former refers to “equal work or work of equal value”, the Chinese text refers only to “equal work”, with no specific reference to “work of equal value”. The Committee also recalled that section 9 of Legislative Decree No. 52/95/M of 9 October 1995, provides for equal remuneration for men and women for equal work or work of equal value. In its report, the Government states that the circumstances mentioned in its previous reports have not changed. The Committee wishes to reiterate that consistency between the two authoritative language versions of the Law is essential to ensure full application of the Convention. It also emphasizes that legal provisions that are narrower than the principle laid down in the Convention hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 679). The Committee thus requests the Government to take immediate steps to harmonize the language versions of the Labour Relations Law (No. 7/2008) and Legislative Decree No. 52/95/M to ensure that full legislative expression is given to the principle of the Convention and to provide information in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Gender equality and promotion of women's access to employment and occupation. The Committee takes note of the indication in the Government's report that: (1) the project "Women in the Labour Market" was implemented from 2011 to 2012; (2) from 2017 to 2021, more than half of the persons employed through the Croatian Employment Service (CES) were women; (3) in 2021, more than half of participants in CES education and training programmes were women; (4) 30 per cent of participants to CES programmes were employed within 6 months after their completion; (5) in 2021, women represented 47.6 per cent of the active population and the number of women and men in the structure of civil servants was approximately equal; and (6) the National Gender Equality Plan 2023-2027 and the corresponding Action Plan 2023-2024 were adopted. The Committee also observes that the study "How are EU rules transposed into national law? Gender Equality: Country report - Croatia", published by the European Commission in 2022, points to a lack of adequate protection against non-hiring, non-renewal of a fixed-term contract, and non-continuation of a contract for women who are pregnant and/or have given birth (pages 46–50). In this respect, while the Committee acknowledges that the extinction of fixed-term contracts at the end of the specified period is in their very nature, any difference in the renewal of such contracts or the initial determination of their duration that are based on the maternity, real or potential, of the worker, are discriminatory. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the results achieved under the current National Gender Equality Plan and its action plan to promote that women access, progress and remain in employment and occupation; (ii) measures adopted to ensure that the reasons for the non-renewal of fixed-term jobs held by women are genuine and not linked to maternity; and (iii) the number and proportion of women and men in the labour force by sector of activity.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. The Government informs that: (1) 0.45 per cent of the total population is Roma and there were 3,534 unemployed Roma people in 2021; (2) the CES carried out a number of activities to support the employability of Roma people, including information and counselling initiatives, forums on self-employment, contacts between employment counsellors and employers, and other employment policy interventions to encourage employment, self-employment, education and the inclusion of Roma people; (3) the implementation reports on the National Strategy for Roma Inclusion 2013-2020 for 2016, 2017 and 2018 are available, the latter pointing, among others, to a positive shift and a noticeable decline in the recorded number of unemployed members of the Roma minority; (4) the National Plan for Roma Inclusion 2021-2027 and the corresponding Action Plan 2021-2022 encompass measures to support first work experiences, employment, apprenticeships and career development, access to training, and the acquisition of skills in information and communication technology; and (5) the Operational Programmes of National Minorities 2017-2020 and 2021-2024 include measures to prevent discrimination against national minorities, particularly Roma people. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the main findings of the implementation reports of the National Strategy for Roma Inclusion 2013-2020; and (ii) the measures adopted under the current National Plan for Roma Inclusion 2021-2027 and their impact in promoting equality of opportunity and treatment of Roma people in employment and *Articles 1 and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration and work of equal value. Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Legislation. Definition and prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that article 42 of the 2019 Constitution sets forth that all persons shall be equal before the law, shall receive the same protection and treatment from the authorities and shall enjoy the same rights, freedoms and opportunities, without discrimination of any kind on grounds of sex, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, age, ethnic origin, skin colour, religious belief, disability, national or regional origin, or any other personal condition or circumstance that implies a distinction detrimental to human dignity. All persons shall have the right to enjoy the same public spaces and service establishments. They shall also receive equal pay for equal work, without discrimination whatsoever. The violation of the principle of equality is prohibited and punishable by law; and that this covers direct and indirect forms of discrimination. The Government also adds that the country is going through a legislative process following the adoption of the Constitution, that the instruments to be assessed include the Labour Code and its regulations, and that the Committee's comments will therefore be taken into account. The Committee welcomes this initiative and hopes that direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation will be explicitly defined and prohibited. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the legislative process of the revision of the Labour Code and its regulations will take into account the Committee's comments in this area. The Government also reports that: (1) during 2018–2022, one complaint was processed for sexual harassment, the facts of which were not corroborated; (2) in 2021, the National Programme for the Advancement of Women was passed, which provides for more in-depth analysis with a gender perspective of issues such as violence and harassment at work; (3) the National Labour Inspection Office is training its inspectors to identify forms of sexual harassment in the workplace; and (4) the Federation of Cuban Women (FMC) together with the Cuban Institute of Radio and Television (ICRT) are carrying out a programme to help women, and the general population, to identify and combat all forms of discrimination, including harassment in the workplace. The Committee takes due note of the initiatives reported by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to include in labour legislation a provision that clearly defines and prohibits all forms of sexual harassment in employment and occupation, both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, and requests it to provide information on progress made in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to: (i) assess the results of the above-mentioned programmes, and of the training for labour inspectors; and (ii) continue to provide information on the number of complaints of sexual harassment in employment and occupation made to the competent authorities, the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Discrimination on grounds of political opinion. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the 2019 Constitution of the Republic, which recognizes freedom of the press (article 55) and the right of all persons to file complaints and requests with the authorities, which are bound to process them and provide appropriate, relevant and substantiated responses within the timelines and according to the procedures established by law (article 61). The Government also reports that between 2018–2022, the public services office, the Public Prosecution bodies and the courts of justice did not receive or process complaints concerning discrimination on political grounds, and that the Labour Inspectorate did not identify any such acts. The Committee notes this information and requests the Government to continue to provide information on cases of discrimination in employment and occupation on grounds of political opinion.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes from the Government's report the various initiatives undertaken since 2020 to enhance women's economic empowerment and access to decision-making positions, such as: (1) the development by the Ministry of Energy, Trade and Industry of a 2022 "Scheme for the Enhancement of Women's Entrepreneurship"; and (2) the organization, within the framework of the National Mechanism for Women's Rights Council (NMWR), of a series of training seminars to strengthen the participation of women in politics. It also notes the measures mentioned by the Government to address gender stereotypes in education, as well as vertical and horizontal gender segregation in employment and occupation, mainly through: (1) the development by the Ministry of Education, Sport and Youth of an Action Plan, revised every three years, promoting gender equality; and (2) the operation, within the framework of the Human Resource Development Authority of Cyprus (HRDA), of several specific schemes providing the employees and the unemployed, including women, with the opportunity of acquiring new skills. The Committee observes, however, that the HRDA schemes mentioned by the Government do not target specifically women. It also observes from the statistical data provided by the Government that, while the proportion of women participating in HRDA training activities remained relatively stable from 2018 to 2021 (43.3 per cent in 2021), it was still significantly lower than that of men (56.7 per cent in 2021). More generally, the Committee notes that, according to Eurostat data for 2022, the employment rate of women (72.1 per cent) was still substantially lower than that of men (84.2 per cent), with Cyprus being one of the nine Member States of the European Union (EU) with a greater gender employment gap than the employment gap for the EU as a whole. It further observes from the data available on the Statistical Service of Cyprus (CYSTAT) website that, in 2022, women were still under-represented in senior and decision-making positions (3,946 women were employed as legislators and managers compared to 13,153 men), and remained mainly concentrated in specific sectors, such as education (23,095 women compared to 7,293 men), and human health and social work activities (18,202 women compared to 6,757 men). In light of the persistent employment gap between men and women and gender segregation of the labour market, the Committee asks the Government to assess the measures taken and implemented with a view to tackling more effectively the gender employment gap and occupational segregation. It also asks the Government to continue providing information on: (i) the specific measures taken to enhance women's economic empowerment and access to decision-making positions, including through the 2022 Scheme for the Enhancement of Women's Entrepreneurship developed by the Ministry of Energy, Trade and Industry, and the impact of such measures; (ii) the concrete initiatives undertaken to address gender stereotypes in education, including through the Action Plans on gender equality developed by the Ministry of Education, Sport and Youth, and the impact of such initiatives; (iii) the specific measures taken or envisaged to effectively tackle vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, by promoting women's access to a wider range of jobs with career prospects and higher pay; and (iv) statistical data on the participation of men and women in education and training, as well as in employment and occupation, disaggregated by occupational categories and positions.

*Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal pay for work of equal value. However, the Committee notes that the principle of the Convention is equal pay for work of equal value, which is not exactly the same as what is being addressed in awareness-raising measures. In any case, the Committee notes with regret that despite the time elapsed since the ratification of the Convention, measures have not been taken to give full legal expression to the principle of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 194 of the Labour Code, section 3(4) of Act No. 41-08 and section 4 of the General Regulations of May 2014 on wage regulation so as to include in these provisions the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as provided by Article 1 of the Convention, and to provide information on all progress made in that respect. Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the grounds of colour, race or national extraction. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in reply to its previous observation. The Committee notes that, according to the CNUS, CASC and CNTD, there are cases of discrimination against Haitians. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee refers to systematic racial discrimination against persons of Haitian descent and the vulnerable situation of Haitian migrants (CCPR/C/DOM/CO/6, 27 November 2017, paragraph 9). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to combat discrimination against Haitian workers and Dominicans of Haitian origin and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for these workers, ensuring that migration status or lack of documentation does not exacerbate their vulnerability to discrimination in employment and occupation on the grounds covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on this matter. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any complaints of discrimination submitted by workers of Haitian origin or dark-skinned Dominicans, the follow-up action taken, sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment and mandatory pregnancy testing to secure or retain employment. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information in reply to its previous observation. The Committee notes the indications from the CNUS, CNTD and CASC that: (1) cases of pregnancy testing persist, and the measures taken to combat sexual harassment in the workplace are insufficient; and (2) workers do not report these cases to the Ministry of Labour for fear of losing their jobs or not having sufficient evidence. The Committee also notes the “Strategic Plan for a life free of violence for women”, adopted in 2020, which: (1) addresses, among other forms of violence against women, work-related violence, defined as violence “against women in the work environment, in the public or private sector, in the formal or informal economy, which obstructs them by restricting or impeding their access to work, recruitment, career advancement, job stability or permanence, as well as requirements regarding their civil or family status, age, physical appearance, requests for pregnancy or HIV testing, or others relating to their health status, outside what is established in the legal frameworks”; (2) addresses any act whose intention or result is a hostile work environment, such as sexual harassment; and (3) sets out six strategic areas for action, namely: prevention; detection; comprehensive care; investigation; prosecution and sanctions; and full remedies. The Committee urges the Government to: (i) provide information on the measures taken under the six strategic areas of the “Strategic Plan for a life free of violence for women”, adopted in 2020; (ii) take the necessary measures to ensure that legal provisions are adopted that define and expressly prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment; (iii) take the necessary measures without delay to establish an explicit prohibition in law of mandatory pregnancy testing to secure or retain employment; and (iv) send information on all progress made in this respect, and also on complaints made in relation to sexual harassment and mandatory pregnancy testing, the follow-up action taken, sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Trade Union Confederation of Workers of El Salvador (CSTS), received on 13 July 2023, in which it indicates that it is necessary to amend the Civil Service Act and the Municipal Administrative Careers Act to explicitly prohibit sexual harassment and harassment at work of women and men workers in the public and municipal sectors, and to establish the respective penalties and provide training to the labour inspection services. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Pregnancy and maternity. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates in its report that, following its reform in 2018, section 113 of the Labour Code protects women workers against termination of employment from the beginning of the pregnancy until six months following postnatal leave, including where there has been a justified reason for termination prior to or during the protected period. The Committee notes with satisfaction that in 2023 section 113-A was added to the Labour Code which guarantees the immediate reinstatement of a woman who has been dismissed while pregnant or during the postnatal period. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government that, between 2018 and 2021, a total of 1,771 inspections were carried out to enforce the labour rights of women, of which 23 were based on discrimination against pregnant women. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of complaints lodged during the period covered by the report alleging discrimination based on pregnancy and maternity, including complaints under sections 113 and 113-A of the Labour Code, and to indicate the sectors concerned – including the maquila sector, the violations observed, the penalties imposed and the remedies granted.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) section 55 of the Regulations on workplace risk prevention management of 2012 envisages educational measures to promote a healthy work environment, including awareness-raising on the causes and effects of sexual harassment, and the establishment of an investigation and early warning mechanism for problems associated with psychosocial risks, and that 40,073 workers received training between 2018 and 2021; (2) the El Salvador Institute for the Development of Women has developed institutional guidance which includes the establishment in each institution of an institutional gender unit and a gender commission, the responsibilities of which include the development of protocols to combat violence at work, harassment at work and sexual harassment at the workplace; (3) the General Act on workplace risk prevention of 2014 envisages 49 violations for breaches of its provisions, and there are 133 administrative cases of violations; and (4) there has been a conviction for sexual harassment under section 165 of the Penal Code. The Committee also observes that section 29 of the Labour Code was amended by Decree No. 900/2018 to set out the requirement for employers to refrain from engaging in sexual harassment and harassment at work. The Committee notes this information with interest. The Committee finally notes that the CSTS indicates in its observations that sexual harassment and harassment at work should be explicitly prohibited in the public sector. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) define and prohibit in law sexual harassment in employment and occupation (both quid pro quo and hostile working environment harassment); and (ii) establish penalties for acts of sexual harassment that are sufficiently dissuasive, as well as adequate remedies. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the prevention and awareness-raising measures adopted and the number of complaints of sexual harassment received, the sanctions imposed and the remedies granted.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Definition of discrimination. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. For more than ten years, the Committee has been asking the Government to amend the Labour Proclamation No. 118 of 2011, so as to provide explicitly for protection of all workers from discrimination based on national extraction, and to ensure that the draft Civil Service Proclamation prohibits discrimination on all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including national extraction and social origin. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (1) it has taken due note of the Committee's comments regarding the terms "national extraction" and "social origin"; (2) it is aware that workers should be protected from discrimination not only by employers and their representatives, but also by work colleagues and even clients of enterprises, or other persons in the work context; and (3) both the draft Labour and Civil Service Proclamations will be transmitted to the Office, once measures are taken over the general laws according to the priorities set. The Committee recalls that previously, the Government has been providing information on draft amendments to these pieces of legislation. The Committee notes with regret that to date no such amendment has been adopted and Eritrea still has no national assembly to adopt laws, including those regulating fundamental rights (see A/HRC/50/20, 6 May 2022, paragraph 36; A/HRC/47/21, 12 May 2021, paragraph 30). It further notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea recommended the Government to "[r]econvene the national assembly to adopt laws and to enable the Eritrean people to participate freely in the public affairs of their country, as an important step towards building a democratic society, ensuring the separation of powers and providing checks and balances as inherent requirements of the rule of law in the country" (A/HRC/47/21, paragraph 81(b)). The Committee emphasizes that where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all of the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, as well as a clear and comprehensive definition of discrimination. The Committee urges that the Government will make every effort to: (i) ensure that the labour legislation is amended so as to include explicit definitions of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation; (ii) take the necessary steps in consultation with the social partners to ensure that amendments to the Labour Proclamation are adopted rapidly so as to provide explicitly for the protection of all workers against discrimination based on national extraction; and (iii) take concrete steps to ensure that the draft Civil Service Proclamation includes a clear prohibition of discrimination on the basis of at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including national extraction and social origin.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that: (1) in January 2022, a Bill amending the Equal Treatment Act (ETA) was approved by the Government and succeeded in the first reading in Riigikogu (the Parliament); and (2) amendments were being prepared for the second reading in Parliament. It notes that the Bill aims at widening the scope of protection against discrimination on the grounds of religion or belief, disability, age and sexual orientation to the same level as it is currently on the grounds of nationality (ethnic origin), race or colour, for which protection against discrimination not only covers access to employment, occupation and vocational training, as well as working conditions, but also social protection (including social security and health care and social advantages) and education (sections 2(1)(5) and (6) of the ETA). Welcoming this information, the Committee however notes the repeated lack of information provided by the Government on any steps envisaged, in law or in practice, to address discrimination on the grounds of political opinion and social origin. The Committee therefore asks the Government to take steps, in particular in the context of the revision of the Equal Treatment Act, to explicitly prohibit in the national legislation discrimination based on at least all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including political opinion and social origin, in all aspects of employment and occupation. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in that regard.

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. Employment Bill. The Committee notes from the Government's report that, according to the Attorney General's Office, the Employment Bill was at its final vetting stage in September 2022. It further notes that, according to information communicated to the ILO Office in Pretoria, the Employment Bill is not adopted yet. The Committee nevertheless welcomes the inclusion in the Employment Bill, as approved by the Attorney General in November 2022, of provisions reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It notes however that, according to the Bill, "work of equal value" means "work performed by male and female employees in which the duties and services to be performed require similar or substantially similar levels of qualification, experience, skill, effort, responsibility and which is performed under similar or substantially similar working conditions". The Committee would like to point out that this is too restrictive to give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. The concept of "work of equal value" must permit a broad scope of comparison. While factors such as qualification, skill, effort, responsibility and working conditions are clearly relevant in determining the value of jobs, when examining two jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor – determining value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account. Men and women should receive equal remuneration where they perform work that is of overall equal value. Work can be of equal value even if the work is different in content and requires different qualifications, skills or efforts, involves different responsibilities or is performed under different conditions. The Committee asks once again the Government to take steps without further delay towards the adoption of the Employment Bill. It trusts that the Government will seize this opportunity to ensure that the Employment Bill: (i) fully reflects the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value enshrined in the Convention; and (ii) provides for a definition of "work of equal value" allowing for the comparison not only of work that involves similar or substantially similar qualifications, skills, effort, responsibilities and conditions of work, but also of work of equal value overall.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Private sector. Legislation. Employment Bill. The Committee takes note of the "Code of Good Practice: Employment Discrimination" that applies both to the public and the private sectors and provides that "every employer should take steps to eliminate discrimination in any employment policy or practice and must promote equal opportunity at the workplace". The Committee further notes from the Government's report under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), that the National Gender Policy (reviewed) 2019–30 provides for the following definition of "discrimination": "any distinction, exclusion or restriction which has the effect or purpose of impairing or nullifying the recognition, enjoyment or exercise by any person, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, civil and any other field". It notes from the Government's report under the Convention that, according to the Attorney General's Office, the Employment Bill was at its final vetting stage in September 2022. It further notes that, according to information communicated to the ILO Office in Pretoria, the Bill is not adopted yet. The Committee nevertheless welcomes the inclusion in the Employment Bill, as approved by the Attorney General in November 2022, of provisions: (1) protecting not only employees but also explicitly part-time, casual and migrant workers against discrimination at all stages of employment, including recruitment; (2) prohibiting discrimination based “on any one or more grounds, including but not limited to colour, gender, race, religion, marital status or family responsibility, ethnic or social origin, pregnancy or intended pregnancy, sexual orientation, sex, tribal or clan extraction, political affiliation or opinion, culture, language, trade union, staff association or organization affiliation, social origin or status, health status, real or perceived HIV/AIDS status, age or disability, conscience, belief” (section 16(1)); and (3) defining and prohibiting “violence and harassment in the world of work”, including “gender-based violence” the definition of which indicates that it includes sexual harassment (sections 2 and 17(1)). The Committee observes however that the Employment Bill: (1) does not provide for a definition of “direct and indirect discrimination” nor an explicit reference to “national extraction” as a prohibited ground of discrimination (whereas “national origin” was mentioned in the 1980 Employment Act); (2) does not refer anymore to the ground of “sexual orientation” unlike the draft reproduced in the Government’s report; and (3) does not cover the Royal Eswatini Police Force, the Umbutfo Eswatini Defence Force and His Majesty’s Correctional Services. The Committee asks once again the Government to take steps without further delay towards the adoption of the Employment Bill. It trusts that this opportunity will be taken to: (i) include a definition of direct and indirect discrimination in line with Article 1 of the Convention; and (ii) add “national extraction” to the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination. It also asks the Government to: (i) provide information on the legislative developments regarding the adoption of the Employment Bill and a copy of the text once adopted; and (ii) indicate how it is ensured that employees excluded from the scope of the Employment Bill are protected against discrimination in law and in practice. Finally, the Committee asks the Government: (i) to provide information on the steps taken by employers to eliminate discrimination in any employment policy or practice and promote equal opportunity at the workplace, pursuant to the above Code of Good Practice; and (ii) to indicate whether such steps have been initiated or discussed with the Labour Inspectorate.

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. For a number of years, the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is duly reflected in section 78 of the Employment Relations Act (ERA). The Committee reiterates that the 2015 amendments to section 78 of the ERA, to which the Government refers once again in its report, restrict equal remuneration to “persons of the same or substantially similar qualifications employed in the same or substantially similar circumstances” and therefore does not give full effect to the principle set out in the Convention. The Committee also notes that the National Gender Policy, to which the Government refers in its report, advocates the promotion of laws and policies which recognise the right to equal pay for equal work. The Committee emphasizes that the concept of “work of equal value” permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value overall. It further draws the Government’s attention to the fact that “work of equal value” for men and women can: (1) be performed under different working conditions; (2) require different qualifications or skills; (3) require different levels of effort; and (4) involve different responsibilities. When determining the value of different jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor. Determining the value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account together. While factors such as “qualifications” and “circumstances” mentioned in section 78 of the ERA are clearly relevant in determining the value of jobs for the purpose of equal remuneration, they do not have to be the “same” or “substantially similar” and may not be sufficient to assess the overall value of jobs. The Committee therefore stresses the importance of assessing the “value” – that is, namely the worth of a job for the purpose of determining remuneration – through objective job evaluation, which is used to establish classifications of jobs and the corresponding salary scales without gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. It also makes it clear that differential rates between workers are compatible with the principle of the Convention if they correspond, without regard to sex, to differences determined by such evaluation. In light of the above, the Committee urges once again the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is duly reflected in the Employment Relations Act, and (ii) ensure that the determination of work of equal value is based on an objective job evaluation, using criteria such as qualifications and skills, responsibility, efforts and conditions of work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Public service. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the Public Service Act of 1999 does not contain any provision linked to discrimination. In its previous comment, it noted that, following the adoption of the Public Service (Amendment) Decree, No. 36 of 2011, section 10B(2) and section 10C prohibit discrimination in all aspects of employment, based on ethnicity, colour, gender, religion, national extraction and social origin, but omitting political opinion. The Committee asked the Government to: (1) take the necessary measures to include political opinion among the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Public Service (Amendment) Decree; and (2) indicate how public service employees and applicants for public service employment are protected against discrimination based on political opinion in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that Decree No. 36 of 2011 was amended by the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2016, and that Parts 2A and 2B, including sections 10B and 10C of the Public Service (Amendment) Decree, have been repealed. The Amendment Act also amended the definition of “workers” to include contractual civil servants under the Employment Relations Act 2007 (ERA).

The Committee recalls that section 6(2) of the ERA prohibits discrimination on the grounds listed in the Convention, including the ground of political opinion. It also notes that Part I (interpretation), section 4, of the ERA provides that a worker is employed under contract of service, and that the concept of employer includes the Government, other Government entities or local authorities and a statutory authority. The Committee observes that the Public Service Act, 1999, as well as Decree No. 36 of 2011, cover employees in the public sector who are civil servants (career public servants) and that workers in the public sector who are employed under a contract of service are covered by the ERA. In that regard, it stresses once again that sections 10B(2) and 10C of Decree No. 36 of 2011 do not prohibit discrimination on the ground of political opinion. It recalls once again that, where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that political opinion is included among the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Public Service Act 1999. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how in the meantime public service employees and applicants to public service employment are protected against discrimination based on political opinion in practice.

Enforcement and access to justice. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, 2011) noted that section 266 of Decree No. 21 of 2011 prohibits any action, proceeding, claim or grievance “which purports to or purported to challenge or involves the Government (...) any Minister or the Public Service Commission (...) which has been brought by virtue of or under the [Employment Relations Act]”. The CAS urged the Government to ensure that government employees have access to competent judicial bodies to claim their rights and adequate remedies. Consequently, the Committee asked the Government to provide detailed information on the procedure and means of redress available to workers excluded from the scope of the ERA alleging discrimination in employment and occupation which purport to challenge or involve public authorities. The Government indicates that the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act 2016 repealed the Essential National Industries Decree 2011 (ENI) to allow civil servants and workers in statutory authorities and commercial banks to lodge their claims either through their trade unions as a trade dispute or as individual grievances. The Government adds that any worker, including civil servants, may file or lodge their employment grievance with the Mediation Services of the Ministry of Employment, Productivity and Industrial Relations, including for any matters pertaining to being discriminated against by their employer. According to the Government, in 2019, the Mediation Services received 22 grievances relating to discrimination, of which 13 were individual grievances reported by workers themselves and nine were reported by unions.

The Committee notes that, with regard to workers in the private sector, the ERA provides for a range of avenues of redress, such as the mediation services, the employment relations tribunal and the employment relations court. Regarding civil servants, the Public Service Regulations (L.N. 48 of 1999) provide in paragraph 28 that a chief executive must put in place, in his or her Ministry or department, appropriate procedures for employees to seek review of action that they consider adversely affects their employment. The Committee notes that section 266 of Decree No. 21 of 2011 may apply to both workers in the private and public sectors, as it prohibits any action, proceeding, claim or grievance “which purports to or purported to challenge or involves the Government (...) any Minister or the Public Service Commission”.

The Committee further notes that the National Commission on Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination (CHRAD), established in 2009 under article 45 of the Constitution, can receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and seek to resolve them through conciliation. Where complaints remain unresolved, the CHRAD can refer these to a legal process. The Committee asks the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who purport to challenge the public authorities, in case of discrimination in employment or occupation have a formal avenue of redress; (ii) provide information on the application in practice of section 266 of the ERA; and to provide information on the anti-discrimination activities of the National Commission on Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination in employment and occupation; and (iii) report any cases brought before it and their outcome.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the French Confederation of Management – General Confederation of Professional and Managerial Employees (CFE-CGC) and of the General Confederation of Labour – Force ouvrière (CGT-FO), communicated by the Government with its report, and the Government’s responses.

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Data on remuneration gaps between women and men. The Committee notes that, according to the dashboard on the French economy (published in 2022) of the National Institute for Statistics and Economic Studies (INSEE), in 2020: (1) women’s full-time equivalent salaries were 14.8 per cent lower than those of men, compared with 19.4 per cent in 2010; (2) for the various occupational categories, the gap was 16.4 per cent for managerial staff (22.2 per cent in 2010), 14.1 per cent for manual workers (17.2 per cent in 2010), 11.9 per cent for intermediary occupations (12.9 per cent in 2010) and 4.6 per cent for employees (6.8 per cent in 2010). The Committee notes this new information and requests the Government to: (i) continue taking measures to evaluate and analyse gender pay gaps in all economic sectors and, if possible, by occupational category; and (ii) provide information on the measures adopted, the studies carried out and the gaps measured.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it has made equality between women and men, particularly in occupational matters, one of its principal priorities and has reinforced the legislation on equal remuneration for women and men by establishing a requirement for transparency and results for all enterprises with at least 50 employees. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of: (1) Act No. 2018-771 of 5 September 2018 on the freedom to choose one's professional future, which inserts into the Labour Code a chapter on measures to remove remuneration gaps between women and men at the enterprise level and creates the professional equality index for women and men (sections L.1142-7 to L.1142-11) and; (2) Act No. 2021-1774 of 24 December 2021 to accelerate economic and professional equality, which reinforced these measures (particularly through the publication of corrective and catch-up measures in the event that the index is lower than 75 points and the annual publication on the website of the Ministry of Labour of the results achieved by enterprises for all the indicators on the index). The Committee notes that, during the Social Conference held on 16 October 2023, the Government announced the establishment in the near future of a High Council for Remuneration, which will follow and accompany the revision of classifications and prevent the compression of wage scales, and will also focus on the wage situation of women with the objective of achieving equality. With a view to ensuring the implementation of this mechanism, the Committee encourages the Government to take measures to raise awareness of the new provisions regarding the new professional equality index among employers, workers and their respective organizations, as well as officials responsible for controlling the implementation of the mechanism. It requests the Government to provide information on the action taken in this regard.

Measures to combat remuneration gaps. Transparency of salaries. Professional equality index for women and men. Private sector. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the professional equality index for women and men. It notes that each year enterprises with fewer than 50 employees are required to calculate and publish on their websites, in a visible and readable manner, the overall score for the equality index for women and men, and the score obtained for each of the four or five following indicators (depending on the size of the enterprise): the average remuneration gap between women and men, by age category; the gap in the individual rates of wage increases (excluding promotions) for women and men, by socio-occupational category; the percentage of women employees who have received an increase during the year following their return from maternity leave; the number of employees of the sex with the lowest representation among the ten employees receiving the highest remuneration; and the gap in the promotion rate for women and men, by socio-occupational category (only for enterprises with over 250 employees). Since 2022, if they have a score lower than 85 out of 100, enterprises have been required to set and publish objectives for progress in each of the indicators and, if the score is below 75 points, enterprises are required to publish their corrective and catch-up measures. These annual or pluriannual measures and these objectives must be determined within the framework of compulsory negotiations on occupational equality or, if there is no agreement, by unilateral decision of the employer following consultation of the enterprise social and economic committee. In the event of failure to comply with these requirements, the enterprise is liable to a financial penalty of up to 1 per cent of its wage bill.

The Committee notes that the CGT-FO, in its observations, emphasizes that the professional equality index is only compulsory for enterprises with at least 50 employees, but that the obligation of equality of remuneration set out in the Convention covers all workers. The Committee notes that, in its reply, the Government refers to sections L.3221-2, L.1142-7 and L.2242-1 of the Labour Code and emphasizes that all of these provisions require all French enterprises to ensure compliance with the principle of equal remuneration for women and men.

The Committee also notes the CFE-CGC's indication that the index is still incomplete and would benefit from being corrected, as the "relevance threshold", the scale and the weighting serve to mask part of the gap. The CFE-CGC emphasizes the need to improve the methods for the calculation of the index, including on the following points: (1) the progressive nature of the points scale used for the index and the fact that the five indicators compensate for each other, which allows enterprises to avoid penalties despite remuneration gaps of 15 per cent; (2) the fact that wage gaps lower than 5 per cent are considered to be tolerable and allow enterprises to obtain the maximum score of 40 out of 40; (3) the components of remuneration, which should include a broader range of elements so as to include all benefits and additional emoluments; (4) the parity indicator for the ten highest remunerations, which should be changed to carry more points; and (5) the average amount of the wage increase received following the return from maternity leave, which should be mentioned on an indicative basis. The CFE-CGC adds that it is also essential to reinforce other levers: transparency requirements and the information and social dialogue resources of enterprise social and economic committees and the systematic unfreezing of the wage catch-up packages required to overcome salary gaps. According to the union: (1) the establishment of a wage catch-up package should be made compulsory as soon as the 40 points for the first indicator (remuneration gap) are not achieved; (2) it would be preferable to focus on a distribution of salaries other than by socio-occupational category in order to refine data on remuneration gaps; and (3) it is necessary to apply penalties immediately in the event of unsatisfactory outcomes, as the three-year period accorded to enterprises to achieve conformity with the requirement of achieving a score of at least 75 out of 100 appears to be excessively long. Finally, the CFE-CGC recalls that the index is not an end in itself, or in other words that it is not in itself a tool for the reduction of remuneration gaps (it is a photograph at a given moment) and that the use of this tool makes it possible to know the situation of women and men in the enterprise, open up dialogue where necessary on this subject and take the necessary corrective measures. It adds that the results of the 2021 index were both encouraging in certain respects in relation to the previous year (the increase in the number of enterprises that had published the index, the increase by one point in the average score – 85 out of 100), and worrying in other respects (only 2 per cent of enterprises achieved 100 points, increases in remuneration when returning from maternity are not respected by 13 per cent of enterprises, while 43 per cent of enterprises with over 1,000 employees have fewer than two women among the highest earners, etc.).

The Committee notes the Government's response that the progression of the results obtained in the index show its effectiveness (the average score of enterprises with 1,000 or more employees rose by 6 points between 2019 and 2022; only 10 per cent of enterprises had an overall score of under 75 points). With reference to the 2022 results, the Government adds that: (1) the average score was 86, one point higher than in 2021, and was 89 for enterprises with over 1,000 employees, that is one point higher than in 2021 and two points higher than in 2020; (2) 95 per cent of enterprises with over 1,000 employees and 88 per cent of enterprises with between 250 and 1,000 employees calculated and declared their index; and (3) there is room for improvement among enterprises with between 50 and 250 employees, of which 72 per cent have complied with the declaration requirement. The Government adds that it is important not to modify the methods for the calculation of the index before the completion of the penalty cycle in 2023 so as to be able to guarantee the application of penalties, where necessary, and specifies that the first penalties for the absence of results can be imposed as from 2023 for enterprises with between 50 and 250 employees (which declared their index in 2020 for the first time). It further specifies that the mechanism has been strengthened by the Act of 24 December 2021 and it remains attentive to the issue of wage transparency, which is covered by a European Directive. The Committee observes that Directive 2023/970 to strengthen the application of the principle of equal pay for equal work or work of equal value between men and women through pay transparency and enforcement mechanisms, adopted on 10 May 2023, sets out the requirement for employers to report data on the remuneration gap. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government announced at the Social Conference on 16 October 2023 the forthcoming creation of a new more ambitious index on equality between women and men which will be more transparent and reliable. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, to: (i) implement effectively the current and revised mechanisms of the professional equality index, particularly through training; (ii) evaluate the corrective measures taken by enterprises and the results achieved in terms of the reduction, or indeed elimination of remuneration gaps between women and men and, where appropriate, adapt the envisaged indicators; and (iii) analyse and eliminate the obstacles encountered in this context. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the establishment and the components of the new index and the operation of the penalty mechanism, with an indication of the number of controls undertaken and the enterprises concerned, and the level of the penalties imposed in the event of failure to comply with obligations related to the professional equality index.

Public sector. The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Court of Accounts of September 2023, progress has been achieved in the public sector in identifying the sources of the remuneration gaps identified, but it is still necessary to obtain a better understanding of gaps in relation to bonuses and promotions in order to take action on any discrimination. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 2023-623 of 19 July 2023 to reinforce the access of women to positions of responsibility in the public service, which: (1) is intended to combat vertical occupational segregation by raising gradually over time from 40 to 50 per cent the minimum number of persons of each sex benefiting from internal promotions to higher level and managerial positions in the public service (with a minimum rate of 40 per cent of persons of each sex in higher level and managerial positions); and (2) creates obligations in relation to transparency in remuneration through the establishment of the vocational equality index for women and men in the public service (administrative units with over 50 employees) based on the model of the index introduced in the private sector. The Committee requests the Government to take measures, in collaboration with workers' organizations, to: (i) evaluate and eliminate gaps between women and men public employees in respect of bonuses and other benefits which form part of remuneration within the meaning of the Convention; (ii) give effect to Act No. 2023-623 of 19 July 2023, and particularly the professional equality index in the public service (awareness-raising and training for the personnel concerned); and (iii) compile and analyse the results achieved.

Article 3. Application of the principle of equal remuneration for women and men for work of equal value. Objective job evaluation. Development or revision of job classifications. The Committee recalls that the implementation of the concept of "work of equal value" requires the adoption of some method of measuring and comparing the relative value of different jobs on the basis of objective criteria exempt from any sexist prejudices. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to promote the objective evaluation of jobs among workers' and employers' organizations, administrations and the bodies or persons concerned, particularly through the development or revision of occupational classifications. It also requests the Government to provide information on any revision of occupational classifications that is being undertaken or has already been carried out, the results achieved, the good practices identified and the difficulties encountered.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication in its report that two new grounds of discrimination – the exercise of an elected office and being a whistleblower, a facilitator or a person linked to a whistleblower – have been added to the list of the grounds prohibited by the Labour code (section L.1132-1) following the adoption of Act No. 2019-1461 of 27 December 2019 on participation in local life and the proximity of public action and Act No. 2022-401 of 21 March 2022 to improve the protection of whistleblowers.

However, the Committee observes once again that, although “social origin”, is one of the seven prohibited grounds of discrimination enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, it is still not among the grounds of discrimination prohibited by the national legislation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to include “social origin” in the list of grounds of discrimination prohibited by the Labour Code on the occasion of a forthcoming revision, and to provide information on any measures adopted in this respect, as well as on any other measures taken to combat discrimination on the basis of social origin in practice.

Discrimination on the basis of race, colour and national extraction. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing that the adoption of plans and the implementation of measures do not appear to be achieving sufficient results in combating discrimination effectively on the basis of race, colour and national extraction (“origin”, according to the terms of the national legislation) in employment and occupation, particularly with regard to access to employment for young persons of foreign origin, and it has requested the Government to reinforce its efforts in this regard. The Committee notes that, according to the 2022 report on the activities of the Defender of Rights, of the complaints received for discrimination on the basis of (foreign) origin, 36 per cent arise in private employment and 18 per cent in public employment.

The Committee notes that, in her contribution to the examination of the situation of France by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) (October 2022), the Defender of Rights recommends: (1) the establishment of a legal requirement for enterprises to publish non-financial and statistical indicators to measure discrimination and evaluate the discriminatory effects of certain practices, and to make full use of them to combat discrimination; (2) the implementation of a public policy to make visible and correct forms of discrimination related to (foreign) origin by creating a legal requirement for audits and follow-up action in enterprises and administrative units; (3) action to combat the systemic dimension of forms of discrimination (through public strategies against poverty, unemployment, poor housing, geographical and school segregation; and through policies to combat discrimination on the basis of origin as such); and (4) the adoption of proactive policies, on the one hand, to neutralize the prejudices that contribute to direct discrimination and, on the other, ensure objectivity in decision-making procedures and criteria which may result in indirect discrimination. In this regard, the Committee notes the concluding observations of the CERD, in which it expressed concern at “the fact that systemic racial discrimination, as well as stigmatization and the use of negative stereotypes regarding certain minorities, such as Roma, Travellers, Africans, persons of African descent, persons of Arab origin and non-citizens, remain entrenched in French society and often result in these minorities being socially excluded and having limited enjoyment of their rights, particularly their economic, social and cultural rights” (CERD/C/FRA/CO/22-23, 14 December 2022, paragraph 9).

In this context, the Committee welcomes the adoption of the National Plan to combat racism, antisemitism and discrimination related to origin 2023–26, which is designed to: (1) integrate content on action to combat racism, anti-Gypsy feeling and discrimination in all training for young persons; (2) train employees in the public service in combating discrimination; (3) adopt systematic tests for discrimination relating to and in employment; and (4) improve the protection and support for employees and enterprises in relation to situations involving racism and discrimination.

In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to: (i) continue taking specific measures to prevent and eliminate any form of discrimination on the basis of race, colour and national extraction (“origin”) in employment and occupation, particularly in the context of the Plan 2023–26, in respect of recruitment, promotion and terms and conditions of employment, including remuneration; and (ii) establish mechanisms for the evaluation of the results of the measures adopted for this purpose. It requests the Government to provide information on any action taken to give effect to the recommendations of the Defender of Rights.

Roma. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the French Strategy 2020–30 in response to the Recommendation of the Council of the European Union of 12 March 2021 on Roma equality, inclusion and participation, which indicates that: (1) the 2021 report of the National Consultative Commission for Human Rights refers to high levels of anti-Gypsy feeling and stereotypes that are still very present in the collective conscience; and (2) action should be based on the legal framework of anti-discrimination legislation, the imposition of penalties in cases of discrimination and the mobilization of criminal policy instruments to combat discrimination. The Committee notes the concluding observations of the CERD, according to which it remains concerned at the social exclusion and persistent poverty faced by Roma, in particular with regard to the low rate of school enrolment among Roma children, and the high unemployment rate among Roma, especially women, compared to the rest of the population (CERD/C/FRA/CO/22-23, paragraph 13). The Committee urges the Government to take measures, in collaboration with the organizations representing Roma and within the framework of the French Strategy 2020–30, to: (i) take effective action to combat discrimination and stigmatization against Roma, particularly in relation to access to employment and specific occupations; (ii) ensure the school attendance and maintenance at school of Roma children, and the vocational training of young and adult Roma; and (iii) promote respect and tolerance for this community within society.

Article 2. National policy of equality of opportunity and treatment between women and men. The Committee notes the report of the Court of Accounts entitled “The policy of equality between women and men implemented by the State: Limited progress in relation to the objectives established”, published in September 2023, according to which: (1) in the private sector, occupational equality has particularly been seen from the viewpoint of wage inequalities (professional equality index); (2) ambition has been lower in relation to action to combat the more structural causes of inequality, such as gender balance in training branches and trades, which require socio-cultural changes in relation to parental responsibilities, vocational guidance and the value attached to certain skills; and (3) progress in the reduction of inequalities is slow, despite the growing legislative arsenal over recent decades. With regard to the professional equality index, which essentially relates to inequalities in the remuneration of women and men, the Committee refers the Government to its comments on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100).

In this context, the Committee welcomes the adoption of the Inter-Ministerial Plan for Equality between Women and Men 2023–27, the objectives of which include: (1) occupational and economic equality, particularly through the promotion of greater gender balance in all occupations and taking the brakes off women’s entrepreneurship; and (2) a culture of equality in order to combat prejudices and stereotypes. It also notes the announcement by the Government at the Social Conference on 16 October 2023 of a reform of parental leave so that it can become a period of leave that is chosen, paid better and shared between parents and can facilitate the return to employment.

While welcoming the commitment of the Government to give priority to professional equality between women and men, the Committee requests it to continue adopting specific measures, in collaboration with employers’ and workers’ organizations, to: (i) combat horizontal and vertical occupational segregation and promote gender balance in jobs at all levels, particularly through the implementation of action in the field of vocational guidance and training; (ii) actively combat gender stereotypes and sexist prejudices, for example through awareness-raising campaigns at the national level; (iii) identify and eliminate obstacles to equality and women’s employment; (iv) develop and reinforce measures to allow parents to reconcile work and family responsibilities better, including parental leave; and (v) evaluate the effectiveness and impact of the measures adopted and programmes implemented, particularly on gender balance in the various jobs. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted for this purpose.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

French Polynesia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. Public sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding the General Public Service Regulations of French Polynesia, that: (1) it is not opposed to reviewing the list of grounds of discrimination on the basis of the list in the Labour Code of French Polynesia; and (2) the ground of "origin", mentioned in section 5 of the abovementioned Regulations may refer, inter alia, to a person's geographical, social, ethnic or cultural origin, thus rendering superfluous the addition of the term "social origin". The Committee notes that the Government adds that a complete reform of all regulatory provisions is envisaged, which would result in the adoption of a public service code of French Polynesia. The Committee also recalls that the Labour Code of French Polynesia was amended in 2019 to specify that the term "origin" included "social origin". In order to allow public service workers protection against any discrimination based on their social origin and to enjoy this protection before the competent authorities, the Committee requests the Government to take the opportunity presented by the reform of provisions applicable to the public sector to include "social origin" among the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination so as to cover all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It also asks the Government to envisage, under this reform, aligning the anti-discrimination provisions applicable to the public sector with those applicable in the private sector and, more generally, with the provisions applicable in metropolitan France, which extend workers' protection against discrimination on many other grounds.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Caledonia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes that in response to its request concerning grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (colour and social origin), the Government indicates that the wording of section Lp. 112-1 of the Labour Code of New Caledonia has not been amended. The Government's report also states that: (1) reflection and discussion on the incorporation of the grounds of "colour" and "social origin" will be held; and (2) no proceedings have been brought based on section L. 225-1 of the Criminal Code, which covers "physical appearance" and the "particular vulnerability arising out of the worker's economic situation, which is supposed or known to the perpetrator of the discrimination" in the area of employment and occupation. The Committee recalls once again that, when legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they must cover as a minimum all the grounds of discrimination set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to include "colour" and "social origin" in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in section Lp. 112-1 of the Labour Code of New Caledonia. Noting that the report is silent in this regard, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to examine the possibility of extending the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination under the Labour Code of New Caledonia in order to align it with the list of grounds of discrimination which are prohibited in metropolitan France under the Labour Code, and thus to provide the same legal protection to all workers against discrimination in employment and occupation in France.

Article 2. Non-discrimination and equality of opportunity and treatment for women and men. Legislative development and practical measures. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the study of the New Caledonian labour market reveals that: (1) women are concentrated in 12 of the 87 occupational groups, which implies significant inequality in terms of the distribution by sector of activity; (2) women are over-represented in the lowest paid jobs and represent up to 98 per cent of domestic workers, household helpers, assistants and secretaries; (3) although more women than men hold graduate degrees (after four years of further education), men enter the world of work more easily; (4) women's career development is curbed and they have more difficulty in accessing positions of responsibility; (5) women face considerably higher job insecurity than men; and (6) women's economic activity slows significantly when they start a family, as the parental responsibility seems to weigh more heavily on mothers. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the detailed information communicated by the Government on the actions and measures taken to encourage gender diversity in training, occupational guidance and employment, reconciliation between family life and work life (the 2021 Interoccupational Act and agreement on teleworking, awareness-raising of nursing in the workplace), women's entrepreneurship and, more generally, women's empowerment, in the provinces of New Caledonia. At the legislative level, the Committee notes with interest the adoption, on 26 May 2023, of Territorial Act No. 2023-3 promoting substantive occupational equality between women and men, setting forth that, in enterprises of more than 50 employees, the employer must carry out an annual assessment of compliance with the obligation of substantive occupational equality in his or her enterprise and establish a plan of action to this end. This plan, the results of which are evaluated each year, is intended to support women's access to employment, particularly to positions of responsibility, close the wage gaps between women and men occupying equivalent posts, raise awareness of equality, combat gender stereotypes, encourage gender balance in employment and improve reconciliation between family life and work life. The Act also contains provisions on parenthood (specific provisions concerning pregnant women and leave for fathers or the second parent of 11 days). Noting this significant legislative advancement, the Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to ensure compliance with and dissemination of the new obligations relating to gender equality set forth in Territorial Act No. 2023-3 promoting substantive occupational equality between women and men, and to provide information on its implementation and its impact on vocational training and employment for women at all levels, including Kanake women. It also requests the Government to continue and intensify its efforts to raise awareness among workers, employers and their organizations, and society as a whole, of gender equality and non-discrimination in employment and occupation, including the need to tirelessly fight against gender stereotypes and occupational segregation between women and men in the labour market.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Gabon

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls that for very many years it has been emphasizing the need to amend section 140 of the Labour Code, the provisions of which are too restrictive in relation to those of the Convention and do not allow the comparison of work that is of a different nature and performed under different conditions (skills/qualifications, responsibilities, effort, conditions of work), but which could be of equal value overall. The Committee recalls that section 140 makes the application of equal remuneration conditional on the existence of "equal conditions of work, skills and output", on the one hand, and work "of equal value and of the same nature", on the other. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Labour Code is currently being updated, which is a priority project for the Government. It indicates that section 140 will be modified and become section 171 of the draft Labour Code, which provides that: "For work of equal value, remuneration shall be equal for all workers, irrespective of their origin, opinion, sex and age. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and of the same nature refers to the remuneration rates set without discrimination on the basis of sex." The Committee notes with regret that this wording still does not provide for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention, as it retains the concept of "the same nature". It also emphasizes that the wording in the draft text of section 171 "of equal value of vocational skills and output" limits the application of equal remuneration to a comparison of the value of vocational skills and output. In this regard, the Committee recalls that in order to eliminate discrimination in relation to remuneration, which inevitably arises if the value of the work performed by men and women is not recognized free from any sexist bias, it is essential to compare the value of work in occupations in which the work may require different types of skills and also involve different levels of responsibility and conditions of work, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall. It emphasizes in this respect that the concept of equal "value" as set out in the Convention permits a broad scope of comparison, including "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value. This is crucial for the full application of the Convention as, in practice, men and women are often not engaged in the same jobs. Furthermore, the Committee recalls that, as effective application of the principle of the Convention is needed, where women are more heavily concentrated in certain sectors or occupations, there is a risk that the possibilities for comparison at the enterprise or establishment level will be insufficient (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673, 675 and 698). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the future Labour Code gives full expression and full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, without limitations that are contrary to the Convention, and to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3. Determination of rates of remuneration. Public service. Objective job evaluation. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to explain in detail the methods and criteria used to determine pay levels following the introduction in 2015 of a new pay system in the public service, in order to ensure that jobs principally occupied by women have not been undervalued in relation to those mainly occupied by men. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the effect that the calculation of the pay of a State official takes into account the following elements: the basic pay, the reference indicative pay scale and the indicative scale of bonuses. These elements are uniform, calculated and paid pro rata based on the days worked, although the final remuneration may vary as it is based on collective results, the individual performance of the official and the payment of different bonuses and additional allowances. Noting that, according to the detailed explanations provided by the Government, one of the important components of final remuneration is based on the individual performance of officials, the Committee recalls that there is a significant difference between the concept of the evaluation of professional performance, which aims to evaluate the manner in which a particular worker carries out the job (output), and the concept of objective job evaluation, which evaluates the job (and not the worker) with a view to measuring the relative value of jobs that do not have the same content. The Committee also recalls that Article 3 of the Convention presupposes the use of appropriate methods for the objective evaluation of jobs. As women are very often engaged in different jobs to men, it is necessary to have a method of comparison through which it is possible to measure and compare the relative value of different jobs on the basis of objective and non-discriminatory factors (such as the required skills/qualifications, effort, responsibilities and working conditions) to prevent any sexist bias in their evaluation. Experience shows that skills that are often considered to be "female", such as manual dexterity and those required in the caring professions, are frequently undervalued or even overlooked, in comparison with traditionally "male" skills, such as heavy lifting, which contributes to perpetuating the undervaluation of women's jobs and to the widening of the pay gap between men and women (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 695 to 701). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to ensure that the pay system for employees of the public service established in 2015 is free of gender bias. Noting the Government's indication that the jobs predominantly held by women have not been undervalued in relation to those occupied by men, the Committee requests it to provide information on the methods used to evaluate and establish the classification of the various jobs in the public service and to provide the corresponding salary scales, disaggregated by sex.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Definition of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee welcomes the inclusion in the draft new Labour Code of a definition of the concept of "discrimination" that is identical to that of the Convention. The Committee hopes that the draft text of the new Labour Code will soon be adopted and promulgated and requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to disseminate these new provisions, once they have been adopted, to employers, workers and their respective organizations and to those responsible for the enforcement of the legislation and to provide a copy of the text.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Legislation. Further to its previous comment concerning the lack of conformity of certain provisions of the Civil Code that are in force (sections 253, 254 and 261) with the provisions of the Convention, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Civil Code is still under revision and that the Committee's comments will be examined. The Committee recalls that laws governing personal and family relations which do not yet provide for equal rights of men and women also continue to have an impact on the enjoyment of equality with respect to work and employment (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 787). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Civil Code that have a discriminatory impact on women's employment, namely sections 253, 254 and 261, are repealed and to provide a copy of the new Civil Code once it has been adopted and promulgated.

With regard to night work by women, as regulated by sections 167 and 169 of the Labour Code, the Committee notes that, in the draft new Labour Code, the provisions prohibiting night work by women in general have been removed, and that the protection measures only concern pregnant women, which is not incompatible with the Convention, insofar as they are strictly limited to the protection of maternity and not based on stereotypes concerning their capacities and role in society. While welcoming the withdrawal of the provisions prohibiting the principle of night work of women in the draft Labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to examine the possibility of the adoption in parallel of accompanying measures to assure the safety of workers, both men and women, during night work and measures for the development of adequate means of transport.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women in employment and occupation. Constitution. The Committee welcomes Act No. 001/2018 of 12 January 2018 revising the Constitution of the Republic of Gabon, which amends several articles of the Constitution in support of gender equality, principally in relation to elections, and provides that "the State shall promote equal access by women and men to electoral office and to political and professional responsibilities" (article 24). Welcoming the will of the Government to promote gender equality at the highest level, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of article 24 of the Constitution, which promotes the equal access of women and men to professional responsibilities, as well as equal access to political responsibilities, in law and practice, and on any specific measures adopted for this purpose.

National policy on equality. The Committee previously requested the Government to adopt measures to: (1) take effective action to combat stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and occupational capacities; and (2) resolve the difficulties faced by women in gaining access to resources and means of production, and particularly credit and land, and to encourage women's entrepreneurship. The Committee notes that the Government refers once again to the creation of a platform wholly dedicated to women entrepreneurs, the "Women's Business Centre", in order to provide support to women wishing to start up their own enterprises. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it has introduced a Women's Day on 17 April each year and that it has decreed that 2015–25 shall be the Decade of the Women of Gabon. According to the information provided by the Government in its 2020 report to UNESCO on the application of the 2005 Convention on the Protection and Promotion of the Diversity of Cultural Expressions, ratified in 2007, the objective of the Decade of the Women of Gabon is the autonomy of women, and the expected results are training, improvement and the deep-rooted transformation of the condition of women at all levels (legal, political, economic and social). The Government adds in the report that the National Advisory Commission of the Decade of the Women of Gabon has been created in this context and that it is engaged in the collection of data on the ground throughout the national territory with a view to improving understanding of the situation of women. The Committee notes these initiatives and requests the Government to provide the results of the national data collection exercise on the condition of the women of Gabon undertaken by the National Advisory Commission of the Decade of the Women of Gabon. It also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures adopted or envisaged to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women, including in relation to employment and occupation; and (ii) information (including statistics) on the activities of the platform for women entrepreneurs since its establishment. In the absence of a response on the following points raised in its previous comments, the Committee reiterates its request concerning the measures adopted to: (i) combat effectively stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and professional capacities and their role in society and to enable them to gain access to a broader range of jobs and occupations (through vocational guidance and training free from gender bias); and (ii) resolve the difficulties faced by women in gaining access to resources and means of production, and particularly credit and land. The Government is also requested to provide information on the activities of the Ministry of Equality of Opportunity in relation to the promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women in employment and occupation.

Promotion of equality of opportunity and treatment without distinction on grounds other than sex. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to formulate and implement a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment without distinction on grounds of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin. The Committee notes the Government's indication that since 2016 it has been developing its policy of equality of opportunity and that many seminars have been organized since then to reinforce capacities to combat more effectively undue privilege and social inequality. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the primary obligation of ratifying States is to declare and pursue a national policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation with a view to eliminating any discrimination in this respect. It also wishes to emphasize that the implementation of a national equality policy in relation to employment and occupation presupposes the adoption of a range of specific measures, which generally consist of a combination of legislative and administrative measures, collective agreements, public policies, affirmative action measures, dispute resolution and enforcement mechanisms, specialized bodies, practical programmes and awareness-raising (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 841 and 848). In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to indicate any obstacles encountered in completing the formulation of a policy of equality of opportunity, which it indicates that it has been developing since 2016. It also requests the Government to indicate whether it is planned that the national equality policy will also cover the other grounds of discrimination prohibited by the Convention, with an indication of the specific strategies and measures envisaged or adopted with a view to: (i) combating all forms of discrimination on the basis of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin; (ii) promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation; and (iii) monitoring and evaluating regularly the results achieved as a basis for reviewing and adapting existing measures and strategies, where necessary.

Articles 2, 3(d) and 5. Equality of opportunity for men and women in the public service. Special affirmative measures. Quotas. With reference to the under-representation of women at the higher categories (A1 and A2) of the public service, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 09/2016 of 5 September 2016 establishing quotas in favour of women and young persons, and particularly a quota under which 30 per cent of higher level State positions are reserved for women. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken in practice for the implementation of this quota and to provide statistical data on personnel in the public service disaggregated by gender and category, with a view to measuring the impact of this measure on the representation of women in the higher categories of the public service. In the absence of information on this point, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide the conclusions of the audit of the public service carried out in 2016.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls that for many years now it has drawn the Government's attention to the fact that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal "value" is not properly reflected in the legislation. Neither the Labour Law, nor the Law on the Public Service entitle workers to equal remuneration for work that is entirely different but nonetheless of equal "value". The Committee notes with regret the Government's reiterated statement that the equal remuneration principle is included in both pieces of legislation. The Committee recalls the discussion held by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards when reviewing the application of the Convention by Georgia at its 107th Session (June 2018) and the adoption of a set of conclusions. Once again, the Committee urges the Government to: (i) amend the labour legislation, in cooperation with the social partners and the Council for Gender Equality, in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of "equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value", with a view to ensuring the full and effective implementation of the Convention without delay; and (ii) take the necessary steps to amend section 57(1) of the Law on the Public Service (2015) to capture the concept of "work of equal value" so as to ensure that public officials covered by the Law are entitled not only to equal remuneration for equal work, but also for work that is entirely different but nonetheless of equal value. The Government is requested to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 2. Measures to address the gender pay gap and promote equal remuneration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2021 Georgia joined the Equal Pay International Coalition (EPIC) and that the renewed State Concept on Gender Equality representing the country's vision for eliminating all forms of gender discrimination and ensuring gender equality in the civil, political, economic, social, and cultural spheres, both in public and private relations was adopted on December 2022. It further notes that the National Concept Document on Women's Economic Empowerment was adopted on March 2023, as part of the Human Rights National Strategy's Action Plan. It proposes seven directions, including: acknowledging, reducing, and distributing unpaid and care work; equal access to economic resources; improving public sector procurement and employment practices; improving employment practices in the private sector; reducing shadow economy and supporting a smooth transfer in the formal sector; strengthening the gender-sensitive legal framework, and combating contradictory social norms. The Committee notes that a subsequent 2022-2024 Action Plan and communication strategy was developed, and welcomes the information provided in the reports regarding the implementation and the impacts of previous action plans. The Committee notes that the Civil Service Bureau started a Gender Impact Assessment of the Civil Service Law to reveal gender inequities in professional development, work-life balance, and pay gaps. It notes that wages and pay arrangements within civil service will be analysed to find and address gender discrimination. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government about the Working Group created to conduct a thematic inquiry on the rights of women in the informal economy and the COVID-19 impact, which included 29 recommendations. The Committee takes note of the Government's efforts. However, from the statistical data provided, it observes that in most sectors of activity there has been little to no improvement in reducing the gender pay gap. The Committee further notes the concerns of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) about the widening gender pay gap, despite economic and income growth in the State party, which unevenly benefits women; and its recommendations to regularly review wages in sectors in which women are concentrated and adopt measures to close the gender pay gap, including regular pay surveys, and consider raising the minimum wage fixed in 1999 (CEDAW/C/GEO/CO/6, 2 March 2023, paragraphs 35–36). Given the persisting horizontal and vertical segregation prevailing in the country, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) step up its efforts to address the underlying causes of inequalities in remuneration such as occupational gender segregation into lower-paying jobs or occupations or positions without career opportunities, including through targeted vocational training, occupational quotas, incentives and awareness-raising activities; (ii) provide detailed information on specific measures taken under the framework of the Equal Pay International Coalition, the State Concept on Gender Equality, the National Concept Document on Women's Economic Empowerment and the associated 2022-2024 Action Plan and Communications Strategy, and the Thematic Inquiry on the rights of women in the informal economy and the COVID-19 impact; (iii) provide a summary of the findings from the Gender Impact Assessment of the Civil Service Law, and any measures taken or envisioned in this regard; and (iv) continue to provide statistical data on the number of men and women employed, disaggregated by economic sector and occupational level.

Enforcement. The Committee notes that with the 2020 amendment to the Labour Code, the Labour Inspection's mandate was extended to enforce the prohibition of discrimination, and that section 78 of the Labour Code establishes sanctions for violating the provision of equal remuneration for equal work, including a warning, or a fine. It notes, however, that the Labour Inspection in 2021-2022 undertook 5,295 inspections at 2,767 worksites and no violations regarding equal remuneration were found. The Committee notes that from 2019 to 2022, 5 trainings were held on discrimination, international labour standards and the Labour Code, with 54 judges and 34 officials attending the trainings, but that no specific information was provided on the equal pay aspect of the trainings. The Committee notes the general indication of the Government that awareness-raising activities, information campaigns, and other measures were undertaken during the reporting period, and that between 2021 and 2022 the Labour Inspection held 215 meetings with employees, employers and the representatives of employers and employee organizations, where information related to equal remuneration was disseminated. Noting the Government's information according to which the courts have reported no cases regarding equal pay between men and women, the Committee recalls that when no cases or complaints are being lodged it is likely to indicate a lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in, or absence of practical access to procedures, or fear of reprisals (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 870). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) its efforts to train and raise awareness, not only of labour inspectors but also of judges, lawyers, public officials, workers, employers and their organizations, as well as the public, on the principle of the Convention; (ii) the different complaint mechanisms available; and (iii) any studies or information gathered on the practicability and accessibility of substantive and procedural provisions which allow claims to be brought. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on decisions handed down by the competent authorities or bodies about the application of the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that in 2020 the Government introduced a definition and prohibition of sexual harassment in the Labour Code and that it had noted that the definition does not cover the full range of behaviours that constitute sexual harassment in employment and occupation, that is, both: (1) quid pro quo (any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men which is unwelcome, unreasonable and offensive to the recipient; and a person's rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person's job); and (2) hostile work environment (conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient). The Government's report provides detailed information on the measures taken to prevent sexual harassment in the workplace and promote awareness on the newly adopted legislation and regulations, such as for example the fact that: (1) an electronic course on "Prevention of Sexual Harassment" was developed; (2) information meetings were held with representatives of self-government bodies, students, police officers, representatives of trade unions, labour inspectors, and private companies (human resources management departments); (3) a response mechanism to sexual harassment complaints has been developed by 17 State agencies; (4) regional meetings were organized to raise public awareness on the newly adopted regulations on sexual harassment; (5) in May 2022, the Government conducted, in cooperation with UN Women, a competency-building training on the topic of investigations focused on victims of sexual harassment for civil servants and representatives of state agencies who are directly involved in the implementation of the aforementioned mechanism; (6) a webinar was held on the following topic "Implementation of Legal Norms Regulating Sexual Harassment: Results Achieved and Challenges", which was aimed, on the one hand, at obtaining information about the progress in terms of implementation and, on the other hand, at identifying gaps in the enforcement of legal regulations; (7) in 2021, UN Women and the Civil Service Bureau conducted a study on workplace sexual harassment in the civil service, which helped in the development of the Sexual Harassment Prevention and Response Policies and Mechanisms; and (8) in 2022 meetings were held by the Labour Inspectorate with 1,200 business representatives in order to familiarize employers with legislative requirements related to labour issues, including sexual harassment and non-discrimination in the workplace.

The Committee notes that the Labour Inspectorate has been supervising labour rights, including in relation to discrimination, harassment and sexual harassment, since January 1, 2021, and that in the period from January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2022, four applications were received alleging workplace sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: in the first case, although there was a possible case of sexual harassment, the Labour Inspection Service did not have the authority to examine the legality of the employees' actions; in the second case, the complaint could not be examined due to the statute of limitations and the lack of subordination; in the third case, it seems that the applicant had to pay a fine; and in the fourth case, although the facts were established, the claim could not be examined due to the statute of limitations (an administrative fine was imposed nevertheless). The Committee notes that the Office of the Public Defender (Ombudsman) made a recommendation to establish sexual harassment in 7 cases out of the 14 cases it reviewed. With the recommendations issued, the Office of the Public Defender called on the harassers, whether at the workplace or in another field, asking them to refrain from committing sexual harassment and from creating an environment that is offensive, humiliating or inappropriate for people. It also addressed the recommendations to employers to: (1) effectively, timely and immediately study the alleged cases of sexual harassment; (2) develop sexual harassment prevention mechanisms to eliminate sexual harassment; and (3) work on raising awareness employees. In the remaining cases, a decision was made to terminate the proceedings (in 3 of these cases the applicants withdrew their complaints). The Committee wishes to recall that: (1) sexual harassment can be perpetrated by a person in a position of authority (subordination), but also a colleague, a subordinate or by a person with whom workers have contact as part of their job (a client, supplier, etc.); therefore, the scope of protection against sexual harassment should cover all workers, with respect to all spheres of employment and occupation, including vocational education and training, internships, access to employment and conditions of employment; (2) the absence or relatively low number of sexual harassment complaints does not necessarily indicate that this form of sex discrimination does not exist; rather, it is likely to reflect the lack of an appropriate legal framework, the lack of awareness, understanding and recognition of this form of sex discrimination among government officials, and workers and employers and their organizations, as well as the lack of access to, or the inadequacy of, complaints mechanisms and means of redress, or fear of reprisals; and (3) without a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, it remains doubtful whether the legislation effectively addresses all forms of sexual harassment (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 790–791). The Committee also notes that a workplace culture tolerating or implicitly encouraging sexual harassment may also discourage victims from trusting procedures and filing complaints. The Committee again asks the Government: (i) to take steps to include in the labour legislation a complete definition of sexual harassment (which includes both quid pro quo and hostile work environment, as well as harassment perpetrated not only by a person in a position of authority, but also by a colleague, a subordinate or by a person with whom workers have contact as part of their job), and to provide information on any progress made in this regard; (ii) to indicate the time limit to file a charge of discrimination at work in general, as well as in the specific case of harassment, and the measures taken to ensure that this information is largely disseminated; (iii) to continue providing information on any cases of sexual harassment dealt with by the courts or any other competent authorities, including information on the sanctions imposed and remedies granted; and (iv) to provide information on the findings and recommendations from the seminar on “Implementation of Legal Norms Regulating Sexual Harassment: Results Achieved and Challenges” and the study on workplace sexual harassment in the civil service carried out by UN Women and the Civil Service Bureau of Georgia.

Discrimination based on sexual orientation. The Government indicates that, during the period 2019–2022, the Labour Inspectorate considered only one complaint on the grounds of sexual orientation but that the legal standard in that case was not met, and that the Office of the Public Defender received three applications for which discrimination could not be established. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted the report of the United Nations Independent Expert on protection against violence and discrimination, which referred to the pervasiveness of discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity in the country, the existence of beatings, harassment and bullying, and the exclusion from education, work and health settings. It wishes thus to reiterate its statement above that the absence or relatively low number of complaints does not necessarily indicate that this form of discrimination does not exist. In view of the lack of information in this regard, the Committee asks again the Government to indicate any steps taken or envisaged to prevent and address discrimination based on sexual orientation in employment and occupation, including awareness-raising measures. Please continue to provide information on prosecutions brought and penalties imposed in case of proven discrimination based on sexual orientation.

Article 1(3). Discrimination in recruitment. The Committee notes that, with the 2020 Amendment to the Labour Code, the prohibition of discrimination has been expanded to the recruitment process. Section 11.1, previously section 5.1, now provides that “an employer may obtain information about a job candidate, except for information which is not related to the performance of the job or is not designed to evaluate the ability of a candidate to perform a specific job and to make an appropriate decision in respect thereof”. The Committee notes however that, under section 11.8, the employer is still not obliged to justify its decision to refuse to hire a candidate and that, in practice, this provision may affect women disproportionately because of their family responsibilities. The Government indicates that the Office of the Public Defender published guidelines for preventing discrimination in job postings and that, in 2021–2022, the Labour Inspection Service reviewed 62 cases of alleged discrimination in pre-contractual relations, which were concluded by the payment of a fine in one case and a warning in the remaining cases. From 2019 to 2022, the Office of the Public Defender received 20 cases, which outcomes included negotiating to conclude an employment contract; providing direction to amend hiring practices; and addressing a general proposal to various private companies to refrain from including discriminatory criteria in their posted job vacancies. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) its efforts to eliminate discriminatory practices in recruitment; (ii) the application of section 11.8 of the Labour Code in practice, in light of the fact that termination on discriminatory grounds is prohibited by the Convention; and (iii) the number and nature of cases handled by the Labour Inspection Service, the courts or the Office of the Public Defender regarding discrimination in pre-contractual relations, including the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee recalls that in 2019 the Gender Equality Council conducted thematic inquiries on vocational education and women's participation in State economic programs. Regarding vocational education, the Committee notes that the Government is implementing a social marketing campaign to attract women to vocational education and training (VET) in non-traditional or so called "male" skills areas, developing gender sensitive career guidance programs, and introducing mechanisms that strengthen women's participation in VET. Gender aspects were also taken into consideration to ensure a selection process free from gender stereotypes and biases and give students more chances to get an education in the professions they want, regardless of the established gender prejudices towards these professions. Additional services for women are offered in several colleges. Namely, VET colleges in Telavi (Prestige), Kobuleti (Akhali Talgha) and Alvani (Aisi) offer a specially equipped room for children of their students to accommodate needs of young parents. In order to ensure gender equality in the VET system and to strengthen gender issues in vocational education, a gender specialist has been contracted to gender audit all documents and action plans developed by the Skills' Agency. The Government indicates that, in the last six years, the gender distribution of VET students shows that the share of female students has changed somewhat. It also underlines that the representation of women is increasing in sectors such as electricity, mechanics and transport services, and the representation of men is increasing in healthcare, textile production, hotel, restaurant and catering.

With regard to the Government's efforts to promote women participation to the labour market, the Committee notes that in 2021, the Rural Development Agency started a new program, which provides financial and technical assistance to women in the municipalities of Marneuli and Lagodekhi, to organize a new greenhouse. The program aims to increase women's motivation to engage in agricultural activities and economic empowerment. It is worth mentioning that non-dominant ethnic groups mainly inhabit Marneuli. The evaluation reported several issues in the implementation process; therefore, the Gender Equality Council will be revisiting the monitoring process in the upcoming years to reflect on the outcomes. The Government indicates that, in recent years, it has noticed a growing interest for its women's economic empowerment program through entrepreneurship development. One of the goals of the micro and small entrepreneurship part of the state program "Enterprise Georgia" is to improve the economic status of women. In the framework of the micro and small entrepreneurship promotion program, additional benefit is provided when applied by women entrepreneurs, to encourage them as much as possible to start a business. The Committee notes the adoption of an Action Plan by the Civil Service Bureau aimed at establishing a gender-sensitive civil service system to enable the full and effective participation and leadership of women in decision-making processes; and the development of a 2022-2024 action plan and communication strategy by the Gender Equality Council.

The Committee however notes from the 2022 "Women and Men in Georgia" statistical publication, that women continue: (1) to have a higher unemployment rate, particularly those with higher education; (2) to be concentrated in lower paid sectors; and (3) to earn significantly less in each sector. It also notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) that women's representation at senior levels in the public service is critically low or has decreased (CEDAW/C/GEO/CO/6, 2 March 2023, paragraph 29). Finally, the Government points out that higher standards of maternity and parental leave that can be used by both parents were introduced in the recent amendments to the Labour Code to promote inter alia a more equitable sharing of family responsibilities between men and women and women participation to the labour market. In that regard, the Committee takes note in particular of section 22.2 of the Labour Code which states that, after the end of a period of maternity leave, parental leave, or newborn adoption leave, upon the request of the employee, the employer shall ensure that the qualifications of the employee are upgraded if this is necessary for the performance of the work under the employment agreement, and does not impose a disproportionate burden on the employer. In light of the statistical data provided on the situation of women in the labour market, the Committee asks the Government to: (i) step up its efforts to promote gender equality in employment and occupation and reduce occupational segregation; and (ii) to address existing stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities, and their role in the family. The Committee further asks the Government to provide information on the results of the Gender Equality Council Action Plan 2022-2024. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide detailed statistics about men and women in different occupations, including at the decision-making level, and in all sectors of the economy.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

Articles 1(a) and (b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. Private sector. For a number of years, the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is duly reflected in sections 10(b) and 68 of the Labour Act, 2003 (Act No. 651). The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that in the context of the current revision of the Labour Act, the Government has validated with the social partners the various comments and inputs received from the major stakeholders, as well as the Committee's request to include the principle of the Convention in its national legislation. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indications. The Committee firmly hopes that in the context of the revision of the Labour Act, the Government will take the necessary steps, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, to amend sections 10(b) and 68, to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention. The Committee also asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all components of remuneration enumerated in Article 1(a) of the Convention are included in the definition of "remuneration" for the purpose of the principle, and all categories of workers in the private sector are covered by the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, with the support of the ILO, the Labour Legislation Review Technical Committee is continuing the process of revision and will endorse the Committee's request that the new Labour Act includes as a minimum the seven prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, in particular "social origin" and "political opinion". The Committee asks the Government to provide information of the progress achieved towards the amendments of the relevant sections of the Labour Act of 2003, in order to include "social origin" and "political opinion" as prohibited grounds to be in full conformity with the Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Government indicates that, in the framework of the current review of the Labour Act of 2003, it will be considering amending section 175, which covers sexual harassment in a broad way, to ensure full conformity with the Convention, including by explicitly covering hostile environment sexual harassment. The Government also provides examples of awareness raising activities, such as a workshop held from 23 to 25 November 2022 for 45 labour inspectors on the topic of sexual harassment with the assistance of the non-governmental organization “Action Aid Ghana”, as well as workshops organized jointly with the social partners to sensitize stakeholders on the provisions of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The Government further refers to the existence of various complaint mechanisms and means of redress for victims of sexual harassment. For example, pursuant to section 17 of the Domestic Workers’ Regulations (DWR) a domestic worker may report a case of sexual harassment or domestic violence to the District Labour Officer, the Commission on Human Rights and Administrative Justice (CHRAJ) or the police. Pursuant to section 18 of the DWR, if a domestic worker terminates the employment due to sexual harassment or domestic violence and lodges a complaint with the District Labour Officer, the latter can direct the employer to pay to the domestic worker two months’ salary, any outstanding salary, the cost of accommodation for a month (in the case of live-in domestic workers) and other appropriate benefits. The domestic worker may also seek any other relief in court. Additionally, the Labour Department, the National Labour Commission (NLC), and the court of competent jurisdictions can handle cases of sexual harassment. While taking note of this information, the Committee notes that the Government’s report is silent on complaints in respect to sexual harassment that have been examined by the above-mentioned mechanisms. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken to amend section 175 of the Labour Act of 2003 so that it also covers hostile environment sexual harassment, and (ii) the number of complaints or cases of sexual harassment (including those lodged by domestic workers) dealt with by the District Labour Officer, the Commission on Human Rights and Administrative Justice (CHRAJ), the police, the Labour Department, the National Labour Commission (NLC), or the courts, as well as the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Article 2. National equality policy. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour, religion or national extraction. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no awareness raising activities have been undertaken on the issues of discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, religion, or national extraction since its last report. It also notes the Government’s request to benefit from the technical assistance of the ILO. The Committee stresses that Article 2 of the Convention requires Members to declare and pursue a national equality policy with a view to eliminate discrimination based on all the prohibited grounds listed in the Convention. In this regard, it wishes to point out that the Convention leaves considerable flexibility to each country regarding the most appropriate methods from the point of view of their nature and timing (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 734 and 849). The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to declare and pursue, in consultation with workers’ and employers’ organizations, a comprehensive national equality policy directed at addressing discrimination in employment and occupation based on all the grounds covered by Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as a minimum, by methods appropriate to national conditions and practice. The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

Enforcement. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, the Government has indicated that the labour inspection form was going to be amended to include a specific reference to discrimination on all the grounds listed in the Convention (including sexual harassment) to better assess the prevalence of discrimination at work. It notes the Government’s indication that no new labour inspection form has been adopted and no training has been conducted for labour inspectors, court officials and other authorities on the identification of cases of discrimination in employment and occupation as the Government had undertaken to do. The Committee notes that the Government is asking to benefit from the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard. The Committee asks the Government: (i) to speed up the adoption of a more targeted labour inspection form that will include specific reference to discrimination on the grounds listed in the Convention (including sexual harassment); (ii) to raise the capacity of enforcement officials and magistrates to identify and address discrimination in employment and occupation; and (iii) to provide information on the number of cases of discrimination in employment and occupation brought to or identified by the authorities, and their outcome (including information on sanctions imposed and remedies granted). Finally, the Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Anti-discrimination legislation. Civil service. In its previous comment, the Committee underlined that Act No. L/2014/072/CNT issuing the Labour Code of 2014 excludes public officials from its scope of application (section 2) and that section 11 of Act No. L/2001/028/AN of 31 December 2001 issuing the Civil Servants Regulations only prohibits discrimination between officials on the basis of political, trade union, philosophical or religious views, and on the basis of sex or ethnic origin. The Committee has been underlining in its comments since 1990 that the legal protection of public officials is inadequate both regarding the grounds of discrimination, since it does not cover discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction and social origin, and regarding the scope of application, as recruitment is not covered. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information concerning the protection of public officials from discrimination, and requests the Government to take the necessary steps, in the very near future, to amend section 11 of Act No. L/2001/028/AN issuing the Civil Servants Regulations, so as to ensure that civil servants and applicants to a post in the public service are effectively protected against any direct or indirect discrimination on the basis of at least the seven grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Government is requested to provide information on any measures taken in this regard and on any complaint mechanism enabling applicants for employment in the civil service to lodge an appeal if they consider that they have suffered discrimination during recruitment.

Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no information on sexual harassment. In that regard, it notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which emphasize that "the number of cases of violence against women, particularly [...] sexual violence, remains very high" (E/C.12/GIN/CO/1, 30 March 2020, paragraph 20). The Committee again requests the Government to take measures to: (i) prevent sexual harassment in employment and occupation, such as awareness-raising campaigns (for example, by radio or through other media) or reinforcing prevention activities by the labour inspectorate in this area; and (ii) inform workers, employers and their respective organizations of their rights and obligations in this area. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted for this purpose. The Government is once again requested to consider whether complaint and appeal mechanisms established at the national and enterprise levels are sufficiently accessible to complainants and whether they allow perpetrators of sexual harassment to be sanctioned. The Government is requested to provide information, as the case may be, on results obtained and the follow-up measures envisaged.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of anti-discrimination legislation addressing all aspects of employment and occupation and covering at least all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes the adoption in 2018 of two laws covering equal treatment and non-discrimination: (1) Act No. 85 on Equal Treatment irrespective of Racial and Ethnic Origin, which requires equal treatment of persons irrespective of their race and ethnic origin in all fields of society, with the exception of the labour market; and (2) Act No. 86 on Equal Treatment in the Labour Market. The Committee notes that section 1 of Act No. 86 provides for equal treatment of individuals on the labour market, irrespective of their race, ethnic origin, religion, life stance, disability, reduced working capacity, age, sexual orientation, gender identity, sexual characteristics or gender expression. The Act applies, inter alia, to: (a) access to jobs, self-employment or occupational sectors, including with regard to engagement and promotion; (b) access to educational and vocational counselling, vocational education and vocational training; (c) decisions in connection with wages, other terms of service and notice of termination; and (d) participation in workers' and employers' organizations, including the services that they provide for their members. The Committee welcomes the inclusion of a range of prohibited grounds of discrimination in Act No. 86, but observes that it does not cover all the grounds of discrimination listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, namely the grounds of colour, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend Act No. 86 to ensure the inclusion of all the prohibited grounds of discrimination enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, and particularly colour, political opinion, national extraction, and social origin.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1964)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the Labour Code provides that "skin colour, race, language and the like do not constitute any privilege or distinction" and "all individuals, whether men or women, are entitled to the same protection of the law". With reference to its previous comments and to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (June 2013), the Committee recalls that the adoption of a law on non-discrimination in employment and education had been envisaged and a Bill passed by the Parliament some ten years ago. It further recalls that over the years a number of bills, policies, plans and proposals had been referred to by the Government but have never come to fruition. In this context, the Committee notes with concern that, either through a national equality policy or through legislation, there is still no comprehensive protection of workers against discrimination based on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and covering all aspects of employment and occupation, including recruitment, in accordance with Article 1(3). In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention requires the State to review whether legislation is needed to secure the acceptance and observance of the principles of the Convention. The necessity of legislative measures to give effect to the Convention must thus be assessed within the framework of the national policy as a whole, having regard in particular to the other types of measures which may have been taken, and to the effectiveness of the overall action pursued, including whether there are adequate and effective means of redress and remedies. The enactment of constitutional or legislative provisions or regulations continues to be one of the most widely used means to give effect to the principles of the Convention (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 734–737). In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to take appropriate steps to ensure that effective and comprehensive legal protection for all workers is ensured, whether nationals or foreigners, against direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including political opinion, religion, national extraction and social origin, and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, including access to vocational training and employment. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken to that end and their outcome.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3(c). Discrimination based on sex. Legal restrictions on women's employment. The Committee recalls that since 1996, it has been asking the Government to repeal or amend section 1117 of the Civil Code, which allows a husband to prevent his wife from engaging in an occupation or technical profession which, in his view, is incompatible with the family's interests or his dignity or the dignity of his wife. Recalling that, pursuant to Article 3(c) of the Convention, ratifying States undertake to repeal any statutory provisions and modify any administrative instructions or practices which are inconsistent with the equality policy, the Committee notes once again with deep regret that there has been no significant development in this regard. It notes, however, the Government's indication, in its report, that "the issue of addressing ambiguity or amendment of article 1117 of the Civil Code is still on the Government's agenda" and "is under consideration by the Judiciary in close collaboration with the Government". The Government also indicates that the Bill for the Amendment of certain provisions of the Family Protection Act of 2012 provides, in its section 7, that "[i]f the wife is employed prior to marriage and the husband is informed or ask employment to be a condition within the marriage contract, or the future employment of the wife is inferred from the wife's status and the husband has not conditioned prohibition of employment, or in cases where the husband after marriage has agreed with the employment of the wife, the husband's lawsuit regarding employment prohibition against the wife is not admissible". While taking note of this draft provision that could mitigate some of the effects of section 1117 of the Civil Code on women's access to employment in certain cases if it is adopted and applied in practice, the Committee strongly urges the Government, once again, to take the necessary measures to repeal section 1117 of the Civil Code to ensure that women have the right, in law and in practice, to freely pursue any job or occupation of their own choosing, in accordance with the Convention. To be able to assess the impact of section 1117 of the Civil Code on women's employment in practice, it asks the Government to provide information on the number, nature and result of cases in which a husband has invoked section 1117 of the Civil Code to oppose his wife's engagement in an occupation.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that all forms of harassment at work, whether in the form of sexual harassment from a superior or hostile work environment, are prohibited and, according to criminal law, any sexual assault, harm, harassment and violence is recognized as a crime and penalties exist for it. The Government adds that: (1) complaints regarding any kind of sexual harassment, harm and violence are addressed by criminal courts; (2) the non-governmental organizations active in supporting women can lodge complaints for women with the competent judicial authorities and be present during proceedings; and (3) a trained woman officer will be responsible for investigating a woman's case. The Committee notes this information and the Government's indication that it has translated the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), and its accompanying Recommendation No. 206, and had them disseminated in both the private and public sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Protection, Dignity and Security of Women against Violence Bill was: (1) approved on 14 January 2021 by the Government and the President; (2) sent to Parliament for approval; and (3) referred to the Legal and Judiciary Committee of Parliament for examination. It further notes the Government's indication that the legal, policy and executive measures it has taken on sexual harassment at the workplace include: (1) the organization of awareness-raising activities with employed women; (2) the setting up of a task force on women's security at the workplace; (3) the pilot implementation of a women's security plan at the workplace in the Judiciary; and (4) the proposal to include women's security at the workplace (i.e. no violence and no sexual harassment at the workplace) in the gender equity indicators under article 101 of the 6th Development Plan as well as the draft 7th Development Plan.

In this regard, the Committee considers that, to prevent and address effectively all forms of sexual harassment in employment and occupation and protect workers against such practices, explicit and comprehensive legislation, applicable to both women and men workers and taking into account the specificities of the workplace, including the fear of losing their job and therefore their earnings, is necessary and would enable workers to avail themselves more efficiently of their right to a workplace free from sexual harassment. In this regard, the Committee recalls that addressing sexual harassment only through criminal proceedings is normally not sufficient, due to the sensitivity of the issue, the higher burden of proof, which is harder to meet, especially if there are no witnesses (which is often the case), and the fact that criminal law generally focuses on sexual assault or "immoral acts", and not the full range of behaviour that constitutes sexual harassment in employment and occupation (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 792). While noting the steps taken by the Government on "women's security", the Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that clear and comprehensive legal provisions aimed at preventing and addressing all forms of sexual harassment against all workers not only by a person in a position of authority but also by a colleague or a person with whom workers have contact as part of their job (client, supplier, etc.), including provisions against victimization, appropriate complaint mechanisms and procedures, sanctions and remedies, are included in the Labour Code. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the adoption and implementation of the Protection, Dignity and Security of Women against Violence Bill and to provide information on the manner in which sexual harassment in employment and occupation is addressed, and to specify the relevant provisions. Finally, the Committee asks the Government to continue undertaking specific activities to prevent sexual harassment at work, through the Committee for Prevention of Violence and the Special Taskforce on the security of women at the workplace, including awareness-raising campaigns at both the national and workplace levels in the public and private sectors.

Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee takes due note of the detailed statistics provided by the Government, disaggregated by major occupational group, regarding the employment of men and women in the private and public sectors in 2019. It notes that, according to this data, women represented 16.2 per cent of employees in the private sector and 36.6 per cent in the public sector. The Committee also notes the data concerning the number of women judges. In addition, it takes note of the information on the situation of women in employment provided by the Government to the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee in its fourth periodic report under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The Government indicates that: (1) the rate of women's economic participation has increased from 12.4 per cent in 2013 to 16.4 per cent in 2018; (2) the number of women working in governmental organizations has increased from 34.64 per cent in 2009 to 41.67 per cent in 2018; (3) more than 4,000 women active entrepreneurs; (4) by 2018, 223 centres had been established and are operating throughout the country, of which about 20 per cent are managed by women entrepreneurs; (5) between 2011 and 2019, a total of 523,371 companies and institutions were registered by women (CCPR/C/IRN/4, 23 August 2021, paragraph 20). The Committee recalls that it previously noted the Government's indication that women's economic participation was 17.3 per cent in 2016, which seems to indicate that their level of participation fell in 2018 (16.4 per cent) and clearly shows that women's participation in the labour market remains very low and change is occurring slowly. It further notes from the Report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran that "women's access to formal employment is restricted, with 29.7 per cent of women between the ages of 18 and 35 being unemployed in 2019. Despite major advances in education, female labour force participation in the country is 17 per cent. The majority of working women are employed in the informal sector with minimal labour law protection; female university graduates make up 67.5 per cent of all unemployed individuals. Women from minority backgrounds face intersectional discrimination, with the highest unemployment rates found in provinces where the majority of the population are from ethnic and religious minorities" (A/HRC/46/50, 11 January 2021, paragraph 57). The Committee also notes, from the 2021 Report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran that, "between December 2019 and December 2020, the annual rate of individual economic activity fell by 2.9 per cent with close to 1.5 million people leaving the job market, the vast majority of them women" (A/HRC/47/22, 14 May 2021, paragraph 53). In addition, the Committee recalls that, in its previous comment, it noted that the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran regretted that discrimination on the basis of gender pervades society and that the pace of change concerning the protection of women from discrimination was slow (A/75/213, 21 July 2020, paragraph 46), and that discrimination in the job market continued to prohibit women from working in certain professions (A/HRC/37/68, 5 March 2018, paragraph 63).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it is identifying and supporting capable women with a view to recruiting them into management positions, thereby implementing the 30 per cent employment quota, and that it has set up a database in order to increase women's share in such positions. The Government adds that it has organized tens of specialized training workshops, including on marketing, production, sales, entrepreneurship, innovation, for 53,000 female graduates in order to facilitate their access to employment. Since 2000, it has been implementing the Plan on rural and tribal women micro-credit funds, with more than 2,200 micro-credit rural funds active, covering about 100,000 members (direct beneficiaries) and 300,000 others (indirect beneficiaries), as well as other plans to develop micro-businesses and sustainable farming. The Government also indicates that technical economic working groups to manage the damage caused by the COVID-19 pandemic on the status of women's production units and home workshops were set up, and support was provided for home businesses and production units during the pandemic. With regard to technical and vocational training, the Committee notes from the data provided by the Government, that female students represented 37.5 per cent of total students in 2019–20. In light of the above and the persistent low participation rates of women in the labour market, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to: (i) address actively the obstacles that exist in law and practice to women's access to the labour market, including prejudice and stereotypes regarding women's aspirations and capabilities, their suitability for certain jobs or their interest or availability for full-time jobs; (ii) continue to promote and encourage the participation of women in the labour market in a wider range of occupations at all levels on an equal basis with men; and (iii) continue to provide up-to-date statistics disaggregated by sex and occupation in both the public and private sectors. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to that end and the results achieved on the equal participation of women in the labour market in all sectors of the economy.

Draft Comprehensive Population and Family Excellence Plan and other measures. In its previous comment, the Committee took note of the new draft of the Comprehensive Population and Family Excellence Plan (Bill No. 264) with the same objective as the former Bill, which is to achieve a fertility rate of 2.5 children per woman by 2025. The Committee recalls that Bill No. 264 maintains some of the hiring priorities: section 10 provides that governmental and non-governmental departments shall give priority in employment to married men with children and to married men without children, and the employment of single persons is permitted only in the absence of qualified married applicants. It further recalls that it expressed its concern on the approach taken to restrict women's access to employment in Bill No. 264, and particularly that of single women and women without children, in contravention of the protection against discrimination set out in the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government also emphasizes that the right of women after their maternity leave to return to their job is protected by labour inspectors and the courts. It takes note of the Government's indication that the draft Comprehensive Population and Family Excellence Plan is still under consideration. In light of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the measures taken to promote population policies and maternity protection do not constitute obstacles to the employment of women in practice. More specifically, the Committee asks the Government to ensure that all of the restrictions on women's employment and the prioritization of men's employment in draft Bill No. 264 are removed from the Comprehensive Population and Family Excellence Plan. In the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that restrictive measures are not taken in practice through the introduction of quotas which serve to limit women's employment in the public sector. It asks the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the adoption of the Comprehensive Population and Family Excellence Plan and its content regarding gender equality.

Discrimination based on religion and ethnicity. With regard to its previous comments on the situation of non-recognized minorities and the practical impact of the Selection Law based on Religious and Ethical Standards, 1995, which requires prospective state officials and employees to demonstrate allegiance to the state religion (gozinesh), the Committee notes the Government's repeated statement that the education, employment and occupation of religious minorities are protected in law and in practice. The Government adds that, according to the Constitution, religious minorities enjoy the right to education; they can freely study at regular schools, as well as in their special schools, and teach their religious studies and enjoy their own local and ethnic language in press, media and schools. It further indicates that religious minorities are entitled to participate in Islamic labour councils, and the role of the Special Adviser to the President for religious and ethnic minority affairs is to help the President make decisions to facilitate the affairs of ethnic groups and religious minorities. While noting this general information, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any reply to its previous requests regarding the practical impact of the Selection Law on the access to employment of members of religious minorities and the situation of non-recognized religious minorities. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to eliminate discrimination in law and practice against members of religious minorities, especially non-recognized religious groups, in education, employment and occupation, and to adopt measures to foster respect and tolerance of all religious groups in society. The Committee once again asks the Government to consider amending or repealing the Selection Law in order to ensure that people from all religions and ethnic backgrounds have equal access to employment and opportunities in both the public and private sectors, as well as to training and educational institutions. Noting once again the lack of information communicated in this regard, the Committee again asks the Government to provide information on the labour market participation rates of men and women from religious minorities in the public and private sectors.

Article 3(a). Social dialogue. Further to its request regarding activities and efforts for cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations to promote the application of the Convention, the Government indicates that it monitors the application of ILO conventions by organizing tripartite meetings and continues to consult workers' and employers' organizations and "other beneficiary organizations on various grounds and occasions, including during phases of formulating laws and regulations". While noting this general information, the Committee encourages the Government to formulate and adopt awareness-raising, training and capacity-building measures aimed at employers and workers and their respective organizations to promote equality in employment and occupation and a better understanding of how to identify and address discrimination. It asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken to that end.

Enforcement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that petitions, claims and disputes lodged with the courts and the Administrative Court of Justice are not registered under the heading of "discrimination in employment and occupation", and it is therefore impossible to provide exact data and statistics on litigation regarding this issue. In this regard, the Committee stresses the need to collect and publish information on the nature and outcome of discrimination complaints and cases as a means of raising awareness of the legislation and of the avenues for dispute resolution, and in order to examine the effectiveness of the procedures and mechanisms (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 871). Recalling that data collection and analysis is an important aspect of monitoring the implementation of the Convention in practice and is necessary to determine whether the measures taken have had a positive impact on actual situations and to inform future decisions, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to begin compiling information on the number and nature of claims and disputes relating to discrimination in employment and occupation filed with the competent authorities and to provide such information, when it is available.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Japan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) and the Japan Business Federation (NIPPON KEIDANREN) communicated with the Government's report. It further notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) received on 11 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes, including legislative developments on disclosure of information on wages. The Committee welcomes the detailed statistical information provided by the Government concerning men's and women's earnings. It observes that, although the average gap in the earnings of men and women in all occupations has been decreasing since 1989 (39.4 per cent) it is still significant with an average gap of 22.4 per cent in 2021. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the JTUC-RENGO states that: (1) women's wages amounted to 75.2 per cent of men's wages in 2021 (a gender wage gap of 24.8 per cent); and (2) the gender wage gap is very high compared to other developed countries. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) refers to statistical information from the National Tax Agency Survey (2021) according to which the average yearly salary of workers is 5.45 million yen for men (US$36,538,16) and 3.02 million yen for women (US$20,247,89). With respect to the underlying causes of the gender pay gap, the Committee further notes that: (1) the NIPPON KEIDANREN explains that the gender pay gap is mainly caused by differences in job rank and length of service and suggests improving the ratio of female executive or managers and reducing the gender gap in length of service; and (2) the ZENROREN attributes the gender pay gap to a range of factors, including the imposition of long working hours on men and precarious work on women based on the employment model which considers men as the breadwinner in the family.

Regarding the legal framework and its developments, the Committee welcomes the following measures taken by the Government to address some of the issues leading to the gender pay gap, including reconciliation of work and family responsibilities and occupational gender segregation: (1) the revision of the Child Care and Family Care Leave Act, in 2021, to establish a flexible child care leave framework ("postnatal father child care leave"), and similar revisions of laws and regulations in the public sector according to the Government's report; and (2) the formulation in 2022 of the "Plan for Female Digital Human Resource Development" to promote labour mobility, which includes subsidies for employers who work to convert non-regular workers (who are mainly women) into regular workers, and improve their wages. The Committee recalls that the Act on the Promotion of Women's Active Engagement in Professional Life No. 64 of 2015, (hereinafter "the Women's Advancement Promotion Act") requires private-sector employers with more than 300 regularly employed workers to identify and analyse the status of the active participation of female workers, including the differences between women and men in the ratio of management positions and length of service, which are considered as principal drivers of the wage gap between men and women, and to develop action plans including setting numerical targets based on such analyses. The Committee notes with interest the revision of the Women's Advancement Promotion Act, by Act No. 24 of 2019 which: (1) extends the obligation of analysing the active participation of female workers to employers of more than 100 regularly employed workers; and (2) provides that the information disclosed will contribute to enhance work-life balance for female workers. In addition, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, in July 2022, the Women's Advancement Promotion Act was amended by Ministerial Ordinance of MHLW No. 104 of 2022, to require private employers with more than 300 regularly employed workers to disclose "differences in wages between men and women" in addition to the 2015 obligation to analyse the active participation of female workers. The Committee observes that the JTUC-RENGO reiterates that this measure is limited (as approximately nine out of ten enterprises in Japan are medium or small-sized) and suggests extending this obligation to all employers regardless of the scale of their business. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the same obligation is imposed on the public sector.

As regard measures to collect data on wage gaps in the public sector, the Government also indicates that: (1) in December 2022, the system based on the Women's Advancement Promotion Act was revised, and the "difference between male and female employees' wages" was newly positioned as an item for essential status monitoring, analysis and information publication at each national and local government agencies; and (2) the information will be made public in 2023.

Finally, the Committee notes that, in its observations, the NIPPON KEIDANREN indicates that: (1) it organized seminars and shared good practices to encourage men to take childcare leave and better balance work–life obligations; (2) it has been supporting companies by providing seminars and human resource development programs with the aim of increasing the share of female executive to more than 30 per cent by 2030; and (3) it is publishing an annual position paper calling on companies to review and improve the treatment of employees with reference to Government guidelines and court precedents to ensure fair treatment regardless of employment status. Given the persistence of a significant gender pay gap in the country, the Committee asks the Government to continue to take proactive measures, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, with a view to reducing the gender pay gap by addressing its underlying causes, including horizontal and vertical occupational gender segregation, issues relating to the length of service and to the reconciliation of work and family. It asks the Government to continue to provide: (i) information on any follow-up given to the suggestion of the JTUC-RENGO to extend the obligation of disclosing wage differences to workplaces with less than 300 employees; and statistical information, disaggregated by sector of the economy, on the earnings of men and women and the gender wage gap to monitor the progress achieved.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Work of equal value. Legislation. With regard to the legal framework, the Committee notes once again the Government's reference in its report to the following provisions: (1) section 4 of the Labour Standards Act, which provides that "an employer shall not engage in discriminatory treatment of a woman as compared to a man with respect to wages by reason of the worker being a woman"; and (2) sections 6, 7 and 8 of the Equal Employment Opportunity Act (Act No. 113 of 1972) (EEOL), as amended, which prohibit inter alia discrimination on the basis of sex in terms of loans for housing. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) as long as the payroll system does not allow discrimination in wages between men and women based only on the sex of the worker, it meets the requirements of the Convention; and (2) this interpretation has been retained since the ratification of the Convention. The Committee takes due note of the Government's views. However, it is bound to reiterate that the protection against sex-based wage discrimination in the national legal framework is too limited because it does not capture the concept of work of equal value, which is fundamental to address the gender pay gap and tackle horizontal and vertical occupational gender segregation in the labour market. In that regard, the Committee recalls that, due to historical attitudes and stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and capabilities, certain jobs are held predominantly or exclusively by women (such as in caring professions) and others by men (such as in construction). Women are also often concentrated at the lower levels of certain enterprises, sectors or occupations. Often "female jobs" are undervalued in comparison with work of equal value performed by men when determining wage rates. The concept of work of equal value permits a broad scope of comparison between jobs. It includes but goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value overall. The concept of "equal value" requires some method of measuring and comparing the relative value of different jobs. There needs to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria to avoid the assessment being tainted by gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, Article 3 of the Convention presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673–676 and 695, see also "Promoting Equity: Gender-neutral job evaluation for equal pay – A step-by-step guide", pages 25–41). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the current legislation with a view to establishing the right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal 'value' as enshrined in the Convention as well as appropriate monitoring and enforcement procedures and adequate remedies. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures taken or envisaged in this regard; and (ii) any judicial or administrative decisions relating to pay inequalities between women and men.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Definition and prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation and practice. With reference to its previous request to the Government to explicitly prohibit direct and indirect discrimination based on race, sex, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, and covering all workers, the Committee notes once again the Government's reiterated reference in its report to sections 2, 6 and 46 of Labour Law No. 6 of 2010. The Committee takes note of Ministerial Decision No. 177/2021 (complementing the Labour Law No. 6 of 2010) which prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex, age, pregnancy or social status in all aspects of employment (section 1). While observing that additional grounds of discrimination have been added in legislation, the Committee notes that the Labour Law, as amended, does not: (1) mention all seven grounds of discrimination formally listed in the Convention; and (2) provide a comprehensive definition of discrimination, as well as a prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to: (i) explicitly prohibit in the Labour Law direct and indirect discrimination based on race, sex, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, including recruitment, and covering all workers; and (ii) ensure that all workers are protected in practice against all forms of discrimination in employment and occupation and provide full information in this respect. In light of the absence of a definition of "social status" in the legislation, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the interpretation of this ground of discrimination, and if possible, copy of any administrative or judicial decision interpreting the meaning of the ground of "social status".

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the adoption of Ministerial Decision No. 177/2021, Prohibiting Discrimination in Employment in the Private Sector and Prohibiting Sexual Harassment in Workplaces (which provides that "sexual harassment in the workplace is prohibited in all its forms and means, including by means of new technological methods"). Regarding the procedure to be followed and penalties applied in cases of sexual harassment, the Committee notes that such Decision refers to sections 198 and 199 of the Penal Code, which state that the penalty for a sexual harassment offence ranges from a fine to imprisonment of up to five years. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no case of sexual harassment has been signalled during the reported period. In this regard, the Committee wishes to point out that the absence or a low number of complaints regarding sexual harassment does not necessarily indicate that this form of sex discrimination does not exist. Rather, it is likely to reflect the lack of an appropriate legal framework, the lack of awareness, understanding and recognition of this form of sex discrimination among government officials, and workers and employers and their organizations, as well as the lack of access to or the inadequacy of complaints mechanisms and means of redress, or fear of reprisals (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 790). Furthermore, it recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in sexual harassment cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that, in addition to the prohibition of sexual harassment, the Labour Law provides for a comprehensive definition that includes both forms of sexual harassment (quid pro quo and hostile work environment) in employment and occupation. It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any awareness-raising activities undertaken on sexual harassment in employment and occupation and on the social stigma attached to this issue, directed to workers, employers and their respective organizations, as well as to law enforcement officials; and (ii) the number of complaints of sexual harassment referred to the competent authorities, and their outcome (sanctions imposed and remedies granted). Finally, the Committee encourages the Government to identify and address the causes for underreporting.

Migrant workers. Sponsorship system. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to section 1 of Administrative Decision No. 712/2017 on the transfer of employment for workers in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), a transfer is permitted only within the SMEs sector, after three years of continuous employment and with the approval of the employer. Also, pursuant to section 2 of Administrative Decision No. 842/2015, private sector workers who work on government-contracted projects are permitted to transfer only to another government-contracted project implemented by the same sponsor and only after the end of the contract. Transfer without permission of the employer is permitted only after three years from the issuance of the work permit. If the worker wishes to transfer prior to the end of this period without the consent of the original employer, he or she shall file a complaint with the Public Authority for Manpower (PAM) (Section 6 of Administrative Decision No. 842/2015). The Committee notes that no complaints on discrimination and abuse of migrant workers were recorded during the reporting period. The Committee stresses again that, where a system of employment of migrant workers provides employers with the opportunity to exert disproportionate power over them, this could result in discrimination based on the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including race, colour, national extraction and sex (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 779). The Committee notes that the Government's report is silent on any measures taken or envisaged to review the sponsorship system. The Committee urges the Government to take proactive steps and address this issue, for example, by reducing the period before a migrant worker has the right to transfer to another employer without the approval of the current employer. Once again, it asks the Government to take proactive steps to ensure that all migrant workers, including women migrant workers, enjoy effective protection against discrimination on the grounds set out in the Convention, namely race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, social origin, and national extraction. The Committee also asks the Government to provide statistical information on the number of men and women workers who have submitted complaints against their employers or sponsors regarding discrimination and abuse, and the outcome of such cases, indicating whether they have requested and been granted a change of workplace.

Discrimination on the basis of national extraction. Stateless persons or residents without nationality (Bidoons). The Committee notes the statistical information submitted by the Government according to which 7934 stateless persons were appointed to government Ministries between 2011 and 2023 (2087 to the Ministry of Health, 1022 to the Ministry of Education, and 4825 to the Ministry of Defence). The Committee observes that the Government does not indicate how "illegal residents" (referred as such by the Government) are protected against discrimination in employment and occupation, but only informs on how jobs are being provided for stateless people in response to the needs of the labour market. The Committee further notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its 2021 concluding observations, about the slow progress made in the implementation of its previous recommendations regarding the recognition of the status of Bidoon so that they can fully enjoy their economic, social and cultural rights, without discrimination (E/C.12/KWT/CO/3, 3 November 2021, paragraph 16). The Committee asks the Government to indicate whether the stateless persons or residents without nationality (Bidoons), who were appointed in Government Ministries, have since been granted a residence permit or regularized, to ensure that their migration status or lack of documentation do not exacerbate their vulnerability to discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee also asks the Government to indicate the number of stateless persons or residents without nationality (Bidoons) whose situation has not yet been addressed.

Article 2. National equality policy. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to formulate, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, and adopt a comprehensive national equality policy, that is, namely covering: (i) all grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation prohibited by the Convention, (ii) all workers, (iii) all sectors of activity, and (iv) all aspects of employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development made in this regard.

Article 5. Special protection measures. Work prohibited for women. Regarding the prohibition of night work for women and work that is hazardous, arduous or harmful to health or violates public morals (sections 22 and 23 of the Labour Law), the Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that measures applicable to women are limited to maternity protection in the strict sense or based on occupational safety and health risk assessments, and do not constitute obstacles to the employment of women. Noting that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect, the Committee urges once again the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any restrictions on women's access to work based on health and safety considerations be justified and based on scientific evidence and, when in place, be periodically reviewed in light of technological developments and scientific progress, to determine whether they are still necessary for protection purposes and do not constitute obstacles to the employment of women.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2008)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that it considers the Law on the Development and Protection of Women of 2004 (LDPW) to be compliant with the principle of the Convention. However, the Committee recalls that section 15 of the LDPW provides for equal remuneration "for men and women who perform the same work's value at the same labour unit". The Committee also notes that new section 104 of the Labour Law 2014 only provides for equal salaries or wages between men and women. The Committee therefore once again draws the attention of the Government to the fact that only providing for equal salaries or wages between men and women generally may not be sufficient to give effect to the Convention as it does not capture the concept of "work of equal value". The Committee recalls that the concept of "work of equal value" set out in the Convention permits a broad scope of comparison, including that it goes beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, but also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal "value". Moreover, application of the Convention is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the "same labour unit", and allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or enterprises, or between different employers (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673 and 697). The Committee therefore asks the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the wording of section 104 of the Labour Law 2014 and section 15 of the LDPW so as to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the progress achieved in this regard; and (ii) the application in practice of these provisions, by providing examples of cases relating to unequal pay which have been brought to the courts.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee notes that, once again, the Government does not provide any new information. In this regard, it wishes to recall that the concept of "equal value" requires some method of measuring and comparing the relative value of different jobs. There needs to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria to avoid the assessment being tainted by gender bias. Article 3 of the Convention presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 695). The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations: (i) to promote objective job evaluation methods free from gender bias, in the public and private sectors, such as, for example, identifying and eliminating stereotypes and prejudices with regard to the value of women's work, in particular in occupations dominated by a female workforce (healthcare, cleaning, teaching, clerical support, food preparation, etc.); and (ii) to systematically ensure that gender-neutral terminology is used in defining the various jobs and classifications in collective agreements. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard. It recalls that the Government may avail itself, if it so wishes, of ILO technical assistance for this purpose.

Article 4. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication that collective bargaining does not address the classification of jobs of men and women. In that regard, the Committee wishes to recall that, where a Member State is in a position to intervene in the wage-fixing process, or where there is specific legislation on the issue, or relating to equality and non-discrimination with respect to remuneration, it has a special obligation to ensure the wage-fixing machinery is free from gender bias. Where a Member State is not in a position to ensure its application, it must nevertheless promote the application of the principle of the Convention (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 670 and 680). The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to take steps, in cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations, to ensure that collective agreements vigorously and proactively promote the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2008)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislation. Scope of application. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that it adopted Ministerial Decision on Domestic Workers No. 4369/MOLSW on 2 November 2022. It notes however that the Government does not provide information on its contents. Recalling that section 6 of the Labour Law 2014 excludes domestic workers from its application, the Committee asks the Government to identify the specific provisions, in the Ministerial Decision on Domestic Workers No. 4369/MOLSW and in any other applicable regulations, that protect domestic workers from discrimination in employment and occupation on the grounds set out in the Convention. In addition, noting that the Government does not provide information on the protection of civil servants from discrimination, and recalling that the Labour Law 2014 excludes civil servants from its application, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the Law on Government Officials No. 74/NA of 2015 and to identify the specific provisions that protect civil servants from discrimination in employment and occupation on the grounds set out in the Convention.

Article 1(1)(a). Prohibition of discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's statement that a new section 96 on gender equality in the workplace was introduced in the Labour Law 2014, but that the Government does not provide information on its content. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that, through the Labour Development Plan 2026-2030, the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare plans to amend the Labour Law 2014. The Committee notes with concern that, once again, the Government has not taken any steps to put its legislation in conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to: (i) clearly define direct and indirect discrimination prohibited by sections 3(28) and 141(9) of the Labour Law; (ii) expressly prohibit discrimination on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention; and (iii) provide information on the progress achieved to this end. Also, the Committee asks again the Government to: (i) clarify whether the prohibition of discrimination contained in the Labour Law concerns both employment and occupation and applies equally to employers and employees; and (ii) provide information on the content of the new section 96 of the Labour Law.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not reply to its previous requests and merely indicates that it intends to amend the Labour Law 2014. The Committee therefore urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to define, prevent and prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation including, both, quid pro quo (blackmail) and hostile environment sexual harassment; (ii) provide for adequate sanctions and remedies; and (iii) provide information on the progress achieved in this regard. In addition, recalling that a legislation under which the sole redress available to victims of sexual harassment is the possibility to resign does not afford sufficient protection for victims of sexual harassment, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of: (i) section 83(4) of the Labour Law, which allows a worker to bring an end to the employment contract in the event of sexual harassment; and (ii) section 141(4) which prohibits employers from violating the personal rights of employees, including with respect to cases of sexual harassment.

Article 1(1)(b). Additional grounds of discrimination. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that it introduced a new section 69 to the Labour Law 2014, which provides for equality between foreign workers and Lao workers "when undertaking the same work at the same standard of labour and under the same working conditions, including salary or wages". However, the Committee notes with regret that once again the Government does not reply to its previous requests and refers to paragraph 808 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, with a view to maintaining the same level of protection against discrimination on the basis of nationality, age or socio-economic status as previously contained in the Labour Law 2007 with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation.

Article 4. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. The Committee notes with concern the Government's reiterated statement that there is no information available on this point. Recalling that it has been raising this issue since 2011, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to collect information on the application in practice of section 117 of the Penal Law 2017, which establishes a broad prohibition of activities considered to be prejudicial to the security of the State, including "propaganda activities". It requests the Government to indicate the steps taken to ensure that these provisions do not, in practice, result in discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of political opinion, including information on any complaints made by employees or extracts of any court decisions in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee notes that the study to be undertaken by the Ministry of Welfare on the extent and causes of wage differentials between men and women was not conducted in 2020 due to the lack of funding, and that a study on the pay gap between women and men is planned for 2024. It notes from the Government's report (Annex 2) that in 2022 the gender pay differential in gross monthly earnings was 16.4 per cent in favour of men, up from 13.3 in 2021, and that in some sectors the disparity was extremely high including 53 per cent (sports activities and amusement and recreation activities), 37.8 per cent (telecommunications), 37.6 per cent (insurance, reinsurance and pension funding), 33 per cent (financial and insurance activities), and 26.8 per cent (scientific research and development). It further notes that Eurostat 2021 data show that, while across most European countries the unadjusted gender pay gap is lowest for the younger population and increases with age, in Latvia, the trend is reversed, higher in those aged 25–44, and decreasing for older Latvians; and that Latvia has the highest unadjusted gender pay gap in Europe for those aged 25–34 (19.1 per cent) and 34–44 (22.3 per cent) (Gender Pay Gap Statistics). In addition, the Committee notes the concern of the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights about the persistent gender pay gap and that the majority of women continue to work in sectors with a low average wage, including the hospitality sector and domestic work; and that despite efforts undertaken by the State party, women are still underrepresented in senior and decision-making positions in both the private and public sectors, including in the civil service (E/C.12/LVA/CO/2, 30 March 2021, paragraph 20). It also takes note of the adoption in May 2023 of the European Union Directive 2023/970 to strengthen the application of the principle of equal pay for equal work or work of equal "value" between men and women through pay transparency and enforcement mechanisms. This directive, which is applicable to public and private sectors, aims to combat pay discrimination and help close the gender pay gap in the EU. Under the new rules, EU companies will be required to share information on salaries and act if their gender pay gap exceeds 5 per cent. The directive also includes provisions on compensation for victims of pay discrimination and penalties, including fines, for employers who break the rules. The Government indicates that an evaluation to transpose the EU Directive is underway and that there is a pilot project in development: (1) to identify pay transparency issues, (2) what type of pay models exist in companies and organizations, and (3) to identify possible solutions to implement the principle of wage transparency. The Committee further notes the adoption of the Plan for Promotion of Equal Rights and Opportunities for Women and Men 2021–2023, and that the Ministry of Welfare, together with the Institute of Corporate Sustainability and Responsibility, organized seminars in 2021 and 2022 on the most effective ways of bridging the pay gap. It also notes that the focus of career week in 2021 was "Information and Communication Technology (ICT) for Your Career" with a special focus on gender equality, promotion of women's career opportunities in the field of ICT and addressing stereotypes about ICT as a males' profession. The Committee notes the efforts of the Government to bridge the digital gender divide, through the development of digital skills and that women were more active than men in applying for the programmes. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the findings of the planned 2024 study on the pay gap between women and men, the pilot project to identify pay transparency issues and the evaluation of the legal aspects of the Directive 2023/970 for transposition, as well as on any recommendations made based on these findings. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures and activities undertaken: (i) to address the gender pay gap, including horizontal and vertical occupational segregation; and (ii) to promote better access to the labour market and jobs with career prospects and higher pay for disadvantaged groups of women, such as Roma women or women belonging to other ethnic minority groups, rural women, women with disabilities. Finally, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide statistical data on the earnings of men and women, disaggregated by economic activity and occupation, both in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

Article 1(2) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of national extraction. Inherent requirements of the job. The Committee recalls that, for many years, it has been expressing concern at the discriminatory impact that the language requirements set out in the Law on State Language of 1999 may have on the employment or occupational opportunities of minority groups, in particular the large Russian-speaking minority. Section 6(2) of the Law provides that employees of private institutions, organizations and enterprises, and self-employed persons, shall use the official language if their activities affect the “lawful interests of the public”. The Committee observed that this requirement affects a large number of posts and occupations (public security, health, morality, health care, protection of consumer rights and employment rights, safety in the workplace and supervision of public administration). Consequently, the Committee requested the Government to consider drawing up a list of occupations for which the use of the official language is required under section 6(2) of the Law on State Language, so as to limit it to cases where language is an inherent requirement of the job. It notes with regret the absence of information in the report of the Government on measures taken to limit the list of occupations for which the use of the official language is required under the Law. The Committee notes that, in the 2020 survey published by the Ombudsman entitled, ‘On the prevalence of discrimination in employment: comparative report 2011 and 2020’, it was found that Russian speakers participating in the study stressed ethnic origin and language proficiency more frequently than other respondents as the most widespread ground of discrimination in employment. It also takes note of: (1) the Constitutional court cases from 2019 and 2020 which found the Law on State Language to be constitutional; (2) the detailed information provided by the Government on the various Latvian language learning programmes and courses provided to children and adults by some municipalities, the State Employment Agency and the Latvian Language Agency (LLA); and (3) the Government plans to provide schools, affected by the reform, with a wide range of support measures aimed at improving Latvian language skills, including through extra training for 4,040 pedagogical staff from 2022 to 2026; professional development courses and master classes for teachers on successful inclusion; tailor-made supporting materials for minority students; and digitization of materials for teaching Latvian as second language. The Committee further notes that the LLA will continue to provide freely available materials of methodology for teaching Latvian as a second or foreign language and implements various support measures for educational institutions, and that a learning and teaching Latvian resource page is now available online. Finally, it notes that Language acquisition courses for different audiences and methodology courses for teachers are organized every year. The Committee again wishes to underline that discrimination based on national extraction can occur when legislation, imposing a state language for employment in public and private sector activities, is interpreted and implemented too broadly and disproportionately and adversely affects the employment and occupational opportunities of minority language groups. It wishes to recall once again that, to come within the scope of the exception provided for in Article 1(2) of the Convention, any limitation regarding access to employment must be required by the characteristics of the particular job, and in proportion to its inherent requirements (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 764 and 827–831). The Committee urges once again the Government to take the necessary steps to avoid any undue limitation on employment and occupational opportunities for any group by limiting the number of occupations in which proficiency in Latvian is considered to be an inherent requirement of the job. It further asks the Government to continue providing information on activities carried out to ensure that its national legislation regarding the language of instruction does not create in practice direct or indirect discrimination in access to education and employment for minority groups, in particular the large Russian-speaking minority.

Articles 1(2) and 4. Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. Inherent requirements of the job. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. For many years, the Committee has been referring to the mandatory requirements set out in the Law on the State Civil Service of 2000, which provides that, in order to qualify as a candidate for any civil service position, the person concerned may not be or have been “in a permanent staff position, in the state security service, intelligence or counterintelligence service of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics (USSR), the Latvian Soviet Socialist Republic (SSR) or some foreign State” (section 7(8)), or “a member of organizations banned by laws or court rulings” (section 7(9)). The Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the fact that the Law applies to any state civil service position and to employment by specified services irrespective of the level of responsibility, and has requested the Government to amend section 7(8) and (9) of the Law or to take steps to clearly stipulate and define the functions to which these provisions apply. The Committee recalls the Government’s repeated statement that the purpose of such restrictions is to prevent persons from entering the public service who are not loyal to the State and who could constitute a threat to national security. It recalls the 2019 Ministry of Justice report on the necessity and appropriateness of the restrictions imposed by the Law on the State Civil Service on former employees of the Latvian SSR National Security Committee, which acknowledged that, while such restrictions should be maintained in order to “ensure a loyal, professional and politically neutral State civil service”, it would be more appropriate for a democratic country to assess the individual circumstances in each case and adopt a decision based on such assessment of the degree of past cooperation, the nature of the work, etc. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Ministry of Justice will be making another assessment report next year and that there are no plans now to amend this section given the current national security matters. The Committee notes the Government’s continued indication that data regarding the application of section 7(8) and (9) of the State Civil Service Law is not available and that no information is available about relevant cases when an application has been rejected pursuant to this section. The Committee takes note of the Government’s understandable concerns over state security and would like to again draw its attention to the fact that the Law applies to any state civil service position irrespective of the level of responsibility. It again recalls that, to come under the scope of the exception provided for in Article 1(2) of the Convention, any limitation regarding access to employment should be interpreted strictly in order to avoid any undue limitations on the protection which the Convention seeks to guarantee. It adds that criteria such as political opinion may be considered as an inherent requirement, under Article 1(2) of the Convention, only for certain posts involving special responsibilities directly concerned with developing government policy. Moreover, for measures not to be discriminatory under Article 4 of the Convention, they must: (1) affect an individual on account of activities he or she is justifiably suspected or proven to have undertaken, and that such measures become discriminatory when taken simply by reason of membership of a particular group or community; (2) refer to activities qualifiable as prejudicial to the security of the State; and (3) be sufficiently well defined and precise to ensure that they do not become instruments of discrimination on the basis of political opinion. In addition to these substantive conditions, the legitimate application of this exception must respect the right of the person affected by the measures to appeal to a competent body established in accordance with national practice (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 832–835). The Committee once again reiterates its request to the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 7(8) and (9) of the Law on the State Civil Service to limit their scope of application to specific functions and positions in the State civil service, in conformity with the provisions of the Convention. It further requests the Government; (i) to provide information on any progress made in that regard and the findings of the next Ministry of Justice report on the necessity and appropriateness of the restrictions imposed by the Law on the State Civil Service on former employees of the Latvian SSR National Security Committee; and, in the meantime, (ii) to consider taking steps to collect data on the application of section 7(8) and (9) in practice, including on

(ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3(c) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls that Lesotho operates a dual legal system where two systems of law are operating side by side, namely customary law and common law, with some elements in the customary law being discriminatory against women and girls, which continues to present a challenge for women's access to land, credit and employment. In relation to the progress made in harmonizing both systems, the Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication, in its report, that the Harmonisation of the Rights of Customary Widows with the Legal Capacity of Married Persons Act was enacted in 2022, to enhance the economic status of customary widows by enabling them to have ownership and control of the property of the joint estate upon the husband's death. The Committee further notes, from the Government's report, that: (1) the Labour Bill, that includes provisions on maternity and paternity leave, and grants the labour inspectorate powers to supervise and impose penalties in case of non-compliance with these provisions, is at an advanced stage and awaits presentation by the National Advisory Committee on Labour Administration (NACOLA) to the Minister of Public Service, Labour and Employment; and (2) the Social Security Bill, that will cover all workers with social protection for all life events in relation to employment such as maternity and paternity related benefits, sickness benefits, injury benefits and worker's death and will provide for penalties in case of non-compliance, also awaits presentation to the latter Minister. The Committee observes that, in its 2023 concluding observations, the Human Rights Committee indicate that it remains concerned by Article 18(4)(c) of the Constitution, which allows for the application of discriminatory provisions of customary law against women and girls, in particular regarding the inheritance of property, marriage, nationality and access to land and chieftaincy (CCPR/C/LSO/CO/2, 6 September 2023, paragraph 17). In this regard, it notes that the so-called "Constitutional Omnibus Bill" is still pending for adoption before Parliament and welcomes the information, from the 2022 annual report on Lesotho of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), according to which, of the 98 amendments contained in the Bill, 46 per cent directly address women and gender issues such as the age of majority, public appointments, electoral processes, inheritance, justice reforms, and security sector practices that are discriminatory to women. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in harmonizing customary law and common law with a view to removing any elements which are discriminatory, in particularly towards women and girls. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any progress made to that end, in particular in the adoption of the Labour Bill, the Social Security Bill and the "Constitutional Omnibus Bill", with a view to ensure women's equal access to employment, land and credit; (ii) the impact of these legislative changes on women's economic empowerment and access to the labour market; and (iii) any concrete measures taken to raise public awareness of any new legislative provisions and enable women to exercise their rights effectively.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in 2022 the Maritime Law was amended, but it notes with regret that the Government did not make use of this opportunity to amend section 356 of the Maritime Law, which provides a narrower protection of seafarers against discrimination than required by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's general indication, in its report, that maritime notices are promulgated by the Liberia Maritime Authority to actualize the rights of seafarers and ensure consistency with national laws and international obligations, and that seafarers who feel that their rights have been violated have recourse to an accessible online complaints process. Recalling that the Convention applies to all workers, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to align the legislation on the protection of seafarers against discrimination in employment and occupation with the requirements of the Convention.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that the provisions of section 53 of the Labour Code are more restrictive than those of the Convention, as they limit the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value to persons engaged in the same job and with the same vocational qualifications. The Committee notes that a draft text to revise the Labour Code has been prepared by the Government and was forwarded to the Office in February 2022 for technical comments. The Office suggested that section 53(1) of the Labour Code should be reworded as follows: "[For equal work or work performed under equal conditions, and for work of a different nature but nevertheless of equal value], wages shall be equal for all workers irrespective of their origin, colour, national extraction, sex, age, trade union membership, opinion or status under the conditions set out in the present Chapter". The Committee also notes the Government's indication in its report that the amendment of section 53 of the Labour Code was discussed with the social partners during a tripartite consultation held in March 2021. The Government adds that a preliminary draft of the Bill to issue the new Labour Code was submitted in September and October 2021 to the National Labour Council (CNT) with a view to hearing the views of the social partners, and then in December 2021 and January 2022 to the Commission on the Reform of Business Law (CRDA). Moreover, with reference to the observations by the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) received in 2021, the Committee recalls that, while the Convention applies to all workers, it exclusively covers wage inequalities or remuneration gaps between men and women for work of equal value. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Labour Code will be amended in the near future and that the new wording of section 53 will give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration, not only for equal work or work performed under equal conditions, but also for work of an entirely different nature that is of equal value overall. It requests the Government to provide information on this subject and on any other measures adopted or envisaged to promote and ensure in practice equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that neither the Labour Code nor the Civil Service Regulations prohibit discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of colour and social origin is not prohibited by the Labour Code (see section 261) and discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin is not prohibited by the Civil Service Regulations (see section 5). The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a preliminary draft Bill to issue a new Labour Code has been submitted to the National Labour Council (CNT) and contains provisions that are in conformity with the Convention, as well as definitions of the concepts of direct and indirect discrimination and sexual harassment at the workplace. It notes, however, that the Government did not provide a copy of this draft text with its report nor has it provided the envisaged new wording of section 261 of the Labour Code. In this regard, the Committee observes that, in the Memorandum of technical comments on the draft revision of the Labour Code that it provided to the Government in March 2021, the International Labour Office (ILO) indicated that, in the version that had been submitted to it for comment in February 2021, the proposed revision of the Labour Code did not affect section 261 of the current Labour Code. It also notes the Government's indication that new General Regulations for Public Employees (SGAP) are being prepared, with a view to harmonizing the provisions of the Civil Service Regulations and the General Regulations for Contractual Public Employees. The Government specifies that, in accordance with section 14 of the draft SGAP, "there is no discrimination on the basis of gender, religion, opinion, origin, ancestry, political conviction, disability, membership or not of a trade union". However, the Committee notes with concern that this provision still does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin and does not define indirect discrimination. The Committee also notes the general information provided by the Government on the penalties envisaged for violations of section 261 of the Labour Code and the indication that information is still being collected on administrative decisions relating to the prohibition of discrimination. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the monitoring and enforcement of anti-discrimination laws by the courts is an important aspect of the effective implementation of the Convention. It is therefore necessary to collect and publish detailed information on the number, nature and outcome of complaints to the courts and administrative bodies in order to assess the effectiveness of procedures and mechanisms (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 868 and 871). The Committee therefore requests the Government to: (i) provide precise updated information on the current revision of the Labour Code, and particularly section 261, to ensure that it explicitly prohibits discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including colour and social origin, and that it explicitly covers indirect discrimination; (ii) take the necessary measures to amend section 14 of the draft General Regulations for Public Employees to ensure that it explicitly prohibits discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including race, colour and social origin, and that it includes a definition of discrimination that explicitly encompasses indirect discrimination; and (iii) provide detailed information on the interpretation and effect given by the courts in practice to section 261 of the Labour Code and section 5 of the Civil Service Regulations (or section 14 of the General Regulations for Public Employees, if they have been adopted), with a copy of any court or administrative decisions handed down under these provisions.

Discriminatory job vacancy announcements. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it was envisaging the adoption of provisions to regulate, in conformity with the requirements of the Convention, vacancies advertised on the radio or through notices in public places, which impose affiliation to a certain religion as a condition for recruitment or specify that the job is solely for men or women. It notes that, although the Government recognizes that this is a common discriminatory practice in all sectors, it still does not refer to any specific measures that have been adopted or are envisaged to regulate this practice and does not indicate the role played by the labour inspection services in this regard.

The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, will take all the necessary measures to ensure the application in practice of the national legislation and prohibit any form of direct or indirect discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including religion and sex, in job vacancy announcements, including in advertisements on the radio or notices in public places. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Domestic workers. The Committee previously invited the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Labour Code apply in practice to men and women domestic workers (some of whom work without a written employment contract) and to provide detailed information on the number and outcome of the controls carried out by the labour inspection services on this subject. In this connection, it notes that, in its Memorandum of technical comments of March 2021 referred to above, the Office recommended specifying in section 1 of the Labour Code that it applies to men and women domestic workers, particularly in relation to its provisions respecting non-discrimination and working conditions. The Committee welcomes the indication by the Government that, on 11 June 2019, Madagascar ratified the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189). It also notes the Government's reiterated indication that domestic workers enjoy the same rights as other workers, as the labour legislation is applicable to them. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government, no statistical data is available on the number and outcome of the controls carried out by labour inspectors concerning the working conditions of domestic workers. The Government specifies that the legislation in force does not yet permit effective intervention by labour inspectors in this regard, due in particular to the principle of the inviolability of the home, which makes it impossible for labour inspectors to enter the homes of private individuals who employ domestic workers. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that men and women domestic workers benefit, not only in law, but also in practice, from the protection afforded by the provisions of the Labour Code, particularly in relation to non-discrimination and working conditions. It therefore requests the Government to: (i) provide specific information on any measures adopted or envisaged for this purpose; and (ii) provide information on any measures adopted or envisaged to facilitate the access of labour inspectors to the homes of private individuals employing men and women domestic workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Malawi Congress of Trade Unions (MCTU), received on 1 September 2023.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that, in June 2022, the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) of the International Labour Conference noted with deep concern the trade unions' allegations of systematic sexual violence and harassment of women, including the rape, assault and discrimination suffered by women workers on tea and macadamia nut plantations. In its conclusions, the CAS urged the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to: (1) ensure existing legislation on sexual harassment is in line with the Convention; (2) organize dedicated tripartite discussions on the issue of sexual harassment and violence in the workplace with a view to taking further practical and concrete measures to ensure the effective protection of workers in this regard in law and practice; (3) ensure effective access to and effective functioning of national judicial and non-judicial mechanisms that consider allegations of breach of workers' rights on grounds of discrimination, including sexual harassment and violence, and provide adequate legal remedies to victims; and (4) continue supporting existing initiatives undertaken by the Malawi Human Rights Commission (MHRC) and the Department of Human Resources Management and Development, including awareness-raising campaigns and the dissemination of the Sexual Harassment Workplace Policy and related guidelines to ensure that employers develop and implement effective workplace harassment policies. The Committee also notes the Government's indication in its report that, as recommended by the Committee in its previous observation, it would endeavour to undertake a study with special focus on tea plantations and macadamia nut orchards to inform the design of sector specific interventions, and that it would appreciate ILO's technical and financial support in this regard. The Government adds that the MHRC carried out comprehensive research aimed at providing data on the extent and scope of sexual harassment at the workplace. The Committee also notes that the National Level Gender Audit Report carried out for the Employers' Consultative Association of Malawi (ECAM) in May 2023 emphasized that, "in order to be able to measure the impact of gender inequalities, discrimination, harassment and abuse in the workplace, it is critical that companies are able to capture and update sex-disaggregated data" (page 42). The Committee also recalls that the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its recent concluding observations, indicated its concerns about the insufficient generation and availability of sex-disaggregated data across various sectors, including education, health, employment, and violence against women, emphasizing that such data is fundamental to inform evidence-based policymaking, program planning, and monitoring of progress towards gender equality goals. The CEDAW also expressed concern regarding the prevalence of: (1) various forms of gender-based violence, including, domestic and sexual violence; (2) sexual harassment in the workplace and in business places and its underreporting due to insufficient information on reporting mechanisms; and (3) trafficking in women and girls, with victims being lured with fraudulent job offers and forced into domestic service or prostitution in private premises out of reach for labour inspectors (CEDAW/C/MWI/CO/8, 30 October 2023, paragraphs 21, 23(a), 33(d) and 51). The Committee further notes that the Office undertook a mission to Malawi from 8 to 12 May 2023 to conduct consultations with constituents to develop an action plan for intervention in the tea sector in Malawi within the framework of the multi-countries project funded by Norway on "Promoting workers' rights and gender equality". The mission met with the Ministry of Labour (including some of its regional offices staff), the Employers Consultative Association of Malawi (ECAM), the Malawi Congress of Trade Unions (MCTU), the Tea Association of Malawi Limited (TAML), the Plantation and Agriculture Workers Union (PAWU) and several high-level political figures. The Committee asks the Government to take measures to: (i) fight the various forms of gender-based violence (including rape) and gender-based harassment (including sexual harassment) at the workplace, especially in tea and macadamia nuts plantations; and (ii) strengthen its data collection system with a view to make evidence-based decisions. Please provide information on the results achieved, including the outcome of the research carried out by the MHRC.

Evaluation of the existing legal framework on sexual harassment and its alignment with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) the Gender Equality Act of 2013 is under review and the suggestions to explicitly include "hostile work environment harassment" in the definition of sexual harassment (section 6(1)) and to review the test of "reasonableness" are being considered; and (2) under the ILO/Norwegian development cooperation project, a National Road Map has been developed to promote workers' rights and gender equality. The Committee also notes, from the Government's report, that the National Gender Policy of 2015, the National Action Plan to Combat Gender-based Violence, the Gender Equality Act Implementation and Monitoring Plan, and the National Action Plan on Women Economic Empowerment are all under review. It further notes: (1) the adoption of the National Male Engagement Strategy on Gender Equality, Gender-based Violence, HIV and Sexual and Reproductive Health Rights (2023-2030); (2) the establishment of victims support units within the police; and (3) the pending approval of the Public Service Workplace Anti-Sexual Harassment Policy and Guidelines. The Government adds that a Rapid Assessment of Legal and Policy Framework for Gender Equality as well as a Gap Analysis of the Legal and Policy Framework on Gender Equality and Sexual Harassment in the Tea Sector in Malawi were validated and the results shared with the social partners. These will inform the design of appropriate strategies and the upcoming labour law review. The Committee asks the Government to ensure the prompt alignment of the national legal and policy framework with the Convention, in cooperation with the social partners, including by amending section 6(1) of the Gender Equality Act of 2013 to explicitly include hostile work environment harassment in the definition of sexual harassment and by reviewing the test of “reasonableness”. Please provide information on all developments in this respect as well as on progress made in: (i) the implementation of the National Road Map to promote workers’ rights and gender equality; (ii) the current revision of the above-mentioned policies and action plans; and (iii) the follow-up of the rapid assessment and gap analysis of the legal and policy framework on gender equality and sexual harassment.

Tripartite discussion on the issue of sexual harassment and violence in the workplace. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council (TLAC) met in May 2023 and discussed issues of sexual harassment. The TLAC recommended that Malawi ratifies the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), and strengthens the capacity of the Ministry of Labour and the social partners in this regard. The Government adds that the social partners started harmonizing their policies as well as developing awareness-raising messages on workplace violence and harassment. The Committee asks the Government to continue to encourage the social partners to take up the issue of sexual harassment and violence in the workplace and to keep it informed of any development in this regard.

Capacity-building and awareness-raising on sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that labour inspectors continue to be trained to prevent, identify, and address cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, including sexual harassment. The Government also says that it has intensified its efforts to conduct labour inspection to identify issues of discrimination through the Zantchito Programme funded by the European Union (with an emphasis on small and medium enterprises). The labour inspection form will also be reviewed to cover violence and harassment issues. In this regard, the Committee emphasizes the importance of having a gender-diversified labour inspection force in order to facilitate the identification of sexual harassment cases, as women workers might find it more difficult to report a case of sexual harassment at the workplace to a male labour inspector. The Committee also refers to the comments it addresses to the Government on the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129). The Government adds that there is a good uptake of the model Sexual Harassment Workplace Policy developed by the MHRC in 2021: many institutions have approached the MHRC to be trained, including sections of the Malawi Police Service (victim support units and human resources), private companies and public institutions, several district council’s gender and youth tripartite working groups, and secondary schools heads and teachers. Similarly, the MHRC carried out a review of sexual harassment workplace policies for several institutions and continues to distribute its model policy. The Committee encourages the Government to intensify its capacity-building and awareness-raising activities on sexual harassment and to provide information on: (i) the activities carried out, (including information on the public targeted and the number of participants); (ii) the dissemination and use of the MHRC’s model Sexual Harassment Workplace Policy; and (iii) the ratio of men and women in the labour inspection services, and measures taken or envisaged to ensure gender balance in this regard.

Access to judicial and quasi-judicial mechanisms and legal remedies for victims of discrimination, including sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that sexual harassment cases being criminal cases, they cannot be handled by the Ministry of Labour and the Industrial Relations Court but are prosecuted by the Magistrate Court and the High Court. It recognizes that, as court fees are payable by victims, this represents an impediment in terms of access to legal remedies. In this regard, the Committee recalls that addressing sexual harassment only through criminal proceedings is normally not sufficient, due to the sensitivity of the issue, the higher burden of proof, which is harder to meet, especially if there are no witnesses (which is often the case), and the fact that criminal law generally focuses on sexual assault or “immoral acts”, and not the full range of behaviour that constitutes sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee also considers that legislation under which the sole redress available to victims of sexual harassment is termination of the employment relationship, while retaining the right to compensation, does not afford sufficient protection for victims of sexual harassment, since it in fact punishes them and could dissuade victims from seeking redress (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 792). The Government adds that the MHRC received 16 cases related to sexual harassment in 2021, 15 cases in 2022, and 5 cases from January to June 2023. Noting the Government’s statement that, out of these five cases, two were dropped for “failure to identify witnesses” (the other three still being investigated), the Committee recalls the concerns expressed by the CEDAW about the absence of legal procedural guidelines for the repeal of the “corroboration rule”, whereby the testimony of a witness is required in addition to a victim’s testimony in rape cases. The Committee also recalls that the CEDAW noted the prevalence of sexual harassment in the workplace and in business places and its underreporting due to insufficient information on reporting mechanisms. Furthermore, it called for providing the Independent Police Complaints Commission with adequate human, technical and financial resources to ensure that all cases of gender-based violence are effectively investigated without delay, that perpetrators are prosecuted ex officio and adequately punished, and that victims have access to remedies and adequate support services (CEDAW/C/MWI/CO/8, paragraphs 21, 22 and 33(d)). The above-mentioned 2023 Gender Audit for ECAM also identified barriers to reporting as a cause of the under-reporting of incidents which, in turn, brought companies to underestimate the problem of gender-based discrimination and harassment at work. It also pointed to the fact that sexual harassment cases were tried under the criminal courts as a contributing factor to the very long time it may take for cases to be dealt with and decisions to be issued (pages 7 and 19). The Committee also notes that, during the May 2023 mission to Malawi, regional district labour officers indicated that sexual violence cases were often reported at a very late stage. They highlighted the need to intensify labour inspections and to revitalize existing structure at district level and suggested to establish toll-free lines for reporting incidences of violence and harassment and to provide support services to victims, particularly psychosocial support. They also mentioned the role of traditional chiefs as allies to tackle the issue of violence and harassment. Finally, the Committee notes the MCTU’s observation that efforts, such as awareness programmes, are being made to encourage victims of discrimination in employment to access justice. The Committee requests the Government to : (i) address challenges related to access to legal remedies for victims of discrimination in employment and occupation, including sexual harassment; and (ii) increase the capacity of the competent authorities, including labour inspectors and the Independent Police Complaints Commission, to prevent, identify and address cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, including sexual harassment, as well as workers’ awareness of available remedies. Please provide information on the number of cases of sexual harassment in the public and private sectors dealt with by the courts and the MHRC or detected by labour inspectors, the remedies granted to victims and the sanctions imposed on perpetrators.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Malta

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. Pay transparency. Equal Pay Tool. The Committee notes that, according to Eurostat, the unadjusted gender pay gap (the difference between average gross hourly earnings of male and female employees as a percentage of male gross earnings) in 2021 was 10.5 per cent and that it is below the average unadjusted gender pay gap in the European Union (13.7 per cent). The Committee notes that, according to the National Commission for the Promotion of Equality (NCPE), the pay gap can be as high as 29.7 per cent in real estate activities and 24.3 per cent in financial and insurance activities. These differences in pay result from various inequalities in the labour market besides discrimination, which include gender segregation in employment and education, the lack of women in managerial positions and the lack of adequate work–life balance. In this regard, the Committee notes from the statement of the United Nations Working Group on discrimination against women and girls made on 7 July 2023 at the end of a 12-day visit in the country that: (1) Malta has faced challenges related to the gender pay gap, with women historically earning less than men for equal or comparable work; and (2) improvements have been made, and the gender pay gap has decreased significantly since 2018 when the country had the highest gender pay gap in Europe. According to the Working Group, women continue to face challenges in reconciling work and family life and sharing care responsibilities equally and gender discrimination often starts in the family and has a negative impact on all areas of girls' and women's lives. The Working Group also noted that patriarchal views suggesting that women are less fit to lead have a significant impact on women's ability to participate in the public and economic life of the country. In addition, the Committee notes that, in 2019, an awareness-raising campaign forming part of the EU co-funded Project "Prepare the Ground for Economic Independence" (PGEI) implemented by the NCPE listed a number of reasons for the discrepancy in pay between women and men: gender segregation in education which ultimately results in gender segregation in the place of work; wage discrimination; part-time work; housework; the "care pay penalty" (i.e. a gap in hourly wages that cannot be attributed to differences in skills, experience or credentials but often to the difficulties encountered by women trying to balance work and care responsibilities); and lack of women in decision-making. In this regard, the Committee also refers the Government to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

The Committee further notes the Government's indication in its report that, in 2020, the NCPE started developing an Equal Pay Tool within the framework of this project, which will be used to check whether companies opting for the Equal Pay Certification have equal pay for work of equal value between women and men, and to assist them in correcting situations of unequal pay. The Government adds that: (1) the ultimate objective of the Equal Pay Tool is for employers to be able to collect input data about their employees, which would be processed, and then help them identify any discrepancies in employees' salaries or allowances which are not justifiable; (2) since the creation of the tool in 2020, the NCPE has worked on its finalization by pilot-testing; and (3) the tool is expected to be launched in November 2023 to mark Equal Pay Day and, subsequently, integrated into the NCPE Equality Mark Certification. Noting these positive developments with interest, the Committee asks the Government to continue to take proactive measures, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations and the NCPE or any other relevant institutions, to address and eliminate the remaining gender pay gap and its underlying causes, including those identified by the NCPE, such as occupational gender segregation, gender stereotypes, and the difficulties for women to access a wider range of studies and jobs at all levels and to reconcile work and family responsibilities. It also asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Equal Pay Tool and its impact on the reduction of the gender pay gap and the results achieved at the workplace level. The Government is also asked to continue to provide updated statistical information, disaggregated by economic sector of activity, on the earnings of men and women; and the gender pay gap in the public and private sectors.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation and application in practice. The Committee recalls that: (1) the general principle of equal pay for work of equal value is enshrined in article 27 of Employment and Industrial Relations Act (EIRA) which provides that "employees in the same class of employment are entitled to the same rate of remuneration for work of equal value"; and (2) "work of equal value" and "remuneration", as mentioned in section 3(A)(1) of the Equal Treatment in Employment Regulations are not defined by the current legislation but, according to the Government, are determined on a case-by-case basis by the Industrial Tribunal. In the absence of information communicated in this regard, the Committee asks once again the Government to provide specific information on the practical application of section 3(A)(1) of the Equal Treatment in Employment Regulations, including by providing concrete examples on the manner in which the terms "work of equal value" and "remuneration" have been interpreted by the Industrial Tribunal. To ensure that the EIRA permits the broadest comparison possible between jobs, also going beyond the same employer, it asks the Government to indicate how section 27 and, in particular the notion of "same class of employment", is interpreted when applying the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. In addition, it asks once again the Government to: (i) seize every opportunity to ensure that any new or revised legislation will explicitly define and give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in particular as regards the manner in which "work of equal value" is determined and what is considered to be included in "remuneration"; and (ii) provide information on the status of the Equality Bill and the Human Rights and Equality Commission Bill, as well as a copy of both pieces of legislation once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1968)

Previous comments

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Social origin. Legislation. The Committee observes that the adoption of the Equality Bill previously mentioned by the Government is still pending and that the Government's report does not contain any information in that regard. With respect to the current legal framework, the Committee notes that, pursuant to the Constitution, the Employment and Industrial Relations Act (EIRA), 2002 (section 2(1)), the Equal Treatment in Employment Regulations, 2004 (section 1(3)), the Equality for Men and Women Act, 2003 (section 2(1)), the following prohibited grounds of discrimination are covered: sex, colour, political opinion, race, racial or ethnic origin, religion or belief, disability, age, family responsibilities, marital status, pregnancy or potential pregnancy, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, sex characteristics, creed, place of origin and membership in a trade union or in an employers' association. It also notes that, regarding the lack of protection against discrimination on the ground of "social origin", the Government had previously pointed out that the list of prohibited grounds in the definition of "discriminatory treatment" under the EIRA was non-exhaustive. The Committee has constantly considered that, where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention – of which "social origin" (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 853). Moreover, it wishes to point out that the lack of explicit reference to a specific ground, such as "social origin", in a non-exhaustive list of grounds could also lead to: (1) a lack of awareness of the right to non-discrimination on the ground concerned in employment and occupation; and (2) a need for interpretation by the courts to determine whether this specific ground is effectively covered. Therefore, to ensure legal certainty concerning the protection against discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will seize the opportunity of the discussion and adoption of the Equality Bill to ensure that it explicitly prohibits direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, in particular "social origin", while also ensuring that the additional grounds already enumerated in the current national legislation are maintained in the new legislation. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and a copy of the text once adopted.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. According to the information available on the website of the National Commission for the Promotion of Equality (NCPE), the Committee welcomes: (1) the adoption, on 28 July 2021, of the Anti-Racism Strategy 2021-2023, which aims to eliminate racism in all its forms and support intercultural inclusion; (2) the public consultation on the Second Policy and National Action Plan on Integration launched at the beginning of 2023; and (3) the European Union co-funded Project “Strengthening Knowledge on Integration and Non-Discrimination” (SKIN) launched in July 2023 by the NCPE to identify the needs of, and discrimination faced by vulnerable groups, namely migrants and Muslims. It further notes that, in 2022, the NCPE provided inputs to the Anti-Racism Action Plans being drafted by ministries as part of the above Strategy and was drafting an Anti-Racism Policymaking Tool for use by the ministries. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee asks the Government to continue to take proactive measures to combat racial stereotypes and discrimination based on race, colour or national extraction. It also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of any measures taken within the framework of the Strategy and the SKIN Project as well as information on the content and implementation of the Second Policy and National Action Plan on Integration when finalized and Anti-Racism Policymaking Tool, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation, in particular recruitment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritania

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM), received on 29 August 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Evaluating and eliminating remuneration gaps and their underlying causes. The Committee recalls that the CGTM referred in its previous observations to the existence of significant differences in the remuneration of women and men for jobs of the same “value”, including disparities of treatment of around 30 per cent between the wages of men and women, with the latter being deprived of various other benefits related to their functions. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that it will take the necessary measures to collect and analyse data on the wages of men and women to demonstrate the non-existence of remuneration gaps between men and women and accordingly bring an end to this unjustified debate. As it does not have at its disposal recent statistics which would enable it to assess the remuneration gaps between men and women, the Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to gather and analyse data on the wages of men and women by economic sector, if possible and, depending on the results that emerge, invites it to engage in an examination of the causes of any remuneration gap between men and women with a view to developing appropriate measures to remedy it.

Articles 1(b) and 2(a) and (c). Principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation and collective agreements. The Committee once again recalls that neither the Labour Code nor Act No. 93-09 of 18 January 1993 issuing the general regulations of public servants and contractual agents of the State, nor the general collective labour agreement (CCGT) of 1974, reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value laid down in the Convention. It notes with regret that the Government has confined itself to reiterating the information provided previously to the effect that it is planned to reform the Labour Code and the CCGT and to take the necessary measures to amend section 191 of the Labour Code and clause 37 of the CCGT, as well as Act No. 93-09 of 18 January 1993, as amended, so that they set out more fully the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal “value”. Emphasizing once again that the Convention requires the implementation of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to incorporate this principle into the labour legislation within the context of the announced reform of the Labour Code and the CCGT and the envisaged amendments to Act No. 93-09 of 18 January 1993. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken for this purpose.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers of Mauritania (CGTM), received on 29 August 2023.

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Definition and prohibition of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes that the CGTM in its observations takes up the requests made by the Committee in respect of Act No. 2018-023 criminalizing discrimination. However, it notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information in reply to its previous comments. The Committee therefore urges the Government to review the definition of discrimination contained in section 1 of Act No. 2018-023 criminalizing discrimination to ensure that it covers, without restriction, all of the grounds of discrimination set out in Article 1 of the Convention. Furthermore, in order to avoid any legal confusion and clarify the legal framework applicable to discrimination in employment and occupation, it also requests the Government to take measures to amend sections 4 and 20 of the Act respecting prohibited grounds of discrimination with a view to aligning them, as a minimum, with those set out in the Labour Code and Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, specifying the aspects of employment and occupation covered, in accordance with Article 1(3) of the Convention.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the basis of race, colour, national extraction and social origin. Former slaves and descendants of slaves. The Committee notes with regret that once again the Government's report does not contain information on this subject. However, it notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, who visited Mauritania from 4 to 13 May 2022, found that Mauritania had made important progress, but observed that descent-based slavery continues to persist in certain regions of the country and drew attention to several areas in which slaves and persons who have emerged from slavery and their descendants face social, economic and political exclusion. In this regard, he recommended the Government to take measures with a view to eliminating discrimination in relation to the victims of slavery. He noted in particular that: (1) "[m]any victims of slavery remain economically, socially and culturally dependent on their former enslavers due to a lack of viable alternatives"; and (2) those "who find other work are often limited to jobs characterized by casualization, precariousness, exploitation and abuse due to discrimination, lack of education and documentation, and limited access to productive assets, including land." The Special Rapporteur emphasized that the Taazour agency primarily works to address poverty through infrastructure projects and cash transfers, which admittedly benefit victims of slavery, but which do not necessarily address the structural barriers that keep victims of slavery in poverty, including deep-rooted discrimination and inequality that prevent them from accessing education, public services and decent work. He considered that "positive measures specifically targeting Haratine and Black Mauritanian communities are necessary to break the cycle of discrimination, poverty and dependence and overcome the centuries-long legacy of slavery" and recommended positive discrimination measures in areas "where victims of slavery are underserved or underrepresented, including access to land, housing, education and vocational training, civil registration, social protection, entrepreneurship support and public employment opportunities" (A/HRC/54/30/Add.2, 21 July 2023, paragraphs 45, 59, 60 and 72). The Committee notes that a new ILO cooperation project, entitled "Empowerment for Resilience: Survivors Combat Slavery and Slavery-based Discrimination in Mauritania and Niger through Sector-based Social Partnerships and Sub-regional Collaboration (2022-26)" is currently being implemented and includes among its objectives enabling victims of descent-based slavery and discrimination on grounds of slavery to develop independent and diversified sources of income in targeted sectors (outcome 3). Noting this information and also referring to its 2022 comments on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee urges the Government to take specific measures to: (i) eliminate stigmatization and discrimination, and particularly social prejudices, in relation to former slaves and descendants of slaves; (ii) promote equality in employment and occupation without distinction as to race, colour, national extraction or social origin; and (iii) encourage the education, training and employment of persons affected by stigmatization and discrimination based on race, colour, national extraction or social origin. It urges the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures adopted in this regard and the results achieved; and (ii) the implementation of the ILO project referred to above in the country in terms of combating discrimination in employment and occupation.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that: (1) there are still no measures in law or practice to combat sexual harassment; and (2) measures had been envisaged by the Government in the form of a Bill to combat violence, including sexual harassment. It notes the Government's very general indication that, with a view to reinforcing the protection of women and girls and eliminating any form of discrimination against them, it intends to strengthen the relevant legislative framework as soon as possible. The Committee also notes the preliminary conclusions published on 6 October 2023 by the United Nations Working Group on discrimination against women and girls, which carried out a 12-day mission to the country, according to which: (1) women are reported to be severely harassed at work at times and compelled to leave their jobs; and (2) sexual harassment and gender-based violence from teachers have also been reported as a concern likely to contribute to the drop-out rates of girls from school. The Committee recalls that, to be effective, protection against sexual harassment must cover: (1) all workers, women and men; (2) not only employment and occupation, but also education and vocational training, access to employment and conditions of employment; (3) all the forms of sexual harassment; and (4) all those committing sexual harassment, including colleagues, clients and third parties. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take effective measures in law and practice to: (i) define, prevent and prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation covering not only quid pro quo harassment, but also hostile working environment harassment; and (ii) inform and raise the awareness of workers, employers and their respective organizations, as well as labour inspectors and magistrates, concerning issues related to sexual harassment (prevention, treatment of cases, complaints procedures, assistance to and rights of victims, etc.). The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the legislative work on the Bill on violence against women and girls, to which the Government referred in its previous report, and specific information on its content in relation to sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Articles 2, 3(a) and 5. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. Positive measures for women. The Committee notes with regret that the Government confines itself in its report to indicating without other information that it is taking effective and positive measures to strengthen equality between women and men in employment and occupation. With reference to action to combat discrimination against women and girls and the promotion of gender equality, the Committee also notes the preliminary conclusions published on 6 October 2023 by the United Nations Working Group on discrimination against women and girls, which carried out a 12-day mission to the country, according to which: (1) the poverty experienced by women and girls often emanates from blatant systemic failures rooted in gender-based discrimination and exclusion, manifested by the lack of decent work, lack of quality and accessible education, unequal rights to land and housing, and chronic food insecurity; (2) the vicious cycle of poverty and exploitation particularly afflicts women who experience multiple and intersecting forms of discrimination, including rural women, migrant and refugee women and girls, women with disabilities and women from certain ethnic groups; (3) access to credit remains a significant challenge for many women which severely curtails their entrepreneurship and their ability to improve their livelihoods; (4) only 6 per cent of women own land (4.2 per cent of women in rural areas); (5) the gender gap in the labour market is stark, with only 26.4 per cent of women participating, compared with 56.6 per cent of men; (6) in 2018, only 11 per cent of enterprises were owned by women, and in 2014 only 5 per cent of Mauritanian enterprises included women in top management; (7) women predominate in the informal and precarious economy (76.5 per cent of them work there, compared with 42.9 per cent of men), which is a reflection of structural discrimination, including the persistence of gender stereotypes and gendered expectations, norms and attitudes; (8) women and girls often bear the majority, if not all, of the burden of unpaid care and household work, often described as a “woman’s job”; and (9) the absence of childcare options offered by the State also significantly hinders women from working outside the home and achieving economic empowerment. The Committee notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in which it notes the creation of the National Observatory on the Rights of Women and Girls by Decree No. 2020/140 and refers to the following recommendations, among others: (1) raising awareness of the importance of girls’ and women’s education at all levels as a basis for their empowerment and the development of the country, as well as the promotion of the completion of secondary education by girls and women and their access to tertiary education; (2) increasing the access of women to full-time employment in the formal economy, including by strengthening literacy programmes and vocational training opportunities for women, with special emphasis on disadvantaged groups of women; (3) effectively enforcing labour legislation protecting women’s rights in the workplace by strengthening labour inspections and establishing confidential and independent complaint mechanisms, as well as by raising awareness in the population of women’s equal rights in employment; (4) repealing section 57 of the Personal Status Code (which provides that “married women may, subject to the requirements of the Sharia, exercise any occupation outside the conjugal home”) and eliminating any other restrictions on women’s participation in certain professions or types of work; and (5) ensuring that the unpaid work of women is recognized, reduced and redistributed, including by increasing the availability of affordable childcare facilities and promoting the participation of men in domestic and family responsibilities (CEDAW/C/MRT/CO/4, 2 March 2023, paragraphs 5, 33, 35 and 39). The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the CGTM emphasizes that certain sociological and retrograde perceptions, particularly on gender equality, should be covered by broad training and information campaigns at the national level and in all socio-professional sectors. The Committee urges the Government to establish a real gender equality policy in employment and occupation, in collaboration with workers’ and employers’ organizations, and in particular to take specific measures to: (i) promote the access of women to a broader range of formal jobs, and particularly the jobs traditionally reserved for men and positions of responsibility, as a means of combating the horizontal and vertical occupational segregation of women and men; (ii) improve the access of women to productive resources, and particularly credit and land, and new technologies; (iii) take action to combat actively socio-cultural and gender stereotypes, particularly through awareness-raising campaigns; and (iv) improve the reconciliation of family and work-related responsibilities and the sharing of domestic responsibilities. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures taken in this regard and the results achieved; (ii) the implementation and results of the National Strategy for Gender Mainstreaming (2015-25); (iii) the activities of the National Observatory on the Rights of Women and Girls in relation to employment and access to productive resources; and (iv) recent statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of women and men in the private and public sectors (public service and other public employment).

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Determination of minimum wages. Remuneration Regulations. Further to its previous comments requiring the removal of gender-specific job appellations, gender-specific wage categories and rates in the same job occupations in the Salt Manufacturing Industry (Remuneration) Regulations 2019, the Sugar Industry (Agricultural Workers) (Remuneration) Regulations 2019, and the Tea Industry Workers (Remuneration) Regulations 2019, the Government indicates that the labour legislation is in the process of being reviewed to address the issue of wage determination in the various Remuneration Regulations in a more holistic manner and that the National Remuneration Board (NRB) will determine wages for the different categories of workers employed in the private sector on an occupation basis instead on a sectoral basis. Taking into consideration the complexity of the reform, the Government indicates that ILO technical assistance was requested, and the first step of the reform has been implemented with the assistance of ILO experts. The Committee notes that the timeline for the introduction of the wage reform was set as mid-2024. Regarding remuneration, the Committee notes reference made by the Government, in its report on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), to the Employment Relations Act (EReA) which was amended by the Finance (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 2023 – Act No. 12 of 2023 to include a new Section 91A on: “Determination of wages on occupational basis”, which provides for the designation of a specialised consultant responsible for developing recommendations for the elimination of all gender-specific categorization of workers in the different remuneration regulations and harmonization of wages for similar category of workers across different sectors. The Government indicates that the Report of the consultant is expected before the end of 2023 and will be implemented by mid-2024. The Committee welcomes positive steps taken to reform various Remuneration Regulations and urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that within the framework of the reform of the Remuneration Regulations, all remaining gender-specific job appellations, and different wage levels for men and women in the same job are removed from the above-mentioned Regulations. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that, when determining minimum wage rates by occupations in the sectors covered by remuneration regulations, skills considered to be “female” are not undervalued in comparison with traditionally “male” skills and that female-dominated occupations are not undervalued in comparison with male-dominated occupations. In this regard, the Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) communicated with the Government's report, as well as the corresponding reply of the Government.

Articles 1(a) and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of race, colour, national extraction and social origin. Further to its previous comments on proactive measures to address discrimination in employment and occupation, including against workers in Creole communities, the Committee notes the reference made by the Government to the activities of the Equal Opportunity Commission (EOC) and to provisions of national legislation on the prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation ensuring the application of the principle of equality between men and women, as well as enforcement measures adopted, and penalties imposed for their violation. In this regard, the Committee notes the annexes provided by the Government, including the list of activities undertaken by the EOC and the statistical information on the number of inspections carried out in the first quarter of 2023 (1,163 inspections). The Committee further notes a substantial decrease in the number of complaints, in particular with regard to local workers, from 2022 (19,930 complaints) to 2023 (4,922 complaints).

Regarding Creole communities, the Government indicates that: (1) in September 2021, the Ministry launched an animated cartoon on gender concepts in the local dialect (creole), which was meant to raise awareness among the population; and (2) this initiative was followed by capacity building of various stakeholders and training of 32 officers from different ministries. In this regard, the Committee notes the reference made by CTSP to the discontinuation of “lekol de formation” and “on-the-job training” which benefited the Creole community. Regarding studies or research, the Government indicates that no studies in the labour market, disaggregated on the basis of ethnicity of workers, have so far been carried out. The Committee notes however research projects conducted in the field of education and the roundtable discussion to be held in November 2023 on gender-based issues in curriculum textbooks in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) practical measures taken or envisaged to address discrimination in employment and occupation based on race, colour and ethnic and social origin, in particular against workers in Creole communities; and (ii) any measures taken, including studies or research, to analyse the situation of the different groups in the labour market with a view to eliminating discrimination in employment and occupation.

Article 1(2). Inherent requirements of the job. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the reference made by the Government to section 13 of the Equal Opportunities Act, 2008 (EOA), section 5(3) of the Workers’ Rights Act, No. 20 of 2019 (WRA), which remain unchanged. The Government indicates that the exceptions permitted under the above sections have been so far only applied to circumstances related to the inherent requirements of the job (such as prison officers for female detainees) and none of them has been permitted to restrict the right of any worker of both sexes to pursue freely any job or profession other than those permitted under the laws. The Government further indicates that no complaints regarding discrimination related to the exceptions have been reported to the authorities or referred to the courts for interpretation of specific provisions of the WRA and EOA. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, which responds to its previous request.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

Article 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication in its report that in March 2021, the Senate of the Republic approved and sent to the Chamber of Deputies a draft decree reforming 13 laws on a number of matters, including wage equality: (1) section 86 of the Federal Labour Act, in order to provide for “equal remuneration for work of equal value”; and (2) section 6 of the General Act on the right of women to a life free of violence, in order to include under economic violence “the receipt of lower wages for equal work or work of equal value”. The Committee trusts that the announced reforms will be implemented in the near future and requests the Government to provide information in that regard.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comments: Observation and direct request

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that according to the National Statistics Office, on average women's monthly remuneration represented 81.8 per cent of men's remuneration in 2022, thus corresponding to a 1.7 percentage point increase in the gender pay gap since 2019 (18.2 per cent in 2022 compared to 16.5 per cent in 2019). It observes that the gender pay gap was as high as 28.6 per cent in financial and insurance activities, where women represented 64.2 per cent of the workers. The Committee further notes that women remain concentrated in lower-paid sectors such as accommodation and food services, education, health, wholesale and retail trade, while men are concentrated in mining, manufacturing, construction, transport and energy which are high-paid sectors. In that regard, it refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), regarding the persistent vertical and horizontal segregation in the labour market. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on any measures taken to address the underlying causes of the gender pay gap, including as a result of the National Wage Policy for 2019-2024 and its action plan. It further notes that, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern about the persistent gender pay gap in all sectors and the concentration of women in low-paid jobs in the formal and informal sectors (CEDAW/C/MNG/CO/10, 12 July 2022, paragraph 30). The Committee asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to address the gender pay gap, including by promoting the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as enshrined in the Labour Law and the Convention, and its underlying causes, such as persistent vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, and gender stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities, and their role in the family. It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any proactive measures taken and implemented to that end, including by enhancing women's access to jobs with career prospects and higher pay; and (ii) the earnings of men and women in the various economic sectors, disaggregated by sex and occupational category, as well as any information available on the gender pay gap.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1969)

Previous comments

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 6.1 of the Labour Law which prohibits direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation on a certain number of grounds does not explicitly refer to "colour" (but to "appearance" instead) and "national extraction" (as meaning a person's place of birth, ancestry or foreign origin). It notes that the Government does not reply to its previous comments in this respect. The Committee once again asks the Government to confirm that "appearance" also covers "skin colour" and, if not, to take steps to explicitly prohibit discrimination based on "colour" and "national extraction" in the national legislation. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in that regard, including in collaboration with the employers' and workers' organizations. Pending the adoption of such provisions, the Committee asks the Government to indicate how employees and applicants are protected against discrimination based on colour and national extraction in practice, as well as any awareness-raising activities undertaken in that regard among workers, employers and their respective organizations, and law enforcement authorities.

Article 1(a). Inherent requirements of a particular job. The Committee recalls that: (1) section 6.5.6 of the Law on the Promotion of Gender Equality (LPGE) of 2011, allows for sex-specific job recruitment “based on a specific nature of some workplaces such as in pre-school education institutions”; and (2) the scope of other provisions of the LPGE may be overly broad in permitting sex-based distinctions, such as in the “provision of health, educational and other services designed to cater for the specific needs of one particular sex” (section 6.5.1) and in respect of employment in specific “workplace facilities” (section 6.5.2). The Committee notes with regret that, once again, the Government does not provide information in that regard. Recalling that the concept of inherent requirements must be interpreted restrictively so as to avoid an undue limitation of the protection against discrimination provided by the Convention, the Committee once again asks the Government to take steps to amend sections 6.5.1, 6.5.2 and 6.5.6 of the LPGE to ensure that these exceptions to the prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation are strictly limited to the inherent requirements of particular jobs – on a case by case basis – and do not lead in practice to direct or indirect discrimination based on sex. It asks the Government to provide information on the nature, circumstances and outcome of any cases addressed by the competent authorities involving sections 6.5.1, 6.5.2 and 6.5.6 of the LPGE.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that in spite of the measures taken to provide women with equal opportunities for employment, self-employment and entrepreneurship, economic participation and opportunities have declined. In that regard, the Committee observes that, according to ILOSTAT, in 2022 the labour force participation of women was still 14.9 percentage point lower than that of men (53.5 per cent and 68.4 per cent, respectively), with 39.9 per cent of women being in informal employment (compared to 48.2 per cent for men). According to the National Statistics Office, the employment rate of women remains mostly unchanged since 2020, being estimated at 48.5 per cent in 2022 compared to 61.5 per cent for men, while a greater proportion of women have at least a secondary education (91.5 per cent of women compared to 86.1 per cent of men). While women represented 42.9 per cent of workers in management positions, the Committee observes that the number of women in management positions dropped sharply from 40,962 in 2020 to 29,688, in 2022. Furthermore, it is men who are still mostly represented in mining, transport and construction (representing 85 per cent; 84.8 per cent and 82.9 per cent of the workers employed in these sectors, respectively), while women the ones are mostly represented in the accommodation and food services, health and education sectors (representing 82.3 per cent, 81.4 per cent and 76.6 per cent of the workers employed in these sectors, respectively). With regard to occupational gender segregation, the Committee also refers to its observation on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), regarding the wide and increasing gender pay gap. The Committee further notes that, in their 2022 concluding observations, both the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and the Committee on Economic Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) expressed concerned about: (1) the persistence of deep-rooted patriarchal attitudes and discriminatory stereotypes; (2) the continued underrepresentation of women and girls in non-traditional fields of study and career paths; (3) the lack of targeted measures to promote women’s economic empowerment; (4) the limited access of rural women to land ownership and use, formal employment, training opportunities, income-generating opportunities and microcredit; (5) the insufficient measures to reconcile parents’ childcare and family responsibilities with their professional lives, to the disadvantage of women’s employment; (6) the lack of affordable childcare facilities; and (7) the fact that women hold only a minority of leadership and decision-making positions (CEDAW/C/MNG/CO/10, 12 July 2022, paragraphs 20, 28, 34 and 36; and E/C.12/MNG/CO/5, 10 November 2022, paragraph 20). The Committee welcomes the Government’s indication that in order to address this situation: (1) the “gender-sensitive workplace policy” was approved by Resolution No. 38 of 12 December 2022, by the Tripartite National Committee for Labour and Social Partnership, in order to require companies to develop and implement their own gender plans and, since the beginning of 2023, about 120 enterprises and their human resources employees in Ulaanbaatar and 4 provinces of the region have been trained in that regard; (2) a revised draft version of the Law on State and Locally Owned Companies was submitted in May 2022 to the Parliament in order to require an increase in the participation of women in the board of directors of state-owned companies; and (3) actions are being developed to increase the number of girls and women studying information technology and STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) and to increase the number of men studying in the health and education areas. In that regard, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Cross-Sectoral Strategic Plan for Promoting Gender Equality in Mongolia (2022-2031) which sets the following specific objectives: (1) reducing gender discrimination in the labour market, including by establishing and operating a platform for effective collaboration amongst the Government, employers' and workers' organizations, media and relevant international partners; (2) eliminating gender stereotypes and creating economic incentives to promote gender equality, including by showcasing best practices in supporting women's employment opportunities; (3) promoting women's representation in politics and in leadership at the decision-making level; (4) strengthening the national machinery for gender equality and promoting cooperation and partnership; and (5) improving the collection of sex-disaggregated data, gender statistics and gender analysis for the policy planning, implementation and reporting processes. Welcoming the measures taken, the Committee asks the Government to pursue and strengthen its efforts, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, to address persistent vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation and enhance women's access to a wider range of jobs and higher-level positions. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures implemented to that end, in the framework of the Cross-Sectoral Strategic Plan for Promoting Gender Equality in Mongolia (2022-31) or otherwise, in particular to combat gender inequalities and stereotypes; (ii) the implementation of the "gender-sensitive workplace policy" and the development of gender plans by companies; (iii) the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities and the promotion of equitable sharing of family responsibilities between parents; (iv) any assessment made of the impact of these measures on women's access to employment, including access to self-employment and entrepreneurship, land and credit, in particular for rural women; and (v) the participation of men and women in employment, both in the public and private sectors, disaggregated by economic sector, where possible.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2006)

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. In its previous request, the Committee noted that, while the Labour Law of 2011 explicitly provides, in section 77(2), for the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value by guaranteeing each employed man or woman an equal wage for equal work or work of the same value performed with an employer, section 77(3) of the same Law continues to limit the concept of work of equal value to the same level of education, or professional qualifications, responsibility, skills, conditions and results of work. The Committee also drew the Government's attention to the fact that the expression "with an employer" in section 77(2) of the Labour Law limits the application of the principle of equal remuneration to workers employed by the same employer. The Committee notes the adoption of the new Labour Law in 2020 and that section 99 provides for the principle of equal remuneration for work of the same value. However, the Committee notes with regret that sections 99(1) and 99(2) have the same wording as the previous sections 77(1) and 77(2) of the Labour Law 2011. The Committee therefore once again recalls that the concept of work of equal value entails comparing the relative value of jobs or occupations that may involve different types of skills, responsibilities or working conditions that nevertheless are of equal value (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673, 675, and 677). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the Labour Law of 2020 in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention, and to ensure that comparison between the value of jobs or occupations can involve different employers and also different types of skills, responsibilities or working conditions that nevertheless are of equal value. It also requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken to this end.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b), 2 and 3 of the Convention. Work of equal value. Concept and application. The Committee recalls that article 18(4) of the Constitution of 2015 and section 18(3) of the National Civil Code of 2017, provide that there shall be no discrimination with regard to remuneration and social security between women and men “for the same work”, which is narrower than the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of “equal value” enshrined in the Convention. On the other hand, section 7 of the Labour Act of 2017 provides that there shall be no discrimination with regard to remuneration between men and women “for work of equal value”, which shall be assessed on the basis of the nature of work, time and efforts required, skills and productivity. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government affirms its awareness of and commitment to the importance of the principle of the Convention. It indicates that the principle is applied to all workers, including those falling outside the scope of protection of the Labour Act, such as civil service servants, army, police and armed forces, by the means of special legislation as well as the establishment of salary scales for government employees at all levels. The Committee notes that no details are provided as to how the application of the principle of equal remuneration between men and women is ensured in the definition of salary scales. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government about the implementation of various awareness-raising activities on labour welfare, including non-discrimination, for workers, employers and trade unions as well as trainings for enforcement officials, although it is unclear from the information provided whether such activities cover specifically the principle of the Convention. It also notes the Government’s indication that the labour inspectors did not report any cases of gender discrimination in remuneration during the fiscal year 2022–23. The Committee furthermore notes the Government’s indication that during one of the meetings of the tripartite committee on minimum wage fixation the issue of objective job evaluation methods was discussed and it was recommended that the Government should develop and apply objective job evaluation criteria.

The Committee underscores that a clear understanding of the concept of “work of equal value” is essential to ensuring the full application of the Convention and refers the Government to its 2006 general observation on the subject. In this respect, it also wishes to emphasize the importance of ensuring consistency in legislative provisions providing for equal remuneration in order to ensure full application of the Convention, including its coherent monitoring by the competent authorities. It recalls that “value”, in the context of the Convention, refers to the worth of a job for the purpose of computing remuneration. While Article 1 indicates what cannot be considered in determining rates of remuneration, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation to determine value, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. Comparing the relative value of jobs in occupations which may involve different types of skills, responsibilities or working conditions, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall, is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the failure to recognize the value of work performed by women and men free from gender bias (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 674). The Committee encourages the Government to consider taking steps to harmonize its legislation with a view to removing any inconsistency in giving full expression to the principle of equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value. It also strongly recommends that the Government makes every effort to promote the public understanding of the principle of the Convention, undertaking specific awareness-raising and capacity-building activities on the principle of the Convention for workers, employers and their organizations and enforcement officials, and asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard in cooperation with the social partners. The Committee furthermore requests the Government to specify the special legislation and the provisions therein that guarantee equal remuneration between men and women for work of equal value with respect to the workers excluded from the scope of the Labour Act of 2017 as well as the measures adopted to ensure that the principle of the Convention is applied when setting salary scales for government employees. Please also provide information on: (i) any progress made in developing, promoting and implementing objective job evaluation methods in the public and private sectors;(ii) any trainings for inspectors on how to investigate and assess the presence of gender discrimination in remuneration; and (iii) any cases of pay inequality dealt with by the labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authority, the sanctions imposed and remedies granted, and in particular on any cases involving the application of section 7 of the Labour Act of 2017. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance with regard to the issues raised above.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee recalls its previous observation in which it referred to the adoption of several legislative provisions on non-discrimination but noted that they do not expressly cover the grounds of political opinion and national extraction set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government states that article 18(3) of the Constitution as well as section 6 of the Right to Employment Act of 2018 cover the ground of “political opinion” in that they prohibit discrimination on the basis of “ideology”. The Government also clarifies that the protections against discrimination enshrined in the labour legislation apply to both national and non-national workers. The Committee encourages the Government to consider including an explicit prohibition of both direct and indirect discrimination in its legislative provisions on non-discrimination at the earliest opportunity and reiterates its request for information on the practical application of these provisions, namely section 180 of the Labour Act of 2017, section 6 of the Labour Regulations of 2018, section 18 of the National Civil Code of 2017, and section 6 of the Right to Employment Act of 2018, including information on any relevant decisions by courts and tribunals which would allow the Committee to assess if and to what extent: (i) the ground of “national extraction” is covered under the legislative prohibition of discrimination on the basis of “origin”; and (ii) workers in the informal economy are also protected against discrimination in employment and occupation under the abovementioned legislation.

Articles 1 and 5. Restrictions on women’s access to employment and on women’s employment abroad. The Committee refers to its previous comments on existing restrictions imposed on women with regard to access to employment abroad. It notes that the ban introduced by the parliamentary International Relations and Labour Committee on women’s emigration to the countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council for domestic work was removed in 2020, subject to the following conditions: (1) that there exists a bilateral agreement between Nepal and the destination country; (2) that destination countries have separate specific labour laws ensuring protection and rights of workers; (3) that a mandatory training course is followed before departure; and (4) that the concerned migrants have an understanding of local culture, language and job requirements. Welcoming the partial lifting of the restrictions on women’s access to employment abroad, the Committee requests the Government: (i) to provide information on the number of requests rejected annually due to the unfulfillment of the conditions set out by the International Relations and Labour Committee and the measures adopted to enable women to meet such conditions and have an opportunity to emigrate, if they so wish, on an equal footing with men, including the number of bilateral migration agreements signed so far; and (ii) indicate whether other restrictions on women's employment abroad, such as those included in the guidelines regarding Nepalese migrant domestic workers, are still in force and if consideration is being given to their removal with a view to eliminating any discrimination between men and women with respect to access to employment and occupation.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measure adopted to ensure better protection for both men and women wishing to work abroad, including equipping embassies to respond quickly to complaints of abuse.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1971)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) received on 30 August 2023, and then communicated by the Government.

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV express concern regarding the persistent gender pay gap which is higher than in other European countries. In that regard, the Committee observes that, according to EUROSTAT, in 2021, the unadjusted gender pay gap was estimated at 13.5 per cent (compared to 14.7 per cent in 2018) being higher than the average gender pay gap in the European Union (12.7 per cent). It notes that, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics (CBS), the gender pay gap was particularly high in the private sector (19.2 per cent, compared to 11.1 per cent in the public sector) and persisted in all economic sectors, including in those where women are more represented (such as healthcare, education and services). Furthermore, in 2020, the gender pay gap was as high as 28 per cent in the financial activities, 27 per cent in trade and 23 per cent in industry. The Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report, that the gender pay gap is a reflection of the different positions of men and women in the labour market, as men work more often in jobs with higher salaries, for example in the financial sector, while women work more often in lower-paid sectors, such as the healthcare sector. The Committee refers, in that regard, to its comments made on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee notes from the Government's report that several measures are being implemented to address the gender pay gap, namely: (1) the adoption of a new Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination 2022-2025 which provides for various targeted measures in order to promote equal pay for work of equal value; and (2) the planned implementation of the Directive (EU) 2023/970 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 10 May 2023 to strengthen the application of equal value between men and women, in collaboration with the social partners. Observing that the EU Directive entered into force on 6 June 2023 and must be implemented by EU Member States within three years, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, as part of the implementation process, awareness-raising and training activities for workers and employers shall be developed. The Government adds that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment will explore whether conducting further research into reduction of the gender pay gap is methodologically feasible and whether this can be helpful in further improving gender equality in the labour market. The aim is to inform the House of Representatives by the end of 2023. The Committee observes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV fully support this initiative and plead for not postponing such research. Welcoming the measures taken and envisaged by the Government, the Committee observes that the gender pay gap only slightly decreased over the past years and remains high, more particularly in the private sector. In light of the high and persistent gender pay gap, the Committee asks the Government to strengthen its efforts in order to identify and address the likely underlying causes of the gender pay gap, such as occupational gender segregation and gender stereotypes. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures implemented to that end, in particular in the framework of the Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination 2022-2025, and their impact; (ii) any developments introduced to improve pay transparency, in particular in the context of the transposition of the EU Pay Transparency Directive of 2023; and (iii) the earnings of men and women, in both the public and private sectors, disaggregated by economic sector and occupation, where possible, as well as any further research carried out by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment or any other body on the gender pay gap.

Article 2. Measures to address differences in remuneration of part-time workers and workers in other diverse forms of work contracts. The Committee notes that, according to the CBS data ("Emancipatiemonitor" 2022), in 2020, 75 per cent of women worked part-time (a share that increased by 4.5 per cent since 2008, compared to 32 per cent for men) and the average hourly wages of part-time workers remain lower than those of full-time workers. Industries where many employees work part-time are relatively often industries with low hourly wages, such as the trade and the hospitality industry, where employees are mainly women, thereby leading to indirect discrimination based on gender with respect to pay. The Government adds that: (1) several measures have already been implemented to increase labour participation of part-time workers, such as the extension of the childbirth leave and parental leave; (2) a campaign has been launched to encourage part-time workers to start the conversation with their employer and at home in order to increase their working hours; and (3) a broad societal dialogue will be launched by the end of 2023 to discuss barriers for women to fully engage into the labour market. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV express serious concerns about the Government's approach which increases pressure on women instead of adopting measures that would introduce systematic changes and correct structural discrimination and barriers for gender equality, in particular regarding the role of women as primary caregivers. In that regard, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156). As regards other non-standard forms of work contracts, the Committee notes that, according to CBS, persons with a fixed-term contract earn on average less than persons with a permanent contract. The Government states that it plans to abolish zero-hour contracts and on-call contracts (except for students with part-time jobs) and to replace them by a new type of contract that will provide more predictability as regards number of working hours and wages. The Government adds that these measures will be debated in Parliament in 2023 and are expected to have positive effects on gender equality, as currently women are over-represented in non-standard forms of work contract. Welcoming this information, the Committee however notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the measures implemented or envisaged to address differences in remuneration of part-time workers and workers in other non-standard forms of work contracts. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts in order to address differences in remuneration between men and women and implement the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, taking into account the high number of women engaged in part-time work and other non-standard forms of work contracts and their lower hourly rates, as well as their concentration in jobs that are generally lower paid. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any targeted measures elaborated and implemented to that end, including in collaboration with the social partners; (ii) any legislative developments regarding non-standard forms of work contracts, in particular zero-hour and on-call contracts, and their impact on the gender pay gap; and (iii) the number of men and women engaged in part-time work and other non-standard forms of work contracts and their average remuneration in comparison to full-time workers.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) received on 30 June 2022 and 30 August 2023, and then communicated by the Government.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. Social origin. Recalling that “social origin” is not mentioned among the prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in the Equal Treatment Act, the Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that: (1) no administrative or judicial decision has been issued regarding discrimination on the ground of social origin; (2) one of the current multi-annual programmes of the Netherlands Labour Authority (NLA, formerly the Labour Inspectorate – SZW) is focused on employment-related psychological pressure, including labour market discrimination, and covers all types of inappropriate behaviours, including but not limited to discrimination on the ground of social origin; and (3) from 2019 to 2023, around 50 complaints on potential instances of discrimination based on social origin resulted in an intervention by the NLA. While noting the lack of information regarding the nature and results of such interventions, the Committee notes the Government’s statement that the Bill on Monitoring Equal Opportunities in Recruitment and Selection covers all grounds of discrimination, and continued tripartite social dialogue is maintained on this issue. In that regard, the Committee notes that the Bill was adopted by the House of Representatives on 14 March 2023 and will be examined by the Senate, but observes that: (1) the Bill only covers access to employment and does not cover all aspects of employment and occupation in the meaning of Article 1(3) of the Convention; and (2) it does not explicitly refer to “social origin” as a prohibited ground of discrimination. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to explicitly prohibit discrimination based on social origin in the national legislation to cover at least all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, in all aspects of employment and occupation. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in that regard, including in collaboration with social partners. Pending the adoption of such provisions, the Committee asks the Government to indicate how employees and applicants, in both the public and private sectors, are protected against discrimination based on social origin in practice, as well as any awareness-raising activities undertaken in that regard among the NLA, workers, employers and their respective organizations.

Articles 2 and 3. National equality policy. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a new Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination for 2022-2025 is currently being implemented, building on the previous Action Plan. As a result, several actions will be implemented, such as awareness-raising activities among employers and workers about their rights and duties, developing tools to help employers establish fair recruitment procedures, conducting research and drafting legislation. The Government adds that the House of Representatives is informed annually about the progress made in the implementation of the Action Plan, although it is difficult to measure the effect of such policy directly. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV acknowledge the attempts made to measure the effects of the policy but highlight that the Government has not set any goals aimed at reducing discrimination which remains persistent, with one in six workers reporting to have experienced discrimination. The Committee further notes that, in its 2022 conclusions, the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) noted that, in spite of its previous recommendations, neither indicators nor measurable targets were inserted into the Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination (CRI(2022)03, 2022, page 5). In that regard, the Committee notes that, in its 2023 submission to the United Nations (UN) Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights (NIHR) also regretted that even though the Action Plan sets out the intention to add measurable outcomes, the plan has not yet been updated with measurable outcomes one year after its publication. The Committee welcomes the measures taken and envisaged by the Government to prevent and address discrimination in the labour market but notes the repeated lack of information on the impact of the measures taken. Therefore, the Committee asks the Government to ensure, in collaboration with the social partners, that appropriate indicators and measurable targets are designed and challenges are clearly identified to monitor and improve the effectiveness of any measures taken under the Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination 2022-25 or otherwise. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken under the new Action Plan and their impact, including information from the progress reports presented to the Parliament at regular intervals.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. The Committee notes that, according to Central Bureau of Statistics (CBS), the percentage of persons with a migration background in the Netherlands (including second-generation migrants) represented 25.4 per cent of the whole population in 2022. The Committee notes the Government's indication that several pilot projects were developed within the "For an Inclusive Labour Market" (VIA) Programme, that ended in 2021, to improve the labour market position of persons with a "non-Western" migration background (i.e. persons of whom both parents were born outside the Netherlands). The Government adds that these workers can also benefit from the generic measures taken to address discrimination, in particular in the framework of the Action Plan on Labour Market Discrimination for 2022-2025 and the Bill on Monitoring Equal Opportunities in Recruitment and Selection, which was adopted by the House of Representatives on 14 March 2023 and is now under consideration by the Senate. The Committee welcomes the appointment of: (1) a National Coordinator on Discrimination and Racism in October 2021 with the task to elaborate a multi-year action plan to combat all forms of discrimination, hate speech and racism; and (2) a Committee of State on Discrimination and Racism in July 2022. The Committee also notes, from a study carried out by the Netherlands Institute for Social Research (SCP), that persons with a "non-Western" migration background, particularly those of Moroccan and Turkish origin, more often experience labour market discrimination, both when looking for work and at work: they have to wait longer before finding a job and before obtaining a permanent contract and they are paid less than other persons ("Monitor of equal opportunities and positions in the labour market regardless of migration background", November 2021). Observing that the Government acknowledges that several studies showed that applicants with a Turkish or Moroccan name have still fewer opportunities in the labour market, the Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV, also express concerns at the persistent discrimination faced by workers with a "non-Western" migration background, in particular young workers and workers of Moroccan and Turkish origin, regarding their participation in the labour market. The trade unions highlight that their unemployment rate is still three times higher compared to Dutch nationals (16 per cent and 5 per cent respectively). The Committee further notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed concerns about: (1) reports of discrimination against students with ethnic minority and immigrant backgrounds, in particular with respect to lower assessment from their teachers for their admission to secondary school and obtaining internships, which has a negative impact on their future prospects on the labour market; and (2) many people with an immigrant background and ethnic minorities who continue to face discrimination in access to employment (CERD/C/NLD/CO/22-24, 16 November 2021, paragraphs 19, 21 and 25). In that regard, the Committee also observes from the Government's report that the number of cases of discrimination at work reported to the NIHR by persons with a migration background increased from 27 in 2019 to 59 in 2022. Since 2019, the Netherlands Labour Authority received around 60 complaints on potential instances of discrimination against persons with a "non-Western" background which resulted in an intervention by the NLA. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to effectively address discrimination and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in education, employment and occupation for persons with a “non-Western” migration background, including those of Moroccan and Turkish origin. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures implemented to that end, in particular as regards recruitment and selection processes, including in the framework of the Action Plan on Labour Discrimination and the future legislation on Monitoring Equal Opportunities in Recruitment and Selection; (ii) the activities carried out by the National Coordinator on Discrimination and Racism and the Committee of State on Discrimination and Racism; (iii) any assessment made of the impact of these measures as well as of the situation of persons with a “non-Western” migration background on the labour market; and (iv) the number, nature and outcome of cases of discrimination against persons with a “non-Western” migration background dealt with by NLA, the NIHR, the courts or any other competent authorities.

Migrant workers. The Committee notes the Government’s statement that, in order to address labour exploitation of migrant workers, several measures are being envisaged to implement the recommendations made in October 2020 by the Migrant Worker Protection Task Force in its report entitled “Not Second-Class Citizens”. The Government adds that such measures include: (1) the introduction of a certification scheme for temporary employment agencies; (2) the improvement of registration and housing for migrant workers; and (3) the recruitment of additional labour inspectors. Welcoming this information, the Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) regarding the concerns expressed by both the CNV and the FNV about: (1) the exploitative labour conditions of migrant workers, in particular those employed as domestic workers; and (2) the lack of effective enforcement of existing laws and regulations, including by the labour inspectorate. In that regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that, between 2019 and 2023, around 10 to 15 complaints on potential cases of discrimination against migrant workers resulted in an intervention by the NLA. The Committee urges the Government to take steps to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment for migrant workers in employment and occupation, in particular by combating exploitation of migrant workers and ensuring safe working conditions. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures and programmes implemented to that end, in particular in order to supervise the activities of temporary employment agencies and strengthen labour inspections in sectors employing a large number of migrants, including domestic work; (ii) any assessment made on the impact of these measures; and (iii) the number, nature and outcome of cases of discrimination against migrant workers detected by or reported to NLA, the NIHR, the courts or any other competent authorities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) received on 30 June 2022 and 30 August 2023, and then communicated by the Government.

Article 4 of the Convention. Leave entitlements for men and women workers with family responsibilities. The Committee welcomes the Government’s indication, in its report, that several measures have been implemented to enhance leave arrangements in order to facilitate a better reconciliation between work and family responsibilities, namely: (1) as of January 2020, the one week childbirth leave paid 100 per cent was increased by five additional weeks of partially paid leave amounting to 70 per cent of the daily wages; (2) as of August 2022, parents are entitled to nine weeks of partially paid parental leave amounting to 70 per cent of their daily wages; (3) several awareness-raising activities have been carried out on these new provisions which are expected to lead substantially more men to take leave; and (4) figures on the initial effects of these measures on the distribution of care responsibilities are not yet available but an assessment of leave entitlements for workers with family responsibilities will take place in 2025. The Committee also notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV reiterate their concerns regarding: (1) the lack of paid long-term care leave for other members of the family; and (2) the lack of fully paid childbirth leave and parental leave which results in a higher percentage of women employed in part-time jobs and negatively impacts on gender equality at work. The trade unions also express specific concerns about the accessibility of leave entitlements for parents from lower income groups, as 70 per cent of their daily wages may result in a level below the minimum wage or even the social benefit. A recent evaluation of the additional childbirth leave showed that 35 per cent of lower income partners do not take up this leave (compared to only 16 per cent for partners from higher income group). The Committee notes from the Government's report that a research has been commissioned to better understand this situation. The Government adds that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Employment is currently assessing the possibility for simplifying the leave system. In that context, recommendations from the Social and Economic Council (SER) would be taken into consideration and social partners would be included in the dialogue on gender equality in the labour market, that is expected to start by the end of 2023. The Committee wishes to draw the attention of the Government in that regard to its 2023 General Survey entitled achieving gender equality at work (see chapter 7, "Reconciling work and family responsibilities" and with respect to the existence of statutory paternity leave, see paragraph 701). In light of persistent gender stereotypes concerning the sharing of family responsibilities, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to encourage more men to make use of family-related leave. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any awareness-raising activities undertaken to promote the exercise of shared parental responsibilities and caring for children and other immediate family members, as well as on the impact of such measures; (ii) any assessment made, in collaboration with the social partners, of the effectiveness of existing family-related leave entitlements, in particular regarding the reasons why partners do not make use of additional childbirth leave or parental leave; and (iii) the number of men and women workers making use of family-related leave entitlements, both in the public and private sectors. The Government is also requested to provide information on any initiatives and outcomes in collective bargaining in the area of work-life balance leave and benefits.

Article 5. Childcare and family services and facilities. The Committee welcomes the Government's statement that, following up on the recommendations made by the SER in 2016, several measures have been implemented to improve the quality of childcare services, in particular by enhancing training opportunities and improving professional skills for workers involved in this area. The Government adds that: (1) to date, childcare benefit depends on the income of the working parents and covers up to 96 per cent of the costs for the lowest income group and 30 per cent for the highest income group; (2) in 2021, only 37 per cent of children from parents in the lowest income group attended childcare facilities (compared to 25 per cent in 2015); (3) as regards informal care, the Minister of Social Affairs and Employment has agreed to work together with the social partners in informing employers on this topic; (4) municipalities have also been tasked with supporting informal caregivers, on the basis of the Social Support Act; and (5) measures are planned to be introduced in 2027 to reorganize childcare. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the CNV and the FNV stress the importance of high quality and affordable universal childcare, while highlighting that despite the promise made to ensure that childcare will be almost free for all working parents, such measure has been postponed and the corresponding budget has been reduced for the coming two years. The trade unions indicate that parents from the lowest income group will have to bear 5 per cent of the childcare costs (against 4 per cent currently), which means that they will pay €400 more per year while higher income groups will have to pay less than before. The CNV and the FNV also highlight the shortage of staff and low quality of existing facilities with low qualified childcare workers who are still in training, which means that access to childcare is not guaranteed for working parents. In addition, due to the lack of employees that want to work in childcare, partly because of the limited salaries, many young parents cannot find any place for babies which leads to increasing inequalities, as it is mostly women staying at home to take care of them. The Committee urges the Government to take steps in order to effectively ensure adequate, affordable and accessible childcare services and facilities, with a view to assisting men and women workers to reconcile work and family responsibilities and addressing the challenges raised by the CNV and FNV. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures taken to professionalize care work and improve the education and training of care workers, and their impact; (ii) the extent of childcare and family services available for men and women workers with family responsibilities; and (iii) the number of workers with family responsibilities making use of the existing childcare and family services and facilities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Government states in its report that it considers that there is a clear legal basis in the country to ensure the protection and restitution of the right to equal remuneration. In this regard, the Government refers to the Labour Code (Act 185), whose principle XIII guarantees to workers equal wages for equal work in identical working conditions, in line with their social responsibility. The Committee notes that this provision refers to equal wages for “equal work”. The Committee also notes that the terminology of that provision is more restrictive than the principle established by the Convention since this principle goes beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work and also encompasses work of a completely different nature which is nevertheless considered to be of “equal value”. The Committee also recalls that it noted in its previous comments that section 19 of Act No. 648 of 2008 on equality of rights and opportunities refers to “equal wages” for women and men for “equal work”. The Committee once again urges the Government to take steps to amend the Labour Code (Act 185) and Act No. 648 of 2008 to ensure that both fully incorporate the principle of the Convention and cover not only equal remuneration for equal work but also equal remuneration for work of equal value.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2023, in which the IOE reiterates comments made in the discussion that was held in the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) in June 2023 on the application of the Convention by Nicaragua. The IOE also indicated that several employer delegates to the 2023 International Labour Conference would file a complaint under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO, alleging non-compliance by Nicaragua with the present Convention, as well as with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87); the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98); and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee notes that the said complaint was declared receivable by the Governing Body at its 349th Session (October–November 2023) and that its content would be examined by the Governing Body at its March 2024 session.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference, June 2023, regarding the application of the Convention. The Conference Committee noted with deep concern the climate of violence, insecurity, and intimidation in the country, which is propitious for acts of discrimination in employment and occupation based on political opinion. The Conference Committee also noted the arbitrary detentions and the continuing reports of human rights violations and abuses, including gender-based discrimination. Taking account of the discussion, the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to:

- take immediate measures to end the climate of violence, insecurity and intimidation in the country,
- adopt the necessary measures to eliminate discrimination in employment and occupation and provide adequate protection for workers in the event of discrimination on the basis of political opinion;
- refrain from discrimination on political grounds, ensure that no penalties are imposed and provide adequate protection in the event of discrimination on the basis of political opinion;
- provide adequate remedies including the restoration of citizenship and the return of seized assets to those who have been discriminated against on the grounds of political opinion;
- provide information on any additional measure taken to eliminate discrimination on political grounds and on the outcome of any investigation conducted into complaints made to the administrative or judicial authorities for acts of discrimination on the basis of political opinion;
- indicate the extent to which the provision of the Labour Code (section 17(p)) also covers the “hostile work environment”;
- provide details of any administrative complaint or legal action filed with the labour or criminal courts under the provisions of the Labour Code or Criminal Code in respect of sexual and quid pro quo harassment; as well as of the penalties imposed where complaints submitted to the Ministry of Labour are upheld and identified as acts of sexual harassment.

The Conference Committee also requested the Government to continue to:

- take all measures to ensure in practice the elimination of violence and harassment in the world of work and to provide information to the Committee of Experts on all measures adopted regarding sexual harassment, including awareness-raising and prevention;
- take specific measures in practice to protect indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples against racial discrimination in employment and occupation and provide information on all measures adopted or envisaged to protect indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples against racial discrimination in employment and occupation;
- provide information on the outcomes of the many actions taken relating to the national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment;
- provide information on the type of violations identified relating to the application of the Convention, the corrective measures introduced and the penalties imposed.

The Conference Committee reminded the Government that it can avail itself of ILO technical assistance, if needed. The Conference Committee requested the Government to report, in consultation with the social partners, on the progress achieved in the implementation of the Convention before 1 September 2023.

In its final statement before the Conference Committee (and in its report), the Government took note of the conclusions but considered that they had been adopted for politically motivated reasons and expressed concern in that regard. The Government stressed its rejection of interference, influence and unequal treatment and affirmed that in Nicaragua, women, indigenous persons, persons of African descent and all men and women without discrimination, are protected and safeguarded and that the country protects all Nicaraguan women and men seeking labour stability and peace with employment and dignified lives.

The Committee urges the Government to give effect to the recommendations of the Conference Committee without delay.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. In its report the Government provides the following statistical information: (1) in 2020, 44 cases of sexual and quid pro quo harassment were filed with the criminal courts (25 concluded); in 2021, 37 cases (30 concluded); in 2022, 58 cases (37 concluded) and up to March 2023, 15 cases (5 resolutions); (2) the Labour and Social Welfare Courts upheld a claim of sexual harassment against a domestic worker who had been harassed by another employee (judgement No. 447/2021); (3) the Ministry of Labour dealt with 272 complaints of mistreatment and harassment at work related to non-compliance with holiday schedules, payment of overtime hours, special permissions and verbal dismissals; (4) a total of 6,609 inspections were conducted regarding equality and non-discrimination at work; and (5) between January 2018 and March 2023, 13 complaints were lodged under the administrative procedure for addressing sexual and workplace harassment in the judiciary, two of which concerned acts of sexual harassment, one of which was resolved with the termination of the harasser's employment contract. Regarding measures on awareness-raising and prevention of sexual harassment, the Government indicates that talks were held to provide training for courts, judges, directors, judicial and administrative staff from all circumscriptions, and that in 2022, a second round of training was completed for 2,710 judiciary officials, with a total of 74 workshops, aimed at preventing gender-based violence including both workplace and sexual harassment. While noting this information, the Committee observes that it does not make clear whether the cases of sexual harassment to which the Government refers include cases of sexual harassment derived from a "hostile work environment", that is, behaviour that creates an intimidating, hostile or degrading environment for the person targeted. The Committee also notes that in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) noted with concern reports of cases of gender-based violence, including psychological violence by employers and sexual harassment against many women working in the textile industry and recommended that the Government reinforce labour inspections to investigate and adequately punish such cases (CEDAW/C/NIC/PCO/7-10, 30 October 2023, paragraphs 37 and 38).

The Committee requests the Government to: (i) take the measures required to prevent and address cases of sexual harassment in the textile industry without delay; (ii) provide detailed information on the application in practice of section 17(p) of the Labour Code to cover cases of sexual harassment derived from a "hostile work environment"; (iii) continue reporting on any administrative or judicial complaint lodged with the criminal or labour courts under the provisions of the Labour or Penal Codes in relation to sexual or quid pro quo harassment, and on the penalties imposed and redress provided accordingly; and (iv) report on all measures regarding awareness-raising and training on prevention and treatment of sexual harassment aimed at employers and workers and their respective organizations, as well as the persons and authorities that address such cases.

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee notes that the Government provided information orally to the Conference Committee regarding the legislation of the country, including on section 27 of the Constitution, which prohibits, inter alia, discrimination based on political opinion. The Government indicates that Special Act No. 779 refers to the subject of political discrimination and that the organization of access to power is governed by the Constitution of Nicaragua, by the electoral process and by Electoral Act No. 331. In its report, the Government states that between January 2018 and March 2023, two cases of discrimination on the grounds of political opinion were filed with the Labour and Social Welfare Courts: (1) a case of discriminatory dismissal against a woman worker whose politics aligned with the Government in which the court found for the defendant and upheld her claim for compensation in its entirety (judgment No. 113/2019); and (2) a case of discrimination on grounds of political opinion against a woman worker, whose employment contract was affected by collective suspension measures, and in which the worker's claim for reinstatement was upheld in its entirety (judgment 06/2020).

The Committee observes with deep concern that the reports of United Nations bodies highlight the continuation of serious political discrimination in the country. The Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua (GHREN) in its report and detailed conclusions of March 2023, indicates that: (1) serious and systematic human rights violations and abuses have been committed against a sector of the Nicaraguan population, including violations of the right to participate in public affairs and of the freedoms of expression, opinion, association, assembly, conscience and religion; (2) such violations and abuses constitute a systematic and generalized attack against a civilian population through a discriminatory policy that includes the perpetration of human rights violations and crimes under international law and that have not only resulted in the destruction of the civic and democratic space in Nicaragua but, after thorough verification, indeed reveal that crimes against humanity continue to be perpetrated; (3) health workers who defied the order not to provide assistance to persons taking part in the 2018 demonstrations have suffered reprisals, including detention, threats, harassment and dismissal, while students and teachers considered as Government opponents were subject, inter alia, to arbitrary expulsion, cancelled scholarships, unfair dismissal and were refused matriculation; (4) there are reasonable grounds to believe that the authorities have sought to silence journalists, men and women, using, among other methods, physical aggression of journalists during their work, constant surveillance of media installations and of their points of access, restrictions and censure rendering the work of various media impossible, orders to shut down dozens of communication media, and numerous detentions and interrogations; and (5) there would have been various unfair dismissals of officials in the justice system, judges threatened with dismissal unless they confirm charges, pressure on public servants to pay membership dues to the Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) under threat of harassment and reprisals, and career advances to reward judges responsible for cases against persons considered to be Government opponents (see document A/HRC/52/63, paragraphs 31, 123, 124 and 126; and document A/HRC/52/CRP.5, paragraphs 167–183, 412–424, 557, 637, 792, 796, 799, 801, 806, 811 and 853–862).

Similarly, the Committee observes that in resolution A/HRC/RES/52/2 of 3 April 2023, the United Nations Human Rights Council: (1) expressed grave concern at the “deterioration of democracy, the rule of law, the separation of the powers and the situation of human rights in Nicaragua, in particular with regard to the enjoyment of civil and political rights”; (2) expressed concern at the worsening restrictions on civic and democratic space and the repression of dissent in Nicaragua, which includes acts of intimidation, harassment and unlawful or arbitrary surveillance of persons who express views that are critical of the Government of Nicaragua”; (3) urgently called on the Authorities in Nicaragua “to cease immediately the use of arbitrary arrests and detentions, as well as of threats and other forms of intimidation or alternative measures of detention, as a means to repress dissent; and (4) called on the Government of Nicaragua to prevent and publicly condemn, investigate, punish and abstain from any acts of intimidation, harassment or reprisal against [...] any individual critical of the Government, including against those who cooperate or seek to cooperate with international and regional bodies. By the same resolution, the Human Rights Council renewed the mandate of the GHREN for two years (A/HRC/RES/52/2, paragraphs 1, 2, 5, 12 and 15). The Committee also notes that in September 2023 the Chairperson of the GHREN gave an update to the Human Rights Council on the situation in the country, indicating that the general human rights environment had worsened and persecution of dissidents by the Government had escalated (see Human Rights Council press communiqué of 12 September 2023). Likewise, the Committee observes that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations, notes with concern the information about impunity for gender-based violence, including against women in detention for political reasons (CEDAW/C/NIC/PCO/7-10, of 30 October 2023, paragraph 27).

The Committee also notes with deep concern that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IAHCR), through its annual report for 2022 and various press communiqués from 2023, signalled a context of repression and human rights violations in the country (see IACHR Annual Report, 2022, Chapter IV.B, paragraphs 175 and 177; and press communiqués Nos 24/23, 67/23 and 123/23). The Committee notes that the IACHR and its Special Rapporteurship on Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights (REDESCA) expressed concern at the violations of the social security rights of Nicaraguans arbitrarily deprived of their nationality; according to information received, the State decided decision to remove all older persons who have been declared stateless and “traitors to the country” from the Nicaraguan Institute of Social Security (INSS) registry (see the REDESCA report on Poverty, Climate Change and Economic, Social, Cultural and Environmental Rights in Central America and Mexico, in the context of Human Mobility (“Pobreza, Cambio Climático y DESCAs en Centro América y México, en el Contexto de Movilidad Humana”), and IACHR press communiqué 61/23 of 14 April 2023). The Committee also observes that during 2023 the Inter-American Court of Human Rights issued several resolutions on Provisional Measures related to the political situation in the country (such as the resolutions of 8 February, 22 March, 27 June and 25 September 2023).

The Committee emphasizes that protection against discrimination on the basis of political opinion in employment and occupation implies protection in respect of the activities of expressing or demonstrating opposition to established political principles and opinions, including political affiliation. The Committee affirms that the general obligation to conform to an established ideology or to sign an oath of political allegiance is discriminatory (General Survey on Equality in Employment and Occupation, 1988, paragraph 57, and General Survey on fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 805). The Committee deplores that, according to United Nations bodies and the IACHR, human rights violations are continuing and worsening in the country. The Committee reiterates that a climate of violence, insecurity and intimidation as described by the United Nations bodies and the IACHR encourages the commission of serious acts of discrimination in employment and occupation against persons expressing their political opinion. In this regard, the Committee deplores the fact that the above institutions refer, inter alia, to acts that could amount to serious discrimination in employment and occupation against persons considered as in opposition to the Government, including acts of harassment and threats during, or in relation to the individuals’ employment, unfair dismissals, discrimination in appointments or promotions, preventing access to education and vocational training, and exclusion from social security systems.

The Committee strongly urges the Government to adopt all necessary measures to give effect to the Committee’s observations in respect of discrimination in employment and occupation and, in particular to eliminate discrimination on political grounds and provide appropriate protection to workers in cases of discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the result of all investigations concluded in relation to complaints lodged with the administrative or judicial authorities regarding acts of discrimination on the basis of political opinion.

Discrimination on the basis of race. Indigenous peoples. The Committee observes that in its oral statement to the Conference Committee, and also in its report, the Government notes that the Caribbean Coast is a priority area for human and socioeconomic development, including the creation of employment for indigenous families and families of African descent. Among the action adopted, the Government highlights: (1) the National Plan against Poverty for Human Development, 2021-2026, which includes, among other actions, teachers’ training as part of the bilingual intercultural transformation at pre-school, primary and secondary levels of education; strengthened partnerships and cooperative management and financing through a microcredit programme to promote entrepreneurship on the Caribbean coast; the promotion of agroforestry systems using crops strategically selected; assistance for families managing fowl and pigs for sustainable production; and by providing financial support for technology; and (2) the extension of technical education and training coverage through the technical colleges – Bluefields, Héroes y Mártires de Puerto Cabeza, Bernardino Díaz Ochoa de Siuna, Waspam, Corn Island, Bonanza and Rosita – where students of different ethnicities, and of African descent can study in their own languages. The Committee observes that the CEDAW, in its concluding observations, notes with concern that: (1) indigenous and Afro-descendant women face intersecting forms of discrimination and have limited access to education, employment and economic opportunities; (2) the impact of non-recognition of indigenous lands on the livelihoods of indigenous women; and (3) the limited access of indigenous women to higher education (CEDAW/C/NIC/PCO/7-10 of 30 October 2023, paragraphs 35 and 45). Likewise, the Committee notes from its report that the GHREN considers it important to further investigate violations and abuses committed against indigenous peoples and rural workers, and aspects related to corruption and the instrumentalization of the State apparatus, as well as the confiscation of assets (see document A/HRC/52/63, paragraph 9). The Committee requests the Government to: (i) report on any measures adopted to prevent and eliminate all forms of discrimination in employment and occupation against indigenous women; (ii) promote the access of indigenous women to education, employment and economic opportunities, including to the material resources required for the performance of their traditional occupations; and (iii) continue to report on any other measure adopted or envisaged to protect indigenous and Afro-descendant peoples against racial discrimination in employment and occupation.

Article 2. National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment. Public service and private sector. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the outcomes of the many actions taken relating to the national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment (for example, statistics on the labour market participation rate for women and men; the number of anti-discrimination activities undertaken; and the number of participants currently in training).

Enforcement. Labour inspection. The Government reports that of the 83,576 labour inspections conducted between 2018 and 2023, 8,854 (around 10 per cent) concerned offences related to equality and non-discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the prohibited grounds of discrimination alleged in the cases examined by the labour inspection, as well as any penalty imposed, and redress granted in cases that have been upheld; and (ii) any decision relating to cases of discrimination in employment and occupation adopted by the law courts.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication, in its report, that the Labour Standards Bill, which will introduce a provision covering the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the legislation, has not yet been adopted. Recalling that the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill has been pending since 2006, the Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to accelerate the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill that should fully reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of "equal value" in its provisions, allowing for the comparison not only of equal, the same or similar work but also of work of an entirely different nature.

Gender wage gap. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the gender pay gap is partly due to the cultural and value systems. It notes the Government's indication that measures have been taken to address the gender pay gap: (1) implementation of the National Policy on Gender in Education and its Implementation Guide (2021), with a main focus to close the gender gap in school enrolment and drop-out rates at the primary, secondary and tertiary levels; (2) implementation of the Adolescent Girl Initiative for Learning and Empowerment Programme (AGILE) (2020-2025), supported by the World Bank, to enhance women's economic empowerment and increase women's access to education and employment; and (3) skills training and capacity building of women entrepreneurs through the "50 Million African Women Speak" project. The Committee takes note of the data provided by the Government on the employment of men and women in different employment sectors for 2019 and 2020. The Government further indicates that statistical data is available in the Nigerian Living Standard Survey 2018-2019, but the Committee notes that this Survey provides information on the poverty rates in urban and rural areas and not on the earnings of men and women in different economic sectors and professional categories. In this regard, the Committee refers to its General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraph 888. The Committee requests the Government to provide: (i) information on the impact of the measures adopted to address the gender pay gap; (ii) up-to-date statistical data, disaggregated by sex, on the distribution of workers in the public sector, by occupational category, specifying their corresponding remuneration level; and (iii) information on the measures adopted in cooperation with workers and employers' organizations to raise awareness and promote the application of the provisions of the Convention in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report still has not taken any steps for the adoption of comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation. It notes that the Government merely states that the Labour Standards Bill has been approved by the Federal Executive Council and is before the Ministry of Justice for legal drafting for onward transmission to the National Assembly. Recalling that the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill has been pending since 2006, the Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to accelerate the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill and the Gender and Equal Opportunities Bill 2016, and to ensure that the legislation explicitly prohibits direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention concerning all stages of employment.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Maternity. With reference to the Committee's previous requests that the Government take measures to address discriminatory practices in the workplace against women based on maternity and marital status, the Committee notes the Government's brief statement that it will collaborate with the social partners on this issue. It notes with regret that no further information is given. The Committee recalls that distinctions in employment and occupation based on pregnancy or maternity are discriminatory, as they can only, by definition, affect women. Discriminatory practices linked to pregnancy or maternity continue to exist and have been particularly linked to dismissal and denial of the return to work following maternity leave, the use of temporary contracts to discriminate against pregnant women and mandatory pregnancy testing (see General Survey of 2012 on fundamental Conventions, paragraph 784). The Committee urges the Government to: (i) take measures to address discriminatory practices in the workplace based on maternity and marital status, such as awareness-raising activities in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations; (ii) provide information on the progress achieved to this end; and (iii) provide information on the number and nature of the cases identified and addressed by the competent authorities, in particular by labour inspectors, the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the ratification by Nigeria, on 8 November 2022, of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). It notes the Government's repeated indication, in its report, that the issue of sexual harassment at the workplace will be addressed in the Labour Standards Bill. However, it notes that the Government does not clarify whether the bill will prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, and whether it will provide access to remedies for all workers. The Committee therefore again asks the Government to ensure that the Labour Standards Bill include provisions that: (i) clearly define and prohibit all forms of sexual harassment in employment and occupation (both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment); (ii) provide access to remedies for all workers, men and women; and (iii) provide for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions and adequate compensations. It asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and on the status of the Bill. The Committee also asks the Government to: (i) take measures to prevent and address sexual harassment in employment and occupation, including in the informal economy; and (ii) provide information on the number of complaints lodged concerning sexual harassment and the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Discrimination based on race, colour, religion, national extraction or social origin. Ethnic and religious minorities. Recalling that Nigeria is an ethnically and linguistically diverse society, the Committee notes the Government's general indication, in reply to its previous comment, that the Constitution prohibits discrimination based on race, colour, religion, national extraction or social origin and that there is no such discrimination in the country. The Committee notes with concern the lack of information in the Government's report on the application of the Convention with respect to the different ethnic and religious groups in the country. It recalls that constitutional provisions and the absence of complaints is not sufficient to fulfil the obligations of the Convention; nor is it an indicator of the absence of discrimination in practice, but it is only a first step in implementing a national equality policy. Where no cases or complaints, or very few, are being lodged, this is likely to indicate a lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures, or fear of reprisals. The lack of complaints or cases could also indicate that the system of recording violations is insufficiently developed (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 850 and 870). Recalling that no society is free from discrimination and that continuous action is required to address it, the Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures to ensure that the right to equality and non-discrimination for ethnic and religious minority groups is effective in practice, such as affirmative action and awareness-raising measures or the adoption of policies and programmes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken to this end; (ii) the number and nature of complaints filed with the Human Rights Commission that relate to discrimination based on race, colour, religion or national extraction, as well as the grounds relied upon; and (iii) any legislative developments relevant to the rights of minorities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Republic of Korea

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) and the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) received, respectively, on 18 July 2022 and 8 September 2023. It also notes the comments of the Government on FKTU's observations dated 5 October 2023.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls, once again, that section 8(1) of the Equal Employment Opportunity and Work-Family Balance Assistance Act only provides for equal wages for work of equal value "in the same business" and that the Equal Treatment Regulation (No. 422) limits the possibility of comparing work performed by men and women to "work of a similar nature". It notes the Government's indication that section 4(1) of the Operational Guidelines on Equal Employment Opportunities for Men and Women, which was drawn up to ensure equal opportunities and treatment for men and women and to support workers' work-life balance, stipulates that "work of equal value" under the Act means work of the same or similar nature between men and women compared to each other in terms of skills, efforts, responsibilities and working conditions required to perform labour, or work that is recognized as having essentially the same value by methods such as job evaluation even if the two jobs are somewhat different. It also notes the Government's statement that extending the scope of comparison beyond the same workplace or the same company might be unreasonable or place undue burden on small business owners. Taking into consideration the extremely high and persistent gender wage gap (31.2 per cent in 2022 according to data from the Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)) and the occupational gender segregation of the labour market in Korea, the Committee wishes to recall that the concept of "work of equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and the promotion of equality. Due to historical attitudes and stereotypes regarding women's aspirations, preferences and capabilities, certain jobs are held predominantly or exclusively by women (such as in caring professions) and others by men (such as in construction). Often "female jobs" are undervalued in comparison with work of equal value performed by men when determining wage rates. The concept of "work of equal value" is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market, which exists in almost every country, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. For more information in this regard, the Committee refers the Government to its General Survey of 2012 on fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 672–675. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that its legal framework does not only provide for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also addresses situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value, including beyond the same establishment or enterprise, so as not to hinder progress in eradicating gender-based pay discrimination.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) received on 18 July 2022 and those of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) received on 8 September 2023. It also notes the observations of the Korea Employers' Federation (KEF), communicated by the Government on 5 October 2023, together with the comments of the Government on KEF's and FKTU's observations.

Article 1 of the Convention. Inherent requirements of the job. Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. Public officials. The Committee notes the indication contained in the Government's report that the amendment bills introduced in 2017 to guarantee public officials', including teachers', political freedom (such as political party membership and the right to participate in election campaigns) – which the Committee had noted in its previous comment as pending before the National Assembly – have been withdrawn due to the expiration of the 20th National Assembly. It also notes the Government's indication that three new amendment bills to the State Public Officials Act (SPOA) have been introduced in June 2023 in order to alleviate the prohibition of political activities by public officials. These amendments would allow public officials to join political parties and organizations, but would prohibit them from engaging in political activities "when they use their public status". It further notes the Government's pledge to "proactively support a comprehensive review by the National Assembly of the observations of [the] Committee of Experts, other government cases and decisions made by the Constitutional Court of Korea, during the dialogue regarding the amendments." In this regard, the Committee notes the FKTU's call for an urgent review of approximately 40 laws and regulations imposing such extensive restrictions on the activities and fundamental political rights of public servants, including teachers, that it amounts to encroaching on the fundamental human rights of citizens of a democratic society, such as freedom of expression. In reply, the Government acknowledges that it is necessary to strike a balance between the duty of political impartiality incumbent upon public officials and the value of political freedom enjoyed by individual citizens and that it is therefore imperative to engage in legislative policy discussions and make informed decisions. The Committee emphasizes, once again, that political opinion may, in certain circumstances, constitute a bona fide qualification for certain senior posts which are directly concerned with developing government policy. However, this is not the case when conditions of a political nature are laid down for public employment in general, or for certain other professions. It is essential that such restrictions are not carried beyond certain limits – to be evaluated on a case-by-case basis – as such practices may then come into conflict with the Convention's provisions calling for the implementation of a policy designed to eliminate discrimination based on political opinion, in particular in respect of public employment (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 831). The Committee also recalls that it has examined and commented on the issue of discrimination based on political opinion since 2012 and that this has been discussed by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (as regards teachers) for three consecutive years (2013 to 2015). In view of the above, and in particular the failure to conclude the examination of past legislative amendment proposals, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take concrete and efficient steps to keep to the strict minimum the limitations to the freedom of political opinion and expression of public officials (at the national, regional or local level) – including teachers at all levels of the education system. In this regard, it asks the Government, once again, to consider the possibility of adopting, in the near future, a list of jobs in the public service for which political opinion would be considered an inherent requirement. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard, including before the National Assembly.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Romania

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination based on religion. Access to education, training and employment. The Committee notes, from the European Commission's website, that a draft bill to amend the Romanian Education Law was filed on 2 December 2017 and received a positive advisory opinion from the Economic and Social Council on 9 January 2018. The bill proposes the following additions to section 7 of the Education Law: "for the purpose of facilitating the identification of persons in educational units, institutions and all spaces used for education and professional training, it is prohibited to cover one's face with any material which make it difficult to recognize the face, except for medical reasons. Infringement of these provisions constitutes a reason to deny access to the perimeter of the educational units, institutions and spaces for education and professional training." The sanction, introduced as an amendment to section 360(1) of the Education Law would be a fine ranging from 5,000 to 50,000 Romanian Leu (RON) (approximately €1,100 to €11,000). The Committee notes that, if adopted, this new provision will be discriminatory towards those Muslim women and girls who wear a full face veil in terms of their access to educational or training institutions and might therefore limit their opportunities to find and exercise employment in the future – for reasons associated with their religious convictions, contrary to the Convention. Noting that this provision of the draft bill may have a discriminatory effect towards Muslim women who wear a full-face veil in terms of their possibilities of finding and exercising employment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: how it is ensured that this provision of the draft bill will not have the effect of reducing the opportunities of girls and women to access education and finding employment in the future; (ii) the progress of the draft bill in the legislative process; and (iii) to supply information on the number of girls and women who might be affected by the implementation of this new provision.

Articles 1(2) and 4. Discrimination based on political opinion. Inherent requirements of the job. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the restriction set by section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999, which provides that "to hold public office a person shall meet the following conditions: ... (j) shall not have been carrying out an activity in the political police as defined by the law", could amount to discrimination on the basis of political opinion because it applies broadly to the entire public service rather than to specific jobs, functions or tasks. In its previous report, the Government had explained that, in order to clarify the legal norm and remove any possible inconsistency with the Convention, it had proposed an amendment to the current text of section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 as follows: "... was not a worker of the Securitate or a collaborator thereof, as provided by specific legislation». According to the Government, "specific legislation" refers to section 2 of Ordinance No. 24/2008 which defines an "employee of Securitate" and a "collaborator of Securitate". While understanding the Government's concerns regarding the requirement for all government unit members to be loyal to the State, the Committee had drawn attention to the fact that, for such measures not to be deemed discriminatory under Article 4 of the Convention relating to activities prejudicial to the security of the State, they must affect an individual on account of activities he or she is justifiably suspected or proven to have undertaken. These measures become discriminatory when taken simply by reason of membership to a particular group or community. They must refer to activities that are objectively prejudicial to the security of the State and the individual concerned must have the right to appeal to a competent body in accordance with national practice (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 832–835). The Committee therefore requested the Government to specify and define the functions in respect of which section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 would apply and to provide information on its application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. It notes, however, that the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) (Naidin v. Romania, No. 38162/07) held that the barring of a former collaborator of the political police from public service employment was justified by the loyalty expected from all civil servants towards the democratic regime. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, under Article 1(2), political opinion may be taken into account as an inherent requirement of a particular position involving special responsibilities in relation to developing government policy, which is not the case of section 54(j) given that it applies to any state civil service position, whatever the level of responsibility. Further, the Committee recalls that the principle of proportionality must apply and that the exception under Article 4 should be interpreted strictly. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 or to adopt other measures clearly stipulating and defining the functions to which this section applies. It also asks the Government to provide information on the application of section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 in practice, including information on the number of persons dismissed or whose application has been rejected pursuant to this section, the reasons for these decisions and the functions concerned, as well as information on the appeal procedure available to the affected persons and any appeals lodged and their results.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee recalls the lack of legislation requiring equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee previously noted the Guidelines issued by the Tripartite Alliance for Fair Employment Practices (TAFEP) on 3 May 2007, which include a section on remuneration stating that “[e]mployers should pay employees wages commensurate with the value of the job [...] regardless of age, gender, race, religion and family status, employees should be paid and rewarded based on their performance, contribution and experience”. It notes, from the TAFEP’s website, that as of September 2019, 7,144 organizations have signed the Employers’ Pledge for Fair Employment Practices, which is a public commitment from employers to create fair and inclusive workplaces according to the TAFEP’s Guidelines. The Committee notes the Government’s statement, in its report that, in July 2017, Tripartite Standards (TSes) were introduced to enhance fair and progressive employment practices on flexible work agreements, recruitment practices and unpaid leave for unexpected care needs. Noting that the TAFEP continued training workshops to assist employers implementing fair and progressive employment practices, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Human Capital Partnership (HCP) Programme was launched in 2017 by tripartite partners to “grow an inclusive community of progressive employers”, and will be managed by the TAFEP. The Committee however observes that the Government does not provide information on any measures taken by the TAFEP to promote specifically the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. While noting the Government’s statement that the gender pay gap was estimated at 11.8 per cent in 2017 with broad-based improvement across most occupational groups, the Committee notes, from the statistical information provided by the Government, that in 2017 the median gross monthly salary of women employed in the same occupational category as men was systematically lower than that of men, except for clerical support workers where it was slightly higher. It notes in particular that the gender wage gap was estimated at 12.2 per cent for managers and administrators; 18.7 for working proprietors; 14.4 for professionals and still remains wider for craftsmen and related trades workers (22.3 per cent) and plant and machine operators and assemblers (19.1 per cent). The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the wage gap can be attributed to the fact that women are more likely to exit the workforce or have intermittent patterns of work, for reasons such as childcare and the care of the elderly. The Government adds that its approach to address the gender pay gap is to empower women with choices to stay in the workforce, instead of having to exit it to fulfil caregiving responsibilities. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the adoption and implementation of measures to assist women to enter, re-enter or remain in the workforce, including through flexible working arrangements and the introduction of measures to encourage shared parental responsibilities (such as a two weeks paid paternity leave and the possibility for fathers to share up to four weeks of their wife’s maternity leave). The Committee however notes that, in its 2017 concluding observations, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) remained concerned about: (i) the persistent gender wage gap in all occupational categories, except clerical support; (ii) the continued vertical and horizontal occupational segregation in both the public and private sectors; (iii) the persistence of discriminatory stereotypes about the role of women as primary caregivers, including as caregivers of older persons; (iv) the fact that women still remain underrepresented in traditionally male-dominated fields of study, such as engineering, electronics and information technology, at the tertiary level; as well as (v) the underrepresentation of women on corporate boards, notwithstanding their high educational and professional achievements and qualifications. The Committee further notes that the CEDAW recommended that “the Government reduces the gender wage gap by regularly reviewing wages in sectors in which women are concentrated and by establishing effective monitoring and regulatory mechanisms for employment and recruitment to ensure that the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is adhered to in all sectors” (CEDAW/C/SGP/CO/5, 21 November 2017, paragraphs 18, 26, 28 and 29). The Committee notes that the CEDAW, as well as the UN Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, also expressed specific concern that older women frequently lack sufficient savings to sustain a living as a result of the gender pay gap, a lack of employment opportunities and their caregiving responsibilities, and are therefore forced to continue to work beyond their retirement age in low-paid and low-skilled occupations (CEDAW/C/SGP/CO/5, 21 November 2017, paragraph 38 and A/HRC/36/48/Add.1, 31 May 2017, paragraphs 27 and 93). In light of the absence of a legislative framework providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and the persistence of significant gender wage gaps, in particular in sectors where women are traditionally concentrated, the Committee asks the Government to take proactive measures, including legislative measures in the framework of the Tripartite Alliance for Fair Employment Practices, to establish the principle of the Convention and raise awareness among workers, employers and their respective organizations, as well as among law enforcement officials of the right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also asks the Government to continue to take measures to address the underlying causes of the gender wage gap, such as vertical and occupational gender segregation and stereotypes relating to the aspirations, preferences and abilities of women, including by encouraging girls and women to choose non-traditional fields of study and professions and promoting their access to jobs with career prospects and higher pay. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the level of earnings of men and women, disaggregated by economic activity and occupational group, both in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. National policy, non-discrimination, leave and benefits. Legislative developments. The Committee takes due note of the detailed information provided by the Government in its report on the legislative developments to transpose the European Union Directive No. 2019/1158 on work-life balance for parents and carers. In particular, it takes note of the following amendments to the Parental Protection and Family Benefits Act (ZSDP-1): (1) the introduction of more flexibility to use the paternity leave and the introduction of a parental leave for adoptive parents (Amendment ZSDP-1B); (2) the extension of paternity leave by ten days in the event of the birth of twins or multiple live births, (3) the increase of the minimum payment of maternal, paternal and parental benefits to equal the basic minimum income (Amendment ZSDP-1C); (4) the increase of the amount of partial payment for loss of income for parents or other person who takes care of two or more children with disabilities (Amendment ZSDP-1E); and (5) the alignment of maternal, paternal and parental leave entitlements to the requirements set in the above mentioned Directive (Amendment ZSDP-1F). The Government also indicates that another series of amendments to the Employment Relationship Act (ZDR-1) are under discussion, also to transpose the EU Directive 2019/1158, and that these amendments covers issues such as: (1) the reversal of the burden of proof in the event of a dispute related to exercising special protection due to carers' leave; (2) the employer's obligation to enable a better work-life balance; (3) the determination of absence from work due to carers' leave as an unfounded reason for ordinary employment contract termination; and (4) a right to part-time or full-time absence from work for the purpose of using carers' leave. The Committee notes the Government's indication that 15,594 fathers used their paternity leave in 2020 and 23,906 in 2021. The Committee also notes the information included in the report on the activities of the Office of the Advocate of the Principle of Equality, including awareness-raising activities with workers' and employers' organizations, the publication and distribution of a special leaflet titled "Say no to discrimination of pregnant women and parents in the workplace", and the current development of a Guide on the protection against discrimination and equal opportunities at work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the implementation in practice of the recent amendments to the Parental Protection and Family Benefits Act (ZSDP-1), such as statistical data disaggregated by sex, on the number of workers with family responsibilities exercising leave and working arrangement options provided for by the legislation; (ii) the amendments to the Employment Relationship Act (ZDR-1) that should be adopted to transpose the Directive of the European Union No. 2019/1158 on work-life balance for parents and carers; and (iii)

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Government indicates in its report that it has planned to undertake a survey to assess wage gaps and identify more clearly its underlying causes. The Committee notes from the Labour Force Survey (2019-2020) that the average monthly gross salary of women employees in public and private sector and in the informal sector tend to be lower than of men employees in all sectors of economic activity. The Committee asks the Government to take proactive steps to reduce the gender pay gap, including measures aimed at identifying and addressing the underlying causes of pay differentials such as vertical and horizontal job segregation and gender stereotypes. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the findings of the planned survey and the actions envisaged and implemented as a follow-up; and (ii) the average level of earnings of men and women, disaggregated by economic activity and occupation, both in the private and public sectors, as well as in the informal economy if available.

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a). Definition of remuneration. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that the Ministry of Labour and Foreign Employment is currently undertaking a review of labour laws. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been raising concerns about the absence of legislation providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, as well as the limitations of the principle of equal wages for the “same” or “substantially the same” work, arising out of wage ordinances and collective agreements. It also recalls that the definition of “remuneration” in Article 1(a) for the purpose of applying the principle of the Convention includes “the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary and any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment”. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the decision has been made to include the principle of “equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value” in the Shop and Office Employees Act and the Wages Board Ordinance. A tripartite subcommittee has been established to prepare the draft amendment. Welcoming this information, in the context of the ongoing labour law reform, the Committee requests the Government to make all efforts, in cooperation with employers’ and workers’ organizations, to ensure that: (i) the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention is given full legislative expression and covers all categories of workers in the private sector; (ii) all components of remuneration enumerated in Article 1(a) of the Convention are included in the definition of “remuneration” for the purpose of applying this principle; and (iii) the determination of work of equal value is based on objective job evaluation, using objective criteria such as qualifications and skills, responsibilities, efforts and working conditions. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made towards the amendment of the Shop and Office Employees Act and the Wages Board Ordinance in this regard as well as a copy of the amended texts, once adopted.

Article 2. Minimum wages. Wages boards. Referring to its previous observation regarding the scope of the National Minimum Wage Act No. 3 of 2016, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (1) the Act covers all workers, in both the formal and informal economy, with the exception of domestic workers; and (2) discussions are being held with the purpose of addressing issues concerning the wage fixing mechanism. The Committee recalls that domestic workers make up a female-dominated group of workers generally with poor working conditions, including lower pay. As a uniform national minimum wage system helps to raise the earnings of the lowest paid, it has an influence on the relationship between men and women's wages and on reducing the gender pay gap. Moreover, the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is to apply to domestic workers, whether nationals or non-nationals, and particular attention should be given to ensuring that domestic work is not undervalued due to gender stereotypes (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 683 and 707). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is ensured for domestic workers; and (ii) envisage extending the national minimum wage to domestic workers. It also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and in simplifying the wages boards system, as well as on any measures taken to ensure that the rates of wages fixed by the wages boards are based on objective criteria free from gender bias (such as qualifications and skills, effort, responsibilities and conditions of work), including as a result of the ongoing discussions on the wage-fixing mechanism reported by the Government.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)

(ratification: 1998)

Previous comments

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee recalls the lack of provisions in the labour or other legislation providing for protection against discrimination in employment and occupation in the private sector. In addition, it recalls that, for many years, it has been pointing out that articles 12 (equality before the law and protection of citizens against discrimination on the grounds of "race, religion, language, caste, sex, political opinion, place of birth or any of such grounds"), 14 (freedom for citizens to engage by himself or in association with others in any lawful occupation, profession, trade, business or enterprise) and 17 (remedy for the infringement of fundamental rights) of the Constitution appear to cover citizens only and do not prohibit discrimination on the grounds of colour or national extraction. In response, the Government indicates that: (1) provisions of labour legislation in Sri Lanka are applied to "employees working in the private sector establishments and statutory bodies, based on the contract of employment"; (2) the term "employee" is clearly defined in all labour legislation; and (3) the definition does not discriminate any employee or worker based on gender, race, colour, ethnicity, nationality, citizens, non-citizens, religion, etc. While noting these explanations, the Committee recalls that, under Article 2, with a view to achieving the elimination of discrimination in employment and occupation, States are required to develop and implement a multi-faceted national equality policy. The implementation of the national equality policy presupposes the adoption of a range of specific and concrete measures, including in most cases the need for a clear and comprehensive legislative framework, and ensuring that the right to equality and non-discrimination is effective in practice (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 732). The Committee underlines that: (1) the National Action Plan for the Protection and Promotion of Human Rights for 2017–21 set, as an explicit objective, the enactment legislation to guarantee the right to non-discrimination on any prohibited ground, including sex, race, ethnicity, religion, caste, place of origin, gender identity, disability or any other status in all workplaces, including in the private sector; and (2) this plan does not refer explicitly to the grounds of "colour", "political opinion", "national extraction" and "social origin", which are enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee again urges the Government to take all the necessary steps to introduce comprehensive legislative provisions in order to ensure that all men and women workers, citizens and non-citizens, are effectively protected from both direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation and on all the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including colour and national extraction. It also asks the Government to indicate if any progress was made in this regard under the National Action Plan for the Protection and promotion of Human Rights. Noting that a draft new Constitution is being prepared, the Committee expresses the hope that the new Constitution will prohibit discrimination on at least all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and will extend such prohibition to non-citizens.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the armed conflict in the country.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Work of equal value. The Committee previously noted that section 75(a) of the Labour Code of 2010 provides for the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value as enshrined in the Convention. It notes however that section 75(b) defines "work of equal value" as "work that requires equal scientific qualifications and professional skills, as attested by a work experience certificate". The Committee points out that such a definition restricts the full application of the principle as set out in the Convention. The Committee recalls that the concept of "work for equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and the promotion of equality. This concept is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market, which exists in almost every country, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. Moreover, the Committee recalls that the principle has been applied to compare the remuneration received by men and women engaged in different occupations, such as wardens in sheltered accommodation for the elderly (predominantly women) and security guards in office premises (predominantly men); or school meal supervisors (predominantly women) and garden and park supervisors (predominantly men) (General Survey of 2012 on fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673 and 675). In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 75(b) of the Labour Code in order to ensure equal remuneration for men and women not only in situations in which they perform the same work, but also in situations in which they carry out work which is different but nevertheless of equal value.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. Private sector. The Committee welcomes the Government's information regarding the decreasing gender pay gaps in the agriculture sector, where the ratio of women's wages to men's went from 79.5 per cent in 2018 to 97.2 per cent in 2021; in the education sector, from 77 to 89 per cent; in healthcare, from 74.5 to 79.4 per cent; and in public administration and defence, from 77.2 to 87.4 per cent. It notes however the information from the World Bank, based on TajStat statistics, that overall women earned 60 per cent of what men earned in 2018. According to the Government, the pay gap persists due to the following factors: (1) there are more male managers in all sectors; (2) women are less likely to be involved in harmful working conditions, overtime and night work, and are therefore not paid the corresponding supplements as part of their average wage; (3) in most cases, women work fewer hours; and (4) the total number of female workers is lower than the total number of male workers. Regarding measures adopted to increase women's equal participation in the economy and reduce the gender pay gap, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, during the 2018–22 period: (1) under the State Employment Promotion Programmes and social support for women, 175,700 women were employed in various sectors of the economy of which 16,100 unemployed women were employed through quota-based jobs; (2) 9,700 women were granted access to preferential interest-free loans for the development of self-employment; (3) 11,500 women were engaged in paid public work; (4) 73,900 women received free vocational training; and (5) 16,300 received vocational guidance services. The Committee notes that a Programme for the Development of Handicrafts for 2021–25 was adopted, making it possible for a significant number of women and girls living in villages to participate in training in these crafts. The Committee further notes the adoption of several new policies that have contributed to promoting the employment of women in various sectors of the economy, according to the Government. Welcoming the various measures taken to promote the employment of women and their impact on their labour force participation and reducing the gender pay gap, the Committee asks the Government to step up its efforts and pursue its action towards the elimination of the gender pay gap in all sectors of the economy, particularly in male-dominated sectors, and to continue to address the underlying causes it has identified. It asks the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the measures taken in this regard and their impact; and (ii) wages of women and men, disaggregated by sector of the economy and occupational category, as well as any recent statistics on the gender pay gap itself.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 140(2) of the Labour Code provides that the “employer is obliged to pay the employee the same salary for the performance of equivalent work”. It recalls that the concept of “work of equal value” is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market, which exists in almost every country, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 673). The Committee asks the Government to consider the possibility of harmonizing section 140(2) of the Labour Code with section 13 of the Law on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women, which provides for equal remuneration for men and women for “the same work or work of equal value”, to ensure that the former explicitly refers to the concept of “work of equal value” and to provide information on any steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) of the International Labour Conference at its 108th Session (June 2019), calling upon the Government to report on the concrete measures taken to ensure that direct and indirect discrimination on all grounds is prohibited in law and in practice. The Committee notes the adoption of the Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022 on Equality and the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination. It notes with interest that, pursuant to this Act: (1) the definition of discrimination in section 1.1 includes (by way of article 5) both direct and indirect discrimination, the latter being defined as “rules and principles and (or) practices that are apparently harmless, but have serious disproportionate consequences, which put a person in a disadvantageous situation compared to other persons in similar conditions due to any of the factors provided for” in section 1.1 of this Act; (2) “skin colour” and “origin” are now included in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination (section 1.1); and (3) all State structures, self-governing bodies of towns and villages, officials, natural and legal persons, regardless of their organizational and legal form and direction of activity are covered (section 3). It further notes the Government's indication that: (1) work is underway to harmonize the national legislation with Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022 through the creation of an interdepartmental working group consisting of representatives of the Executive Office of the President, the Ministry of Justice, the Prosecutor General's Office, the Committee for Women and Family Affairs (CWFA) and the Commissioner for Human Rights; and (2) a working group for the implementation of the Act was also created under the Commissioner for Human Rights. With respect to the civil service, the Committee recalls that the notion of "social status" in the Civil Service Act is narrower than the notion of "social origin" set out by the Convention. The Committee asks the Government to: (i) take measures to raise awareness of the provisions of Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022 among public and private employers, workers and enforcement officials, including through the above working group; and (2) provide information on its implementation in practice, including examples of complaints or cases dealt with by the Courts, the CWFA or the Commissioner for Human Rights concerning indirect discrimination and their outcome (ground(s) invoked, sanctions applied and compensation granted). It also asks the Government to clarify whether the term "origin" in section 1.1 of Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022 encompasses the concept of "social origin" as set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. It also asks the Government to take the opportunity of the planned legislative harmonization of national legislation to: (i) take steps to amend section 7 of the Labour Code and the Civil Service Act to ensure that the grounds of "colour" and "social origin" are expressly included as prohibited grounds of discrimination; and (ii) more generally, consider harmonizing the anti-discrimination provisions of the Civil Service Act with the provisions of Act No. 1890 of 2022. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the progress achieved to this end.

Article 2. National equality policy. The Committee notes with interest that, under section 12 of Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022, in order to ensure equality and eliminate all forms of discrimination, the Government has the power to ensure the development and promotion of a unified state anti-discrimination policy. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in previous comments, the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) emphasized the need not only to draft laws but also to implement specific policies to eliminate all forms of discrimination and take proactive measures to identify and address the underlying causes of discrimination and gender inequalities deeply entrenched in traditional and societal values. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to adopt and pursue a national policy on equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation addressing all the grounds protected by the Convention, namely sex, race, colour, national extraction, religion, political opinion and social origin, as required by Article 2 of the Convention and envisioned under Act No. 1890 of 19 July 2022 (section 12).

Tripartite consultation

Antigua and Barbuda

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Government indicates in its report that the National Labour Board is currently engaged in the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes that the Government envisages establishing a subcommittee composed of members of the National Labour Board, along with representatives of workers and employers, to review international labour standards, engage the public in consultations when necessary and to make recommendations to the Minister on actions to be taken. The Committee notes, however, that once again the Government's report does not contain information with regard to tripartite consultations on the matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. Recalling its comments since 2008 concerning the activities of the National Labour Board, and noting that section B7 of the Labour Code, which establishes the Board's procedures, does not include the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the National Labour Board on matters related to international labour standards covered by the Convention. It further requests the Government to identify the body or bodies mandated to carry out the tripartite consultations required to give effect to the Convention. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide precise and detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on all matters concerning international labour standards covered by Article 5(1)(a)–(e) of the Convention, especially those relating to the questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

Article 5(1)(b). Submission to Parliament. The Government reiterates information provided in April 2014, indicating that the 20 instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions (1996–2012) were resubmitted to Parliament on 11 March 2014. It adds that a request would be made to the Minister by 15 November 2017 via the Labour Commissioner and Permanent Secretary concerning submission of the instruments to Parliament. The Committee refers to its longstanding observations on the obligation to submit and once again requests the Government to indicate whether effective consultations leading to conclusions or modifications were held with respect to the proposals made to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda in connection with the submission of the above-mentioned instruments, including information regarding the date(s) on which the instruments were submitted to Parliament. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the content, agenda, discussions and resolutions and on the outcome of the tripartite consultations held in relation to the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference as of 2014: the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, as well as the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session.

Article 5(1)(c). Examination of unratified Conventions and Recommendations. The Government reports that the unratified conventions noted in its report were submitted to the National Labour Board on 11 November 2017 for re-examination with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the outcome of the re-examination of unratified Conventions, in particular: (i) the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), which is deemed a governance Convention; (ii) the Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), (which revises the Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14); the Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101), to

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Tripartite consultations. The Government indicates that it has sent the competent national authority a submission report on ten instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference between 2010 and 2019. The Government also indicates that seven ordinary sessions and one special session of the National Labour Council (CNT) were held between 2013 and 2021. It states that, at its last session, the CNT examined and adopted a draft decree establishing the High Council for Social Dialogue. The Committee notes with deep regret, however, that the Government's report still contains no response to its previous comments, reiterated since 2013. Concerning the serious failure to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference, laid down in article 19(5) and (6) of the ILO Constitution, the Committee refers to its comment of 2023 on submission to the competent authorities and once again reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the social partners prior to the submission of instruments. The Committee recalls that the instruments in respect of which the Government has yet to fulfil its obligation to submit them to the competent authority concern those adopted at the 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th, 108th and 111th Sessions, or 9 Recommendations, 3 Conventions and 1 Protocol. As to the frequency, the content and the results of the consultations held on all the questions covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention, the Government once again reiterates its request for detailed information in this regard (that is, for each consultation, the date, the subject and the position adopted at the end of the consultation).

COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee notes the information provided in response to its previous comment on the use of tripartite consultations to formulate responses to the socio-economic repercussions of the pandemic.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) and the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT), received on 4 May 2021. Despite its request in this regard, the Committee has not received the Government's comments concerning the observations of the social partners. It therefore reiterates its request to the Government to provide its comments on the observations made jointly by the UGTD and UDT.

Articles 1 and 3(1) of the Convention. Participation of representative organizations. The Government once again reiterates that two draft texts, prepared in 2013, are in the process of being adopted. The first text is a draft decree establishing the definition of the different forms of trade union organizations and the criteria for representativeness. The second text is a draft order setting out the terms for the organization of occupational national elections. The Government recalls that these texts, established in consultation with the social partners, were referred in 2014 to the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS), which did not adopt them. CONTESS subsequently assigned the examination of the drafts to a standing tripartite committee but no consensus was reached. The Government indicates that, to break this stalemate, the Department of labour, employment and social security (DLESS) met with the Office in the margins of the International Labour Conference in June 2019. Following this meeting, the Office prepared a memorandum of technical comments on the draft decree. The Office recommended that the memorandum be communicated to the workers' and employers' organizations, within the framework of the revision process of the draft decree. The Government does not provide any information in this regard but once again states that it will inform the Office as soon as possible of any developments in the adoption of the above-mentioned draft decree and draft order. In the meantime, the Government indicates that it is sending written invitations to the "recognized" occupational organizations to freely designate their representatives but does not attach to its report a copy of this invitation or provide more detailed information on its application. The Government adds that there are two workers' trade union confederations (the UGTD and UDT) and that the employers' organizations (the National Confederation of Employers of Djibouti (CNED) and the Federation of Employers of Djibouti (FED)) merged on 26 December 2015 to form a single organization, the CNED. In this regard, the Government provides the records of a CNED general meeting held on 22 December 2015, showing that the CNED was in favour of a single employers' union. The document does not refer, however, to a decision by the FED in this regard or to a merger with the FED. The Government states that it provided copies of its report to the following representative workers' and employers' organizations: the CNED, UDT and UGTD. With regard to the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes that the UGTD and UDT report Government interference in trade union affairs, as well as threats, arbitrary detention, unfair dismissals and punitive transfers of trade unionists. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes with concern that the objective criteria for designating the most representative organizations and the procedures guaranteeing the free choice of their representatives in tripartite bodies has yet to be determined. As this is a situation that has persisted for many years, despite the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee urges the Government to adopt, as soon as possible and following effective consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations, the texts establishing the objective criteria for representativeness of these organizations, as well as the procedures guaranteeing the free choice of their representatives. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed and up-to-date information on the measures taken to this end. In addition, regarding the merger between the CNED and FED, the Committee requests the Government to provide any decisions of the FED general meeting in this respect. If not available, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any particular issues in the country that would explain why it did not provide its latest report to the FED. With regard to the observations of the UGTD and UDT, alleging Government interference in trade union affairs, as well as threats, arbitrary detention, unfair dismissals and punitive transfers of their representatives, the Committee refers to its comments on the application by Djibouti of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Articles 2 and 5. Tripartite consultations. Frequency and effectiveness of tripartite consultations. The Government indicates that CONTESS held tripartite consultations on the following dates: 27–28 November 2017, 14 January 2019, 27–28 October 2019 and 21 September 2020. The Government does not provide the records of these meetings, even though the Committee requested a copy in its previous comments. The Government provides details of the meeting agendas, which included discussion of draft texts on labour law, the adoption of an inter-occupational collective agreement and the ratification of ILO Conventions. In this respect, the Committee notes the adoption of the Bills ratifying the Instrument for the Amendment of the Constitution of the ILO, 1986, and the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183). With regard to the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes that the UGTD and UDT report that there are "clones" of the representative organizations that, notably, adopted the new Labour Code in 2006. They also allege that CONTESS is a fictional council, in which only “union alibis” are involved, which support the Government’s proposals. The UGTD and UDT add that CONTESS meets only rarely – once or twice every two years. They state that CONTESS “disappeared” for over ten years and “has recently been resuscitated in order to deceive the Office”. The Committee reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 5(2) of the Convention, tripartite consultations must be undertaken at appropriate intervals fixed by agreement with the workers’ and employers’ representatives, but at least once a year. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the frequency, content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention. It also reiterates its request to the Government to send copies of the records of CONTESS meetings. If it does not appear in the records, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the composition of CONTESS. The Committee notes, with concern, the allegations of the UGTD and UDT concerning cloning of the representative organizations and the presence of “trade union alibis” in CONTESS. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on how it ensures, in accordance with Article 2(1) of the Convention, effective consultations between the representatives of the employers and workers on all the matters referred to in Article 5(1) of the Convention. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to report the measures taken to avoid any identity theft of the representative organizations and their representatives during tripartite consultations.

Article 4. Training. The Government refers to the existence of a programme to strengthen social dialogue, as well as to several employment measures, especially for young people but does not, however, respond to the Committee’s request for updated information on the financing of the necessary training of participants in consultative procedures. With respect to the social partners, the Committee notes that the UGTD and UDT noted that the Government does not organize or finance any worthwhile training and prohibited training set up with the help of outside trade unions. The UGTD and UDT also report that it was impossible to attend any training sessions organized by the Office. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the appropriate arrangements made for the financing of any necessary training of participants in consultation procedures, in accordance with the Convention.

Technical assistance. The Committee notes the Government’s request to benefit from the assistance of the Office in the implementation of its programme to strengthen social dialogue. While hoping to be able to note progress in the area of tripartite consultation in the country shortly, the Committee confirms that the technical assistance of the Office remains available to the tripartite constituents, while underscoring that this assistance is defined by social dialogue.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Workers of El Salvador (CSTS), received on 17 May 2023. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September and 16 November 2023. Both observations provided information on matters dealt with in this comment, which are examined below. The Government is requested to provide its comments in this regard.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards \(111th Session of the International Labour Conference, June 2023\)

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 with regard to the application of the Convention. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee notes the allegations concerning serious and repeated violations of the Convention by El Salvador. Likewise, the Conference Committee also noted with deep concern the multiple allegations of interference by the authorities in the appointment of employers' and workers' representatives in public tripartite and joint bodies.

Taking the discussion into account, the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, and adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated, in particular in relation to the National Business Association (ANEP) and its members; (ii) refrain from any interference in the exercise of freedom of association of employers and workers, including in the constitution of workers' and employers' organizations; (iii) put a stop to the delays in issuing the credentials of workers' and employers' organizations, including for ANEP, in line with their right to representation; (iv) ensure that all workers' and employers' organizations, including ANEP, enjoy the rights and freedoms under the Convention and are fully included in tripartite consultation and social dialogue; (v) reactivate, without delay, the full operation of the Higher Labour Council (CST) and other tripartite bodies, as well as ensure the development and adoption, in consultation with social partners, of clear, objective, predictable and legally binding rules to ensure their effective and independent functioning, without any external interference; (vi) take without delay all necessary measures to repeal the legal obligation on trade unions to request renewal of their legal status every 12 months; (vii) amend the 23 decrees adopted on 3 June 2021 to ensure that employers' organizations are able to exercise their right to freely elect their representatives without any external interference; and (viii) develop a time-bound road map to implement without delay all the recommendations made by the 2022 ILO high-level tripartite mission and the Conference Committee's recommendations.

The Conference Committee requested the Government to accept a direct contacts mission to ensure full compliance with the Convention. It further requested the Government to submit a detailed report on the implementation of the Convention in law and practice, including information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations, to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2023.

Articles 2 and 3(1) of the Convention. Adequate procedures. Reactivation of the Higher Labour Council (CST). Allegations of Government interference. The Committee notes that the Government's report – which the Conference Committee requested for June 2023 – was received late, on 29 November 2023, after its session had already started. The Government indicates that the CST has been functioning since its reactivation in 2019, in compliance with the provisions of its Statute regarding the number of sessions required. In this regard, the Government indicates that, in accordance with section 11 of the Statute, at least two meetings per year must be held. The Government reiterates once again that as of December 2021 the CST was established for 2021–23 and that the representatives of workers and employers were freely and independently elected. The Government also states that it is inappropriate to point out the inactivity of the CST on the basis of the meetings of its plenary session. By way of example, the Government refers to the creation by the plenary of the CST of a technical working group consisting of a tripartite commission for the discussion of the Early Childhood Act with a view to subsequently submitting the elements deemed necessary to the CST Board of Directors and ultimately to its plenary. However, the Government indicates that this process could not be completed due to the lack of agreement from some sectors to complement the first steps agreed upon in a tripartite manner. In relation to the repeal of the 23 decrees related to official autonomous institutions, the Government indicates that this is an internal decision that only concerns El Salvador as a free and sovereign State and, therefore, for the time being, no response can be given to such request. The Government indicates that the necessary studies will be conducted to examine the extent to which the said decrees affect ANEP and adds that they refer to bipartite or parity institutions and therefore do not relate to the scope of this Convention. The Government further states that it is inappropriate to state that such decrees affect the productive sector of the country since various employers' organizations are allowed to participate in bipartite or tripartite forums and ANEP continues to be recognized as a representative organization and its members continue to participate in various forums for dialogue. Lastly, the Government indicates that tripartite institutions, such as the Salvadoran Social Security Institute (ISSS) and the Social Housing Fund (FSV), have a "transparency portal" on their website where they publish their reports, while the minutes and reports of the CST are delivered to all its members and are publicly accessible.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the IOE reiterates the comments made by the Employer members during the discussion on the implementation of the Convention held in the Conference Committee in June 2023. The Committee also notes the IOE's allegations denouncing the Government for not accrediting the representatives designated by ANEP to participate in the 111th Session of the Conference, despite it being the most representative employers' organization of El Salvador. The IOE emphasizes the gravity of such acts and maintains that they are contrary to the present Convention as well as to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). In this connection, the Committee notes that the IOE also denounces the Government for putting pressure on certain employer delegates to quit ANEP leadership. In this regard, the Committee notes with concern that, at the 111th Session of the Conference, the Credentials Committee of the Conference, in its examination of this question, concluded that it had no evidence that the Government had effectively consulted the most representative employers' organization and, therefore, that the employers' delegation of El Salvador to this session of the Conference was nominated in accordance with article 3(5) of the ILO Constitution. In this regard, the Credentials Committee trusted that the Government will in future resort to a consultation procedure that will ensure full and effective consultation with the most representative employers' organization, in accordance with the requirements of the ILO Constitution (see the Second report of the Credentials Committee, 16 June 2023, paragraphs 69–74).

The Committee also notes that the IOE, in its observations, refers to the draft Act to establish the National Capacity-building and Training Institute (INCAF), stressing that the aim of the draft is to dissolve the El Salvador Vocational Training Institute (INSAFORP), together with its Governing Body, which has been holding tripartite meetings for 30 years with representatives of government, workers and employers. The Committee notes that the above draft was adopted by the El Salvador Legislative Assembly on 15 November 2023. The Committee notes that the IOE expresses its hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention, in accordance with the conclusions of the Conference Committee, and in close collaboration with the most representative organization of employers of El Salvador.

The Committee also notes that the CSTS expresses its willingness to collaborate with and support all efforts by the Government to strengthen all spaces for tripartite social dialogue, such as the CST, the National Minimum Wage Council, and other national instances of bipartite or tripartite dialogue. The CSTS also highlights the importance of tripartite social dialogue and points out that it constitutes a fundamental component for the construction of a democratic country, to generate governance and improve living conditions, especially for the working class.

In light of the information provided by the Government in its report, the Committee emphasizes that, while it is for the national legal framework to establish the modus operandi of the meetings of the bodies in which the tripartite consultations required by the Convention take place, the CST has not held the minimum of two plenary sessions per year required by national legislation. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 5(2) of the Convention, such consultations should be held at least once a year. While noting the Government's indication concerning the holding of tripartite consultations in the framework of subcommittees or other tripartite technical bodies of the CST, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide information that would make it possible to establish that consultations were held on issues relating to international labour standards as required by Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee further notes that the Government also fails to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged with a view to giving effect to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. Accordingly, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective and immediate operation of the CST, respecting the independence of the social partners, including with regard to the appointment of their representatives. It reiterates its request to the Government to report on any developments in this respect, as well as on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held within the framework of this tripartite body.

Likewise, the Committee once again urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure without delay the repeal of the 23 decrees which transfer the function of electing employers' representatives from the employers to the President of the Republic, thus depriving the employers' organizations of the exercise of their right to freely elect their representatives in conformity with the instruments ratified by the country; and (ii) make every effort to ensure the formulation and adoption without delay of the road map requested by the ILO high-level tripartite mission in 2022, as well as by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2022 and June 2023. In light of the IOE's observations regarding the Act Establishing the National Capacity-building and Training Institute (INCAF), the Committee requests the Government to provide information on its impact on the implementation of the Convention.

Article 2. Ensure effective tripartite consultations. Issuance of Credentials. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which highlighted that the requirement under the Labour Code that workers' organizations renew their executive boards every 12 months was unfounded and constituted a form of interference in the functioning of the organizations in question. In this regard, the Committee noted that the Government had initiated a study process to prepare reforms to the Labour Code with a view to facilitating and speeding up the procedure for the issuance of credentials and that a Trade Union Service Office had been set up in the Directorate General for Labour to provide legal assistance to union representatives. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is still working with the social partners on the proposed reforms of the Labour Code, which, once finalized, will be sent to the CST for analysis, review and discussion. The Government indicates that the proposals include the amendments of section 221 of the Labour Code and section 87 of the Civil Service Act, which provide for a one-year term for the boards of directors of trade unions in the private and public sectors, respectively. The Government indicates that, on 26 July 2023, the establishment of a technical roundtable was announced for the purpose of discussing and analysing possible reforms to the Labour Code. The Committee also notes that the Government reports that, between August 2022 and August 2023, the Trade Union Service Office, created to reduce the period for issuing credentials to trade unions to less than 30 days, delivered 875 accreditations and provided 969 advisory services. The Government indicates that the deliveries were made in an average of 15 days. While noting the measures taken by the Government to expedite the issuance of credentials, the Committee considers that the requirement to renew annually the composition of the boards of directors of trade unions and their legal status is a disproportionate measure that impedes the proper functioning of the tripartite bodies responsible for giving effect to the Convention. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to repeal the legal obligation on trade unions to renew the composition of their boards of directors and their legal status every 12 months and requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information in its next report on all progress achieved in this respect.

Article 5. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the copies of the letters dated 19 May 2022 (DM/DRIT/No.28/2022) and 1 September 2022 (DE/DRIT/No.38/2022), sent by the Government to the employer and worker vice-chairpersons of the CST with a view to their dissemination with the organizations grouped in their sectors. The Government indicates that it has not received any reply from the social partners in this respect. The Committee also notes of the copies of letters dated 13 March 2023 (DM/DRIT No.78/2023 and DM/DRIT No.79/2023), presented by the Government after the discussion in the Conference Committee in June 2023, by which the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare conveyed copies of the reports on the implementation of Conventions ratified by El Salvador to the employer and worker vice-chairpersons of the CST for their comments. The Committee notes that some of these reports were sent to the office in 2022 and others in March 2023. In this regard, the Committee recalls that “in order to be effective, consultations must take place before final decisions are taken, irrespective of the nature or form of the procedures adopted. ... The effectiveness of consultations thus presupposes in practice that employers’ and workers’ representatives have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their own opinions.” (General Survey on tripartite consultation, 2000, paragraph 31). In consequence, the Committee once again reiterates that it hopes to see progress in full and sustained compliance with the Convention in the country as soon as possible, including the regular holding of effective tripartite consultations within the CST on the subjects provided in Article 5(1) of the Convention, as well as the promotion of stable and continuous social dialogue in the other tripartite entities in the country. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that ILO technical assistance remains at the disposal of the tripartite constituents to support the efforts made by all the tripartite actors to ensure full compliance with the provisions of the Convention.

Fiji

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1998)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Election of representatives of employers and workers organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to explain the manner in which the representative national workers’ and employers’ organizations have been able to determine their representatives. In this regard, the Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) in June 2019 concerning the application by Fiji of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Conference Committee called upon the Government to, inter alia, refrain from interfering in the designation of the representatives of the social partners on tripartite bodies and to reconvene the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) without delay, in order to start a legislative reform process. The Government indicates in its report that, according to the 2007 Employment Relations Act, the Minister for Employment is the appointing authority for the ERAB, and representatives of workers and employers are appointed from among persons nominated by workers’ and employers’ organizations. It adds that there is no Government interference in the designation of representatives of the social partners to the ERAB. In this context, the Committee notes section 8(3) of the 2007 Act, which provides that, in making appointments to the ERAB, “... the Minister may take into account the principles of equality set out in section 38 of the Constitution, necessary for the effective operation of the Board.” The Government reports that, after the expiration of the ERAB membership in October 2019, it invited the social partners to submit their nominees to the Minister. The Fiji Commerce and Employer’s Federation (FCEF) submitted their nominees on 21 October 2019 and 23 October 2019, respectively, while the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) submitted their nominees on 30 October 2019. The Committee nevertheless refers to its 2019 observation in relation to the application of Convention No. 87, in which the FTUC observed that the Government provided no indication regarding when the appointment of the ERAB members would be made, despite the urgency of the situation, also recalling the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which expressed concern about government manipulation of national tripartite bodies, thus curtailing the possibility of genuine tripartite dialogue. Referring to its 2019 observation under Convention No. 87, the Committee expresses its firm hope that the Government will refrain from any undue interference in the nomination and appointment of representatives of the social partners to the ERAB, and will take steps to ensure that the social partners are able to freely designate their representatives. The Committee urges the Government to take steps to appoint the ERAB members without delay so that the ERAB may reconvene and hold regular tripartite consultations for the purposes of the procedures covered by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide updated information on progress made in this regard. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to describe the manner in which the discretion provided for under section 8(3) of the 2007 Employment Relations Act has been applied in practice.

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that meetings of the ERAB were held regularly during the reporting period despite the boycott of the FTUC and its withdrawal from ERAB meetings in June 2018, February 2019 and August 2019. In this respect, referring to its 2019 observation on Convention No. 87, the Committee notes that, according to the FTUC, the Government's reference to boycott clearly reveals that there remain issues in the appointment process of ERAB members. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with regard to the tripartite consultations held within the ERAB during the reporting period. The Government reports on the submission to Parliament of the questionnaire on the abrogation and withdrawal of: the Night Work (Women) Convention, 1919 (No. 4); the Minimum Age (Trimmers and Stokers) Convention, 1921 (No. 15); the Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention, 1929 (No. 28); the Night Work (Women) Convention (Revised), 1934 (No. 41); the Minimum Age (Non-Industrial Employment) Convention (Revised), 1937 (No. 60); and the Hours of Work and Rest Periods (Road Transport) Convention, 1939 (No. 67). The Government indicates that the Conventions concerned were abrogated or withdrawn. In addition, tripartite consultations were held with regard to the ILO Centenary ratification campaign and proposals of newly adopted instruments pending submission to Parliament, including the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), were discussed. With respect to the re-examination of unratified Conventions, the Government indicates that it is envisaged to ratify the Protocol of 2002 to the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981; the Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160) and its accompanying Labour Statistics Recommendation, 1985 (No. 170). Finally, the Government indicates that it remains committed to holding tripartite consultations with regard to the reports on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)) and the proposals for denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)). The Committee notes the ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) on 25 June 2020. The Government has not, however, provided detailed information as requested on the content and the outcome of the tripartite consultations held under this Article of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide updated and detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on all matters concerning international labour standards covered by the Convention, particularly relating to the questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to Parliament (Article 5(1)(b)); the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)); reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and the proposal for the denunciation of Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

In the context of the global COVID-19 pandemic, the Committee recalls the comprehensive guidance provided by international labour standards. It encourages Member States to engage in tripartite consultation and social dialogue more broadly as a solid foundation for developing and implementing effective responses to the profound socio-economic impacts of the pandemic. The Committee invites the Government to provide updated information in its next report on measures taken in this respect, including with regard to steps taken to build the capacity of the tripartite constituents and strengthen mechanisms and procedures, as well as challenges and good practices identified.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comment, it had requested the Government to provide detailed information on each of the tripartite consultations held on matters concerning international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Government indicates in its report that tripartism is working well in the country to the extent that it has moved towards establishing a Committee of Social Partners. The said Committee includes civil society organizations and the conference of churches; it is responsible for the monitoring of the IMF Structural Adjustment Programme 2014–16 in Grenada, including labour reforms. Additionally, the Government specifies that a comprehensive review of the Labour Code was conducted during the 2014–15 period. Moreover, the Government recalls that, pursuant to section 21(2) of the Employment Act, the functions of the Labour Advisory Board reflect the provisions of Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the Labour Advisory Board on the tripartite consultations on international labour standards covered by the Convention, including full particulars on the consultations held on each of the matters listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Government is also requested to indicate the intervals at which the abovementioned consultations are held, and the nature of the participation by the social partners during these consultations.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA), attached to the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA) and of the Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers' Unions (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the social partners.

Part I of the report form. National legislation. The Committee notes the recently adopted regulatory texts, in particular: (i) Decree No. 2017-843 of 19 September 2017, reforming the National Labour Committee (CNT), the tripartite consultation body for the social partners on employment, vocational training, social protection, labour and wages; and establishing Tripartite Regional Labour Councils (CRTTs) to ensure the effectiveness of tripartite consultations at the regional level; (ii) Decree No. 2020-1357 of 21 October 2020, on the composition, organization and functioning of the Higher Public Service council (CSFOP), a bipartite consultation body on regulations and laws concerning the public service; (iii) Order No. 18455/2018/MTM, establishing procedures for appointing members of the CNT; (iv) Order No. 18455/2018/MTM, establishing procedures for appointing members of the National Tripartite Maritime Labour Council (CNTTM); (v) Order No. 16817/2019/MTM, nominating members of the CNTTM; (vi) Circular No. 30/MTEFPLS/SG/DGTLS/20, extending until further notice the term of office of staff delegates, board members and management committee members of different tripartite management bodies; and (vii) Circular No. 055/MTEFPLS/SG/DGTLS/22 of 27 April 2022, requiring the election of staff delegates no later than September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the newly adopted legislation on the manner in which the Convention is applied and to continue providing information on the adoption of texts giving effect to the Convention.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes with interest that the Government ratified the following six instruments in June 2019: (i) the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143); (ii) the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151); (iii) the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154); (iv) the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181); (v) the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189); and (vi) the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. The Government indicates that it consulted the social partners regarding these ratifications and commissioned a prior gap analysis relating to these instruments and had it validated by the social partners. The Government explains that consultations are held in the CNT for matters concerning the private sector and in the CSFOP for matters concerning the public sector. The Government also indicates that workshops on tripartite consultations are held to involve representatives of the workers and of the employers in decision-making which relates to them. With regard to the ratification of Conventions Nos 143, 154, 181 and 189 and the Protocol of 2014, consultations took place in the CNT on 6 September 2018. The views of the representative employers' and workers' organizations that participated are recorded in a memorandum of 5 October 2018. With regard to Conventions Nos 151 and 154, the Government indicates that it also held consultations in the CSFOP. At a meeting of 2 August 2018, the CSFOP issued a favourable opinion regarding the ratification of Convention No. 151. As regards Convention No. 154, the formal opinion of the CSFOP was issued at a workshop held the same month. The views of the representative organizations in the CSFOP are reproduced in a memorandum of 6 September 2018. The Government adds that tripartite consultations also took place regarding the adoption of texts taking account of the above-mentioned ratifications. Following the ratification of Convention No. 151, exchanges took place with the ministries, "strengthened by the participation of representatives of the trade unions", regarding a Bill issuing the General Public Service Regulations, to replace the current General Regulations for Public Servants. A tripartite consultation workshop on this subject was held from 8 to 11 September 2020. The process of the adoption of the Bill was interrupted by the COVID-19 pandemic and is still in progress. Numerous tripartite consultations also took place on the alignment of the Labour Code with Conventions Nos 143, 181, 189 and the Protocol of 2014. Initial tripartite consultations to identify the texts needing amendments took place in July 2019. In February 2020, preliminary work on reform of the Labour Code took place with the participation of the tripartite actors at a technical validation workshop. Tripartite consultations were then held from 22 to 26 March 2021, from 21 to 24 September 2021 and from January to April 2022. Regarding the application of Conventions Nos 143 and 181, the Government indicates that in December 2020 it organized a workshop to give official status to the focal points for fair recruitment in the two regions of origin of Malagasy migrant workers. The focal points comprise civil society organizations and employers' and workers' representatives from the most representative regional organizations. The Government also explains that the CNT was consulted on 5 April 2022 regarding the adoption of Decree No. 2022-626 fixing the minimum initial wage (SME) for the private sector. It was also consulted on 10 June 2022 concerning a draft order updating the list of occupational diseases.

With regard to potential issues in reports to be submitted to the Office under article 22 of the ILO Constitution, the Government indicates that in August 2022, at a workshop for the presentation and tripartite validation of the country report, the most representative employers' and workers' organizations were called upon to give their views on the application of the Conventions and on the reports. Regarding the ratification proposals, the Government proposed ratifying the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). However, further to a consultation and cooperation workshop, the stakeholders agreed to, first, ratify the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006). A validation workshop took place in 2017 during which a road map for ratification of the MLC, 2006, was adopted. The procedure for the adoption of the ratification Act was launched. The ministers concerned signed the ratification Bill, which was deposited with a view to being placed on the agenda of the Council of Ministers. Following the change of Government, a new presentation of the ratification Bill is being prepared. At a general assembly on 1 October 2019, the CNTTM supported the ratification process. As regards denunciations of ratified Conventions, the Government states that no tripartite consultations took place since the Government did not denounce any Convention during the period covered by the report.

As regards the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes that FISEMA, while recognizing that the reforms demanded of the CNT took place in early 2020, observes that the functioning of the CNT still needs to be improved. For example, FISEMA notes that the CNT is still chaired by the Ministry of Labour, whereas, under the terms of Decree No. 2017-843 of 19 September 2017, it should rotate each year between representatives of the Government, workers and employers, respectively. FISEMA also points out that the agenda and activities of the CNT are generally fixed according to the needs and priorities of the Government, which is not in line with the provisions of Decree No. 2017-843. According to FISEMA, international labour standards and their transposition into national law are not examined regularly, effectively and seriously but “in an untimely manner” according to the whim of the Government. As regards the CRTTs, FISEMA emphasizes that they have not been established and are not operating.

The Committee also notes that FISEMARE, while recognizing that there is cooperation between employers' and workers' representatives, observes that the functioning of the CNT is “limited”. FISEMARE points out that tripartism is not always respected and that social dialogue is not practiced systematically. FISEMARE considers that the Government often forgets the trade unions in decision-making.

The Committee also notes that SEKRIMA, while recognizing that the social partners are in general duly consulted, emphasizes that the concrete application of the results of tripartite consultations is problematic. By way of example, SEKRIMA states that, as regards the application of Decree No. 2022-626 fixing the SME, the Government decided to subsidize the difference between the amount of the SME and the amount of wages in the private sector by paying part of employers' contributions to the National Social Security Fund (CNaPS). However, not all workers are affiliated to the CNaPS. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to respond to the concerns expressed by the above-mentioned trade union organizations regarding the manner in which national law and practice give effect to the requirement of the Convention to hold effective consultations on each of the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 5(2) of the Convention, tripartite consultations on the above-mentioned matters shall be undertaken at appropriate intervals fixed by agreement, but at least once a year. The Committee considers that the existence of major disagreements regarding the effective nature of consultations within the CNT is such as to compromise the proper application of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to send detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure effective tripartite consultations at appropriate intervals. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the coordination between the various tripartite consultation bodies, in particular the CNT (at the national level) and the CRTTs (at the regional level). Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments regarding the ratification of Convention No. 151 and the MLC, 2006.

Article 3. Choice of the representatives of employers and workers by their respective organizations. The Government recalls that in 2015 it adopted Order No. 34-2015 on determining trade union representativeness for 2014 and 2015. Since then, on 19 September 2017, it adopted Decree No. 2017-843 on the reform of the CNT and the establishment of the CRTTs. The Government indicates that the CNT functions on the basis of this text and sent a copy of it. The Government explains that it did not hold staff delegate elections for the 2018–19 period owing to the social and political crisis affecting the country at the time. Similarly, in 2020–21, elections were postponed because of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Government states that, under the provisions of Circular No. 30/MTEFPLS/SG/DGTLIS/20, the term of office of staff delegates was extended during this period. With a view to returning to normal, Circular No. 055 MTEFPLS/SG/DGTLIS/22 of 27 April 2022 was adopted, requiring the election of staff delegates to be held by the end of September 2022. The Government emphasizes that a new order on representativeness was to regulate this matter from 2022. In addition, new Decree No. 2017-843 provides for joint representation of employers and workers in the CNT and the CRTTs. The Committee also notes that elections for staff delegates did not take place between 2018 and 2021 and were due to occur in September 2022 at the latest. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the manner in which the new regulatory texts regarding the choice of employers' and workers' representatives are applied in practice taking account of the areas covered by tripartite consultations under Article 5 of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to explain how these texts establish or implement objective and transparent criteria for the appointment of representatives to national and regional tripartite bodies.

Article 4. Administrative support. Training necessary for persons participating in procedures. FISEMA observes that the procedures covered by the Convention do not have appropriate administrative support, a budget or adequate financing. FISEMA indicates that these procedures are largely organized with ILO assistance. Similarly, FISEMARE underlines the fact that the CNT has problems functioning, owing to lack of status and budget. Recalling that Article 4 of the Convention requires participants in the consultation procedures covered by the Convention to enjoy the necessary administrative support and to have access to any training needed to enable them to duly discharge their duties, the Committee notes with concern the observations of FISEMA and requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which it provides, or intends to provide, all the administrative and financial support necessary for the consultation procedures covered by the Convention.

Article 6. Annual report. FISEMA observes that, contrary to the provisions of Decree No. 2017-843 of 19 September 2017, no annual report on the activity of the CNT has been drawn up. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on this observation of FISEMA and to indicate, if applicable, the reasons why no annual report has been produced as required by the national legislation, and whether the Government is making provision to ensure compliance with this obligation in the future.

Part VI of the report form. Representative organizations consulted. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it consulted the representative employers' and workers' organizations at a report presentation and validation workshop held from 3 to 5 August 2022. The Government states that it sent a copy of the report to the Madagascar Enterprise Group (GEM) and Fivondronan'ny Mpandraharaha eto Magagasikara (FIVPAMA) (for the employers' organizations) and to FISEMARE, FISEMA and SEKRIMA (for the workers' organizations). The Committee also notes FISEMA's observation that it did not receive the Government's report. The Committee reminds the Government that, under article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution, it is required to send the report to the representative organizations and requests the Government to provide its comments on the observation of FISEMA that it did not receive the Government's report.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) communicated with the Government's report, received on 30 September 2022.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at its 108th Session in June 2019 concerning the application by Serbia of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1979 (No. 129). The Conference Committee called upon the Government to, inter alia, undertake the legislative reforms, in consultation with the social partners, as well as to ensure effective collaboration between the labour inspectorate and the social partners. The Committee notes that, following the recommendations of the Conference Committee, a tripartite workshop to follow-up on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129 was held on 11 and 12 February 2020, with technical assistance from the ILO.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that social dialogue takes place by way of regular meetings within the Social and Economic Council of the Republic of Serbia (SEC), an independent tripartite body. The Government indicates that the SEC held ten sessions in 2021 and four collegiums and sessions in the first half of 2022 on various topics, such as employment, situation of women at work, minimum wage, child allowance, collective agreements, occupational safety and health, peaceful resolution of labour disputes. These meetings resulted in initiatives and opinions on laws, collective agreements, rules, regulations and plans submitted to the competent ministries, including on the Proposed Employment Strategy in the Republic of Serbia for the period 2021–26 and the initiative to ratify the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The Government also reports on the participation of all representative workers' and employer's organizations and the Ministry of Labour, Employment, Veterans and Social Affairs in preparations to the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference and SEC's adoption of a joint platform accommodating tripartite suggestions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it undertakes, as part of the IPA 2022 project supported by the ILO, to improve the capacities of the social partners through amendments to the Act on the Social and Economic Council, as well as to take measures to improve social dialogue, including through analyses of law and practice with a view to revising laws and policy documents on social dialogue. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CATUS states that tripartite consultations are misused for political purposes. It also highlights instances in which trade unions were not involved in dialogues between large investors and the State on issues concerning relations between employers and workers, such as wage setting. The CATUS also indicates that its initiative to ratify Convention No. 190, supported by employers and forwarded to the relevant authorities, has been stalled for almost a year. The Committee notes the SAE's observation that many initiatives adopted by the SEC have not been implemented through laws and by-laws. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the observations made by the CATUS and the SAE.

The Committee recalls that the Convention requires effective tripartite consultations to take place on a list of matters related to international labour standards as stipulated in Article 5(1) and that, in order to be "effective", consultations need to enable employers' and workers' organizations to have a useful say in matters relating to the activities of the ILO referred to by this provision of the Convention. The Government is therefore requested, to provide detailed information on the manner in which effective tripartite consultations are carried out on each of the items specified by the Convention, detailing their content, frequency and outcome. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the result of the consultations held with the social partners relating to the possible ratification of Convention No. 190 as well as of any amendments made to the Act on the Social and Economic Council to improve the capacities of the social partners through amendments, as well as on any measures to improve social dialogue more generally. The Committee recalls in this respect that "the active engagement and meaningful participation in decision-making of the social partners ... can help to build a climate of trust and ensure the development, adoption, implementation and review of measures that are both evidence- and consensus-based and promote increased ownership among the tripartite partners" (see the Committee's Addendum to the 2020 General Survey on employment, p. 151).

Spain

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1984)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CCOO), received on 4 August 2022. The Committee also notes the observations of the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organizations (CEOE) and the Spanish Confederation of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (CEPYME), as well as those of the CCOO and the General Union of Workers (UGT), transmitted by the Government in its report.

Article 1 of the Convention. Representative organizations. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CEOE requests the inclusion of the CEPYME in the tripartite consultation procedures on the preparation of reports. In this respect, the Government indicates that it sent copies of the reports on ratified Conventions to the CEPYME. In this context, the Committee recalls that "the obligation to consult the representative organizations on the reports to be made concerning the application of ratified Conventions must be clearly distinguished from the obligation to communicate these reports under article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution. To fulfil their obligations under this provision of the Convention, it is not sufficient for governments to communicate to employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports that they send to the Office. The consultations of the employers' and workers' organizations implies their active participation in the formulation and communication of their respective views. The comments on the reports that these organizations may subsequently transmit to the Office cannot replace the consultations which have to be held during the preparation of the reports" (see General Survey of 2000 on tripartite consultation, paragraph 92). The Committee requests the Government to provide updated and detailed information on how consultation is guaranteed with all the employers' organizations, including the CEPYME, in the procedures required under the Convention.

Articles 2, 5 and 6. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government concerning the consultations held with the social partners between June 2017 and June 2022 on matters relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention. With regard to the consultations concerning the reports on ratified Conventions, the Government indicates that such reports, once drafted, were sent to the social partners to enable them to make observations they considered important, and to which the Government responded. Subsequently, the observations of the social partners were sent, together with the reports, to the Office. The Government indicates that the views of the social partners are also included in the files for submitting and ratifying international labour instruments, which are sent to the Cortes Generales.

The Committee notes that the workers' organizations - the CCOO and UGT - state that, while the timelines for the social partners to make their observations and contributions to the reports have improved, the Government continues to conduct consultation procedures in writing, despite the opposing position expressed by the workers' organizations in this respect. The CCOO states that this consultation model is not tripartite, as the employers' and workers' organizations are not aware of the other parties' observations and the Government's responses to those until they receive the final version of the reports. The CCOO and UGT consider that it would be useful to explore procedures to guarantee effective tripartite consultations. In this regard, the CCOO maintains that such consultations could take place in in-person meetings with the three constituents, while the UGT has requested that the possibility be explored of establishing a tripartite committee specifically in charge of matters relating to international labour standards, or of holding consultations within a tripartite body with general economic, social or labour-related competence. The UGT highlights the failure to implement the Convention, as long as a new procedure to guarantee effective tripartite consultation is not established. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that paragraph 2(3) of the Tripartite Consultation (Activities of the International Labour Organisation) Recommendation, 1976 (No. 152) sets out the possibilities available to Member States to undertake the tripartite consultations required by the Convention. Under the terms of paragraph 2(3)(d) of the Recommendation, consultations may not be undertaken in writing except “where those involved in the consultative procedures are agreed that such communications are appropriate and sufficient” (see General Survey of 2000 on tripartite consultation, paragraph 71). Lastly, the Committee notes the CCOO’s statement that it may be useful to draft an annual report on the working of the procedures provided for in the Convention, in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how it takes into account the opinions expressed by the representative workers’ organizations on the working of effective prior consultative procedures provided for in the Convention, as well as on the possibility of establishing amended procedures in response to the concerns expressed by the trade union organizations in their observations. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and updated information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on all matters related to international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether, in accordance with Article 6, it has consulted the representative organizations to draft an annual report on the working of the consultative procedures provided for in the Convention and, if so, to indicate the outcome of these consultations and provide a copy of the relevant report.

Sri Lanka

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF), received on 27 September 2023. The Committee also notes the Government’s reply received on 7 November 2023.

The Committee further notes that a representation under article 24 of the ILO Constitution was presented to the Governing Body by the Free Trade Zones and General Services Employees’ Union (FTZ and GSEU), the Ceylon Estates Staffs’ Union (CESU), the United Federation of Labour, the Sri Lanka National Union of Seafarers, the Lanka Jathika Estate Workers’ Union, the Ceylon Bank Employees’ Union (CBEU), the Ceylon Federation of Trade Unions, the Sri Lanka Nidahas Sewaka Sangamaya, the Inter-Company Employees Union (ICEU), and the Ceylon Mercantile Industrial and General Workers Union (CMU), alleging non-observance by Sri Lanka of this Convention. The ILO Governing Body declared the representation receivable at its 348th Session in June 2023 (GB.348/INS/6/4, paragraph 6).

Article 2 of the Convention. Operation of the consultative procedures. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC and ITF express their concern that, in June 2023, four unions were arbitrarily removed from the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) prior to the circulation of the Single Employment Bill, in an attempt to muzzle dissenting voices. The ITUC and ITF also denounce the failure to consult the NLAC on the Bill and that it was rushed through a falsely consultative process by the Ministry of Labour and Foreign Employment (MLFE). In this context, the ITUC and ITF urge the Government to reinstate the four trade unions that were unlawfully removed from the NLAC in June 2023, to engage in meaningful social dialogue with representative trade unions and to immediately halt the current labour law reform process. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in its response, the Government indicates that, in July 2023, the MLFE shared the first draft of the Bill and invited all stakeholders to formulate their proposals. The Government adds that, while it received numerous proposals from stakeholders, the trade unions did not submit any written proposal despite their active participation in the stakeholder consultation. The Government expresses its regret that the trade unions did not utilize this opportunity to engage constructively in the process. It adds that the Bill is still under discussion and trade unions can therefore still submit their proposals to be taken into consideration. In light of the lack of information from the Government as regards the removal of representatives of trade unions from the NLAC in July 2023, and the fact that effective consultations on the implementation of the commitments made under the Convention cannot be expected to take place within the dedicated tripartite bodies without one of the three stakeholders being duly represented, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether representatives of trade unions were removed from the NLAC and on actions taken or envisaged with a view to resolving the current problems with respect to the application of the Convention. It requests the Government to report on any progress made in this regard.

Article 5(1). Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the tripartite consultations held within the NLAC between 2017 and 2022 on a broad range of labour-related matters, such as proposals on labour law reforms, the establishment of a retirement age for workers in the private sector, amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance and proposals to revise the national minimum wage. The Committee notes with interest the ratification on 10 April 2019 of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, following a tripartite workshop in 2018 on the content of the Protocol and the findings of a gap analysis between the national legislation and the Protocol (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). The Government provides a copy of the agenda of the 2020 meetings of the Tripartite Task Force created to examine issues related to the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on employment and the measures taken to address it. The Government also reports on tripartite consultation held on issues concerning the plantation sector in 2022. The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide information on each of the matters listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultation held, including within the NLAC, on each of the matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention, particularly with regard to Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); proposals to be made in connection with the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the Parliament (Article 5(1)(b)); questions arising out of reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

Türkiye

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK) received on 31 August 2022 and the Government's response thereto, received on 25 November 2022. The Committee also notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK), communicated together with the Government's report.

Articles 2(1) and 5(1) and (2) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations at appropriate intervals, but at least once a year. The Government indicates that efforts have been made to improve social dialogue mechanisms at the national, local and enterprise levels. It adds that, historically, Türkiye has relatively strong tripartite social dialogue mechanisms at the national level. The Government recalls in this respect that the Economic and Social Council, the Labour Assembly and the Tripartite Consultative Board are the most important social dialogue mechanisms in Türkiye for purposes of the Convention. In relation to tripartite consultations held on the matters concerning international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, including on the re-examination of unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c)), the Government indicates that it has consulted the social partners through the use of written questionnaires to gather their opinions and feedback on certain unratified ILO Conventions. The Government further indicates that, in relation to the ILO reporting process (Article 5(1)(d)), it accords all of the social partners, including KESK, sufficient time to provide their comments on the reports to be submitted to the ILO in relation to the application of ratified ILO Conventions. In this context, the Government indicates that, on 13 April 2022, it requested comments from the social partners in relation to the reports on the ratified ILO Conventions to be prepared and submitted to the ILO in 2022. As regards Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention, the Committee notes the indication by TISK, which refers to steps taken in 2013 and 2016 in relation to the possible ratification of Convention No. 181, indicating that the Government has implemented legal arrangements to enable private employment agencies to provide temporary employment. In its 2022 observations, KESK indicates that there are several tripartite bodies established with the aim of collecting the opinions of the social partners but most of these tripartite bodies are dysfunctional, with some bodies meeting quite irregularly and some not at all. The Tripartite Consultative Board has thus not held meetings since 2018. The Committee notes the observations of the TISK, which also indicates that, while the Tripartite Consultative Board met five times in 2016, it convened only once in 2014, not at all in 2015, and once in 2017 and 2018 respectively. TISK also observes that the Tripartite Consultative Board has not been convened since its last 2018 meeting. The Committee recalls that the consultations held to give effect to the Convention need to be effective and held, in principle, within a tripartite setup at least once a year. The Committee also recalls that, according to the Tripartite Consultation (Activities of the International Labour Organization) Recommendation, 1976 (No. 152), written consultations, such as those carried out by way of questionnaires, could also be undertaken where those involved in the consultative procedures are in agreement that such communications are appropriate and sufficient. Noting that the social partners indicate that the system of tripartite consultations in the country is dysfunctional, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to give effect to the Convention by putting in place and activating procedures which ensure effective tripartite consultations as regards the matters listed in Article 5 of the Convention. Noting that the Government's report does not provide detailed information on how specific effect is given to Article 5(1) of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to supply full information in this respect with its next report, including as regards the tripartite consultations held in respect of: the Government's replies to questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the International Labour Conference (Article 5(1)(a)); information on proposals to be made to the competent authorities in connection with submissions (Article 5(1)(b)); information on the re-examination of unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)); questions arising out of reports to be made to the International Labour Office under article 22 of the ILO Constitution (Article 5(1)(d)); and proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)). The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on developments in relation to the possible ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), including on the content and outcome of prior tripartite consultations held in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3(1). Representatives of the social partners. The Committee refers to its previous comment and recalls the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), in which they maintain that the manner in which the representatives of workers' organizations are selected to the Tripartite Consultative Board does not comply with Article 1 of the Convention, as those selected must be the "most representative organizations of employers and workers enjoying the right of freedom of association", whereas section 4 of the Regulations of the Board provides for the selection of the top three worker confederations with the most members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the procedures in place for the selection of representatives of the social partners to the Tripartite Consultative Board are carried out in compliance with Article 1 of the Convention. The Government adds that the regulations in Türkiye have been developed and implemented in line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the current composition of the Tripartite Consultative Board and the manner in which the representative organizations of employers and workers are selected and appointed to the Board.

United Republic of Tanzania

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour, Economic and Social Council (LESCO) met once in 2019. The Government further indicates that the Zanzibar Labour Advisory Board (LAB) met on several occasions between 2019 and 2022 and that in the future the LAB agenda will include issues related to international labour standards. The Committee wishes to recall that by ratifying the Convention each Member State commits to operate procedures which ensure effective consultations at least once a year between representatives of the Government, employers and workers with respect to all the matters concerning the activities of the International Labour Organization set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention. While it notes that the Government intends to reform the LAB to include in its mandate the examination of issues related to the application of the Convention, the Committee notes that, once again, the Government's report does not provide the information requested on the consultations held during the reporting period to give effect to the Convention. In these circumstances, the Committee is bound to conclude that the national legislation and practice do not give effect to the Convention and asks the Government to take all measures necessary with a view to complying with its obligation to hold effective consultations on all matters concerning international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, namely: replies to the questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)); the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)); reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and the possible denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

Article 4. Administrative support and financing of training. The Committee notes with interest that, with ILO assistance, LESCO members were trained on their roles and responsibilities in 2017 and 2021 and newly appointed members of the LAB were expected to receive training in September 2022. Referring to its comments above, the Committee recalls that the competent authority needs to actively take measures so as to duly assume its responsibility for the administrative support of the work of tripartite entities charged with implementing the obligations assumed under the Convention. This includes financing the training of the officials sitting on these entities but also making the appropriate arrangements allowing their meeting to actually take place at least once a year. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the specific measures taken to effectively assume responsibility for the administrative support of the procedures provided for in this Convention to allow for their smooth functioning.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2007)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos. 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 12(1), 22 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Prosecutions and penalties. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the indication of the Government that during the 207 inspections carried out in 2021 following notification of industrial accidents to labour inspectors, a warning was issued in 39 per cent of the cases and a fine was imposed in 28 per cent of the cases. Noting that the information provided by the Government only refers to measures taken following a violation of occupational safety and health (OSH) measures, the Committee requests once again that the Government indicate the measures it is taking to ensure the application of adequate penalties for violations of all legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. In addition, the Committee requests once again that the Government provide detailed information on the number and nature of fines imposed, the outcomes of the judicial appeals of inspection decisions and the percentage of violations detected during unscheduled and scheduled inspections respectively.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129. Conditions of service. Noting the absence of any information on this matter, the Committee urges once again the Government to provide information on any progress made to improve the conditions of service of labour inspectors or results achieved within the framework of the salary and job classification reform. The Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the availability of comparative information on the actual remuneration scale of labour inspectors in relation to other comparable categories of Government employees exercising similar functions, such as tax inspectors or police officers, and to provide detailed information in this regard.

Articles 10 and 11 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14 and 15 of Convention No. 129. Staffing and material means of the labour inspection services. Noting the absence of information on this matter, the Committee once again urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that the budget allocated to labour inspection is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the labour inspectorate, by providing it with adequate staffing and material means, such as suitably equipped offices and necessary transport facilities, and (ii) provide detailed information in this respect.

Articles 12(1) and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16(1) and 21 of Convention No. 129. Right of inspectors to enter freely any workplace and undertaking of inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that in 2021, labour inspectors carried out 7,039 inspections, out of which 14 per cent were unscheduled inspections (627 inspections in response to complaints, 207 due to occupational accidents and 135 for indications of flagrant violations). The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken to amend sections 26 and 27 of the Law No. 10433 of 2011 on inspection which, as noted in its previous comment, restrict the free initiative of inspectors by providing that “off-programme” inspections may only be carried out in prescribed situations and by requiring a formal authorization to inspect, issued by the Chief Inspector or the chief inspector of the territorial branch. Therefore, the Committee once again requests that the Government adopt the necessary legislative measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to enter workplaces liable to inspection freely and without previous notice in conformity with Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) of Convention No. 129, and that they are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in conformity with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of scheduled and unscheduled inspections as well as the total number of workplaces liable to inspection. In addition, the Committee renews its request for the Government to provide information on any disciplinary measures imposed on labour inspectors related to the procedures for the authorization of inspection under the Law on inspection.

Matters specifically relating to labour inspection in agriculture

Articles 6(1)(a) and (b) and (3), and 19 of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection activities in agriculture. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the indication of the Government that in 2021, 213 workplaces (covering 1006 employees) were inspected in the agriculture, forestry and fishery sector, corresponding to three per cent of the total number of the workplaces inspected during that year. The Committee further notes that in 2021, out of the 207 workplaces that were inspected following the notification of industrial accidents to labour inspectors, only three were in the agriculture, forestry and fishery sector. Noting that the percentage of the inspection visits carried out in agriculture continues to be low, the Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the enforcement of laws and regulations in agriculture, including with respect to OSH, and to continue to provide information on the number of inspections carried out in that sector. Noting the absence of information on this matter, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on measures undertaken or envisaged to ensure that training is provided to labour inspectors on agriculture-related subjects, and on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1985)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified labour inspection Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA) on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129, received in 2018 and 2022. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Workers) on the application of Convention No. 81, received in 2021.

The Committee further notes the Government's reply to the observations of the Association of State Workers (ATE) and the Latin American and Caribbean Confederation of Public Sector Workers (CLATE) on Convention No. 81, received in 2017.

Representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes that the Governing Body, at its 349th Session, declared receivable the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the CTA Workers and the Trade Union Association of Subway and Light Rail Workers (AGTSyP), alleging non-observance by Argentina of Convention No. 81, the Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). The Committee observes that the allegations contained in the representation refer to the application of Articles 3 and 9 of Convention No. 81. In accordance with its usual practice, the Committee has decided to suspend the examination of these issues until the Governing Body adopts its report on the representation.

Articles 16, 18 and 24 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 21 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Supervisory function of labour inspectors, frequency and scope of labour inspections, and penalties. With regard to its previous comment on activities and inspections carried out in relation to conditions of work and the penalties imposed, the Committee notes that the Government provides information in its report on the various activities carried out by the labour inspectorate since 2018, including activities in the context of the National Plan for the Regularization of Labour (PNRT). In particular, the Government indicates that, between January 2019 and June 2022, a total of 224,707 inspections were conducted in urban areas and 4,731 in rural areas in the context of the PNRT, and a total of 15,159 penalties were imposed for violations of the labour regulations. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, the National Labour Inspection Directorate at the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (Ministry of Labour) plays an important role in the implementation of actions in the context of the prevention and prosecution components of the National Biennial Plan 2020–22 on Combating Trafficking in Persons. Moreover, the Committee observes the Government's indication that, in the context of activities to detect evidence of labour exploitation, inspectors must take account of issues of safety and health and conditions of work during inspections in order to detect evidence of labour exploitation.

The Committee observes that although statistics are provided on activities under various plans, there are still no full statistics on inspections carried out by the Integrated Labour and Social Security Inspection System, established by the Act No. 25877 of 2004, and also none on infringements detected and penalties imposed in relation to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the observations of the CTA Workers, Bill No. 1381/18 provides that employers who have used unregistered or incompletely registered workers can regularize the situation of such workers, with all resulting fines or sanctions waived. In addition, the CGT RA considers that the system of penalties and measures to promote spontaneous regularization, reduce employer contributions or increase the number of inspections are inadequate. Also referring to its comment below on annual inspection reports, the Committee therefore requests the Government to provide more information on the number and nature of activities and inspections carried out in relation to conditions of work (particularly as regards hours of work, wages, weekly rest, holidays and the employment of women). Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether Bill No. 1381/18 has been adopted, and to take steps to strengthen the system of penalties. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations found, penalties imposed and any court rulings in this regard.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129. Stability of employment and conditions of service of labour inspectors. With regard to its previous comment on the stability system and the contract system for staff under Framework Act No. 25164 of 1999 on the regulation of national public employment (Act No. 25164), the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Occupational Risk Supervisory Authority (SRT) at the Ministry of Labour employs 100 inspectors on contracts of unlimited duration and 28 inspectors on automatically renewable one-year fixed-term contracts. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's reply to the observations of the ATE and CLATE, an analysis of the procedure for incorporating public employees and the need for such was required in 2016, owing to an unusually high number of competitions launched and the large number of temporary contracts concluded during the previous administration, an analysis which revealed many instances of failure to comply with procedures. The Government also indicates that some staff who were recruited on temporary contracts who did not have their contracts renewed in 2016 were subsequently incorporated under the procedure established by section 9 of Act No. 25164 (contract system).

The Committee notes that under section 156 of the General Collective Employment Agreement for the National Public Administration, non-permanent staff of decentralized authorities and entities shall not exceed 15 per cent of the permanent staff under the terms of the second paragraph of section 9 of the Annex to Act No. 25164. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the CGT-RA refers in its observations to the existence of frequent cases of precarious employment in the inspection corps. In this regard, the Committee recalls once again that, according to Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129, the inspection staff shall be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that all labour inspectors are public officials, and the stability of their employment is ensured. Noting that this information is not available to inspectors outside the SRT, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the type of employment relationship occupied by all federal and provincial inspectors, disaggregating the number of inspectors under the stability system and the number under the contract system.

Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Annual inspection report. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the reports of the National Labour Directorate and the National Register of Rural Workers and Employers for the 2019–22 period. However, the Committee once again observes that it has not received the annual inspection report. The Committee once again urges the Government to take rapid steps to ensure that the central inspection authority publishes an annual general report on the work of the labour inspection services under its control (Article 20 of Convention No. 81 and Article 26 of Convention No. 129), covering each of the subjects indicated in Article 21 of Convention No. 81 and Article 27 of Convention No. 129.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Armenia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the Confederation of Trade Unions of Armenia (CTUA) communicated with the Government's reports.

Articles 3, 4, 7, 9, 12, 13, 16 and 17 of the Convention. Moratorium on labour inspections. The Committee notes that the moratorium on inspections expired on 1 January 2018. Taking due note of this information, the Committee expects that no moratorium on inspections will be placed in the future. Therefore, it requests the Government to provide detailed statistics on the number of inspection visits undertaken by the Health and Labour Inspection Body (HLIB).

Article 3(2). Additional duties of labour inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the amendments to the Labour Code introduced by the Law N HO-265-N of 4 December 2019, which entered into force on 1 July 2021, provide that labour inspectors are empowered to control compliance with labour legislation and collective agreements and can apply enforcement measures in cases stipulated by law. The Government further indicates that the amended section 230 of the Code on Administrative Offences, which came into force on 1 July 2021, grants to the HLIB the authority to handle cases regarding administrative offences for violating the requirements of the labour legislation.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication about the amendments to HLIB's Statute by Prime-Minister's Decision N 768-L of 3 July 2020 and Decision No. 781-L of 23 July 2021. The Committee notes that section 11 of HLIB's Statute enlists HLIB's supervisory powers on a number of areas, including labour and OSH legislation. The Committee notes that other areas under HLIB's supervision refer to matters unrelated to conditions of work and protection of workers (such as supervision over circulation of medicine; donation of human blood and its components and transfusion; human reproductive health and reproductive rights; psychiatric care, among others). The Committee recalls that according to Article 3(1) of the Convention, the functions of the system of labour inspection shall be to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work and that according to Article 3(2), any further duties which may be entrusted to them must not be such as to interfere with the discharge of their primary duties.

Noting that the tasks assigned to the HLIB include a number of substantial functions in addition to the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, the Committee requests the Government to take measures in law and practice to ensure that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention, additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors do not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties and to provide specific information on all progress thereon.

Articles 12 and 16. Free access of inspectors to workplaces without previous notice. Inspections as often and as thoroughly as necessary. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 7 of the Law "On Organization and Conduct of Inspections in the Republic of Armenia (RA)" provides for inspectors' powers, while section 8(1) stipulates inspectors' duties. However, the Committee notes that the Law does not provide for the right of labour inspectors to enter any workplace liable to inspection without previous notice at any hour of the day or night, as stipulated in Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention.

In addition, the Committee notes that section 3(2) of the same Law obliges inspection authorities, prior to inspection visits, to issue an order for inspection specifying, among others, the body conducting the inspection, full name of the commercial entity under inspection, name, surname of the official(s) conducting the inspection, scope of issues, period under review, purpose, inspection term, and legal basis for the inspection. The Committee notes the general requirement for the inspection authority to submit to the employer the order for inspection at least three working days in advance of the inspection (section 3(3)). The Committee also notes CTUA's observations according to which the procedure for conducting inspections, as established by the legislation, is not in line with the requirements of Article 12(1) of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that Article 12(1)(a) provides that labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. In addition, Article 12(2) provides that labour inspectors shall have the right to decide not to inform the employer or their representatives of their presence on the occasion of an inspection visit when they consider that such a notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the inspection body undertakes inspection based on an annual plan, which is presented by the Head of the inspection body, approved by the Governing Council of the inspection body and published on HLIB's webpage, or alternatively in case of necessity. The Committee notes the Government's reference to section 4(3) of the Law on Organization and Conduct of Inspections, which limits frequency of labour inspection visits in workplaces in accordance with risk categorization, such as high risk (inspections not more than once in a year), medium risk (inspections not more than once in three years) and low risk (inspections not more than once in five years). The Government indicates that public complaints about business entities are used in the risk-based gradation and that inspections in case of necessity, outside the annual plan, are undertaken in view of a high level of risk, or in case of multiple complaints about the same business entity in a short period of time. Noting the Government's explanation about the possibility to modify the annual plan, the Committee once again expresses the view that limiting the number of inspection visits to a specific number for a certain time period raises obstacles to the effective performance of labour inspection functions.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that section 4(1) and (2) of the same Law limits the duration of an inspection visit to up to 15 consecutive working days per year, which can be extended up to the total duration of actual inspection of 30 working days upon a written justification. The Committee further observes that section 5 allows repeated inspections only in exceptional cases, such as following an instruction of the Prime Minister or within a criminal procedure. The Committee recalls that, according to Article 16, labour inspectors shall undertake inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of relevant legal provisions. Noting with serious concern the extent of limitations imposed on the authority and powers of labour inspectors, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors provided with proper credentials are empowered to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection without previous notice and to conduct inspections as often and as thoroughly as necessary. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of announced and unannounced inspections conducted by labour inspectors as well as the number and nature of inspections conducted outside the scope of the annual plan. The Committee further requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of CTUA's observations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2000)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified labour inspection Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 and 129 together.

Articles 12 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Limitations and restrictions of labour inspections. Powers of labour inspectors. 1. Moratorium and restrictions on labour inspections. The Committee notes that, according to the Law of the Republic of Azerbaijan dated October 20, 2015, No. 1410-IVQ "On Suspension of Inspections in the Field of Entrepreneurship", inspection of business entities in the territory of the Republic of Azerbaijan have been suspended until January 1, 2024. In accordance with the requirements of this Law, inspection of business entities by the Service have been suspended since 1 November 2015, except for control of safe operation of potentially dangerous facilities and mining. Recalling with deep concern that a moratorium placed on labour inspection is a serious violation of the Conventions and with reference to its 2019 general observation on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee urges the Government to eliminate the temporary ban on inspections and to ensure that labour inspectors are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in compliance with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129.

2. Other limitations on labour inspections. The Committee notes that Law No. 714-IVQ of 2 July 2013 regulating inspections of business and protecting the interests of business owners, contains various limitations on labour inspectors' powers, including with regard to: (i) the frequency of inspections (section 10); (ii) the scope of unscheduled inspections (section 16); (iii) the ability of labour inspectors to undertake inspection visits without previous notice (section 17.3); (iv) the duration of inspections (section 18); and (v) the issues that can be examined in the course of inspections (section 19). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, in order to implement paragraph 1.3 of Presidential Decree No. 955 of 28 August 2013 concerning the application of Law No. 714-IVQ of 2 July 2013, a draft decision approving the criteria for identifying risk groups for monitoring of compliance with labour law was submitted to the Cabinet of Ministers for examination in April 2021. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise Law No. 714-IVQ, in order to ensure that labour inspectors: (i) are empowered to make visits to workplaces liable to inspection without previous notice, in conformity with Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) of Convention No. 129; (ii) are empowered to carry out any examination, test or inquiry which they may consider necessary in order to satisfy themselves that the legal provisions are being strictly observed in conformity with Article 12(1)(c) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(c) of Convention No. 129; (iii) can choose not to notify the employer or his representative of their presence, if they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties, in accordance with Article 12(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(3) of Convention No. 129; and (iv) are empowered to inspect workplaces as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions, in accordance with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the development of criteria for identifying risk groups for the government monitoring of labour law compliance, and to provide a copy of the decision adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Bangladesh

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union's International Labour Standards Committee (TU-ILS Committee), communicated with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the reply of the Government to the observations submitted by the TU-ILS Committee in 2022.

The Committee notes that the complaint submitted in 2019 under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, concerning non-observance by the Government of Bangladesh of the Convention as well as of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), is pending before the Governing Body. At its 349th Session (November 2023), taking note of the report submitted by the Government on 19 September 2023 on the progress made with the implementation of the road map of actions, the Governing Body, on the recommendation of its Officers, decided to: (i) request the Government of Bangladesh to report on further progress made in the implementation of the road map of actions to address all the outstanding issues mentioned in the article 26 complaint at its 350th Session (March 2024); and (ii) defer the decision on further action in respect of the complaint to that session or any subsequent session.

The Committee takes note of the additional information provided by the Government on 19 September 2023 on the progress made in the implementation of the road map to address all the outstanding issues mentioned in the article 26 complaint.

Legislative developments. Following its previous comments on the labour law reform, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the tripartite working group, headed by the Joint Secretary of Labour, has finalized a draft amendment of the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006 (BLA) and submitted its recommendations to the Tripartite Law Review Committee (TLRC). According to the Government, the amendment process is expected to be completed by December 2023, and it "will be more [in] compliance with ILO labour Standards." The Government further indicates that the Bangladesh Export Processing Zone Authority (BEPZA) has formed a 15-member tripartite committee, responsible for amending the Export Processing Zone (EPZ) Labour Act, 2019 and that technical notes were prepared on the EPZ laws with the technical support from the ILO, with discussions being held to hold consultative workshops on their content. The Committee nevertheless notes the observations of the TU-ILS Committee, that there has been no agreement reached on 51 issues discussed by the TLRC. The Committee notes that the forthcoming legislative amendments provide an opportunity to resolve once and for all the outstanding issues of compatibility with the Convention. Noting also the trade union's observations, the Committee expects that the amendments to the BLA and the EPZ Labour Act will take into account all the outstanding issues concerning the application of the Convention raised by the Committee in these comments, and requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the progress of its legislative reform.

Articles 2, 4, 12 and 23 of the Convention. Labour inspection in EPZs and special economic zones (SEZs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, pursuant to section 290 of the EPZ Labour Rules of 2022, labour inspectors of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) are only required to give written or oral intimation to the Executive Chairman of the BEPZA to conduct inspections in the EPZs, and do not need prior approval. The Government indicates that the BEPZA is currently working on the revision process of the EPZ Labour Act, in consultation with social partners and stakeholders, and that the Act will be amended by 2025. The Committee also notes the EPZ inspection checklist communicated by the Government. The Committee further notes the indication by the Government that as of July 2023, the DIFE has inspected 52 factories within EPZs with the overall compliance of the factories concerned having been found to be satisfactory in general. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to enter freely establishments in EPZs and SEZs without any restrictions, including by amending section 168 of the EPZ Labour Act which provides that DIFE inspectors are required to receive approval from the Executive Chairman of the BEPZA prior to the inspection of EPZs. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether labour inspectors of the DIFE can carry out tests, examinations, and enquiries that are not covered by the EPZ inspection checklist but that they consider necessary to verify the strict observance of the relevant legal provisions. In the absence of information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of inspections in the EPZs and SEZs undertaken by the DIFE that were announced, as compared with those that were unannounced, the number and nature of violations detected in each group, and the measures taken as a result of such violations. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the number of workers employed in the EPZs and SEZs and those covered by the 52 inspection visits indicated by the Government.

Articles 5(b) and 15(a). Cooperation with employers and workers. Impartiality of labour inspectors. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government denies all previous allegations of the TU-ILS Committee regarding corruption and political or undue pressure on labour inspectors during inspections. The Government further states that there are institutional mechanisms in place to deal with malpractice, and that any written allegation of corruption or undue exercise of power would be investigated. Regarding the Hashem Food Factory incident in 2021, the Government indicates that the inspection occurred during the COVID-19 lockdown, and that the focus was on preventing the spread of COVID-19. The Committee also notes, however, that according to the TU-ILS Committee, factory operations at the Hashem Food Factory restarted soon after without the necessary changes, and that labour inspectors of the DIFE visit small establishments and shops instead of factories, because of the informal relationships between factories and labour inspectors. The TU-ILS Committee also alleges that labour inspectors do not sufficiently collaborate with the ready-made garment Sustainability Council (RSC) and that the National Industrial Health and Safety Council, which has identified 5,000 factories requiring safety changes, does not have workers' representation. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of each of these observations. In addition, the Committee requests information on any instance in which inspectors were investigated for charges of being corruptly or politically influenced in the performance of their duties, and the results of any such investigations. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to further improve collaboration between officials of the labour inspectorate and employers and workers or their organizations.

Articles 5, 7, 10, 11 and 16. Human and material resources of the labour inspectorate. Frequency and thoroughness of labour inspections. Cooperation with employers and workers organizations. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, as of 30 June 2023, there are 711 sanctioned posts compared to 575 sanctioned posts in 2022, of which 396 posts are filled (366 noted in 2022). The Government also indicates that there are 133 posts to be filled by promotion (2 for joint inspector-general and 131 for assistant inspector general). The Committee notes the statistics provided regarding the number of inspection visits conducted in the year 2022–23, with 47,826 inspection visits in total. Regarding material resources, the Committee notes that the statistics provided by the Government are similar to those of 2022, and that the labour inspectors have at their disposal two cars (previously five), three jeeps, 27 minibuses, 158 motorcycles, 40 scooters, 292 laptops and 339 desktop computers. The Government also indicates that the annual budget allocated for the DIFE has increased almost ten times since 2013 from 56.12 million Bangladeshi taka to 524.1 million taka in 2023. Noting that a considerable number of labour inspectors' posts remain vacant, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to increase the number of labour inspectors through recruitment and promotion of inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of labour inspectors in the DIFE, including the number of posts filled by recruitment of new labour inspectors and those filled by promotion.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the current workforce of the DIFE, including the number of approved and filled posts for inspectors, and the information comparing the remuneration and conditions of employment of labour inspectors with tax collectors and the police. The Committee takes note of this information, which addresses its previous request.

Articles 12(1) and 15(c). Inspections without previous notice. Duty of confidentiality in relation to complaints. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government concerning the number of inspection visits conducted by labour inspectors of the DIFE in the year 2022–23. In particular, the Government indicates that a total of 47,826 inspections were conducted in 2022–23, with 19,229 announced and 28,597 unannounced inspections, out of which 3,150 were conducted by the DIFE as a result of a complaint. Regarding the confidentiality of complaints, the Committee notes the Government's indication that complaint boxes are set up during inspections outside the range of camera surveillance, to allow workers to submit complaints anonymously. In addition, the Government indicates that workers can submit grievances against DIFE officials in cases where union members or workers who submitted a complaint face negative consequences from labour inspectors disclosing information. The Committee also notes the observations of the TU-ILS Committee, that: (i) there should be more unannounced inspections; (ii) labour inspectors may not conduct inspection visits at night; and (iii) there are limitations to the scope of labour inspection, as labour inspectors may not inspect sectors falling outside the scope of BLA. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of these observations. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspection visits disaggregated between announced and unannounced inspection visits, separately noting the number of inspections resulting from complaints, along with information on the number and nature of violations found in response to each category of inspection visit. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistics on the use of the helpline and other mechanisms to submit anonymous complaints, including the number of inspections conducted as a result of a complaint and the outcome of such inspections.

Articles 17 and 18. Legal proceedings. Effectively enforced and sufficiently dissuasive penalties. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, the legal unit of the DIFE is fully functional and has one Legal Officer (with another who has yet to join), an inspector and other staff members. The Committee also notes the statistics provided by the Government indicating that in the year 2022–23, there were 495 cases solved in court with fines imposed in all of them, that the total amount of money collected from fines was 1,163,667 taka, equivalent to US$10,559 or an average of US$21.33 for each case where a fine was imposed, and that 653 cases are still pending. The Committee notes the Government's indication that increasing penalties for relevant violations is being considered in the labour law reform. The Committee notes that, according to the additional information provided by the Government concerning the implementation of the third priority area of the road map of actions, a proposal to set up a fully-fledged Labour Court in Faridpur is currently awaiting approval. Noting that the Government had previously indicated that the legal unit would be expanded to nine officers, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to fill in the posts of the legal unit of the DIFE. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to ensure that penalties for labour law violations are sufficiently dissuasive and to clear the backlog of labour cases. The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of violations detected by labour inspectors, and the provisions to which they relate. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in the establishment of a Labour Court in Faridpur.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

Articles 6, 12, 13 and 16 of the Convention. Limitations and restrictions on the powers of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that, according to the Decree of the President of the Republic of Belarus No. 376 of 2017 on measures to improve the activities of the control (supervisory) system, which entered into force on 1 January 2018, a number of limitations on the powers of labour inspectors and the undertaking of labour inspections are envisaged, including restrictions relating to: (i) the free initiative of labour inspectors (sections 1.1.9 and 1.1.11); (ii) the frequency of labour inspections (sections 1.1.7 and 1.1.10); (iii) the scope of inspections, particularly in terms of the issues that can be examined in the course of inspections (sections 1.1.9 and 1.1.11); and (iv) the power of labour inspectors to issue suspension orders in case of threat to life and health (section 1.1.6). The Committee recalls that Article 12 of the Convention provides that labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter workplaces liable to inspection freely and to carry out any examination, test or enquiry which they may consider necessary in order to satisfy themselves that the legal provisions are being strictly observed, while Article 16 provides that workplaces shall be inspected as often as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. In addition, Article 13 empowers labour inspectors to adopt measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers.

The Committee further notes that labour inspectors are subject to disciplinary liability, including dismissal and fines, for conducting inspections without justified reasons, for exceeding the time limit for conducting inspections, for requesting the production of documents if they are not related to the matters specified in the inspection order, and for taking samples for investigation in quantities exceeding the established limits (section 1.2). The Committee recalls that according to Article 6, the inspection staff shall be composed of public officials who are independent of improper external influences. The Committee notes that as public servants, labour inspectors can only be dismissed for serious professional misconduct, which should be defined in terms that are as precise as possible to avoid arbitrary or improper interpretation (General Survey of 2006 on labour inspection, paragraph 203). The Committee requests the Government to indicate if Decree No. 376 of 2017 is still in force and, in such case, to take prompt measures to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Duties of labour inspectors. In response to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates in its report that, in addition to their advice and supervision duties, labour inspectors play a conciliation role and provide assistance in enforcing the applicable principles on freedom of association and the promotion of collective bargaining. The Government states that, while prioritizing urgent situations, the inspectors plan their administrative tasks with a view to promptly and effectively performing their additional duties and, thereby, preserving the social peace. Moreover, the Committee notes that section 436 of the draft revised Labour Code still provides that the conciliation duties that fall within the labour inspector's remit are an obligatory stage of the amicable settlement of individual and collective labour disputes. The Committee recalls the importance of avoiding overburdening inspectorates with tasks, which by their nature may be understood as incompatible with their primary function of enforcing legal provisions (2006 General Survey on Labour Inspection, paragraph 72). The Committee also recalls that Paragraph 8 of the Recommendation No. 81 provides that the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the time and resources spent by labour inspectors on their various duties. It also requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors are not an obstacle to the performance of their main duties, including in the context of the reform of the Labour Code.

Articles 11 and 16. Material means and transport facilities placed at the disposal of labour inspectors and reimbursement of necessary expenses. Frequency of inspection visits and effectiveness of the system. The Committee notes that in response to its previous comment, the Government indicates that it has renewed its commitment to pursue its efforts to furnish the labour inspection services with material means and transport facilities to enable them to perform their duties with impartiality and independence. The Government also indicates that it is continuing its efforts to refurbish the local labour inspection offices, both at the central level and in the seven regional directorates of labour. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) intensify its efforts to ensure that labour inspectors are afforded offices that are properly set up, and resources and reimbursement of necessary expenses for the effective performance of their duties; and (ii) continue to provide information on any measure taken to this end.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129 submitted jointly by the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), transmitted together with the Government's reports. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 1 September 2023.

Articles 3(1), 7(3), 9, 13, 14, 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6(1), 9(3), 11, 18, 19, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection functions in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH). Industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with section 8 of Act No. 1610 of 2013 of the Labour Inspectorate, labour inspectors are empowered to order the closure of a workplace where there are conditions endangering the life, physical integrity and safety of the workers, without requiring the violation to be serious. However, the Committee notes that Decision No. 3029 of 2022 empowers the inspectors to order a prohibition or a stoppage in the event of serious and imminent risk (section 2(10)), while Article 13(2)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(b) of Convention No. 129 empower labour inspectors to adopt measures with immediate executory force, in the event of imminent danger to health or safety, without requiring the danger to be serious.

The Committee requests the Government to consider amending Decision No. 3029 of 2022 to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to adopt measures with immediate executory force, in the event of imminent danger to health or safety, without requiring the danger to be serious, in accordance with Articles 13(2)(b) of Convention No. 81 and 18(2)(b) of Convention No. 129.

With respect to the composition of the internal working groups on occupational risks inspection and their functions, the Government reports that these groups are composed of labour inspectors whose functions are set out in section 2 of Decision No. 3029 of 2022 and encompass inter alia the coordination and realization of inspection activities in application of OSH standards, assistance for workplaces in implementing actions to prevent industrial accidents and occupational disease, and interventions in the economic sectors with the highest rates of occupational accidents and diseases.

With regard to the high rate of accidents in the mining sector, the Committee notes that the Government indicates: (i) the number of occupational accidents and diseases recorded between 2019 and 2022 in the different economic sectors, including the number of deaths of workers; (ii) the number of fatal accidents of workers in the mining sector between 2005 and 2023, and the causes of the accidents, including explosions and contaminated environments inside the mines; and (iii) the number of preventive inspections in mines with the highest rates of accidents, and the provision of training for labour inspectors in the mining sector to strengthen activities to prevent occupational risk.

The Committee also notes that the CUT, the CTC and the CGT allege that during the course of 2022, 23 per cent of labour inspectors were adequately trained in OSH.

The Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistical information on the preventive measures taken by inspectors to: (i) to make or cause to make orders that alterations to the installation, plant, premises, tools, equipment or machines are carried out, within a specified time limit, as may be necessary to ensure compliance with the legal provisions relating to health or safety (alteration orders) (Article 13(2)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(a) of Convention No. 129); and (ii) to make or cause to make orders requiring measures with immediate executory force, which can go as far as halting the work, in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of workers (Article 13(2)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(b) of Convention No. 129).

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to continue providing OSH training to labour inspectors, as well as on the number of OSH inspections carried out in the mining sector and the results of such inspections.

Articles 10 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors. Frequency of inspections. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of labour inspector posts (1,259) and the number of inspectors effectively assigned to a post, which rose by 335 inspectors between 2021 and 2022 (1,151 inspectors in 2022 compared to 816 inspectors in 2021) and their geographic distribution (144 inspectors fall under the Bogota D.C. regional directorate and the remainder under other regional directorates) and the number of vacant labour inspector posts (108). The Committee also notes that the number of labour inspections, including in the agricultural sector, rose from 7,194 in 2018 to 14,688 in 2022.

The Committee notes that the CUT, the CTC and the CGT allege that the number of labour inspectors has not been increased, which makes it difficult to conduct inspections and monitor compliance with labour standards.

While welcoming the increase in the number of inspectors and of inspections carried out, the Committee expects that the Government will continue to take appropriate measures to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions.

Articles 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 22 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Discretion to give a warning or advice. Imposition of penalties. Discretionary powers of labour inspectors to give a warning or advice, instead of initiating legal proceedings. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that Decision No. 772 of 2021, which establishes guidelines for the exercise of the preventive function in the form of prior notice, was derogated by Decision No. 4798 of 29 of November 2022.

Suspension or termination of administrative penalty proceedings. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the Government's information that, in accordance with section 372 of Act No. 2294 of 2023, section 200 of Act No. 1955 of 2019 was repealed. This section empowered the Ministry of Labour to suspend or terminate administrative penalty proceedings for violation of labour standards, other than those relating to labour formalization. The Government also indicates that the power of the Ministry of Labour set out in section 200 above is not applied in practice.

With regard to the allegations of the CUT, the CTC and the CGT indicating that: (i) according to the 2022 quarterly inspection bulletins of the Ministry of Labour, 573 agreements were signed between the Ministry of Labour and several employers for the suspension and termination of administrative proceedings under section 200 of Act No. 1955 of 2019; and (ii) despite the repeal of section 200 above, the Ministry of Labour continues to generate such agreements under Decree No. 1368 of 2022, which regulates the operation of the agreements that were provided for in the repealed standard, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1991)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that labour inspectors are entrusted with supervising the implementation of provisions of the Foreigners Act regarding the legality of work and employment of third-country nationals without residence and work permits. The Government indicates that, in cases where the labour inspectors recognize the existence of illegal work performed by a third-country national, they take the prescribed misdemeanour and administrative measures and inform the Ministry of Interior and the Tax Administration of the Ministry of Finance for further action. The Committee notes that according to the 2022 Labour Inspection Report, the labour inspectorate identified 526 undeclared workers which were third-country nationals whose status was contrary to the provisions of the Foreigners Act. The Committee recalls that the primary duty of labour inspectors is to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers and not to enforce immigration law. It further recalls that pursuant to Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties. Therefore, the Committee requests once again that the Government take measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with labour inspectors' primary duties as set forth in Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. It also requests the Government to indicate how the labour inspectorate ensures the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of workers found to be working irregularly, including migrant workers, particularly with regard to the payment of wages and social security credits.

Articles 3(2), 10, and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6(3), 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors for the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate and additional duties. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that in recent years, the number of cases communicated by the Tax Administration on non-payment of wages has significantly decreased, as well as the number of workers who have not been paid the minimum wage, so that these tasks no longer represent a burden that significantly impedes the conduct of inspections in the field of labour relations. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that according to the Ordinance on the internal organization of the State Inspectorate No. 97 of 2020, a total of 268 labour inspector positions are foreseen within the State Inspectorate (148 in the field of labour relations and 120 in the field of occupational safety). The Government indicates that as of 31 December 2022, 188 positions were filled (108 in the field of labour relations, and 80 in the field of occupational health and safety). Finally, the Committee also notes the Government's indication that difficulties in the application of the Convention derive from an insufficient number of labour inspectors. Noting that a considerable number of labour inspection positions are still vacant, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to fill them as soon as possible and also to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, including in the agricultural sector, and that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the provisions of these Conventions.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 12, 22(1) and 24 of Convention No. 129. Institution of legal proceedings and enforcement of adequate penalties. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government that, in recent years, there have been fewer verdicts dismissing charges filed by labour inspectors in misdemeanour cases due to failure to comply with the applicable statute of limitations. However, the Government reports that it does not have statistical data on the number of prosecution motions rejected due to the limitation period in misdemeanour cases, nor on the fines imposed. The Committee also notes a decrease in the number of indictments submitted by labour inspectors to the competent courts in the past four years (2,366 in 2019, 1,608 in 2020, 1,466 in 2021 and 1,642 in 2022). The Committee recalls that in its 2007 general observation on Convention No. 81 it emphasized that the effectiveness of the binding measures taken by the labour inspectorate depends to a large extent on the manner in which the judicial authorities deal with cases referred to them by, or at the recommendation of, labour inspectors. It is therefore indispensable for an arrangement to be established whereby relevant information can be notified to the labour inspectorate.

Accordingly, the Committee requests that the Government indicate the measures adopted in order to ensure effective cooperation between the inspection services and the judiciary with regard to the effective enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers by labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved or the difficulties encountered in the effective enforcement of adequate and sufficiently dissuasive penalties, including information on the number and nature of penalties assessed, the total amounts assessed, and other sanctions. The Committee also encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in the collection of statistical information on the number of legal proceedings initiated by labour inspectors that were declared inadmissible, and the main reasons for their inadmissibility. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the reasons for the decrease in the number of indictments submitted to the courts by labour inspectors.

Convention concerning Statistics of Wages and Hours of Work, 1938 (No. 63) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Technical assistance. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its brief report, including its request for ILO technical assistance to assist it in filling the gaps in implementation of the Convention. It recalls that the Government had not submitted information since October 2005. The Committee notes the information concerning the 2012 Statistical Yearbook, which is available online, as well as the 2015 Household Survey, to be published in June 2016. The Committee further notes that, according to the information available to the ILO Department of Statistics, labour market statistics in Djibouti are not compiled on a regular basis. The Committee requests that the Government provide information on the results and methodology of the 2015 Household Survey, as soon as it becomes available, and to regularly provide information on the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group and the corresponding decision of the Governing Body at its 328th Session in October–November 2016 (GB/328/LILS/2/1) calling upon the Office to commence follow-up with member States that are still bound by this Convention, encouraging them to ratify the Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160), as the most up-to-date instrument in this area, and resulting in the automatic denunciation of Convention No. 63. The Committee reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD), received in 2018. It also notes the observations of the Ibero-American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT), received in 2019 and 5 June 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 10 and 16 of the Convention. Number of labour inspection staff for the effective discharge of labour inspection duties. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (i) the competition held in 2014 to fill 60 labour inspector posts was cancelled since no budget was allocated; (ii) the Ministry of Labour recruited six new labour inspectors through the competition held in 2018; and (iii) there are 174 labour inspectors in the inspection system (compared with 159 inspectors in 2016) distributed among 40 local labour offices in the country. The Committee also notes the observations of the CNUS, CASC and CNTD, claiming that: (i) the number of labour inspectors is insufficient to address the workers' demands; (ii) the number of inspection visits carried out is insufficient to ensure compliance with the labour legislation, particularly the provisions relating to occupational safety and health, working hours, wages and social security; and (iii) the quality of inspection reports is deficient. The Committee also notes that the CIIT claims in its allegations that: (i) the number of labour inspectors is low in relation to the population of the respective provinces (for example, there are five inspectors in the province of Santiago de los Caballeros, with over 1.5 million inhabitants); and (ii) in the province of Samaná, with a population of 139,707 inhabitants, there are no labour inspectors. While noting the increase in the number of inspectors between 2016 and 2018, and the difficulties involved in appointing new inspectors, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to enable the effective discharge of labour inspection duties in all regions of the country.

Article 12(1)(a) and (b). Right of labour inspectors to enter workplaces freely. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it submitted a proposal for reform of the Labour Code to the Committee on Tripartite Dialogue. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the context of the aforementioned reform proposal, to give legal effect to the right of labour inspectors to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, and to enter by day any premises when they may have reasonable cause to believe that they are liable to inspection, in accordance with Article 12(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Publication and communication of an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes that no annual labour inspection reports have been received since 2018. It notes that the last annual report from 2018 contains information on: (i) the legislation relating to the functions of the labour inspectorate; (ii) the total number of labour inspectors; (iii) the number of workplaces liable to inspection; (iv) the number of inspections conducted and the number of workplaces inspected; and (v) the number of warning notices issued to workplaces, with a view to securing compliance with the labour legislation, and the number of infringement reports established. The Committee notes that the above-mentioned report does not contain any information on the number of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease notified. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that annual reports on the work of the inspection services are published and communicated regularly to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention, and that they contain information on all the subjects listed in Article 21(a)–(g).

Previous comment: Convention No. 129 direct request

Articles 12(1)(a)–(b) and (2), and 17(2) of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16(1)(a)–(b) and (3), and 22(2) of Convention No. 129. Freedom of labour inspectors to enter workplaces, notification of presence and discretion to decide on the treatment of infringements. The Committee recalls that for many years, it has been requesting the Government to take measures to ensure that current legislation is in conformity with the Articles of the Conventions in question. The Committee notes that the Government does not refer in its report to the application of these Articles. The Committee also recalls that, in its previous comments, it noted certain legislative initiatives aimed at ensuring conformity of the Act on the Organization and Functions of the Labour and Social Security Sector with the provisions of the Convention, and that these initiatives were unsuccessful. In these circumstances, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure full conformity with the provisions of Articles 12(1)(a)–(b) and (2), and 17(2) of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16(1)(a)–(b) and (3), and 22(2) of Convention No. 129. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, during inspections, labour inspectors verify the working conditions of migrant workers and whether they are treated equally compared to other employees. The Government indicates, however, that the right for migrant workers to work in Estonia is regulated by the Aliens Act, which is enforced by the police and by the border guard, and not by labour inspectors. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, labour inspectors notify the police and the border guard upon finding migrant workers who are not legally entitled to remain in the country, and that they cooperate with the police, the border guard and the Tax and Customs Board in joint inspections. On this issue, the Committee once again refers the Government to its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 78, and emphasizes that the objective of labour inspection can only be met if workers are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers. The Committee also observes that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken by labour inspectors to enforce employers' obligations regarding the rights of migrant workers in an irregular situation, such as the payment of wages and social security benefits, for the period of their effective employment relationship. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how it ensures that labour inspectors' participation in joint inspections does not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties under Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. In addition, the Committee urges the Government to indicate the specific role, if any, played by the labour inspectorate in: (i) enforcing employers' obligations arising from the rights of undocumented migrant workers, such as payment of wages or social security benefits for the period of their effective employment relationship, especially in cases where workers are liable to expulsion from the country; and (ii) regularizing the employment relationship of migrant workers found to be working in an irregular situation, including the numbers of undocumented migrant workers assisted in each of these areas.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

Articles 10, 11 and 16 of the Convention. Functioning and resources of the labour inspection system. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the statistical information in the Government's report. In 2020, the General Inspectorate Unit carried out a total of 458 labour inspections, including 402 initial or routine inspections and 56 follow-up inspections, which according to the Government, marked a significant decrease from 2019 due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Government indicates that material resources, including motor vehicles allocated to the Department of Labour, were recalled and diverted to provide the necessary response to the COVID-19 pandemic. The unavailability of motor vehicles to conduct field work negatively impacted on the conduct of physical labour inspections. Moreover, few field inspections were carried out in 2021 due to the lack of personal protective equipment (PPE) to protect labour inspectors against COVID-19 virus. Consequently, the Government initiated a procurement process for appropriation of PPE which was planned to be finalised before the end of the 2021–22 financial year.

The Government also indicates that the implementation of the Strategic Compliance Plan, with the technical assistance provided by the ILO, mitigates against the challenges posed by the continued lack of resources, by maximizing labour inspection efforts based on available resources. In addition, the Government states that it is expected that the number of enterprises will increase at a faster rate than the capacity of the labour inspectorate to inspect them. As a result, the Department of Labour is in the process of designing an Inspection and Enforcement Policy in order to facilitate and ensure more effective implementation of an integrated approach to labour inspection, including the introduction of a unitary, integrated labour inspection system to replace the various specialist inspection services that have operated in the past. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure sufficient material means for the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, including transport facilities and personal protective equipment as necessary. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspections carried out and the number of inspectors. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on specific measures taken or envisaged to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary for the effective application of the relevant legal provisions, including through the implementation of the Strategic Compliance Plan and the Inspection and Enforcement Policy.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes that the Government report contains statistics on the number of inspection visits for the year 2020. It notes however that no information was provided with regard to the number of inspectors (Article 21(b)), statistics of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 21(c)), statistics of violations and penalties imposed (Article 21(e)), statistics of industrial accidents (Article 21(f)), and statistics of occupational diseases (Article 21(g)). The Committee once again notes that no annual report of the Department of Labour has been received by the ILO since 2005, although such reports are required in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the preparation, publication and regular communication to the ILO of annual reports of the labour inspectorate, which contain the information listed in Article 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 30 August 2023, and the observations of the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH) and the CTSP received on 2nd of November 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH) and the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 2nd of November 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 1 September 2019, in which it reiterated its observations of 2016, 2017 and 2018 and adds that the situation has deteriorated.

Articles 3, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention. Discharge of primary duties of the labour inspectorate. Appropriate sanctions. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's indications concerning the obstacles faced in applying the Convention in practice, particularly the inadequate numbers of labour inspectors, and requested the Government to supply detailed information together with statistics on the planning and implementation of systematic inspections throughout the country, including in the export processing zones, and also their results. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the planning and implementation of inspection visits in two of the ten departments in the country in several activity sectors, including: (i) in the western department: 64 inspections (32 initial inspections and 32 catch-up inspections) conducted in 2017; 16 inspections (11 of which in the textile industry), 31 unannounced inspection visits in enterprises and 24 investigations, conducted in 2018; and 42 visits planned and ten advice services carried out in 2019; and (ii) in the north-eastern department, ten initial inspections and ten follow-up inspections were conducted in 2018. The Government indicates that the main objective of labour inspection over this period has been redressing the inconformity identified, rather than imposing penalties. The Committee also notes that the CTSP in its observations indicates that inspectors do not provide technical advice to workers and employers, but limit themselves to calculating the statutory benefits due in disputes between employers and workers. The CTSP also indicates that there are no statistics on labour inspection in the country; to its knowledge, there is no planning or implementation of systematic inspections throughout the country; and, in practice, labour inspection was carried out only in the textile industry. While duly noting the progress achieved since 2017 by the labour inspectorate in the country, particularly concerning the planning and implementation of visits in two of the ten departments in the country, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to progressively expand the planning and conducting of inspection visits to all regions and all economic sectors of the country. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including the statistics concerning the number of inspections planned and conducted, disaggregated by sector, along with details of the results of these visits, including the warnings issues, legal procedures brought or recommended, and penalties imposed and applied. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that, during their inspection visits, the inspectors perform their primary functions in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention.

Articles 6, 10 and 11. Human and material resources available to the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to its previous comments that: (i) between 2014 and 2017, thanks to the project to build the capacities of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (ILO/MAST), piloted by the ILO, a team was established of 20 officials, 12 of whom are inspectors in the field and eight are trainers; (ii) in 2018, means of transport (six motorcycles and a car) were provided to certain regional MAST offices and that efforts are envisaged to equip all inspection services with the means necessary to guarantee labour inspection in workplaces; and (iii) it planned to upwardly revise the salaries of labour inspectors in the same way as all other inspectors of the public administration. The Committee notes the CTSP's observations, according to which the Government has not made an effort to change the status of labour inspectors in order to provide them with better employment conditions, such as a decent salary, a guarantee of productive employment and social advantages, which could jeopardize the independence of inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts towards progressively increasing the number of inspectors and the material means placed at their disposal to enable them to effectively discharge the functions of the inspection services. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the conditions of service of the inspectors, including increasing their remuneration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the salary scales and labour inspectors' career prospects, compared with public servants who carry out similar functions within other government services, such as tax inspectors and the police.

Articles 6, 7(1) and Article 15(a). Recruitment of inspectors. Prohibition from having any direct or indirect interest in the undertakings. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that, in its observations, the CTSP indicated that recruitment of labour inspectors was carried out on the basis of clientelism. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, to ensure full application of sections 47 to 75 of the Decree of 17 May 2005, revising the general public service regulations, which regulate the recruitment procedure of public service agents, including labour inspectors, an administrative structure has been established for this purpose, entitled the Office for Human Resources Management (OMRH). The Committee also notes that the CTSP reiterated in 2019 its previous observations on this matter and indicated the further deterioration of the labour inspectorate's independence vis-à-vis employers. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that labour inspectors are recruited with sole regard to their qualifications for the performance of their duties and that their status and conditions of service are such that they are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences in conformity with Articles 6 and 7(1) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the composition of the OMRH as well as on its prerogatives.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the 2023 conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) on the application of Conventions Nos. 81 and 129 by Italy, in particular those related to: (i) improving the collection of disaggregated labour inspection data, including by establishing an integrated database in coordination with the different agencies and bodies performing labour inspection duties; (ii) extending the collection of statistical data regarding cases of failure to comply with contractual obligations to workers in an irregular situation, to ensure recovery of the credits for these workers, notably unpaid wages and social security contributions; (iii) providing the Labour Inspectorate with the necessary resources for effective labour inspection. The CAS also requested the Government to provide information on: (i) the number of migrant workers in an irregular situation detected by labour inspectors; (ii) the role of labour inspectors in informing migrant workers about their labour rights and in enforcing those rights; and (iii) the number of “special case” residence permits granted and a result of cooperation by those individuals with inspection services.

The CAS invited the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to effectively implement all of the Committee’s recommendations.

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the establishment of a tripartite technical roundtable mandated to analyse the issues raised by the CAS and identify the most appropriate solutions. The Government indicates that the first meeting took place on 19 July 2023, involving representatives of the National Labour Inspectorate (INL), the National Social Security Institute (INPS), the Ministry of the Interior and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation (MAECI), as well as the Ministry of Labour and Social Policies, the Director of the ILO Office for Italy and San Marino, and the most representative organizations of workers and employers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the content and outcomes of the meetings of the tripartite technical roundtable and on the involvement of social partners in the process.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. 1. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors in relation to immigration. Data on migrant workers in an irregular situation and actions undertaken by labour inspectors. Following its previous comment with regard to the number of irregular migrant workers detected by labour inspectors, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that during 2022, 1,206 non-EU workers without residence permit were identified by labour inspectors, representing an increase of 63 percent in comparison to the previous year, with the agricultural sector being the most affected. With regard to the role of labour inspectors in informing migrant workers of their rights and ensuring that those rights are respected, the Government indicates that several measures have already been adopted such as: (i) the translation into several languages (corresponding to the foreign communities most present in the Italian labour market) of the information form adopted by the decree of the Ministry of Interior, the Ministry of Labor and the Ministry of Economy and Finance, in application of the EU Directive 2009/52/EC introducing minimum standards on sanctions and measures against employers who employ third country nationals; (ii) the creation of multilingual brochures with the aim of assisting foreign workers in understanding the national legislative framework and in identifying and reporting possible exploitative situations; (iii) the online publication of the complaint form (so-called Request for Action), translated into ten languages; and (iv) the cooperation of the INL with the creation of inter-institutional help-desks in six local labour inspectorates which provide a multilingual service aimed at third-country nationals, victims or potential victims of labour exploitation, with the support of intercultural mediators and experts in the legal, social, labour and administrative fields. In addition, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government with regard to the implementation of the project “A.L.T. Caporalato D.U.E.”, which continues to strengthen the role of the inspectorate in preventing abusive working conditions in targeted economic sectors, as well as the information concerning awareness-raising and prevention activities conducted by the labour inspectorate with regard to gang mastering and labour exploitation.

2. Data on recovery of wages and social security credits for migrant workers in an irregular situation. Concerning the data on the recovery of wages and social security credits specific to foreign workers without a residence permit, the Committee welcomes the detailed information provided by the Government on the unpaid social security contributions identified by INPS inspectors in 2022 and referring to non-EU workers without a valid residence permit, disaggregated by country of origin and gender of the workers. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the INL has started to redesign its procedures and implement an information system that will improve the collection of inspection data to allow the gathering of information on the amounts recovered and to be recovered in relation to the nationality and gender of the workers. The Government indicates that this process is ongoing and will require time to be completed. The Government also refers to the existing legal procedures for the recovery of wages and social contribution claims in case of employer’s insolvency toward the worker, such as the procedure of monocratic conciliation and the certified notice of findings, regulated by sections 11 and 12 of Legislative Decree No. 124/2004. The Government indicates that these legal remedies also apply to migrant workers in an irregular situation.

3. “Special cases” residence permits. The Committee also notes the detailed information provided by the Government with regard to the number of “special cases” residence permits granted as a result of cooperation by foreign workers without a valid residence permit with the inspection services, disaggregated by region and country of origin. The Committee notes that the residence permits issued for social protection reasons (section 18(1) of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998) were 384 for 2021, 315 for 2022 and 163 for the year 2023 (updated to 28 July 2023) and those for serious labour exploitation (section 22 (12-quarter) of the same Decree) were 124 for 2021, 174 for 2022 and 117 for 2023 (updated to 28 July 2023).

While taking note of the progress reported, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of irregular migrant workers detected by labour inspectors and on the actions undertaken by labour inspectors to ensure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of those workers, particularly with regard to the agricultural sector. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the development of a system that will allow the collection of data on the recovery of wage and social security credits specific to foreign workers without a residence permit, and to provide information on those credits recovered through the existing legal procedure such as the monocratic conciliation and the certified notice of findings, if possible disaggregated by gender. It also requests the Government to provide information on the time and resources of the labour inspectorate that are allocated to the task of verifying the legality of the immigration status in practice as a proportion of inspectors’ overall time and resources.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2001)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex (TUWFEC), as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, on the Conventions).

Articles 12 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Limitations and restrictions of labour inspections. Powers of labour inspectors. 1. Moratorium on labour inspections. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes with deep concern that the application period of the Presidential Decree No. 229 of 26 December 2019 “on the Introduction of a Moratorium on Inspections and Preventive Monitoring and Oversight with Visits in the Republic of Kazakhstan” has been extended to 1 January 2024 by Presidential Decree No. 44, of 7 December 2022. The moratorium, which has been in force since 1 January 2020, applies to labour inspections for private and state-owned enterprises belonging to the categories of small and micro-enterprises. The Committee notes that the exceptions to this moratorium are: (i) inspections aimed at the prevention or elimination of violations that potentially bear a major threat to human life and health, to the environment, to law and public order, or a direct or indirect threat to the constitutional order and national security; and (ii) inspections performed on the grounds specified by the Law of the Republic of Kazakhstan of 4 July 2003 on the Governmental Regulation, Control and Oversight of Financial Market and Financial Organizations. The Committee notes that Presidential Decree No. 44 of December 2022 adds unscheduled inspections conducted in accordance with the Entrepreneur Code of the Republic of Kazakhstan (No. 375-V ZRK of 29 October 2015, hereafter the Entrepreneur Code) as possible exceptions to the moratorium. The Committee also notes that section 144(12) of the Entrepreneur Code, as amended by Law No. 95-VII of 20 December 2022, retains the provision stipulating the possibility to suspend with a Government decision the state control and supervision over private business entities for a certain period of time.

The Government indicates in its report that inspections are carried out based on a decision by the head of the central state body or local authority. For this purpose, a model algorithm has been approved, which establishes a uniform procedure for assigning inspections to small and micro enterprises for compliance by local authorities. The Government also states that unscheduled inspections are initiated in cases of collective complaints from (three or more) workers on issues of non-payment of wages and other entitlements, wholesale dismissals and staff cuts, as well as violation of labour rights in the area of occupational safety and health. From 2020 to 2022, state labour inspectors carried out 196 inspections in small and micro enterprises where serious violations were found. However, the Committee notes that according to the observations of the TUWFEC, in response to complaints about violations of labor rights received from employees of small businesses, the labor inspectorate could only help complainants in preparing statements of claim to the court and in sending letters to employers about the necessity to follow labour laws, without any legal consequences for violations. In addition, none of the complaints to the labour inspectorate about violations of labour rights in agriculture were inspected due to the moratorium. The trade union also indicates that the necessity of inspections is confirmed by reports of numerous rights violations and accidents in workplaces during the moratorium.

In this respect, the Committee once again recalls its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, expressing concern at reforms that substantially undermine the inherent functioning of labour inspection systems, including moratoria on labour inspections, and urging governments to remove these restrictions, with a view to achieving conformity with the Conventions. Recalling that a moratorium placed on labour inspection is a serious violation of the Conventions, the Committee expresses deep concern at the Government's decision to extend the moratorium, and urges in the strongest possible terms the Government to act promptly to eliminate the temporary ban on inspections and to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in compliance with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129.

2. Other restrictions on inspection powers. Following its previous comment on extensive restrictions on inspection and the frequency of inspection visits, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the proposal for labour inspectors to visit workplaces without prior notice was considered as part of the implementation of the Action Plan to Ensure Safe Work through to 2025. However, the Government indicates that this proposal was not supported by the State Enterprise Authority and employers' representatives.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on whether Order No. 55-p of 16 February 2011 repeals Order No. 12 of 1 March 2004. On this matter, the Committee notes that Order No. 162 of 25 December 2020 on the implementation of section 146(2) of the Entrepreneur Code, provides for the prior registration of inspections with the Public Prosecutor's office, who has the power to refuse such registration. The Committee also notes the observation of the ITUC that applicable law requires provision of advance notice of all inspections to the organization being inspected, including written notice 30 days in advance for scheduled inspections and 24 hours' notice in advance for unscheduled inspections.

The Committee further notes with concern that the Entrepreneur Code, as amended by Law No. 95-VII of 30 December 2022, still contains limitations to inspection powers, including with regard to: (i) the ability of labour inspectors to undertake inspection visits without previous notice (sections 144(3) and (4) and 156 (2)); and (ii) the free initiative of labour inspectors (sections 144(13), 144-1, 144-2, 145, and 146). In addition, the Committee notes that, according to sections 143(3) and 151 of the Entrepreneur Code, only the requirements set out in the established inspection checklist are subject to verification and preventive control. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to make visits to workplaces without previous notice, and to carry out any examination, test or enquiry which they may consider necessary, in conformity with Article 12(1)(a) and (c) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) and (c) of Convention No. 129. Noting that section 197 of the Labour Code and section 147(2) of the Entrepreneur Code have been repealed, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether inspectors are now empowered to undertake inspection visits at any time of the day and night, as provided for in Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) of Convention No. 129.

3. Frequency of labour inspections. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes that section 141 of the Entrepreneur Code as amended in 2022, provides for the frequency and types of inspections permitted in accordance with the degree of risk determined by the risk assessment and management system, regulated by Joint Order of the Minister of Health and Social Development of the Republic of Kazakhstan dated December 25, 2015 No. 1022 and the Minister of National Economy of the Republic of Kazakhstan dated December 28, 2015 No. 801 (hereafter Joint Order of 2015). Accordingly, the frequency of inspection shall be no more than once a year for entities classified as high risk, no more than once every two years for those of medium risk and no more than once every three years for those of low risk. The Committee notes that according to ITUC, there is no minimum frequency of inspections established for low-risk employers, meaning that employers classified under such risk category are not covered with scheduled monitoring oversight activities.

Referring to its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the Entrepreneur Code, to ensure that labour inspectors are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of relevant legal provisions. In addition, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that risk assessment criteria do not limit the powers of labour inspectors or the undertaking of labour inspections. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on inspections in practice, indicating the total number of workplaces liable to inspection, the number of scheduled and unscheduled inspections, specifying on-site inspection or inspection without a visit to the workplace, as well as the number of inspections conducted in response to a complaint, and the results of all such inspections.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No.129. Disciplinary sanctions. The Committee notes that, according to section 50(12) of the Law on Civil Service, gross violations of the requirements for the organization and conduct of inspections in respect of business entities set forth in subparagraphs (1), (2), (3), (4) and (7) of section 151, and subparagraphs (2), (6) and (8) of section 156 of the Entrepreneur Code shall be considered as disciplinary offences. The Committee notes that section 151(1) provides that labour inspectors are not allowed to conduct inspections on elements that are not included in the inspection checklist. According to section 156(2) inspections are to be considered invalid in the absence of a prior notification to the subject of control or if the deadline for such notification is not respected. Therefore, the Committee notes that these provisions of national legislation involve restrictions on labour inspectors' power which are not in conformity with the Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise sections 151 and 156 of the Entrepreneur Code, and to provide information on the number of disciplinary sanctions imposed on labour inspectors in accordance with section 50(12) of the Law on Civil Service.

Articles 13 and 17 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 18 and 22 of Convention No. 129. Powers of labour inspectors to ensure the effective application of legal provisions concerning conditions of work and the protection of workers. Prompt legal proceeding. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reference to section 193 of the Labour Code, which provides for the power of labour inspectors to impose suspension measures in case of OSH related legislation and to forward cases to relevant law enforcement agencies and courts. The Government adds that the suspension measures adopted by labour inspectors are for a period of no more than five working days.

The Committee notes that sections 144-1 and 144-2 of the Entrepreneur Code, indicate that in case of violations identified in the course of preventive inspections, the inspectors are obliged to issue a warning without the possibility of initiating proceedings. Moreover, section 136 of the same Code provides that rapid response measures, which can be adopted by inspectors if the activities or goods pose a direct threat to the constitutional rights, freedoms and legitimate interests of individuals and legal entities, human life and health, the environment, and national security, can only be adopted in cases identified by the law and for violations of items included in the inspection checklist.

The Committee recalls that in accordance with Article 13 of Convention No. 81 and Article 18 of Convention No. 129, labour inspectors shall be empowered to take steps with a view to remedying defects observed in plant, layout or working methods which they may have reasonable cause to believe constitute a threat to the health or safety of the workers. The Committee also recalls once again that Article 17 of Convention No. 81 and Article 22 of Convention No. 129 provide that, with certain exceptions, persons who violate or neglect to observe legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors shall be liable to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning, and that it must be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give a warning or provide advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including the revision of the legislation, to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to take measures with immediate executory force and are able to initiate legal proceedings without previous warning, where required, in conformity with Articles 13 and 17 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 18 and 22 of Convention No. 129. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 18 of Convention No. 81 and Article 24 of Convention No. 129. Adequate penalties. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reference to section 462 of the Administrative Offences Code which provides for penalties on acts impeding civil servants of the state inspections office and other bodies of state control and supervision in performing their official duties. It notes that, however, section 12 of the Entrepreneur Code still provides for the right of employers to deny the inspection by officials of state control and supervision bodies. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors do not encounter undue obstruction while performing their duties. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases in which inspectors are denied access to workplaces by employers and the grounds of such denial, and on the number of cases in which penalties are imposed on employers who obstruct labour inspectors in performing their duties and the nature of such penalties.

Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Annual report on the work of the labour inspection services. The Committee notes that since the ratification of the Conventions in 2001, no annual report on the activities of the labour inspection services has been received by the Office. The Committee also notes that in its report the Government provides the following statistics for the year of 2021: 4,727 inspections were carried out, more than 10,000 breaches of labour law were identified, 3,300 orders were issued to remedy the violations identified and 1,323 fines were imposed in the amount of Kazakh Tenge (KZT) 324 million. Regarding agriculture, in 2021, 62 inspections were carried out, with 216 violations detected, 64 corrective orders and 23 administrative fines issued, amounting to KZT 4,562,180. In addition, the Committee notes that the Report on the review of the activities of labour inspectorates of the member States of the Euro-Asian Regional Alliance of Labour Inspections for the year 2022, contains information on the number of inspection visits, violations detected and penalties imposed and statistics on industrial accidents. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the establishment and publication of an annual report on the work of the inspection services and to transmit it to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 of Convention No. 81 and Article 26 of Convention No. 129, and to ensure that it contains all the subjects listed under Article 21 of Convention No. 81 and Article 27 of Convention No. 129.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 4, 6, 10 and 11 of the Convention. Organization, human resources and material means of the labour inspection services. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in order to address the challenges faced by the labour inspection system, the inspectorate has continued to implement the ILO Strategic Compliance Planning (SCP) model, which has provided the inspectorate with a methodology to achieve compliance outcomes, even with limited resources. The Government further indicates that, during the reporting period, the labour inspectorate faced other major challenges that influenced its performance, including the impossibility of holding training for workers and employers due to limited resources and a lack of transport in seven of the ten districts. The Committee also notes the list of obstacles and constraints submitted by the Government, which highlights, inter alia, a lack of cooperation between ministries, deficiencies regarding the training of inspectors and a lack of measuring tools. The Committee notes the proposal of the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Employment to provide for an increase in the number of labour inspectors and the establishment of a separate inspection unit at the Ministry, and the information that there are three district labour officers (DLOs) (all women), 27 labour and occupational safety and health (OSH) inspectors (20 women and seven men) and three labour officers (all women) who perform similar duties to those of labour inspectors in the ten districts of Lesotho. The Committee urges the Government to take concrete measures to allocate the financial resources necessary to meet the most urgent priorities for the improved functioning of the labour inspection system and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour and OSH inspectors, the number of sanctioned posts, and any recruitment of new inspectors. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in addressing the issues concerning the efficiency of the labour inspection system.

Articles 6, 7(1) and (2). Recruitment and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the DLOs are on grade G salary scale and report directly to the inspections manager, who is on grade I salary scale. The Government indicates that, during the April 2022 to March 2023 period, there were only three DLOs officially appointed to oversee and supervise district labour office activities. However, when there is no DLO officially appointed, the labour inspector with the highest educational qualification and experience performs the duties of a labour inspector, combined with duties of a DLO. The Government also provides information on the salary grades of other labour and OSH inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that challenges include low staff morale and corrupt activities by labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the specific criteria and methods for selecting candidates for the profession and to indicate if the compulsory placement of labour inspectors still takes place. It also requests the Government to provide information on the conditions of service of labour inspectors and, in particular, detailed information on wages and career prospects as compared to other types of public officials performing similar duties (for example, tax inspectors and the police). The Committee requests the Government to indicate any measures adopted in order to address the challenges identified, including with specific reference to the corrupt activities of labour inspectors.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes the statistical information included in the Government's report, including information on the number of inspectors, the number of labour and OSH inspections carried out in the 2022–23 period, and the number of accidents and dangerous occurrences during the same period. The Government refers to the inadequate reporting system on occupational accidents and to the limited number of occupational health practitioners to determine the link between exposure and occupational diseases. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the development of a computerized labour inspectorate, also in the framework of the implementation of the SCP model. It also requests the Government to provide information on the publication of the labour inspection annual report, in accordance with Article 20(1) of the Convention, and on the inclusion in such report of all the information required by Article 21, including on statistics of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein (Article 21(c)), statistics of violations and penalties imposed (Article 21(e)); and statistics on occupational diseases (Article 21(g)).

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Articles 14, 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 19, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Annual report on labour inspection activities. Notification of occupational accidents and diseases to the labour inspection services. In reply to the Committee's previous request, the Government expresses its commitment to submit annual labour inspection reports as required by the Conventions and indicates that the Ministry is in the process of developing a Labour Market Information System which will assist in information management. While taking note of this information, the Committee notes that no annual labour inspection report has been received. The Committee notes that the Government provides statistics on the activities conducted by occupational safety and health inspectors such as number of inspection visits and number of occupational accidents. With regard to measures taken to improve the notification of cases of occupational diseases to the labour inspectorate, the Government indicates that it aims to continue to raise awareness through capacity building as well as during labour inspections with regard to the requirement of notification of cases of occupational diseases to the labour inspectorate. However, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information with regard to the number of occupational diseases reported. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the labour inspection report is published and transmitted to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 of Convention No. 81 and Article 26 of Convention No. 129 and that such report contains information on all the subjects listed in Article 21 (a)–(g) of Convention No. 81 and Article 27 (a)–(g) of Convention No. 129. Noting the lack of information with regard to occupational diseases, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to improve the notification of cases of occupational diseases to the labour inspectorate, in accordance with Articles 14 of Convention No. 81 and 19 of Convention No. 129 and to provide the relevant statistics in the labour inspection report.

Issues specifically concerning labour inspection in agriculture.

Articles 3 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection system in agriculture. Inspection visits. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that although a significant proportion of workers are engaged in the agricultural sector, there are no reliable statistics on the number of inspections carried out in agriculture and that in the recent past, there had been no violations detected and no penalties imposed. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide updated information on the matter. The Committee also recalls that under its 2022 comments on the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), on the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184) and on the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), it noted the observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations, received in 2021 and 2022, according to which a number of women working in tea plantations and macadamia nuts orchards have been subjected to gender-based violence, including rape and sexual harassment. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to strengthen the labour inspection system in agriculture and ensure that inspections take place in the agricultural sector as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions, and to report in detail on the results of such inspections including the number and nature of violations found and any sanctions imposed.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Article 3(1)(a) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection activities with regard to foreign workers and the protection of foreign workers in an irregular situation. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, due to the lack of a developed analytical data center of the State Labour Inspectorate, it is unable to provide information on the violation of labour rights of foreign workers. It also notes that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the primary functions of labour inspectors as defined in Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors, which is to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on the action taken by the State Labour Inspectorate to ensure: (i) the enforcement of the rights of foreign workers found in an irregular situation, such as the payment of outstanding wages, annual leave and social security benefits; and (ii) improved data on the recovery of wage and social security credits specific to foreign workers without a residence permit.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the All Pakistan Federation of Trade Unions (APFTU), received on 31 August 2023. The Committee also notes the Government's reply, received on 3 October 2023, in which it indicates that the points raised by the APFTU have been addressed in the Government's report.

Articles 3, 4(2), 10 and 16 of the Convention. Effective organization of the labour inspection services and the supervision and control by central labour inspection authorities at the provincial levels. Number of labour inspectors and number and thoroughness of labour inspections. Additional duties of the labour inspectorate. In reply to the Committee's previous request, the Government provides in its report, the organizational charts of the labour inspection services in Punjab, Sindh and Balochistan. With regards to measures taken to strengthen the authorities responsible for labour inspection, the Committee takes note of a series of reported initiatives, aiming inter alia to increase staff. In Balochistan, the Department of Labour envisages developing a new strategy of setting targets for the labour inspectors in the field with specific functions, after the envisioned promulgation of new labour laws. In Khyber Pakhtunkhwa (KPK), the Department of Labour is working on the recruitment process to fill vacant posts, having already approved the creation of seven new offices for tribal districts with a total strength of 70 staff, and having sanctioned 63 posts of various cadres for the establishment of 4 new offices in the settled districts of the province. Furthermore, the Department of Labour is implementing a scheme aiming to ensure better service delivery. In this regard, the Committee notes that detailed information is provided in the annual labour inspection reports for 2019, 2020 and 2021 on notified posts for labour inspectors (both occupied and vacant) for all provincial Departments of Labour and Departments of Mines, as well as on the number of conducted inspections, and the update provided by the Government for the year 2022. The Committee notes that KPK and Balochistan provinces saw an overall increase in the number of occupied posts of labour inspectors (in KPK from 70 labour inspectors and 16 mine inspectors in 2019 to 78 labour inspectors and 17 mine inspectors in 2021 and in Balochistan from 59 labour inspectors and 25 mine inspectors in 2019 to 86 labour inspectors and 28 mine inspectors in 2022). Punjab province reported virtually no change during this period: from 225 labour inspectors and 13 mine inspectors in 2019 to 225 labour inspectors and 14 mine inspectors in 2021. In 2022, according to Government's indications, the number of inspectors remained stable for Punjab and KPK, while in Balochistan there has been a decrease to 75 labour inspectors and 38 vacant positions with recruitment process underway for 9 of them. In Sindh there has been a decrease from 118 labour inspectors and 26 mine inspectors in 2019 to 105 labour inspectors and 23 mine inspectors in 2021. The Government indicates that efforts are underway to fill 107 vacant positions in Sindh. The Committee notes that according to the 2021 labour inspection report, in the Islamabad Capital Territory there was no labour inspector, while the Government's report indicates that 9 inspectors' posts are notified without clarifying if these posts are occupied or vacant. The Committee notes that in its observations, the APFTU expresses concern over the dire shortage of labour inspectors in the country, with only 517 officials overseeing the safety and well-being of millions of workers engaged in various sectors, including industry, agriculture, and commerce. The Committee requests the Government to provide an organizational chart of the labour inspection services in KPK and the Islamabad Capital Territory. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken to strengthen the authorities responsible for labour inspection in the Islamabad Capital Territory and all provinces, and to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors in each province (as well as vacant positions) and labour inspections performed in each province. Noting the serious challenges that confront the national system of labour inspection, the Committee urges the Government to continue to pursue its efforts to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, including by filling the vacant positions in each province, and to provide information on relevant measures taken or envisaged. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any additional duties performed by the provincial labour inspectorates (such as registration of trade unions and conciliation of labour disputes) and to indicate the amount of time spent on these tasks.

Article 12. Free access of labour inspectors to workplaces. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that labour inspectors may enter workplaces freely and without previous notice in all provinces. In this respect, the Committee has been noting for several years that section 19 of the 2017 Sindh Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act restricts the conduct of inspection visits to "any reasonable time" (and only permits entry "at any time" in situations that are or may be dangerous). It also has noted that the 2019 Punjab OSH Act did not contain any provisions related to the power of labour inspectors to freely enter workplaces liable to inspection without prior notice. The Committee also noted that the provisions on the powers of inspectors in the Factories Act of 1934, the Sindh Factory Act of 2015 and the KPK Factories Act of 2013, although providing that inspectors may enter establishments as they think fit, do not specifically refer to entry without prior notice (section 11 of the Factories Act of 1934, section 12 of the KPK Factories Act and section 13 of Sindh Factories Act). The same applies for section 11 of the new Balochistan Factories Act, 2021. Observing these limitations or silences in a broad range of legislative provisions, the Committee once again recalls that according to Article 12 of the Convention, labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. With regards to information on the application in practice, the Committee notes with interest the report from KPK that in 2022, 70,644 inspections were carried out and they were all unannounced. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors in all provinces are empowered in law and practice to enter any workplace liable to inspection freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night, as provided for in Article 12(1) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any rules (or legislation) adopted that impact on the exercise of the powers of inspectors referred to in section 11 of the Factories Act of 1934, section 12 of the KPK Factories Act, section 13 of the Sindh Factories Act, and section 11 of the Balochistan Factories Act, 2021. It also requests the Government to provide information on the exercise of this right in practice in all provinces, indicating the number of inspections conducted with and without prior notice.

Article 14. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases. The Committee notes the information in the 2019, 2020 and 2021 labour inspection reports concerning the number of accidents and diseases notified to the Departments of Labour and the Departments of Mines in all provinces. It notes that the total number of accidents notified in all provinces sharply increased from 351 in 2019 to 1303 in 2021. The Committee notes in particular that in the province of Punjab the number of reported accidents to the Department of Labour increased from 12 in 2019 to 981 in 2021. With regards to occupational diseases, according to the 2019 labour inspection report, no occupational disease was reported in the provinces of Punjab, KPK, Balochistan and the Islamabad Capital Territory, while the Department of Labour in Sindh reported 112 cases. According to the 2020 labour inspection report, no occupational disease was reported in the Provinces of Punjab, KPK, Balochistan, while the Department of Labour Sindh reported again 112 cases of occupational diseases. According to the 2021 labour inspection report, no occupational disease was reported in Punjab, Sindh, KPK and Balochistan. Concerning measures taken to improve the notification of occupational accidents in all provinces, the Committee notes that the online accident reporting mechanism linked with Punjab Employees' Social Security Institution has been established on a web portal where the statistics with regard to accidents are collected. Furthermore, the Labour Department of KPK aims to continue improving the reporting mechanism through intra and inter departmental cooperation which will allow for consolidation of the number of occupational accidents and diseases notified to all Departments. As far as formulation of rules under relevant laws to improve reporting of fatal and non-fatal accidents is concerned, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the adoption of such laws is underway in KPK. In its observations, the APFTU emphasizes that workers employed in coal mines in Balochistan continue to face a high incidence of tragic accidents and that the country is among those with the highest rates of large accidents in the transport industry. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of industrial accidents and to provide information on the reason for the increase in the number of notified accidents. Noting that there is no available information on occupational diseases for all provinces, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the number of occupational diseases notified in each province. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the reason why no diseases were reported in most of the provinces. The Committee requests once again that the Government take measures to improve the notification of occupational accidents in all provinces, to ensure the notification of both fatal and non-fatal accidents, and to improve the detection and identification of cases of occupational diseases as well as their notification to the labour inspectorate. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including on any rules or regulations adopted.

Article 18. Obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. Following the Committee's previous comment with regard to data on the obstruction of labour inspectors, the Government indicates that inspectors in Balochistan, Punjab, and the Islamabad Capital Territory are performing their duties freely, and no incidents of obstruction during inspections have been reported. In KPK, the Department of Labour aims to modify inspection reports to include an obstruction indicator in the future. Noting the Government's indication that in Punjab, Balochistan and the Islamabad Capital Territory no cases have yet been reported related to any obstruction of labour inspectors in their duties, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the possible reasons for this lack of reporting, including whether it is related to a lack of sufficiently detailed inquiry, or to inspectors' reluctance to initiate such reports. It requests the Government to provide information on any cases reported in all other provinces, including the outcome of the cases and the specific penalties applied (including the amount of fines imposed). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made by the Department of Labour of KPK with regards to its efforts to include obstruction prosecution data in monthly progress reports.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Ibero-American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT), received on 31 August and 5 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 6 and 7 of the Convention. Status, conditions of service and recruitment of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that: (i) pursuant to Act No. 5554 of 2016 approving the National General Budget for 2016, the Public Service Secretariat established a policy to improve job security for contract staff in the public service with a minimum of four years of uninterrupted service (section 51); and (ii) in December 2021, the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) launched the job security improvement process whereby contract staff were appointed as MTESS officials.

It further notes the allegation by the CIIT in its observations that: (i) labour inspectors recruited in 2015 were recruited through a merit-based competition (a procedure laid down in section 8 of Decree No. 3857 of 2015) and not a competitive selection process for permanent positions; (ii) after passing the merit-based competition in 2015, labour inspectors were employed on annual service contracts and, therefore, have the status of self-employed workers providing civil or commercial services for the MTESS; (iii) the process to improve job security for labour inspection staff has not been completed; of the 19 inspectors still performing functions, only 8 have job stability, while the remaining 11 inspectors continue to work on annual contracts; and (iv) the salaries of inspectors have not been increased since 2015, which has caused a loss in their purchasing power and discouraged inspection staff from remaining in post. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors secure them stability of employment, including the measures adopted to ensure that all labour inspectors are appointed on a permanent basis as public officials, in accordance with Article 6. In this respect, it requests the Government to indicate the contractual arrangements for currently employed labour inspectors. Furthermore, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the salary and benefits structure applicable to labour inspectors in relation to the salary and benefits structure of public servants who perform similar functions, such as tax inspectors or the police.

Articles 10 and 11. Number of labour inspectors. Material conditions of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the possibility of increasing the number of labour inspectors depends upon the budget allocated to the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS) under the overall national budget. The Government adds that increasing the number of inspectors entails not only the cost of their salaries, but also the associated costs of training, equipment and means of transport necessary for the performance of their duties.

The Committee also notes the allegation of the CIIT that: (i) of the 30 inspectors recruited in 2015 only 19 remain in post, of whom 13 are assigned to the capital, Asunción, three to the department of Alto Paraná, one each to the departments of Cordillera, Paraguarí and Ñeembucú and none to the remaining 12 departments; and (ii) the labour inspection services have no vehicles for the performance of their duties. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the number of serving labour inspectors is sufficient to ensure the efficient functioning of the inspection services, and to provide labour inspectors with suitably equipped offices and the means of transport necessary for the performance of their duties. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to this end, including the number of labour inspectors assigned to each of the departments, as well as the number of offices and means of transport available to inspectors for the performance of their duties.

Articles 12(1)(a), (c)(ii), 16 and 18. Restrictions on the initiative of labour inspectors freely to enter workplaces liable to inspection. Limitations on carrying out labour inspections. The Committee notes with concern that the necessary steps have not been taken to amend MTESS Resolutions Nos 47 of 2016 and 56 of 2017, which restrict the powers of labour inspectors and the conduct of inspections, relating to inspection procedure to ensure compliance with labour, social security and safety and health standards.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on: (i) the adoption of MTESS Resolution No. 217 of 2021 establishing the procedure for monitoring and administrative investigation in relation to reported occurrences of child labour; (ii) in accordance with clause 2 of the aforementioned Resolution, labour inspectors are empowered to enter freely and without prior notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection if they have a specific monitoring warrant; (iii) pursuant to sections 3 and 4 of MTESS Resolution No. 29 of 2023, inspection actions, including the requirement to present the mandatory labour-related documents and inspection visits, may only be undertaken if authorized by an inspection order issued by the highest MTESS authority.

With reference to its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee once again urges the Government to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the Convention. Specifically, it requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors with proper credentials may: (i) enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, without requiring prior authorization from a higher authority (Article 12(1)(a)); and (ii) undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions (Article 16).

In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress of the draft amendment to Resolutions Nos 47 of 2016 and 56 of 2017, as well as the amendment to Resolutions Nos 217 of 2021 and 29 of 2023. It also requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of inspection visits undertaken without previous notice by labour inspectors, as well as statistics on the number of penalties actually applied.

Lastly, the Committee notes that in its observations, the CIIT expresses its concern at the announcement made by the new Government, through MTESS Resolution No. 29 of 2023, that labour inspections would be suspended for an indefinite period. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the failure of the Government to lift the limitations, established in the MTESS Resolutions Nos 47 of 2016 and 56 of 2017, to the powers of inspectors to enter freely and without prior notice any place liable to inspection and to the frequency and thoroughness of labour inspections. The Committee further notes with concern that, with the adoption of the MTESS Resolution No. 29 of 2023, inspection actions have been further restricted by the need to obtain an inspection order issued by the highest MTESS authority. In addition, the Committee notes with deep concern the persistent issues regarding the insufficient number of labour inspectors and material means assigned to the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes in particular the indications of the CIIT that inspectors are assigned only to four departments and to the capital district, while the remaining 12 departments have no assigned inspectors. The Committee therefore considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 109 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 112th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 1 September 2023.

Articles 6 and 15(a) of the Convention. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Regarding the process to transfer public bodies and servants to the civil service system, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the National Labour Inspection Authority (SUNAFIL) is at the second stage, in which it has to draft a proposal for the reorganization of its human resources and that, therefore, inspectors are still under the private sector regime by virtue of Legislative Decree No. 728. In this regard, the Committee notes the CATP's indication in its report that: (i) the transition of labour inspectors to a different labour system, as stipulated by the Civil Service Act (No. 30057) would lead to a reduction of their entitlements; (ii) this new system only offers a veneer of job stability, as it makes job retention conditional on a series of evaluations; (iii) considering the work overload of inspection personnel and their lack of training, the change of system would mean that they would be exposed to the risk of their assessments not being validated, which would serve as a reason for their dismissal; (iv) it was concerning that, in 2020, the public competition for around 100 auxiliary inspectors was declared unsuccessful due to negligence by SUNAFIL and that, since then, they have been working under a provisional status; and (v) if the positions of the inspectors were not confirmed and they were dismissed, issues may arise with regard to the legal certainty of SUNAFIL's decisions, given that the decisions taken by those inspectors are subject to appeal due to their status. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. Having noted concerns about the status and service conditions of inspectors over a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) swiftly complete the process to transfer labour inspectors to the civil service system; (ii) ensure that the process provides for conditions of service that guarantee stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences; (iii) provide information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact that the integration of the labour inspectorate into the new civil service system has on the conditions of service, salary scales, and career prospects of staff of regional governments with inspections functions, as well as specifically in comparison with categories of public servants who carry out similar functions in other government services, such as tax inspectors or police officers.

Articles 12(1)(a) and (c), and 15(c). Scope of the right of free entry of labour inspectors into workplaces liable to inspection. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with section 10 of the General Labour Inspection Act, the activities of the labour inspectorate may also derive from an internal decision of the inspection system. In this respect, the Committee notes that the CATP regrets that, despite the amendments to the General Inspection Act, the general rule continues to be that labour inspectors may only act on the basis of an inspection order issued by the management bodies, and within the limits of that order, in a manner such that the possibility for labour inspectors to act on their own initiative is strictly limited to exceptional cases and is subject to formalities that prevent or discourage it. Noting with regret that no measures have been adopted to amend the General Labour Inspection Act, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure, in law and practice, the right of labour inspectors to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection, and that inspections are not subject to an order issued by a higher authority.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee takes note of the extensive observations from the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union "Solidarność" (Solidarność) on Conventions Nos 81 and 129, received on 7 September 2023. The Committee also notes the response of the Government to those observations, received on 16 November 2023.

Articles 2(1), 5(a), 6, 12(1) and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 4, 6, 12, 16(1) and 21 of Convention No. 129. Coverage of workplaces by labour inspection. Restrictions on collaboration between labour inspection officials and other public institutions and on inspectors entering workplaces freely. Following its previous comments regarding the restrictions on the powers of labour inspectors set out in the Entrepreneurs Law, the Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that, in accordance with the Constitution, ILO Conventions and leges speciales such as the Act on the State Labour Inspection, take precedence over the Entrepreneurs Law. As regards joint inspections with other control authorities, including the State Sanitary Inspection and Road Transport Inspectorate, the Committee notes the Government's indication that such inspections are not prohibited under the Entrepreneurs Law, and notes the statistics provided on such joint inspections with the National Labour Inspectorate (NLI). The Committee also notes section 45(1) of the Entrepreneurs Law, which provides that the economic activity of entrepreneurs is controlled in accordance with the principles specified in this Law, unless the principles and procedure for controls result from ratified international agreements.

The Committee nevertheless notes the observations of Solidarność, indicating that the lex specialis argument has not been accepted in national courts. In response, the Government reiterates its position that section 24 of the Act on the State Labour Inspection allows labour inspectors to carry out, without notice and at any time of day or night, inspections of compliance with the provisions of labour law. The Government further states that the court decision at issue simply limits the labour inspectorate's ability to conduct a second inspection on the same matter in a given period of time, which, in the Government's view, helps to strike a balance between the effectiveness of inspection authorities and ensuring minimum procedural guarantees for controlled entities. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it has issued a negative opinion on the NLI's proposals to amend the Entrepreneurs Law and that it does not recognize an exclusion of NLI inspections from the regime of chapter 5 of the Entrepreneurs Law as justified. While taking due note of the Government's indications, the Committee observes that provisions in national legislation that contradict the requirements of ratified Conventions may pose difficulties for legal certainty, from the standpoint of specific entrepreneurs as well as workers seeking protection through fully authoritative labour inspection. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 48 and 51 of the Entrepreneurs Law, to provide without qualification that labour inspectors with proper credentials are empowered to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection, in accordance with Article 12(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1) of Convention No. 129.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors, and labour inspection activities for the protection of migrant workers in an irregular situation. Following its previous comments on this issue, the Committee notes the Government's indication that all the district regional labour inspectorates have specialised sections in charge of performing duties related to the control of employment legality. The Government nevertheless indicates that the NLI is required to cooperate with other competent authorities when controlling the legality of employment, including with the Border Guard and the police. In particular, the Committee notes with concern the Government's statement that, when a migrant worker is unable to show their work permit, the NLI is obligated to report it immediately to the Border Guard, and that further control activities may be conducted together with Border Guard officers. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that such controls also focus on enforcing the migrant workers' rights, including in the field of wages and social security. The Committee nevertheless recalls that, as emphasized in its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 78, any function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, and that this objective can only be met if the workers covered are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the additional functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors, which is to provide for the protection of workers in accordance with Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed statistics on cases in which migrant workers in an irregular situation have been granted their due rights (including the payment of outstanding wages and social security benefits and orders for establishing an employment contract) or have had their situation regularized following an inspection visit.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 12, 22 and 23 of Convention No. 129. Sanctions and effective enforcement. Cooperation between the inspection services and the judiciary. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government regarding notifications to the prosecutor's office for suspected offences. The Government indicates that between 2020–22, the number of notifications increased from 507 in 2020 to 665 in 2022, the number of investigations opened rose from 133 in 2020 to 150 in 2022 and the number of indictments sent to courts also increased from 45 in 2020 to 88 in 2022. However, the statistics also indicate that the number of investigations refused rose from 47 in 2020 to 67 in 2022 and those discontinued rose from 124 in 2020 to 189 in 2022. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the most frequent causes for refusing an investigation remain the lack of statutory grounds and insufficient data or evidence. The Government further indicates that some situations where law enforcement agencies consider evidence to be insufficient, such as instances where it cannot be proven that the controlled entity received the labour inspectorate's summons, pose problems for labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Government also indicates that while 76 indictments were sent to court in 2021 and 88 indictments in 2022, there were a total of 3 custodial sentences imposed in those two years. Further, the Government reports that the amount of fines imposed in 2021 totalled 16,500 Polish zloty (US$4,099) and in 2022 totalled 20,300 zloty (US$5,043). The Committee also notes the observations of Solidarność, which take the view that legal measures and sanctions applied by labour inspectors are insufficient to ensure a lasting improvement in OSH in the construction and manufacturing sectors. The Committee requests that the Government indicate the measures taken to further improve collaboration between the prosecutor's office and the NLI. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of notifications made to the public prosecutor's office, the number of such notifications which resulted in proceedings, and the results of such proceedings. In addition, the Committee requests that the Government provide information on the apparently very low number of sentences and the small amount of fines imposed, and on measures taken or envisaged to increase sanctions for OSH violations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the decision of the tripartite Committee set up to examine the representation submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SIT) alleging non-observance by Portugal of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), and the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN) communicated with the Government's reports on the application of Conventions No. 81 and 129 and the reply of the Government.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that Decree Law No. 112 of 2001 establishing the career prospects (sections 3, 4, 5 and 6) and salary structure of labour inspectors (section 3(2) and its annex) has not yet been amended to ensure that the remuneration levels and career prospects of labour inspectors correspond to those of other officials with similar functions. It also notes that the Government does not provide information on the employment stability of labour inspectors. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the employment stability of labour inspectors. Furthermore, it requests the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the conditions of service of labour inspectors, including any measures taken to ensure that their remuneration levels and career prospects correspond to those of other officials exercising similar functions. In addition, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the salary and benefit structure of labour inspectors in comparison with those of other public officials performing similar functions (such as tax inspectors or police officers).

Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129. Adequate frequency and thoroughness of inspections to secure compliance. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the labour inspection activities carried out from 2013 to 2021, including an increase in the number of labour inspection visits carried out and workers covered in 2021. It notes the number of violations identified, warnings issued and workplace suspensions ordered during this period. It also notes that the Government did not provide information on the number of inspections planned in relation to the number of inspections that are reactive to complaints or industrial accidents.

The Committee further recalls the previous observations of the General Workers' Union and Confederation of Trade and Services of Portugal, which alleged that the Working Conditions Authority (ACT) focuses on prevention to the detriment of inspections and the application of sanctions, and observes that the Government did not provide any comments in response to these observations.

Moreover, the Committee notes that the CGTP-IN alleges that, although there was an increase in inspection visits in 2021, the number of inspections carried out remains insufficient, resulting in serious consequences for workers. In this regard, the Government states that increasing the overall number of inspection visits, with a view to promoting improved working conditions, has been one of the strategic objectives defined for planning ACT's intervention, which is reflected in a greater number of inspections carried out. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspections carried out and workers covered. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of planned inspections and the number of inspections in response to complaints or accidents, as well as on the nature and number of violations identified and the measures and sanctions imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1973)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1975)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. 1. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors related to immigration. The Committee previously noted that, in accordance with the Regulation on the organization and functioning of the labour inspectorate (approved by Government Decision No. 488/2017), labour inspectors are entrusted with supervising the employment of migrant workers (section 12(1)B(i)).

The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to Ordinance No. 25/2014 which provides that on the employment and secondment of foreigners, employers who employ migrant workers without a work permit shall pay the overdue remuneration to the workers concerned, as well as all relevant taxes, fees and social security contributions as if the workers concerned had the appropriate permit, including to those who have returned to their home country (section 38(1) and (2)). Moreover, employers bear liability, including joint and several liability, to any subcontractors for overdue wages for the work performed by migrant workers in an irregular situation (section 38(4)). The Committee also notes that a migrant worker found to be carrying out work without a permit shall be informed in writing in both Romanian and English, by the General Inspectorate for Immigration or, as the case maybe, by labour inspectors of the territorial labour inspectorates, regarding their rights to the recovery of outstanding remuneration, before the execution of a possible obligation to return. The Committee further notes that, according to the information of the 2019 annual report on labour inspection activities (Annual Report), 1,302 controls were carried out regarding compliance with relevant provisions of Ordinance No. 25/2014, of which 667 were conducted jointly with the General Inspectorate for Immigration; 69 sanctions were applied, including 55 orders of fines worth 1,928,000 Romanian lei (RON) (US$464,500) and 14 warnings; and 135 measures were ordered to remedy the non-conformities found.

The Committee observes that, although Ordinance No. 25/2014 provides for the reinstatement of the statutory rights of migrant workers in an irregular situation, the relevant information in the 2019 Annual Report does not indicate how these provisions are applied by the labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with labour inspectors' primary duties as set forth in Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. Noting the information provided in the annual report on the application of Ordinance No. 25/2014, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on specific measures undertaken by the inspectorate to ensure the enforcement of the rights of migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases in which these workers have been granted their due rights, such as the payment of outstanding wages or social security benefits, disaggregated based on controls carried out by the labour inspectorate alone and controls conducted jointly with the General Inspectorate for Immigration. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases in which migrant workers were deported following the control activities of labour inspectors, again disaggregated based on controls carried out by the labour inspectorate alone and controls conducted jointly with the General Inspectorate for Immigration.

2. Control of undeclared work. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 12(1)B of the Regulation on the organization and functioning of the labour inspectorate, the labour inspectorate identifies cases of undeclared work, and notifies, as required, the criminal investigation bodies (clause b); ascertains whether the activity being performed constitutes a labour relationship but performed on the basis of another type of contract (clause d); and orders the conclusion of individual employment contracts and the registration of workers concerned in the general register as employees (clause e). The Committee also notes that, according to the information in the 2019 Annual Report, 67,632 controls were performed in this regard and 8,551 persons were found engaged in undeclared work, including 5,942 persons performing work without an employment contract. Moreover, 4,793 measures were ordered to correct the non-conformities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the definition of undeclared work in national legislation, as well as information on specific measures ordered to correct the non-conformities. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the work of the labour inspectorate with respect to undeclared work, including the number of persons found engaged in undeclared work, the number of cases in which the labour inspectorate orders the conclusion of an employment contract, as well as the action taken by the inspectorate with respect to those workers where no employment contract is subsequently concluded.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Rwanda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Conciliation. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it adopted Law No. 66/2018 of 30/08/2018 regulating labour in Rwanda (the Labour Code), which revises Law No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 (the 2009 Labour Code). The Committee notes in particular that sections 102 and 103 of the Labour Code provide that labour inspectors are responsible for mediating individual and collective labour disputes. In addition, the Government indicates that section 3 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020 relating to labour inspection sets out the responsibilities of the labour inspectorate as including the conciliation of labour disputes. In this regard, the Committee notes that sections 10 to 16 of the Order provide for the procedure to be followed for the settlement of labour disputes when mediated by labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the Government did not make use of the review of the Labour Code undertaken in 2018 to bring its legislation in line with the requirements of Article 3(2) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the time spent by inspectors on conciliation may be detrimental to the performance of their primary duties, as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention, particularly in a context where resources are limited. Further, the Committee draws the Government's attention in this regard to the guidance provided in Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), stating that the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes. The Committee therefore asks the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to discharge labour inspectors of any mediation functions regarding individual and collective labour disputes; (ii) amend the legal framework to this effect, in particular sections 102 and 103 of the Labour Code and sections 3 and 10 to 16 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020; and (iii) keep the Office informed of the progress made in this respect.

Article 12(1)(a). Powers of labour inspectors to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes that section 6(2)(1) of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020 relating to labour inspection provides that, upon presentation of identification, a labour inspector can enter an enterprise of his or her jurisdiction during working hours, without notice for inspection purpose. The Committee notes that the new Ministerial Order continues to limit the power of labour inspectors to conduct inspection visits to the working hours of the undertaking. The Committee notes that, for many years, it has been requesting the Government to bring the provisions of national legislation in line with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. It recalls once again that labour inspectors should be empowered to enter workplaces liable to inspection at any hours of the day and night. In this regard the Committee once again refers to paragraph 270 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, which refers, for example, to the appropriate timing of visits necessary to carry out technical inspections when machinery or production processes are stopped, or to check for abusive night conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime. The Committee therefore urges the Government to bring its legislation in line with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention so as to ensure that the powers of entry of labour inspectors are extended to any hour of the day or night regardless of the working hours of the workplaces liable to inspection.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1998)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2010)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

In order to provide a comprehensive view of issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Articles 3(2), 10, 16, 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6(3), 14, 21, 22 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Functions assigned to labour inspectors. Number of inspectors, number of inspection visits and enforcement. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there are currently six officers who act as labour inspectors (five in 2020), and that five positions for occupational safety and health (OSH) inspectors remain vacant. The Government indicates that 23 inspection visits have been conducted, including in the agricultural sector, and that five violations were detected. Accordingly, improvement notices were issued for underpaying workers, non-payments of overtime, and absence of fire extinguishers on the premises. With regard to functions carried out by labour inspectors, the Committee notes the Government's indication that 95 percent of labour inspectors' time is spent performing their main functions, which are to investigate individual complaints, ensure that labour laws are adhered to and inspect workplaces to ensure the workplace is conducive for work. The Committee also notes that according to the job descriptions provided by the Government, labour officers and senior labour officers are engaged in some conciliation function in relation to individual complaints and that approximately 50 percent of the activities performed by senior labour officers relate to employment and labour market research. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to pursue its efforts to ensure that the labour inspection services have at their disposal an adequate number of labour inspectors, including OSH inspectors, to enable them to effectively carry out their duties and that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary. In this respect, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) the number of labour inspectors (including OSH inspectors), indicating the number of inspectors recruited as labour officers and as senior labour officers; (ii) the number of inspection visits undertaken each year, specifying the number of inspections in the agricultural sector; and (iii) the results of those inspections, such as the number of violations detected, and penalties imposed. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure the filling of the vacant positions of OSH inspectors, and to indicate whether the compensation and other terms and conditions of employment for OSH inspectors are equivalent or comparable to those for labour inspectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

San Marino

Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160) (ratification: 1988)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 7 and 8. Employment, underemployment and underemployment statistics. Statistics of the structure and distribution of the economically active population. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government in response to its previous comments, initially made in 2012. It notes that the statistical data on the labour force (previously referred to as the "economically active" population), employment, unemployment and other indicators of labour underutilization have been communicated to ILOSTAT. The latest data available is from 2019 and the official estimates are provided by the San Marino Office of economic planning, data processing and statistics. The Committee nevertheless notes that the data provided is derived from administrative data and not from labour force surveys (LFS), as no LFS have to date been carried out in San Marino. In this context, the Committee recalls that pursuant to the latest standards, including the International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) Resolution concerning statistics of work, employment and labour underutilization (resolution I), adopted by the 19th ICLS in October 2013, such statistical data should be captured through household surveys. In relation to Article 8, the Government notes that the statistics on the labour force on administrative records of the Office of Active Labour Policies and the Office of Economic Activities are not derived from the population census. The data is collected by the Office of Statistics on a monthly basis. The Committee notes that the Government provides definitions of employment and unemployment, and information on the methodology used for compiling the data in accordance with Articles 7 and 8. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical data to the Office related to the labour force, employment, unemployment and underemployment, and to provide information on measures taken to undertake a household survey, as contemplated under the Convention. In this respect, the Committee reminds the Government may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office, should it so wish. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the implementation of the Resolution concerning statistics of work, employment and labour underutilization (resolution I), adopted by the 19th ICLS in October 2013.

Articles 9 and 10. Current statistics of average earnings and hours of work. Statistics of time rates of wages and normal hours of work. Statistics of wage structure and distribution. The Committee notes the Government's indication that data under Articles 9 and 10 are not currently compiled, with the exception of data under Article 9(1). The Government adds that, while annual data on average earnings is available by economic activity, it is not yet broken down by sex. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the methodologies used to compile the statistics. The Government indicates that data on hours actually worked is not available but that, based on the availability of the administrative records, the Office of Statistics may be able to provide annual statistics of average earnings and hours actually worked, broken down by sex, in the near future. Noting that the annual statistics of average earnings and hours actually worked are not yet disaggregated by sex, but that the Government may be in a position to provide this information in the near future, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to this end and keep the ILO informed of any future developments in this field. In addition, noting that the Government's report provides no information in response to its previous point concerning the application of Article 9(2), the Committee reiterates its request that the Government ensure that statistics covered by these provisions are regularly transmitted to the Committee and to keep it informed of any progress made in this regard. In addition, noting that the Government's report provides no information in response to its previous comment on the application of Article 10, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to give effect to this provision and to keep it informed of any developments in this field.

Article 11. Statistics of labour cost. In response to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the Office of Statistics publishes the statistics of labour cost on an annual basis on its website. The Government points out that in relation to the manufacturing sector, the four main groups are currently included; however, it is not currently possible to provide these statistics for a greater number of groups. The methodologies established for producing the statistics on average cost and employee services are published on the National Summary Data Page. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide statistical data of labour cost to the Office, as well as other methodological information.

Article 12. Consumer price indices. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the methodology utilized to collect information on consumer price indices (CPI), which are calculated taking families and workers as references. CPI data are collected monthly through the website of the Office for Economic Planning, Data Processing and Statistics. The latest CPI data available to the ILO is from 2017. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide updated statistical data and methodological information on consumer price indices to the Office.

Article 13. Statistics of household income and expenditures. The Committee notes that detailed statistics on household expenditures are published regularly by the Office of Economic Planning, Data Processing and Statistics in the annual publication "Survey on consumption and San Marino family lifestyles". The Committee nevertheless notes that no information is available in the cited publication about the sources, concepts, definition and methodology used in collecting and compiling household income and expenditure statistics. The Committee invites the Government to: (i) consult the representative organizations of employers and workers on the concepts, definitions and methodology used (in accordance with Article 3); and (ii) communicate a detailed description of the sources, concepts, definition and methodology used in collecting and compiling household income and expenditure statistics (as required under Article 6).

Article 14. Statistics of occupational injuries. The Government indicates that it collects data on occupational injuries on an administrative basis by the Institute for Social Security and relies on injured workers attending the emergency department of the state hospital. The Office of Statistics publishes data on occupational injuries in the Economic Statistics Report annually. The data come from the Health Authority and are taken from the records of the only emergency department in the country. The Committee notes that the official estimates of the Office of Economic Planning, Data Processing and Statistics, covering all branches of economic activity, last provided data on occupational injuries to the ILO in 2015. In addition, the methodological information available is incomplete, as the concepts and definitions used in the statistics have not been communicated to the ILO Department of Statistics. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide more comprehensive information about the statistical system, with particular reference to the concepts and definitions used for statistics on occupational injuries. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on more detailed statistics as these become available.

Article 15. Statistics of industrial disputes. As no data on strike and lockout (rates of days not worked by economic activity) were provided, the Committee once again invites the Government to communicate this data, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. Powers of investigation of labour inspectors. Further to the Committee's previous comment, the Government maintains that the provisions of section L.197 of the Labour Code, subsection 2 of which provides that labour and social security inspectors shall be empowered to enter premises at night in which it is clear that collective work is being undertaken, are not in contradiction with those of Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. The Government reaffirms that labour inspectors are empowered to enter all establishments liable to inspection. The Committee recalls once again that, in accordance with Article 12(1)(a), labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, and not only workplaces in which it is clear that collective work is being undertaken. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to bring section L.197(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention in order to ensure that labour inspectors are able to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, and not only establishments in which it is clear that collective work is being undertaken.

Article 13(2)(b). Measures with immediate executory force in regard to occupational safety and health.

In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that: (i) it has always demonstrated the will to allow labour and social security inspectors to order such measures without first having to determine whether or not there is a violation of the provisions of the laws and regulations applicable in industrial or commercial workplaces; and (ii) that reforms in this respect are ongoing. The Committee requests the Government to renew its efforts to bring the law and practice as soon as possible into full conformity with Article 13(2)(b) of the Convention, which allows inspectors to impose measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers in all industrial and commercial establishments, without the prior obligation to determine the existence of a violation of the provisions of laws or regulations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Labour law reform. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a new Employment Act No. 15 has been adopted in 2023 (Employment Act 2023), which inter alia provides details on the structure and responsible authority with regards to labour administration and labour law enforcement in Sierra Leone. The Committee notes that at the same time, pending the adoption of a new OSH Act, the Factories Act 1974 which provides for the duties and responsibilities of the Factory Inspectorate is still in force. Furthermore, the Government has provided a copy of the Draft Employment Regulations, which also include references to inspection functions and relevant processes. Taking note of the new legislative developments, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made towards the adoption of the new OSH Act and the Employment Regulations, and to provide copies once adopted.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a number of labour inspectors are assigned duties that do not constitute their primary functions, including supervision of work permits, labour migration, employment services for jobseekers, and industrial relations and labour disputes. The Government indicates that the reform process and the restructuring of the Ministry of Employment, Labour and Social Security have been carried out to ensure that any functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with their primary functions. The Government indicates that this is a work in progress and funding is required for more labour officers to be recruited and trained. While taking note of this information, the Committee notes that the Government does not clarify how the new structure ensures that any additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors do not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. Furthermore, the Government does not provide information on the total number of labour inspectors and the duties assigned to them. The Committee expresses its concerns that the Government take measures, including in the context of the ongoing restructuring of the Ministry, to ensure that any functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with their primary duties, which are related to enforcement of the legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the adoption of such measures, on the total number of labour inspectors and the duties assigned to them.

Articles 6 and 7. Recruitment and independence of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that the basic requirement for the recruitment of labour inspectors is a Diploma or Certificate and that the Ministry of Employment works in partnership with the Human Resources Management Office of the Public Service Commission to put out notices advertising the need for recruitment for labour inspectors. While taking note of this information, the Committee notes with regret that the Government once again does not indicate how it ensures that political affiliation is not one of the factors considered in recruitment. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to ensure that labour inspectors are recruited with sole regard to their qualifications for the performance of their duties, in accordance with Article 7 of the Convention.

Article 7. Training of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that newly recruited inspectors are provided orientation and training on labour inspection, administration and management amongst others. However, it notes the Government's indication that, in general, the training is sporadic due to the lack of resources and that the Government is in the process of sourcing funds to ensure routine training and the development and progressive update of training manuals. Taking due note of the limited resources available, the Committee hopes that the Government will be able to provide information on the content, frequency and duration of the training given to inspectors, as well as the number of participants.

Articles 10 and 11. Resources of the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes once again with concern that the labour inspectorate continues to face severe constraints of human and material resources. The Government indicates that, although efforts have been made for the addition of labour inspectors, there have been no new recruitments since the last report due to lack of funding. The Government indicates that it envisages recruiting new labour inspectors through the Human Resource Management Office after the workforce hearing scheduled for September 2023. The Committee notes that there is no inspection equipment and tools for the conduct of OSH inspections in workplaces. Furthermore, it notes that the vehicles available at the Ministry are accessible only to different Heads of Unit and can be assigned to inspectors when the need arises to carry out their functions and that the Ministry has no vehicles for field services. As a result, the Ministry rarely carries out field services including labour inspections. Taking due note of the continuous difficulties in obtaining sufficient funds, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the labour inspection services have sufficient human resources necessary for their operation. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments with regard to the planned recruitment of new labour inspectors and detailed information on the number of labour inspectors, disaggregated by gender. The Committee requests that the Government provide detailed information and relevant data with regards to material resources allocated to the labour inspectorate (including the budget allocated to the labour inspection services, the number of computers and vehicles available, etc.). Noting that there is no vehicle available for field services, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted or envisaged to strengthen the transport facilities available to inspectors, particularly in regions where public transport facilities are scarce.

Articles 17 and 18. Adequate penalties imposed and effectively enforced. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new Employment Act 2023 incorporates adequate penalties for the breaches of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. At the same time, it notes that, pending the adoption of a new OSH Act, the Factories Act 1974, which established inadequate fines remains in force. Noting this legislative overlap, the Committee requests the Government to clarify which penalties can be imposed by labour inspectors and on what legal basis and to ensure that the new OSH Act establishes adequate penalties for the legal provisions enforceable by inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of violations detected, the number of infringement reports issued, the number of cases brought to the courts, and the penalties subsequently imposed.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodic reports and preparation, publication and transmission of an annual report on the work of the inspection services. The Government indicates that under section 29 of the Employment Act 2023, the Commissioner of Labour is obliged to publish an annual report after submitting it to the Minister of Labour within four months following the end of the financial year. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government on the number of workplaces that have been registered and inspected for 2018–23 but also notes that no annual inspection reports have been prepared or communicated to the ILO for many years. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the labour inspection report is published and transmitted to the ILO, in accordance with Article 20 and that such report contains information on all the subjects listed in Article 21 (a)–(g).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1992)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee takes note of the Government's report and the supplementary information provided in light of the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 338th Session (June 2020).

Legislation. The Committee previously noted the legislative reforms regarding the Labour Inspection Act (LIA) of 2014 and requested the Government to indicate the extent to which labour inspectors are bound by the general principles established under the Inspections Act (IA) as well as how the overlapping or conflicting provisions under the IA and the LIA are applied in practice to the daily work of labour inspectors.

The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to section 3 of the LIA providing that unless otherwise provided by the LIA, the performance of inspection and inspectors shall be subject to the provisions of the IA governing inspection, the provisions governing the general administrative procedure and the provisions of specific regulations governing the supervision of individual inspection services that operate within the inspectorate. The Government states in this respect that inspectors carry out their work pursuant to the LIA, but that for issues not regulated in the LIA, they carry out inspections pursuant to the IA. In this respect, the Committee notes that qualifications of inspectors, the initiation of inspections, additional powers including seizure of documents, inspection records, and entities liable to inspection are covered by the LIA (sections 9–11 and 13–15), while inspection procedures and access to workplaces are regulated by the IA. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government.

Article 3(1)(a), (b) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1)(a), (b) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Additional duties entrusted to labour inspectors related to immigration. The Committee previously noted with concern that labour inspectors can impose fines on migrant workers for the performance of work that violates the Employment, Self-employment and Work of Aliens Act (ESWAA) (sections 51, 60, 61, 63, and 66), and are obliged to inform the police authority when its supervision activities lead to the suspicion of illegal residence of migrant workers (section 44(4)). It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the control duties by the labour inspectorate under the ESWAA do not prejudice the exercise of its primary duty to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers. It also requested information on the manner in which the labour inspectorate ensure the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the rights of migrant workers.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that sanctions for violations of the ESWAA do not affect the protection of labour rights of migrant workers or their right to suitable working conditions. In accordance with section 19(1)-2 of the LIA, inspectors may prohibit the worker concerned from performing work until the correction of the irregularity, if during an inspection they find that the employer has enabled a foreigner or a person without citizenship to work contrary to regulations governing the employment of foreigners. According to the 2019 annual report on inspection activities (Annual Report), the inspectors found 49 infringements in 2019, compared to 29 in 2018. The Government also states that the labour inspectorate imposed sanctions on migrant workers due to such violations in a few cases in 2018 and 2019. The Government further indicates that a migrant worker whose employment contract is determined to be null and void in accordance with section 23 of the Employment Relationship Act (ERA) only enjoys the protection of labour rights if they prove the existence of an employment relationship in court.

The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129, the function of the system of labour inspection is to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties. It also recalls that neither Convention No. 81 nor Convention No. 129 contain any provision suggesting that any worker be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status (paragraph 77, General Survey of 2006, Labour inspection). Referring to paragraph 452 of its General Survey of 2017, Working together to promote a safe and healthy working environment, the Committee further indicates that workers in a vulnerable situation may not be willing to cooperate with the labour inspection services if they fear negative consequences as a result of inspection activities, such as the loss of their job or expulsion from the country. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the duties entrusted to labour inspectors do not interfere with the fundamental objective of securing the protection of workers in accordance with the primary duties set out in Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. It requests the Government to provide further specific information on the number of cases in which sanctions were imposed on migrant workers, the violations concerned and the sanctions imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the labour inspection services ensure the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the rights of migrant workers, in particular those in an irregular situation or without an employment contract, including specific information as to the payment of remunerations and any other benefits owed for the work they performed.

Articles 6 and 10 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 8 and 14 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors and their conditions of service. Stability and independence of labour inspectors. The Committee previously noted the continuous decline in the number of labour inspectors and their heavy workload, as well as issues related to external pressure facing inspectors from both complainants and employers, as documented in the Annual Report for 2017. It requested the Government to take measures to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, and to provide information on measures taken to address the pressure facing labour inspectors.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the number of approved posts at the labour inspectorate increased from 106 in 2017 to 121 in 2019, and that recruitment procedures are under way. According to the 2019 Annual Report, there are 120 employees at the labour inspectorate, including 91 inspectors (up from 81 in 2018) and the number of business entities increased from 215,354 in 2018 to 220,236 in 2019. The Annual Report further states that inspectors, in particular those in charge of monitoring working conditions and employment relationships and social affairs, still face difficulties to promptly process all requests. In 2019, the labour inspectorate received 7,215 complaints, of which about 80 per cent fall into the competence of inspectors monitoring working conditions and employment relationships. Information in the 2019 Annual Report also indicates that the number of these inspectors has increased in recent years in response to their heavy workload, but that there has been a decrease in the number of occupational safety and health (OSH) inspectors (from 41 in 2008 to 31 in 2019). In this regard, the Annual Report states that measures will be taken to reinforce OSH inspections.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that a risk assessment undertaken of the work of the inspectorate indicated that nearly all employees of the labour inspectorate, and particularly inspectors, are exposed to the risk of third-party violence, due to the nature of their work. In order to address this, the labour inspectorate has taken measures to prevent unauthorized access to its offices, drafted instructions outlining measures to reduce such violence, and organized various lectures and workshops on stress management, communication in difficult situations and other relevant topics. Concerning protection against aggression, certain inspections are carried out by two inspectors or together with other supervisory authorities, and inspectors may also request that police officers be present at the inspection. The Government also indicates that, in addition to the provisions on the independence of inspectors provided for by the IA and the LIA, certain inspections are carried out by inspectors from the head office instead of local units if it is assessed necessary to prevent the external influence from local stakeholders. The Committee also notes that, however, the 2019 Annual Report states that labour inspectors continue to be overwhelmed with the amount of assigned cases and face a significant level of external pressure from both complainants and employers in the form of insults, misconduct and aggressiveness concerning matters beyond their mandate. While taking note of the increase in the number of inspectors from 2017 to 2019, the Committee requests the Government to reinforce its efforts to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, regarding both inspectors monitoring working conditions and employment relationships and OSH inspectors. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect. In addition, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to address the issues raised in the 2019 Annual Report related to violence, harassment and other external pressure facing labour inspectors, including with a view to ensuring their independence from improper external influences.

Article 12(1)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(b) of Convention No. 129. Access to workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee previously noted that pursuant to section 21 of the IA regarding business and other premises not belonging to the person liable, persons owning or possessing business premises, production premises or other premises or land can refuse inspectors' free access under certain conditions. The Committee notes the Government's explanation in response to its request that an inspection may only be denied in the exceptional cases provided for by section 21 of the IA. The Government also indicates that, if a person unjustifiably refuses to allow an inspection, they may be subject to the same measures as a witness who refuses to testify, and the inspection may be carried out against their will. With reference to its comments above on the LIA and the IA, the Committee notes that the LIA does not contain provisions relating to access to workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Article 12(1)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(b) of Convention No. 129, labour inspectors should be empowered to enter by day premises which they may have reasonable cause to believe to be liable to inspection in order to efficiently ensure workers' protection, and that these Articles do not allow for any restrictions. With reference to its General Survey of 2006, Labour Inspection, paragraph 266, the Committee also recalls that restrictions placed in law or in practice on inspectors' right of entry into workplaces can only stand in the way of achieving the objectives of labour inspection as set out in the Convention. The Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 12 of Convention No. 81 and Article 16 of Convention No. 129 to ensure that that labour inspectors are empowered to enter by day premises which they may have reasonable cause to believe to be liable to inspection. In the meantime, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of section 21 of the IA in practice, indicating the number of times that inspectors have been denied access to workplaces under this section, the reasons given for each denial under one or more of the exceptions provided for in section 21, and the outcome of any proceedings reviewing each denial.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1985)

Previous comment

Articles 3, 7, 12 and 16 of the Convention. Functioning of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comments, reflecting the joint observations of the representative employers' and workers' organizations that there was a need for capacity building of the Labour Department, the Government indicates that it will in due time consider measures for the implementation of capacity building in the area of labour inspection. The Committee refers to the discussion held during the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference, by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in 2022 concerning the implementation of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), by the Solomon Islands. Among its conclusions, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies and the labour inspectorate to address the worst forms of child labour and to promote their effective cooperation. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to build the capacities of the labour inspection system, in light of the previous joint observations made by the social partners and the 2022 conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the establishment in July 2019 of a power-sharing agreement between the country's ruling military council and opposition groups (the Transitional Military Council and the Forces for Freedom and Change) to share power for a three-year period of reforms, followed by elections for a return to full civilian government.

Draft strategy on labour inspection. The Committee previously urged the Government to pursue its efforts to adopt its strategy on labour inspection, which had been developed in 2014 in the National Tripartite Workshop on Labour Inspection. It notes the Government's indication in its report, in response, that the draft strategy on labour inspection is still being examined and that joint committees have been established to work on it. Noting that the development of the draft strategy dates back to 2014, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to adopt it, and to provide a copy once adopted.

Article 4(1) and (2) of the Convention. Organization and effective functioning of the labour inspection system under the supervision and control of a central authority. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the organization of the labour inspection system, including the central authority and local labour offices in each of the states. It notes the Government's indication, in response, that the labour inspection system is placed under the supervision and control of a central authority, through full and close coordination between the central authority and each of the states, including for the purpose of drawing up plans and formulating policies. The Government also states that there is a General Directorate of Coordination and Follow-up, which establishes a network between each state. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the role, mandate and activities of the General Directorate of Coordination and Follow-up, including information on the details of its network and how the Directorate coordinates with local labour offices. It once again requests the Government to provide the organizational chart of the labour inspection system, illustrating the structure of and relationship between a central authority and local offices under each state. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on the manner in which local labour inspection activities are placed under the supervision and control of a central authority, in order to give full effect to Article 4 of the Convention.

Articles 12(1) and 15(c). Unannounced inspection visits and confidentiality of the source of any complaint. The Committee previously requested information concerning the possibility for an individual worker to make a confidential complaint, noting the Government's indication that labour inspection visits may be arranged at the request of an employer, a trade union, or a majority of workers in firms where there is no union. In the absence of information provided by the Government in response, the Committee once again recalls that, in accordance with Article 15(c) of the Convention, and consistent with paragraph 235 of its 2006 General Survey, Labour inspection, labour inspectors shall treat as absolutely confidential the source of any complaint bringing to their notice a defect or breach of legal provisions, and shall give no intimation to the employer or his representative that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of such a complaint. The Committee recalls in this respect the importance of enabling workers to communicate freely with inspectors and of the confidentiality of complaints, particularly for the protection of workers from reprisals.

The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether it is possible for an individual worker to submit a complaint to the labour inspectorate and, if so, the measures taken to maintain the confidentiality of the complaint. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide information on whether the labour inspectorate undertakes unannounced visits, and if so, to provide information on the number of such visits undertaken.

Articles 20 and 21. Publication and communication to the ILO of an annual report. The Committee previously noted that although no annual inspection reports have been communicated to the ILO for more than 25 years, steps had been taken towards the preparation of annual reports, including the identification of training needs and initiatives to facilitate the preparation of periodic reports by state labour offices. It takes note of the Government's indication, in response, that it is currently gathering reports by state labour offices. The Committee once again urges the Government to take all possible measures to ensure that labour inspection reports are prepared annually, published and transmitted to the ILO, in accordance with Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2009)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that, following the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards adopted in June 2021, an ILO Technical Advisory Mission (TAM) was undertaken to Dushanbe from 15–21 May 2022 in order to assess technical assistance needs and identify ways forward to meet the country's international obligations under Convention No. 81.

Articles 3, 4, 5(b), 17 and 18 of the Convention. Operation of the labour inspection system under the supervision and control of a central authority. Duality of inspection functions assumed by state and trade union labour inspectors. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Council for the Coordination of the Activities of Inspection Bodies suspended its meetings due to a number of reasons, including the COVID-19 pandemic and that technical assistance from the Office would be welcome in strengthening the work of the Council. The Committee notes that, in the context of the ILO TAM, the State Inspection Service for Labour Migration and Employment (SILME) pointed to the cooperation with trade union inspectors, including through attendance at one another's meetings, and trade union notifications of industrial accidents and complaints received. The representatives of the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Tajikistan informed the ILO TAM that they did not see a contradiction between their mandate and the one of the SILME and that, while trade union inspectors could not impose sanctions, they could pursue enforcement through other means, such as appeals to courts. Recalling that labour inspection is a public function that should be performed by public officials, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the manner in which the trade union inspectorate operates in a way that complements the activities of the SILME, including examples of how the trade union inspectorate coordinates its activities with those of the SILME; and (ii) provide information on the manner in which the activities of the SILME are supervised and controlled, including on the setting and review of priorities by the Council for the Coordination of the Activities of Inspection Bodies once its activities are resumed, and the role of the Prosecutor General's Office.

Articles 6, 10 and 11. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Number of labour inspectors and material means at their disposal. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes that, in the context of the ILO Technical Advisory Mission, the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Tajikistan indicated that, since 2015, the trade union inspectorate has been funded through each trade union's own budget, while positive trends were seen in the number of inspectors. Noting the absence of information on the matter, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how the independence of SILME inspectors is ensured in practice, in particular with regard to the requirement established in section 37(1) of Law No. 1269 on Inspections of Economic Entities, which provides that the performance of an inspection body official should be assessed based on criteria including feedback from the inspected economic entities. In addition, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide further information on the material means at the disposal of trade union labour inspectorate in practice.

Articles 12 and 16. Powers of labour inspectors. Moratorium on inspections. The Committee previously noted that the moratorium on inspection in the area of manufacturing had expired on 1 January 2021. The Committee notes with deep concern that a moratorium on all types of inspections of the activities of business entities has been reintroduced by Presidential Decree of 16 March 2022, with a general scope of application to all sectors and without limit of time. In the context of the ILO TAM, the Deputy Minister of Labour emphasizes that labour inspectors could still conduct inspections under the moratorium: (i) where there are signs of non-compliance in private entities; and (ii) in public entities. In this respect, the Committee recalls its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, expressing concern at reforms that substantially undermine the inherent functioning of labour inspection systems, including moratoria on labour inspections, and urging governments to remove these restrictions, with a view to achieving conformity with Convention No. 81. Recalling that any moratorium placed on labour inspection is a serious violation of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that the current moratorium is lifted and that no other restrictions of this nature are placed on labour inspection in the future. It also requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard, and to provide information on the number of inspection visits undertaken by the SILME, disaggregated by type of inspections and by sectors, including specifically inspections in private entities where there are no signs of non-compliance.

Other restrictions on the powers of labour inspectors. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes with deep concern that the restrictions imposed by the Law No. 1269 on inspections of economic entities, including with regard to: (i) frequency of inspections (section 22); (ii) duration of inspections (section 26); (iii) the ability of labour inspectors to undertake inspection visits without previous notice (sections 16, 19, 21 and 24); and (iv) the scope of inspections (section 25), are still in force after the 2023 amendment. It also notes that the Government does not provide any further information regarding the due diligence checklist for inspections compiled by SILME specialists. With reference to its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee once again urges the Government to pursue its efforts and continue to take all necessary measures to bring its national legislation into full conformity with Articles 12 and 16 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the developments in this regard, and to communicate a copy of the due diligence checklist established by the SILME for inspections. In addition, the Committee once again requests that the Government provide statistics regarding the number of inspection visits undertaken by labour inspectors of the SILME without previous notice, as compared to inspection visits undertaken with prior notice, and similar statistics regarding inspections undertaken with and without previous notice by trade union labour inspectors. The Committee also requests detailed information on the number and nature of violations detected with respect to each category of inspection by each set of inspectors.

Articles 17 and 18. Powers of labour inspectors to ensure the effective application of legal provisions concerning conditions of work and the protection of workers. In response to its previous comments on the application of labour inspectors' right to institute legal proceedings, the Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government regarding violations detected and the measures taken by labour inspectors during the reporting period. The Committee also notes the Government's reference to section 22(7) of Law No. 1269 which provides that sanctions on an economic entity in the first two years of its activity may only be applied in exceptional cases, if the activity of the entity in question, in accordance with the legislation of the Republic of Tajikistan, cannot be secured by other means, and only if it is necessary and unavoidable to prevent harm to the life and health of the public or the environment, when such harm poses a serious threat. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including lifting the restriction imposed by section 22(7) of Law No. 1269, to ensure that persons who violate or neglect to observe legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors shall be liable to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning and that adequate penalties are imposed. It also requests the Government to clarify if trade union labour inspectors have the power to initiate prompt legal proceedings without previous warning.

Lastly, the Committee notes the request of technical assistance formulated by the Government with regard to the strengthening of the Council for the Coordination of the Activities of Inspection Bodies. The Committee hopes that this technical assistance will be provided in the near future and that it will cover the functioning of the Council as well as all other issues raised in the Committee's comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Article 12(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(3) of Convention No. 129. Powers and prerogatives of labour inspectors. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that, under section 188(1) of the Labour Code, inspectors are required to notify the head or deputy head of the enterprise or establishment at the start of the inspection, and that the latter may accompany them during the inspection. The Committee recalled that, in accordance with the above-mentioned Articles of Conventions Nos 81 and 129, labour inspectors are dispensed from this requirement if they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the effectiveness of the inspection. The Committee notes with regret that section 239 of the Labour Code of 2021 essentially reproduces the same wording, stipulating that inspectors shall notify the head or deputy head of the enterprise or establishment at the start of the inspection, and that the latter may accompany them during the inspection. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its national legislation is in conformity with the above-mentioned Articles of Conventions Nos 81 and 129 and to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Article 17 of Convention No. 81 and Article 22 of Convention No. 129. Action to be taken in the event of violations. The Committee notes with regret that section 238 of the Labour Code of 2021 reproduces the wording of the Code of 2006, stipulating that the social legislation and labour inspector must give the head of the establishment warning before issuing a report. This section also stipulates that the inspector may issue a report without previous warning in cases of extreme emergency. The inspector may also order measures with immediate executory force to put an end to any serious and imminent danger. The Government specifies that cases of extreme emergency relate to situations presenting dangers to the safety and health of workers. The Committee recalls that Article 17 of Convention No. 81 and Article 22 of Convention No. 129 provide that, with certain exceptions, legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors shall be liable to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning, and that it must be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give a warning or advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors are liable to prompt legal proceedings, without previous warning, and that it must be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give warning or advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Supervision and control by a central authority. The Committee notes with concern the information provided by the Government in its report that the labour inspectorate is still not placed under a central authority, with local governments directly supervising the labour inspectors within their respective jurisdictions. The Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to place the labour inspection system under a central authority with a view to ensuring coherence in the functioning of the system. It requests the Government to provide information on the legislative and practical steps taken, including the consultations held in that respect.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Resources of the labour inspection system and inspection visits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that funds have been allocated for all types of inspections, albeit unevenly distributed, with a certain emphasis on workplaces with the highest risk, and that the total number of labour inspectors in the country remains 231. However, the Government does not provide information regarding the approved but unfilled positions. The Committee also notes the information from the Government that (i) labour inspectors are provided with local offices which are fairly equipped; and (ii) labour inspectors are reimbursed for the travel and incidental expenses related to the performance of their duties. The Committee also notes the Government's further indication that: (i) the financial and human resources allocated to the labour inspectorate are insufficient, given that district labour inspectors have inadequate space and shared offices, which affects the performance of their duties; and (ii) the lack of transportation facilities for labour inspections hampers effective monitoring of compliance with labour standards, leading to a reduction in the number of inspections, particularly within the informal sector. The Committee once again urges the Government to take further measures to ensure that there are a sufficient number of labour inspectors and they are provided with adequate resources, in conformity with Articles 10 and 11 of the Convention. It also urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often as is necessary for the effective application of the relevant legal provisions, as required by Article 16 of the Convention. In this respect, it requests the Government to take measures to ensure the filling of the vacant positions, and to address the lack of necessary transport facilities for inspectors. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue to report on the measures taken and provide information on the total number of inspector positions, the number of filled positions, and the number of inspection visits carried out.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Reports from local inspection offices and publication and communication of an annual report on labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that it is in the process of compiling data for the report and that it plans to publish it upon the availability of funds. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that under the decentralized structures, labour inspectors report directly to the districts, which leads to irregularities of reporting to the central inspection authority. In line with the requirements of Articles 20 and 21 of the Convention and recalling that section 20 of the Uganda Employment Act of 2006 also provides for the annual publication of a report, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that annual reports on labour inspection are published and communicated regularly to the ILO, encompassing the information specified in Article 21(a)–(g).

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU), received on 31 August 2023.

The Committee notes the extremely difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022.

Articles 1 and 4 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 3 and 7 of Convention No. 129. Organization of the labour inspection system under the supervision and control of a central authority. Partial decentralization of labour inspection functions. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of January 12, 2022, No. 14 “Some Issues of Territorial Bodies of the State Labor Service” (Resolution No. 14) which provides for the liquidation of the territorial bodies of the State Labour Service (SLS) and the establishment of new interregional territorial bodies of the SLS. The Resolution indicates that the territorial bodies of the SLS which are liquidated continue to exercise the powers and functions assigned to them, until the completion of the implementation of measures related to the formation of interregional territorial bodies and the adoption of a decision ensuring the exercise by such bodies of the powers and functions previously exercised by the territorial bodies. Noting the absence of information on this matter, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government indicate the nature and scope of the power of inspection envisaged under section 17 of the Local Government Act, which refers to local self-government bodies’ ability to control compliance with labour and employment legislation and to carry out certain inspections, and that the Government provide information, including examples, of how this power of compliance and inspection is implemented in practice, indicating as well the effects of this power on the activities of SLS in monitoring compliance and issuing fines. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed regarding the progress made on the formation of interregional territorial bodies of the SLS and measures ensuring the exercise of the functions previously attributed to the now liquidated territorial bodies.

Articles 10 and 11 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14 and 15 of Convention No. 129. Material means and human resources to achieve an adequate coverage of workplaces by labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) a new maximum number of employees of the central office and the territorial authorities of the SLS was approved through Resolution No. 14; (ii) there has been a decrease in the number of labour inspectors of the SLS, from 1,119 officers for 1,800 existing posts in 2022, to 885 for 2,086 existing posts in 2023; (iii) with regards to the territorial authorities of the SLS, employees decreased from 2,537 for 3,478 existing posts in 2021, to 2,402 for 3,478 existing posts in 2022 and to 2017 for 3,463 existing posts in 2023. The Committee notes that the Government does not indicate how many of these officers are labour inspectors; and (iv) the budget allocations of the SLS decreased by approximately 20 per cent from 490,306.3 thousand Ukrainian hryvnias (UAH) in 2022 to 397,148.1 thousand UAH in 2023. The Committee notes that, apart from the budget allocations, the Government does not provide other information on measures taken to provide sufficient material resources to labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors employed by the SLS and the number of available posts. In this respect, it requests the Government to indicate the number of employees of the territorial authorities of the SLS that are labour inspectors or conduct labour inspection activities, including in agriculture. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to fill the vacant posts, noting that over half the labour inspector posts are now unfilled. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to provide sufficient material resources to labour inspectors, including offices, office equipment and supplies, transport facilities and reimbursement of travel expenses, at the central and local levels of the SLS.

Articles 12(1), 16, and 17 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16(1), 21, and 22 of Convention No. 129. Restrictions and limitations on labour inspection. 1. Moratorium on Labour Inspection. The Committee notes that the moratorium on labour inspection which was imposed in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic is no longer applicable. The Government indicates that pursuant to paragraph 1 of Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of March 13, 2022 No. 303 “On Termination of Measures of State Supervision (Control) and State Market Supervision in the Conditions of Martial Law” (Resolution No. 303), it decided to suspend scheduled and unscheduled state supervision (control) and state market supervision for the period of martial law imposed by Decree of the President of Ukraine of February 24, 2022 No. 64 “On the Introduction of Martial Law in Ukraine”. In this respect, the Committee notes that paragraph 2 of Resolution No. 303 exceptionally allows the implementation of unscheduled measures of state supervision on the basis of decisions of central executive bodies in the presence of a threat that has a negative impact on the rights, legitimate interests, life and health of a person, protection of the environment and ensuring the security of the state, as well as for the fulfilment of Ukraine’s international obligations during the period of martial law regime. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the Law of Ukraine “On the Organization of Labor Relations under Martial Law” of March 15, 2022 No. 2136-IX (Law No. 2136-IX) stipulates that during the period of martial law, the SLS and its territorial bodies may, at the request of an employee or trade union, carry out unscheduled measures of state supervision over compliance with labor legislation by legal entities, regardless of ownership, type of activity, business, and individuals using hired labor, in terms of compliance with the requirements of this Law, as well as to identify unregistered labor. In its observations, the KVPU, indicates that according to the Law “On Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of Ukraine Regarding the Optimization of Labor Relations” of 1 July 2022 No. 2352-IX, the SLS was indeed allowed to carry out unscheduled inspections, however exclusively on a limited range of issues regarding: the legality of the termination of employment contracts; compliance with the requirements of Law No. 2136-IX; and detection of informal labour relations. While recognizing the extraordinary nature of, and particular challenges linked to the current situation, the Committee refers to its 2019 general observation on the labour inspection Conventions and recalls that a moratorium placed on labour inspection substantially undermines the inherent functioning of the labour inspection system and is contrary to the Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the observations of the KVPU. The Committee urges the Government to eliminate the current restrictions imposed on labour inspections and to ensure that labour inspectors, including in agriculture, are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in compliance with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that no moratorium on labour inspections be placed in the future. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed statistics on the number of inspection visits carried out by the SLS during the period of the martial law, if possible disaggregated by type of inspection, region and sector.

2. Other restrictions. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that previously observed restrictions imposed by Act No. 877-V of 2007 on Fundamental Principles of State Supervision and Monitoring of Economic Activity (Act No. 877-V) on the powers of labour inspectors with regard to the time, scope and duration of inspections visits, their ability to undertake inspection without previous notice, and the measures they can take against violations, are still in place. It notes in this regard that the Law No. 2352-IX indicates that unscheduled measures of state supervision allowed under the Martial Law should be carried out in accordance with the procedure established by the Act No. 877-V. In this respect, in its observations, the KVPU reiterates its concerns regarding the limitations on labour inspection activities imposed by the Act No. 877-V, and in particular the requirement that labour inspectors provide previous notice (of time and their presence) of their visit; the requirement that the inspection must be carried out in the presence of the manager or his deputy, or an authorized person of the business entity; and the requirement that the inspection must be carried out during working hours of the business entity, established by the rules of the internal labour regulations. According to the KVPU, these limitations hinder the proper and timely inspections, disregarding the relevant principles of the Convention. In this respect, it highlights the need to exclude labour inspection from the scope of the Act No. 877-V. The Committee recalls once again that restrictions on labour inspectors' ability to conduct inspection visits without previous notice, at any hour of the day or night, in workplaces liable to inspection; and on inspectors' ability to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as necessary to ensure effective application of legal provisions, violate the Conventions. With reference to its general observation of 2019 on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to promptly take all necessary measures to bring its national legislation into conformity with the provisions of Conventions Nos 81 and 129. In particular, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to ensure that any future legislative amendments and laws with an impact on labour inspection are in full conformity with Articles 12, 16, 17 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16, 21, 22 of Convention No. 129. It requests the Government to keep it informed of any legislative developments in this respect.

Article 18 of Convention No. 81 and Article 24 of Convention No. 129. Adequate penalties imposed and effectively enforced. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that legislative amendments to the Labour Code reduced the size of fines provided for labour law violations in the Labour Code. The Government indicates that section 16 of Law No. 2136-IX stipulates that during the period of martial law, the fines set under section 265 of the Labor Code shall not apply, provided that the employer fully complies with the orders to eliminate violations identified during unscheduled state supervision measures, within the established timeframe. The Committee recalls that, under Article 18 of Convention No. 81 and Article 24 of Convention No. 129, adequate penalties for violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors and for obstructing labour inspectors in the performance of their duties shall be provided by national laws or regulations and effectively enforced. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how section 16 of Law No. 2136-IX is applied in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the level of fines and other penalties for labour law violations are sufficiently dissuasive. While noting the extremely difficult situation in the country, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of violations detected, the number of infringement reports issued, the number of cases brought to the courts, and the penalties subsequently imposed, during the period of the martial law regime.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made jointly by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV) and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) received on 30 August 2023.

Articles 3(1)(a) and (b), 13 and 16 of the Convention. Labour inspection in the field of occupational safety and health (OSH). The Committee notes that, in response to its previous request concerning reasons why there have been no orders with immediate executory force issued in the event of imminent danger to the health and safety of workers, the Government indicates that: (i) in accordance with section 135 of the Basic Act on prevention, working conditions and the working environment, the procedure for reporting conditions of serious or imminent danger to the health and safety of workers is still the full or partial suspension of the activity or production until the official certifies that the situation of serious or imminent danger has passed; (ii) in practice, the situation may be rectified during the inspection, with the inspector present, and not warrant the continued application of the suspension measure. Noting the absence of information in this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of orders with immediate executory force issued in the event of imminent danger to the health and safety of workers issued by labour inspectors with regard to the next reporting period.

The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's information: (i) the National Institute of Prevention and Health and Safety at Work (INPSASEL) conducted 5,144 inspections in 2020, 948 in 2021 and 1,826 in 2022; and (ii) in 2020 and 2021, labour inspection focused on the prevention of biological risks and, in particular, in 2021 INPSASEL conducted 99,758 inspections to evaluate biosecurity measures during COVID-19 and carried out 34,629 follow-up visits. The Committee notes that CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT, in their joint observations, state that in practice, inspections are not conducted in accordance with the procedures, as there are no voluntary inspections (inspecciones voluntarias), and complaints filed by workers are not duly dealt with because of the lack of material and human resources in the labour inspection system and the lack of training for inspectors. The Committee once again requests the Government to make every effort to ensure that OSH inspections are conducted as often and as thoroughly as is necessary and to continue to provide detailed information on the labour inspection activities related to OSH.

Articles 6, 7(1) and 15(a). Independence and competence of labour inspectors. Legal status and conditions of service of personnel performing inspection duties. Selection of inspectors. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comment on the selection criteria for inspectors, the Government indicates that it is against the law and practice relating to incorporation into the public Service to select labour inspection staff based on political ideology. The Government also indicates that a dismissal of a public servant is only carried out on the grounds specifically established by law, following due process and with the possibility of implementing the corresponding legal remedies. In this regard, the Committee notes that CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT allege that there is a lack of independence among labour inspectors in the performance of their duties due to political interference. The organizations add that the Government restricts the autonomy of inspectors in their decisions, by designating "special ad-hoc officials or inspectors" who never make themselves known, do not deal with workers' cases and do not publicize the location of their office. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 6 of the Convention, the inspection staff shall be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service are such that they are assured of stability of employment and are independent of changes of government and improper external influences. Article 7 also provides that labour inspectors shall be recruited with sole regard to their qualifications for the performance of their duties and that the means of checking such qualifications shall be determined by the competent authority. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations, and to take the necessary measures to ensure the stability and independence of labour inspectors, as required by the Convention.

Articles 10 and 11. Number of inspectors and material resources. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous request, that in 2023 the labour inspectorate had 181 labour inspectors assigned to the inspection units of the People's Ministry for the Social Process of Labour (MPPPST), compared with 184 in 2020. The Government adds that it has encouraged and promoted the incorporation of labour inspection staff who meet the profile required throughout the national territory aimed at increasing staff numbers with new officials. With regard to the material resources available to labour inspectors, the Government indicates that the supervision units in 18 states have working vehicles that are used to transport officials to areas that are difficult to access, and that it continues to cooperate with other public administration institutions to facilitate inspections, as the availability of petrol and spare parts, as well as office equipment and other supplies, are affected by the unilateral coercive measures. In this respect, the Committee notes that CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT state that the inspection system lacks adequate and trained inspection staff with the necessary material and technical resources, as the institutions do not have their own vehicles to carry out inspection tasks. With regard to substitutes for posts, these organizations indicate that inspectors have not been trained to perform the relevant functions and are not sufficient in number. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this respect. While once again observing a slight decrease in the number of labour inspectors, the Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure the effective discharge of the functions of the labour inspection services. The Committee requests that the Government continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors, and particularly on the material resources available to inspectors for the performance of their duties (including vehicles and premises).

Articles 12(1) and (2) and 15(c). Notification of the presence of inspectors on the occasion of an inspection. Timing of inspections. Requirement of confidentiality. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that section 514(1) of the Basic Act concerning labour and men and women workers (LOTTT) maintains the requirement for inspectors to show identification upon their arrival and to specify the reason for the visit, and that it only allows visits during working hours, which limits the free access of inspectors to workplaces. The Committee previously raised concerns that the requirement to notify the reason for the inspection under section 514(1) might jeopardize the confidentiality of the existence of a complaint, as well as the identity of the complainant. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this provision will be referred to the country's competent authorities for revision. The Committee also notes that CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT welcome the fact that the Government is considering the possibility of revising the legislation to give legal recognition to confidentiality and the need for inspectors to abstain from notifying their presence where this may undermine the success of their task. Noting the Government's intention, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made towards amending the provision referred to above to: (i) ensure recognition in the national legislation of the principle of confidentiality and the power of inspectors provided with proper credentials not to notify their presence if they consider that such notification may be prejudicial to the performance of their duties, as required by Articles 12(2) and 15(c) of the Convention; and (ii) give effect to Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention by empowering inspectors (provided with proper credentials) to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection.

Article 16. Supervision by labour inspectors, frequency and thoroughness of inspections. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous request concerning the significant decrease in the total number of inspections in 2019 in comparison with previous years, the Government indicates that: (i) variations in the number of inspections are due to external factors, such as restrictions on movement because of the impact of unilateral coercive measures and the pandemic, as well as internal factors, such as difficulties in replacing inspection staff; and (ii) the labour inspectorate continued to fulfil its functions, with a decrease in numbers in proportion to the decrease in economic activity and movement of persons, but the inspection system's usual schedule and procedures have been resumed, noting that the System of Protection of Children and Adolescents continued its services during this period. The Government also indicates that in 2020, 2021 and 2022, the MPPPST conducted 2,647, 6,640 and 12,713 inspections, respectively. The Committee also notes the nature of the violations reported and the number of penalties imposed during these years, namely 2,092, 2,165 and 2,714 fines, respectively. In this respect, the Committee notes that CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT indicate that: (i) penalties imposed by the labour inspectorate are not dissuasive, as it is more convenient for the employer to pay the fine than to rectify the reason for the penalty, and often the competent authority does not give effect to the legal penalties; and (ii) there are serious problems with supervision of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on the observations and to continue providing statistical data on the number of inspections and violations of labour laws, with an indication of the provisions breached and the penalties imposed. In regard to its pending comments on the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the inspection activities carried out in relation to child labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that the Government's overdue report on Convention No. 81 has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2022, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

The Committee also notes the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict.

Labour law reform. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it will provide a copy of the Labour Code, which includes amendments to the powers of inspectors and concerning the protection of inspectors, once it has been promulgated. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the Labour Code and indicate any developments in this regard.

Articles 4, 5(a) 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11 of the Convention. Effective organization and functioning of the labour inspection system under the supervision and control of a central authority, including the provision of sufficient human resources and material means to the labour inspection services and adequate conditions of service to labour inspectors. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that instruments of coordination shall be put in place between the General Administration of Occupational Safety and Health (GAOSH) and the General Administration of Labour Inspection (GALI), and that there shall be coordination with Government bodies providing similar services. The Government also indicated that financial resources are limited due to the impact of the conflict and the difficult economic situation, and once stability returns, funding will be allocated to support inspection and enable it to carry out its task of monitoring the application of labour legislation. In addition, the Committee previously noted the Government's indication that as part of the project of restructuring of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MOSAL), internet and computer services have been extended to all general departments, but these are still extremely limited. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) ensure coordination between the GAOSH and the GALI, and other public or private institutions and bodies engaged in work similar to labour inspection; (ii) increase the number of labour inspectors; and (iii) ensure that the conditions of service of labour inspections, including the system of remuneration and wage levels, are such that labour inspectors are independent of improper external influences, and that they enjoy the required neutrality for the proper discharge of their duties, in conformity with the principles laid down in Article 6.

In this regard, while welcoming the provision of internet and computer services in all general departments, the Committee encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to provide labour inspection services with the necessary financial and material resources to operate effectively. It once again requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the budget of the MOSAL allocated for this purpose, also specifying the proportion of the national budget.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, and the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee recalls the discussion that took place at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS), at its 111th Session in 5–16 June 2023, concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the CAS, while acknowledging the steps taken by the Government to reduce informality and promote employment among women and young persons, persons with disabilities and other marginalized groups, noted that further steps needed to be undertaken in these areas as well as on vocational education and training and activities of private employment agencies. The Committee notes that, in its conclusions, the CAS requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) continue to develop an employment policy to address both in law and practice the remaining issues, notably the existing barriers to employment for disadvantaged groups, including women, young persons, persons with disabilities and persons vulnerable to intersectional discrimination; (ii) take steps to improve the employability of young persons, notably through vocational education and training programmes; (iii) take steps towards establishing control mechanisms under the national legislation to monitor the activities of private employment agencies, including considering the possibility of ratifying the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181); and (iv) ensure cooperation with the social partners on existing labour market issues, annual employment programs as well as on their implementation and provide concrete examples of the manner in which social partners are included in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes and their views duly considered. The Committee also notes that the CAS requested the Government to provide the Committee with detailed updated information, by 1 September 2023, on: (i) measures taken to promote full productive employment, including those adopted in the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2019–23; (ii) the development and adoption of the National Employment Strategy (NES) and to provide a copy once adopted; (iii) statistical data disaggregated by sex and age on employment trends in the country, particularly on employment, unemployment and underemployment; (iv) statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region, on the nature, scope and impact of the measures and programmes implemented to promote the employment of groups vulnerable to decent work deficits, including women, young persons, persons with disabilities and persons vulnerable to intersectional discrimination; and (v) the impact of the measures taken to reduce the number of undeclared workers and facilitate their integration into the formal economy.

Article 1 of the Convention. Employment trends and implementation of an active employment policy. Groups vulnerable to decent work deficit. The Committee welcomes the supplementary information provided by the Government in light of the above-mentioned conclusions adopted by the CAS. With respect to the measures taken to promote full and productive employment, including those adopted in the framework of the DWCP, the Government states that the Seasonal employment promotion programme provides opportunities for jobseekers including women, young people, and people with disabilities, to engage in temporary agricultural work. The Government also indicates that it adopted in June 2023 a decree No 968-L which expanded the scope of the State employment programmes to persons who participated in military operations in Azerbaijan in 2022, as well as to individuals who were demobilized after 2020. The Government further states that various employment programs, such as the Programme for ensuring the employment of the unemployed and the Employment promotion programme (a pilot programme launched in February 2023), provide financial benefits to employers who employ jobseekers. Moreover, in 2021, specific measures were adopted to promote the employment of citizens of the Artsakh Republic who had been displaced to Armenia as a result of the war with Azerbaijan. Also, the Armenia Impact AIM Venture Accelerator programme has led to initiatives like the National platform for women's economic empowerment which supports women entrepreneurs and finance their trainings. The Government indicates that it is also in the process of developing a new pilot programme for the training and employment of women. In addition, several amendments to the Labour Code were adopted in May and July 2023 to facilitate the entry of young people and persons with disabilities into the labour market, including: the creation of an internship institute to help recent graduates gain work experience, the consecration of the right of workers with children up to 2 years old to work reduced hours and of the right for women who are breastfeeding to take additional breaks, the creation of a priority right to keep their job for former servicemen with disability pensions in case of staff reduction, and the regulation of voluntary work which contributes to young people gaining professional experience. The Government also states that Armenia is considering ratifying the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190).

Regarding the steps taken to improve the employability of young persons through vocational education and training programmes, the Government indicates that Armenia's national career guidance programme in high schools is included in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) list alongside countries like Canada, Finland, Germany, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America. The Government also indicates that the Vocational training programme adopted in 2021, benefited to 487 persons, of which 77 per cent were women, and 12 per cent were persons with disabilities. The Programme of arrangement of vocational training for mothers without a profession benefited to 106 persons, of which 32 per cent were young mothers. In addition, in the period 2021–22, the Work experience acquisition programme has supported 353 unemployed persons, of which 91 per cent were young people. The Committee nevertheless notes that the Government does not provide information on measures taken in the area of vocational education and training aimed specifically at promoting employment among young persons.

With regard to the development and adoption of the NES, the Government indicates that a draft is being discussed in consultation with the social partners. The main objective of the draft NES is the promotion of employment through the promotion of a competitive workforce. The government's strategy is to reduce the discrepancy between labour supply and demand by strengthening the correspondence between education programmes and the labour market. The NES will address topics such as labour rights, inclusion and equal opportunities for various specific groups of vulnerable workers, including persons with disabilities, women, migrants, displaced persons and national minorities. The Government further indicates that it contemplates the possibility of introducing an unemployment insurance system.

In respect of the impact of the measures and programmes implemented in Armenia, the Committee notes that, in 2021, 3,958 people were registered in State employment programmes (versus 5,675 persons in 2020), of which 65 per cent were women, 30 per cent were young people, and 8 per cent were persons with disabilities. The Committee also notes that, in 2022, only 1,800 persons were registered in these programmes, of which 33 per cent were women, 20 per cent were young people, and 11 per cent were persons with disabilities. The Government further provides detailed statistical data for the period 2020–22, according to which, in 2022, of the 70,544 jobseekers who were registered with the United social service (the former State Employment Agency), 14.7 per cent found employment. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government regarding the impact of the programmes specifically aimed at promoting the employment of groups vulnerable to decent work deficits. The Government indicates that the measures adopted to promote the employment of citizens of the Artsakh Republic enabled 703 citizens of the Artsakh Republic to find employment while 93 citizens were temporarily employed for public works. The Government also indicates that the National platform for women's economic empowerment supported over 200 women entrepreneurs in launching their business and trained 1,400 women in the field of digital marketing, who then found stable employment. As for the Seasonal employment promotion programme, the Government reports that 1,178 persons benefited from it.

Turning to the statistical data on employment trends in the country, the Government reports that, for the first quarter of 2023, the unemployment rate is at 13.7 per cent, the employment rate at 50.9 per cent, and the underemployment rate at 2.3 per cent. The Government further reports that, as of July 2023, 44,678 jobseekers were registered in the regional centres of the United social service, of which 63 per cent were women and 4.4 per cent were persons with disabilities. The Government also provides statistical data for the period 2018–21, which had in essence already been provided in its previous report.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the measures taken to promote full productive employment and to address, both in law and in practice, the existing barriers to employment for disadvantaged groups, including women, young persons, persons with disabilities and persons vulnerable to intersectional discrimination. With regard to the measures directed at young persons, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to improve the employability of young persons through vocational education and training. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on progress made in respect of the development and adoption of the National Employment Strategy (NES), and to provide a copy once it is adopted. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region, on the impact of the measures and programmes implemented to promote the employment of groups vulnerable to decent work deficits, including women, young persons, persons with disabilities and persons vulnerable to intersectional discrimination. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the proportion of persons who benefited from employment services prior to finding employment out of the total number of persons who accessed employment during the reporting period. With respect to financial benefits granted to employers, the Government is specifically requested to indicate the amount of this financial assistance; whether these monetary transfers to employers increase in case of employment of women, young people or people with disabilities; and whether the payments made involve an obligation of minimum duration of employment. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on employment trends in the country, particularly on employment, unemployment and underemployment. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the regulation of voluntary work has contributed to young people gaining professional experience. In addition, noting with interest that the Government is considering the ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information in this respect with its next report.

Article 2. Implementation of active labour market measures. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's indication that no control mechanisms are established under the national legislation to monitor the activities of private employment agencies. The Government did not provide updated information in that regard. The Committee thus reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to establish control mechanisms under the national legislation to monitor the activities of private employment agencies. The Committee refers in this respect to the guidance provided by the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), and its accompanying Recommendation No. 188.

Undeclared work. The Government indicates that, in 2021, there were 389,100 undeclared workers in Armenia, marking a 12 per cent decrease from 2018. The Government also indicates that it is working towards adopting a measure relieving unemployed persons of their credit burden, with the hope of facilitating their transition from the informal to the formal economy. Additionally, the Government plans to implement a digital system for recording labour contracts in Armenia, with the aim of improving the detection of undeclared workers. The Committee takes note of this information with interest and requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on the impact of the measures taken to reduce the number of undeclared workers by facilitating their integration into the formal economy.

Article 3. Consultation of the social partners. Noting that the Government does not provide information in that regard, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to provide concrete examples of the manner in which the social partners are included in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes, and their views duly considered. The Committee also requests the Government to transmit its comments on the concerns expressed by the IOE regarding social concertation and on its observations that the Republican Union of Employers of Armenia (RUEA) has not been consulted in the framework of the elaboration of the draft NES.

Australia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) received on 30 August 2021. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Committee notes that in October 2022, the seasonally adjusted total labour force participation rate stood at 66.6 per cent, the unemployment rate at 3.5 per cent (3.5 per cent for men and 3.4 per cent for women) and the underemployment rate at 6 per cent, down from 8.5 per cent in July 2017 and 7.9 per cent in 2021. In regard to long-term unemployment, the Government indicates that on 30 June 2021, there were 742,456 who were long-term unemployed persons on the Jobactive program, that is, namely persons registered with Employment Services for 12 months or longer. It further states that between 1 July 2017 to 30 June 2021, 738,237 long-term unemployed were placed in jobs. The Committee notes that, as of July 2022, the New Employment Services Model, equipped with a funding of AUD5.9 billion, replaced Jobactive as main employment service programme. With its increased investment for disadvantaged workers, the Model is comprised of a personalized digital platform containing a range of tools, including online learning and job matching for the different needs of jobseekers - with job seekers needing extra support receiving intensive case management through an employment services provider. The Government states that the Australian labour market is diverse and flexible and provides various forms of working arrangements to meet a variety of needs from businesses and workers as well as greater opportunities for work to facilitate trends such as greater participation of women in the labour market, increase in the number of persons in education and supporting older workers transitioning into retirement. It states that in June 2021, the part-time share of employment stood at 31.5 per cent of whom 51.6 per cent are casual, that is, employees without either paid sick or holiday leave entitlement. In May 2021, 23.7 per cent of all employees were casual employees, which is equal to 2.6 million people. In August 2020, 4 per cent of all employees were on fixed-term contracts, 18.3 per cent of which without leave entitlements. In August 2020, around 1 million workers, or 8.2 per cent of the workforce, were independent contractors operating their own business, contracting to perform services for others.

In its observations received on 30 August 2021, the Australian Council of Trade Unions (ACTU) considers insecure work as one of the most pressing issues faced by workers in Australia and that the country had one of the highest rates of non-standard work arrangements in the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), with nearly 24 per cent of all employees working on a casual basis. The ACTU recognizes that while some of these forms of employment had a legitimate purpose, they are increasingly used by employers so as to avoid the responsibilities associated with a permanent ongoing employment relationship, with the existing legal framework fostering the use of various types of employment to shift the employment risks and costs to the worker. It concludes that there were currently no pathways for workers in insecure work to access more secure, better-quality jobs.

The Committee recalls that active policies designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment also need to be attentive to the extent to which economic growth translates into decent work creation in the economy. They also participate to better labour market outcomes and to poverty reduction. In this context, the Committee hopes that in its next report the Government will respond to the concerns raised by the ACTU by indicating how the issues raised related, inter alia, to long-term unemployment, underemployment and insecure work, have been discussed in policymaking and implementation fora in view of the employment promotion objective of the Convention that plays a critical role in combating poverty and social exclusion.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that despite improvements, for example in regard to the unemployment rate which fell from 12.8 per cent in July 2017 to 10.2 per cent in June 2021 and a decrease of the underemployment rate by 1.4 percentage points over the period to 16.2 per cent, young people continue to face disadvantages in the labour market. The youth unemployment and underemployment rates for men and women decreased during this time frame. For men, the unemployment rate has decreased by 1.5 percentage points reaching 12.1 per cent. For women, it has decreased by 3.9 percentage points and stands at 8 per cent. As regards the youth underemployment rate, it decreased by 0.1 percentage points for men resulting in 15.4 per cent underemployment in June 2021, whereas for women it decreased by 2.7 percentage points to reach 17.1 per cent. During the same time, the number of jobseekers under 25 years of age participating in Jobactive amounted to a total of 319,660 (177,630 men and 142,030 women). In addition, the Committee notes that during the same period, the Transition to Work (TtW) service, which provides intensive, pre-employment assistance to improve the work readiness of young people who have disengaged from work and study, resulted in 64,932 job placements (36,604 men and 28,328 women) and 135,848 activity placements (72,907 men and 62,941 women). The ParentsNext programme, which prepares young parents under the age of 25 years for employment has registered a total of 73,827 participants (1,458 men and 72,369 women). In addition, 37,742 men and 24,312 women were placed under the Youth Bonus Wage Subsidy, which provides up to AUD10,000 to employers over a six-month period to hire eligible young job seekers between 15–24 years of age. The Committee notes that further to targeted programmes at the territory level such as in Western Australia, as of 31 May 2021, 85,634 young people participated in the JobTrainer Fund established through a cooperation between the federal and territory levels to provide free or low fee training for job seekers and young people, including school leavers, to upskill or reskill in areas of identified skills needs. It also notes the National Work Experience Program (NWEPE), which gives job seekers an opportunity to participate in real-life unpaid work experience, gain confidence and demonstrate their skills to potential employers (304 men and 226 women under the age of 25 accessed the programme). The Committee notes the Job Ready Fund in Tasmania, which is aimed at removing barriers to employment for young first-time jobseekers through up to AUD500 for the purchase of essential equipment, such as White Card accreditation, work boots, protective clothing or tools. Furthermore, the federal Government also continued implementing the Youth Jobs PaTH (Prepare, Trial, Hire) programme, providing (employability skills) training to 73,488 men and 48,812 women and work experience placement through internships and wage subsidies to 7,432 men and 6,609 women. Reiterating its previous concerns, the ACTU remains adamant that the PaTH was not effective in moving young people into work as it would result in displacing wage-paying jobs, fell short of the aim to achieve meaningful qualifications and excluded participants from the protection of OSH legislation. While duly noting the measures taken to promote youth employment prospects, the Committee notes the important concerns put forward by the ACTU on the effects of measures taken on not only the quantity but also the quality of youth employment and asks the Government to respond to these observations in its next report.

Women. The Committee notes that most of the targeted programmes on the federal and territory levels, such as Jobactive and TtW have a women's component. During the implementation period of Jobactive and TtW and up until 30 June 2021, 847,949 (41.7 per cent of all), respectively 32,920 (43 per cent of all) women could be placed in jobs. The Child Care Subsidy forms the center piece of the Child Care Package targeting financial assistance to low-and middle-income families to help cover the cost of childcare, thereby encouraging workforce participation of women. Furthermore, the wage subsidies paid under Jobactive, which are being increased from AUD6,500 to AUD10,000 to incentivize employers to hire, train and retain disadvantaged job seekers benefited 100,608 women until June 2021. The Government further reports in regard to Victoria that the Gender Equality Act will improve gender equality across Government and public sector organizations and complement the work of the Victoria Equal Workplaces Advisory Council to guide and advocate to the Victorian Government and to Victorian industry and employers, practical and tangible ways to achieve gender pay equity in Victorian workplaces. The ACTU observes that women were over-represented among workers in insecure and low-paid jobs and were shouldering the majority of unpaid domestic and care labour before the Covid-19-pandemic, following which 21 per cent of the female workforce (1.3 million) lost their work or is experiencing pressures on their capacity to retain paid work. It further brings forward that before the pandemic, only 43 per cent of employed Australian women worked in a full-time permanent job with entitlements such as paid sick leave. Inadequate support for working parents and a lack of affordable quality early childhood education and care and adequate paid parental leave meant that many women rather held part-time jobs. The ACTU concludes that Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander women and migrant workers face a double burden of discrimination and inequity, with less access to secure work and fair pay because of both their race and their gender. The Committee notes the recognition of the importance to coordinate employment and social protection policies, notably in order to contribute to the promotion of gender-sensitive outcomes. The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the observations brought forward by the ACTU and hopes that in its next report the Government will provide information on the concerns raised regarding the over-representation of women in insecure and low-paid jobs. The Government is asked to continue providing information on policy and technical measures aimed at increasing both the employment quality and levels of women at the national level.

Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that in 2018–19, the employment rate of indigenous peoples in remote and non-remote areas of the country was 36 per cent and 52 per cent, respectively, being highest in the Australian Capital Territory (61 per cent), followed by Tasmania (54 per cent) and New South Wales (54 per cent), and lowest in the Northern Territory (37 per cent) with men reporting a higher overall employment rate (54 per cent) than women (45 per cent) – these rates have remained stable since 2008. The Committee notes the Government's updated information on the implementation of targeted programmes on the federal and territory levels, such as Jobactive and TtW, with a particular focus on the needs of indigenous populations. The Committee notes that in 2020, all Australian governments and the Coalition of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Peak Organizations adopted the National Agreement on Closing the Gap committing to achieve by 2031 four key reform priorities and 16 socioeconomic closing the gap targets, including to increase the proportion of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander youth (15–24 years) in employment, education or training to 67 per cent; and of people aged 25–64 who are employed, to 62 per cent. Finally, the Government refers to the Community Development Programmes (CDP) offered by 46 CDP providers contracted by the Australian Government to deliver a range of employment services to remote job seekers, 83 per cent of which identified as Indigenous Australians, across 60 CDP regions. During the period 1 July 2015 to 31 July 2021, the programme resulted in placing 48,608 persons, of which 14,926 have resulted in the job seeker staying in the job for at least 26 weeks. The ACTU criticizes that CDP workers were not classified as workers, receiving well below the minimum wage and are not covered by the Fair Work Act, are deprived of OSH protections, worker compensation and annual, sick or carer's or cultural ("Sorry Business") leave. Furthermore, while the accrual of welfare entitlements is disadvantageous and penalties for infringements are prohibitive, the programme had failed to produce significant employment outcomes and was deemed to be replaced. The Committee requests the Government to respond to the ACTU's observations regarding the low quality of the CDP jobs, indicating also whether the 2031 objectives are on track and informing about any new initiatives taken to increase sustainable employment opportunities for indigenous peoples in all regions of the country but particularly in the regions where vulnerabilities among the indigenous people are the highest. In addition, the Committee refers to its direct request in which it addresses further categories of workers vulnerable to decent work deficits and exclusion.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of employment policies. The Government states that all the specific targeted programmes on the federal and territory levels included consultations of the respective stakeholders with the New Employment Services Model. Consultations take place within an Expert Advisory Panel comprised of employer, provider, and welfare group representatives, as well as a labour market economist and an expert in business transformation. Its adoption was preceded by extensive consultations held across Australia with more than 1,400 employers, providers, job seekers, community organizations, unions, think tanks/academia, industry and state and local governments. The ACTU contends that the Government failed to consult it, as the representative of workers, concerning employment policies. While it takes due note of the information provided by the Government as regards consultative processes with the respective stakeholders related to specific targeted measures at the federal and territory levels, the Committee wishes to stress that, pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention, the representatives of employers and workers, need to be consulted concerning the design and implementation of employment policies, with a view to taking fully into account their experience and views and securing their full cooperation in formulating and enlisting support for such policies. At the same time, it recalls that having built-in comprehensive, participative and transparent monitoring and evaluation mechanisms into the national employment policy enables all the parties concerned to identify achievements and challenges in meeting the established policy objectives. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide further information as regards the manner in which the Government associates the social partners to crafting, implementing and monitoring the employment policies at the federal and territory levels.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Colombia

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1989)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 31 August 2021. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), received on 1 September 2021. Noting that the Government has so far not responded to these observations, the Committee has decided to examine them in view of the relevant provisions of the Convention, and requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 2 the Convention. National policy on the vocational rehabilitation of persons with disabilities.

The Committee observes that, since it last examined the application of the Convention by Colombia, the Government has taken various measures to promote the employment of persons with disabilities, including in the period immediately preceding the examination. The Government refers to the adoption of: (i) Decree No. 2011 of 30 November 2017, establishing the percentage of employment of persons with disabilities in public sector entities depending on the size of the personnel (between 3 and 1 per cent by 31 December 2023), and (ii) Decree No. 392 of 26 February 2018, establishing an incentive of 1 per cent in public tenders and merit-based selection processes to enterprises that employ a certain number of persons with disabilities based on the total number of workers. In this regard, the Government indicates that, as of 31 March 2020, 5,026 persons with disabilities were employed in 834 public entities, and in 2020, 4,290 certifications were issued in public procurement processes to employers having engaged persons with disabilities. In 2018, 466 employers benefited from tax incentives granted for engaging persons with disabilities, an increase of 25 per cent compared with the previous four years. On 19 May 2023, the National Development Plan (PND) 2022–2026 was also adopted, establishing measures to ensure inclusive education and work for persons with disabilities, including broadening the range of institutional training programmes for inclusive and accessible work, initiatives to facilitate access to work for persons with disabilities in the public sector and strengthening the strategies of providers of the Public Employment Service (SPE) to promote the employment of persons with disabilities. The Government also indicates that funding has been provided for entrepreneurial initiatives undertaken by persons with disabilities, outreach activities have been conducted targeting employers and representatives of various national bodies, and enterprises have been advised on employment inclusion mechanisms and labour intermediation services for persons with disabilities. In addition, a new Disability and Inclusion Policy is under development, including measures to provide opportunities for the advancement of persons with disabilities in the spheres of education and production. Finally, the Committee notes the ANDI's indication of the implementation, in collaboration with various public and private entities and organizations of persons with disabilities, of the model Productivity Pact of the Enterprise Programme for the Promotion of Employment for Persons with Disabilities in 1,700 enterprises, around 30 per cent of which have engaged persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that the programme aims to develop a replicable and sustainable model to make the recruitment of persons with disabilities effective and productive for individuals and enterprises. The ANDI also refers to the introduction of the Seal of Inclusion to endorse an employer's corporate responsibility as an inclusive organization and indicates that, through a partnership with the National Learning Service (SENA), 1,116 persons with disabilities have participated in vocational training.

However, the Committee notes, based on data from the National Department of Statistics (DANE), that while 52.3 per cent of persons with disabilities are of working age, only 15.5 per cent are engaged in work and only 2.5 per cent are in formal employment or have an income equivalent to a minimum wage. The Committee also notes that, in their observations, the CTC, the CGT and the CUT maintain that the legislative measures adopted have not had an impact on the creation of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities in the open labour market due to barriers in academic training and misperceptions among employers regarding the strengthened employment stability guaranteed to persons with disabilities. They also note that unemployment figures for persons with disabilities are under-reported, thus impeding an assessment of the real impact of the measures taken. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts in both the political and legal fields, including in relation to the monitoring and allocation of the necessary funding for the implementation of the measures adopted to secure, retain and promote opportunities for persons with disabilities to find employment in the open labour market, both in the public and private sectors, including measures targeting small and medium-sized enterprises. It also requests the Government to send detailed information on the measures taken in this regard, including information on the impact of Decree No. 2011 of 30 November 2017 and Decree No. 392 of 26 February 2018 on employment generation for persons with disabilities. It further requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the new Disability and Inclusion Policy, and to provide a copy thereof once it has been adopted. The Committee lastly requests the Government to respond to the above-mentioned concerns raised by the trade union confederations.

Article 3. Vocational rehabilitation measures. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the public employment and vocational guidance services have specialized units providing assistance to persons with disabilities, including remote assistance using new technologies. The Government reports on the implementation by the SPE of the inclusive employment model with a focus on bridging gaps, including programmes, methodologies and instruments tailored to the jobseeker's profile, with a view to producing effective and targeted interventions in relation to population groups facing the greatest labour market integration difficulties, including persons with disabilities. In this framework, since 2019, the SPE implements the Labour Inclusion Strategy for persons with disabilities with the objective of promoting the employment of persons with disabilities in the public and private sectors. The Committee observes that, according to the Public Employment Service Information System (SISE) and the SENA, between 2018 and February 2020, 12,255 persons with disabilities were registered with the SPE, 4,852 of whom were placed in employment. In April 2021, the SPE singled out 23 employment centres for their inclusiveness. While taking due note of the information provided by the Government concerning the measures taken to promote employment opportunities for persons with disabilities in the open labour market, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on how it ensures, both in law and in practice, that appropriate vocational rehabilitation measures are made available to all persons with disabilities. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken, in terms of the creation of employment opportunities for such persons in the open labour market.

Article 5. Consultations. The Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 2177 of 22 December 2017, establishing the Disability Inclusion Council (CID), with the objective of coordinating training initiatives for the work and employment of persons with disabilities in the private sector. The CID includes among its members representatives of workers' confederations, employers' organizations and organizations of persons with various types of disabilities. The CID is responsible for, among other functions, coordinating initiatives for the social, labour market and productive inclusion of persons with disabilities; promoting and disseminating the effective exercise of the rights to social, labour market and productive inclusion of persons with disabilities through various initiatives, such as campaigns, strategies and participation mechanisms; and promoting the establishment of a national network of inclusive enterprises. The Government indicates that, in this framework, subcommittees for social, labour market and productive inclusion have been established in the disability committees of nine cities. The Government adds that the policies and programmes of the National Council on Disability (CND) are regularly reviewed in Sectoral Liaison Groups (GES), comprising representatives from various government ministries and agencies. The CTC, CGT and CUT maintain, for their part, that no opportunities for consultation with workers' organizations have been provided to discuss policies affecting workers with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which representative organizations of employers and workers and representative organizations of persons with disabilities are consulted on the implementation and periodic review of the national policy for the vocational rehabilitation of persons with disabilities, including in the framework of the Disability Inclusion Council (CID).

Article 7. Vocational training for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the SENA does not provide any specific training for persons with disabilities, but rather makes reasonable accommodations to the various training programmes in accordance with labour market demand, and the interests of persons with disabilities. The Committee also notes that the PND provides for the establishment of the national equal opportunities programme for higher education access, retention and graduation of persons with disabilities, together with the implementation of initiatives to phase out the segregated provision of education for persons with disabilities. The Government also indicates the adoption of Decree No. 1421 of 2017, which regulates, within the framework of inclusive education, the provision of education for persons with disabilities. The Decree provides for measures to encourage the participation of young persons with disabilities in training processes. The Government also refers to the implementation of entrepreneurship programmes by the SENA for persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that between 2017 and 2019, 81,243 persons with disabilities were trained as apprentices.

The Committee observes, however, the alarming number of young persons with disabilities who lack access to formal education. The Government indicates that, according to statistical information from the DANE, less than 10 per cent of persons with disabilities have access to the formal education system. Trade union confederations further note the low levels of education of persons with disabilities. By way of example, they indicate that, according to statistical information of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), only 56 out of every 100 young persons with disabilities (between 15 and 24 years of age) can read and write, while among the general population the proportion is 98 out of every 100. The Committee wishes to underline in this respect that the lack of access to quality education seriously compromises the future of young persons with disabilities by depriving them of the possibility to participate fully in the labour market, at a time when the market is undergoing rapid transformations, including digital transformations, which offer great potential for the integration of persons with disabilities into the open labour market. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts, in collaboration with the social partners, with a view to improving the extremely low levels of participation of young persons with disabilities in the education system and to ensure inclusive education. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the concrete measures taken in this respect, including information on the impact of such measures on the ability of persons with disabilities to secure, remain and advance in employment.

Article 8. Services in rural areas and remote communities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the SPE provides specific assistance to persons with disabilities through mobile units in the country's remotest regions and municipalities involved in the peace process. The Government further indicates that a virtual course is planned in a number of remote municipalities with a view to strengthening employment channels for persons with disabilities in such areas. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote non-discrimination, accessibility, and the establishment and development of vocational rehabilitation and employment services for persons with disabilities, both in rural areas and remote communities.

Article 9. Training of qualified staff. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the SPE providers receive training on the physical and technological adaptations necessary to ensure appropriate assistance to persons with disabilities. In addition, in 2020, the Guide on Adjustments to the Employability Road Map with a Focus on Persons with Disabilities was presented to 198 civil servants, 63 SPE providers and labour sector entities. The SPE also has a virtual course for civil servants to strengthen competences for the inclusion of persons with disabilities in the labour market. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved through the measures taken with regard to the training of rehabilitation officers and other qualified staff involved in vocational guidance, vocational training, placement, and employment of persons with disabilities in the open labour market. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number of civil servants who have received training on the inclusion of persons with disabilities, as well as on the availability of qualified staff for vocational rehabilitation.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations made by the Workers Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 August 2017. It requests the Government to provide its comments on the matter.

Article 1 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. Youth employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate in its next report whether the Act issuing the national employment policy had been adopted and to indicate whether specific difficulties had been encountered in achieving the objectives set out in the national Poverty Reduction and Growth Strategy Paper (PRGSP). The Committee notes with interest that the national employment policy act (PNE) was adopted through the promulgation on 3 July 2014 of Decree No. 14-11/PR enacting Framework Act No. 14-020/AU of 21 May 2014 issuing the national employment policy. The Government indicates that this Act aims to provide a common and coherent vision of the strategic approaches for taking national action on employment, by increasing opportunities for low-income population groups to access decent work and a stable and sustainable income. The Government adds that in November 2014, with ILO support, it developed and adopted the Emergency Plan for Youth Employment (PUREJ), which is part of the process to implement the PNE. The PUREJ involves the adoption of programmes to promote youth employment which result from priority measures identified in the strategic framework of the PNE and integrated in the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (SCA2D). The Government adds that the overall objective of the PUREJ is to ensure strong employment growth in the short and medium term. In this context, the PUREJ focuses mainly on the promotion of youth employment in job-creating sectors for a period of two years, in order to contribute to the diversification of the economy, the production of goods and services and the building of social peace. The Government points out that the objective was to create 5,000 new decent and productive jobs for young persons and women by the end of 2016, through the development of skills in line with the needs of priority sectors of the Comorian economy and support for the promotion of employment and vocational integration. The Committee notes that in May 2015 the Government signed, together with the constituents and the ILO, the second generation Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP), of which the main priority is to ensure the promotion and governance of employment. The Committee notes the observations of the CTC which indicate that the implementation of the PNE is not effective. It points out that the vocational training component, which is being conducted through a project with the European Union, is the only one being applied. In this regard, the provisions and mechanisms of the PNE have not been implemented and the text has not been disseminated to the public. The CTC also reports the dismissal of over 5,000 young persons without compensation. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether specific difficulties have been encountered in achieving the objectives set out in the PRGSP. It requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the measures taken with a view to achieving the employment priorities established in the framework of the DWCP 2015–19, and on the impact of measures and programmes such as the PUREJ, which are aimed at increasing access to decent work for young persons. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of young persons who have benefited from these programmes.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made with the collection of data on the labour market, and on the manner in which this data is taken into consideration during the formulation and implementation of the employment policy. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee once again requests the Government to include full information on the consultations envisaged in Article 3 of the Convention, which requires the participation of all of the persons affected, and particularly employers' and workers' representatives, in the formulation and implementation of employment policies. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures without delay.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP), transmitted by the Government with its report. It also notes the observations of the Rerum Novarum Workers' Confederation (CTRN), the Costa Rican Confederation of Democratic Workers (CCTD), the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Confederation (CMTC), the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), and the United Confederation of Workers (CUT), as well as the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) in June 2023 regarding the application of the Convention. In its conclusions, the Committee regretted that the Government had failed to establish and implement a comprehensive national policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment in full consultation with the social partners.

Taking into account the discussion of the case, the CAS urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the following measures: (i) adopt a comprehensive national employment policy to promote the creation of full, productive and freely chosen employment opportunities in line with the Convention; (ii) intensify efforts to strengthen social dialogue and include the social partners on the initiatives already developed as well as those that may be implemented in the future, notably on employment policies and programmes, incorporation of young people in the labour market as well as promotion of gender equality and equal opportunities in access to employment; (iii) provide information on the impact of the measures adopted to achieve the objectives of the Convention, including those adopted under the National Strategy for Employment and Productive Development (ENDEP) and the Bicentennial National Development and Public Investment Plan (PNDIP) 2019–22; (iv) take measures to ensure that the Act on strengthening public finances fully complies with the Convention and does not infringe on fundamental principles and rights at work; (v) indicate the manner in which representatives of workers' and employers' organizations have been consulted, as well as representatives of the parties involved in the design, development, implementation, monitoring and revision of the active labour market measures adopted, including the Act on strengthening public finances; and (vi) ensure tripartite consultation on the development of employment policies and programmes by creating a national tripartite council. The CAS asked the Government to provide the Committee of Experts with full and complete information on the above issues before 1 September 2023.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adoption and implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report on the policies, programmes and actions implemented to promote the creation of employment, in particular to promote the employability of the population. Among the measures taken, the Government highlights the launch on 26 July 2023 of the National Strategy on Employability and Human Talent (ENETH-CR) 2023–27, which was drawn up with the technical assistance of the ILO Regional Office for Central America and the Caribbean. The aim of the ENETH-CR is to improve the employability of active jobseekers, especially women, young persons and individuals living in conditions of poverty, with a view to promoting more inclusive and sustainable economic growth. The Government also indicates that, thanks to the creation of the National Employment System (SNE) in 2019, public employment services now carry out more focused work, and access to these services is guaranteed in all parts of the country through a network of employment units. The Government adds that the SNE is also responsible for ensuring that the services offered respond not only to the dynamics of the labour market but also to the needs of individuals, especially those living in situations of vulnerability. Furthermore, the Government indicates that various reports on the State of the Nation Programme (PEN), conducted independently by universities in the country, have underlined the inequalities that exist in territorial development and have highlighted the need to tackle territorial gaps to avoid any worsening of problems which are preventing significant progress in productivity and social equity in the country. In this regard, the Government indicates that, thanks to the implementation of the Act on strengthening territorial competitiveness to attract investment outside the Greater Metropolitan Area (GAM) (Act No. 10234 of 2022), a greater number of jobs outside the GAM has been created. The Government indicates that free zone enterprises have created 159,331 direct jobs (88,555 occupied by men and 69,775 by women). The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the results of the National Development and Public Investment Plan (PNDIP) 2019–22. The Government indicates that although many of the targets set in the PNDIP were achieved, some were not achieved with respect to reducing open unemployment and increasing formal employment in 2022, partly because the labour market is still recovering from the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee also notes the adoption of the new National Development and Public Investment Plan (PNDIP) 2023–26, which provides for the adoption of, inter alia, public policy measures aimed at promoting an appropriate ecosystem for facilitating the entry into the job market of persons in situations of vulnerability (such as women, young people and persons with disabilities). The PNDIP 2023–26 also provides for the implementation of public actions aimed at ensuring a better match between occupational demand and the technical and vocational training of workers. As regards labour market trends, the Committee notes that, according to the ongoing survey of employment of the National Statistics and Census Institute (INEC), in the first quarter of 2023 the net participation rate and the occupation rate were 56.8 per cent and 50.7 per cent, respectively, while the unemployment rate was 10.6 per cent. The Government also indicates that the proportion of persons occupied in the informal economy was 41.8 per cent. The Committee also notes that, on the basis of available INEC information on the PNDIP 2023–26, the income poverty index (level of income below the minimum needed to cover the price of the basic food basket (CBA)) was 21 per cent in 2021.

The Committee also notes that the ITUC claims in its observations that the number of men and women who have stopped looking for work has increased. The confederation claims that over a million women are outside the labour market, which is twice the number of men. The ITUC also highlights the alarming levels of poverty and unemployment and denounces the worrying lack of action by the Government. The Confederation also emphasizes that unstable and insecure forms of employment are omnipresent and there is an alarming number of persons who lack legal protection and social security benefits. In this regard, the ITUC highlights the lack of robust government initiatives to provide incentives to make the transition from the informal to the formal economy. The CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT point out that even though, in the context of a tripartite formalization committee, a national strategy was designed with ILO assistance in 2018 and various action plans were formulated to implement it in 2020, these measures were not implemented because of lack of action by the Government. The unions add that there is no linkage between employment policies and policies aimed at formalizing the informal economy. Lastly, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT reiterate that the Government has not established or implemented a comprehensive national policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment in full consultation with the social partners. They underline the need to formulate and implement a comprehensive employment policy as a matter of urgency.

In this context, the Committee notes the approval of the road map for the formulation of a national employment policy by the Higher Labour Council (CST) on 5 October 2023. The road map was proposed by ILO experts at the CST meeting of 21 September 2023. The Committee also notes that the Government is requesting ILO technical and financial assistance to formulate a national employment policy based on tripartite social dialogue. The Committee welcomes the first steps taken by the Government aimed at formulating, with the participation of the social partners, a comprehensive national employment policy to promote opportunities for full, productive and freely chosen employment. The Committee hopes that any new policy framework established will make it possible to give effect to the conclusions adopted in June 2023 by the International Labour Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and to hold effective consultations with the social partners on all concerns raised by them in their observations. The Committee requests the Government to send information on progress achieved in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to continue sending detailed information, disaggregated by age, sex and region of the country, on the results achieved in terms of the creation of employment as a result of the implementation of government programmes. In addition, given the high rate of informality, the Committee requests the Government to send detailed information on the scope of the informal economy and on the measures taken, in coordination with its national employment policy, to facilitate the transition to the formal economy. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the guidance provided by the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204).

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication that both the regulatory reforms and the most relevant national labour market active policy initiatives have been the result of participatory social dialogue processes. The Government also indicates that tripartite consultations on the development of SNE employment policies and programmes take place in the Employment Council. Under section 7 of Decree No. 41776-MTSS establishing the SNE, the functions of the Employment Council include: (i) issuing SNE policies and monitoring compliance with them; (ii) laying down guidelines and actions to govern employment services in line with changes in the labour market; (iii) establishing target groups for the SNE; (iv) promoting training programmes; and (v) approving the use of research results and instruments to provide guidance for employment services. In this regard, the Government indicates that the ENETH-CR was unanimously approved in the Employment Council. The Government also refers to other ongoing forums for tripartite consultations, such as the CST and the board of the National Training Institute (INA). The Committee also notes that the UCCAEP maintains that most actions implemented regarding employment and employability have tripartite involvement. In this regard, the UCCAEP refers, inter alia, to the drawing up of the Dual Education and Technical Training Act in a tripartite dialogue committee and also to the approval of various actions aimed at preserving jobs in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Committee also notes that the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT state that although there has been a relative improvement in the Ministry of Labour's efforts to engage in social dialogue regarding the ENETH-CR, this has been the only initiative discussed to date by the Employment Council. In this regard, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT and CCTD attach the minutes of the relevant meeting of the Council, in which they state that the theoretical formulation of the ENETH-CR is interesting but add that their participation in the design of it was only partial, since there was insufficient feedback and tripartite discussion. They assert that the ENETH-CR document of some 150 pages was sent to them only a day and a half before it was submitted to the Employment Council for approval. The CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT also indicate that there has been no intensification of the tripartite dialogue on employment policies and programmes, such as those adopted in relation to the integration of young people in the labour market and the promotion of gender equality. By way of example, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT point out that the social partners do not participate in the monitoring of the results of employment programmes such as Empléate, Mi Primer Empleo and Chamba Vivís Mejor, and assert that there is no information available on their contribution to securing employment. Lastly, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CCTD and CUT maintain that tripartite consultations should not be exclusively limited to employment policy measures but should also include all aspect of economic policy which affect employment. They emphasize that there is a need to hold consultations with the social partners not only on labour market and vocational training programmes but also on the design of more general economic policies which are related to the promotion of employment. In this regard, the Committee recalls that employment policy must take due account of the interrelationship between employment objectives and other economic and social objectives and, in particular, should seek to stimulate economic growth and development, while increasing the standard of living and addressing the issue of unemployment and underemployment. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide specific examples of how consultation is ensured with representatives of workers' and employers' organizations and with representatives of persons affected by the measures to be taken as regards the design, development, implementation, monitoring and revision of the active labour market measures adopted, with a view to taking fully into account their experience and views and securing their full cooperation in formulating and enlisting support for such policies, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 25 August 2022. It also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee notes that both observations raise issues in relation to the application of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adoption and implementation of an active employment policy. ILO technical assistance. In response to previous comments, the Government indicates in its report that, although the strategy for the formulation of a national employment policy was commenced in April 2003, and new structures have been established, the preparation of a national employment policy paper has still not been completed. The Committee notes that the National Employment Forum held in 2010 showed the need to develop a new employment policy adapted to labour market needs, which will have to target as a priority the reform of the vocational training system and the improvement of employment support services. The Government indicates that, out of a population of 818,159 inhabitants of working age, recent estimates place the unemployment rate at 48.4 per cent. It also indicates that, following a mission for the evaluation of technical cooperation undertaken by the ILO in March 2011, the Government reiterated its commitment to developing a Djibouti Decent Work Programme. It adds that it is still awaiting Office support for this purpose. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies, and on the progress made in the adoption of a national policy for the achievement of full employment within the meaning of the Convention.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that in 2012, despite a certain improvement, unemployment particularly affected young persons with higher education degrees. Moreover, although the country does not currently have a formal strategy to promote youth employment, several initiatives have been established to improve the operation of the labour market, promote entrepreneurship and provide training adapted to labour market needs. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the manner in which the measures adopted have resulted in productive and lasting employment opportunities for young persons, and on the collaboration of the social partners in their implementation.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. In March 2014, the Government provided the summary of the employment situation prepared by the National Employment and Skills Observatory. The number of jobs is increasing (30,118 jobs created in 2007, 35,393 in 2008 and 37,837 in 2010). The Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures taken to improve the labour market information system and to consolidate the mechanisms linking this system with decision-making in the field of employment policy. It also requests the Government to provide updated statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, as well as any other relevant data relating to the size and distribution of the workforce, the nature and scope of unemployment and underemployment and the respective trends.

Article 3. Collaboration of the social partners. The Committee recalls the importance of the consultations required by the Convention and once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged for the consultation of the representatives of the persons affected on employment policies.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 9 of the Convention. Legal status and conditions governing the operation of private employment agencies (PEA). Prohibition of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's report indicating the amendment of Proclamation No. 923/2016, after the consultation of the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, Employment and Health, immigration authorities, the Federal Technical and Vocational Education and Training Institute, the regional state labour offices, the general attorney, and PEA associations (referred to as stakeholders), through Proclamation No. 1246/2021, which is applicable to overseas employment relations. With this amendment, the Government indicates that it aimed at facilitating the mediation of skilled and semi-skilled workers abroad, which has commenced with the implementation of Proclamation No. 923/2016 as of May 2017, resulting in the lifting of the ban on PEAs. The Government states that the 621 PEAs operating in the country since are engaged in mediating workers to Jordan, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, and the United Arab Emirates. The Government further indicates that PEAs cannot provide placement services to persons below 18 years age of and that violations result in the revocation of the license and that no violations have been recorded. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the legal status of all PEAs, operating domestically or in a cross-border context, following the entry into force of Proclamation No. 1246/2021, as well as on the conditions governing their operation (Article 3 of the Convention). It also requests the Government to indicate the consultations held with the most representative organizations of employers and workers with a view to defining the legal status of PEAs. Should PEAs not be regulated by appropriate national law and practice, the Government is requested to indicate whether a system of licensing or certification has been put in place. Finally, the Government is requested to supply copies of abstracts of annual reports of labour inspection services or other bodies responsible for monitoring compliance with the labour law framework indicating how the prohibition for PEAs to place persons under 18 years of age in employed is enforced in practice. The Government is also requested to indicate the specific and concrete measures taken or envisaged to ensure that child labour is not used or supplied by PEAs in a cross-border and domestic context, in accordance with Article 9 of the Convention.

Article 7(2). Fees and costs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that according to Proclamation No. 923/2016, employers and migrant workers are to cover their own expenses and that the stakeholders were consulted as regards the authorized exceptions to Article 7(1) of the Convention. The Committee notes that section 4 of Proclamation No. 1246/2021, which introduces a new subparagraph 5 to section 10 of Proclamation No. 923/2016, stipulates that any worker employed overseas through an employment agency, except in domestic work, is required to remit an amount equivalent to up to one month's salary to the employment agency, distributed over four payment periods. It also notes that the other payment obligations for workers in section 10 of Proclamation No. 923/2016 remain in effect. The Committee recalls once again that the competent authority may authorize fees or costs to be charged to workers only for services provided in their interest, and after consulting the most representative organizations of employers and workers. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the conditions under which the above fees may be charged and the types of services provided by PEAs in exchange of such fees.

Article 8(1) and (2). Protection and prevention of abuses of migrant workers placed abroad. The Government reports that four bilateral labour agreements/memoranda of understanding were concluded with Arab Gulf countries and that it exchanges information with governments of destination countries in addition to collaborating with PEA in Ethiopia and their counterparts overseas, Ethiopian missions and communities. The Committee notes that according to section 5 of Proclamation No. 1246/2021, which replaces section 12 of Proclamation No. 923/2016, the mediation of labour abroad prerequisites a bilateral agreement or memorandum of understanding, respectively, for the mediation of skilled labour, as well as a government permission ensuring the rights and safety of the workers. Furthermore, section 6 of Proclamation No. 1246/2021 foresees the establishment of the Ethiopian Overseas Employment Board to coordinate relevant stakeholders and to ensure the strengthening of the implementation of overseas employment and the protection of Ethiopians employed overseas. The Committee requests the Government to provide updates on the development and implementation of bilateral labour agreements concluded with countries receiving migrant workers from Ethiopia with the objective to prevent abuses and fraudulent practices in the recruitment, placement, and employment of Ethiopian migrant workers abroad. Additionally, the Committee asks the Government to supply copies of these agreements and information on the advancements in establishing the Ethiopian Overseas Employment Board.

Articles 11, 12 and 13. Adequate protection and allocation of responsibilities. Cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. In the absence of specific information regarding the manner in which effect is given to these Articles of the Convention in either a domestic or cross-border context, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide updated detailed information on the nature and impact of measures taken to ensure protection for all workers in relation to each of the areas covered under Article 11. It also requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which responsibilities are allocated between private employment agencies and user enterprises as required under Article 12 of the Convention. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised model employment contract and updated information on its effective use. It further requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the manner in which effect is given to Article 13 of the Convention and to provide extracts of the reports submitted by private employment agencies to the public employment service as well as to specify the information that is made publicly available.

Articles 10 and 14. Adequate machinery and procedures for the investigation of complaints. Supervision, remedies and penalties. The Government reports that most complaints pertain to delays in the payment of monthly salaries, workloads, and sickness, and that PEAs are encouraged to solve these with their counterparts, partly involving Ethiopian missions. For 2021, 55 to 60 complaints were registered for the more than 16.000 workers abroad. The Government also states that PEAs refusing to solve a complaint are suspended from their activity until the complaint is settled. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the type and number of complaints received and the manner in which they were resolved, the number of workers covered by the Convention, the number and nature of infringements reported, as well as the remedies, including penalties, provided for and effectively applied in the event of violations of the Convention.

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) as well as of National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN) communicated with the Government's report. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 1, 2, 3 and 11 of the Convention. Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes the Government's update on legislative and other initiatives implemented during the reporting period and on the number of the entities forming the public employment service (PES) in May 2023. Public Employment Security Offices were present in 436 locations, two of which are dedicated to day laborers; Public Employment Security Branch Offices were present in 95 locations, four of which are dedicated to day laborers, and Public Employment Security Branch Stations were present in 13 locations. The Government reports that in 2022, this nationwide network of PES offices and the independently implemented employment measures of local governments, which also offer free employment placement services, assisted 2,819,752 jobseekers and mediated 652,431 into employment; in January 2023, 262,643 received assistance, resulting in 42,931 employment placements. The Committee notes the observations of JTUC-RENGO, emphasizing the need to improve the cooperation of the Public Employment Security Office and local governments, as well as other organizations to enable foreigners in Japan and abroad to find employment and improve their integration into the community. The Committee also notes that in reply to its questions, the Government, while describing the relationship between the PES and private placement businesses as non-exclusive, indicated that as part of the Hello Work programme, PES widely provides information to its private partners and also directs jobseekers to those partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legislative measures and initiatives implemented and the impact and effectiveness of those. It requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the manner in which the synergies between the PES and the private employment agencies are ensured. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of: public employment offices established, employment applications received, vacancies notified and persons placed in employment by the PES, disaggregated by central and local levels. Lastly, in light of the observations made by JTUC-RENGO, the Committee requests the Government to provide information with respect to the type and scope of employment services provided to migrant workers.

Articles 4 and 5. Participation of the social partners. The Government indicates that the deliberations of the Employment Security Division of the Labour Policy Council, composed of workers and employers from the public sector addresses, inter alia, job placement and vocational guidance, promoting reemployment particularly for older persons, regional employment development, and labour and demand systems in the private sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the contributions made by the social partners within the Labour Policy Council or any other tripartite body, including at the local government level, in the organization and operation of the PES and the development of employment service policies.

Article 7(b). Measures to meet the needs of particular categories of applicants for employment. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous request, the Government describes measures targeting former nursing and care workers, as well as mothers. It also elaborates on the proposed legislative measures considered by the Subcommittee on Employment of Persons with Disabilities of the Labour Policy Council and the measures focusing on persons with disabilities, including workers with mental disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information concerning the arrangements made to give effect to this Article, including the occupations, industries and special categories of jobseekers for which special arrangements have been made.

Article 9. Staff of the PES. The Committee notes the observations of ZENROREN, deploring lay-offs of permanent employees and their replacement with non-permanent workers. In April 2023, there were 20,123 non-permanent employees, while there was a decrease in permanent workers from 1968 to 2023, falling from 14,606 to 10,219 officials in April 2023 – a level significantly lower than in other industrialized countries. According to ZENROREN, the fluctuation of non-permanent staff, who are employed for between one and three years, negatively affects their training and therefore reduces institutional memory and the quality of services they provide. ZENROREN claims that negotiations in this respect with the Government were unsuccessful, and calls for more permanent employment in the PES. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information concerning the status and conditions of service of the employment services staff, and general information concerning the methods of recruitment and selection of this staff. Furthermore, it requests the Government to indicate the arrangements made to ensure the training of employment service staff for the performance of their duties, including: (a) arrangements for their initial training at the time of appointment to the service; and (b) arrangements for subsequent training.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1986)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) and those made by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), transmitted by the Government together with its 2023 report. The Committee also notes the observations made by the Rentai Union Suginami, the Apaken Kobe (Casual/Temporary/Part-time Non-regular Workers' Union), the Rentai Workers' Union (Itabashi-ku Section) and the Union Rakuda (Kyoto Municipality Related Workers' Independent Union) received in September 2022 and the Government's comments thereon from November 2022.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. The Committee notes that in response to its previous observations, the Government provides an overview of various employment measures and initiatives undertaken across different sectors, including in the areas of skill development, work-life balance, support for specific groups such as women, youth, the elderly, and persons with disabilities, and the integration of foreign human resources. The Government emphasizes the need for collaboration between the public and private sectors to enhance labour productivity, upgrade workers' skills, and promote social participation. More particularly, the report informs that the Japan Revitalization Strategy has been succeeded by the "Grand Design and Action Plan for a New Form of Capitalism", approved by the Cabinet on June 7, 2022. The new plan emphasizes the strengthening of investment in human capital, recognizing the importance of people in the context of major changes like digital transformation and energy transformation. A 400 billion Japanese yen package of measures over three years will be implemented to support skill development, re-employment, and advancement for workers, including non-regular employees. Initiatives from the "Long-term Vision for Overcoming Population Decline and Vitalizing the Local Economy in Japan" are being implemented to encourage active participation in society for women, youth, the elderly, and people with disabilities. Efforts for women include mandatory action plans, disclosure of information, certification of excellency for employers, and support for work-life balance, with subsidies provided to SME employers. The Government further indicates that youth employment initiatives continue under the Act on the Promotion of Employment for Young People and that support for the elderly includes lifelong participation support counters, Silver Human Resource Centers, and the "Lifelong Participation Community Development Environmental Improvement Project." Moreover, the "Basic Principle for Labour Policies" emphasizes the reform of work styles and outlines the significance of preparing an environment for accepting foreign human resources. In this respect, the "Guidelines for Employment Management of Foreign Nationals" guide the Labour Bureaus and Hello Work in conducting seminars for employers employing foreign nationals, aiming to improve employment management. The Government also mentions the existence of procedures for determining and reviewing employment measures, including amendments to labour laws, and involve inquiries and reporting by the Labour Policy Council, which has a tripartite composition and includes representatives of the public sector, labour, and management. Referring to the specific comments it is also formulating in respect of the specific occupational groups referred to above, the Committee takes due note of this information and requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the impact of these measures on the employment situation in the country. It also requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information, including statistics on employment trends, disaggregated by age, sex and economic sector, as well as data on labour productivity and the share of disposable income held by the poorest sections of the population. The Committee also again reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed updated information on the procedures for deciding on and reviewing employment measures implemented within the framework of an overall economic and social policy.

Employment of women. With reference to its previous comments in relation to women's employment, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report in respect of: (i) the revision of the Act on Promotion of Female Participation and Career Advancement in the Workplace to require employers with more than 100 regularly employed workers to assess the status of and analyse issues related to women's active participation in their enterprises; and also require employers to develop an action plan including numerical targets to promote women's participation; (ii) the revision of the Child Care and Family Care Leave Act to establish a flexible childcare leave framework for men and require employers to create a workplace environment that makes it easier for them to take childcare leave; (iii) raising awareness of labour laws by preparing comic-style learning materials on labour laws and distributing them to schools and universities; the Government also dispatches officials from the Labour Bureau to schools to give lectures on labour-related laws and regulations; (iv) the provision of guidance on career-tracking systems – the Government refers to the guidelines on important considerations for employers which provide examples of cases that immediately conflict with the Act on Securing, Etc. of Equal Opportunity and Treatment between Men and Women in Employment, as well as examples of matters that should be considered for more appropriate and smooth operation of the systems; and (v) the enforcement of the law – strict measures being taken against employers who use career-tracking systems for de facto gender-segregated employment management. Pursuant to the report, these steps have led to some progress in promoting gender equality in the workplace. For example, the employment rate of women in Japan has increased from 51.3 per cent in 2018 to 53.0 per cent in 2022. However, more work needs to be done, with the percentage of women in management positions still at a relatively low level. The Government indicates it is committed to continue taking steps to promote gender equality in the workplace.

The Committee notes that, pursuant to the observations made by JTUC-RENGO, while 53.4 per cent of employed women work in non-regular forms of work, this is the case for only 22.2 per cent of employed men – less than half of the rate of women for the same category. The assessment of women's active engagement should not rely solely on increased employment numbers but also consider the quality of their employment. Japan's low ranking of 125th out of 146 nations in the Gender Gap Index (GGI) is attributed to delayed gender equality efforts in politics and economics. The Government's "Priority Policy for Women's Active Engagement and Gender Equality 2023" targets a 30 per cent ratio of women in prime listed companies by 2030, but urgent issues persist, particularly for non-regular female workers. Deeply rooted gender roles contribute to many women working as non-regular employees, with men's limited involvement in housework and childcare exacerbating the issue. Efforts to disclose information through the Act on Promotion of Women's Engagement are deemed insufficient by JTUC-RENGO, emphasizing the need for comprehensive analysis and corrective measures. Despite the 2023 revision of the Childcare and Family Leave Act, men's parental leave rates remain low, requiring the government to incentivize and foster a culture valuing work-life balance during childcare. While recognizing the Government's steps against gender discrimination in career-tracking, JTUC-RENGO calls for more to ensure employer compliance and investigation into potential covert use of diverse regular employee systems to circumvent the Equal Employment Opportunity Act.

Taking into account the above information, the Committee considers that, in the context of a labour market impacted by a diminishing and ageing population, increasing the employment of women by reducing disincentives to work in the tax and social security system and by further expanding childcare and breaking down labour market dualism, would result in positive employment outcomes and would also help lower income inequality and boost productivity by potentially also encouraging firm-based training. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and type of employment contract, on all measures taken or envisaged to promote women's access to decent and lasting employment, including in managerial and decision-making positions, and prevent gender-based discrimination. Taking into account the observations formulated by the JTUC-RENGO, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on measures aimed at promoting equitable sharing of family responsibilities that enable both women and men to exercise their right to better reconcile their professional and family responsibilities and ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in workplaces on the basis of both sex and family responsibilities. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the restrictions related to the gender-based career-tracking system to ensure that women and men enjoy freedom of choice in employment and occupation, as contemplated in Article 1(2)(c) of the Convention.

Older workers. In reply to the Committee's previous requests, the Government outlines initiatives addressing the challenges and opportunities linked to increasing life expectancy, with the goal of establishing a lifelong active society allowing elderly individuals desiring to work to continue doing so regardless of age. Measures include actions to ensure stable employment, such as the Act on Stabilization of Employment of Elderly Persons, requiring enterprises to secure employment until age 65 and granting subsidies to those extending employment for workers aged 66 or older. Recognizing that needs are diverse, the Government encourages, on a non-binding basis, enterprises to adopt measures for work until age 70. As of June 2022, almost all enterprises with 21 or more employees have implemented such measures. The Government plans ongoing guidance for smaller enterprises. Support for Re-Employment includes increasing lifelong participation support counters, a career agency project for retirees, and subsidies for enterprises hiring middle-aged and elderly workers. Diversified local employment opportunities are promoted through the "Lifelong Participation Community Development Environmental Improvement Project" and Silver Human Resource Centers. The Committee takes due note of the above measures and wishes to stress that promoting the labour force participation of older workers is of utmost important and requires a multifaceted strategy that addresses demographic challenges, enhances economic productivity, ensures the sustainability of social security systems, and fosters the well-being of individuals and society as a whole. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the impact of the measures taken to promote productive employment of older workers, indicating in particular: (i) assessments of how older workers' workforce participation can contribute to sustained economic growth and of what is the impact of continued employment of older workers on the entry in the labour market of women and young persons; (ii) how measures taken to promote labour force participation of older workers have contributed to addressing the demographic challenges and imbalances and mitigate the economic impact of a shrinking labour force; (iii) the expected effects of the continued participation of older workers to the labour force on overall economic productivity and social security sustainability, taking into account that Japan assumes obligations under Part V of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102); (iv) whether encouraging continued employment is accompanied in any way by a reduction in retirement options or incentives for older workers; and (v) whether and how older workers' workforce participation has helped address skilled labour shortages and maintain the competitiveness of certain industries but also contributed to knowledge transfer to younger

Article 3. Consultations. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government reiterates that important matters relating to the enactment, revision and enforcement of laws and regulations on employment policies are deliberated at the Labour Policy Council. This council, operating under the tripartite principle with representatives from the public interest, workers, and employers, serves as a platform for deliberations. Meanwhile, the Government has had consultations with the representatives of employers and employees affected by employment policies. Discussions held and opinions submitted at related councils are reflected in the designing and planning of employment policies. Since June 2016, the Labour Policy Council has held approximately 850 sessions (including Subcommittees and Working Groups) to discuss reviews of the Employment Security Act and the Vocational Abilities Development Promotion Act. As to the manner in which representatives of those affected by the measures concerned are consulted, the Government refers to the example of how employment policies taking into account the needs of persons with disabilities are developed, stating that tripartite participants, together with representatives of persons with disabilities broadly express their opinions at the Subcommittee for the Employment of Persons with Disabilities under the jurisdiction of the Labour Policy Council. In its observations received with the 2023 Government report, the JTUC-RENGO, referring to the "Grand Design and Action Plan for a New Form of Capitalism", considers that it is important that matters pertaining to employment and labour, which are of significant importance, undergo thorough discussions within the Labour Policy Council which operates under the tripartite principle involving the government, workers, and employers, and the outcomes of these discussions should be incorporated into government policies. The translation of these discussions into concrete policies and measures is forthcoming, and it is therefore imperative that these decisions are made through careful deliberations. In this respect, it is essential to consider the perspectives of workers and employers, who possess a deep understanding of workplace dynamics, in the Labour Policy Council. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the tripartite Labour Policy Council with respect to the development, implementation and review of employment policy measures and programmes, and the manner in which they are coordinated with other economic and social policies.

Moreover, the Committee also notes that in their observations from September 2022, the Rentai Union Suginami, the Apaken Kobe (Casual/Temporary/Part-time Non-regular Workers' Union), the Rentai Workers' Union (Itabashi-ku Section) and the Union Rakuda (Kyoto Municipality Related Workers' Independent Union) refer to serious issues arising from the 2017 revision of the Local Public Service Act. The trade unions assert that the principle of tripartite consultation in the revision of labour laws, specifically for the Public Service Act, has been neglected. This lack of consultation contradicts the process observed for the revision of general labour laws. The unions assert that this situation goes against the purpose of Article 3 of the Convention. This revision has not only impacted basic labour rights but has also impacted employment policy in the public sector by creating a new category of public employees with renewable contracts of up to one year. This category now constitutes 30 per cent of the local government workforce, 76.6 per cent of which are women. According to the unions-, a main concern relates to the annual renewal of these contracts, leading to arbitrary personnel evaluations and terminations for reasons such as maternity, childcare, sickness, union activities, or expressing concerns to the administration. In its response to these observations, the Government considers them to be factually incorrect and indicates that the Local Public Service Act does not establish the principle of life term employment and that the establishment of the non-permanent employee's system is intended to optimize the appointment and treatment of temporary and part-time staff. Non-permanent staff appointed for a fiscal year can be reappointed to a position with the same job duty after their term ends, indicating a new appointment to a different position without extending the term or guaranteeing reappointment to the same position. Finally, the Government stresses that the introduction of the non-permanent staff system was intended to encourage the appointment and treatment of temporary and part-time staff. In addition, before adopting this reform, the Government organized a study group which included experts, as well as the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (RENGO), the Japan Business Federation (Keidanren), and local governments. The study group held hearings, both with representatives of workers and of employers, to discuss the best way to appoint non-permanent staff. The Committee notes this information and requests the Government to indicate whether, after 5 years of implementing this new system, it is intended to carry out an assessment with a view to identifying potential insufficiencies and improving employment policy in the public sector, in consultation with the social partners, and all other interested parties, in line with Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention which require that measures taken to achieve the objectives of the Convention be kept under review and that representatives of the persons affected be consulted with a view to taking fully into account their experience and views and securing their full cooperation in formulating and enlisting support for such policies.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Union of Welfare and Childcare Workers (NUWCW) received on 27 August 2018 as well as the response of the Government in that regard, transmitted with its report.

The Committee also notes the additional observations of the NUWCW received on 26 October 2023 and the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) communicated with the Government's report received on 29 August 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these observations.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Employment promotion for persons with disabilities. In reply to the Committee's previous comments on the nature and impact of measures taken to achieve the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities, the Government reiterates that guidance is provided to companies in the elaboration of employment plans and that non-compliant employers are publicly named and required to pay a levy of 50'000 Japanese yen per month, per person under the quota. The Government adds that, in the fiscal year (FY) 2021, 27,553 employers were required to pay the levy and that, in the period FY2018-FY2021, the names of seven non-compliant companies were disclosed. The Government further indicates that, starting from FY2024, additional support will be provided to persons with disabilities regarding the interviews and the development of professional skills throughout their careers. The Committee also notes that, in its 2023 observations, the JTUC-RENGO states that the Government is planning to increase the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities to 2.7 per cent in 2024. The Committee however notes that the Government does not provide comments on the observations submitted in 2016 by the NUWCW (and reiterated in 2018) according to which the levy system in place to sanction non-compliant employers is not effective, as it is less costly to pay the levy than to employ persons with disabilities.

Regarding the impact of the measures implemented, the Committee notes the Government's indication that 613,958 persons with disabilities were employed in the private sector as of June 2022, representing a 2.7 per cent increase (16,172 persons) compared with June 2021. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the employment rate of persons with disabilities has been steadily increasing over the last decade, reaching 2.25 per cent in 2022 (against notably 2.20 per cent in 2020 and 1.92 per cent in 2016). The Committee further notes that, based on the statistics provided by the government, among the persons with a disabilities in employment in private companies, 58.1 per cent have a physical disability (357,767 persons), 23.8 per cent have an intellectual disability (146,426 persons), and 17 per cent have a mental disability (109,764 persons). Among the persons with physical disabilities, the Government indicates that 3.83 per cent are visually impaired (13,697 persons), 8.96 per cent are hearing or equilibrium impaired (32,059 persons), 31.41 per cent are orthopedically impaired (112,241 persons), and 22.64 per cent are internally impaired (81,011 persons). The Committee however notes that the Government does not address the observations submitted in 2016 by the NUWCW, according to which the statistics provided do not reflect the actual employment situation of persons with disabilities, neither in terms of number nor quality. In terms of number, the NUWCW observes that the Government conducts a survey on the employment of persons with disabilities once every five years, whereas it carries out a Monthly Labour Force Survey on the employment of workers in general. In terms of quality, the NUWCW observes that the increased employment rate of persons with disabilities has been accompanied by declining wages, an increase in non-regular employment and deteriorating working conditions. The Committee further notes that the Government does not provide updated information on the number of companies that meet the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in its 2023 submission, the JTUC-RENGO observes that less than half of companies (48.3 per cent) meet the statutory employment quota. This represents a decrease in compliance of one per cent, compared with the data provided by the JTUC-RENGO in 2017 (48.8 per cent). The JTUC-RENGO also observes that 58.1 per cent of companies do not employ any person with disabilities. Observing that a large majority of these companies are small and medium enterprises (SMEs), the JTUC-RENGO suggests providing SMEs with financial support to hire persons with disabilities.

Recalling the objective of the Convention to have in place effective and periodically reviewed policies and measures in place to ensure effective access to the open labour market to all categories of persons with disabilities, based on the principle of equality of treatment between workers with disabilities and workers generally, the Committee notes with concern that, in spite of the measures indicated by the Government in its report, only less than half of enterprises comply with the legal quotas for the employment of persons with disabilities and that no decisive corrective measures seem to have been taken, in consultation with the social partners and representatives of persons with disabilities, to address this persisting situation. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide updated information on any amendment to the Act on the Promotion of the Elimination of Discrimination against Persons with Disabilities, including with regard to the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities. Moreover, noting that imposing sanctions is a necessary component to ensure compliance, the Committee recalls that, in order to be effective and reach its objectives, these sanctions also need to be sufficiently dissuasive and requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged with a view to assessing and, if necessary, reviewing the currently applicable regime of sanctions so as to achieve better compliance with the primary objective of the laws on employment of persons with disabilities. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on the impact of the measures taken to achieve the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities, including information on the number of companies which meet the quota, information on the impact of the financial and reputational sanctions imposed on non-compliant companies, and information on the employment of persons with disabilities in the open labour market. Noting that only seven non-compliant companies have had their names disclosed to the public, the committee asks the government to provide detailed information on the process for identifying companies whose names are disclosed. The Committee also requests that the Government continue to provide updated information on the nature of other measures taken to achieve the statutory employment quota for persons with disabilities, including measures to raise awareness of the capacities of persons with disabilities, overcome prejudice unfavourable to the employment of persons with disabilities and encourage their employment in SMEs. In that regard, the Government is requested to supply statistics disaggregated by sex, age and nature of the disability, to the extent possible. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations mentioned above from the NUWCW and from the JTUC-RENGO to which it has not yet replied.

Article 5. Consultations with the social partners. The Government reiterates that the Labour Policy Council's Subcommittee on the Employment of Persons with Disabilities, which includes representatives of the Government, representatives of employers, representatives of workers and representatives of persons with disabilities, sets the objectives of the employment policies for persons with disabilities, implements these policies and evaluates their outcomes. As an example, the Government points to the 2022 revision of the Act on the Promotion of the Elimination of Discrimination against Persons, and the subsequent amendment of the Basic Policy on Employment Measures for Persons with Disabilities. The Government indicates that the revised texts were adopted following a discussion within the Labour Policy Council's Subcommittee. The Government adds that the texts reflect the opinion expressed by the members of the Subcommittee. The Government further indicates that discussions regarding the social welfare of persons with disabilities take place in another forum, namely the Social Security Council's Subcommittee on Persons with Disabilities, composed of representatives of persons with disabilities, representatives of the Government, representatives of the employers, and experts. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not address the concerns raised by the NUWCW in 2016 (and clarified in its 2018 observations) regarding the absence of the Japan Council on Disability and of other relevant organizations when the revision of the Comprehensive Support Act for Persons with Disabilities was being discussed in 2016 before the Social Security Council's Subcommittee on Persons with Disabilities. The Committee therefore requests the Government to respond to these observations and to provide concrete examples of the manner in which the views and concerns of the social partners and representatives of organizations of and for persons with disabilities are systematically taken into account in the formulation, implementation and evaluation of the policy on vocational rehabilitation and guidance and the employment of persons with disabilities.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO)

Articles 1(3) and 3. National policy aimed at ensuring appropriate vocational rehabilitation for all categories of persons with disabilities. (a) Criteria used to determine whether a person with disabilities is considered to be able to "work under an employment relationship" (paragraph 73 of the tripartite committee report, GB.304/14/6). The Committee recalls the recommendations of the tripartite committee established by the Governing Body to examine a representation alleging non-observance by Japan of the Convention (304th Session, March 2009). The Committee also recalls that it has been entrusted with following up on implementation of the recommendations of the tripartite committee. In this context, the Government has provided updated information in its report on the implementation and results of measures taken to promote employment for persons with disabilities. Regarding the measures taken to increase employment and income-generating opportunities for persons with severe disabilities, the Government reports that, as of November 2022, approximately 36,000 persons with disabilities were participating in employment-related activities under the Employment Transfer Support Programme (ETSP). The Committee notes that this represents a 16 per cent increase since 2015 (31,000 persons). The Government adds that, as of November 2022, 320,000 persons were participating in Type-B programmes (designed for persons facing difficulties working under an employment relationship, while nevertheless offering them productive activities). The Committee notes that this represents a 39 per cent increase in users compared with 2015 (230,000 persons). The Government also indicates that, in 2021, approximately 21,000 persons transitioned from Employment Transfer Support Programme to employment in the open labour market. The Government points out that this reflects an 800 per cent increase over the last 15 years. The Government further indicates that, in 2021, 2,027 persons transitioned from the Type-B to the Type-A programme (designed for persons with disabilities considered able to work under an employment relationship). The Committee notes that this amounts to a significant decline in comparison with 2016 (2,646 persons). With regard to measures taken by public employment service offices, the Government refers again to the continued implementation of the “team support” model, which provides support to persons with disabilities from employment through to workplace adaptation. The Government adds that in FY2021, 36,024 persons were eligible to receive employment support through “team support”, resulting in 19,661 individuals finding employment, representing an employment rate of 54.6 per cent. The Government also indicates that, as of November 2022, 2,991 establishments were providing employment transition support and 1,534 establishments were offering “employment retention” support. The Government further indicates that, since FY2011, the transition to employment on the open labour market has been facilitated through the deployment of employment support coordinators at “Labour Bureaus” with specialized knowledge in the employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed updated information on the measures taken or envisaged to increase employment and income-generating opportunities for persons with severe disabilities that have difficulties entering into an employment relationship and accessing the open labour market. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated information on the number of persons transferring from Type-B programmes to Type-A programmes and into regular employment, as well as on the impact of measures implemented by the Public Employment Security Office to assist persons with disabilities in transitioning from welfare to employment on the open labour market.

(b) Bringing work performed by persons with disabilities in sheltered workshops within the scope of the labour legislation (paragraph 75 of the tripartite committee report). In response to the concerns raised by the NUWCW in its 2018 observations regarding the dismissal of persons with disabilities in Type-A workplaces, the Government indicates that, between 2017 and 2018, several companies operating Type-A workplaces used the public subsidies to develop other, non-welfare related businesses, resulting in the closure of the Type-A workplaces. The Government indicates that, in response, the criteria for allowing a company to run a Type-A workplace were reassessed and it was decided that the wages of the persons with disabilities should be paid from the earning of their activities. The Government adds that non-compliant employers are required to submit a management improvement plan and are provided with assistance in that regard. The Government reports that, as a result, compliance with the rules on the payment of wages in Type-A workplaces improved by 70 per cent in 2017 and by 60 per cent in 2022. In response to the NUWCW’s allegations that some providers of Type A programmes use article 7 of the Minimum Wage Act (which allows for applying a reduction rate to the minimum wage) in an abusive manner, the Government indicates that article 7 aims at avoiding potential loss of employment opportunities for persons with disabilities. The Government adds that employment with a reduction rate is carefully regulated as it needs to be approved by the relevant prefectural labour bureau, after an on-site investigation has been conducted. Regarding Type-B programmes, in response to the NUWCW’s allegations that persons with disabilities are not provided with the same legal protections as other workers, the Government indicates that persons with disabilities engaging in production activities in Type-B workplaces are typically not considered to be “workers” as they do not sign employment contracts, are free to choose their work hours and workload, and may engage in work without being supervised. The Government adds that if an employment-subordinate relationship exists between a person with disabilities and a Type-B workplace, that person is considered a worker and falls within the scope of labour legislation. The Government does not address the observations made by the NUWCW’s in 2016, according to which the employment support services provided do not take into consideration the vocational needs of persons with disabilities.

In view of the above, the Committee also recalls that, considering the Convention’s objective to fully integrate persons with disabilities into society and of to fully recognize their contribution to society, bringing the work they perform in sheltered workshops within the scope of labour legislation, to the extent appropriate, appears to be crucial (Tripartite committee report, GB.304/14/6, paragraphs 74–75). The Committee also recalls that Article 4 of the Convention establishes the principle of equal opportunity between workers with disabilities and workers generally. Moreover, Paragraph 10 of Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Recommendation, 1983 (No. 168), accompanying the Convention indicates that measures should be taken to promote employment opportunities for workers with disabilities which conform to the employment and salary standards applicable to workers generally (General Survey 2020 on Promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape, paragraph 764). The Committee also wishes to stress that, in accordance with paragraphs 25 and 35 of the Vocational Rehabilitation (Disabled) Recommendation, 1955 (No. 99), persons with disabilities should not as a result of their disability be discriminated against in respect of wages and other conditions of employment if their work is equal to that of persons with no disability and that where and to the extent to which statutory regulation of wages and conditions of employment applying to workers generally is in operation it should apply to persons with disabilities employed under sheltered conditions. The Committee further wishes to recall that work performed by persons with disabilities in sheltered production workshops with a view to vocational rehabilitation, irrespective of whether it is performed under an employment relationship, should meet certain minimum standards if it is to contribute effectively to the Convention's objective of social and occupational integration of persons with disabilities. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature and impact of the measures taken to ensure that the treatment of persons with disabilities in Type-A and Type-B workplaces is in line with the principle of equality between workers with disabilities and workers generally enshrined in the Convention (Article 4). Regarding type-A programmes, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the measures taken to ensure the quality management of Type-A workplaces. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the general principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, as set out in the Preamble of the ILO Constitution, is duly respected regarding the wages of persons with disabilities. The Government is further requested to provide detailed information on the use of a reduction rate (article 7 of the Minimum Wage Act) in relation to the wages of persons with disabilities, including information on the number of persons with disabilities affected by this measure, the nature of their disabilities, the type of work performed, and the reduction rate applied. Regarding Type-B programmes, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the quality of vocational rehabilitation services and to bring the work performed by persons with disabilities within the scope of labour legislation.

(c) Low pay for persons with disabilities carrying out activities under the Type-B programmes (paragraph 76 of the tripartite committee report). In response to the Committee's previous comments, the Government reiterates that, in 2007, it adopted a Five-year wage-doubling plan. The Government also refers again to the Wage improvement plans implemented in each prefecture, which set targets for improving wages. The Government adds that the prefectures have continued to formulate Wage improvement plans, renewing them every year since FY2012. The Government further indicates that additional initiatives regarding the wages of persons with disabilities include showcasing Type-B workplaces that are proactive in wage enhancement and organizing trainings to increase management awareness in that regard. The Government reports that these initiatives resulted in a 35 percent increase in wages within Type-B programmes in FY2021 compared to FY2006. The Committee however notes that the Government does not provide information enabling the Committee to assess the evolution in wages for persons with disabilities during the period covered by the Government's report, that is, namely between 2017 and 2023. The Committee also notes that the Government does not respond to the 2016 observations from the NUWCW according to which there is an increase in the proportion of persons with disabilities living on an annual income below 1,000,000 yen, and a wage gap of 284,762 yen between persons with disabilities in Type-B programmes and the average worker. The Committee further notes that, in its observations communicated in 2023, the JTUC-RENGO submits that information on Type-B wages should be made public and investigated. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure equality of wages for persons with disabilities participating in Type-B programmes. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on the impact of these measure, including information enabling the Committee to assess the evolution in wages during the period covered by the Government's report. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations above-mentioned from the NUWCW and from the JTUC-RENGO to which it has not replied.

(d) Service fees for participants in Type-B programmes (paragraphs 77 and 79 of the tripartite committee report). In response to the observations made by the NUWCW in 2016, the Government reiterates that persons with disabilities in low-income households are exempted from paying welfare service fees, including those related to Type-A and Type-B programmes. The Government reports that, as of November 2022, 92.7 per cent of the users of welfare services, including participants in Type-B programmes, were using these services free of charge. The Committee notes that this percentage appears to remain stable since November 2016 (93.3 per cent). The Government adds that persons with disabilities who pay as service fee contribute to the costs of the welfare services based on their individual financial capacities. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking and implementing positive measures in this regard and requests updated information on their impact.

Articles 3, 4 and 7. Equality of opportunity between persons with disabilities and workers generally. Double counting of persons with severe disabilities in relation to the quota system (paragraphs 81 and 82 of the tripartite committee report). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the number of persons with severe disabilities in employment in companies has continued to increase, from 109,765 in June 2016, to 125,433 in June 2022, representing a 14.3 per cent increase. The Committee also notes that, in response to the NUWCW's request that the system of double counting persons with severe disabilities be reconsidered, the Government reiterates, once again, that the double-counting system is effective and necessary to promote the employment of persons with severe disabilities. In view of the above observations of the NUWCW, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether it is envisaged to carry out, in consultation with the social partners and the representative organisations of persons with disabilities, an assessment on the efficiency of the double-counting system. In that regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide concrete examples illustrating the assertion that the double-counting system contributes to the promotion of the employment of persons with severe disabilities. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the employment of persons with disabilities.

Reasonable accommodation (paragraph 83 of the tripartite committee report). The Government reiterates that the Act on the Promotion of the Employment of Persons with Disabilities provides for the obligation to provide reasonable accommodation and that various guidelines were introduced on the prohibition of discrimination against persons with disabilities and the provision of reasonable accommodation. The Government adds that Prefectural labour bureaus and public employment service offices are actively engaged in communication, consultation, and other initiatives related to providing reasonable accommodation. The Government reports that, in FY2021, public employment service offices provided guidance to 244 employers who failed to comply with the legislation on reasonable accommodation. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the number of employers who have implemented reasonable accommodation measures. The Committee also notes that the Government does not provide comments on the observations submitted by the NUWCW (in 2016) and by the JTUC-RENGO (in 2017), according to which the Act on the Promotion of the Employment of Persons with Disabilities only applies to private companies and does not establish a conflict resolution mechanism. In that regard, the Committee notes the observations submitted in 2018 by the NUWCW, highlighting the case of a visually impaired teacher who was dismissed based on her alleged inability to teach and who had to pursue legal action for the Japanese courts to find that the lack of reasonable accommodation, rather than her disability, hindered her ability to teach. The Committee also notes that, in its 2023 observations, the JTUC-RENGO submits that 49 per cent of business owners are unaware that, when the revised Act on the Promotion of the Employment of Persons with Disabilities comes into effect on 1 April 2024, they will be under the legal obligation to provide reasonable accommodation, instead of a mere obligation to make an effort in that regard, as it currently stands. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature and results of measures taken concerning the provision of reasonable accommodation in the workplace, in private companies and in public organizations. Recalling that legislation and policies should provide for financial or other incentives to encourage employers to provide reasonable accommodation where necessary, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to that effect. The Committee is further requested to provide information on the number of employers who have provided reasonable accommodation in the workplace. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the aforementioned observations from the NUWCW and from the JTUC-RENGO to which it has not yet replied.

Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO), received together with the Government's report. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO)

In its previous comments, the Committee recalled the recommendations of the tripartite committee established to examine a representation alleging non-observance by Japan of the Convention (GB.313/INS/12/3). It expressed the firm hope, in the same way as the tripartite committee, that amendments to the Act for Securing the Appropriate Operation of Worker Dispatch Undertakings and the Protection of Dispatch Workers (Worker Dispatch Act) would ensure "adequate protection" for all workers employed by private employment agencies in accordance with Articles 1, 5 and 11 of the Convention. Noting that the Bill for partial revision of the Worker Dispatch Act was enacted on 11 September 2015, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the above Act in relation to each of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the 2018 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act which, among other things, require temporary work agencies to ensure that the dispatched workers receive equal and balanced treatment by the user enterprise, including through the conclusion of labour-management agreements. The Committee notes that these amendments entered into force on 1 April 2020. In its observations, JTUC-RENGO refers to the 2022 amendments to the Employment Insurance Act, which also amended the Employment Security Act to broaden the definition of private employment agencies that compile and provide information on job vacancies (Article 1(1)(c) of the Convention) and subject these agencies to legal restrictions. Additionally, the Committee notes the Government's reference to a June 2022 decision of the Supreme Court concerning section 40-6 of the Worker Dispatch Act, as amended in 2015, which recognized the establishment of a contract of employment between a user enterprise and an illegally dispatched worker, based on the worker's intention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information in its next report on the content and application of the Worker Dispatch Act, as amended, in relation to the provisions of the Convention.

Articles 1, 5 and 11 of the Convention. Definitions. Equal treatment by private employment agencies. Measures to ensure adequate protection for workers employed by private employment agencies. The Government indicates that the 2015 and 2018 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act did not include any changes relevant to Article 1 of the Convention. The Government points out that the Worker Dispatch Act defines worker dispatch as "having a worker employed by one person so as to be engaged in work for another person under the instructions of the latter, while maintaining the worker's employment with the former". The Government considers that this definition is in conformity with Article 1(1)(b). The Committee notes the observations of JTUC-RENGO with respect to the 2022 amendments to the Employment Insurance Act and Employment Security Act, which broadened the definition of private employment agencies that compile and share data on job vacancies (as contemplated in Article 1(1)(c) of the Convention), and subject them to legal restrictions. The Government does not provide specific information with respect to the nature or extent of the restrictions mentioned. With respect to Article 5 of the Convention, the Government reiterates that, pursuant to section 44(1) of the Worker Dispatch Act, the prohibition against discriminatory treatment set out in section 3 of the Labour Standards Act is applicable to temporary employment agencies (dispatching business operators) and user enterprises ("client operators"). The Government further notes that discriminatory treatment in relation to pregnancy, childbirth, childcare leave and nursing leave is prohibited under the relevant national legislation, which is applicable to both temporary employment agencies and user enterprises under sections 47-2 and 47-3 of the Worker Dispatch Act. In this context, the Government adds that if violations of labour standards-related laws and regulations are found, corrective guidance is provided. With respect to Article 11 of the Convention, the Government indicates that as part of the revision of the Worker Dispatch Act, unreasonable differences in treatment of dispatched workers and permanent employees were eliminated, and information obligations in regard to dispatched workers were strengthened. The Government adds that 53.3 per cent of temporary work agencies indicated that they had increased wages following the 2018 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act. JTUC-RENGO observes that regulations were established for equal and balanced treatment of dispatched workers by the 2018 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act, expressing its view that the amendments represent improvements for dispatched workers to eliminate working condition disparities. It nevertheless indicates that the amendment has not resulted in an increase in dispatched workers' total take-home wages, with almost half the temporary work agencies reporting no changes. It considers that further action is needed to effectively enforce the amended Worker Dispatch Act. JTUC-RENGO adds that dispatched workers' contracts were disproportionately affected by terminations during the COVID-19 pandemic and calls for effective measures to be taken to ensure stable employment for this category of workers. With respect to employment stability and career progression, the Government reiterates that the 2015 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act require temporary work agencies to provide dispatched workers with education and training, and career guidance for those wishing to receive such training. In addition, prior to the 2015 amendments, temporary work agencies were required to make efforts to promote the conversion of a certain number of fixed-term dispatched workers to permanent employment. The Government notes that this requirement creates an obligation for dispatched workers, who are expected to be employed for three years, with a lesser obligation (to make efforts) for workers, who are expected to be employed for more than one year but less than three years. The Government indicates that the 2018 amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act require temporary work agencies to ensure equal treatment of dispatched workers with regular employees of the user enterprise through labour-management agreements meeting certain requirements. With respect to the application of the amendments concerning the promotion of employment stability, career development and ensuring equal treatment, the Government indicates that 377,418 dispatched workers received career guidance, 3,236,152 received education and training for career development and 547,984 workers benefited from employment stability measures. In light of the observations of JTUC-RENGO, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information, including disaggregated statistical data, on the content, scope and impact of the amendments to the Worker Dispatch Act on the job stability, career development, equal treatment and adequate protection of dispatched workers in accordance with Articles 5 and 11 of the Convention. In addition, noting that private employment agencies within the meaning of Article 1(1)(c) of the Convention are now subject to legal restrictions following amendments introduced in 2022 to the Employment Insurance Act and the Employment Security Act, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature and scope of these restrictions and the manner in which they are applied and enforced.

Articles 10 and 14. Investigation of complaints and adequate remedies. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with respect to amendments introduced to the Worker Dispatch Act in 2018. The amendments establish new procedures to facilitate the resolution of disputes by the relevant prefectural director, as well as conciliation processes carried out by dispute coordinating committees in matters arising from violations of the Act. The amendments seek to promote the resolution of disputes without having recourse to the courts, as well as to accelerate the resolution of disputes concerning equal pay for equal work brought by dispatched workers. The Government further indicates that these 2018 amendments include provisions aimed at eliminating unreasonable differences in treatment, strengthening the obligation to explain the conditions of their employment to workers, and developing alternative dispute resolution procedures. With respect to complaints mechanisms, the Committee notes that in 2021, 69 complaints of violations of the Worker Dispatch Act were registered with the Minister of Health, Labour and Welfare. It notes the Government's indication that, pursuant to section 49-3 of the Worker Dispatch Act, the temporary work agency and the user enterprise are prohibited from taking any retaliatory action against the dispatched worker for bringing a complaint. In 2021, the Minister received 69 notifications pertaining, inter alia, to disguised contracting. In its observations, JTUC-RENGO indicates that, while a certain number of administrative penalties have been imposed for violations of the Worker Dispatch Act, between 2018 and 2022 there were cases of illegal dispatches, including double dispatches, and action to remedy these has been insufficient. In addition, the workers' organization considers that, while strengthening the inspection system in relation to private employment agencies, it should take action to ensure that dispatched workers employed through problematic agencies are able to continue in appropriate employment. The Government reports that in 2020, there were 1,562,090 dispatched workers, of which 610,683 were permanent dispatched workers. In the same year, violations recorded resulted in: 8,258 cases of documented guidance, six orders for improvement, two orders suspending business operations and ten cases of license revocation for violations of the Worker Dispatch Act. In the same year, private employment agencies received 17,346,112 new job applications. There were 1,967 cases of documented guidance, three orders for improvement, two orders for business suspension and three license revocations for violations of the Employment Security Act. The Government adds that the public prosecutor's office opened 129 criminal proceedings for violations of the Employment Security Act and 39 proceedings for violations of the Worker Dispatch Act. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information with respect to the remedies available in the event of violations of provisions of the Convention. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number and type of complaints recorded concerning dispatched workers, the outcome of the complaints and penalties imposed, where relevant. The Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding inspections carried out in relation to temporary work agencies and the results of such inspections. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on whether the national courts or other review bodies have rendered decisions relevant to the application of the Convention, particularly Articles 1, 5 and 11, and to provide the texts of these decisions.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA) and the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee also notes that the Government's report contains observations attributed to FISEMA but that the latter are identical to the above-mentioned observations of FISEMARE and that FISEMA indicates in its observations that it did not receive the Government's report. The Committee requests the Government to communicate its comments on the observations received by the social partners.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indications that Act No. 2015-040 of 9 December 2015 determining the orientation of the National Employment and Vocational Training Policy (PNEFP) had been adopted with an Operational Plan of Action (PAO) containing the various policy priorities for the implementation of the PNEFP. In its report submitted in August 2022, the Government indicates that achievements under Act No. 2015-040 on the PNEFP and its PAO are being approved and that a new policy is being developed in collaboration with the stakeholders. The Government adds that the recent main achievements under the PNEFP are: operationalization of steering and coordination partnership committees; establishment of a vocational skills information monitoring system; upgrading of the centres for technical and vocational education and training/skills development; establishment of the National Malagasy Certification Framework; training of ministry officials in Competency-Based Approach (CBA) engineering and training of trainers. With regard to the impact of the PNEFP on employment and unemployment rates, the Government indicates that a periodic household survey is currently being carried out. The Government adds that, according to the third General Census of Population and Habitat, conducted in 2018, the unemployment rate remains low, despite a rise of 0.4 percentage points compared to 2010 (that is 4.2 per cent in 2018 compared to 3.8 per cent in 2010). With regard to the impact of the PNEFP on the transition from the informal to the formal economy, the Government notes that the latest National Survey on Employment and the Informal Sector dates back to 2012, which is before the adoption of the Act on the PNEFP. In 2012, 95.1 per cent of jobs were in the informal sector. In 2020, the National Employment and Training Office (ONEF), in cooperation with the ILO, performed a diagnostic of the informal economy in the construction sector, a priority sector according to the PNEFP. According to this study, which involved 62 enterprises in three regions of the country, while 76.3 per cent of enterprises in the construction sector are "formal", 43.5 per cent of workers in these enterprises are informally employed. With regard to the economic policy of Madagascar and its contribution to the employment objectives as set forth by the Convention, the Government indicates that information in this regard was not transmitted by the departments concerned. With respect to the measures taken or envisaged to create lasting employment among specific categories of workers, the Government indicates that, as part of the implementation of the Initiative for Development in Madagascar (IEM) and in line with the will of the Malagasy State to promote entrepreneurship and job creation for vulnerable persons, the Ministry of Labour, Employment, the Public Service and Social Laws (MTEFPLS), in collaboration with its technical and financial partners, has initiated the following projects and programmes: the monitoring plan for the road map on capturing the demographic dividend; an empowerment programme for vulnerable women; the creation of an internship center; vocational training for young baccalaureate holders and for those in the final year of high school; the Sera ben'ny asa program; and employment forums. Furthermore, the National Vocational Training Centre for Persons with Disabilities provides two types of training: professional training leading to qualification (FPQ) and apprenticeships in core occupations (AMB). In 2021, 191 persons with disabilities were trained through FPQ and 2,085 persons with disabilities were trained through AMB.

With regard to the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes that FISEMA denounces the absence of an employment promotion policy in Madagascar. It observes that the 2015 PNEFP and the texts adopted subsequently, in particular the PAO, have been suspended or even abandoned. It considers that there is a significant delay in issuing a replacement document. The Committee also notes that FISEMARE, while acknowledging the establishment of an employment and vocational training policy, points out that this policy has not had the expected impact on the unemployment rate and the informal economy. FISEMARE indicates that there is still a mismatch between training provision and the job market, that persons in positions of responsibility are poorly qualified and that the matter of poverty is far from resolved. According to FISEMARE, the employment policy must be implemented and subject to periodic monitoring that will result in amendments to the policy where needed.

The Committee recalls that the objective of the Convention is to stimulate economic growth and development, raise levels of living, meet manpower requirements and overcome unemployment and underemployment through the application of an active policy designed to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment (Article 1 of the Convention) (see the 2020 General Survey on promoting employment, paragraph 39). In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information to enable it to examine the manner in which the main components of the country's economic policy, in such areas as monetary, budgetary, trade or regional development policies, contribute, within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy, to the achievement of the employment objectives set out in the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of surveys, studies and other work, regarding the impact of the PNEFP, adopted in 2015, on employment, unemployment and the transition towards the formal economy. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the periodic household survey, mentioned in its report, once it has been completed. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on any measures implemented to reduce unemployment and underemployment, create lasting jobs for specific categories of workers, such as women, persons with disabilities, rural workers and young persons, and to ensure the transition of the informal to the formal economy. Further, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the training delivered by the national vocational training centre for persons with disabilities. With regard to the new employment policy, which is currently being developed, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in its preparation. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Coordination of the education and training policy with the employment policy. With regard to the results of the actions taken to ensure the coordination of vocational education and training policy with employment policy, the Government indicates that it has developed various programmes and objectives in order to capture the demographic dividend in Madagascar. In particular, the Government has: set up a system of validation of skills and experience; strengthened the structures for training trainers; established a system of partnership with enterprises for the revision of training curricula; and developed vocational training for young persons who are out of school in centres for socio-economic promotion. With respect to the results achieved by the implementation of these programmes in terms of access of qualified young persons to lasting employment, the Government indicates that the departments involved have not provided the information requested. The Government also indicates that the relevant departments have not provided the information requested concerning the impact of the measures taken to promote the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to indicate how the objective of coordination of the education and training policy with the employment policy will be taken into account in the new employment policy that is being drawn up. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved through the implementation of the coordination programmes for these policies in terms of access for qualified young persons to lasting employment. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the impact of the measures taken to promote the creation of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Compilation and use of employment data. In its previous report, the Government referred to a partnership project with the ILO relating to a system of databases on employment and indicated that it had started to establish a Regional Employment Service (SRIE). With regard to the system of databases, the Government indicates that an order was issued in 2018 establishing a Vocational Training and Labour Market Information System (SIMTFP). However, following financial difficulties encountered by ONEF and a change in the organizational structure of the competent ministry, the operationalization of the SIMTFP, initiated with the help of the Office, has been suspended. ONEF currently plans to set up a digital platform, named e-KANDRA, to help to match job supply and demand, and to ensure the circulation of information in the labour market. With regard to the implementation of the SRIE, the Government indicates that it has been operational in five regions. The Government considers that the SRIE has facilitated the collection and use of employment data. In particular, the use of an application has made it possible to gather information and transmit it to ONEF for processing and analysis. However, the application only worked for one year because, as the operating budget of the SRIE was cut due to COVID-19, its hosting was discontinued. The MTEFPLS is currently looking for ways to relaunch and develop the SRIE. The Government highlights that ONEF has also carried out several studies on employment since 2018, in particular on: the situation of young people in the labour market, the participation of women in working life and at decision-making levels, the employability and inclusion of persons with disabilities, child labour, the indicators of Sustainable Development Goal 8 for decent work, the informal economy in the construction sector, skills demand in the tourism, hotels and catering sector, and the lack of and opportunities for decent work in the textile value chain. The Government has not transmitted these studies nor the information they contain. The Committee notes that the data available to the ILO Statistics Department (ILOSTAT) for Madagascar date back to 2015. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and up-to-date information on the measures taken to gather data on the labour market and use them to implement or review employment policy. In this respect, it invites the Government to provide further information on the e-KANDRA digital platform project, as well as on a possible relaunch of the Vocational Training and Labour Market Information System (SIMTFP) and the Regional Employment Service (SRIE). The Committee also requests the Government to provide copies or extracts of reports, surveys, studies and up-to-date statistical information on the labour market trends, particularly on employment, unemployment and visible underemployment, disaggregated by sex and age.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Government indicates that the two structures for developing the new national employment policy – the coordination unit and the technical implementation committee – include employers' and workers' representatives. More specifically, the coordination unit is composed of: two representatives of the Ministry of Technical Education and Vocational Training (METFP), two representatives of the MTEFPLS, one representative of the Prime Minister's Office, one representative of the Ministry of the Economy and Finance, two employers' representatives and two workers' representatives. The main task of the coordination unit is to outline the relevant points of the reform, enforce the deadlines set for the road map, and act as an intermediary between the members of the technical implementation committee and its consultants. The technical implementation committee is composed of: two representatives of the METFP, two representatives of the MTEFPLS, one representative of the Ministry of the Population, one representative of the Ministry responsible for young persons, five representatives of the sectoral ministries, two employers' representatives and two workers' representatives. The task of the technical implementation committee is to collect and analyse official documents, as well as information and observations from the stakeholders, and to subsequently prepare interviews and meetings, before consolidating the data gathered and supporting the development of the national policy document, while ensuring similar procedures as those for other existing reference texts. The Government also indicates that, during the broader national consultation on the reform of the Labour Code, representatives of persons with disabilities were invited and took part in the discussions. A representative trade union for persons with disabilities also took part in the discussions on the reform of the Civil Servants Regulations. The Government has not, however, provided any information concerning the consultations held on the employment policy with representatives of the most disadvantaged categories of the population, particularly the representatives of workers in rural areas and the informal economy. With regard to the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes that FISEMA regrets that the consultation with the social partners on employment policy issues is not carried out within the National Labour

Committee, that is, namely the body for tripartite consultation with the social partners on employment matters. FISEMA observes that the disfunctioning of the National Labour Committee prevents proper information and evaluation of Government action on employment matters, and that the existence of separate ministerial departments for employment and vocational training makes this work even more complex. FISEMA notes that requests for support for jobs affected by the COVID-19 pandemic have been rejected by the Government.

The Committee recalls that the Government is bound to consult representatives of employers and workers in order to take full account of their experience and views and secure their full cooperation in formulating such policies (Article 3 of the Convention) (see the 2020 General Survey on promoting employment, paragraph 94). The Committee notes, however, the disagreement between the Government and some of the most representative social partners concerning the manner in which national employment policy is designed and implemented. The Committee considers that in the absence of an effective dialogue among all interested parties, as required by the Convention, its proper implementation, which is already very complex, is made even more challenging or could be totally compromised. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information showing how the objectives of the Convention are pursued by properly involving the representatives from all interested parties, in particular in the context of the development of the new national employment policy. In this regard, it once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the consultations held with the representatives of the most disadvantaged categories of the population, and particularly with the representatives of workers in rural areas and the informal economy.

Part VII of the report form. Representative organizations consulted. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it consulted the representative workers' and employers' organizations at a workshop to present and approve the report, held from 3 to 5 August 2022. The Government specifies that it sent a copy of the report to the Group of Enterprises of Madagascar (GEM) and to Fivondronan'ny Mpandraharaha eto Magagasikara (FivMpaMa) (for the employers' organizations), as well as to FISEMARE, FISEMA and the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) (for the workers' organizations). FISEMA notes, however, that it did not receive the Government's report. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution, the Government is bound to communicate the report to the representative organizations and requests the Government to provide its comments on FISEMA's observation that it did not receive the Government's report.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2021. It further notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 8 September 2021. In addition, the Committee notes the observations of the Workers' Organization of Mozambique (OTM), received on 1 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Formulation and Implementation of an active employment policy and programmes. The Committee notes with interest the series of measures taken by the Government to implement the objectives of the Convention. It recalls that, following receipt of ILO technical assistance, Mozambique developed its first National Employment Policy (NEP), entitled "Promoting More and Better Jobs for Mozambicans", adopted in October 2016. The NEP was developed through a process of consultation with the social partners and is centred around eight pillars: development of human resources; job creation; harmonization and prioritization of sectoral policies; promotion of decent, productive and sustainable work; improving the labour market information system; occupational health and safety; strengthening international cooperation; and cross-cutting issues. The NEP seeks to stimulate the creation of new jobs, promote entrepreneurship and sustainable development to reduce poverty and contribute to the economic and social development of the country and the well-being of the population. An Action Plan (PAPE 2018–22) was launched in January 2018 to implement the NEP. The PAPE 2018–22 was subsequently reviewed to align it more closely to the Government's Five-Year Programme 2020–24. It was replaced in May 2021 by a new Plan of Action for the Implementation of the NEP (PAPE 2021–24). The Committee notes the significant challenges faced by the country, which include high rates of poverty, low levels of education and training, as well as the concentration of the workforce in subsistence agriculture and low-productivity informal enterprises, characterised by high levels of individual and household vulnerability, particularly in the northern half of the country. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government with respect to the negative socioeconomic impacts of the Covid-19 pandemic. According to 2020 data from the National Statistics Institute (INE), 90.4 per cent of Mozambican enterprises were affected by the pandemic, leading to suspension of activities, reduction of working hours and suspension or termination of contracts and closure of businesses, affecting over three million workers. The Government took a series of social, economic, monetary and financial measures to respond to the pandemic. It also provides information on a series of policies implemented to promote employment in the framework of the PAPE 2021–24, including: the Industrial Policy and Strategy (PEI) (2016–25), whose main objectives are to increase industrial production, attracting investment and generating jobs, focusing on micro, small and medium-sized companies; the Commercial Policy and Strategy (PEC), which aims to stimulate trade in goods and services to respond to the needs of the internal market; the National Export Strategy (ENE) 2018–22, to support the industrialization process and create new jobs; the National Energy Strategy (2018–30); the Policy and Strategy for Standardization and Quality Policy and Strategy; the Strategy for the Development of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises in Mozambique 2007–22. This last strategy aims, inter alia, to improve the business environment, increase the capacity of MSMEs and improve their access to financial services and markets. Finally, the Government refers to the adoption of the Plan of Action to Improve the Business Environment (PAMAN) 2019–21, which was developed through extensive consultation with the private sector and civil society. The Committee notes the observations of the OTM, which emphasizes the importance of the NEP and the PAPE 2021–24 to the workers' organizations. Nevertheless, the OTM expresses the view that the measures taken under section 5.3.1 of the NEP to improve employment and decent work in the agriculture and fishing sector are insufficient, adding that in most cases income levels are low and workers in this sector do not have access to social protection. The OTM further observes that stronger measures need to be taken to address unemployment levels in the country as well as to promote transition from the informal to the formal economy. In addition, with respect to job growth, the workers' organization indicates that, of the jobs registered in the second quarter of 2023, 76.5 per cent of these are temporary, with only 23.5 per cent being permanent jobs. Of the temporary jobs, 22.5 per cent are seasonal and 77.5 per cent are occasional jobs. The OTM maintains that precarious employment has increased in the country, whereas the objective under the NEP is to promote the creation of work that is decent, productive and sustainable (NEP section 5.4). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and economic sector, on the impact of the initiatives taken under the National Employment Policy and its Action Plan 2021–24, as well as under the above-mentioned Strategies, on creating opportunities for women and men to access full, productive and freely chosen employment and decent work. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to reduce precarious employment and promote the transition from informal to formal employment, in accordance with the Transition from informal to formal employment Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The Committee considers in this respect that employment policies indeed play a significant role in promoting transitions from the informal to the formal economy by addressing the factors that drive individuals and enterprises to operate informally, leading to more inclusive, productive, and resilient labour markets while also providing targeted support to facilitate the transition process. The Committee would therefore be interested to receive further information on specific measures taken to tackle the multiple challenges proper to the work in the informal economy, indicating in particular whether the measures taken or envisaged have included some of the following best practices observed internationally: (i) reducing administrative burden and red-tape; (ii) strengthening and extending social protection as a means to enrol enterprises and their workers; (iii) promoting access to finance and business development services, including access to credit and training, as these are often lacking for informal enterprises; (iv) enhancing labour market placement and intermediation and skills development services; (v) raising awareness and promoting formalization; (vi) tailoring policies to specific sectors and occupations as the informal economy is not monolithic, and informalization patterns vary across sectors and occupations; (vii) promoting dialogue and collaboration among all relevant stakeholders for effective policy formulation and implementation; and (viii) monitoring and evaluating policy impacts as this is crucial to assess policy effectiveness in promoting transitions from informality to formality. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed up-to-date information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on the rates of informality in the country.

Article 2(a). Collection and use of labour market information. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with respect to the size and composition of the economically active population. The Government indicates that, according to the Family Budget Survey compiled by the INE for the period 2019–20, the overall unemployment rate fell from 21.7 per cent in 2019 to 17.1 per cent in 2020, with underemployment reaching 12.5 per cent. It adds that, by the end of 2020, a total of 184,477 unemployed persons were registered at the INEP Employment Centres (Instituto Nacional de Emprêgo), of which 26 per cent were women. The Government reports on the creation of 2,495 new jobs created by 196 new industrial businesses, ranging from micro, small, medium-sized and large enterprises. However, the Government indicates that, according to data compiled by the INE, the national economy shrank by 3.25 per cent in the second quarter of 2020 compared to the second quarter of the same year. It adds that the low rate of economic growth makes it ever more difficult to alleviate poverty and ease unemployment in the country. The Government also points out that formal salaried jobs constitute some 17 per cent of employment in Mozambique, noting that close to 80 per cent of the economy in Mozambique is informal. In its observations, the ITUC expresses the view that strong measures targeted at building a job-rich economy, promoting investment to create decent, stable and lasting employment and alleviate poverty need to be adopted. Moreover, the design and implementation of such measures must be based on in-depth analysis of the composition of the workforce, employment and labour market in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken to strengthen the labour market information system and to indicate the manner in which the information compiled is used to inform the design and implementation of employment policy and active labour market measures. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by age, sex and economic sector, on the current employment situation in the country, including trends in employment, unemployment and visible underemployment in the country.

Employment of young persons. The Committee notes that the NEP sets specific targets for the employment of young persons. The Government reports that, as of 2021, young persons made up some two-thirds of the national labour force of 15,787,223 persons. It adds that around 21 per cent of young people residing in urban areas are unemployed, while in peripheral urban areas and rural areas young people are engaged in low productive activities. The Government indicates that it intends to increase formal employment opportunities, including through promotion of entrepreneurship. Beginning in 2021, the EMPREGA (Employ) programme is financing a business plan competition, through which 3,500 young companies will receive technical assistance to prepare business plans to create or expand their entrepreneurial activities. The Government also refers to the creation of a Fund to Support Youth Initiatives (FAIJ), implemented by the National Youth Institute, which provides material and financial support for entrepreneurial initiatives by young Mozambicans in different areas, including agriculture, agro-processing, fishing, tourism, arts and culture, packaging and technological innovation. The FAIJ programme “My Kit, My Job” (MEU KIT, MEU EMPREGO), supports youth self-employment through allocating kits to young persons (such as block manufacturing kits and electricity installation kits). The Government also launched the Creative Youth Prize, recognizing young people whose actions impact the development of the community, including through entrepreneurial activities. In its observations, the IOE notes that the NEP calls for the promotion of youth entrepreneurship through training programmes in rural and urban areas, as well as increased access to credit, investments in training targeted at young persons and an increased number of traineeships available to young persons. The Committee also notes the adoption in June 2020 of the Plan of Action for Implementing the Youth Policy 2014–23 (PAIPJ 2020), which seeks to address the main challenges faced by young persons, including in accessing education and employment. The main objectives of the PAIPJ 2020 include the improvement of quality of life for adolescents and young persons, through promoting their access to education, health, employment, housing, as well as prevention of forced marriages and early pregnancies. In its observations, the ITUC notes from the Government’s statements at the 2021 International Labour Conference discussion that it had launched programmes to encourage internships and traineeships in certain sectors, such as the banking sector, as well as programmes to promote self-employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by age, sex and urban/rural area, on the nature and impact of the policies and programmes developed and implemented by the Government to promote full, productive, freely chosen employment and decent work for young women and men throughout the country. The Committee further requests the Government to provide additional detailed information regarding the content, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote youth entrepreneurship, including information on the entrepreneurship training and development programmes and their impact on job creation and increased access to opportunities for decent and sustainable employment of young women and young men.

Employment of women. The Committee recalls that the NEP establishes specific lines of action aimed at promoting gender equality in economic and social development programmes, including: promoting the employment of women, including in traditionally male occupations; prioritising education and vocational training to promote equal employment opportunities for both women and men; and eliminating gender discrimination in access to employment. In its report, the Government also refers to the Government’s Five-Year Programme 2020–2024, which includes the promotion of gender equality in economic, social, political and cultural development. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on a series of measures aimed at promoting gender equity, including: training 3,340 women in entrepreneurship and business management (135 per cent of the annual target of 2,542), 64 income generation projects financed by the FAIJ, with women making up 28 per cent of the beneficiaries, 741 kits allocated for self-employment in the areas of auto mechanics, sewing and electrical installation, benefiting 499 women (over 67 per cent of the beneficiaries), and training 14 women’s associations in the use of agro-processing techniques in two provinces: Gaza and Sofala. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature, scope and impact of active labour market measures, including vocational guidance, education and training measures taken to facilitate women’s access to sustainable, lasting employment and decent work, particularly for women belonging to disadvantaged groups, such as women with disabilities or those living in rural areas.

Education and vocational guidance and training. The Committee notes that access to secondary education in the country is limited and completion rates remain very low at 13 per cent. In its observations, the IOE points out that the relevance of education and vocational training to the needs of the labour market is also very low. In this context, the IOE suggests that technical education and vocational training policies and programmes should be defined and implemented in close consultation with employers’ organizations. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that extending access to basic education for all Mozambicans is a central element of its poverty reduction strategy, with the aim of increasing access to sustainable employment opportunities. To this end, the Government has introduced reforms to the national education system, particularly in the area of technical vocational education and training. The Government reports that it has increased investment in general primary and secondary education, with a focus on promoting the increased integration of girls, increasing gender balance in schools and enabling more girls to attend technical courses. The Government provides additional information on measures taken to reduce drop-out rates, increase the quality and relevance of education, including by strengthening teacher training, and promote access to higher education. With respect to higher-level education and vocational training, the Government indicates that the number of students enrolled in university increased by six per cent from 2019 to 2020, and the number of those enrolled in technical education increased by five per cent during the same period. In 2020, 209,839 persons participated in vocational training, 61.7 per cent in private vocational training centres and the rest in public centres, including mobile units used in rural areas. The Committee notes that some one-third of the graduates (33.6 per cent) were women. The Government also provided 3,008 pre-professional internships during this period, in the areas of accounting, plumbing and mining. It adds that 1,174 women benefited from these internships. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to provide quality education, vocational guidance and training, particularly on the impact of these measures on job creation and placement in employment for both women and men, especially those belonging to disadvantaged groups.

Article 3. Consultations with the social partners. Consultations with representatives of persons affected by the measures to be taken. The Committee recalls that the NEP was examined and discussed within the tripartite Labour Advisory Commission (LAC) in May 2016, prior to its adoption. It further notes with interest that the Plan of Action for the Implementation of the NEP (PAPE 2021–24) was also discussed in the LAC, with the participation of the social partners prior to its adoption. However, the Committee notes the observations of the OTM, which indicates that, while the NEP was developed with the active participation of the social partners in 2016, the workers' organizations have not been effectively involved in its implementation. In its observations, the ITUC recalls that the LAC and the Development Observatory are the bodies entrusted with the responsibility of following up on the NEP. It nevertheless points out that, in the June 2021 International Labour Conference discussion on the application of the Convention by Mozambique, the Government provided no information on the involvement of the social partners in these two institutions. The ITUC considers that, for the NEP to be successful, it must fully include the social partners in its design, implementation and review, and calls for the establishment of strong mechanisms in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the manner and extent to which the social partners are consulted in the implementation of the National Employment Policy, its Action Plan 2021–24 and all other employment policies and active labour market measures. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on consultations held with representatives of the groups affected by the measures to be taken, as required by Article 3 of the Convention.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of Business New Zealand (BusinessNZ) and of the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU), communicated with the Government's report, and the Government's responses thereto.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends. The Committee notes the Government's comprehensive information on the Review of Active Labour Market Programmes identifying opportunities to strengthen support for workers facing economic displacement and persons with disabilities, including people with health conditions, as well as on legislative developments and the dialogue with the social partners in this regard. It further notes that the unemployment rate was characterized by low fluctuations within the last years and stood at 3.9 percent – 3.8 per cent for men and 4.1 per cent for women – in September 2023. Similarly stable was the employment rate for persons aged 15 and over, reporting at 69.1 per cent, with 73.9 per cent for men and 64.5 per cent for women, in September 2023. The employment rate saw an overall increase by 0.8 percentage points between the first quarter of 2017 and the first quarter of 2023, while that of the Asian population rose most significantly by 7.3 percentage points and women saw an increase by 2.1 percentage points. The only decreases during this period were among men compared to women and Pākehā compared to Māori, Pacific, and Asian ethnic groups, reporting a 0.2 per cent and 0.1 per cent decrease, respectively. With respect to underutilization, the Committee notes the Government's 2022 study, finding that it generally concerns more women and younger persons and those born in New Zealand and who live in larger households, with Māori persons being overrepresented in this group. BusinessNZ attributes the underutilization in particular of women and workers with disabilities to an overly protective regulatory regime. The Committee observes that, in September 2023, the total underutilization rate was 10.4 per cent (8.6 per cent for men and 12.2 per cent for women) which is low in comparison with other high-income countries. It also observes that labour underutilization is a broad concept that encompasses unemployment and other forms of mal-employment namely, insufficiency of the volume of work (labour slack), low remuneration (low earnings) and incompatibility of education and occupation (skill mismatch). In this respect, dedicated ILO reports have diagnosed that the problem in many developing countries is not so much unemployment but rather the lack of decent and productive work, which results in various forms of labour underutilization (that is, namely underemployment, low income, and low productivity). The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results obtained in terms of decent employment generation in response to insufficiency of the volume of work, low remuneration and incompatibility of education and occupation. In the absence of information in this respect in the report, the Government is also requested to provide updated information on the measures taken or envisaged to create employment through the promotion of small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide statistics concerning the size and distribution of the labour force, disaggregated by age and sex, as well as information on the employment situation and trends in employment, unemployment and underemployment/underutilization.

Active labour market measures. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government reported on the continued implementation and expansion of the Sector Workforce Engagement Programme, the Just Transitions Partnerships in Taranaki and Southland set up to proactively manage the effects of the potential closure of large regional employers and to enable just transitions for these workers and communities as well as the ongoing cross-agency Review of Active Labour Market Programmes (ALMP), which has identified gaps in terms of early intervention for workers facing displacement from the labour market and for workers with disabilities. Moreover, the Committee notes with interest two tripartite initiatives established by the NZCTU, BusinessNZ, and the Government: the Future of Work Tripartite Forum and the New Zealand Income Insurance (NZII) Scheme. The former continues to identify just transition priorities for New Zealand workforces in response to future of work megatrends and economic shocks focusing on at-risk workforces and communities to develop proactive policies that support workers at risk of labour market displacement to transition to secure employment. Catering in particular for workers becoming unemployed due to redundancy or firm closures and or whose ability to work has been impacted by a health condition or disability, the NZII Scheme was created in 2021 to provide them time and financial security to find a good job that matches their skills, needs and aspirations, or take part in training or rehabilitation for a new, fulfilling career. The Committee welcomes such integrated policies and measures meant to harness the potential offered by the combination of employment and social protection policies to promote future-of-work-related transitions and decent work creation through participatory and inclusive processes anchored in effective social dialogue. It requests the Government to provide further detailed information on the effectiveness and impact of the above measures, as well as on the consultations held with the social partners with respect to their formulation, implementation and monitoring of such measures. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on potential consultations held with other representatives of persons affected by such measures.

Persons particularly vulnerable to decent work deficits. The Committee notes the employment actions plans, which, over a five-year period aim of improving labour market outcomes for underserved populations, including persons with disabilities, Māori, Pacific peoples, older workers, women, former refugees, recent migrants and ethnic communities. It further notes the central role attributed to the Ministry of Social Development in rendering, together with social sector providers, tailored support in this regard to take up or return to suitable and sustainable employment by targeting cohorts with specific barriers, such as Māori, Pacific People, and youth. Additional beneficiaries are, through specific pilot programmes, persons with disabilities, including persons with mental health conditions (Oranga Mahi programme). The Government further refers to its comprehensive review – called for also by BusinessNZ – of the ‘Tomorrow’s Schools’ program. The 2019 review report revealed deficits in adequately serving some learners, in particular Māori, Pacific People, persons with disabilities, persons with learning needs and those from disadvantaged backgrounds, which the Government envisages to combat with significant reforms to reset Tomorrow’s Schools. The Committee also notes the release, in 2019, of the Youth Employment Action Plan, targeted at improving young people’s education, training and labour market outcomes and focusing in particular on those 9,000 persons aged between 15 to 24 years who are not in education, employment or training for six months or longer and in which women, persons with disabilities and in particular Māori and Pacific Peoples, whose unemployment rates are around twice that of other ethnicities, are overrepresented. As part of the Youth Employment Action Plan, the Government works across the education, welfare and employment systems and partners with Māori and other communities to identify needs and intervene earlier and by improving career guidance and job brokering services. Finally, the Committee notes the Disability Action Plan 2019–2023 (Action Plan) developed together with persons with disabilities, the “Disabled People’s Organisation Coalition” and government agencies. Continuing similar action plans since 2011, the Action Plan aims at delivering the eight outcomes of the New Zealand Disability Strategy 2016–26 – education, employment and economic security, health and wellbeing, rights protection and justice, accessibility, attitudes, choice and control, and leadership – and contains a package of 25 cross-government work programmes to be implemented beyond 2023. With reference to the measures referred to by the report, the Committee observes that active labour market strategies and measures are indeed more successful when tailored to specific employment barriers and circumstances faced by different groups like those identified above. At the same time, while certain of these measures may be effective for some subgroups of these groups, they may not be effective for others. Identifying and understanding the combinations of barriers faced by each subgroup allows for more effective and fine-tuned measures to be crafted. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide updated, detailed information on the type and impact of employment measures targeting persons with decent work deficits such as youth, including young Māori and Pacific Peoples, women, and persons with disabilities. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information, including statistics disaggregated by age and sex, on the impact of education and training measures to facilitate obtaining lasting employment for young persons and other persons vulnerable to decent work deficits. The Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on the coordination of education and training policies with prospective employment opportunities, and on the consultations held with the social partners in this regard.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 2010)

Previous comment

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. National policy. Promoting opportunities in the open labour market for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Discrimination Against Persons with Disabilities (Prohibition) Act in 2018, as well as the adoption of the National Policy on Disability (NPD) in 2018. The Act prohibits discrimination on the ground of disability by any person or institution in any manner or circumstance (section 1(1)), and further provides that a person with a disability has the right to work on an equal basis with others, including the right to the opportunity to gain a living by work freely chosen or accepted in an open labour market (section 28(1)). It also provides that all employers of labour in public organizations shall, as much as possible, have persons with disabilities constituting at least five per cent of their employment (section 29), and encourages their participation in politics and public life (section 30(1)). The Act also establishes the National Commission for Persons with Disabilities, whose powers include: (i) the establishment and promotion of inclusive school, vocational and rehabilitation centres for the development of persons with disabilities (section 37(j)); (ii) liaising with the public and private sectors and other bodies to ensure that their peculiar interests are taken into consideration in every government policy, programme and activity (section 37(k)); and (iii) receiving complaints made by persons with disabilities with respect to the violation of their rights (section 37(n)). For its part, the NPD envisages the implementation of measures in the area of vocational guidance, such as providing vocational training programmes and facilities; vocational guidance and information about different occupation to enable persons with disabilities to make informed decisions when choosing an occupation according to their interests and abilities. The NDP further provides for the implementation of measures in the area of employment, including ensuring effective participation of persons with disabilities in the employment process; as well as identifying and eliminating employment barriers, including by ensuring reasonable accommodation for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that, according to the World Health Organization, in 2018, about 29 million of the 195 million people were living with a disability. It observes that access to decent work for persons with disabilities is a critical issue that requires the attention and efforts of a wide range of stakeholders. The Committee notes that there are often significant barriers that prevent workers with disabilities from accessing decent job opportunities which include stigma and discrimination, lack of accommodation and support, and a lack of awareness and understanding about the capabilities and potential of workers with disabilities. These barriers need to be tackled by way of crafting and implementing inclusive policies and legal frameworks which do not only establish the principle of non-discrimination but also specific measures facilitating access to the open labour market such as requirements to make reasonable accommodation in the workplace, to actively recruit and hire persons with disabilities, to provide training and support, or to foster an inclusive work environment. In this context and taking into account the measures taken over the last reporting period, the Committee requests the Government to provide follow-up information on the manner in which the newly adopted legislation and the national policy have been implemented in practice, communicating relevant secondary legislation as well as copies of evaluation reports and court decisions concerning the application of the principles of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures implemented to promote the employment of persons with disabilities in the open labour market, notably in the case of women and girls with disabilities taking into account the physical and economic barriers they often face in gaining access to education and employment. Finally, it requests the Government to provide statistical information on the employment rate of persons with disabilities in the open labour market, disaggregated, as much as possible, by age and sex.

Article 5. Consultations. The Committee notes that, according to the NPD (2018), although there are no legal provisions expressly requiring representatives of persons with disabilities to participate in policy making and work with government institutions, organizations of persons with disabilities do participate in practice in the planning, implementation and evaluation of services and measures that affect the lives of persons with disabilities. This Policy further states that the Government provides financial, organizational, and logistical support to organizations of persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to describe in detail the manner in which representative employers' and workers' organizations and organizations representing persons with disabilities are consulted in practice regarding the designing, implementation and evaluation of the vocational rehabilitation and employment policy for persons with disabilities and that of the NPD more generally. Furthermore, noting that the Discrimination Against Persons with Disabilities (Prohibition) Act provides that the National Commission for Persons with Disabilities, which comprises in its membership persons with disabilities from each geopolitical zone, liaises with the public and private sectors and the government to ensure that all policies, programmes and activities address the needs of persons with disabilities, the Committee asks the Government to consider extending the mandate of this commission to also conduct consultations with the social partners on matters covered by the Convention.

Articles 7 and 8. Services accessible to persons with disabilities, including in rural and remote areas. According to the NPD, the Government has launched rehabilitation centres for vocational training of persons with disabilities and has adopted the Community Based Vocational Rehabilitation (CBVR), which includes vocational skills training at the community level. The Government further reports that it runs three vocational rehabilitation centres, namely: the Nigeria Farmcraft Centre for the Blind in Lagos; the School of Social Work in Enugu and Rehabilitation Centre in Gwarinpa FCT. The Committee notes that according to the 2020 World Bank report on Disability Inclusion in Nigeria, the government has established six rehabilitation and vocational centers to provide training to persons with disabilities, but most are in deplorable condition as a result of neglect by the authorities. The Committee notes from the Government's 2021 report submitted to the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) that the Lagos state government: (i) inaugurated in 2016 the governing board of the Office for Disability Affairs, to manage a 25 billion Nigerian Naira Employment Trust Fund for persons with disabilities; (ii) in 2017, empowered over two thousand persons with disabilities with financial grants, assistive technologies and mobility aids, and funded 500 persons with disabilities with 100,000,000.00 Nigerian Naira each as start-up grants to establish businesses of their own; and (iii) in 2018, employed 250 persons with disabilities in its public service. The NDP includes as part of its objectives to make necessary adaptations in existing public and private services and institutions which provides skills training in both urban and rural areas. Noting the indication in the Government's report that, between 2019 and 2020, only some 48 persons with disabilities have received training, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information, including statistics, disaggregated by sex and region, on how the newly created vocational training centres have stepped up their activities with a view to providing a greater number of persons with disabilities with vocational rehabilitation and employment services to secure and retain lasting employment on the open labour market and to advance in employment, with a special emphasis on those in rural areas and remote communities.

Article 9. Training and availability of rehabilitation counsellors or other qualified staff. The Committee notes that the Government's report only contains succinct information indicating that between 2019 and 2020, there were thirty-three qualified workers providing vocational guidance, vocational training, placement and employment of persons with disabilities. The Committee also notes that according to the 2020 World Bank report on Disability Inclusion in Nigeria, persons with disabilities are often limited in their choice of careers due to stigma and to the dearth of skilled professionals available to teach subjects, such as mathematics to visually impaired students. In view of the above, the Committee does not consider the offer of employment-related services available to persons with disabilities to be adequate considering its obligation to ensure training and availability of rehabilitation counsellors or other qualified staff for the vocational training and guidance as well as placement services to persons with disabilities. It therefore calls for efforts to be stepped up in this regard and asks the Government to supply further information as regards measures taken or envisaged with a view to improve the offer of services required by the Convention.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers Authentic (CUT-A), received on 30 August 2022. The Committee notes that it has received no response to these observations from the Government and requests it to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Active employment measures. Informal economy. The Committee notes information from the Government on the approval in May 2022 of the National Employment Plan for 2022–26, which includes, inter alia, promoting the transition to formality through monitoring activities, stimulating labour intermediation, and building in greater advantages and incentives. In this regard, the Plan envisages the development of public and private action aimed at generating formal employment as the economy grows, with emphasis placed on young persons, women, and groups in vulnerable situations. The Committee also notes: (i) the adoption of the Employment Reactivation Plan for 2020–21, which includes promoting formal employment among its objectives; and (ii) the inauguration in 2018 of the Entrepreneurs' Training Centre (CEE), with the objective of providing guidance and increasing entrepreneurial skills to build sustainable enterprises or businesses, by promoting formalization of self-employment and enterprises, through mentoring, training, technical assistance and leveraging other actors of the national and international entrepreneurial system. The Committee notes the adoption in 2019 of the National Promotion and Formalization Plan for Developing and Increasing the Competitiveness of MSMEs, 2018–23, which includes among its five cross-cutting objectives the simplification of procedures to formalize MSMEs. Regarding measures adopted under the national employment policy to facilitate the transition to the formal economy in rural areas, the Committee notes that Decree No. 3678/20 of 2020, which regulates Act No. 5446/2015 on public policies for rural women, provides for: (i) the implementation of employment formalization programmes in rural areas, such as the inclusion of women workers in the social security system (IPS); (ii) the formulation of occupational training courses; (iii) the creation of first job policies for young rural women; and (iv) the provision of information on the voluntary inclusion of independent rural women workers in the IPS Social Security – Retirement and Pensions Fund. The Committee notes that the CUT-A stresses that no progress has been made regarding the informal economy. The Committee observes that the phenomenon of informality is related to the level of social and economic development and that there is a clear correlation between poverty and informality, as informal economy workers are frequently in a situation of poverty or extreme poverty. In many developing countries, a large part of the labour force is employed informally, often for their own account, but also as occasional workers, home workers, or domestic workers. In this connection, the Committee stresses how important it is that public policies addressing factors leading to informality include macroeconomic policies favourable to employment that support aggregate demand, productive investment and structural transformation to create formal employment, together with strengthened social security systems. It further highlights the importance of consulting the representatives of the social partners and persons working in the rural sector and the informal economy. Adapting policy support to the most affected and vulnerable groups in the informal economy, including women and young persons, will be crucial in the period following the COVID-19 crisis. Where a large part of the workforce works in the informal economy, it is essential that informal and rural workers' associations, where they exist, take part in the elaboration of national employment policy with a view to fixing its primary objective: to ensure access to high quality and productive employment for the greatest number of persons under conditions that allow them to escape from poverty. Noting the importance of an integrated strategy for the formalization of employment and for social security, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the measures adopted with regard to employment policy and their impact on promoting the transition from the informal to the formal economy, in coordination with other public policies including, for example, social protection, education, fiscal and rural development policies.

Coordination of employment policy with economic and social policies. The Government states that the Social Policy of Paraguay, which is part of the National Development Plan (PND) 2030, facilitates coordinated action between the sectoral bodies under the Executive and with the various Government echelons, civil society, the private sector, and with the judicial and legislative authorities. The Ministry for Social Development (MDS) was created in 2018 to design and apply policies, plans, programmes and projects relating to development and social equity through coordinated, inter-institutional action aimed at reducing inequalities and improving the quality of life of vulnerable populations and those living in poverty. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the implementation of the “Tekopora” cash transfer programme with co-responsibility, and of the “Tenoderã” programme to support socioeconomic inclusion. The Government reports that these programmes continue to operate: “Tekopora” covered 166,164 families during the first two months of 2022, of which 85 per cent were headed by women, with 80 per cent of the homes located in rural areas. The “Tenonderã” programme, operating in 14 departments, provided seed capital to 9,331 families in 2021; 83 per cent of the families were headed by women and 17 per cent headed by men. The Committee also notes from the report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights for the Human rights Council Universal Periodic Review, dated 1 March 2021, that “the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) was concerned by reports of the precarious working conditions faced by many indigenous people, in particular on farms in the Chaco region” (A/HRC/WG.6/38/PRY/2, paragraph 33). The Committee observes that, in the context of planning national employment policies, coordination between the various parties concerned and between employment objectives and other economic and social objectives, as provided under Article 1(3) of the Convention, is essential, but can prove complicated due to differences of opinion. It also observes that the ILO has supported the creation of employment committees, informal consultations and drafting groups to promote coordination and that some countries have made use of existing structures, such as inter-ministerial committees, while others have established ad hoc committees to design national employment policies. The Committee emphasizes that, if the coordination is to be effective, the committees must be tripartite and inter-ministerial and must have power of decision. They must involve different ministries, including finance, planning and other sectors, as well as employers’ and workers’ organizations, civil society and development partners. The participation of influential bodies, such as national labour advisory committees or economic and social councils, has been beneficial in many countries. The Committee also emphasizes that high-level representation, including government leaders, can promote cooperation between the parties concerned. Recalling that the Convention establishes the objective of employment policy to be stimulating economic growth and development, raising levels of living, meeting manpower requirements and overcoming unemployment and underemployment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to give full, productive and freely chosen employment a preponderant place in all growth and development strategies, in particular those concerning members of the indigenous peoples. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the impact of cash transfer and seed capital programmes and initiatives referred to above.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union “Solidarność”, received on 1 September 2022. The Committee also notes the Government’s reply to these observations, received on 2 November 2022.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active employment policy and labour market measures. The Committee notes the adoption of Poland’s Recovery and Resilience Plan (RRP) in 2021 in the framework of the European Union (EU) Plan “NextGenerationEU” providing funds to EU Member States to implement ambitious reforms and investments. Poland’s RRP includes a strong combination of reforms addressing bottlenecks to lasting and sustainable growth, and investments targeting at decarbonising the Polish economy, accelerating the digital transition and reinforcing Poland’s economic and social resilience. According to information available in the European Commission website, the green transition and digital transformation of the economy are at the core of the RRP’s policy response, representing 42.7 per cent and 21.3 per cent of the RRP’s investment streams and reforms, respectively. The RRP include measures that aim at improving the resilience of the labour market by, inter alia, improving the quality and adequacy of the functioning of labour market institutions, reaching out to and activating older workers or people from disadvantaged groups through upskilling and reskilling programmes, contributing to improving the labour market participation of women, and introducing incentives to remain active in the labour market after reaching the statutory retirement age. The RRP also includes a number of relevant measures to improve the business environment and investment climate. While noting the comprehensive reforms and measures envisaged in the RRP, the Committee recalls that the national employment policy shall take due account of mutual relationships between employment objectives and other economic and social objectives (Article 1(3) of the Convention). In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall also that, as a set of policies that have an impact on labour markets, employment policies not only include classical labour market and skills policies, but also sectoral, macroeconomic, investment, enterprise, social protection and other economic and social policies. Governments need to monitor all these policy areas together to genuinely understand their impact on employment creation and seek to ensure coordination across the various ministries involved. In the current times made of transformation and labour market transitions, governments, together with the social partners, need to analyse the impact of the drivers of the future of work (such as digitalization, structural shifts in labour markets, labour market transitions and gender impacts of automation) on social justice and how integrated employment policies can be harnessed to participate to this objective.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the approval of the 2022/2023 National Reform Programme (NRP) on 26 April 2022, in the framework of the economic and budgetary policy: the “European Semester”. The NRP envisages the adoption of measures to ensure effective institutions for the labour market, such as introducing new or improving the existing support instruments, reaching the inactive, supporting lifelong learning and improving the competences of public employment services (PES). Moreover, the Government refers to the implementation of the Operational Programme Knowledge Education Development (OP KED) and regional operational programmes (ROP) with the support of the European Social Fund (ESF). The OP KED focuses on the integration in the labour market of young people, vocational education and training and on participation of women in the labour market. The Government reports that the implementation of a set of measures is also envisaged to modernize the PES related to raising competences and lifelong learning, such as expanding the labour offices’ offer to include new groups of clients (including jobseekers and employees), and introducing a lifelong learning voucher, a partially redeemable education loan as well as a new apprenticeship formula. In addition, measures have been taken to promote the participation in the labour market of persons with family responsibilities, including providing assistance for childcare to parents and carers of children under the age of three, and grants to employers hiring unemployed carers of persons with disabilities. Changes to the National Training Fund are also planned, including extending the access to the National Training Fund to self-employed and persons working under civil law contracts. Lastly, the Government reports that the draft Labour Market Act was not adopted and that a draft Act on professional activity has been prepared in order to replace the 2004 Act on Employment Promotion and Labour Market Institutions (hereinafter the 2004 Act).

The Committee also notes that, in its observations, Solidarność reiterates that, while the implementation of the employment policy has improved, more efficient measures are needed notably as regards adopting more effective legislative action and allocating greater financial resources to the Labour Fund dedicated to the professional activation of the long-term unemployed. It stresses the need to identify the skills demands of the labour market to ensure adequate industry training and observes that, under the new legislative reform, the obligation of developing a National Programme for Employment will be removed. In this regard, the Government observes that the National Programme will be replaced by the Public Employment Service Development Plan, which will be consulted with the Labour Market Council. It also indicates that the demands of the labour market are analysed by the Occupational Barometer and the Polish labour market forecasting system. With regards to the professional activation of the long-term unemployed, the Government indicates that they constitute one of the priority groups of labour offices, that the number of registered long-term unemployed is taken into consideration in the distribution of Labour Fund resources among the district labour offices and that a new proposed legislation will enable the transfer of larger amounts of resources to district labour offices where there is a high proportion of long-term unemployed. The Government further reports that, at the end of 2021, 9,300 long-term unemployed were registered in the labour offices. In 2021, 74,400 long-term unemployed benefited from active forms of support (non-subsidized work, internships or vocational training) and represented 26.7 per cent of the total activated unemployed. The Committee invites the Government to supply in its future reports details on how it prioritizes and tackles the above-mentioned challenges provoked by the transformations taking place in the world of work and labour market transitions at the national level, including in the framework of the Recovery and Resilience Plan (RRP), such as information on how the challenges associated to work on digital platforms have been addressed. It requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed information on the impact of the measures that are being taken to support the objectives of the national employment policy, including newly adopted laws and regulations adopted in the future, such as the Act on professional activity, as well as of the measures taken to promote the integration of the long-term unemployed in the labour market.

Employment trends. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, despite the negative impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, the labour market trends remained stable thanks to the support measures taken to address its impact. The employment rate for persons aged 15 to 64 increased from 67.4 per cent in 2018 to 70.3 per cent in 2021 (63.8 per cent for women and 76.8 per cent for men), the economic activity rate increased from 70.1 per cent to 72.8 per cent (66.1 per cent for women and 79.5 per cent for men). The unemployment rate slightly decreased from 3.9 per cent to 3.4 per cent. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information, including updated statistics, disaggregated by sex and age, on the situation and trends of the labour market in the country, including information on employment, unemployment and visible sub-employment.

Workers under self-employment, civil law and fixed-term contracts. The Government indicates that the practice of concluding civil contracts with persons who are in fact in an employment relationship is subjected to fines ranging from 1,000–30,000 Polish Zloty (PLN). It adds that compliance with laws and regulations concerning the employment relationship is ensured through the National Labour Inspectorate (NLI) and the existence of an employment relationship can be asserted and recognized in court. Nonetheless, the Government indicates that the specific characteristics of the operation of some sectors and the need of certain employers, may justify the use of civil law contracts, the application of which requires complying with the minimum wage established and ensuring safe and healthy working conditions. The Committee also notes the Government's indication the draft act amending the Labour Code envisages the introduction of changes to the provisions on fixed-term employment contracts, such as the employer's obligation to indicate the reason justifying the termination of these contracts and to notify in writing the company's trade union. Solidarność maintains that, despite the reduction of the abusive recourse to self-employment, civil law contracts and fixed-term contracts, there is still a high level of use of such contracts. The Committee further notes that Solidarność emphasizes once again the need for adopting legislative changes to promote the strict regulation, supervision and control of the operations of private employment agencies. Solidarność reiterates its concern that often private employment agencies are unprepared organizationally and lack the appropriate competencies. The Government indicates that private employment agencies need to meet certain requirements to be registered in the Register Employment Agencies. It adds that private employment agencies are regulated under the Entrepreneurs' Law of 6 March 2018 and that no new legislative measures have been adopted in this regard. Therefore, a fixed-term employment contract remains the employment form of temporary workers used by private employment agencies (Act on the Employment of Temporary Workers of 2013). Those performing such work under civil law contracts are also covered by the definition of temporary work and the time limits established in the legislation for temporary arrangements. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the scale of the use of civil contracts and on whether and how the labour inspectorate is given the necessary means to monitor the application of the national legislation, combat misclassification of contracts and ensure that they are not used to mask the identity of an employer actually directing and monitoring the working activity in a way that is incompatible with the worker's declared independent status. It also requests the Government to provide information on the status of the draft act amending the provisions of the Labour Code related to fixed-term contracts. The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistical information on the types of contracts (permanent, fixed term, self-employed) prevalent in the labour market.

Migrant workers. The Committee notes the adoption of the Act on assistance to Ukrainian citizens on 12 March 2022 and its subsequent amendments of 8 April 2022, which include measures to enable Ukrainian citizens which left the country in the context of the extremely difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022 to access the Polish labour market and enhance their professional activation and social integration, including by: (i) introducing the possibility of registering with the labour offices and receiving assistance; (ii) taking up legal employment with no additional permits; and (iii) financing Polish language courses as well as the costs of the procedure to recognize the completion of studies. The Government reports that, in April 2022, over 20,000 unemployed Ukrainian citizens were registered with the labour offices, representing two per cent of the total number of registered unemployed. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the interministerial Team for Migration adopted the document "Polish migration policy – diagnosis of the initial state", which became the basis for the draft document "Poland's Migration Policy – Action Directions for 2021–2022". During the preparation of the document, public consultations were held, including with All-Poland Trade Unions Alliance (OPZZ). However, according to information available in the Government's website, the work on the draft Policy was suspended due to the rapid changes taking place in Poland's environment, affecting the characteristics of migration movements. For its part, Solidarność emphasizes the lack of a migration policy in the country and expresses a number of concerns regarding the amendments to the Law on Foreigners related to counteracting illegal employment and ensuring that migrants workers enjoy equal treatment with respect to working conditions and remuneration. In its reply, the Government indicates that, according to new rules introduced in the employment of migrants on 29 January 2022, employers cannot employ migrant workers at a wage lower to the one that it would be paid to Polish citizens performing the same job. The Government adds that it envisages adopting a new Act on the Employment of Foreigners, which will aim to reduce administrative barriers, streamline procedures related to the employment of migrants and preventing abuses against them. The Committee takes due note of the measures taken and envisaged in relation to migrant workers' access to the national labour market and requests the Government to continue to provide information, including statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, on the nature, scope and impact of the measures adopted for the use of the labour potential of persons with a migration background, including Ukrainian citizens, to help them integrate sustainably into the labour market.

Persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the measures taken to promote employment of persons with disabilities, including in the framework of the OP KED (such as the implementation of new support tools for persons with disabilities and the development of assisted employment) and the ROPs (measures related to active integration, social services and the social economy). The Government reports the implementation until August 2023, under the OP KED, of the project "High Quality Policy for the Social and Professional Inclusion of People with Disabilities". The project includes measures aimed at supporting employers in adapting employment, recruiting and maintaining employment for persons with disabilities; and supporting persons with disabilities in taking up employment, including the transition between social and vocational rehabilitation, and starting a business activity. The Government also indicates that, under the ROPs, a wide range of services are provided to persons with disabilities, such as personal assistance services, to support their participation in social, professional and educational areas. The Government adds that with the support of the ESF, jobs are created in social enterprises for persons with disabilities. The Government reports that, under different professional activation projects, including the OP KED, support was provided to over 15,000 women with disabilities and 13,400 men with disabilities and nearly 4,100 received support in entrepreneurship under the ROPs. The Committee wishes to highlight that employment placement services play a central role in promoting employment opportunities, especially for jobseekers who face particular obstacles in finding a job. The role of placement services and their strengthening in assisting persons with disabilities to enter the labour market has increasingly been the focus of growing attention globally. Inclusive employment placement services can support both employers and people with disabilities and include providing information on job vacancies, assessing the professional aspirations and skills of jobseekers, matching jobseekers to available jobs or referring them for further training, if needed. They can be a core part of a solid policy framework with a sound operational strategy backed by legislation, where necessary. To be effective and efficient in this respect, employment services need to form linkages with other government ministries and agencies at a policy level, to ensure that obstacles which persons with disabilities may face are minimized, and that the skills which they offer are relevant to labour market opportunities. Partnerships with disability organizations can help to reach out persons with disabilities and provide them with the necessary support, and can also assist employers and training organizations to implement reasonable accommodation. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on the nature and the impact of the specific measures taken to promote employment opportunities for persons with disabilities in the open labour market. It requests the Government to supply all relevant information on how the challenges associated with the placement of persons with disabilities are addressed, including measures taken at the inter-ministerial coordination level and in coordination with organizations of persons with disabilities.

Older workers. The Government indicates that, between 2019 and 2021, the economic activity rate of persons aged over 50 increased from 59.2 per cent to 64.6 per cent, and the employment rate from 57.5 per cent to 63.1 per cent, while the unemployment rate decreased from 2.8 to 2.4 per cent. The Government indicates, however, that these ratios are still lower than the European Union average. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures taken to promote employment among older workers, including the provision of wage subsidies and the exemptions from the payment of social contributions for companies employing persons older than 50. Moreover, older workers are identified as a priority group in employment programmes and services for unemployed.

The Government points out that the activation of persons over 50 remains difficult due to the low occupational and geographical mobility of this group. The Government reports that, in April 2022, persons over 50 represented 26.7 per cent of the unemployed registered and 15.8 per cent of activated unemployed after joining active programmes. The Committee takes due note of this information and observes in this respect that such measures often include addressing discrimination in employment on the basis of age by taking measures, such as legislation preventing age discrimination and public-awareness campaigns, to eliminate discrimination in the recruitment, promotion and training process, and in employment retention in collaboration and consultation with employers' and workers' representatives. In the same way, encouraging employer and worker representatives to jointly identify mechanisms to facilitate the retention and hiring of all older workers, including those in vulnerable situations, is a good practice. Employers can also be encouraged to constitute an age-diverse workforce through initiatives that provide guidance on issues such as promoting a sharing of knowledge and experience across different age groups and adjusting work responsibilities and working-time arrangements to the changing capacities of workers and their family responsibilities over their life course as well as to take account of improvements in the education, health and physical capacities of older workers. The Committee asks the Government to supply updated information on the nature, the scope and the impact of measures adopted or envisaged targeting older workers, with a particular focus on the older persons facing long-term unemployment.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the COVID-19 pandemic had the most profound impact on young people, often working based on easy-to-terminate employment contracts, and in sectors that were heavily affected by the social restrictions. The youth employment rate decreased from 31.7 per cent in 2019 to 27.3 per cent in 2021, while the youth unemployment rate increased from 9.9 per cent in 2019 to 11.9 per cent in 2021. The rate of young people not in employment, education or training (NEET) was 13.4 per cent. The Committee observes that the OP KED envisages the adoption of measures to enhance the possibilities of permanent employment for young people in difficult situations in the labour market and for young NEET, by improving their practical skills and work experience and increasing their level of entrepreneurship. The OP KED also offers support to young persons in building social competences to strengthen their employability through their participation in social activities carried out by non-governmental organizations for local communities, youth centers, and so on. The Government indicates that, in the framework of the OP KED, comprehensive and personalized support in the form of job placement, career counselling, training or subsidized employment was provided to 368,900 young women under the age of 30 and 289,000 young men, including over 234,300 long-term unemployed. The participants also received non-returnable financial support for setting up a business. In addition, the Government refers to the implementation of the programme "First Business-Support to Start" under the agreement concluded with Bank Gospodarstwa Krajowego, which grants preferential loans for starting a business and creating jobs for unemployed persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature and the impact of the vocational education measures and active labour market policies targeted at young persons. It wishes to recall in this respect the existence of the YouthPOL database, an online inventory of current policies and legislation affecting youth employment and which provides policy makers, researchers and practitioners with relevant and up-to-date information on policy responses for youth employment and aims at contributing to the promotion of decent work for youth through the expansion and consolidation of the knowledge base on youth employment and legislation.

Article 3. Consultations with the social partners. The Committee observes that, according to the NRP report, the draft NRP 2022/2023 was submitted for consultation to workers' and employers' organizations. In its observations, Solidarność maintains that greater participation of the social partners should be ensured in the National Training Fund. The Government emphasizes in this respect that, in accordance with the 2004 Act, the tripartite Labour Market Council actively participates in setting the priorities for the allocation and the spending plans of the funds of the National Training Fund. The Committee recalls that the involvement of workers and employers in the design and implementation of employment policies is a key element to improve the design as well as the implementation of integrated employment policy frameworks. The Committee observes that social partners' role is indeed vital as these actors rely on both their experience and practical understanding of the problems associated with work and business and can provide decision-makers with relevant information in the quest for decent employment creation. While most countries recognize the importance of the principle of social dialogue in employment policy formulation and implementation, having effective and institutionalized mechanisms in place guarantees an informed and effective dialogue on employment policy. It notes that, over the last years, with ILO support, a number of countries have thus gone beyond consultation to establish more deliberative and inclusive types of participation and have invited the most knowledgeable actors, including persons affected by the measures to be taken, to work together and jointly set the research agenda and then debate the options available for creating decent work. Another important element in this respect is to ensure active engagement and debate amongst stakeholders throughout the policymaking process as opposed to holding consultations only late in the formulation process to validate the proposed policy. The Committee therefore once again asks the Government to provide specific examples on the manner in which representative organizations of workers and employers and other stakeholders, such as representatives of the persons affected by the measures to be taken, are given the possibility to be consulted concerning the design and implementation of integrated employment policies so that their experience and views are fully taken into account with a view to securing their full cooperation and support for such policies.

Romania

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1973)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market policies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the overall employment rate for the active population (15–64 years) reached 66.0 per cent in the third quarter of 2020, showing an upward trend compared to 63.9 per cent in 2017. It also notes the persistently lower employment rates for women in 2017 (55.8 per cent for women compared to 71.8 per cent for men) and in the third quarter of 2020 (56.9 per cent for women compared to 74.9 per cent for men). The Committee notes that, according to ILOSTAT data, the overall unemployment rate in 2020 was 5 per cent (5.3 per cent for men and 4.7 per cent for women, respectively). The Government refers to the Human Capital Operational Program (HCOP) as an important tool for financing employment measures, structures in seven priority axes, including employment (axes 1, 2 and 3), social inclusion (axes 4 and 5), education (axis 6) and technical assistance (axis 7). The Government also indicates that Act No. 76/2002 on the unemployment insurance system and employment stimulation during the period 2016–18 was amended, with the aim of increasing employment opportunities for registered unemployed persons and jobseekers and stimulating employers to hire registered unemployed persons. The Committee notes that job subsidies are provided to employers who offer employment opportunities to specific groups of workers, including new graduates, persons with disabilities, registered unemployed persons over the age of 45, long-term unemployed persons, young people in the NEET category (not in employment, education or training), youth at risk of social marginalization and unemployed single parents. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed information on general employment trends, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age. It further requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of its employment policy measures in terms of the creation of productive employment and decent jobs, job creation, particularly for specific groups such as women, youth at risk of social marginalization, persons with disabilities, older workers and the long-term unemployed.

Youth employment. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate of youth (15–24 years) stood at 18.3 per cent in 2017, rising to 19.2 per cent in the third quarter of 2020. Moreover, according to the 2020 European Commission Country Report for Romania (SWD (2020) 522 final), in 2018 the percentage of young people not in education, employment or training (NEET) was one of the highest in the European Union, with three times as many NEETs among the young rural resident population (15–24) compared to those living in urban areas. The Government indicates that, as part of its efforts to support the labour market integration of young persons, particularly those in the NEET category, the Ministry of Labour and Social Justice elaborated the Youth Guarantee Implementation Plan 2017–2020. The Government also reports that it approved a draft Youth Law on 5 July 2018 which was sent to Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by age, sex and rural/urban areas on the nature and impact of the measures taken to facilitate lasting employment opportunities for young people, especially those classified as NEETs. It also requests the Government to provide information on progress made regarding the adoption of the new Youth Law, and to provide a copy once adopted.

Roma minority. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Strategy for the Inclusion of Romanian citizens belonging to the Roma Minority 2012–2020 as well as to axes 4 and 5 of the HCOP, which focus on reducing social exclusion. The Government indicates that the National Agency for Employment is responsible for implementing measures taken to attain the employment objectives, based on annual employment programs. Measures taken include the provision of information on employment services in communities with large numbers of Roma, allocation of territorial budgets, job exchanges and development of collaboration with Roma representatives. The Committee notes that the Government exceeded its target of providing employment to 5,385 members of the Roma community in 2015, with 6,295 Roma being placed in employment; however, the targets set for 2016 and 2017 were not fully achieved. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on the nature and impact of the measures taken to promote access to lasting employment and decent work for members of the Roma community.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide specific examples of how the social partners are effectively consulted and participate in decision making on the matters covered by the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the development of the Youth Guarantee Implementation Plan, indicating that the social partners were consulted during this process. The Government also indicates that social partners and non-governmental organizations play an important role in the implementation of various programmes and projects related to employment, promotion of youth-related initiatives, training ventures, job placement, apprenticeship and traineeship programmes. The Committee further notes that the National Employment Program, developed each year by the National Agency for Employment since 2002, is formulated on the basis of proposals from the county employment agencies and the Bucharest Municipality Agency, taking into account the economic and social situation at the territorial level and the strategic targets in the programmatic documents adopted at national level. The Government indicates that the National Employment Program targets specific groups that encounter difficulty in accessing the labour market, such as members of the Roma community, persons with disabilities, young persons covered by the child protection system, foreigners, refugees and beneficiaries of other forms of international protection, persons who have executed custodial sentences and victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the manner in which the social partners are effectively consulted and participate in the development of the National Employment Programme each year. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that these consultations include representatives of other segments of the economically active population, including representatives of the Roma community, persons with disabilities, women and young persons, as well as of persons working in informal economy.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Serbia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) communicated with the Government's report, received on 30 September 2022.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Active labour market measures. The Committee notes from the implementation report of the National Employment Action Plan for 2020 that the general objective of the employment policy was to increase employment and included the specific goals of reducing duality in the labour market through improving labour conditions and labour market institutions, encouraging employment and inclusion of less employable persons in the labour market through implementation of Active Employment Policy Measures (AEPs), supporting for regional and local employment policy, and improving the quality of the workforce and investing in human capital. The Committee notes the AEPs taken to improve the situation of "hard-to-employ" persons, such as employment fairs, job search clubs, specific trainings and workshops, trainee, educational and work assistance programmes, professional practice, public works, and targeted subsidies. The Committee also notes the Government's reference to an ex-post analysis of the National Employment Strategy for 2011–20, which stresses that the implementation of the Strategy has been successful overall. The number of registered elderly persons in employment (aged between 50 and 64) more than doubled in 2019 compared to 2011, increasing their participation in the total number of employees from 13 to 20 per cent. According to the analysis, the number of long-term unemployed (job seeking for more than 12 months) reached its peak in 2012 (over half a million) and decreased to 170,000 in 2019. The share of long-term unemployment in total unemployment decreased from 75.4 per cent in 2012 to 50.3 per cent in 2019. The Committee notes that the activity rate of the rural population increased from 60.4 per cent in 2010 to 68.7 per cent in 2019 and their employment rate increased from 49.7 per cent to 62.1 per cent. The analysis indicates that 142,540 unemployed persons and 137,443 "hard-to-employ" persons were covered in all AEPs in 2019. The relative improvement is primarily attributed to institutional factors and demographic trends, such as the 2014 amendments to the Labour Law about the severance pay, increase in the retirement age, as well as the 2014 amendment to the Law on Pension and Disability Insurance, which introduced penalties for early retirement. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Employment Strategy for 2021–26 recognizes as a specific objective that of improving labour market situation of the unemployed women, young persons, persons with disabilities and Roma minority. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote full, productive and sustainable employment, including those adopted within the framework of the Employment Strategy for 2021–26. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of measures adopted with a view to promoting the employment of elderly persons, persons living in rural areas, combating undeclared work as well as long-term unemployment, to enable them to access decent and lasting employment.

Employment trends. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Labour Force Survey of the Statistical Office of the Republic of Serbia, which indicates that the employment rate in 2022 increased by 0.7 per cent compared to 2011 and reached 50.3 per cent (43.2 per cent for women and 57.9 per cent for men) and that the unemployment rate amounted to 9.4 per cent (11 per cent in 2021). The CATUS refers to the elimination as of 1 January 2019 of the employers' share in unemployment insurance and the introduction of restrictive conditions for qualifying for unemployment benefits, the levels of which are considered inadequate. The CATUS also observes that only 6.4 per cent of the unemployed received unemployment benefits in 2021, mostly below the risk of poverty threshold. The CATUS maintains that 872,600 persons in 2021 regarded themselves as unemployed, whereas only 352,300 were officially categorized as unemployed. Noting that the official unemployment rate declined from 10.6 per cent in the first quarter of 2020 to 7.9 per cent in the second quarter, during the hardest period of the COVID-19 pandemic for the economy, the CATUS questions the accuracy of official data related to unemployment. It also highlights that the official unemployment rate of 10.6 per cent in the first quarter of 2022 does not reflect the labour market situation. The CATUS also emphasizes the problem of low wages and inadequate social protection and calls to urgently take specific measures to overcome it. The Committee also notes SAE's observations about its initiative to reform the education system according to the needs of the economy towards creating quality jobs, employment for young people and suppressing the grey economy. Stressing that accurate statistical data sets are of paramount importance for informed policymaking, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments to the observations made by the CATUS and the SAE. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and economic sector, on employment trends in the country, concerning the size and distribution of the labour force, the nature and extent of employment, unemployment and underemployment. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote, develop and deliver quality apprenticeships and draws its attention to the guidance contained in this respect in the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208), which calls, among others, to incorporate and promote quality apprenticeships within relevant education, vocational training, lifelong learning and employment policies, as well as establish a regulatory framework for quality apprenticeships.

The informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the reform of seasonal employment in agriculture and the adoption of the Law on simplified employment in seasonal jobs in certain sectors and industries. The Government states that the law entered into force on 7 January 2019 with 75,687 employed persons (37,253 women and 38,434 men) registered through the portal of seasonal workers by 632 employers in 198 municipalities. The Committee further notes that according to the Labour Force Survey of the Statistical Office of the Republic of Serbia, informal employment rate for 2022 was 13.6 per cent (12.8 per cent for women and 14.6 per cent for men), which marked an increase by 21,300 persons compared with previous year, predominantly of unpaid family workers (20,500). The Survey states that the number of informally employed persons in the agriculture (225,500) is larger than the number of the formally employed (205,200). The Committee also notes about 93,500 persons employed informally in services sector and that the formality–informality ratio in construction sector amounts to 47 per cent. The Government is requested to continue to provide information on the measures taken to promote the formalization of the informal economy, taking into account the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The Committee requests in particular the Government to provide detailed updated information on the impact of the reform of seasonal employment in agriculture with regard to facilitating transition to formal employment as well as on measures taken or envisaged to integrate informal economy workers into the formal labour market, particularly young workers, older workers and women, including in services and construction sectors and in the category of "hard-to-employ" persons.

Article 3. Consultations with the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication about the annual national action plan and reference report prepared by the tripartite Working Group consisting of representatives of various authorities and ministries, as well as National Employment Service (NES), Union of Employers of Serbia, TUC "Nezavisnost" and CATUS. The Government also refers to two meetings of the Working Group, in the preparation of the National Employment Action Plan for 2018, held in April 2018, four regional meetings in May–July 2017, four in January–February 2018, two in October–November 2018, all open for social partners, one of which in February 2018 was attended by "Nezavisnost" representative, as well as to the meetings of the Working Group for drafting of the 2019 National Employment Action Plan in October–November 2018, attended by representatives of "Nezavisnost" and CATUS. The Government also reports about meetings of the Working Group for the Drafting of the Employment Strategy for the period 2021–26 and the Action Plan for 2021–23 as well as involvement of social partners in formulating the recommendations for the preparation of the ex-ante analysis of the Employment Strategy for 2021–26. In this regard, the Government refers to discussions held within the Social and Economic Council (SEC) and the Republican Employment Council in February 2021. The Committee also notes that, in response to its previous comment on the lack of records of membership and the level of participation of social partners in local employment councils (LECs), the Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour, Employment, Veteran and Social Affairs possesses data on LECs members on all local self-government units that submit a request for participation in the co-financing programme of local employment action plans.

The Committee notes from the ex-post analysis of the National Employment Strategy for 2011–20 that social dialogue is not sufficiently developed and refers to the European Commission's annual reports on Serbia highlighting the need to remove obstacles to social dialogue and strengthen it by enhancing social partners' capacities, adjusting the legal framework and increasing SEC's administrative budget. The Committee also notes the conclusions of the Focus Group on cooperation with social partners, which state that despite the legal requirement to cooperate with social partners, including through working groups on public policies, amendments and adoption of laws, employers and workers' representatives are not satisfied with their influence on the process highlighting that cooperation is only formal without a considerable effect on revision of ministerial proposals. The conclusions recommend to further improve cooperation with social partners, encourage them to take a more active role in the preparation of public policies and give due consideration to their proposals. Recalling the importance of the meaningful, effective and constructive dialogue with representatives of employers and workers, in relation to decision-making on the development and implementation of active employment policies, the Committee requests the Government to provide concrete examples of the manner in which their experience and views have been fully taken into account so as to secure their full cooperation in formulating and enlisting support for such policies. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the nature and scope of consultations held with representatives of the persons affected by the measures taken, such as women, young people, persons with disabilities, informal economy workers, the Roma population and other concerned groups, as required under Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Spain

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Workers' Commissions (CCOO), and of the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organizations (CEOE) and the Spanish Confederation of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (CEPYME), transmitted with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to these observations, included in its report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation and evaluation of the active employment policy. The Committee notes the numerous reforms introduced by the Government, both in legislation and in relation to the modernization of active employment policies, within the framework of the Recovery, Transformation and Resilience Plan (PRR), of 27 April 2021. The Plan includes reforms and investment in public employment policies to guarantee a dynamic, resilient and inclusive labour market, with emphasis on the training of workers in the areas required by the transformations in the Spanish economy. The Plan also includes a component on the promotion of women's employment and gender mainstreaming in all active employment policies. In this context, the Committee notes the adoption of the Employment Act No. 3/2023, of 28 February, which establishes the framework for the structuring of public employment policies and regulates the whole series of structures, resources, services and programmes of which the National Employment Service is composed. In accordance with section 4 of the Act, the objectives of the employment policy include: (i) promoting conditions for the creation of inclusive labour markets in which effective equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in access to employment are guaranteed; (ii) stimulating the creation of good quality and stable jobs to facilitate the transition towards a more efficient labour market that guarantees adequate levels of economic well-being for workers; (iii) the maintenance in employment and the vocational progression of employed persons; (iv) the broadening and improvement of the skills, qualifications, competences and employability of the unemployed and of employed persons; and (v) the promotion of viable entrepreneurship and social economy initiatives. Royal Legislative Decree No. 1/2023, adopted on 10 January, also reforms incentives for recruitment with a view to increasing the numbers of permanent and good quality jobs. The Committee further notes the adoption of the Spanish Strategy of Active Employment Support 2021–24, drawn up with the participation of the social partners and in collaboration with the Autonomous Communities. The Strategy coordinates the activities of the various entities of the National Employment Service and establishes the strategic objectives of focussing on people and enterprises, coherence in the transformation of production, the results-based approach, the improvement of the capacities of public employment services and the governance and cohesion of the National Employment Service. The Government indicates that evaluation is a fundamental pillar of the new Strategy, which changes the paradigm of earlier strategies by stepping away from the use of indicators focussing exclusively on the distribution of funding towards a results-based, transparent and accessible evaluation model. With a view to the achievement of the objectives set out in the Strategy, various Annual Employment Policy Plans have been adopted, as well as the recent Annual Plan for the Promotion of Decent Employment 2023, which specifies the active employment and labour placement policies implemented by the Autonomous Communities in the exercise of their competences, as well as the indicators to be used to assess the extent to which the objectives are achieved. Finally, the Committee notes the adoption of Royal Decree No. 818/2021 of 28 September, which updates and harmonizes the regulation of these programmes with a view to ensuring greater efficiency, adaptation to the changing conditions on the labour market and the new requirements of the digital and green environment.

The Committee notes that, in their observations, the CEOE and the CEPYME indicate that the Strategy and Royal Decree No. 818/2021 are continuing along the same lines and do not go beyond the approach that places public employment services as the main protagonists of active employment policies. They therefore place emphasis on the need to promote public–private collaboration to ensure greater efficiency and effectiveness. In this regard, the Government indicates that public–private collaboration is incorporated in active employment policies in various areas, such as the labour market analysis processes, the identification of training needs and employment intermediation. The Committee also notes that both the CCOO as well as the CEOE and CEPYME emphasize that one of the most relevant deficits of employment policies continues to be their lack of evaluation. They indicate that the Strategy and the Annual Employment Policy Plan 2022 were drawn up without first evaluating the impact of the measures implemented within the context of the Strategy and the previous Plans. The CCOO adds that, although important tools have been adopted and reformed, including evaluation as a fundamental pillar, the procedures, tools and determination of objectives and indicators have not yet been undertaken or agreed. The CCOO and the employers' organizations also consider that they did not participate in the development of the Annual Plans and reiterate that they are confined to establishing a list of services and programmes to be implemented by the Autonomous Communities. In response, the Government indicates that it is planned to undertake an evaluation of the Strategy 2021–24 and the various Annual Plans and adds that the contributions of the social partners were taken into consideration in the formulation of the Annual Plans. In this regard, the Committee recalls that Article 2(a) of the Convention establishes the requirement to “decide on and keep under review, within the framework of a co-ordinated economic and social policy, the measures to be adopted for attaining the objectives” of full, productive and freely chosen employment. It is essential to ensure that policies are monitored and evaluated in relation to the established targets and indicators. In this regard, the Committee emphasizes that a comprehensive, participative and transparent monitoring and evaluation mechanism enables all the parties concerned to identify achievements and challenges in meeting policy objectives. The results achieved may contribute to setting a baseline for future employment policies (2020 General Survey, Promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape, paragraphs 112, 153 and 154).

With reference to the process of the formulation of the Employment Act, the CCOO reports that contributions were made to various preliminary versions, some of which were not taken into account, and it emphasizes the need for the contributions to be taken into account, including those on the need to address jointly the employability, integration and vocational development of people; the requirement of guarantees and controls over private collaborators and on the possibility of acting as placement agencies; the allocation to public employment services, at the level of the Autonomies and the State, of the human, material and technological resources necessary so that they can discharge their functions in a satisfactory manner and can work towards full employment. The Government indicates that some of those proposals could be addressed in the regulations of the Employment Act. Noting the information provided, including the fact that evaluation is considered to be a fundamental pillar of the new Spanish Strategy of Active Employment Support 2021–24, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide an evaluation, undertaken in consultation with the social partners, of the impact of the employment measures adopted to achieve the objectives of the Convention, including those adopted within the framework of the 2021–24 Strategy and the Annual Employment Policy Plans, and particularly on the manner in which they have helped beneficiaries to obtain full, productive and lasting employment.

Labour market trends. The Committee observes that, according to the report of the European Commission on the 2023 National Reform Programme of Spain (SWD(2023) 609 final), following the COVID-19 crisis, the Spanish labour market experienced a solid recovery in 2021 and 2022, achieving an employment rate of 69.3 per cent in the fourth quarter of 2022. Nevertheless, it is still below the European Union average of 74.9 per cent. Moreover, although the unemployment rate fell in 2022 to 12.9 per cent (the lowest since 2008), it continues to be double the European Union average (6.1 per cent), with structural pockets of vulnerability, related to the very high level of youth and long-term unemployment and a rate of temporary employment that is still high in the public sector. The Committee notes that the CCOO emphasizes that, despite the increase in employment and the reduction of unemployment following the pandemic, the social crisis and the weaknesses of the Spanish model of production persist. In particular, the CCOO considers that: (i) the number of the unemployed is still very high, particularly for the long-term unemployed; (ii) almost half of the unemployed have a low educational level (45 per cent); (iii) the temporary employment rate continues to be very high; (iv) employment creation is still concentrated in sectors that are not very productive; (v) gender gaps persist in the world of work (women account for 53.6 per cent of the unemployed) and the labour market continues to be segregated; (vi) the level of unemployment protection is still low (1.16 million unemployed persons are excluded from the unemployment protection system); and (vii) poverty levels are very high. With reference to the latter, the Committee notes, on the basis of the report of the European Commission, that the percentage of persons at risk of poverty or social exclusion is 27.8 per cent, one of the highest rates in the European Union (6.1 percentage points above the European Union average). Persons born outside the European Union are particularly vulnerable, as the gap between them and persons born in Spain is 34.2 percentage points. The report emphasizes that the poverty rate among employed persons is also the highest in the European Union (34.2 per cent, compared with 20.8 per cent for the European Union). The Committee requests the Government to indicate how it is considering responding to these challenges, taking into account that the objective of the promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment has to be pursued with a view to stimulating economic growth and development, and overcoming unemployment and underemployment, as well as raising levels of living. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical data on labour market trends, and particularly on the rates of the active population, employment and unemployment, disaggregated by sex and age. While noting the high proportion of people at risk of poverty and social exclusion, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted to address poverty within the context of the national employment policy.

Measures to promote employment stability. The Committee notes with satisfaction the measures adopted to combat one of the major challenges of the Spanish labour market: the high levels of temporary employment and the large percentage of short-term contracts. In this respect, the Committee notes the adoption of Royal Legislative Decree No. 32/2021 of 28 December on urgent measures for labour reform, guarantees of employment stability and the transformation of the labour market, which is based on the agreement reached between the Government and the social partners for the structural reform of the labour market. The new Decree establishes measures to reduce temporary contracts and promote permanent contracts, such as the presumption that contracts are concluded for an indefinite period, the reduction of the types of contracts available and the redesign of disincentives to penalize excessive rotation in very short-term contracts. It also introduces new mechanisms to promote internal flexibility within enterprises with a view to promoting the continuity of stable labour relations and avoiding periods of unemployment, by authorizing enterprises under certain circumstances to suspend contracts temporarily or reduce working hours. In terms of evaluation, the Decree requires an evaluation to be undertaken by January 2025, which will be repeated every two years, of the results of the measures envisaged in the reduction of temporary employment on the basis of an analysis of temporary and open-ended contracts. It also provides that, in the event that no progress is achieved, additional social measures will have to be proposed to the dialogue round table. The Committee notes that the CEOE and CEPYME indicate that the flexibility measures implemented are creating a climate of trust which is reflected in the positive figures for recruitment, especially under open-ended contracts. With reference to the public sector, the Government indicates that the adoption of Act No. 20/2021 of 28 December adopting urgent measures for the reduction of temporary public employment, which introduces measures to prevent the constant coverage of jobs by temporary personnel and to ensure that such personnel are only engaged for genuinely temporary tasks. The Government also refers to the conclusion of various agreements with unions with the objective of the implementation of a process of making employment more stable and improving conditions of work in the public sector, reducing temporary employment in sectors that are considered to be priorities, such as health, education and the administration of justice. Moreover, with the objective of addressing the lack of stability in scientific occupations, which has resulted in recent years in the exodus of research personnel from Spain, Legislative Decree No. 8/2022 of 5 April was adopted issuing regulations on a general scheme for permanent employment contracts in the Spanish science, technology and innovation sector.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the European Commission referred to above, although, following the reforms described, the level of temporary work in the private sector fell rapidly from 23.6 per cent in 2021 to 18.5 per cent in 2022, the percentage of fixed-term contracts in the public sector continues to be high (31.4 per cent in 2022). The report also emphasizes that temporary workers continue to be more vulnerable to material and social deprivation than conventional employees (20 per cent, compared with 6.9 per cent). Finally, the Committee notes the emphasis placed by the CCOO on involuntary part-time work (49.3 per cent of persons working part time do so because they have not been able to find a full-time job). The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, on the nature and impact of the measures adopted, in collaboration with the social partners, to address the still high levels of temporary employment in the public and private sectors. It also requests the Government to provide specific information on the reasons why, despite the recent reforms, the rate of temporary employment in the public sector has not been reduced significantly. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted to address the high levels of involuntary part-time employment.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the emphasis placed by the CCOO in its observations on the fact that the youth unemployment rate continues to be much higher than the national average (23.3 per cent), while the employment rate (40.4 per cent) and the activity rate (52.7 per cent) continue to be lower. The Committee also notes that, according to the report of the European Commission referred to above, the percentage of young persons between the ages of 15 and 29 years who are not studying, working or receiving training fell from 17.3 per cent in 2020 to 12.7 per cent in 2022, but continues to be higher than the European Union average (11.7 per cent in 2022). The report also indicates that, although the proportion of young persons under 30 years of age with temporary contracts has fallen, it continues to be higher than the European Union average (45.7 per cent, compared with 35.6 per cent in 2022). The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures adopted with a view to promoting stable employment and the employability of young persons, who continue to be among the priority groups for employment programmes and measures. Among other measures, the Government refers to the implementation of the Youth Plus Guarantee Plan (Plan GP+) 2021–27 on decent work for young persons, with the financial support of the European Union. The principal objective of the Plan GP+ is to take effective action to combat precarious work through training and placement measures, focussing on good quality vacancies that facilitate the stable labour market integration of young persons. The Shock Youth Employment Plan 2019–21, developed in collaboration with the Autonomous Communities, has also been implemented following the conclusion of an agreement signed on 5 December 2018 between the Government and the social partners. The objectives of the Plan included reducing the youth employment rate to 32.5 per cent and finding work for 168,000 unemployed persons under 25 years of age. The dual training and employment programme “Youth Employment – Tandem” (for young persons between 16 and 29 years of age) was implemented, as well as the “First Experience in Public Administrations” programme, which offers a first experience for persons under 30 years of age in the area in which they are qualified. Various initiatives have also been adopted to modernize public employment services and improve their operation in relation with the transition of young persons from education to the labour market. With reference to the evaluation of the measures adopted, the Government indicates that it is planned to carry out an evaluation of the National Youth Guarantee System.

However, the Committee notes that the CEOE and the CEPYME consider that the Plan GP+ does not establish specific objectives or offer tangible solutions for the labour market situation of young persons, but only focusses on organizational and instrumental aspects. They emphasize that it is necessary for the Plan to take into consideration the needs of enterprises and to foresee the participation of placement agencies, which provide a professional and effective service. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Plan GP+ establishes 69 specific measures to improve the employability of young persons and promote decent work in various areas, such as vocational guidance, training, the promotion of employment opportunities and entrepreneurship. The Government adds that public–private collaboration is envisaged in each of the areas identified. The CCOO emphasizes that the monitoring and evaluation system for the Plan GP+ has not yet been determined or developed. In its reply, the Government indicates that it is planned to determine the evaluation model for the Plan GP+ with the technical support of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) and working groups composed of representatives of the social partners and the Autonomous Communities. Finally, the Committee notes that both the CEOE and the CEPYME, as well as the CCOO, emphasize that evaluations have not been carried out of the Shock Youth Employment Plan 2019–21, and that its impact is not therefore known. In view of the concerns expressed by both the employers’ organizations, the CEOE and the CEPYME, and the CCOO, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide an evaluation, undertaken in consultation with the social partners, to ascertain the specific results achieved by the measures adopted with a view to promoting youth employment, including those adopted within the context of the Plan GP+.

Long-term unemployment. The Committee notes, from the report of the European Commission referred to above, that long-term unemployment fell in 2022 (4.8 per cent), but continues to be double the European Union average (2.2 per cent). Moreover, in the fourth quarter of 2022, some 22.7 per cent of unemployed persons were in a situation of very long-term unemployment (that is, 24 months or more). The Government indicates that, with a view to addressing this situation, the Employment Act 2023 reinforces the participation of private and local bodies in active labour market policies. Furthermore, the Reincorpora-t Plan was implemented up to April 2022, which included the adoption of specific coordinated vocational guidance and training measures, and the promotion of employment opportunities and entrepreneurship. The objective of the Plan was to recuperate the labour and social integration potential of certain communities in long-term unemployment. The Committee nevertheless notes that the CEOE and the CEPYME, as well as the CCOO, indicate that evaluations of the Plan have not been carried out, and that its impact is not therefore known. The CCOO adds that there is no data on the long-term unemployed, despite the fact that they are identified as a priority category in employment policies. The Committee also recalls that it has been requesting the Government for five years to provide information on the impact of the measures adopted to combat long-term unemployment. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide an evaluation of the impact of the measures implemented, with the participation of the social partners, to facilitate the return to the labour market of the long-term and very long-term unemployed.

Education and vocational training programmes and policies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, although 44.8 per cent of the Spanish population between the ages of 30 and 34 years have completed higher education (3.9 percentage points above the European Union average), the employment rate of those who have recently concluded higher education aged between 20 and 34 years is lower in Spain (77.2 per cent) than the European Union average (85 per cent). The employment rate is particularly low for those with a low educational level (only 33.6 per cent in the fourth quarter of 2021), compared with those with an average (53.8 per cent) or high (72.6 per cent) educational level. The highest unemployment rate is for workers with a low educational level (20 per cent), but is 7.8 per cent for those with a high educational level. In this context, the Recovery, Transformation and Resilience Plan provides for the implementation of action to promote the acquisition of new skills for the digital, green and productive transformation, with a view to reinforcing the training and employability of workers. The Committee also notes the adoption of Basic Act No. 3/2022, of 31 March, on the organization and integration of vocational training, which is intended to regulate a system of vocational training and support, capable of responding flexibly to the vocational skills interests, expectations and aspirations of persons throughout their lives and to the skills needed for new production and sectoral requirements. With a view to the achievement of this objective, the Act promotes the dual nature of vocational training and public-private collaboration between various actors, such as administrations, centres and enterprises. The Act also provides for the participation of employers' organizations and unions at the various levels, including in decision-making processes in relation to vocational training and the evaluation of the operation of the vocational training system. Finally, the Government refers to the development of the Annual Plan for the Evaluation of the Quality, Impact, Effectiveness and Efficiency of the whole of the vocational training system for employment in the field of labour 2020-21, which was submitted to the General Council of the National Employment System, which includes participation by the social partners and the Autonomous Communities. The Committee notes the emphasis by the CCOO in its observations that one of the greatest deficits of further training continues to be the lack of coordination of education and training policies with employment policy. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted, in collaboration with the social partners, to promote the acquisition of the new skills required for the digital, green and productive transformation and with a view to strengthening the training and employability of workers, and particularly the long-term unemployed. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures adopted to ensure the coordination of education and training policies with potential employment opportunities.

Small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). The Committee notes that, according to the report on SME data of the General Directorate of Industry and SMEs published in September 2023, SMEs (with between 0 and 249 employees) account for 99.8 per cent of the Spanish business environment, with large enterprises (250 employees and over) only representing 0.2 per cent. It also observes that SMEs generated 11,104,539 jobs, compared with large enterprises, which generated 6,515,244. The Committee notes the adoption of a series of measures under the Recovery, Transformation and Resilience Plan to promote the adoption of advanced digital technologies with a view to improving the productivity of Spanish enterprises, such as the adoption of the National Artificial Intelligence Strategy and the SME Digitalization Plan 2021–25. Nevertheless, according to the European Commission report referred to above, Spain is continuing to experience a low level of investment in research and development in the telecommunications sector, and enterprise expenditure on research and development is well below the European Union average. The report emphasizes that this all hampers the productivity and competitiveness of Spanish enterprises, and particularly SMEs. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted with a view to improving the business environment in support of the productivity and growth of small and medium-sized enterprises, including through the promotion of the skills required for the ecological transition and the digital transformation and increased investment in research and development.

Article 3. Consultations with the social partners. The Committee notes the emphasis placed by the Government on the participation of the social partners in the measures adopted within the context of the various social agreements to address the crisis arising out of the COVID-19 pandemic, which succeeded in reducing its negative impact on employment. It adds that the current legislation provides for the active participation of employers' organizations and unions in the design, implementation and evaluation of employment policies. The participation of the social partners occurs through various bodies, such as sectoral conferences and social dialogue round tables, and they are regularly kept informed and express their views on the various initiatives in the different bodies, such as the General Council of the National Employment System and the General Vocational Training Council. By way of illustration, the Government indicates that, in the context of the development of the Spanish Strategy of Active Employment Support 2021–24, working groups were established with the participation of representatives of the unions and the Autonomous Communities. The Government indicates that social dialogue has also been important in specific initiatives for youth and the long-term unemployed, the modernization of public employment services, the reform of vocational training for employment and the reform of the pension system to ensure its sustainability. The CCOO indicates that, although improvements have been made in the transparency of the policies and programmes implemented, measures still need to be adopted to improve the participation of the social partners in their design and follow up. In particular, the CCOO considers that for the effective participation of the social partners, it is necessary for information to be shared sufficiently in advance to allow it to be discussed, analysed and decisions taken, and for the scheduling of the meetings of the various bodies in which they participate to be adapted to allow discussions of the required depth. In this regard, the Government indicates that it agrees with these proposals to continue reinforcing social dialogue and the institutional participation of the social partners in relation to employment policy. In this context, the Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention calls for the measures and programmes related to the national employment policy to be adopted and implemented through an inclusive process of consultations with the social partners and representatives of the persons affected. In accordance with the spirit of the Convention, national employment policies should be designed and implemented in consultation and cooperation with specific groups, such as women, older workers and young persons, those in the informal economy, persons with disabilities and other persons affected. The active participation of the concerned groups will in turn foster ownership and cooperation in the policy and the measures taken for its implementation (2020 General Survey, Promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape, paragraph 94). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures adopted with a view to ensuring that the social partners and the representatives of the persons affected by the measures that are implemented are able to participate actively in the design, implementation and evaluation of employment policies.

Thailand

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Congress of Thai Labour (NCTL) and of the Employers' Confederation of Thailand (ECOT), received on 22 November 2022, to which the Government has provided its comments.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Consultation and cooperation with the social partners. The Committee takes note of the observations made by the ECOT regarding the lack of consultation prior to the adoption of new legislation and measures relating to the Convention. The Government replies that, in conformity with the Employment Arrangement and Jobseeker Protection Act, B.E. 2528 (1985) a Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection was created which counts among its members, one member appointed from the employees and one member appointed from the employers. Its powers and duties include making recommendations to the Minister of Labour on policies and measures related to employment and jobseekers' protection, on challenges in employment arrangements and jobseekers' protection and on the prevention and suppression of deceit against jobseekers. It also provides guidance and counsel to employment agencies on overseas employment standards, on the promotion of employment, on the development of skills for the Thai labour market, on the determination of standards and practices for skill testing and may perform other duties as assigned by the Cabinet or the Minister of Labour. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection held four meetings between 2014 and 2018 to discuss "various related issues". The Committee however notes that no meetings have taken place since 2018, when the three-year term of the Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection ended. The Government indicates in that regard that the selection process for the appointment of new members of this Committee is underway. The Committee recalls that Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention require the establishment of advisory committees with a view to ensuring the full cooperation of employers' and workers' representatives in the organization and operation of the public employment service. Noting with concern that the three-year term of the Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection has expired, the Committee hopes that the Government will take all necessary measures to give effect without delay to these important provisions of the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 6(b)(iv). Migrant workers. The Government indicates that it has taken several measures to prevent abuse in the recruitment and the exploitation of migrant workers. First, the Government states that, under the Employment Arrangement and Jobseeker Protection Act B.E. 2528 (1985), the Maritime Labour Act B.E. 2558 (2015), the Foreigners' Working Management Emergency Decree B.E. 2560 (2017) and the Revision No. 2 B.E. 2561 (2018), all private employment agencies must be licensed by the Government. As a result, as of 25 April 2022: (i) 300 recruitment offices/agencies are allowed to arrange “domestic placement” for job seekers, (ii) 129 recruitment agencies are allowed to arrange job placements overseas, (iii) 6 recruitment agencies are allowed to arrange placements for seafarers and (iv) 245 companies are allowed to place migrant workers in Thailand. Second, the Government indicates that, in 2022, the Department of Employment inspected an important number of recruitment agencies/offices: (i) 175 recruitment offices/agencies that are allowed to arrange domestic placement, (ii) 123 recruitment agencies that are allowed to arrange overseas placements, (iii) 6 recruitment agencies that are allowed to place seafarers and (iv) 225 companies that are allowed to place migrant workers in Thailand. Third, the Government indicates that, as a result of these inspections, 35 recruitment offices/agencies that place job seekers in Thailand had their licenses suspended (for not submitting monthly recruitment reports to the registrar) and recruitment agencies that arrange overseas placements also got license suspensions (on several grounds). Fourth, the Government indicates that, in 2016, Migrant Workers Assistance Centres were established in ten provinces throughout the country. These centers provide consultations, guidelines, and assistance to migrant workers. They further cooperate with organizations that prevent human trafficking. In terms of impact, the centers assisted 3,452 migrant workers in 2016, 52,983 migrant workers in 2017, 46,109 migrant workers in 2018, 42,653 migrant workers in 2019, 41,240 migrant workers in 2020, 38,749 migrant workers in 2021 and 25,864 migrant workers in 2022. Fifth, the Government indicates that it continues to manage the migration of workers to Thailand through the signature of Memorandums of Understanding (MOUs) with its neighbouring countries. In 2015–17, the Government signed MOUs with Cambodia, the Lao People’s Democratic Republic, Myanmar, and Vietnam. Regarding the impact of the MOUs, the Government indicates that the number of migrant workers who registered with the MOU process was: 279,311 in 2015, 392,749 in 2016, 582,726 in 2017, 912,231 in 2018, 1,005,848 in 2019, 797,158 in 2020, and 594,408 in 2021. In the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, cross-border recruitment under the MOU procedure resumed in December 2021. Migrant workers had to provide evidence of vaccination or a certificate showing a history of COVID-19 infection in the past three months. Some 474,834 migrant workers registered with the MOU process in 2022. Sixth, during the COVID-19 pandemic, the Government took several measures to allow migrant workers who were already in Thailand to keep working in the country. The Government adopted several resolutions allowing the renewal and the extension of work permits or legalizing the status of migrant workers without work permit. Regarding the observations received from social partners, the Committee notes that the NCTL has no objection to the Government’s indications in its report. The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the ECOT, indicating that the smuggling of migrant workers persists. The ECOT observes that the smuggling of migrant workers is low-risk, cheaper, and faster than the legal channels, and that eventually, illegal workers receive amnesty and can apply for work permits. In reply, the Government reiterates that it has introduced various relief measures for migrant workers. Notably, the Government has enabled migrant workers to come work in Thailand under the MOU process, including during the COVID-19 pandemic. The Government affirms that the MOU process tackles the smuggling of illegal workers and prevents human trafficking. Moreover, on 30 May 2022, the Government issued the Order of the Centre for the Administration of the Situation due to the Outbreak of the Communicable Disease Coronavirus 2019 (COVID-19) No. 11/2565 (in effect since 1 June 2022), which reduces the length and the cost of the MOU process. As a result, as of October 2022, the cost of migration through the MOU process is 5,890 Thai bahts (instead of 11,409 to 24,200 bahts before) and the process takes approximately 20 to 30 service days, depending on the procedures in the country of origin. The Government further recalls that it took several resolutions to allow migrant workers who were in Thailand to stay in the country during the COVID-19 pandemic. The Government specifies that such measures were taken with a view to preventing undocumented workers from being exploited during this difficult time, as the Government considers irregular workers as being vulnerable rather than having committed crimes. The Government also indicates that law enforcement, the military, police, and the local administrative offices in the provinces at the border of the country have intercepted smuggling of migrant workers. Further, the Department of Employment regularly inspects companies at risk of employing irregular workers and takes this opportunity to inform the employers on the process to hire migrant workers legally. Taking due note of the above information, the Committee wishes to acknowledge the efforts made by the Government to facilitate the movement of workers between Thailand and the neighbouring countries and prevent the abuse in the recruitment and exploitation of migrant workers. Noting the concerns expressed by the ECOT, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the impact of the measures taken, including by the public employment service, to protect migrant workers during recruitment and placement and to facilitate their movement across borders, with due regard to their fundamental rights. The Government is also requested to provide updated statistical data, disaggregated by country of origin and by sex, on the migrant workers working in the country under the above MoUs as well as outside of these frameworks and their access to employment services.

Article 11 of the Convention. Effective cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. Regarding the participation of the private employment agencies in the activities of the Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection, the Government indicates that, in accordance with the Employment Arrangement and Jobseeker Protection Act, B.E. 2528 (1985), the Cabinet appoints to the Committee at least three persons with knowledge of employment and jobseekers' protection. The Thai Overseas Manpower Association has been appointed for its knowledge in the recruitment and protection of jobseekers. The Thai Overseas Manpower Association has 57 licensed private employment agencies among its members and aims at promoting overseas employment placement. Regarding the measures taken to secure effective cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies, the Government indicates that, on 30 June 2020, the Department of Employment and six private recruitment agencies signed a MOU for Cooperation in Job Arrangements. In conformity with this MOU, the Department of Employment and the private agencies have been exchanging job announcements. The Department of Employment has also been providing a link to the job vacancies database of the six private agencies on its website, and vice versa. This allowed jobseekers to have better access to information. The six private recruitment agencies also provided the Department of Employment with statistical information, enabling it to assess trends in the labour market. The MOU for Cooperation in Job Arrangements was initially in effect until June 2023 and is expected to be renewed for a continued implementation. The Government indicates that the Department of Employment has a project to exchange employment information with three additional private employment agencies in 2023. Regarding the observations received from the social partners, the Committee notes that the ECOT is concerned that, although a core principle is that private employment services should be non-profit, the collection of fees and expenses is not prohibited under Thai law. The ECOT further finds that the use of the term fees and expenses in the relevant Thai legislation is ambiguous and may be interpreted differently. The Government replies that several texts regulate the collection of fees and expenses by private recruitment agencies. The Employment Arrangement and Jobseeker Protection Act B.E. 2528 (1985) and Revision state that domestic private employment agencies are prohibited from demanding or receiving any money or property from jobseekers other than service fees or expenses, at a rate not exceeding the rate prescribed by the Minister of Labour. In conformity with this same Act, overseas employment agencies are prohibited from demanding or accepting fees from jobseekers except to the extent permitted by the Director-General of the Department of Employment. The Rule of the Ministry of Labour on Service Fees and Expenses Rates to be Collected from Jobseekers B.E. 2547 (2004), stipulates that the fees and expenses received or demanded by domestic private employment agencies shall not exceed 25 per cent of the workers' wages in the first month of work. Overseas employment agencies however may demand/receive fees or expenses from jobseekers which do not exceed 100 per cent of the wages in the first month of work, when the contract is of one year or more. For employment contracts of less than a year, the fees shall be reduced proportionately. The Foreigners' Working Management

Emergency Decree B.E. 2563 (2017) and Revision No. 2 B.E. 2564 (2018) prohibits private employment agencies that bring migrant workers to work in the country from demanding/accepting money or property from employers or workers, except for the fees and expenses listed in a notice from the Department of Employment, at the rate prescribed thereby. The notice of the Department of Employment entitled "Items and rates of service fees and expenses for bringing migrant workers to work with employers in the country," B.E. 2564 (2021) states that companies allowed to bring migrant workers to work in Thailand can demand fees from employers at a rate not exceeding 25 per cent of the workers' wages in the first month of work. Noting that the fees and expenses that overseas employment agencies may demand to jobseekers appear substantial (amounting to approximately 8 per cent of the annual remuneration) and unrelated to any specific service offered to the workers, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information in this regard, taking into account the provisions of Article 11 of the Convention. The Government is further requested to indicate what countries the overseas employment agencies primarily draw jobseekers from, as well as to indicate how many jobseekers are being charged these high fees every year. Taking into account the fact that, pursuant to Article 11 of the Convention, the co-operation between the public employment service and private employment agencies cannot be conducted with a view to profit, the Government is asked to indicate the types of services offered that justify allowing the rate of fees and expenses that is four times that charged by domestic agencies. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on the manner in which private employment agencies participate in the activities of the Committee on the development of employment arrangement and jobseekers' protection, once it is operational again. More generally, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the measures taken to secure effective cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies. In this regard, recalling the campaign launched by the Office in May 2022 to promote the ratification of both the Public Employment Services Convention, 1948 (No. 88), and the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Committee invites the Government to consider ratifying Convention No. 181, as the most up-to-date instrument in the area of private employment services, which in turn complements the effective implementation of Convention No. 88.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. Labour market trends. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of the 12th Social and Economic Development Plan (2017–21) with respect to employment promotion, including its impact on labour market trends. The Government reports that the 12th Social and Economic Development Plan (2017–21), which was extended to 2022, was implemented through plans, policies and schemes, such as activities to prepare the workforce to meet labour market needs by way of skills development and capacity-building activities. It refers to the results of the Smart Job Centres that provided services to 1,096,307 jobseekers during the 2017–21 period, and to the Tri-Thep Centres which provided career development and guidance services to 135,693 participants during the same period. In terms of employment trends, the Government provides statistical data concerning employment, unemployment and visible underemployment, as well as information on the size and distribution of the informal economy. The Committee notes from the 2021 data that the total number of employed persons in both the formal and informal economy was measured at 37,705,741 workers, decreasing slightly from 2020, with 20,453,927 men and 17,251,814 women. In 2021, the total number of workers in the informal economy was 19,598,061, decreasing from 20,364,391 in 2020. Looking at the share of informal economy workers by economic sector in 2021, most of them are employed in the agricultural sector (58 per cent), followed by the trade and service sector (32.4 per cent). Referring to the unemployment rate that was decreasing at the end of the reporting period, the Government indicates that it is a good sign of the recovery of the employment situation from the COVID-19 pandemic that hit Thailand in 2020. The Committee notes the adoption of the National Strategy (2018–37), the long-term action plan which will guide the formulation of employment policies, and the 13th National Economic and Social Development Plan (2023–27), which is the key mechanism to guide the implementation of the National Strategy. The Committee notes from the National Strategy document that Thailand will need to prepare for rapid changes brought upon by disruptive technology in order to minimize any negative impacts, especially if the access to technology, infrastructures and knowledge of different income groups is a key constraint. Disruptive technology will affect employment and forms of employment and occupation, higher capacity workforce will be more demanded while some occupations will be replaced by automation, especially low-skill jobs, which will pose a risk for some population groups, particularly those who are unable to keep pace or lack up-to-date knowledge and skills.

The Committee welcomes the reference to measures aimed at accompanying the rapid transformations in the economy and the world of work, including those occasioned by disruptive new technologies. The Committee considers that employment policies represent a very important tool which, if properly used, allows member States to anticipate and make the necessary adaptations to keep pace with these changes and challenges. The Committee observes that an ever increasing number of countries have started mobilizing the potential of employment policy in this respect, including by adopting measures to : (i) promote lifelong learning and skills development by providing funding for training programmes, and by making it easier for workers to access education and training opportunities; (ii) encourage innovation and entrepreneurship by providing funding for research and development, and by creating an environment that is conducive to business growth; (iii) facilitate labour market transitions by making it easier for workers to move between jobs and industries without losing their social protection entitlements, and by providing support for workers who are displaced by new technologies; (iv) strengthen social protection by expanding the coverage of unemployment benefits and other social protection benefits, and by providing support for workers who are retraining or transitioning to new jobs; (v) support investing in digital infrastructure to ensure that everyone has access to the tools they need to succeed in the digital economy; (vi) support workers in the transition to new jobs by providing retraining programs, job placement services, and other assistance; (vii) encourage dialogue between employers and workers to help identify challenges and opportunities, and to develop solutions that benefit both workers and businesses; or (viii) promote responsible innovation by establishing ethical guidelines for the development and use of new technologies in a way that benefits society and does not harm workers or the environment. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of the 13th National Economic and Social Development Plan (2023–27) with respect to employment promotion, indicating also whether it intends to implement measures as those mentioned above. It also requests the Government to provide updated statistical data disaggregated by sex and age on the labour market situation, including trends in employment, unemployment and visible underemployment, as well as information on the size and distribution by sector of the informal economy.

Promoting transition from the informal to the formal economy. The Government indicates that it continues to promote formal employment, in accordance with the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), by extending access to social security benefits to workers in the informal economy and developing draft legislation to tackle this issue. The Committee notes with interest that the number of workers in the informal economy who are insured under section 40 of the Social Security Act (B.E. 2533 (1990)) increased every year during the 2017–21 period, from 2,432,927 in 2017, to 3,242,579 in 2019, and 10,664,848 insured persons in 2021. It also notes from the 13th National Economic and Social Development Plan (2023–27) that informal economy workers can opt into the voluntary retirement savings systems with government co-sponsored contributions as a way to ensure old-age income security. However, only around 35 per cent of workers in the informal economy opt for these systems, thereby demonstrating the limits of voluntary insurance as a mechanism to extend protection and reach universal social protection. With respect to the measures taken, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour established an action plan on informal worker management (2017–21), which resulted in the promotion and protection of 3,618,731 informal economy workers in 2021. In addition, 76 provincial informal worker coordination centres and 253 provincial community service units were established to provide assistance to informal economy workers. Moreover, the Ministry of Labour has established a working group for the National Promotion and Development of Informal Workers Act, which includes representatives from government, employers' and workers' organizations. The Government indicates that the Cabinet approved the draft bill in principle in December 2021 and the bill is moving towards adoption. The draft bill provides for the creation of a National Committee on the Promotion and Development of Informal Workers, which will develop strategies and measures for the informal economy, as well as consult with informal workers' organizations.

The Committee welcomes this information and the recognition by the Government that employment policies play a significant role in promoting transitions from the informal to the formal economy by addressing the factors that drive individuals and enterprises to operate informally. As such, national best practices suggest that when properly designed and implemented, they can play a catalytic role in accelerating the transition from the informal to the formal economy, leading to more inclusive, productive, and resilient labour markets by creating an enabling environment that encourages formalization and by providing targeted support to facilitate the transition process. The Committee invites the Government to provide further information on specific measures taken to tackle the multiple challenges faced by workers in the informal economy, indicating in particular whether the measures taken or envisaged include some of the good practices in this regard: (i) reducing administrative burden and red-tape; (ii) strengthening and extending social protection as a means to incentivizing the enrolment of enterprises and their workers; (iii) promoting access to finance and business development services, including access to credit and training, as these are often lacking for informal enterprises; (iv) enhancing labour market placement and intermediation and skills development services; (v) raising awareness and promoting formalization; (vi) tailoring policies to specific sectors and occupations as the informal economy is not monolithic, and informalization patterns vary across sectors and occupations; (vii) promoting dialogue and collaboration among all relevant stakeholders for effective policy formulation and implementation; (viii) monitoring and evaluating policy impacts as this is crucial to assess policy effectiveness in promoting transitions from informality to formality. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information, including disaggregated data, on the impact of the measures implemented to promote the transition to formal employment. In addition, noting with interest the considerable increase in the scope of persons covered by social protection, the Committee asks the Government to provide further information on the combination of measures the deployment of which was instrumental to such a positive outcome and to indicate how this extension of social protection was correlated to the objective of reaching decent, full, productive and freely chosen employment.

Older workers. The Government indicates that Thailand is becoming an ageing society which is a major demographic challenge. In response to such changes, the Government has given importance to the promotion of employment of older workers through various measures and programmes, which include the Promotion of Self-Employment of Older Workers, the District One (Folk) Wisdom Programme, measures by public employment services, and skills development training courses. The number of older persons (those 60 of age and older) gradually increased during the 2017–21 period, with 4.06 million in 2017, 4.23 million in 2019, and 4.88 million in 2021. Older men accounted for 2.78 million people in 2021 and older women accounted for 2.10 million. The majority of older workers were agricultural and fishing workers, totalling almost 3 million workers in 2021. In terms of employment services, the Committee notes from the report that there were 9,263 older jobseekers that applied for jobs through the Ministry of Labour's Employment Service Centres from 2017 to 2021, and 9,076 obtained employment. In the same period, there were 43,609 older workers that received skills development training and 15,356 older persons participated in a self-employment programme.

The Committee observes that demographic shifts indeed present a number of challenges for employment policy, including in terms of skills shortages, age discrimination, or health and safety concerns. It notes that successful employment policies have tended to include a selection of measures to secure positive employment outcomes, such as: (i) promoting lifelong learning through training programs, financial assistance, and flexible learning options; (ii) ensuring equal employment opportunities by providing clear guidelines for employers, promoting awareness of age discrimination among workers, and establishing mechanisms for workers to report and challenge age discrimination; (iii) promoting workplace flexibility by encouraging employers to adopt flexible work arrangements, such as part-time work, telecommuting, and flexible hours; (iv) promoting workplace health and safety, including by providing appropriate training and equipment, and implementing ergonomic principles; (v) raising awareness of the benefits of an ageing workforce to reduce negative stereotypes about older workers and promoting a more inclusive workplace; and (vi) providing funding for training programs for older workers or offering tax benefits to employers who hire and retain older workers. Other successful measures in this respect include providing support for older workers who are starting their own businesses and conducting research and analysing data on the ageing workforce for informed policymaking. In view of the above elements and future demographic challenges related to an ageing society, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted, in consultation with the social partners, to address these labour market challenges. It also requests the Government to continue to include statistical data, disaggregated by sex and age, on the results of the measures taken to increase employment opportunities for older workers and reduce the barriers they may encounter in accessing, advancing and remaining in employment.

Promotion of women's employment and prevention of discrimination. The Government indicates that Thailand continues to enforce the Gender Equality Act (B.E. 2558 (2015)) and promote non-discrimination in employment between women and men according to section 15 of the Labour Protection Act (B.E. 2541 (1998)). The Committee refers in this regard to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Government indicates that the implementation of women's employment promotion activities and the prevention of discrimination include the promotion of breastfeeding areas in enterprises and the establishment of childcare centres in workplaces. From January to June 2022, 112 enterprises established breastfeeding areas. Statistical data on the impact of the measures taken to promote increased participation of women in the labour market show that the labour force participation rate of women varied from 59.38 to 60.07 per cent during the 2017–21 period, while it varied for men from 76.17 to 77.10 per cent during the same period. The Committee notes from the report that out of 29.58 million women aged 15 and over in 2021, only 17.65 million were employed (59.7 per cent).

The Committee notes that the inclusion of specific measures into national employment policies to promote women's employment and prevent discrimination represents an important component of gender-sensitive and gender-responsive employment policies. Based on comparative good practices, these often include : (i) promoting flexible work arrangements so as to allow better work-life balance for both men and women; (ii) investing in women's education and training by providing scholarships and financial aid, and by expanding the availability of vocational training programmes for women; (iii) addressing gender stereotypes and discrimination by implementing anti-discrimination laws and raising awareness of gender equality issues; (iv) promoting women's entrepreneurship by providing funding and support for women-owned businesses, and by creating an environment that is conducive to business growth; (v) collecting and analysing gender-disaggregated data to inform policy decisions and interventions for understanding the challenges and opportunities facing women in the workplace; (vi) strengthening enforcement of labour laws by increasing the number of labour inspectors, and by raising awareness of workers' rights; (vii) promoting a culture of gender equality in the workplace by providing training for employers and employees on gender equality issues, and by recognizing and rewarding businesses that promote gender equality; (viii) supporting women's organizations and promoting women's empowerment by providing funding and resources, and by creating an environment that is conducive to their work; and (ix) providing affordable and accessible childcare by securing funding for childcare subsidies and expanding the availability of childcare options, such as daycare centers and preschools. By reference to the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the types of measures adopted at the national level to promote employment of women and to continue to provide information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on the impact of the measures taken to promote increased participation of women in the labour market at all levels, and to prevent discrimination in terms of employment. It also requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the social partners with respect to the measures adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU), received on 14 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply in this regard.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. National policy on vocational rehabilitation and employment of persons with disabilities. Consultation with the social partners and organizations of and for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Zimbabwe's first National Disability Policy (NDP) on 9 June 2021, developed with the technical and financial support of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). The Committee notes that the NDP was formulated with the participation of a diverse range of stakeholders, including persons with disabilities and their representative organizations, non-governmental organizations, and the private sector. The NDP aims to reduce inequalities and empower persons with disabilities to enable them to improve their own standard of living and that of their families. The NDP includes among its objectives: mainstreaming disability in all laws, policies, guidelines, programs, and interventions to ensure that these are inclusive of and accessible to persons with disabilities and that they address the rights of persons with disabilities; raising awareness of disability issues; and guiding and supporting self-representation of persons with disabilities, particularly of women with disabilities. The Committee observes that, according to information available on the UNESCO website, on 7 July 2022, the Government, in collaboration with the United Nations Partnership on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (UNPRPD) launched the National Technical Coordination Committee for the Implementation of the National Disability Policy. The Government indicates that workshops will be held to raise awareness of the NPD among employers and workers. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's initial report of March 2022 to the UN Committee on the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD), the Government is in the process of amending the Disabled Persons Act [Chapter 17:01] and taking measures to adapt national legislation aligned to both the Constitution of Zimbabwe and the CRPD. The Persons with Disabilities Bill, 2021 is the piece of draft legislation through which this legislative reform will be achieved. The Government indicates that the Draft Bill has been submitted to the Cabinet Committee on Legislation for its consideration. The Committee notes the observations of the ZCTU, in which it maintains that, while the Government has adopted a very progressive legislation on the rights of persons with disabilities, it has nevertheless failed to enforce it to effectively ensure the access to employment of persons with disabilities. Lastly, the Government reports that, although measures are being taken toward undertaking a national disability survey, current and reliable data on disability in Zimbabwe is not available. Nonetheless, the Government adds that it is estimated that approximately 15 per cent of the population in Zimbabwe have a disability, and that more than half of this percentage are women. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote employment opportunities for persons with disabilities, including those adopted in the framework of the National Disability Policy (NDP). It also requests the Government to provide updated information on the status of the adoption of Persons with Disabilities Bill, 2021, and to provide a copy once it is adopted. The Government is also requested to provide concrete information on the content, frequency and outcome of the consultations held with the social partners and with organizations representing persons with disabilities in relation to the application of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the practical application of the Convention, including statistical data, disaggregated by age and sex, as well as extracts from court decisions, reports, studies or other relevant documents concerning the matters covered by the Convention.

Article 3. Promotion of employment opportunities in the open labour market. The Committee notes that the NDP envisages the formulation of national guidelines on the employment of persons with disabilities, as well as on achieving inclusive education to prepare persons with disabilities for the world of formal employment, including entrepreneurship training and support. Moreover, the Government indicates that measures are being taken toward the establishment of a revolving loan fund of up to US$1,000 for persons with disabilities who wish to undertake small scale income generating investment programmes. To this end, the Government has partnered with the National Building Society (NBS) Bank to ensure the distribution of loans through the Bank to all eligible persons throughout the country. The Government reports that 15 applications for entrepreneurial initiatives have been submitted and are awaiting further approval by the NBS. It adds that measures will be taken to raise awareness of the fund, aimed at the National Social Security Authority (NSSA) rehabilitation centres and stakeholders. With respect to access to education, the NDP includes among its key elements: ensuring an inclusive education system at all levels, as well as lifelong learning for all persons with disabilities; guaranteeing that persons with disabilities are exempt from paying fees and levies at all public learning institutions; and providing reasonable accommodation to students with disabilities. Furthermore, financial support is provided for persons with disabilities that decide to enrol in vocational training, and the Government also has vocational institutions that provide certain courses free of charge, as well as free boarding facilities. The Government reports that, from January to 1 September 2022, 34 children with disabilities and 122 adults with disabilities were enrolled in public education institutions. Recalling that assistive technologies can be essential to enable persons with disabilities to secure and remain in employment, the Committee takes particular note of the Government's indication that 260 applications for assistive technologies were processed during the reporting period, and that there has been an improvement in reach out following an exercise conducted on mapping of service providers to persons with disabilities. In addition, the Committee notes from the Government's initial report to the CRPD, the development of the policy on "Equalisation of Employment Opportunities for persons with disabilities in the Public Sector", in consultation with the National Disability Board, the private sector and the general public. The policy provides for the mainstreaming of disability in all matters related to employment and conditions of work in the public service. The Government adds that the Public Service Commission (PSC) is carrying out a disability baseline survey in the public sector to assess the inclusion of persons with disabilities in government policies and programmes, with a view to promoting evidence-based programming and interventions focused on persons with disabilities. There are currently 661 men with disabilities and 417 women with disabilities working in the public sector. With regard to the establishment of an employment quota of persons with disabilities, the Government indicates in its initial report before the CRPD that clause 42 of the Persons with Disabilities Bill provides for a 2 per cent employment quota for persons with disabilities in both the public and private sectors. The clause further provides for the imposition of penalties on employers who fail to comply with the quota (non-compliance). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote employment opportunities for men and women with disabilities in the open labour market in both the public and private sectors, including those adopted in the framework of the National Disability Policy (NDP) and the policy for the Equalisation of Employment Opportunities for persons with disabilities in the Public Sector, as well as the nature and impact of measures taken in relation to the provision of assistive technologies. The Committee further requests the Government to provide updated information on the adoption and implementation of the quota system envisaged in clause 42 of the Persons with Disabilities Bill to promote the employment of persons with disabilities in the labour market.

Article 4. Effective equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women workers with disabilities, and between workers with disabilities and other workers. The Government refers in its report to section 5 of the Labour Act, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of disability and other specified grounds, against any employee or prospective employee in the advertisement, recruitment, creation, and classification of jobs. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the measures taken to promote equality of opportunity and treatment between workers with disabilities and other workers. In particular, the Committee notes that joint inspections of workplaces are carried out by the labour officers and labour inspectors of the NSSA to assess compliance with legislation and raise awareness of the obligation to promote equal treatment and non-discrimination against persons with disabilities and persons with albinism. The Government adds that, in accordance with a directive from the Ministry of Local Government and Social Amenities, only building plans that are accessible to persons with disabilities are approved. The Committee nevertheless notes that, in its observations, the ZCTU denounces that persons with disabilities still face discrimination, stigma and stereotyping in Zimbabwean society. The ZCTU adds that, while there are persons with disabilities employed in the public sector, employers in the private sector rarely employ persons with disabilities. Lastly, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on measures taken to promote effective equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of measures adopted or envisaged to ensure effective equality of opportunities and treatment in employment and occupation between women and men with disabilities, as well as between workers without disabilities and those with disabilities, including statistics disaggregated by sex, age and economic sector. The Committee also requests the Government to provide copies of court decisions, if any, addressing discrimination against women and men with disabilities, including denial of reasonable accommodation in the public and private sectors.

Article 7. Vocational rehabilitation and employment services. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the establishment of the Department of Disability Affairs. According to information available on the Government's website, this Department has two main sections Disability and Rehabilitation Section and the State Service Disability Benefits. It utilizes the Department of Social Welfare structures at provincial and district levels in rolling out its programmes. The Department is responsible for processing the financial assistance granted to persons with disabilities who wish to pursue vocational education up to the university level as well as the applications for state service disability benefits. The Government reports that, from January to July 2022, 289 persons with disabilities were enrolled in tertiary education and received financial support for vocational training fees, and that 489 applications for state service disability benefits were processed during the same period. The Committee also notes that the NDP envisages the adoption of measures to ensure that comprehensive rehabilitation services and programmes are organized, strengthened and extended to persons with disabilities in, among other areas, education, employment and social services; and that a minimum of 15 habilitation and rehabilitation students per enrolment must be persons with disabilities. The Committee also notes that, in its initial report to the CRPD, the Government indicates that financial support is provided to the three State-owned National Rehabilitation Centres (Ruwa, Lowdon Lodge and Beatrice National Rehabilitation Centres), which exclusively enroll persons with disabilities. The rehabilitation centers offer courses in areas such as: carpentry, motor mechanics, leatherwork, domestic appliances electrical, welding, storekeeping and bookkeeping, ornamental horticulture and information technology. The Government reports that 420 students are currently enrolled in the vocational training centres. Moreover, institutional support is provided in the form of administrative and per capita grants to NGO-owned institutions. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information on the nature, scope and impact of the vocational guidance and training measures adopted to enable persons with disabilities to secure, retain and advance in employment. It further requests the Government to provide updated detailed information on nature, scope and impact of vocational rehabilitation and employment services provided to persons living with a psychological, emotional or intellectual disability.

Article 8. Access to services in rural areas and remote communities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between January and August 2022, 35 career guidance workshops for persons with disabilities were held in rural and remote areas of the country. In addition, measures were taken to raise awareness among persons with disabilities of the range of vocational training and related services available to them through the Social Welfare District offices. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to ensure the effective provision of vocational rehabilitation and employment services in rural areas and remote communities.

Article 9. Training of staff responsible for persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that, pursuant to the NDP, continuous professional development in the area of disability must be compulsory for staff, including qualified teachers and social workers. In addition, the Government reports that staff development programmes and exchange programmes with organizations of persons with disabilities have been implemented to train staff responsible for providing services to persons with disabilities. The Government further indicates that diploma, degree and master's programmes on disability studies have been introduced in higher education institutions. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the training provided to vocational rehabilitation and employment services staff in both urban and rural areas to enable them to provide effective employment-related services, including training, vocational guidance and placement services tailored to the specific needs of persons with disabilities.

Vocational guidance and training

Guinea

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1978)

Article 1 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of education and training policies. In response to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Technical Education, Vocational Training, Employment and Labour has envisaged measures with a view to improving the initial training of teachers. These measures include raising the entry requirements for the teaching profession to the single baccalaureate and granting an incentive bonus of 150,000 Guinean francs (GNF) per month to student teachers during their two years of training in order to attract the best candidates. The Government also reports that a liberalization of private initiatives has facilitated the growth of private schools, which employ a large number of graduates from teacher training colleges. In this context, the Government indicates that a state mechanism has been established for the supervision, inspection and coordination of these private schools at the national and local levels. The Government indicates that, in order to strengthen links between training and employment, a strategy to link the graduates' final examination to the recruitment competition for the public service is being formulated by an inter-ministerial committee comprising representatives of the public service, finance, budget, national education, literacy and technical education. A strategy targeting the training of young persons is envisaged by the Government through the "Boosting skills for the employability of young persons" (BOCEJ) project, within which vocational and technical training and higher education institutions work with the private sector to prepare training projects via a public-private partnership (PPP) with a view to improving the employability of young graduates. In the context of enhancing the status of the teaching profession, the Committee notes the signature of joint order No. 2018/1629/MESRS/METFPET/SGG of 21 March 2018, issuing Bachelor's diplomas to graduates of "B" training institutes. The Government adds that, to address the lack of teachers, it has initiated a training programme for 2,000 teachers a year with the support of the World Bank. In this regard, two main innovative training strategies have been implemented: emergency training comprising three months of classroom training and nine months of practical training, followed by three further months of classroom training; and regular training comprising nine months of classroom training and nine months of practical training. The Committee notes that, according to the 2015-17 education sector programme, the Government has implemented several measures to combat the gender inequalities suffered by young women. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to eliminate gender inequality between young women and men, and their results. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistical data, disaggregated by age and sex, on the impact of the measures implemented within the framework of the above training strategies and programmes, and a copy of the order of 21 March 2018. The Committee refers to its comments on the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), and reiterates its request to the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which it ensures effective coordination between vocational guidance and training policies and programmes and employment policies and programmes and on the manner in which it facilitates lifelong learning, as envisaged in Paragraph 3(a) of the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195). The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the impact of these policies on the creation of decent jobs and poverty eradication in accordance with Paragraph 16 of the Recommendation. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the consultation and coordination measures between the various competent bodies to develop comprehensive and collaborative policies and programmes for vocational guidance and training.

Article 5. Cooperation with the social partners. The Government indicates that the social partners, students' parents, local politicians, the community and non-governmental organizations were heavily involved in the implementation of the training project for 2,000 teachers a year. It adds that it decided, in cooperation with the social partners, that it was necessary to review the project, which was implemented from 2011 to 2012. In this context, the Government and the social partners implemented a new training model through the education sector programme with the institutional support of CEPEC-Lyon International.

The Government indicates that the social partners are also involved in the implementation of this model, which is currently in force in teacher training colleges, as part of the practical training of the student teachers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the participation of the social partners and other concerned parties in the formulation and implementation of vocational guidance and training policies and programmes. The Committee also requests the Government to describe any consultation procedures or mechanisms established in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 140 Afghanistan, Kenya, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (Anguilla), United Republic of Tanzania Convention No. 142 Afghanistan, Czechia, Egypt, Finland, France (French Polynesia), Iran (Islamic Republic of), Japan, Montenegro, Tunisia, United Republic of Tanzania.

Employment security

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Observations by the Labour Confederation of Congo (CCT). Abusive dismissals. In its previous comments, the Committee invited the Government to provide its own comments on the observations of the CCT, indicating whether the dismissal of around 40 employees of a private multinational enterprise governed by French law were based on valid reasons (Article 4 of the Convention) and whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12). It also requested the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166). In its report, the Government indicates that section 78 of the Labour Code adopted in 2002 prohibits mass dismissals, and that the information held by the Government does not indicate that the dismissed workers did not receive severance allowances, as no complaint was noted. The Committee notes that, with regard to measures adopted to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, the Government indicates that the provisions of section 78 of the Labour Code guarantee priority hiring in the event of a resumption of activity. The Committee also notes that section 78 provides that mass dismissals on economic grounds are prohibited, "except for possible exceptions that will be determined by an order of the Minister responsible for labour and social security" and sets out the applicable procedure. Noting that the Government provides information of a general nature concerning the above-mentioned dismissals, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the procedure followed in the case reported by the CCT, including copies of inspection reports, where possible. It once again requests the Government to provide specific information indicating whether the dismissals were based on valid reasons (Article 4 of the Convention) and whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12). It also once again requests the Government to provide specific information on the measures adopted in this particular case to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166).

In its previous comments, the Committee also requested the Government to provide a report containing information on the practice of the labour inspectorate and the decision of the courts on matters of principle relating to the application of Articles 4, 5 and 7 of the Convention. It also requested it to indicate the number of appeals against termination, their outcome, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided (Parts IV and V of the report form). The Committee notes that the Government has provided inspection reports from 2014, 2015, 2016 and 2017 but that these reports do not contain information on the application of the above-mentioned Articles. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the practice of the labour inspectorate and the decision of the courts on matters of principle relating to the application of Articles 4, 5 and 7 of the Convention. It also reiterates its request to the Government to indicate the number of appeals against termination, their outcome, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided (Parts IV and V of the report form).

Article 7. Procedure prior to, or at the time of, termination. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide copies of collective agreements which provide for the possibility of a specific procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination, as required by the Convention, and to indicate the manner in which this provision of the Convention is given effect for workers not covered by collective agreements. The Government indicates that: (i) it ensures that collective agreements are in conformity with sections 63, 72, 73 and 75 of the Labour Code; and (ii) in addition to enterprise collective agreements, there is the national inter-occupational labour agreement, of which it provides a copy. The Committee nevertheless notes that the copy of the latter agreement was already provided by the Government in its 2013 report and that, in this regard, it considered that the above-mentioned collective agreement did not appear to envisage the possibility of a specific procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination. The Government adds that enterprises that have not concluded collective agreements are required to adhere to the sectoral collective agreement and the procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination is provided by the implementing measures, such as OrderNo.12/CAB.MIN/TPS/116/2005 of 26 October 2005, determining the terms of dismissal of workers. The Committee notes with interest that Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016, amending and supplementing Act No. 015-2002 issuing the Labour Code, with respect to section 62, provides that “when the employer envisages dismissal for grounds related to the worker’s aptitude or conduct, he or she is required, before any decision is taken, to allow the person concerned to defend himself or herself against the allegations made or to provide an explanation for the grounds put forward”. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the application in practice of the Labour Code with regard to the possibility offered to workers to defend themselves against the allegations against them before any dismissal measures are imposed, as well as the application of the above Order. It also once again requests the Government to provide copies of the collective agreements which provide for the procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination.

Article 12. Severance allowance and other income protection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that national legislation does not provide for severance allowances or other forms of income protection for dismissed workers. The Committee therefore reiterated its request to the Government to indicate the manner in which effect is given to Article 12 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in order to prevent workers from being adversely affected, tax deductions are limited to 10 per cent during the notice period. However, other categories are not taxed, except for non-statutory family benefits. Noting, once again, the absence of specific information in the Government’s report in response to the Committee’s request, it urges the Government to provide detailed information indicating the manner in which effect is given to Article 12 of the Convention.

Articles 13 and 14. Terminations for economic or similar reasons. In its previous report in 2013, the Government indicated that the Ministry of Employment, Labour and Social Welfare signed 15 orders authorizing collective terminations for economic or similar reasons, covering 701 workers in 2012–13. The Committee invited the Government to indicate whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12) and to provide information on the measures taken to mitigate the effects of terminations for economic or similar reasons, as envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166). Noting that the Government’s report does not contain information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide the information requested.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Papua New Guinea

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1 of the Convention. For a number of years, the Committee has requested information concerning the ongoing revision of the Industrial Relations Bill which, according to the Government’s 2013 report, includes provisions on termination of employment with the objective of giving effect to the Convention. In its reply to the Committee’s previous comments, the Government indicates that the draft Industrial Relations Bill is still pending with the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations and is undergoing final technical consultations. The Government adds that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations Technical Working Committee has carried out various consultations with national stakeholders, such as the Department Attorney General’s Office, the Office of the Solicitor General, the Constitution Law Reform Commission, the Department of Personnel Management, the Department of Treasury and the Department of Planning, Trade Commerce and Industry, as well as with external technical partners, including the ILO. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the new legislation gives full effect to the provisions of the Convention. It also reiterates its request that the Government provide a detailed report to the ILO and a copy of the legislation as soon as it is enacted, so as to enable the Committee to examine its compliance with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Türkiye

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK), communicated together with the Government's report. It further notes the observations of the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Türkiye (DISK), received on 1 September 2022.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution)

The Committee notes that, at its 341st Session in March 2021, the ILO Governing Body approved the report of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation submitted by the Action Workers' Union Confederation (Aksiyon-Is) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (GB.341/INS/13/5). The tripartite committee issued conclusions and made recommendations in relation to: (i) the summary dismissal of thousands of Turkish workers, including all members of Aksiyon-Is, by legislative decree on the grounds that they were terrorists who had supported the coup attempt that took place in Türkiye on 15 July 2016; (ii) the lack of due process in respect of the appeals procedures held before the Inquiry Commission established to examine the terminations; and (iii) the situation of the dismissed workers who suffered from retaliatory actions that impeded them from securing alternative employment, receiving termination indemnities or their entitlements under the health, employment and pension systems to which they were affiliated and contributing.

The tripartite committee found that the Government summarily dismissed thousands of workers, including all 29,579 members of Aksiyon-Is, under emergency decrees issued by the Government following the attempted coup, deeming the workers to be terrorists on the basis of alleged links with a terrorist organization merely due to their association with the trade union confederation. The dismissed workers were not informed prior to the dismissal of the reasons for their termination, nor were they afforded the opportunity to defend themselves prior to being dismissed. The tripartite committee also found that the workers were apparently denied the opportunity to present information or evidence in their defense, including witness testimony, to the Inquiry Commission on the State of Emergency Measures responsible for examining their appeals. The tripartite committee found that, in addition to being summarily dismissed, the workers concerned were blacklisted as being or having ties to terrorists, precluding them from securing alternative employment. They received no termination indemnities and were deprived of their entitlements under the health, unemployment and pension systems to which they were affiliated and had been contributing, in violation of Article 12 of the Convention. The tripartite committee also observed, citing Article 9(2) of the Convention, that the sample cases set out in the 2019 Inquiry Commission report appeared to place the burden of proof on the worker, in addition to restricting their means of defense. It urged the Government to ensure that the dismissed workers are ensured a full and fair opportunity to argue their case and present information and evidence in their defense in challenging their dismissals, and that the principle of due process is fully observed in each individual application, including on appeal. Noting that the work of the Inquiry Commission is still under way, the tripartite committee urged the Government to ensure full reconsideration on the merits of those cases in which applications have been rejected without the applicants having had the opportunity to present oral statements or witnesses, and to ensure this right of defense for those dismissed workers whose cases have not yet been examined. Noting the dire impact of the dismissals on the workers' ability to secure alternative employment, the tripartite committee urged the Government to make all efforts to ensure a rapid, comprehensive and impartial review of the merits of each individual case, and in the event that the dismissals were found to be unjustified, to award compensatory damages and restitution of accrued benefits. The tripartite committee requested that the Government take into account these observations in its application of the Convention and invited it to provide information for examination and possible further monitoring by the Committee of Experts.

The Committee deeply regrets that the Government does not refer in its report to any measures taken to address the concerns and recommendations of the tripartite committee regarding the denial of the dismissed workers' rights to be informed of and present a defense prior to dismissal, as well as of their right to a fair, impartial review of their termination decision. The Committee further regrets that the Government does not provide concrete information on the situation of those dismissed workers whose appeals were upheld. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to implement the recommendations of the tripartite committee approved by the Governing Body and requests the Government to provide full information in this respect in its next report.

Articles 4 through 9, 10 and 12. Valid reason for termination. Right to present a defense. Right of appeal to an impartial body. Adequate compensation and termination indemnities. The Committee notes the conclusions of the tripartite committee referred to above concerning the summary dismissals of thousands of workers since July 2016, including all members of the Aksiyon-Is trade union confederation. While the Committee notes the Government's position that the dismissals were not based on the workers' affiliations with the trade union confederation, it once again emphasizes that Article 4 of the Convention provides that the employment of a worker shall not be terminated unless there is a valid reason connected with the capacity of conduct of the worker or based on the operation requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service. Moreover, prior to dismissal, the worker should be informed of the reason for the termination decision and be afforded the opportunity to be heard. In this context, the Committee draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 146 and 150 of its 1995 General Survey on Protection against unjustified dismissal, which provide that, pursuant to Article 7 of the Convention, "the worker, before his employment is terminated, must have an opportunity to defend himself against the allegations made, which presupposes that the latter should be expressed and brought to his attention before the termination. [...] It is important that the allegations are expressed and communicated to the worker without ambiguity and that the worker is given a real opportunity to defend himself." Moreover, pursuant to Articles 8 and 9(2) of the Convention, the dismissed worker is entitled to appeal the termination to an impartial body and should not have to bear alone the burden of proving that the termination was not justified. The Committee notes the Government's indication that as of 27 May 2022, the number of applications submitted to the Inquiry Commission stood at 127,130. The Commission had handed down decisions on 98 per cent of the applications, delivering 124,235 decisions (17,265 appeals accepted and 106,970 rejected). The Government indicates that 61 of the acceptance decisions are related to the opening of organizations that had been shut down, such as associations, foundations and television channels. The Committee urges the Government to implement the recommendations of the tripartite committee to make all efforts to ensure full reconsideration on the merits of those cases in which applications have been rejected without the applicants having had the opportunity to present oral statements or witnesses, and to ensure this right of defence for those dismissed workers whose cases have not yet been examined. The Government is requested to provide detailed updated information on the manner and extent to which the recommendations of the tripartite committee have been given effect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 158 Finland, Gabon, Saint Lucia, Türkiye, Yemen.

Wages

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the comments of the Confederation of Private Employers of Bolivia (CEPB), received on 1 September 2023, which state that: (i) over the past 15 years, the form in which the minimum wage is fixed has led to a reduction of decent work in the country, damaging the business environment and hampering the progress of Bolivian citizens; (ii) the system for fixing the minimum wage must reflect the reality of the parties in the employment relationship and, even more so, the national dynamic; (iii) the Bolivian Government fails systematically to observe Article 4(2) of the Convention, which provides for full consultation with representative organizations of employers and workers concerned; and (iv) Article 4(3) of the Convention provides for the direct participation of the representatives of employers' and workers' organizations in the application of the minimum wage fixing system on a basis of equality, without preference, priority or privilege being given to a workers' organization over an employers' organization. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 3 and 4(1) and (2) of the Convention. Elements for the determination of the level of the minimum wage and full consultations with the social partners. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (i) Supreme Decree No. 4711 of 1 May 2022, which establishes the minimum wage for 2022, was adopted after in-depth analysis of the national and international economic context, the situation of the public finances, State enterprises, macroeconomic stability, public investment and production programmes; (ii) the consultation process for fixing the minimum wage for 2022 began in March of that year when the Government invited the Bolivian Central of Workers (COB) and the CEPB to separate meetings to discuss adjustments to the minimum wage; (iii) during the first meeting, the CEPB refused to discuss wage increases and other matters were dealt with; (iv) the enterprise sector submitted no suggestions regarding the salary increase for either the 2022 exercise, or for previous exercises; (v) the negotiation mechanism through tripartite meetings is not applicable to the Bolivarian reality, but that has not prevented the adoption of a series of mechanisms allowing the direct participation of both employers and workers, by holding meetings with each of them, to promote equality of the partners of both sectors; and (vi) no difficulty has been encountered in applying the Convention and therefore an ILO direct contacts mission is not necessary.

The Committee notes the lack of dialogue with the CEPB regarding fixing the minimum wage. The Committee strongly urges the Government to make all possible efforts to consult fully with the representative organizations of employers and workers concerned regarding the minimum wage fixing mechanism, adapted to the national conditions and needs. In this context, the Committee notes once again with regret the Government's refusal to accept the direct contacts mission to the country requested by Standards Committee of the Conference on three occasions (in 2018, 2019 and 2021), given that such missions constitute an effective form of dialogue and aim at seeking a positive solution to the problems. The Committee strongly hopes that the Government will reconsider its refusal and that such a mission may be undertaken before the 112th Session of the International Labour Conference.

Finally, the Committee notes, from information available on the Government's website, that the minimum wage was readjusted in May 2023 with the adoption of Supreme Decree No. 4928. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the consultations undertaken with the representative organizations of employers and workers for the fixing of the minimum wage.

Central African Republic

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Article 12 of the Convention. Regular payment of wages in the public service. In response to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates in its report that the Standing framework for consultation and bargaining (CPCN), established pursuant to Decree No. 14.158 of 14 August 2014, is the consultation and social dialogue mechanism that underpins the General Conditions of Service of the Public Service. This body comes under the aegis of the Ministry of Public Service and is composed of representatives of the State institutions and the trade union organizations of public sector employees. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's indications, the question of wage arrears in the public service was raised in 2018, and that a memorandum of understanding was signed on 25 September 2019 and that a steering committee had been established on 20 October 2019. The Committee welcomes the efforts to which the Government has committed with a view to progressively clearing the wage arrears for 2001, 2002 and part of 2003. The Committee also notes that discussions are ongoing within the CPCN in respect of the remaining arrears, and that the precise amount of these will be determined by a joint mixed commission, put in place by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to renew its efforts with a view to the complete settlement of the wage arrears in the public sector. In the absence of new information in this regard, the Committee again requests the Government: (i) to take the necessary measures to ensure the regular payment of wages in this sector and to ensure efficient control, including the adoption of appropriate sanctions and the existence of means to redress any injuries caused, and: (ii) to provide information on all measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Comoros

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 and 99 (minimum wages) and No. 95 (wage protection) together. The Committee notes the observations of the Workers Confederation of Comoros (CTTC), on the implementation of Conventions Nos 26, 95 and 99, received in 2017.

Minimum wage

Article 3 of Convention No. 26 and Article 3 of Convention No. 99. Minimum wage fixing machinery and the methods to be followed in its operation. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any decree or order adopted with respect to the minimum wage after obtaining the opinion of the Labour and Employment Advisory Council (CCTE), in accordance with section 106 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in 2015, the CCTE examined seven regulatory texts including the decree fixing the inter-occupational guaranteed minimum wage (SMIG) for workers covered by the Labour Code. The Government adds that the tripartite members of the CCTE recommended that an expanded consultation framework should be established as soon as possible in order to examine the subject in greater depth through additional studies, taking into consideration the experience of other countries with regard to wage fixing as well as the country's socioeconomic situation. The Committee notes that according to the CTTC, despite the discussions held by the CCTE in 2015, no text setting minimum wages was adopted. The Committee further notes that sections 90–92 of the Labour Code provide that collective agreements concluded by joint committees, composed of representatives of the most representative employers' organizations and trade unions in the sector, may be extended and then determine the wages that must be applied for each occupational category. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of section 106 of the Labour Code without delay and to provide information in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide information on the collective agreements in force fixing wage rates for specific categories of workers and their possible extension pursuant to sections 90 and 92 of the Labour Code.

Article 4 of Convention No. 26 and Article 4 of Convention No. 99. System of supervision and sanctions. The Committee notes that the CTTC indicates that the agricultural sector, like other sectors of the informal economy, is beyond the control of the State with regard to wages. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Protection of wages

Articles 8 and 10 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from wages, attachment or assignment of wages. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that it intends to submit a draft order to the CCTE to determine the parts of wages that are liable to progressive deductions, as well as the part that is exempt from any attachment or assignment. The Committee notes that such an order is provided for under sections 114 and 119 of the Labour Code, as amended in 2012. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt the order without delay and to provide information in this respect.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. Application in practice. Further to its previous comments on the need to resolve the situation of wage arrears, including in the public service, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that efforts have been made to address this problem but challenges remain. The Government affirms its willingness to end the non-payment of wages, in particular in the public sector. The Committee also notes that the CTTC underscores the lack of progress with regard to the settlement of wage arrears, including in the public sector for the period from 1995 to 2009. The Committee recalls that workers shall receive remuneration for the work done and that the fundamental nature of wages stems from their essential role in ensuring workers' livelihood. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to resolve the question of wage arrears definitively, particularly in the public sector, and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

Article 4(2) and (3) of the Convention. Consultations with organizations of employers or representatives of employers. With regard to its earlier comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that throughout the process of drawing up Decision No. 29 of 2020, approving the minimum wage in force in the country, consultations were held with the Confederation of Workers of Cuba (CTC) as the most representative organization of workers. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps, within the framework of the functioning of the minimum wage fixing machinery, to ensure in future full compliance with the obligation to consult fully with the representative organizations of employers and workers concerned or, where no such organizations exist, representatives of employers and workers concerned, as provided by Article 4(2) and (3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99)
(ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) and the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) received on 4 May 2021 on Convention No. 95.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 and 99 (minimum wages) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

Minimum wages

Articles 1 to 3 of Convention No. 26 and Articles 1 and 3 of Convention No. 99. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its latest comments on the need to reintroduce the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG), which was withdrawn from the legislation in 1997, the Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government in its report, particularly in respect of the approval by the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security of a draft amendment to the Labour Code aimed at reintroducing the minimum wage. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Act No. 221/AN/17/8th L of 2017, by amending section 60 of the Labour Code, effectively reintroduced the SMIG as from 1 January 2018.

Protection of wages

Articles 8(1) and 10 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from and attachments of wages. Further to its latest comments on the need to review the conditions in which wage deductions can be made and to limit the amount thereof, the Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to a draft text fixing portions of wages that are subject to progressive deductions and the related rates, which is under examination. The Committee also notes that by amending section 141 of the Labour Code, Act No. 221/AN/17/8th L of 2017 removed the possibility of allowing deductions from wages on the basis of an individual agreement. It also notes with satisfaction that the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 2018, fixes the portions of wages that may be subject to attachment. Lastly, it notes that a limit on the amount of deductions from wages made otherwise than by attachment is yet to be established. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the progress made towards the adoption of a decree limiting the amount of these deductions, as provided for in section 142 of the Labour Code.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

Article 3 of the Convention. Operation of the minimum wage-fixing machinery. The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the "Conference Committee") in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. It notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government: (i) to review the minimum wage for the public and private sectors without delay, in consultation with the social partners, in accordance with the Convention; (ii) to establish the minimum wage-fixing machinery in consultation with the social partners with a view to fixing and updating the minimum wage on a regular basis in accordance with the Convention; (iii) to strengthen social dialogue, including the machinery for consultations with workers' and employers' organizations, by ensuring their independence and autonomy in law and practice; and (iv) to provide to the Committee of Experts a copy of the promulgated and published version of the new Labour Code. The Conference Committee also requested the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, in close cooperation with freely established and independent workers' and employers' organizations, to ensure full compliance with the Convention.

The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government's report, a new minimum wage for the private sector has not yet been set. The Government nevertheless indicates that the Ministry is working with the social partners and is in the process of recruiting a consultant to conduct a preliminary study and determine the minimum wage criteria, in accordance with section 154 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes that, according to the ITUC's observations, the situation due to inflation and the rising cost of living has become unsustainable for workers. The ITUC also deplores the Government's attitude to social dialogue and tripartite consultations, mentioning the Government's use of violence and threats against workers. The Committee notes that the IOE also stresses the impact of rising food prices, urging the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the minimum-wage fixing machinery into line with the Convention, in close consultation with the social partners. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to follow up on the conclusions of the Conference Committee without delay. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken in this regard, including on the tripartite consultations that have taken place on the minimum wage.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1 and 3(2) of the Convention. Minimum wage-fixing machinery. Consultation of employers' and workers' organizations. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government indicates in its report that the draft Ministerial Order determining the minimum wage has not yet been adopted. The Government also indicates that: (i) the draft Ministerial Order was discussed within the tripartite National Labour Council in 2018 and is presently still subject to consultation between all relevant stakeholders; and (ii) the negative impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the labour market and the economy will also call for relevant assessments to be made. Recalling that the last adjustment to minimum wage rates was made in 1980, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to fix new minimum wage rates, including through the adoption of the Ministerial Order determining the minimum wage, without delay and in consultation with social partners.

Article 4. Sanctions. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that Section 23 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17 March 2020 relating to Labour Inspection establishes the modalities of application of administrative fines for obstructing the work of the labour inspectorate, as provided under section 120 of the Labour Code. The Committee observes that neither the Labour Code nor the Ministerial Order provide for sanctions in the case of violations of provisions concerning minimum wages. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to put in place a system of sanctions, to ensure that wages are not paid at less than the minimum wage rates determined.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sierra Leone

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Employment Act, No. 15 of 2023 which repeals and replaces the Employers and Employed Act, as amended by Amendment Act. No. 23 of 1962. It is noted that at the same time the Regulation of Wages and Industrial Relations Act, No. 3 of 1971 remains in force. Furthermore, the Government indicates in its report that it adopted the Wages and Compensation Commission Act, No. 36 of 2023, which provides for the establishment of a Wages and Compensation Commission aiming to address disparities in pay and remuneration in the public sector of Sierra Leone and streamline the pensions system in the public services. Moreover, the Committee notes that the draft Employment Regulations and a Worker's Compensation Bill are currently being debated. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Employment Regulations and the Worker's Compensation Bill and to transmit a copy of any newly adopted legislation relevant to the application of the Convention.

Articles 6 and 13 of the Convention. Freedom of workers to dispose of their wages. Place and time of payment. Prohibition of payment in taverns and the sort. The Committee notes that the new Employment Act, No. 15 of 2023 does not contain provisions giving effect to Articles 6 and 13 of the Convention. In this context, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government take the necessary measures to give effect to these Articles of the Convention.

Article 8. Deductions. The Committee notes that the Employment Act, No. 15 of 2023 includes several provisions that are dedicated to the regulation of deductions from wages: section 52 prohibits all deductions not stated in the Act, sections 53 and 54 provide for permitted deductions, and section 54 provides for the obligation of the employer to repay wages wrongfully deducted. At the same time, the Committee notes that the Regulation of Wages and Industrial Relations Act, No. 3 of 1971, is still applicable and recalls that section 19(1) of this Act provides that, where a minimum rate of wages has been confirmed by direction of the Commissioner of Labour under this Act, an employer shall, in cases to which the minimum rate is applicable, pay wages to the worker at not less than the minimum rate, clear of all deductions. The Committee recalls once again that section 19 would not apply to any case in which minimum wages have not been prescribed, while Article 8 of the Convention covers all wages. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government takes the necessary measures to give full effect to this Article.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. The Government indicates that with regard to the payment of workers, the draft Employment Regulations under consideration stipulate that a worker shall be paid according to the terms agreed by the parties. Therefore, according to the Government, payment is to be made regularly, and on the days agreed by the worker and employer. It is noted that in the text of the Draft Employment Regulations, communicated to the Office, there is a reference to a "regular monthly salary" and "wage payment intervals". The Committee reiterates its request that the Government take the necessary measures, including through the ongoing process of adopting the new Employment Regulations, to give full effect to this Article of the Convention and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Works stores. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the price of socially essential goods is regulated by the State. While taking note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to ensure that prices of goods that are sold and services that are provided in work stores and that do not fall within the list of essential goods, are fair and reasonable, or that stores established and services operated by the employer are not operated for the purpose of securing a profit, but for the benefit of the workers concerned.

Articles 12 and 15(b). Regular payment of wages. Control of compliance. Further to its previous comments concerning wage arrears in the country, the Committee notes that the Government indicates a decrease in total wage arrears by 7,533,643 somoni from January 2022 to January 2023, with the total wage arrears amounting to 29,032,605 somoni as of January 2023 (approximately US$26 million). At the same time, the Government indicates that, in the period from November 2022 to December 2022, wage arrears have increased in all types of economic activities of the real sector, except for agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Concerning enforcement activities, the Committee notes the Government's information that in 2022 the inspection services conducted 2090 inspections. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate if these were inspection visits specifically undertaken to ensure compliance with the timely payment of wages. Concerning enforcement activities, the Committee also refers to its observation made under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), regarding a moratorium on all types of inspections of the activities of business entities, which was re-introduced in March 2022, without a limit of time. The Committee requests once again the Government to take all necessary measures to address the persistent issue of wage arrears in the country and to provide information on the results achieved by those measures. With reference to its comments on the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that effective penalties are imposed in the event of non-compliance of provisions concerning timely payment of wages, and to provide information in this regard. In this regard, the Committee requests that the Government provides specific information pertaining to the results of labour inspections conducted, including the number of inspection visits undertaken to ensure compliance with the timely payment of wages by sector, the number of cases of non-compliance detected and the measures taken to settle all outstanding payments, including adequate penalties or other appropriate remedies.

Articles 14(b) and 15(d). Wage statements and record-keeping. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the employer's obligations with regard to wages provided in the national laws. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate how workers are informed of their wages and the form and manner of wage record-keeping. The Committee recalls that under Article 14(b), effective measures must be taken to ensure that workers are informed in an appropriate and easily understandable manner at the time of each payment of wages, of the particulars of their wages for the pay period concerned, in so far as such particulars may be subject to change. The Committee further recalls that Article 15(d) calls for the maintenance, in all appropriate cases, of adequate wage records in an approved form and manner. The Committee wishes to highlight that a failure to inform workers of the particulars of their wages for a given period may be a contributing factor as regards the persistent problem of wage arrears. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to give effect to these provisions of the Convention.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

Legislation. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Employment Act, 2006, was amended by the Employment (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2022, adopted on 7 December 2022.

A. Minimum wage

Article 3 of Convention No. 26. Operation of the minimum wage-fixing machinery. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's indication in its report, the Minimum Wages Advisory Board is a tripartite body whose members are tasked with undertaking an analysis on the wage trends in the different regions and sectors of the economy and to submit recommendations to the Minister. The Government adds that the Board that was set up in 2016 recommended a general minimum wage of 136,000 Uganda shillings but that this recommendation was rejected by the Cabinet, which opted for sector-based minimum wages and also requested that further consultation be organized. The Government further states that the current minimum wage (6,000 Uganda shillings) is far below the estimated 250,000 Uganda shillings living wage, and is also below the poverty line. The Committee urges the Government: (i) to take the necessary measures so that the level of the minimum wage, which was last set in 1984, be revised without further delay and in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations; and (ii) to provide information on any progress made in that respect.

B. Protection of wages

Article 1 of Convention No. 95. Coverage of all parts of the remuneration. The Committee notes that the Employment (Amendment) (No. 2) Bill, 2022, has not amended the definition of "wages" under section 2 of the Employment Act, 2006. As a consequence, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any measure taken or envisaged to provide workers with the protection afforded in the Convention in relation to the elements of their remuneration which are excluded under section 2 of the Employment Act, 2006.

Article 4. Partial payment in kind. In the absence of new information in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether regulations on the partial payment of wages in kind have been adopted.

Article 7(2). Works stores. In the absence of new information in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate what measures are in place in order to ensure that goods are sold and services are provided at fair and reasonable prices in work stores or that work stores and services are not operated by the employer for the purpose of securing a profit but for the benefit of the workers concerned.

Article 8. Deductions from wages. In the absence of new information in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the establishment of specific and overall limits to deductions of wages.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that the Industrial Court of Uganda orders the repayment of salaries of workers who are not paid their minimum wage. While noting this information, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the situation of wage arrears in the country, including data on the number of workers affected by non-payment or delayed payment of wages, the sectors concerned and the results of labour inspections on these issues.

Article 14(a). Information on wages before entering employment. In the absence of new information in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate which measures are in place in order to ensure full implementation of this provision.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Convention No. 131 (minimum wage) and Conventions Nos 95 and 173 (protection of wages) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU), received on 31 August 2023.

The Committee notes the extremely difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to several draft laws introducing amendments to existing legislation in the field of labour that could have an impact on the application of the wages Conventions. The Government indicates that the consideration of draft laws on the settlement of problems in the field of remuneration has been suspended due to the difficult situation in the country. In its observations, the KVPU indicates that several provisions of draft laws regulating wage matters are not in compliance with the Convention. It also indicates that the draft Law on Labour did not take into consideration the technical recommendations provided previously by the Office. While acknowledging the difficult situation in the country, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee reiterates its hope that in the framework of the revision process regarding the existing legislation on wages, its comments will be considered and that the requirements of the wages Conventions will be fully met. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the developments in its labour law reform, including by providing a copy of any amendments to labour legislation regulating wage issues, once adopted.

Article 3 of Convention No. 131. Criteria for determining the level of the minimum wage. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the KVPU and the FPU expressing their concern that in setting the minimum wage the Government does not take into account a series of factors. In this respect the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that both the needs of workers and their families as well as economic factors are taken into consideration in determining the level of minimum wage. The Government has not replied to the Committee's previous request and reiterates that it has prepared a draft Law "on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of Ukraine on Remuneration", which aims at improving the procedure for determining the minimum wage. The Government provides information on the minimum wage that was set for 2022 and 2023 and its adjustments in relation to the State Budget for these years, pointing to the impact of the martial law regime on these decisions. It indicates that the State Budget for 2023 instructed the Cabinet of Ministers to reassess the issue of increasing expenditures, including the minimum wage for 2023, after the termination of martial law. In its observations, the KVPU indicates that Draft Law No. 3515 “On Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of Ukraine Regarding the Settlement of the Issues of Formation of the Subsistence Minimum and Creation of Prerequisites for Its Increase” is not in compliance with Article 3 of the Convention, as it eliminates the requirement that the minimum wage should not fall below the subsistence minimum for able-bodied individuals, removes existing safeguards for determining the minimum wage of employees in entities financed by the State Budget and considers the “financial capabilities of the state budget” as a criterion for setting the minimum wage. While noting the information provided by the Government concerning the impact of the martial law, the Committee nonetheless requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government takes the necessary measures to ensure that, so far as possible and appropriate in relation to national practice and conditions, both the needs of workers and their families and economic factors are taken into consideration in determining the level of minimum wage, as provided in Article 3 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in this respect, including on the progress made on the adoption of the draft legislation.

Article 4(2). Full consultation with employers’ and workers’ organizations. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on tripartite consultations held in the framework of setting the minimum wage for 2022 and 2023. The Government indicates that in May 2023, the Ministry of Economy of Ukraine held a meeting of the joint working commission to prepare proposals to establish the minimum wage for 2024. According to the Government, the employers, the Trade Union Party and the Executive Committee expressed divergent perspectives and proposals at that meeting, pointing to different economic, political, and martial law-related factors. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information about whether the participants reached a final result or agreement regarding the minimum wage for 2024. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific and detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held in the framework of the revisions of the minimum wage for 2022 and 2023 mentioned by the Government, as well as in the framework of future revisions. With regards to the minimum wage for 2024, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the consultations referred to by the Government.

Article 5. Enforcement. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of the KVPU observations concerning the lack of proper inspections and the complicated procedure to authorize them. It requested the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure the effective application of all provisions relating to minimum wage. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information in this respect. It indicates that the work of the State Labour Service on monitoring the provision of the minimum wage by employers has been affected by the current situation in the country since 24 February 2022. In this respect, the Committee notes that the martial law regime has imposed a series of restrictions on labour inspection activities, which are examined, together with the relevant KVPU observations, under its comments on the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments adopted in 2023 on the application of Convention No. 81 and Convention No. 129.

Article 12 of Convention No. 95. Wage arrears situation in the country. For several years, the Committee examined the situation of wage arrears in the country and previously noted with deep concern the increasing amounts of wage arrears. In this regard, the Government indicates that the elimination of wage arrears remains one of its main priorities. It reports on a series of relevant initiatives. However, the Committee notes with deep concern that, according to the statistics provided by the Government, the amount of wage arrears in the country continued to increase between 2021 and 2023. The Government indicates that the main reason for the increase is the difficult economic situation and military actions taking place in the territory of Ukraine, which influence, inter alia, the functioning of enterprises. In this respect, the KVPU also continues to refer to long-standing problems with regards to settling wage arrears, indicating that this remains one of the most acute social and labour problems, which has been further exacerbated by the current situation. It refers to draft Law No. 9510 “On Amendments to Certain Laws of Ukraine Regarding Strengthening the Protection of Workers’ Claims payment of salary arrears, including in case of insolvency of the employer”, which aims to ensure the rights of employees to receive wages in full and in a timely manner. It indicates however that the draft Law is proposed to enter into force only on 1 January 2025, which would prolong the uncertainty for employees until that date. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and provide information on any relevant legislative developments.

The Committee will examine the application of Article 12 in practice in relation to its three essential elements: (1) efficient control and supervision; (2) appropriate sanctions; and (3) the means to redress the injury caused, including fair compensation for the losses incurred by delayed payment (see the 2003 General Survey on the protection of wages, paragraph 368).

Regarding efficient control and supervision, in reply to the Committee’s previous request, the Government provides detailed information on the situation of wage arrears, including their extent, their accumulation in specific regions and enterprises and the number of workers concerned. The Committee notes that the monitoring of wage arrears is carried out by the State Labour Service solely on the basis of operational information of regional military administrations and central executive authorities regarding the state of repayment of wage arrears at enterprises. In this context, the Government indicates that it adopted Resolution No. 1037 of 16 September 2022 “On the introduction of special monitoring of repayment by enterprises, institutions and organizations of wage arrears”. According to the Resolution, other central executive bodies as well as regional, Kyiv city and district state administrations, in addition to other entities responsible for the management of state property are obliged to ensure the special monitoring of the repayment of wage arrears at enterprises, institutions and organizations that belong to the sphere of their management or are located in their relevant territory. This is in addition to the work of temporary commissions on the repayment of wage arrears and the monitoring of information about wage arrears submitted in electronic form by enterprises, institutions and organizations. In its observations, the KVPU indicates that the State Statistics Service of Ukraine has stopped publishing statistical information on wage arrears since 24 February 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of workers concerned and the extent of wage arrears. The Committee requests the Government to refer to its comments under Conventions Nos 81 and 129 and continue to take the necessary measures to ensure efficient control and supervision of regular wage payment in the country and to indicate its results.

Regarding the imposition of appropriate sanctions, the Government reiterates that it is preparing draft amendments to the existing legislation with a view to strengthening the protection of workers’ rights to the timely payment of wages. In its observations, the KVPU indicates that the current draft Law on Labour has not reviewed the amount of penalties for delayed wage payments, as demanded by the KVPU. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to refer to its related comments under Conventions Nos 81 and 129. It requests the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the penalties in national legislation to ensure full application of the requirements of the Convention, indicate the measures taken in this respect and the impact of these measures, including the amount of penalties imposed on violators, and whether there has been a reduction in the number of workers affected by arrears in the payment of their wages.

Regarding means to redress the injury caused, the Government has not provided information on the number of enterprises that have paid wage arrears to workers during the reporting period. In this respect, the Government indicates that the collection of operational information on the state of repayment of wage arrears, especially with respect to business entities of private ownership, has been complicated due to the martial law regime. It indicates that the Law “On the protection of the interests of reporting entities and other documents during the period of martial law or the state of war” provides for the possibility for business entities to submit information on the payment of wages within three months after the abolition of martial law or the termination of the state of war. The Government once again refers to the work of temporary commissions on wage payment, which includes the issuing of warnings to heads of enterprises regarding disciplinary punishments. The Committee notes that the Interdepartmental working group on the repayment of salary arrears (financial support), which was established in October 2020, was revived in May 2023 and meets on a weekly basis. Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has prepared draft legislation aiming to increase the amount of compensation for a delay in wage payment. In its observations, the KVPU reiterates that the compensation mechanism provided for in the current legislation fails to compensate workers adequately for all losses in the event of wage arrears. It highlights the need to adopt changes to the legislation that would strengthen the employer's responsibility for delayed wages, ensure adequate legal protection of the employee's right to receive timely remuneration for work, and guarantee the priority receipt of owed wages by employees together with adequate monetary compensation for damages incurred as a result of the violation of the terms of payment, in addition to the satisfaction of any monetary claims of employees in the event of insolvency of the employer. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to pursue its efforts to remedy the persisting wage arrears situation.

The practice of "envelope wages". The Committee notes with regret that the Government once again does not provide relevant information. In the absence of a response from the Government on this issue, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress made regarding the elimination of the practice of "envelope wages", according to which workers are forced to agree to the undeclared payment of wages.

Articles 5–8 of Convention No. 173. Workers' claims protected by a privilege. For a few years the Committee has been noting that section 2(4) of the Code of Bankruptcy Procedure excludes state-owned enterprises and has been requesting the Government to indicate how workers' claims are protected in the case of state-owned enterprises. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information in this respect. The Committee once again requests the Government to clarify how workers' claims are protected in the case of state-owned enterprises, given that section 2(4) of the Code of Bankruptcy Procedure excludes state-owned enterprises from its application.

In its previous comments the Committee noted that the Government was preparing legislative amendments to strengthen the protection of workers' claims concerning the payment of wage arrears in the event of an employer's insolvency, as well as a draft law introducing protection of workers' claims with the assistance of a guarantor institution. In this respect, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that there have been no further developments due to the martial law regime. The Government indicates that there is an increase in the share of bankrupt and liquidated enterprises whose employees do not receive payment due to the insufficiency of liquidation property. In its 2023 observations, the KVPU indicates that employees of bankrupt and liquidated enterprises are the most unprotected, despite the fact that the law provides for the protection of their wage claims. According to KVPU, the protection of employees by means of a privilege is not guaranteed in practice, since in the case of insufficient liquidation property, claims regarding wage arrears are recognized as repaid even if not actually paid. This results from section 64(7) of the Code of Bankruptcy, which indicates that claims that are not repaid due to the insufficiency of remaining property are considered to be extinguished. In this respect, the KVPU highlights the need to create a guarantor institution to meet the monetary claims of employees in the event of the employer's insolvency. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of these observations. It requests the Government to keep it informed of any legislative developments aimed to strengthen the protection of workers' claims concerning the payment of wage arrears in the event of an employer's insolvency, including through the creation of a guarantor institution.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

The Committee notes the observations concerning Convention No. 26 made by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), received on 1 September 2023. The Committee also notes the observations made by the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV) and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) regarding Conventions Nos 26 and 95, received on 30 August 2023.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

A. Minimum wage

Article 3 of Convention No. 26. Participation of the social partners in minimum wage fixing. With regard to its previous comment, the Committee notes the discussions at the 347th and 349th Sessions (March and November 2023) of the Governing Body on the follow-up report on further developments concerning the Social Dialogue Forum and the implementation by the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela of the agreed plan of action to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, as well as the corresponding decisions adopted. In particular, the Committee notes that: (i) the third session of the social dialogue forum was held between 30 January and 1 February 2023 with ILO technical assistance, chaired by the Minister of Popular Power for the Social Process of Labour, with the participation of the following employers' and workers' organizations: FEDECAMARAS, the Venezuelan Federation of Craft, Micro, Small and Medium-Sized Business Associations (FEDEINDUSTRIA); the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), the CTASI, the CTV, and the CGT; during this meeting, the follow-up to and updating of the agreed plan of action to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry in respect of Conventions Nos 26, 87 and 144 was adopted; (ii) between 16 February and 24 August 2023, 13 tripartite meetings were held, with the support of the ILO, to address the question of determining methods for fixing minimum wages; (iii) from 3 to 7 October an ILO mission to the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela took place, with a view to participating in the fourth session of the forum, and to promote dialogue but, due to a series of communications sent by various employers' and workers' organizations to the Government, the latter considered that conditions were not conducive to the holding of the session; both the ILO delegation and the Minister held, each in turn, bilateral meetings with the employers' and workers' organizations; (iv) on 6 October, a private tripartite meeting was held at the headquarters of the Ministry of the People's Power for the Social Process of Labour and attended by the employers' and workers' organizations cited above. The meeting agreed that the fourth session of the forum would be held at the beginning of February 2024.

The Committee notes that at the 349th Session of the Governing Body, the Government indicated that, with the firm intention of formulating a consensual proposal on the method of fixing the minimum wage, a meeting was held on 19 October 2023 with the participation of FEDCAMARAS, FEDEINDUSTRIA, the CBST-CCP, the CTASI, the CTV and the CGT, and explanations of the proposal were given. The Government states that the main issue elucidated at the meeting was the selection of the spokespersons for the employers and workers, whose organizations, based on their autonomy, would develop the necessary agreements, and share information to complement the method. The Government also indicates that it provided these organizations with the final text and concept note of the method and that, to date, no comments thereon have been received, which will allow further progress in consolidating this important method.

The Committee notes that the Governing Body is to return to the consideration of progress made by the Government to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry at its 350th Session (March 2024).

Furthermore, pursuant to its previous comments on this subject, the Committee notes that the Government, in its report: (i) indicates that it has been complying with each of the agreed activities in the action plan, as updated in February 2023, with the participation of the different organizations of employers and workers; (ii) indicates that a tripartite technical body was constituted to draw up the proposed method of consultation to fix the minimum wage. That body finished its work at its thirteenth meeting, thus completing the task of formulating the proposal, which would be taken up at the highest level; and (iii) reiterates its commitment to continue to progress with the agreements adopted in the social dialogue forum, and to continue working with the timetable of activities, which so far have allowed significant progress to be made between the parties, given the serious impact that the unilateral coercive measures had on workers' wages.

The Committee observes that the updated plan of action adopted by the social dialogue forum in February 2023 includes: (i) the establishment of a technical body on the wage-fixing machinery and on effective consultation procedures; and (ii) the determination by the technical body of the dynamic method for fixing the minimum wage (taking account of the relevant economic and social and labour indicators and variables and the external factors already referred to in the text of the statement).

The Committee notes that FEDECAMARAS, in its observations, indicates: (i) at two tripartite meetings with remote ILO technical assistance, held on 15 and 24 August 2023, the document sent by the Ministry entitled "method for fixing the national minimum wage", including the Ministry's observations on the proposed methodology for consideration in the final document, was discussed and revised; and (ii) the final document, containing the definitive ministerial proposal which was to have been submitted on 25 and 28 August 2023 for final review and adoption, has not been received. FEDECAMARAS indicates that although a proposal formulated by the Ministry already exists, but is yet to be approved, the dialogue process needs to be more effective and structured, and requires permanent follow-up, since the technical body has now been functioning for seven months, yet the official economic and social and labour indicators including external factors, have still not been presented, although they were included in the social dialogue forum's plan of action and are fundamental to speeding up the social dialogue process for fixing the minimum wage.

The Committee also notes, from the joint observations submitted by the CODESA, the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI, the UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT, that those organizations agree that outside the formal sessions of the forum, the activities to which the Government refers, which were intended to provide a greater understanding of the consultation method for fixing a minimum wage, were carried out and did reach agreement. In this regard, those organizations regret that: (i) in 2023, the hoped-for increase in the minimum wage did not materialize, a fact made more painful by the daily fall in its value resulting from the continuous devaluation of the bolívar and that (ii) on 1 May 2023 there was an increase in the "socialist cestaticket" benefit, and the approval of a "bonus against the economic war", with no consultation of the social partners, as these were non-wage payments; and (iii) the Government has not delivered the economic, social and labour indicators called for by all the confederations and which are essential to progress towards the objectives identified by the technical body required for determining the method of fixing the minimum wage.

While duly noting the statements from the Government, as well as the activities and tripartite meetings held throughout the year, with ILO assistance, which addressed the question of establishing the method for fixing the national minimum wage, the Committee notes with concern that it has still not been possible to establish this method. In this context, the Committee regrets that 2023 did not see a wage increase, preceded by a consultation process. Finally, the Committee regrets the rescheduling of the fourth session of the social dialogue forum, while duly noting the continued agreement of the Government and the social partners to participate in social dialogue and that the fourth session of the forum will take place in early 2024.

The Committee firmly hopes that, in the framework of the opportunities opened up by the process set in motion with the establishment and follow-up of the social dialogue forum, that all the measures envisaged in the plan of action updated in February 2023, as well as the timetable of activities presented by the Government will be implemented and that the fourth session of the social dialogue forum will take place as planned. It also hopes that those measures will yield tangible progress in the development and application of methods for fixing the minimum wage, as required by the Convention and as follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. In particular, the Committee requests the Government, at the next increase of the minimum wage in the country, to take the necessary measures to ensure that the increase is preceded by a thorough consultation process, conducted sufficiently in advance, within a framework of structured, informed and effective discussions, in which due account is taken of the proposals made on this matter by the employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to report on all developments in this regard.

B. Protection of wages

Article 4 of the Convention No. 95. Payment in kind. "Socialist cestaticket". With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the value of the "Socialist Cestaticket" was increased as of 1 May 2023, and will be adjusted each month, on the basis of the exchange rate published by the Banco Central de Venezuela; (ii) roundtables have been set up for collective bargaining with the active participation of employers' and workers' organizations, and these have reached agreements regarding these benefits and further benefits, such as canteens, the provision of food for the basic food basket and other allowances.

The Committee also notes that the CODESA, the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI, the UNETE, the CUTV, and the CGT indicate in their joint observations that: (i) payment of wages with bonuses of various sorts, or provision of food, is common in the public and private sector, which makes it hard for workers to determine the exact amount of their real wage, and also to keep the wage constant; (ii) the Government refuses to refer to wages, but uses the term "comprehensive minimum income", which includes the minimum wage and the socialist cestaticket; (iii) many workers do not receive the cestaticket in cash, as do the public administration workers, while some enterprises have adopted the measure of providing one meal a day to comply with the food allowance; and (iv) the organizations are unaware of the bargaining to which the Government refers, indicating that, in the public sector, the State suspended collective bargaining on the promulgation of Memorandum No. 2792 of 11 October 2018. In this regard, the Committee once again regrets that on the basis of the information presented by the Government, and the observations of the abovementioned workers' organizations, it cannot be concluded that progress has been made in resolving this issue. While referring back to the analysis it has made in previous years on this matter (see in particular the observation adopted in 2017), the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay, through dialogue with the representative organizations of the employers and workers, to find solutions that allow the full application of Article 4 of the Convention.

Articles 5 and 14. Electronic payment of wages. Information on constituent elements of wages. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comment, the Government indicates that: (i) unilateral coercive measures affected the flow of bolivars, obliging the Government to develop technological platforms to ensure that workers were able to access their wages, but that this situation is now resolved; (ii) many public and private enterprises have digitalized their wage slips, enabling workers to access this information by any electronic means at any time; and (iii) in cases where it is difficult for workers to have access to their wage slips, employers were under an obligation to provide such information in tangible form, under penalty of sanctions, as provided by section 106 of the Basic Act concerning labour and male and female workers. The Committee also notes that the CODESA, the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI, the UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT indicate that: (i) the electronic payment of wages has made difficulties for workers receiving their wages in localities without banking facilities or which are not covered by internet, and these difficulties are compounded by frequent interruptions in digital banking services; (ii) it has become complicated for workers to obtain detailed and precise information on their wages and their composite elements; (iii) payroll management through the “906istema patria”, a platform used by the Government to pay its employees, but which was created and used for purposes other than wage payment, presents difficulties in respect of the calculation and proof of payment of wages, and makes it impossible to claim for discrepancies or omissions at the moment of payment; the Government should explain the legal regime and scope of the 906istema patria and provide a copy of its regulatory texts. The Committee once more regrets that no progress has been made regarding this issue. The Committee again requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take effective measures to address both the question of electronic payment of wages, and that of providing information to workers concerning the constituent elements of their wages, in conformity with the Convention, and to provide information in this respect.

Article 12. Delayed payment of wages. The Committee notes that the CODESA, the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI, the UNETE, the CUTV and the CGT indicate with regard to the health sector, that there have on various occasions been: (i) delays in the payment of wages, which have been explained by the human resources department, as arising from weaknesses in the “906istema patria” and (ii) repeated non-payment of certain elements, such as night work, holidays and Sundays worked, among others. Recalling the importance of the payment of wages at regular intervals, the Committee requests the Government to communicate its comments in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1935)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work in industry) and 30 (hours of work in commerce and offices) together.

Articles 6(1)(b) and 2 of Convention No. 1 and Articles 7(2), (3) and (4) and 8 of Convention No. 30. Temporary exceptions. Circumstances, limits and compensation. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that sections 31 and 32 of the Labour Code allow the performance of overtime hours in circumstances that go beyond those set out in the Conventions. In particular, these sections provide that, where there is a need to deal with a temporary requirement or situation in an enterprise, workers and their employer may agree on a maximum of two hours' overtime a day to be performed in jobs which, by their nature, are not harmful to the health of the workers. The Committee recalls the importance of restricting recourse to exemptions from normal hours of work to cases of clear, well-defined and limited circumstances, such as accidents, actual or threatened, force majeure or urgent work to plant or machinery (2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraph 119). The Committee also recalls that Convention No. 30 requires the determination of a reasonable limit for additional hours, not only in the day, but also in the year. Under these conditions, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee that: (i) recourse to additional hours is restricted to clear and well-defined circumstances; and (ii) the maximum number of additional hours that may be authorized in a year is fixed.

The Committee also notes that the amendment to section 32 of the Labour Code, which will enter into force in April 2024, introduced by Act No. 21,561 of 26 April 2023, provides that the parties may agree in writing that additional hours shall be compensated by two additional days of holiday. In such a case, up to five additional working days of rest a year may be agreed, which must be used by the workers within six months following the period in which the overtime originated. The compensation of overtime hours by additional days of holiday shall be subject to the same higher rate as for their pay, that is each hour of overtime shall be compensated by one-and-a-half hours of holiday.

The Committee recalls the need to ensure, in all circumstance, the payment for additional hours at a rate of no less than one-and-a quarter times the regular rate, in accordance with Article 6(2) of Convention No. 1 and Article 7(4) of Convention No. 30, irrespective of any compensatory rest granted to the workers concerned.

The Committee considers that within the framework of the amendments introduced by Act No 21,561 of 2023, account could have been taken of the comments that it has been making for several years. Under these conditions, the Committee firmly hopes that all the necessary measures will be taken to bring the national legislation into conformity with these provisions of the Conventions. The Committee reminds the Government that, in this process, it may have recourse to the technical assistance of the Office if it considers it necessary.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 2 of the Convention. Weekly rest entitlement. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that an amendment of the Employment Relations Act of 2012 (ERA), to include a weekly rest provision, is planned as part of the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2019–22; however, no legislative amendments have been adopted in this regard in the last two years due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that both in law and in practice the whole of the staff employed in any industrial undertaking, public or private, or in any branch thereof, enjoy in every period of seven days a period of rest comprising at least 24 consecutive hours, as required by the Convention.

Articles 3, 4, 6, 7, 9 and 10 of the Convention. Protective measures for night workers. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that a review process to update the Labour Code and bring it into line with ratified international standards is under way in the Labour Advisory Council. The Committee once again emphasizes the need to adopt specific protective measures, in law and practice, to give effect to the Convention. Under these conditions, the Committee firmly hopes that during the review of the Labour Code that has already been announced or by any other method, the Government will take measures ensuring a minimum level of protection for night workers according to the specific requirements set out in Articles 3 (specific protective measures), 4 (free medical assessment), 6 (workers certified as unfit for night work), 7 (maternity protection), 9 (social services) and 10 (consultation of workers' representatives concerned) of the Convention.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working hours, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 14 (weekly rest in industry), 106 (weekly rest in commerce and offices), 52 (holidays with pay) and 101 (holidays with pay (agriculture)) together.

A. Weekly rest

Article 5 of Convention No. 14 and Article 8(3) of Convention No. 106. Compensatory rest. In response to the Committee's previous comment concerning section Lp. 231-9 of the Labour Code, the Government indicates in its report that, where weekly rest is deferred under this section, compensatory rest is generally taken within a rolling period of eight days, even though, in theory, it is possible for an employer to have their employees work 12 consecutive days without rest. The Government specifies that enterprise agreements determine the arrangements for the duration of work in the form of work cycles, specifying the periods for taking weekly rest. In workplaces that operate continuously, the work cycle is usually established as four days of work followed by four days of rest, with weekly rest within a rolling period of one week maximum. The Committee notes this information, which responds to its previous request.

In addition, the Committee notes that, in response to its previous comment concerning section Lp. 221-5 of the Labour Code, the Government indicates that replacement compensatory rest provided for in this section is an alternative to overtime pay. With regard to section Lp. 231-5 of the Labour Code, section 22 of the Territorial Occupational Agreement for the mining and quarrying industries, and section 22 of the Occupational Agreement of the commercial and allied sector, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any new relevant information. In this regard, the Committee recalls that: (i) section Lp. 231-5 of the Labour code provides that industries that process perishable goods, or that have to respond at certain times to an exceptional increase in workload, have, under certain conditions, the possibility of suspending employees' weekly rest and that the hours worked on the days of weekly rest are considered overtime; (ii) section 22 of the Territorial Occupational Agreement for the mining and quarrying industries provides that for hours worked on the day of weekly rest, in addition to the usual hours, particularly to do an urgent job, a 75 per cent supplement for inconvenient hours shall be paid, including the overtime pay; and (iii) section 22 of the Occupational Agreement of the commercial and allied sector provides that, for hours worked exceptionally on the day of weekly rest, a 75 per cent supplement shall be paid where such work cannot be compensated by rest. In addition, the Committee notes that, under section 52 of the Territorial Occupational Agreement, where shift work requires overtime work on a Sunday, the pay is increased by 50 per cent of the usual rate. The Committee notes that the above provisions are not in conformity with Article 5 of Convention No. 14 (each Member shall make, as far as possible, provision for compensatory periods of rest for exceptions, in the form of suspensions or diminutions, under the principle of weekly rest) and Article 8(3) of Convention No. 106 (where temporary exemptions are made the persons concerned shall be granted compensatory rest of a total duration at least equivalent to 24 consecutive hours within each 7-day period). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full application of Article 5 of Convention No.14 and Article 8(3) of Convention No. 106 in national law and practice, and to provide detailed information on all measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning compensation for hours worked, in accordance with section Lp. 231-6 of the Labour Code, on the weekly day of rest for workers in ports, landing stages and stations engaged in the loading and unloading of goods.

Lastly, the Committee notes that in the absence of a legal framework on the working hours for public service workers, a study is under way of a draft regulation defining, inter alia, the terms of compensation or otherwise for hours worked on a Sunday. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measure taken or envisaged with a view to adopting a regulation defining the terms of compensation for hours worked on a Sunday in the public sector.

B. Annual holiday with pay

Articles 2(3)(b) of Convention No. 52 and 5(d) of Convention No. 101. Exclusion of interruptions of attendance of work due to sickness from the annual holiday with pay. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that section 72(2) of the Territorial Inter-Occupational Agreement and section 46(2) of the Occupational Agreement of the agricultural branch, which provides that, should a worker fall ill during his or her holiday, no change is made to the latter because of the sickness and the holiday cannot be either extended or deferred, or give rise to additional compensation from the employer, are not in conformity with Article 2(3)(b) of Convention No. 52 and Article 5(d) of Convention No. 101, respectively. The Committee notes that the Government's reports do not contain any new information on this matter. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full application of Article 2(3)(b) of Convention No. 52 and Article 5(d) of Convention No. 101 in national law and practice, and to provide detailed information on all measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Article 4 of Convention No. 52 and Article 8 of Convention No. 101. Invalidity of any agreement to forgo a holiday with pay. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Labour Code still does not contain provisions on the invalidity of any agreement to forego holiday with pay. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of Convention No. 52 and Article 8 of Convention No. 101 provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to an annual holiday with pay, or to forgo such a holiday, shall be void, it being understood that this principle applies to annual holiday with pay as established by each Member State having ratified the Conventions, whatever its duration. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the above Articles of Conventions Nos 52 and 101, and to provide detailed information on any measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

While noting the difficult situation in the country, the Committee observes that the Government's reports on the application of Conventions Nos 1, 14, 30 and 106, which have been due since 2020, have not been received. In view of the urgent appeal that it made to the Government in 2022, the Committee will proceed with the examination of the application of these Conventions on the basis of the information at its disposal.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1, 14, 30 and 106 in a single comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 30 August 2023.

Legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of the Decree of 7 June 2023 withdrawing the Act of 17 to organize and regulate work over a 24-hour period, divided into three eight-hour segments. In accordance with section 2 of the Decree, sections 96 to 108 of the Labour Code, respecting hours of work, and sections 120 to 122, defining and regulating night work, are brought back into force and are applicable. In this regard, the CTSP indicates in its observations that, in view of the absence of Parliament, the Government decided to adopt the Decree after consulting the most representative workers' and employers' organizations. The CTSP adds that as the Decree has only been adopted recently, it is not yet possible to evaluate objectively the real application of the legislation on working time.

The Committee notes with regret that, since the adoption of the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference at its 107th Session in 2018, the Government has not yet provided information on the specific measures adopted to ensure compliance with certain of the provisions of these Conventions. While welcoming the adoption of the Decree of 7 June 2023, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure compliance with the working time Conventions, including through the application of the above Decree. It once again requests the Government to take immediate measures to strengthen the labour inspection services and other relevant enforcement mechanisms with a view to ensuring that workers benefit from the protection set out in these Conventions.

The Committee hopes that the Government will take the above comments into consideration and will provide updated information in good time on the measures adopted for this purpose.

Article 7(3) and (4) of the Convention. Temporary exceptions. Annual limit on the number of additional hours and overtime pay. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for many years to take measures to ensure the harmonization of the legislation in force with the articles of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report that the amendment of section 36(4) of the Labour Code is on the agenda of the Harmonization Committee of the committees established under the Panama tripartite agreement which has itself come to a standstill due to disagreement over workers' representation. The Government also indicates the presentation of a draft bill for the establishment of a Higher Labour Council, which would include the committees under the Panama tripartite agreement. In addition, regarding the adoption of a regulation on additional hours for the public sector, it indicates that discussions on this matter have also been suspended for the same reasons. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full compliance with Article 7(3) and (4) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government may, if it so wishes, avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work industry), 14 (weekly rest in industry), 30 (hours of rest in commerce and offices), 52 (holidays with pay), 101 (holidays with pay in agriculture) and 106 (weekly rest in commerce and offices) together.

A. Hours of work

Article 6(1)(b) and (2) of Convention No. 1 and Article 7(2) and (3) of Convention No. 30. Temporary exceptions. Limits on authorized overtime. The Committee notes the reference made by the Government in its report to the current legislation, indicating that it does not set a limit on the maximum number of overtime hours that may be authorized each year. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Conventions, by providing for the annual limit of additional hours which is required to be set in relation to temporary exceptions in conformity with the provisions of Article 7(3) of Convention No. 30.

B. Weekly rest

Articles 4 and 5 of Convention No. 14 and Article 7 of Convention No. 106. Special weekly rest schemes. Compensatory rest. While noting the lack of information in response to its previous request concerning continuous processes, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who are asked to work on a weekly rest day receive compensatory rest of at least 24 hours.

C. Paid leave

Article 1 of Convention No. 52. Scope of application – Homeworkers. In response to the Committee's previous comment concerning the exclusion of homeworkers from the provisions on paid annual leave, the Government indicates that under article 61 of the Labour Code, duties and obligations may also be set out in the contract of employment. While noting, once again, the lack of legislative provisions in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee homeworkers' right to paid annual leave.

Article 2(3) of Convention No. 52 and Article 5(d) of Convention No. 101. Exclusion of absence due to sickness from annual leave. While noting the lack of information in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that interruptions of work due to illness are not included in the calculation of paid annual leave.

Article 2(4) of Convention No. 52 and Article 6 of Convention No. 101. Postponement of annual holidays. While noting the lack of information in this regard and recalling that only the fraction of paid leave exceeding the minimum period laid down in Convention No. 52 may be deferred, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring articles 223 and 224 of the Labour Code into conformity with Article 2(4) of the Convention.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work, industry), 14 (weekly rest, industry), 52 (holidays with pay), 101 (holidays with pay, agriculture) and 106 (hours of rest, commerce and offices) in a single comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Private Business Institutions (CONFIEP) on the application of Conventions Nos 1 and 52, received on 31 August 2023, and the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP) on the application of Conventions Nos 1, 14, 52, 101 and 106, received on 1 September 2023.

The Committee notes the decision by the tripartite committee set up to examine the two separate representations made in 2020 under article 24 of the Constitution of the ILO by the Federation of Mineworkers of the Shougang Hierro Peru and Others and the Santa Luisa de Huanzalà Mineworkers Union. The Committee notes that the tripartite committee did not find violations of Convention No. 1 in relation to the alleged violation of working time limits during COVID-19. The Committee also notes that, taking into account the context of the acute health crisis caused by the COVID-19 pandemic during which the representations were made, the tripartite committee emphasized the importance of engaging in broad social dialogue with all representative organizations of workers and employers in the relevant sectors when taking action to find effective and sustainable solutions to crises (such as the crisis caused by the COVID-19 pandemic), as well as in the context of collective bargaining. The tripartite committee also recalled the impact of excessive working hours on the health and safety of workers and emphasized the fundamental nature of the occupational safety and health Conventions, as recently recognized by the ILO.

A. Hours of work

Article 2(b) of Convention No. 1. Averaging of hours of work within the weekly limits. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the lack of conformity with the Convention of section 2(1)(b) of the single consolidated text of Legislative Decree No. 854 on hours of work, overtime hours and work, as amended by Act No. 27,761 (Presidential Decree No. 007-2002-TR of 4 July 2002), which allows employers to adopt an uneven distribution of working hours in the same week, without establishing maximum limits for daily hours of work. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on this subject. The Committee recalls that the Convention establishes an overall daily limit of nine hours in the case of the variable distribution of working hours within a week. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 2(1)(b) of the single consolidated text of the Act on working time and overtime hours and work into conformity with Article 2(b) of the Convention with a view to guaranteeing that, in the case of the variable distribution of working hours within a week, an overall daily limit of nine hours is established in addition to the weekly limit of 48 hours. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure the application of this provision in practice.

Article 6(1)(b) and (2). Overtime hours. Circumstances in which temporary exceptions may be permitted. Overtime pay and maximum number of hours permitted. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that overtime hours are of an exceptional nature in accordance with section 9 of the single consolidated text of the Act on hours of work and overtime hours and work. However, the Committee notes that section 9 provides that overtime work shall be voluntary and shall only be compulsory in cases of unforeseen circumstances or force majeure. The Committee also notes that the CATP, in its observations, indicates that in certain sectors the limits on working time are exceeded and that, for example in the context of subcontracting, workers have to accept very long working days. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that overtime hours are only worked in exceptional cases of unforeseen pressure of work and are only allowed to enable enterprises to cope with unforeseen cases of pressure of work, in accordance with Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee noted the absence of conformity of section 10 of the single consolidated text of the Act on hours of work and overtime hours and work, as it allows overtime pay to be replaced by compensatory rest. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any further information on this subject. The Committee also notes the absence of legislative provisions establishing the maximum number of overtime hours that may be allowed in each case. With reference to compensation for overtime hours, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 10 of the single consolidated text of the Act on hours of work and overtime hours and work into conformity with Article 6(2) of the Convention in order to guarantee that overtime hours are paid at a rate of not less than 125 per cent of the regular rate, irrespective of any compensatory rest afforded to workers. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the maximum number of additional hours that may be allowed in practice.

B. Weekly rest

Article 5 of Convention No. 14 and Article 8(3) of Convention No. 106. Compensatory rest. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to section 3 of Legislative Decree No. 713 of 8 November 1991, which consolidates the legislation on paid leave for workers subject to the labour regulations governing the private sector, but does not provide additional information, and indicates that the national legislation is in conformity with the provisions of the Conventions. In this regard, the Committee notes the CATP's indication that section 3 of Legislative Decree No. 713 has still not been amended, in contravention of the provisions of the Conventions on weekly rest. It adds that this situation not only endangers the health and life of workers, but also the well-being of their families. The Committee recalls that the rationale for compensatory rest is the need to protect the health and well-being of workers and emphasizes the importance that any financial compensation is in addition to, and not in lieu of, the requisite compensatory rest (2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraph 267). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 3 of Legislative Decree No. 713 into conformity with the Conventions with a view to ensuring that workers who are subject to exceptions to the principle of weekly rest are entitled to compensatory rest of not less than 24 consecutive hours in each period of seven days, irrespective of any financial compensation.

C. Holidays with pay

Article 4 of Convention No. 52 and Article 8 of Convention No. 101. Monetary compensation for leave not taken. Partial relinquishment of holidays. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to section 23 of Legislative Decree No. 713, which establishes the remuneration and compensation which shall be received by workers in the event that they do not take their holidays within the year following that in which they became due. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of Convention No. 52 and Article 8 of Convention No. 101 provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to annual holiday with pay, or to forgo such holiday, shall be void. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 23 of Legislative Decree No. 713 into conformity with the Convention in order to ensure that workers benefit effectively from the right to annual holidays with pay in the form of a period of rest and leisure that is sufficiently long to preserve their health and well-being.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1928)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers-National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN) communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Exceeding normal hours of work. Calculating hours of work as an average. Compressed working week. Time banking. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the Labour Code implemented the provisions of the Working Time Directive 2003/88/EC, issued by the European Parliament and Council on 4 November 2003, which anticipates various mechanisms for organizing working time that diverge from the eight-hour per day and 40-hour per week framework, allowing for the adjustment of work schedules to meet the needs of the undertaking. The Government also informs that flexibility and time-banking arrangements are schemes for the redistribution of working hours, aimed at simplifying the organization of work schedules, with a specific number of hours designated as the standard daily and/or weekly working hours, while not altering the overall average of the standard working time. The Committee notes the observation of the CGTP-IN which points out that these systems fail to adhere to the provisions of the Convention, particularly when considering the limited scenarios in which the Convention permits deviations from the prescribed maximum working time limits. CGTP-IN further asserts that national legislation does not confine the application of these systems to exceptional situations, nor does it restrict their implementation through collective agreements. Additionally, CGTP-IN indicates that these systems typically pose a substantial impediment to balancing the professional and personal/family lives of employees. The Committee wishes to emphasize that going beyond the daily and weekly limits established by the Conventions is likely to affect the health and well-being of workers and their work-life balance (2018 General Survey on working-time instruments, paragraph 74). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the implementation of flexible working-time arrangements, such as averaging hours of work, compressed work-weeks or time banking, is in compliance with the provisions of the Convention and the limits to daily and weekly working hours established by the Convention.

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1921)

Articles 2-5 and 6(1) of the Convention. Daily hours of work. Uneven distribution of weekly hours of work. Cases in which overtime is authorized. The Committee recalls its previous comments relating in particular to section 115 of the Labour Code, which allows daily hours of work to be increased to 12 hours and regarding which the Committee emphasized that the daily limit of eight hours established by the Convention may only be exceeded in the specific cases referred to in Articles 3-6 of the Convention. The Committee also referred to section 113(2) of the Labour Code which, combined with the national collective agreement, allows the uneven distribution of weekly hours of work, increasing daily working time to a maximum of ten hours on certain days. The Committee drew the Government's attention to the fact that Article 2(b) of the Convention only authorizes the uneven distribution of weekly hours of work if daily working time does not exceed nine hours. Finally, the Committee referred to section 120(2) of the Labour Code, which does not provide a restrictive list of the situations in which overtime may be authorized, except for cases of force majeure or where the work needs to be done urgently. The Committee recalls once again that, except for the two abovementioned cases, Article 6(1)(b) of the Convention only authorizes overtime work to enable the employer to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work. In view of the lack of new information on these points in the Government's report, the Committee again asks the Government to take the necessary steps as soon as possible in order to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention and to inform the Office of any developments in this regard.

Article 6(2). Overtime pay. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any new information on measures taken or contemplated to ensure that overtime is paid at a rate at least 25 per cent higher than the normal rate, whether or not compensatory rest is granted, as required by Article 6(2) of the Convention. In fact, section 123(2) of the Labour Code only provides for a higher rate of pay when compensation in the form of paid time off is not possible within 60 days following the period of overtime. Recalling the December 2010 conclusions of the European Committee of Social Rights that went along similar lines, the Committee asks the Government once again to take the necessary measures as soon as possible to give full effect to this Article of the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 8 of the Convention. Right to annual holidays with pay. Prohibition to forgo annual holiday. For several years the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888 of 5 December 1980, which permits the deferral of annual leave for a period of up to two years or for longer with both the employee's and the union's consent. The Government indicates in its report that it is in the process of revising section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888 of 5 December 1980. At the same time, the Committee notes that under section 71(5) of the new Employment Act 2023 when a worker is prevented or restrained from taking annual leave by an employer because of the exigencies of work, the worker shall be entitled to one and half month of his basic salary in lieu of his annual leave entitlement or as prescribed by collective agreements or other better terms. The Government indicates that the Employment Act allows for annual leave not to be taken on account of the exigencies of the work of the employer but provides as a balance to this the payment of extra compensation. The Government also indicates that if the staff is unionized, the union's consent would be sought. In this respect, the Committee recalls that Article 8 of the Convention prohibits any relinquishment of the right of annual holiday with pay. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the workers covered by the Convention effectively enjoy a period of annual holiday with pay every year, independently of any monetary compensation. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made with respect to the revision of section 12(a) of Government Notice No. 888 of 5 December 1980. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to bring section 71(5) of the Employment Act 2023 in compliance with Article 8.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 1 Canada, Chile, Comoros, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Pakistan, Peru, Syrian Arab Republic Convention No. 14 Canada, Central African Republic, Cuba, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Egypt, Eswatini, Ethiopia, North Macedonia, Pakistan, Portugal, Romania, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Slovenia, Solomon Islands Convention No. 30 Chile, Cuba, Egypt, Syrian Arab Republic Convention No. 52 Central African Republic, Comoros, Cuba, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Peru Convention No. 89 Comoros, Djibouti, Egypt, Eswatini, Malawi, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Romania, Rwanda, Senegal, Syrian Arab Republic Convention No. 101 Central African Republic, Cuba, Djibouti, Egypt, Eswatini, Peru, Poland, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sierra Leone Convention No. 106 Cuba, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Ethiopia, North Macedonia, Pakistan, Portugal, Slovenia, Sri Lanka Convention No. 132 Belarus, North Macedonia, Portugal, Rwanda, Slovenia Convention No. 171 North Macedonia, Portugal, Slovenia Convention No. 175 Paraguay, Slovenia, Sudan.

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

Articles 3(1) and (2), 6 and 8 of the Convention. Effective protection of workers against ionizing radiation. Data collection. Determination and review of maximum permissible doses. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that no regulation has been adopted concerning protection measures pursuant to section 94 of the Labour Act. Nevertheless, the Government indicates that a strategic plan for the implementation of the Radiation Safety and Security Act is being developed by the Department of Environment (DOE), with a primary focus on the establishment of the "Office of Radiation of Safety and Security" and the development of regulations related to facilities, setting standards for occupational safety, import and export. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure effective protection of workers, as it relates to their health and safety, against ionizing radiations, and to ensure that data essential for effective protection are made available in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures in order to ensure that the maximum permissible doses or amounts are determined without delay. It also once again requests the Government to provide information on any mechanism ensuring the review of such dose limits.

Article 9. Warning of the presence of hazards from ionizing radiations and instructions for workers directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that section 42(2)(b) of the Radiation Safety and Security Act requires the licensee to take measures to provide for the safety of workers. The Act further provides that the Office of Radiation Safety and Security shall prescribe the required qualification and training for users of ionizing radiation in medical practices (section 45(a)). The Government also indicates that the application for a license (to use radiation sources for industrial, research and medical purposes) requires the submission of a radiation safety programme. This programme outlines responsibilities for workers' safety and includes a consent form for users to acknowledging the associated risks. However, the Committee also notes that the Act does not provide for the need of appropriate warnings to indicate the presence of hazards from ionizing radiations, as well as the need to provide adequate instructions to all workers directly engaged in radiation before and during such employment, and it observes an absence of information on what information or training is mandatory prior to the submission of a consent form. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that (i) appropriate warnings are used to indicate the presence of hazards from ionizing radiations; and (ii) adequate instructions are provided to all workers directly engaged in radiation work before and during such employment.

Article 12. Medical examination. The Committee notes the Government's information that there has been no change with respect to matters covered by Article 12 since its previous report. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure medical examinations prescribed and provided in practice to workers directly engaged in radiation work, including examinations prior to or shortly after taking up such work, and their subsequent examinations at appropriate intervals.

Article 13. Measures in case of irradiation or radioactive contamination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 48 of Part VII of the Radiation Safety and Security Act requires establishments that apply for a license under section 42 to have and implement an emergency response plan as a condition for the granting of a license. However, the Committee also notes that the mentioned Act does not establish specific protection to workers directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures for the protection of workers in case of exposure to ionizing radiations, as required by the Convention, including appropriate medical examination of affected workers, examination of the conditions in which workers' duties are performed and any necessary remedial action.

Article 14. Employment involving exposure to ionizing radiation contrary to medical advice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the only occupation in the country that exposes workers to ionizing radiation is the one of X-ray technician. In this respect, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention in particular to paragraph 40 of the 2015 general observation on this Convention, which indicates that every effort should be made to provide the workers concerned (those whose continued employment in a particular job is inadvisable for health reasons) with suitable alternative employment, where continued assignment to work involving exposure is found to be medically inadvisable. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that workers are not employed or engaged in work liable to expose them to ionizing radiations contrary to qualified medical advice, including measures for the provision of alternative employment.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1990)

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2015)

Previous comments: Conventions Nos 136 and 162

Previous comment: Convention No. 167

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified occupational safety and health (OSH) Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 136 (benzene), 162 (asbestos) and 167 (OSH in construction) together.

A. Protection against specific risks

1. Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136)

Article 2 of the Convention. Replacement of benzene or of products containing it. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government once again refers in its report to provisions of the 1979 General Act on occupational safety, health and welfare, the 1951 Basic Regulations on industrial safety and health, the 1995 Regulations on activities involving hazardous substances, and Technical Safety Standard (NTS) 009/18 on the presentation and approval of OSH programmes. The Committee observes that these provisions do not specifically provide for the use of harmless or less harmful substitute products instead of benzene and hence do not give effect to this Article of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take specific measures without delay to ensure the use of harmless or less harmful substitute products, wherever available, instead of benzene or products containing benzene.

2. Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162)

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Legislation and consultation. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government once again refers to the content of OSH programmes and cites provisions of Supreme Decree No. 2936 of 2016, implementing Act No. 545 of 2014 on safety in construction. However, the Committee observes that neither the programmes nor the aforementioned legislation establish provisions relating to asbestos. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has still not adopted the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of Article 3 of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls once again that the Resolution concerning asbestos, adopted by the 95th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2006, stated that the elimination of the future use of asbestos and the identification and proper management of asbestos currently in place are the most effective means to protect workers from asbestos exposure and to prevent future asbestos-related diseases and deaths. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take immediate action, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention, to ensure that the national legislation prescribes specific measures to: (i) prevent and control health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos; and (ii) protect workers against such risks. The Committee also strongly urges the Government to consult the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned with regard to such measures, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention.

Articles 9, 10, 11 and 12. Measures by law or regulation to prevent or control exposure to asbestos, including replacement or prohibition. Prohibition of the use of crocidolite and spraying. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government also refers in general to the content of OSH programmes, which do not specifically mention asbestos. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has still not adopted the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of these Articles of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the national legislation gives effect to Articles 9 and 10 (measures by law or regulation for prevention or control), 11 (prohibition of crocidolite) and 12 (prohibition of spraying) of the Convention.

Article 15(3). Measures to prevent or control the release of asbestos dust and to ensure compliance with exposure limits. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) section 7(7) of NTS-008/17 on demolition work provides that appropriate measures must be taken in all demolition work to avoid the production of dust, and Raschel netting or similar must be placed at the demolition perimeter, over the whole height, and debris must be dampened before evacuation to lower levels or to the loading area; and (ii) OSH technical inspections are carried out in services and industry, including construction, either routinely or following a complaint, and if in the course of these the inspector finds working conditions which represent an imminent danger to the life or health of the workers, he/she will order work to be stopped in accordance with section 26 of the 1979 General Act on occupational safety, health and welfare, irrespective of any corresponding fines imposed on the employer. In view of the lack of information on the measures taken in this respect, the Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to ensure that exposure to asbestos is reduced to as low a level as is reasonably practicable. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate, if applicable, the specific measures taken by the labour inspectorate to ensure compliance in practice with asbestos exposure limits.

Article 15(4). Adequate respiratory protective equipment and special protective clothing. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Ministerial Decision No. 527/09, regulating the procedure for the supply of work clothing and personal protective equipment, provides that: (i) workers potentially exposed to occupational risks shall use appropriate work clothing, which must be the most suitable and best designed for the activity, be supplied free of charge by the employer and replaced by the latter in the event of wear and tear (section 4(I) and (VI)); (ii) when actions to eliminate or avoid hazards, undertake engineering controls or provide collective protection to minimize risks are not practicable, employers must provide their workers with personal protective equipment which must have national or other recognized certification and be replaced in the event of wear and tear (section 5(a) and (b)); and (iii) for protection of the respiratory system, respiratory protectors with filters for the type of pollutant concerned must be supplied, with renewal carried out according to a schedule or when the protectors are saturated (section 5(f)). The Committee also notes that sections 5(7) and 14(1) of NTS-008/17 provide that workers who carry out demolition work must use respiratory equipment for work that produces dust, and also use, as a minimum at all times, safety footwear and helmet, gloves and mask to protect against dust. The Committee takes note of this information, which addresses its previous request.

Article 16. Practical measures taken by the employer for the prevention and control of exposure. The Committee notes the Government's reference, in reply to its previous comments, to the control and sanction measures adopted by the labour inspectorate with regard to OSH, but that it does not provide any information on the responsibility of each employer to establish and implement practical measures for the prevention and control of the exposure of the workers that they employ to asbestos, in accordance with Article 16. In view of the lack of information on actions taken to give effect to this Article of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to ensure that employers are made responsible for the establishment and implementation of practical measures for the prevention and control of the exposure to asbestos of the workers they employ and for their protection against the hazards due to asbestos.

Article 17(1) and (3). Demolition of plants or structures containing asbestos, and removal of asbestos by employers or qualified contractors. Drawing up of a work plan in consultation with the workers or their representatives. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous comments, that section 6 of Ministerial Decision No. 437/22 of 2022, approving regulations for the designation of coordinators and the setting up of joint committees on occupational health, safety and welfare, establishes the conditions for the appointment of a coordinator or OSH joint committee and section 4 provides that both must ensure compliance with the preventive measures implemented by the enterprise or establishment in strict adherence to the OSH regulations in force. However, the Committee notes that neither these nor the other provisions of the above-mentioned regulations give effect to Article 17(1) and (3) of the Convention and that no information has been received on any action taken by the Government in this respect. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take specific legislative or other measures without delay to ensure that: (i) demolition work and the removal of asbestos provided for under Article 17(1) of the Convention can only be undertaken by employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work (Article 17(1)); and (ii) the workers or their representatives are consulted on the work plan to be drawn up by the employers or contractors (Article 17(3)).

Article 20(2), (3) and (4). Keeping records of the monitoring of the working environment. Access to such records. Right to request the monitoring of the working environment. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that OSH programmes, which include health studies and monitoring, must be updated periodically and have the prior approval of the coordinator or OSH joint committee for them to be presented, which shows that the latter are aware of their technical content. However, the Committee notes that this information does not give any evidence of the application of this Article of the Convention, which refers to records of the monitoring of the working environment and the right of workers to access and request such monitoring. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take specific legislative or other measures without delay to ensure that: (i) the records of the monitoring of the working environment and of the exposure of workers to asbestos are kept for a period prescribed by the competent authority (Article 20(2)); (ii) the workers concerned, their representatives and the inspection services have access to these records (Article 20(3)); and (iii) the workers or their representatives have the right to request the monitoring of the working environment and to appeal to the competent authority concerning the results of the monitoring (Article 20(4)).

Article 21(3) and (4). Information on medical examinations. Other means of maintaining income when assignment to work involving exposure to asbestos is inadvisable. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the contractor's obligation to cover the cost of medical examinations and ensure that workers undergo medical examinations according to the risks to which they are exposed in their work. The Committee observes that this information relates to the provisions of Article 21(1) and (2) but also notes the lack of information on the application of Article 21(3) and (4) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to adopt specific measures without delay to ensure that: (i) workers are informed in an adequate and appropriate manner of the results of their medical examinations and receive individual advice concerning their health in relation to their work (Article 21(3)); and (ii) when continued assignment to work involving exposure to asbestos is found to be medically inadvisable, every effort is made, consistent with national conditions and practice, to provide the workers concerned with other means of maintaining their income (Article 21(4)).

B. Protection in specific branches of activity

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167)

Article 12(2) of the Convention. Obligation of the employer to take immediate steps to stop the operation and evacuate workers. The Committee notes that the Government, in reply to its previous comments, cites provisions of Supreme Decree No. 2936, implementing Act No. 545 on safety in construction, and of NTS-009/18, establishing obligations for employers and contractors in emergency situations. However, the Committee observes that these provisions do not impose a specific obligation to stop the operation and evacuate workers where there is an imminent and serious danger to their safety. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary legislative or other measures to ensure that employers are specifically obliged to take immediate steps to stop the operation and evacuate workers as appropriate, where there is an imminent and serious danger to their safety.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Application of the Convention in law and in practice. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the development of the Guideline on Chemical Safety in Workplaces, the draft Law on Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) and the third OSH master plan 2023-2027, developed with the technical assistance of the ILO. However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information on provisions prohibiting the use of white lead, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give full effect to the Convention in law by prohibiting the use of white lead and sulphate of lead and of all products containing these pigments in the internal painting of buildings, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the use of white lead in the country in practice, including any preventive and protective measures undertaken.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 3, 4, 10 and 11 of the Convention. Measures to be taken for the prevention and control of health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos. Periodic review in the light of technical progress and scientific knowledge. Consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. Replacement of asbestos and the total or partial prohibition of the use of asbestos. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the indication in the Government's report regarding the adoption, in 2018, of the Prohibition of Asbestos and Products Containing Asbestos Regulations. The Committee notes that these Regulations prohibit the import, sale and use of asbestos and the manufacture, import, sale and use of products containing asbestos in Canada, subject to certain defined exclusions, such as the transfer of physical possession or control of asbestos or a product containing asbestos to allow its disposal, or the import, sale or use of asbestos and products containing asbestos for display in a museum or for use in a laboratory. The Prohibition of Asbestos and Products Containing Asbestos Regulations also contain permit provisions in certain limited circumstances. The Committee takes note of this information, which addresses its previous request.

Article 15(2). Exposure limits or other exposure criteria updated in the light of technological progress and advances in technological and scientific knowledge. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the exposure limit values for asbestos in the Yukon are established in Table 10 ("Mineral Dusts") of the Workplace Health Regulations of 1986. The Committee observes that the values under Table 10 appear to be higher than the value in other provinces and territories (0.1 fibres/cm<sup>3</sup> for airborne asbestos, based on threshold limit values established by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to review and update the exposure limits or other exposure criteria in the Yukon, in the light of technological progress and advances in technological and scientific knowledge, in accordance with Article 15(2).

Article 17. Demolition work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the different legislative provisions in force regarding demolition work in the provinces and territories. The Committee observes, nevertheless, that up-to-date information on measures giving effect to Article 17 of the Convention has not been provided for all provinces and territories. The Committee thus requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the following points: (i) measures, including relevant legislative provisions, taken to give full effect to Article 17(1) (measures to ensure that demolition work is undertaken by employers or contractors who are recognised by the competent authority as qualified) in Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan; (ii) measures to give full effect to Article 17(2) in Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and the Yukon (measures taken to ensure that employers or contractors shall be required, before starting demolition work, to draw up a work plan specifying the measures to be taken); and (iii) measures to give full effect to Article 17(3) (measures to ensure that workers or their representatives shall be consulted on the work plan) in Alberta, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and the Yukon.

Article 20. Monitoring of the work environment and of the exposure of workers to asbestos. In the absence of up-to-date information on this issue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to give full effect to: (i) Article 20(2) (keeping records of the monitoring for a period prescribed by the competent authority) in New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Saskatchewan and the Yukon; (ii) Article 20(3) (giving workers concerned, their representatives and the inspection services access to these records) in New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Saskatchewan and the Yukon; and (iii) Article 20(4) (the right to request the monitoring of the working environment and to appeal the results of the monitoring) at the federal level, in Alberta, British Columbia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Labrador, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and the Yukon.

Article 21. Notification of occupational diseases caused by asbestos and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government, indicating that there were 555 fatalities due to mesothelioma, and 233 due to asbestosis, in the period 2018–20. The Government indicates that, for the 2018–20 period, asbestosis and mesothelioma were responsible for 83 per cent of time-lost injuries related to asbestos, and responsible for about 73 per cent of the 1,083 asbestos-related fatalities recorded. According to the Government, not all asbestos-related injuries and fatalities are reported to the Canadian Workers' Compensation Boards and Commissions, so the real numbers of asbestos-related injuries and fatalities may be higher. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the measures taken to give effect to Article 21(2) in British Columbia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland and Labrador (measures to ensure that the monitoring of workers' health is free of charge and, as far as possible, during working hours). The Committee also requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the measures taken to give effect to Article 21(3) in British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and the Yukon (informing workers in an adequate and appropriate manner of the results of their medical examinations). The Committee further requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the measures taken to give effect to Article 21(4) in British Columbia, New Brunswick, the Northwest Territories, Nunavut, Prince Edward Island and the Yukon (measures to provide workers concerned with other means of maintaining their income when continued assignment is medically inadvisable). Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on measures taken to give effect to Article 21(5) in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Ontario (measures to develop a system of notification of occupational diseases caused by asbestos).

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Articles 4, 5 and 8 of the Convention. National policy. Spheres of action. With regard to its previous comment, the Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that: (i) a process for the formulation of a coherent national policy on occupational safety and health (OSH) was launched in 2019, and this process takes account of the spheres of action set out in Article 5, with due respect for tripartism; and (ii) the OSH guidelines, which may be periodically reviewed, are also being developed. The Government adds that, to help it to finalize this project, it has requested the technical assistance of the Office. While taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to finalize a coherent national policy on OSH, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers. The Committee notes the Government's request for technical assistance and hopes that this technical assistance will be provided in the near future.

Article 7. Periodic review of the situation regarding OSH and the working environment. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's information that the periodic review of the OSH situation is guaranteed under current legislation and advisory bodies, particularly the Standing National Labour Council (CNPT), a permanent advisory tripartite body on issues of work, employment, vocational training and, primarily, OSH. One mission of this tripartite body is to issue views and make recommendations on specific sectors with a view to determining effective ways of monitoring occupational hazards and proposing adequate measures. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 7 of Decree No. 07.177 of 18 June 2007, on the organization and functioning of the CNPT, the latter should meet at least twice a year. While noting the activities of the CNPT, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the situation regarding OSH and the working environment is subject to an overall review at appropriate intervals.

Articles 13 and 19(f). Situation of imminent and serious danger to life or health. Further to the Committee's previous comment, the Government refers to sections 143 and 144 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes that section 143 provides for the procedures for dismissal for economic reasons, and that section 144 provides for remedies in the case of unjustified dismissal. The Committee also notes the Government's information on the draft revised Labour Code, section 354 of which sets out that workers are bound to alert the employer, immediately and by any means, to a work situation which they have reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to their life or health, as well as any shortcoming observed in the system of protection. In addition, the section establishes that the employer cannot require workers who have exercised their right to withdraw, to return to their activity in a work situation where there is continuing imminent and serious danger, resulting from, in particular, a shortcoming in the system of protection. The Committee recalls that Article 19(f) of the Convention provides that an employer cannot require workers to return to a work situation where there is a continuing imminent and serious danger to life or health, and it observes that this would cover any such danger, and not only danger resulting from a shortcoming in the system of protection. The Committee further recalls that Article 13 of the Convention provides that a worker who has removed themselves from a work situation which they have reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to their life or health shall be protected from undue consequences in accordance with national conditions and practice. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 345 of the draft revised Labour Code is adopted and gives full effect to Articles 13 and 19(f) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of the use of white lead and sulphate of lead in the internal painting of buildings. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report that there are no specific provisions in national legislation applying the Convention, but that the Labour Code contains general indications in this respect. The Committee hopes that the Government, in its next report, will be able to provide detailed information on the measures taken in law and practice to regulate the use of white lead and sulphate of lead and of all products containing these pigments, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no report of the inspection services which would provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice or which would provide statistical data relating to it. The Committee requests the Government to provide information when it is available on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical information on cases of lead poisoning among working painters, indicating, in particular, morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1991)

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1991)

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine the Conventions Nos 155 (OSH), 161 (occupational health services) and 162 (asbestos) together.

A. General provisions

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the data provided by the Government in its report related to notifications of accidents at work, including the total number of fatalities at work and the overall accident rate by branch of activity. The Committee notes that the total number of recorded cases of occupational diseases increased between 2020 and 2022, with 264 in 2020, 1,700 in 2021 and 1,370 in 2022. According to the information provided by the Government, the rise in occupational diseases in 2021 and 2022 was related to the COVID-19 pandemic, which corresponded to the cause of almost 95 per cent of recognized occupational diseases in the period. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the application of ratified OSH Conventions and to continue to provide statistics on the occupational accidents and cases of occupational diseases.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161)

Article 5(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (g), (h), (i) and (k) of the Convention. Functions of occupational health services. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government, concerning the adoption of ordinances concerning various risks, which set out the functions of occupational health services. The Ordinance on the protection of workers from exposure to dangerous chemicals at work, exposure limit values, and biological limit values (No. 91/18) stipulates that a risk assessment in workplaces where workers are exposed to hazardous chemicals should take into account, where possible, conclusions resulting from the health surveillance of workers to be carried out by an occupational health specialist. The Ordinance specifies that health surveillance includes a workplace tour. The Ordinance on the protection of workers from risks due to exposure to biological agents at work (No. 129/20) establishes conditions for mandatory health surveillance, to be conducted by the competent occupational health specialist or another authorized body, and specifies that the specialist or body should also propose all necessary protective or preventive measures for the workers covered by health surveillance. The Ordinance on the protection at work of workers exposed to stato-dynamic, psycho-physiological, and other efforts at work (No. 73/21) provides that when a major psycho-social risk has been assessed in the risk assessment, occupational health specialists and, if necessary, psychologists should participate in the development and implementation of preventive measures. These specialists should also participate in the education of workers on the prevention of such risks and should take appropriate measures when they notice signs and symptoms of diseases that may be caused by these risks. The Ordinance provides that, through a specialist in occupational medicine, the employer should ensure that workers are informed of certain health risks. The Committee requests the Government to indicate if the specialists of the Occupational Medical Service perform any of the functions outlined in Article 5(d) (testing and evaluation of new equipment), (g) (adaptation of work), (h) (vocational rehabilitation) and (k) (analysis of accidents and diseases).

B. Protection from specific risks

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162)

Effective compensation of workers of the Salonit factory. In response to the previous comment on the appeals lodged against the compensation claims by the workers of the Salonit factory, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Commission for Settlement of Compensation Claims of Workers Suffering from Occupational Diseases Due to Exposure to Asbestos as of 13 July 2023 had received 2,028 compensation claims in total and settled all claims. The Committee notes this information, which responds to the question raised in its previous request.

The Commission for Settling Claims for Compensation by Workers Suffering from Occupational Diseases Due to Exposure to Asbestos. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the current Commission, appointed by the Government on 13 December 2018, received 297 requests, of which 260 were deemed to be well-founded, 34 deemed unfounded and 3 requests were withdrawn. It also notes the Government's indication that the website of the Croatian Health Insurance Fund contains instructions on how to submit a request for compensation. The Committee notes this information, which responds to the request made in the last comment.

Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that, according to data collected between 2018 and 2022, the numbers of diseases related to exposure to asbestos is declining overall, from 57 cases in 2018 to 45 cases in 2022. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information regarding the application in practice of the Convention, including the implementation of the prohibition on the usage of asbestos and asbestos-containing materials in Croatia and the number of occupational diseases reported.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cuba

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations on the application of Convention No. 155 presented by the Independent Trade Union Association of Cuba (ASIC) received in 2022, as well as the Government's response to those observations.

Articles 7, 9, 11(d) and 19(e) of the Convention. Holding of inquiries where cases of occupational accidents appear to reflect serious situations. Enquiries by workers and their representatives, and their consultation on all aspects of OSH. The Committee notes that, in its observations, ASIC alleges that: (i) OSH conditions at the Saratoga Hotel, including deteriorating infrastructure, resulted in an explosion that caused the deaths of a significant number of workers on 6 May 2022; (ii) the hotel managers avoided taking responsibility for the accident; and (iii) consultations were not held with the workers concerning OSH.

The Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that the accident resulted in the deaths of 32 hotel workers, as well as 16 passers-by and neighbours. The Committee also notes that the Government, in its reply to ASIC's observations, indicates that: (i) in accordance with section 192 of the Labour Code, Act No. 116 of 2013, the National Labour Inspection Office began investigating the accident just hours after it occurred; (ii) during the investigation, infringements of the current legislation were detected and the responsibility of the undertakings was established; (iii) in the accident investigation report, the National Labour Inspection Office delivered instructions to re-establish compliance with the legal provisions that had been breached and required that the appropriate persons were held accountable; (iv) those responsible provided the National Labour Inspection Office with the plan of measures to remedy the infringements detected; and (v) the facts related to the accident are being investigated by the competent authorities, and the outcome of this police investigation will lead to the adoption of the appropriate procedural decisions. The Committee firmly hopes that the investigation into the accident that occurred more than one year ago will be concluded shortly and that this will make it possible to determine accountability and impose appropriate penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect. It also requests the Government to study the possibility of setting up a dialogue body with workers or their representatives in order to examine the necessary measures to be taken relating to OSH conditions, including in the hotel industry.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 4 and 8 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and periodic review of the national policy in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee notes that the Government, in its report, indicates that with ILO technical assistance and following consultation with different sectors of the economy and public sector trade unions, proposals were drawn up on a national policy on occupational safety and health (OSH) and a revised General Act on the prevention of occupational risks, and its four regulations. The Government adds that the national policy on OSH has not yet been subject to a tripartite consultation process and that therefore it is currently treated as an internal technical paper. The Committee notes the Government's information that the proposed national policy provides for the reactivation of the National Occupational Safety and Health Board (CONASSO), setting forth that it will be composed of representatives of public, workers' and employers' institutions, and that a regulation governing the Board must be established. In these circumstances, while welcoming the initiatives that have been taken, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt the new policy on OSH in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations. In addition, noting that the draft national policy provides for the reactivation of CONASSO, the Committee would appreciate receiving information on any developments in this regard.

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 3(1) and (2), 6, 7, 8, and 14 of the Convention. Legislation. Appropriate measures to ensure the effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations and maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiations. Discontinuation of assignment to work involving exposure to ionizing radiations further to medical advice. The Committee takes due note that, in the period 2018–2021 there were no reports of occupational accidents with absence from work further to a worker's sudden exposure to radiation. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Government, the regulations concerning radiation protection and, in particular, the maximum permissible doses, have not been updated for many years. The Government indicates that this is due to a lack of human resources and difficulties encountered in transposing the new regulations of metropolitan France into New Caledonian legislation. Nonetheless, the Committee notes with regret that the new regulation, which was due to be adopted in December 2016, has not yet been adopted. The Committee notes that the updating of Decision No. 547 of 25 January 1995, relating to the protection of workers against ionizing radiations, was scheduled for the first half of 2023 and that, ahead of this updating, the stakeholders (the enterprises and institutions involved) had decided that the above-mentioned decision would continue to be applied as it sets out the overriding principles of protection and management of workers' exposure; but with regard to its implementation, they referred to the regulation of metropolitan France. In this regard, the Committee wishes to once again draw the Government's attention to the following paragraphs of its 2015 general observation, paragraph 31 on a system of radiation protection; paragraphs 32 to 35 on the current recommendations for permissible dose limits; and paragraph 40 on discontinuation of assignment to work involving exposure to ionizing radiation pursuant to medical advice and alternative employment. The Committee also notes that 2023 was to be the year in which consideration was given to the establishment of a New Caledonian governmental department for radiation protection, responsible for liaising among all stakeholders. The Committee expects that the Government will spare no necessary efforts so that, in the light of the above-mentioned paragraphs of the 2015 general observation, a new regulation giving full effect to the Convention, particularly Article 3(1) and (2), and Articles 6, 7, 8 and 14, is adopted as soon as possible and in consultation with the employers' and workers' representatives concerned. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged with a view to the establishment of a New Caledonian governmental department for radiation protection.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 1 September 2023.

Article 1(1) and (3) of the Convention. Periodic determination of the carcinogenic substances and agents to which occupational exposure shall be prohibited or made subject to authorization or control. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that Supreme Decree No. 015-2005-SA, approving a Regulation on threshold limit values (TLVs) for chemical agents in the workplace, is currently in force. The Committee notes the CATP's indication in its observations that this Regulation do not cover all carcinogens and the established exposure limits are significantly higher than those of other countries. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. Furthermore, noting that Supreme Decree No. 015-2005-SA was adopted in 2005 and that it has not been revised since then, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt and periodically revise: (i) the list of prohibited carcinogenic substances and agents; and (ii) the list of carcinogenic substances and agents which are subject to authorization or control. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the list of prohibited substances or agents is formulated and approved, and the manner in which the identified authorization or control is carried out.

Article 6(a). Requirement to take steps to give effect to the provisions of the Convention in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Occupational Safety and Health Committee established the tripartite Standing Technical Committee on Occupational Cancer and Chemical Agents in the Workplace on 24 October 2018, with a view to taking action to promote, coordinate and supervise compliance with the Convention. The Committee notes the CATP's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion does not comply with the agreements of the above-mentioned Technical Committee and that this is counterproductive as regards promoting tripartite dialogue. In particular, the CATP indicates that at session No. 12 of the Technical Committee, agreement was reached on the proposal to update the Regulations on the prevention and control of occupational cancer, adopted by Supreme Decree No. 039-93-TR and published on 28 June 1993. This proposal received scientific approval from experts of the National Institute for Neoplastic Diseases, who have also participated in the Technical Committee since it was first established. However, as at 15 August 2023, the CATP has expressed concern at the lack of information on the status of the update of the Regulations. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure tripartite social dialogue in the context of the Standing Technical Committee on Occupational Cancer and Chemical Agents in the Workplace.

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Application of the Convention in practice and legislative developments. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the follow-up given to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards during the 104th International Labour Conference in 2015 in relation to the application of ILO Convention No. 176. In particular, the Committee notes the establishment of platforms and mechanisms such as the Multi-Partite Monitoring Team (MMT) responsible for conducting quarterly environmental monitoring, including audits of mining companies' operations. Further, under section 26 of Act No 11058 of 17 August 2018, the Secretary of Labour and Employment is required to institute new and updated programs to ensure safe and healthy working conditions in all workplaces, especially in hazardous industries such as mining. Regarding coal mining operations, the Committee notes with interest the revision conducted by the Department of Energy of the 1978 Coal Safety Rules and Regulations and the subsequent adoption of the new Coal Mine Safety And Health Rules and Regulations (Department Circular No. DC2018-12-0028 Series of 2018). Regarding the application of the Convention in practice, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the number of mining and quarrying activities inspected (122 in 2022 and 78 from January to June 2023) and that the 2022 inspections noted a compliance rate of 69.67 per cent with Occupational Safety and Health Standards. The committee further notes the statistics available on the Philippines Statistics Authority website which indicates that the total number of occupational injuries in the mining sector has decreased from 528 in 2015, 486 in 2017 and 244 in 2019. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the application of the Convention and to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including any programs adopted for mining under section 26 of Act No 11058. It also urges the Government to provide updated information on the number of accidents and cases of occupational disease in the mining sector and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspections and their outcome.

Article 5(5). Plans of workings. Regarding plans of working, the Government refers to the obligation of companies under the Republic Act No. 7942, Philippine Mining Act of 1995, to submit, detailed plans and work programmes prepared by a competent person. The Government further refers to the obligation of the permittee/contractor/lessee to submit progress reports of their activities and the possibility for a contractor to make changes, under certain conditions, to an approved Work Program. The Committee notes that submission of a work program under section 24, a plan or map under section 12, or a work program under section 69 of Act No. 7942, is required before the start of mining operations but does not address the obligation related to the responsibility of the employer to ensure that, in the event of any significant modification, such plans/maps/work programs are brought up to date periodically and kept available at the mine site. The Committee also notes that the Department of Environment and Natural Resources (DENR) is revising section 21, rule 21.11 of DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98, Mines and Safety Health Standards (DENR administrative Order No. 2000-98). In this respect, the Government indicates that the proposed amendment contains requirements that the employer includes all plans of workings in the 3-year Work Program to be evaluated and approved by the Mines and GeoSciences Bureau. The plan of workings and all updates due to significant modifications would be maintained and made readily available at the mine site. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to give effect to Article 5(5) of the Convention to ensure that in the event of any significant modification, an employer in charge of the mine has an obligation to update plans of workings and, that such plans are brought up to date periodically and kept available at the mine site, including in coal mining operations. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the revision of section 21, rule 21.11 of DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98.

Article 10(c). Measures and procedures to establish a recording system of the names and probable locations of all persons who are underground. Regarding coal mines, the Committee notes the obligation of operators in coal mines under chapter I, section 1, rule 8(n) of Circular No. DC2018-12-0028 which requires the establishment of a check-in and check-out system to provide positive identification of every person underground, and to provide an accurate record of the persons in the mine. Regarding non-coal mine operations, the Government refers to general requirements of underground mining rules set under Chapter VI, sections 13–39, Rules 56-357, of DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98. It further refers to existing practices used for the identification of names and locations of all persons who are within the mine site, including the work distribution board and QR codes. Recalling the Government's previous indication regarding plans to amend section 21(5) of the DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98 to implement Article 10(c), the Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the DENR is in the process of revising the DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98 and DENR Administrative Order No. 2010-21, the Revised Rules and Regulations of R.A. 7942, to effectively enforce the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that employers are required to establish a recording system of the names and probable locations of all persons who are underground in all mines, including non-coal mines. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in the revision of administrative orders, rules and regulations undertaken by DENR in that respect.

Article 12. Two or more employers. Regarding coal mines, the Committee notes the obligation and responsibility of operators under Rule 8(o) of Circular No. DC2018-12-0028 to ensure full coordination with sub-contractors for the implementation of all measures concerning the safety and health of workers. Regarding non-coal mines operations, the Committee notes the reference made by the Government to section 4(7)(d) of Republic Act No. 11058, which only requires collaboration between two or more undertakings engaged in activities simultaneously in one workplace, but does not attribute primary responsibility to one person in particular. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that whenever two or more employers undertake activities at the same non-coal mine, the employer in charge of the mine shall coordinate the implementation of all measures concerning the safety and health of workers and shall be held primarily responsible for the safety of the operations.

Article 13(2)(f). The right of workers' representatives to receive notice of accidents and dangerous occurrences. Regarding coal mines, the Committee notes the right of a Safety and Health Representative in coal mines to receive notice of accidents and dangerous occurrences, under Rule 13(g) of Circular No. DC2018-12-0028. Regarding non-coal mines, the Committee notes reference made by the Government to section 6, Rule 23(2) and (3) of DENR Administrative Order No. 2000-98 and to section 5 of Department of Labour and Employment Order No. 198, series of 2018, which only provides for the rights of employees to obtain information on workplace hazards. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that workers' safety representatives in non-coal mines have the right to receive notice of accidents and dangerous occurrences.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment on Convention No. 155 and its Protocol of 2002

Previous comment on Convention No. 176

Previous comment on Convention No. 187

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Convention No. 155 and its 2002 Protocol (OSH), 176 (safety and health in mines), and 187 (promotional framework for OSH) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers - National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN), the General Workers' Union (UGT) and the observations of Confederation of Portuguese Business (CIP) on Conventions Nos 155, 176 and 187, transmitted with the Government's report.

The Committee notes the decision of the tripartite Committee set up to examine the representation submitted under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SIT) alleging non-observance by Portugal of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), and the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155).

A. General provisions

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), Protocol of 2002 to the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981, and Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187)

Article 4(1) of Convention No. 155 and Article 3 of Convention No. 187. National policy on OSH and the working environment. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the results achieved under the National Strategy for Safety and Health at Work 2015-2020 (ENSST 2015-2020), including: (i) the creation of forums in the construction, manufacturing and agriculture sectors to analyse accidents, identify specific needs and adopt concrete measures in these sectors; (ii) the provision of tools to support OSH risk assessments; (iii) the development of OSH training on protection against specific risks and in certain branches of economic activity; (iv) the approval of the OSH action plan for the public administration by Council of Ministers Resolution No. 28 of 2019; and (v) the development of OSH campaigns, including the dissemination of information on OSH legislation and best practices.

It also notes the observations submitted by the CIP, the UGT and the CGTP-IN on the evaluation of the ENSST 2015-2020, alleging that the objective of reducing the total number of occupational accidents and diseases was not achieved during the period under review. The UGT adds that there has been a significant increase in the number of reported occupational diseases, particularly diseases caused by physical agents, from 3,565 in 2015 to 12,571 in 2020. The UGT further indicates that the preparation of a new national strategy for safety and health from 2022-27 was suspended due to a lack of political will. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its effort to prevent occupational diseases and to provide information on the reasons for the increase of diseases due to physical agents. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the formulation, implementation and periodic review, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, of subsequent OSH strategies, including the measures taken to prevent occupational accidents and diseases, by minimizing, so far as is reasonably practicable, the causes of hazards inherent in the working environment, the interim evaluations of the strategies and the results achieved in this respect.

Article 11(e) of Convention No. 155, Article 3 of the Protocol and Article 4(3)(f) of Convention No. 187. Measures to improve the reporting of occupational accidents and diseases and mechanisms for the collection and analysis of data on occupational injuries and diseases. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on: (i) the collection of information on occupational diseases through the compulsory occupational disease reports; and (ii) the adoption of Decree Law No. 106 of 2017, which regulates the collection, publication and dissemination of official statistical information on occupational accidents. Pursuant to Decree Law No. 106 of 2017, employers are required to report occupational accidents to insurers, which in turn shall send this information to the government department responsible for labour statistics, which shall ensure the production and dissemination of official statistics on accidents at work (sections 3 and 6).

The Committee further notes the observations of the UGT indicating that there continue to be unsustainable levels of underreporting of occupational diseases and that the statistical sources of occupational accidents are outdated. The Committee notes that in their observations, the CGTP-IN and the UGT allege that the level of underreporting of occupational diseases in the country is very high and, as a result, many cases of occupational diseases are not diagnosed as such, but as natural diseases. The CIP also indicates that there is a need to improve the national systems for reporting occupational diseases and for collecting statistical data. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the systems for the reporting, collection and analysis of occupational accidents and diseases. It also once again requests the Government to indicate how effect is given to Article 3(a)(ii) of the Protocol of 2002 concerning the responsibility of employers to provide appropriate information to workers and their representatives on the systems for recording occupational accidents and diseases. With respect to the reporting of occupational diseases, the Committee refers to its comments addressed directly to the Government regarding Articles 3 and 5 of the Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139), and Article 21(5) of the Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162).

B. Protection in specific branches of activity

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176)

Article 3 of the Convention. Policy on safety and health in mines. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) the Directorate General of Energy and Geology (DGEG), in cooperation with other competent authorities, including the ACT, initiated the revision of Decree Law No. 162 of 1990, establishing the General Regulations on Safety and Health at Work in Mines and Quarries; and (ii) the DGEG periodically sends circulars to mine managers to reassess possible risk situations in mines.

The Committee also notes the observations of the CGTP-IN and UGT alleging that the extractive industries sector has one of the highest incidence rates of occupational accidents in the country (with an incidence rate of 18.2 accidents per 100,000 workers) and that despite inadequate health and safety conditions in the mines, companies do not invest in the protection of workers. The UGT further indicates that in the period 2020–22, nine workers have lost their lives and 85 cases of occupational diseases have been recorded in the mining sector. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to strengthen the implementation of the Convention with a view to ensuring safety and health in mining. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the formulation, implementation and periodic review, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned, of a coherent policy on safety and health in mines, including the measures taken to address the incidence rate of occupational accidents and cases of occupational diseases in the sector.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Safety Provisions (Building) Convention, 1937 (No. 62) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. New legislation and regulations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Rwanda Building Control Regulations, established in May 2012 by the Ministry of Infrastructure in collaboration with the Rwanda Housing Authority, contain many provisions of the repealed Ordinance No. 21/94 of 23 July 1953 regulating occupational safety in the building industry, and that any remaining legal voids will be addressed through the ongoing review of Act No. 13/2009 regulating labour in Rwanda and its application orders, and of Ministerial Order No. 02 of 17 May 2012 determining general conditions for occupational safety and health. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate the specific provisions of the Building Control Regulations which give effect to the Convention and is therefore unable to effectively appreciate if these Regulations address the legal voids concerned. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the specific provisions of the legislation in force, and to provide information on any other measures, which ensure the application of the general rules set forth in Parts II to IV of the Convention. It also requests the Government to take immediate action to fill the legal voids still remaining following the abrogation of Ordinance No. 21/94 and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6. Labour inspection and statistical information. Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a comprehensive exercise for the establishment of a country profile on occupational safety and health was concluded in 2012. It further notes that, despite the Government's indication, the 2013 report on labour inspection and the report containing updated statistical information on occupational accidents have not been provided. The Committee also refers the Government to its comments relating to the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81). The Committee therefore once again reminds the Government of its obligations under Article 6 of the Convention and requests the Government to ensure that its next report includes statistical information relating to the number and classification of accidents occurring to persons occupied in work within the scope of this Convention, and any other information relevant to the application of this Convention in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on the 2012 country profile on occupational safety and health and to communicate a copy with its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Part II and Article 17 of the Convention. Prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery. Scope of application. For a number of years, the Committee has drawn the Government's attention to the fact that the national legislation does not contain provisions to give effect to Part II of the Convention (prohibition of the sale, hire, transfer in any other manner and exhibition of unguarded machinery) and that it does not provide for the full application of Article 17 of the Convention (which applies to all sectors of economic activity), as national laws do not apply to certain branches of activity, such as sea, air or land transport, and mining. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the draft Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Act. The Committee notes that the draft OSH Act has a general scope of application and provides for general duties of designers, manufacturers, importers and suppliers with regard to any article for use at work (section 37). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the OSH Act is adopted in the near future and that it will contain provisions giving full effect to Part II and Article 17 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1992)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Prohibition of the employment of young persons and women. The Committee notes that the Government's report repeats the information provided in both 2004 and 2009 on provisions which prohibit the employment of young people on the basis of a risk assessment undertaken by the employer, taking into account the use of lead and its compounds; and provisions which provide protection for pregnant workers and workers who have recently given birth and are breastfeeding. The Committee once again refers the Government to its previous comments with regard to this Article, and reiterates its request that the Government provide information on measures taken or envisaged to prohibit the employment of men under the age of 18 years and of all women in any painting work of industrial character involving the use of white lead or sulphate of lead or other products containing these pigments. The Committee also asks the Government to provide further information on the risk assessment to be undertaken by employers under section 6 of the rules on the protection of health at work of children, adolescents and young people, with particular reference to a risk assessment related to employment involving the use of lead and its compounds.

Article 5(I)(a). Prohibition against the use of white lead. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the information already provided in its previous report, indicating that section 8(1) and (2) of the regulation on the protection of workers from risks of exposure to chemical substances at work require an employer to remove, or reduce to the least possible extent, the risk of hazardous chemical substances to the safety and health of workers at work. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that use of white lead, sulphate of lead, or products containing these pigments is prohibited in painting operations, except in the form of paste or of paint ready to use.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1990)

Previous comment

Articles 3–12, 14–16, 18 and 20–21 of the Convention. Regulations to implement the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it is currently developing a draft Hazardous Substances Regulation, with specific parts addressing the handling and disposal of asbestos. The Government indicates that the draft is currently an internal document within the Occupational Safety and Health Department of the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development, but that it will be subsequently discussed in a tripartite forum with the social partners. The Government further indicates that it has faced a delay in the development of this legislation due to financial constraints and need for further technical support in drafting. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the finalization of regulations addressing occupational exposure to asbestos in the near future, in accordance with Article 3 of the Convention. It requests the Government to ensure that these regulations give full effect to Articles 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20 and 21 of the Convention with a view to ensuring the prevention and control of, and protection of workers against, health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the most representative organizations of employers and workers in this respect.

Articles 5 and 22. Enforcement, information and education. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Occupational Safety and Health Department, as well as the National Environment and Management Authority (NEMA), address hazardous materials, including asbestos, in the course of inspections. The Government states that where work activities are detected that involve the handling of asbestos, the Department, working with NEMA inspectors, will share the NEMA safe work procedures on asbestos handling and disposal. The Government further states that while inspectors will educate workers in the course of inspections, there have been no organized arrangements for education and information dissemination on work with asbestos. In addition, the Government states that the Department previously produced information sheets for distribution to districts and held seminars on a regular basis, but that this has not been possible in the last decade due to budget cuts. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to strengthen the implementation of the Convention with a view to protecting workers against health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos. It requests the Government to take measures to promote the dissemination of information and the education of all concerned with regard to health hazards due to exposure to asbestos and to methods of prevention and control, in accordance with Article 22 of the Convention.

Article 17(1). Demolition and asbestos removal work. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the OSH Department has been informed of cases where contractors undertake the removal of asbestos from buildings or structures without the competence required by the NEMA and without providing notification prior to the work commencing. The Government indicates that in these cases, there had also been no work plan for the protection of workers, no procedures for limiting and controlling asbestos emission into the air and no proper disposal arrangements. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the removal of asbestos shall only be undertaken by employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work, in accordance with Article 17. It further requests the Government to ensure that such employers or contractors are required, before starting demolition work, to draw up a work plan specifying the measures to be taken, including to: (i) provide all necessary protection to the workers; (ii) limit the release of asbestos dust into the air; and (iii) provide for the disposal of waste containing asbestos.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2012)

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comments

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 115 (radiation protection), 139 (occupational cancer), 155 (OSH) and 176 (safety and health in mines) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU), received on 31 August 2023, concerning the application of Convention No. 155.

Application of Conventions Nos 115 and 155 in practice. Nuclear power plant workers. The Committee notes that the report presented to the Governing Body at its 349th Session, October–November 2023 (GB.349/INS/15) titled “Report on developments in the application of the resolution concerning the Russian Federation’s aggression against Ukraine from the perspective of the mandate of the International Labour Organization” noted persisting concerns about the safety of workers in the occupied Zaporizhzhya Nuclear Power Plant (ZNPP). The Report noted concerns with respect to the deteriorating working conditions and the safety of workers, which is mainly due to potential increased exposure to radiation and the potential risk of a nuclear accident, related to an unstable supply of electricity. The Committee further notes with concern the indications of the Director General of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), in the “Statement on Situation in Ukraine” (update 191), released on 27 October 2023, that nuclear safety and security remain potentially precarious in Ukraine at the ZNPP and certain other nuclear power plants. Concerning the conditions of the operating staff at the Chornobyl site, the IAEA Director-General further indicated, in update 193 of 13 November 2023, that the site’s conditions were taking a toll on the physical and mental health of the operating staff, and that the situation was not sustainable in the longer term. The Committee also notes the measures aimed at the safe and secure operation of nuclear facilities and activities involving radioactive sources outlined in the IAEA’s report “Nuclear Safety, Security and Safeguards in Ukraine” of 14 September 2023. The Committee reiterates its concern and once again urges that all necessary measures be taken to protect the safety and health of nuclear power plant workers. In particular, it urges the strengthening of the implementation of Convention No. 115 to ensure the effective protection of workers against ionizing radiations in the course of their work.

A. General provisions

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Application of the Convention in practice and impact of the conflict on the safety and health of workers.

The Committee notes with concern the statement of the KVPU that, since the beginning of the armed aggression of the Russian Federation until 26 January 2023, the State Labour Service (SLS) recorded 571 workers that were injured, of which 221 died, from injuries incurred during the performance of work duties that were the result of bombings, missile and artillery attacks, the mining of territories and premises, capture, and other illegal actions. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the cause of death in 46 per cent of the fatal work-related accidents in 2022 was determined to be related to the conflict and illegal actions by third parties. Noting the difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide available information on the impact of the conflict on the safety and health of workers in the country.

Articles 4, 7 and 8. National OSH policy and legislative reforms. In response to its previous comments on the implementation of the Framework for the reform of the labour protection management system and Plan of Action approved by Decree No. 989, the Government refers to the development and review of various OSH regulations and indicates that it will be possible to develop drafts of relevant bylaws once the new OSH Draft Law is adopted. In this respect, the Committee notes that the new OSH Draft Law No. 10147 was presented to Parliament on 13 October 2023 and is currently under consideration. The Committee further notes that a new ILO project for the adoption of a new labour code to promote compliance with International Labour Standards (ILS) and other pending pieces of labour legislation on OSH has been undertaken.

The Committee takes note of the observations of KVPU that the OSH Draft Law, No. 10147 is not in conformity with Convention No. 155, and in particular, Articles 4, 5(e), 8, 10, 13 (protection for a worker that has removed themselves from a dangerous work situation) and Article 19 (arrangements at the level of the undertaking relating to rights and duties of workers and their representatives, and cooperation). The KVPU indicates that the OSH Draft Law, No. 10147 will significantly narrow the content and scope of existing guarantees and rights of employees related to safe and healthy working conditions. The KVPU also states that trade unions did not approve the OSH Draft Law, No. 10147 which will remove the right to benefits and compensation for work in difficult and harmful working conditions, established under the current legislation, and that the Draft does not stipulate minimum funding for preventive measures. In addition, KVPU reiterates that the Draft Law on Labour is not in conformity with Convention No. 155, with respect to Articles 4 (consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers in the development, implementation and review of the national OSH policy), 5(e) (the protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures), 8 (implementation of the national policy in consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers concerned) and 10 (measures to provide guidance to employers and workers). The Committee, once again, requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the observations of the KVPU. It also requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that the new legislation on safety and health complies with the requirements of OSH Conventions. Recalling, once more, the importance of consultations with the representative organizations of employers and workers in the implementation of Convention No. 155, the Government is requested to provide information on the manner in which the views of organizations of employers and workers have been taken into consideration in the development of the Draft Law on Labour and the OSH Draft Law, No. 10147.

Article 5(e). Protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures. Following the Committee's previous comments on protection against disciplinary measures, the KVPU indicates that OSH Draft Law No. 10147 does not include the requirement of Article 5(e) on the protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures as a result of actions properly taken by them. In this respect, the Committee notes that section 26(11) of the OSH Draft Law No. 10147 provides for protection from harassment or disciplinary measures, but only to employees and solely for reporting an accident, occupational disease or dangerous event. Noting the ongoing review of OSH Draft Law No. 10147, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the new OSH legislation protects both workers and their representatives against disciplinary measures as a result of actions properly taken by them to secure their safety in conformity with the national OSH policy and in compliance with Article 5(e).

Article 11(c) of the Convention. Notification of occupational accidents and diseases. Following its previous comments with respect to the application of Decision No. 337 of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of 17 April 2019, the Committee notes changes introduced through several amendments, including, Resolution No. 1 of 5 January 2021, which provides for notification and investigation of occupational accidents and death of medical workers related to COVID-19 infection (section 141). Regarding the obligation of employers on recording and notification of accidents and occupational diseases, the Committee notes section 141(18) and (19) of the Resolution on Amendments to the Procedure for Investigation and Registration of Accidents, Occupational Diseases and Accidents at Work, dated 20 January 2023, No. 59, and measures envisaged under sections 6(2), (8) and 25(22) of the OSH Draft Law, No. 10147. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that full effect is given to the requirements of Article 11 (c) and to provide updated information on the progress made with respect to the review of the OSH Draft Law No. 10147 and on any other measures taken to ensure the notification of occupational accidents and diseases by employers.

B. Specific risks

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139)

Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Replacement of carcinogenic substances and agents, measures to be taken to protect workers, record keeping, and provision of information. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government in response to its previous request, including the adoption of regulations for the permissible content of chemical and biological substances in the air of the working environment approved by the Order of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine No. 1596, of 14 July 2020 and to the Order of the Ministry of Health of Ukraine, No. 1054, approving the Regulation “List of Substances, Products, Production Processes, Domestic and Natural Factors Carcinogenic to Humans” of June 2022. In this respect, the Committee notes that Order No. 1054 provides for the replacement and/or elimination of carcinogenic substances and agents (Part II, sections 1 and 2), measures to protect workers and monitoring (Part II, sections 3 to 5) and the right of workers to receive information on the dangers involved and the measures to be taken (Part II, sections 6 and 7). The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure the application in practice of Order No. 1054 and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

C. Specific branches of activity

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176)

Articles 5(1), (2)(e) and 16 of the Convention. Supervision of safety and health in mines, suspension of mining activities, corrective measures and enforcement. In response to Committee's previous comments on the power of the competent authorities, the Government indicates that under section 39 of the Labour Protection Law No. 2694-12, 1992 (OSH Law), officials of the SLS are invested with the power to, among others, prohibit, suspend, terminate, restrict the operation of enterprises. However, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that pursuant to section 5 of the Act No. 877-V of 2007 on Fundamental Principles of State Supervision and Monitoring of Economic Activity, scheduled state inspection is carried out, including in coal enterprises that are classified as high risk, only once every two years. In this respect, the Committee notes that pursuant to paragraph 1 of Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of 13 March 2022 No. 303 “On Termination of Measures of State Supervision (Control) and State Market Supervision in the Conditions of Martial Law”, scheduled and unscheduled state supervision (control) and state market supervision have been suspended for the period of martial law imposed by Decree of the President of Ukraine No. 64 dated 24.02.2022 “On the Introduction of Martial Law in Ukraine”, which has been extended until February 2024. The Committee further notes the statistics provided in the Government’s report regarding inspections conducted in two coal mining companies in October 2021, during which 1370 violations of regulations were identified, 56 officials were found administratively liable for fines, and a petition was filed with the administrative court to stop work due to violations. Referring to its comments adopted in 2023 under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), the Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of these provisions of the Convention and the provision of appropriate inspection services to supervise safety and health in mines. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistics on violations detected during inspections, and the measures taken by inspectors in such cases, including the penalties imposed, the petitions filed for the suspension of work and the outcome of these petitions.

Articles 5(2)(c) and (d), 7 and 10(d). Measures to eliminate or minimize the risks to safety and health in mines. Procedures for investigating fatal and serious accidents and the compilation and publication of statistics. Appropriate remedial measures and measures taken to prevent future accidents by employers as a result of investigations. Further to its previous comments on the high rate of occupational accidents and diseases in the mining sector, as well as their underestimation, the Committee notes an absence of updated statistical information on the mining sector. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to ensure that full effect is given to Article 5(2)(c) on reporting and investigating fatal and serious accidents, dangerous occurrences and mine disasters, Article 5(2)(d) on the compilation and publication of statistics on accidents, occupational diseases and dangerous occurrences, Article 7 on measures taken to eliminate or minimize the risks to safety and health in mines and Article 10 on obligation of employers, in particular as regards investigation of accidents and remedial actions (Article 10(d)).

Article 5(2)(f). Rights of workers and their representatives to be consulted on and participate in OSH measures. Further to its previous comments on procedures to implement the rights of workers and their representatives to be consulted on and participate in OSH measures (Article 5(2)(f)), the Committee notes that section 25 (11 and 12) of the OSH Draft Law No. 10147 provides for consultation and involvement of employees and/or their representatives at the level of the undertaking, in particular with regard to decision-making related to safety and health at work. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the implementation of the rights of mine workers and their representatives to be consulted on OSH matters, and to participate in measures, relating to their safety and health at the workplace in accordance with the provisions of the Article 5(2)(f).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

General observation on gendered language of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102)

Background context

The Committee recalls that at its sixth meeting in 2021, the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM TWG) discussed the question of the implications of gendered and outdated terms in all international labour standards, including in the social security instruments.<sup>1</sup> This led the Governing Body to request the Office to prepare a background paper in this regard for its consideration at its 352nd Session in November 2024.<sup>2</sup>

The Committee further recalls that in 2011, at its 100th Session, the International Labour Conference (ILC) made a number of decisions on gender-related language in the ILO social security instruments. The most relevant decision, in relation to the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (hereinafter Convention No. 102), concerned the recognition by the ILC of the “need for a pragmatic solution that would enable its interpretation in a gender-responsive way without revising the instrument itself or weakening the prescribed levels of protection and population coverage”.<sup>3</sup>

In this context, the Committee wishes to underline that Convention No. 102 does not seek to define a conceptual family model but rather establish internationally agreed minimum standards for social protection systems adaptable to any national context. The Committee emphasizes its remaining commitment to monitoring the application of Convention No. 102 in a gender-responsive manner while upholding the minimum level of protection.

Continued relevance of Convention No. 102

The Committee recalls that Convention No. 102 is considered as a “key reference for the definition of the content of the right to social security” under the United Nations International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) of 1966 and the European Charter of the Council of Europe of 1961.<sup>4</sup>

The Committee also underlines that Convention No. 102 is the sole international treaty that addresses social security in a comprehensive manner, referring to nine social security contingencies<sup>5</sup> for which it sets the minimum standards of protection for States to progressively achieve universal coverage, comprehensive, and adequate social protection systems.

The Committee recognizes that the wording of Convention No. 102 remains marked by language which is a product of its time<sup>6</sup> and may seem out of step with the realities of employment and contemporary egalitarian values. It nevertheless wishes to emphasize that the standards of this Convention are perfectly suited to an implementation based on gender equality not only due to their exhaustiveness and relevance, but also because of the universality of the right to social security. Their formulation makes them applicable to both female and male workers and the derived rights by which they provide additional protection to women are perfectly compatible with the application that is more gender-responsive and better adapted to current employment, family and social protection realities. The Committee encourages governments and social partners to ensure gender equality in the implementation of social security rights and to use language adequate to this objective.

<sup>3</sup> Conclusions of the Committee for the Recurrent Discussion on Social Protection, paras 30 and 38. The ILO Governing Body was in consequence invited “to consider, in light of the resolution concerning gender equality and the use of language in legal texts in the ILO, the question of gender-sensitive language in ILO social security standards”. In addition, the ILC urged the Office to “proactively and consistently mainstream gender in its activities relating to social security,” and to “further strengthen Member States’ capacities to design, implement and monitor social security systems that are responsive to challenges including changing demographic trends [...]”.

Universality

As regards coverage, Convention No. 102 gives States flexibility in applying its benchmarks to different types of mechanisms, cognizant that there are many ways to provide social security. Minimum coverage thresholds are framed around “categories of employees”, “categories of economically active population”, and “residents”.<sup>7</sup> Women’s social protection coverage can be assessed as persons protected in their own right, in relation to their employment or residency status, and not to their gender.

Comprehensiveness

With respect to the nine social contingencies covered by Convention No. 102, there are two gender-specific benefits. The first pertains to “pregnancy and confinement and their consequences” (Article 47) underlining the importance of maternity cash and health benefits for the well-being of pregnant and nursing women and their children.

The second concerns survivors’ benefits, for which Convention No. 102 provides that the contingency covered shall include the loss of income support suffered by the dependent widow and children as a result of the death of the breadwinner (Article 60). The Committee notes that many national legislations still provide survivors’ benefits to widowers under more restricted conditions.<sup>8</sup> Additionally, in practice, the large majority of adult survivors’ pensions are still received by women,<sup>9</sup> which can be partially explained due to the fact that women still have longer life expectancies, partner with men who are older than they are, earn lower incomes, and are less likely to meet the conditions for contributory pensions. On the contrary, men are more likely to be excluded from survivors’ schemes that are pension-tested. In this respect, the Committee notes that today the national law upholds such distinction in only one fifth of the 51 countries that have accepted Part X (Survivors’ Benefits) and that the countries that ratified Convention No. 102 in the last decade have legislation that allows both widows and widowers to qualify for survivors’ benefits on similar terms.<sup>10</sup> The Committee therefore considers that the acceptance of Part X (Survivors’ Benefits) of Convention No. 102 has neither served as an impediment to the evolution of the social protection system nor as a reason to revise conceptual family models or reduce existing protections. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that Convention No. 102 constitutes a minimum standard, and therefore a State can grant better protection, for instance through additional benefits to widowers.

Adequacy

Determination of a reference wage

Convention No. 102 prescribes the minimum level of cash benefits which shall be assessed against the reference wage of a “standard beneficiary”. More specifically, Convention No. 102 sets out different options to determine the reference wage which refers to either the earnings of the “skilled manual male employee” or the “ordinary male labourer”.<sup>11</sup> The Committee notes that some of the statistical options to establish the said reference wage are gender neutral, like those that refer to earnings equalled to or greater than the earnings of 75 per cent of all the persons protected or earnings equalled to 125 per cent of the average earnings of all the persons protected. These reference wages determine the minimum and maximum benefits, expressed as percentages of the ordinary male laborer’s and skilled manual male employee’s wages, respectively. These limits apply equally to men and women. In this context, the Committee wishes to recall that these references are used as statistical benchmarks to assess benefit levels, and not to establish a family model that national legislations must adhere to. Furthermore, the reference to men’s wages is used as an arithmetical proxy for setting the level of all cash benefits, including maternity benefits, that member States should achieve in order to ensure the adequacy of benefits, without promoting discrimination against women or endorsing a specific family arrangement.

<sup>7</sup> Articles 9, 15, 21, 27, 33, 41, 48, 55, and 61 of the Convention.

Breadwinner model

The Committee recognizes the significant advances in the labour market and family structures over the past 50 years, particularly in high-income countries. Despite these advances, challenges remain, such as the persistence of the gender wage gap worldwide, where women earn on average 20 per cent less than men.<sup>12</sup> This reality has implications for international social security standards, since using instead the earnings of “skilled manual female employees” as a reference wage would ultimately lead to reduced minimum and maximum benefit levels in most countries. While the Convention employs a family model presented as a man supporting a wife and two children, it is crucial to note that Convention No. 102 explicitly states that benefits for other beneficiaries should be determined in a manner reasonably related to the standard beneficiary.<sup>13</sup> For instance, this provision applies to scenarios like that of a divorced employed mother raising her children alone. As such, despite the use of outdated language, the Committee has insisted that the “gender biased” statistical reference point established by Convention No. 102 still has the effect of reaching higher levels of protection applicable to both male and female workers, given the persistent gender pay gaps.<sup>14</sup>

Identifying gender biases in national benefit formulas

The Committee notes that member States, fulfilling reporting obligations, shall provide statistical information on benefit levels for both a “standard beneficiary” (i.e., man with a wife and two children) and a “woman employee” across accepted branches of Convention No. 102.<sup>15</sup> This entails demonstrating how benefits for a standard beneficiary meet minimum levels, but also how benefits for women employees earning the same wage as the standard beneficiary compare to these levels. This comparative statistical information is crucial for evaluating whether the national social protection system protects such women employees from receiving lower benefits. The Committee observes that few countries have submitted statistical information regarding women employees, and some that did, reported no distinction between men and women. The Committee points out that the Convention is cognizant of gender inequalities and recognizes the potential of social security systems in addressing these disparities.

Conclusions and challenges ahead

While recognizing the use of outdated concepts, the Committee considers that the value of Convention No. 102 cannot be denied in establishing internationally agreed minimum standards for social protection systems adaptable to any national context.

Additionally, the Committee observes positive developments, noting that some countries previously concerned about the gendered language in Convention No. 102 have either ratified it or taken significant steps in that direction.

Finally, the Committee wishes to underline that social protection policies are crucial for enhancing gender equality and realizing women's rights.<sup>16</sup> The Committee therefore wishes to recall that social protection systems based on international social security standards enhance women's enjoyment of the human right to social security. Accordingly, the Committee encourages all ILO constituents to avail themselves of ILO technical assistance to implement a gender-responsive approach to social protection, guided by the benchmarks and principles outlined in Convention No. 102. To this effect, the Committee wishes to highlight the importance for member States to address data gaps insofar as possible, to enhance understanding of the scope of women's social protection. It calls on the Office to actively assist the constituents in this undertaking to the extent requested, enhancing existing social protection methodologies and data collection endeavors, and to support Member States in shaping gender-responsive social protection policies, aligned with international social security standards.

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. List of recognized occupational diseases. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee once again notes with concern that the list of occupational diseases envisaged in section 91 of the Social Security Code of 2006 and section 81 of Decree No. 09-116 of 27 April 2009, on the application of the Social Security Code, has still not been adopted by the Ministers responsible for social security and public health. The Government indicates in this regard that in 2013 a national delegation participated in the work of the technical committee responsible for finalizing the harmonized list of occupational diseases at the Inter-African Conference on Social Insurance (CIPRES) and that the committee responsible for preparing the list has taken up its work once again. The recurrent crises experienced by the country in recent years have however prevented the Government from finalizing the process of the preparation of the list of occupational diseases. The Committee wishes to emphasize that, without a list of occupational diseases, it is impossible to implement not only compensation, but also the prevention of such diseases. The Committee therefore once again expresses the hope that the technical committee responsible for the adoption of the list of occupational diseases will be in a position to complete its work in the very near future and that the Ministries concerned will be able to adopt the schedules of occupational diseases envisaged in the Social Security Code and Decree No. 09-116, taking duly into consideration the Schedule annexed to the Convention. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), which contains the most up-to-date list of occupational diseases at the international level.

Recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism. The Committee notes that, according to the recommendations made by the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism, as approved by the ILO Governing Body, member States which have ratified the Convention are encouraged to ratify the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), and/or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and accept the obligations in its Part VI, as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area (GB.328/LILS/2/1). The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility of having recourse to ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Compatibility of national legislation with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to its previous comments that the ongoing reform of the Code of Social Security and the amended draft of Decree No. 09-115, of 27 April 2009, establishing the National Social Security Fund, will introduce changes to the national legislation to give full effect to the Convention. The Committee recalls that, for the past ten years, it has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to bring national legislation into line with the provisions of Articles 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the Convention, especially with regard to the provisions of social security benefits under conditions of residence and payments of social security benefits abroad. In light of this, the Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding the progress made in the reform of the Code of Social Security and the National Social Security Fund, and firmly hopes that the provisions of the Convention will be fully taken into account during the course of this reform.

Sickness Insurance (Agriculture) Convention, 1927 (No. 25) (ratification: 1931)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on social security, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 24 (sickness insurance, industry) and 25 (sickness insurance, agriculture) together in a single comment.

Article 7(1) of the Conventions. Contribution to the establishment of the sickness insurance fund. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report with regard to the requirement for employers to pay monthly contributions for their workers, under the terms of Act No. 16744 of 1968, establishing provisions respecting employment injury and occupational diseases. The Committee also notes the presentation of a proposal to reform the pensions system which is currently before Parliament and includes the establishment of a mixed system to replace the scheme created by Legislative Decree No. 3500 of 1980, for which the contributions envisaged are paid by the employer. The Committee once again recalls the importance of complying with the basic principle set out in Article 7(1) of the Conventions, in accordance with which the insured persons and their employers shall share in providing the financial resources of the sickness insurance system. In this context, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the opportunity of the framework of the current reform of the pensions system, in consultation with the social partners, to give full effect to the principle set out in these Articles of the Conventions, and that will provide information on this subject.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government, progress in the examination and subsequent implementation of the new mixed system of pensions could open the possibility of envisaging progress in the ratification of new international instruments in the field of social security. In this context, the Committee recalls that the ILO Governing Body, at its 343rd Session (November 2021), upon the recommendation of the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism, confirmed the classification of Conventions Nos 24 and 25 as outdated and has included an item for their derogation or withdrawal on the agenda of the 118th Session of the International Labour Conference (2030). The Governing Body requested the Office to take follow-up measures to encourage actively the ratification of Conventions Nos 102 (Parts II and III) and 130, the most up-to-date instruments on medical care and cash sickness benefits. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to give effect to the decision of the Governing Body adopted at its 334th Session (November 2021) approving the recommendations of the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism and to envisage the ratification of the most up-to-date instruments in this field.

In order to provide an overview of issues relating to the application of ratified social security Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 17, 18, and 19 together.

Article 5 of Convention No. 17. Compensation in the form of periodical payments in the event of permanent incapacity. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments that, the Judiciary, as competent authority, establishes compensation in the cases of permanent incapacity or death due to work-related injuries only in the form of lump sum. The Committee also takes note of the Government's information that it will continuously seek to improve the pertinent regulations and keep the Committee informed in this regard. The Committee wishes to remind the Government that the compensation of victims of occupational injuries who suffer permanent disability or of their dependents should aim at protecting them throughout the contingency period, which is best achieved through periodic payments regularly adjusted to accommodate substantial changes in the cost of living, such as to maintain the value of benefits throughout the payment period. In view of the above, and observing the absence of sufficient guarantees for the competent authority to be satisfied that the lump sum be properly utilized, the Committee requests the Government to make the necessary amendments to the national regulation(s) as to ensure that: (i) compensation paid to injured workers and their survivors is provided preferably in periodical payments; and (ii) in cases in which it is provided in the form of a lump sum, criteria is established so that the competent authority is satisfied that it will be properly utilized, to ensure full conformity with this provision of the Convention.

Article 6 of Convention No. 17. Waiting period. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous request, the Government confirms that, as per paragraph 2 of section 52 of Decree-Law No. 40/95/M, amended by Law No. 6/2015, from the day the responsible party for the payment receives the attestation of temporary incapacity for work, it must pay compensation to the injured worker every 15 days during the contingency. The Committee observes that, in practice, the injured worker will be paid compensation as from the fifteenth day after the receipt of the documentation that substantiates the incapacity to work. In light of the above and observing that the first payment is guaranteed later than the fifth day of the attested incapacity, the Committee requests the Government to make the necessary amendments to bring national regulation(s) into conformity with Article 6 of the Convention, so as to ensure that payments related to compensation concerning work-related accidents are guaranteed as of the fifth day from the beginning of the incapacity for work.

Article 7 of Convention No. 17. Additional compensation for the constant help of another person. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments that, under section 14 of the Decree-Law No. 40/95/M, if the worker, who is temporarily incapacitated due to a work-related injury, requires constant help from another person, the accompanying person can receive a transportation allowance. The Committee also takes note of the Government's indication that it will continue to review the compensation mechanism for occupational accidents and diseases to improve the support provided to injured workers. While taking note of that, the Committee recalls that Article 7 of the Convention requires the payment of additional compensation in all cases where the injury results in incapacity of such a nature that the injured worker must have the constant help of another person. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that all injured workers, including those with partial permanent or temporary incapacity, are provided with additional compensation when the constant help of another person is required and to provide information on the measures taken to this effect.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

Articles 14(3), (4) and (5) of the Convention. Periodical payments in case of partial permanent incapacity. The Government indicates in its report that compensations for physical impairment and disability pension are not related, and are calculated and paid independently. The Committee observes that, according to sections 39 and 56 of the Pension Insurance Act, a disability pension due to a permanent partial disability resulting from an employment injury is paid only when a minimum degree of incapacity of at least 51 per cent is attained and is calculated in a percentage applied to the worker's previous insured earnings. The Government further indicates that, on the other hand, compensation allowance is paid monthly due to a physical impairment of at least 30 per cent, caused by an occupational injury or disease, regardless of whether it led to the onset of a permanent disability. According to the table established by section 63 of the Pension Insurance Act, such compensation is calculated based on the degree of the impairment. The Committee takes note of the information that workers entitled to compensation due to physical impairment of 30 per cent, 50 per cent and 70 per cent would receive, respectively, €29.85, €49.74, and €69.64, considering a calculation base of €248.72 in 2023, defined by law. The Committee therefore observes that workers who have suffered an employment injury and hold a partial permanent loss of earning capacity less than 51 per cent are not entitled to partial disability pension and, in case they qualify for a compensation due to physical impairment, may only receive this allowance when a minimum of 30 per cent of loss of faculty is assessed.

The Committee concludes that: (i) compensation for physical impairment (loss of faculty) paid when a minimum of 30 per cent of loss of faculty is assessed, is calculated at amounts below the parameters established by Articles 14(3), (5) and 20 of the Convention, related to its Schedule II; (ii) partial permanent disability pension is paid only when a minimum degree of 51 per cent of loss of earning capacity is assessed; and (iii) workers with permanent disability or physical damage assessed at less than 30 per cent do not seem to be entitled to any type of compensation for physical impairment or disability pension.

The Committee wishes to highlight that, according to Article 14(3) and (5) of the Convention, the minimum prescribed degree of partial permanent loss of earning capacity or of faculty, that enables the right to receive periodical cash benefits, shall be prescribed as to avoid hardship, while the level of cash benefits shall represent a suitable proportion of the periodical payment established by Article 20 and Schedule II, in relation to the total permanent incapacity for a standard beneficiary. Moreover, the Committee previously observed that incapacity assessed below 25 per cent could be regarded as not substantial and therefore could be compensated by lump-sum payments. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers with loss of earning capacity or corresponding loss of faculty between 30 per cent and 51 per cent, resulting from an employment injury, are entitled to periodical cash benefits calculated in accordance with Articles 14, 20 and Schedule II of the Convention, representing a suitable proportion of cash benefits guaranteed in case of total permanent incapacity. The Committee further requests the Government to state whether any compensatory payments are provided for physical impairment or partial disability assessed at less than 30 per cent, with a view to extending protection to cases of partial but not substantial loss of capacity or faculty, and to ensure that workers suffering such incapacity avoid hardship, in accordance with Articles 14(4) and (5), and 20 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other issues in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) (ratification: 1955)

Previous comment

Part VI (Employment injury benefit), Article 36(3) of the Convention. Conversion of the periodical benefit into a lump sum. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the Government's previous indications provided under Article 36(3) of the European Code of Social Security of the Council of Europe (Code) which has the same provisions on the conversion of periodical cash benefits due to employment injury into a lump-sum payment. In particular, in its 45th report of 2018 on the application of the Code, the Government indicates that different financial support measures are available to injured persons in addition to a lump-sum payment, which is provided to persons who: (a) have a loss of earning capacity for up to 50 per cent; or (b) have a loss of earning capacity above 50 per cent but requested a lump sum for the loss of earning capacity up to 50 per cent (section 27 of the Occupational Injury Insurance Act of 2017, No. 216). In particular, the Government indicates that injured persons may be entitled to various periodical cash benefits, including benefits provided under the sickness benefits scheme or unemployment benefits scheme. The Government points out that considering the different financial support measures available to injured persons under the social security system, the rules for the provision of lump-sum payments due to employment injury under section 27 of the Occupational Injury Insurance Act of 2017, No. 216, are in line with Article 36(3) of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that Article 36(3) of the Convention allows the conversion of a periodical payment in case of permanent incapacity for work into a lump sum only: (a) where the degree of incapacity is slight; or (b) where the competent authority is satisfied that the lump sum will be properly utilized. The Committee further recalls that periodical cash benefits which may be provided to injured persons in addition to a lump sum shall meet the requirements of Part VI of the Convention (including as regards the level of benefits, duration of payment and an absence of the qualifying period) to be considered for the purpose of the application of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provision of a lump-sum payment instead of periodical cash benefits due to employment injury under section 27 of the Occupational Injury Insurance Act of 2017, No. 216, is in conformity with Article 36(3) of the Convention.

Article 4(2)(b) of the Convention. Supplementary invalidity allowance. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, in order to be able to benefit from a supplementary invalidity allowance, an applicant for the allowance who is of foreign nationality must have been in possession of a residence permit authorizing them to work uninterruptedly for at least ten years from the date of the effect of the benefit claimed (section L816-1(1) of the Social Security Code). The Committee recalls that, under the terms of Article 4(2)(b) of the Convention, the grant of invalidity benefits, such as the supplementary invalidity allowance, may be made subject to the condition that the beneficiary has resided on the territory of the Member for a period which shall not exceed five consecutive years immediately preceding the filing of the claim. In this regard, the Committee observes that the provisions of section L816-1(1) of the Social Security Code affect the entitlement to supplementary invalidity allowances of the nationals of Members which have ratified Convention No. 118, namely Bangladesh, Barbados, Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brazil, Cabo Verde, Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador, Egypt, Guatemala, Guinea, India, Iraq, Israel, Jordan, Kenya, Libya, Madagascar, Mauritania, Mexico, Pakistan, Philippines, Rwanda, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tunisia, Türkiye, Uruguay and Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the provision of the supplementary invalidity allowance to the nationals of Members which have ratified Convention No. 118 who have been resident in France for a period no longer than five consecutive years, in accordance with Article 4(2)(b) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In order to provide a comprehensive overview of the issues relating to the application of the ratified social security Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 37 (invalidity insurance, industry), 38 (invalidity insurance, agriculture), 42 (occupational diseases) and 44 (unemployment provision) together in a single comment.

Article 9(1)(a) of Conventions Nos 37 and 38. Disqualification from entitlement to benefits. For many years, the Committee has been indicating to the Government that section 34(1) of Resolution No. 74-22 of 14 February 1974, which provides for the possibility of the disqualification of an insured person from entitlement to benefits in the event that the invalidity is the result of inexcusable misconduct, exceeds the cases of disqualification set out in Article 9(1)(a) of the Conventions. Article 9(1)(a) of the Conventions provides that the right to benefits may only be forfeited or suspended in whole or in part if the person concerned has brought about the invalidity by a criminal offence or wilful misconduct.

In its report, the Government indicates that the Social Welfare Fund has been informed of the Committee's comments. The Committee notes with concern that section 34(1) of Resolution No. 74-22 of 14 February 1974 has not been amended. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures without delay to amend section 34(1) of Resolution No. 74-22 of 14 February 1974 in order to bring it into conformity with Article 9(1)(a) of the Conventions.

Article 2 of Convention No. 42. Diseases considered to be occupational diseases. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to update the schedules of occupational diseases established by Decree No. 925 CM of 8 July 2011 to ensure full compliance with Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the procedure for the revision of the schedules is under consideration. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in order to ensure full compliance with Article 2 of the Convention, the Government needs to adopt measures to: (a) ensure that the diseases and types of poisoning listed in the schedule in Article 2 of the Convention are not limited by the symptoms and pathological manifestations appearing in the left-hand column of the schedules contained in Decree No. 925 CM of 8 July 2011; (b) consider as occupational diseases those resulting from poisoning by all the halogen derivatives of hydrocarbons of the aliphatic series (Schedule No. 12); and (c) include among the types of work likely to cause primary epitheliomatous cancer of the skin any processes involving the handling or use of tar, pitch, bitumen, mineral oil, paraffin, or the compounds, products or residues of these substances (Schedules Nos 16bis and 36bis).

The Committee notes with concern that the amendment of the schedules of occupational diseases contained in Decree No. 925 of 8 July 2011 is a longstanding issue. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the national legislation is in full conformity with Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 1(1) of Convention No. 44. Establishment and implementation of a system of unemployment protection. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to establish a system of protection against involuntary unemployment with a view to giving effect to Article 1(1) of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that, under the terms of clause 4 of the agreement to bring an end to the dispute concluded by the unions and the President of French Polynesia on 29 November 2021, the Government undertook to establish on 1 January 2023 an assistance fund for employed persons who have involuntarily lost their employment. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will continue to adopt the necessary measures to establish and maintain an unemployment protection scheme which provides persons who are involuntarily unemployed with a benefit or an allowance, or a combination of a benefit and an allowance, as envisaged in Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the establishment of the assistance fund for workers who have involuntarily lost their employment.

The Committee has been informed that, on the basis of the recommendations of the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism (the SRM Tripartite Working Group), the Governing Body has decided that Member States that are currently bound by Conventions Nos 37 and 38 should be encouraged to ratify the most recent instruments, namely the Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128), and accept the obligations of Part II, or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), accepting Part IX (see GB.328/LILS/2/1). Moreover, Member States currently bound by Convention No. 42 should be encouraged to ratify the Employment Injury Benefits Convention [Schedule I amended in 1980], 1964 (No. 121), or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and accept the obligations in its Part VI. Finally, Member States which are currently bound by Convention No. 44 should be encouraged to ratify the Employment Promotion and Protection against Unemployment Convention, 1988 (No. 168), or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and accept the obligations in its Part IV. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to give effect to the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 328th Session (October–November 2016) approving the recommendations of the SRM Tripartite Working Group and to consider the ratification of Conventions Nos 102 (Parts IV, VI and IX) or 121, 128 (Part II) and 168, which are the most up-to-date instruments in this field.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19)
(ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on workmen's compensation, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 17 (accidents) and 19 (equality of treatment) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL) received on 10 August 2023. It requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government that the examination of the ratification of Part VI of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) and of the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) is currently on hold owing to the exceptional circumstances affecting the country.

Convention No. 17. Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government that a draft of the Labour Act was submitted to the Council of Ministers on 11 April 2022, containing, in its Part V of Chapter Two, provisions relating to accidents at work and occupational diseases. The Committee also notes that, according to section 143 of the draft, these provisions would be, after their adoption, in force until the implementation of the Occupational Accident and Occupational Disease Insurance Branch of the National Social Security Fund (NSSF). While taking note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made: (i) in adopting the amendments to the Labour Act concerning compensation for work-related accidents; and (ii) in implementing the Occupational Accidents and Diseases branch of the National Social Security Fund (NSSF). The Committee hopes that the amendments to the Labour Act will bring national legislation into line with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 1(1) and (2) of Convention No. 19. Equality of treatment for survivors. The Committee notes the Government's information that section 157 of the new draft of the Labour Act will provide, if adopted, for the payment of compensation due in case of an accident at work to foreign workers and, in the event of death, to their dependants, even if they do not reside in Lebanon. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in adopting the amendments to the Labour Act with regard to equal treatment between national and non-national workers and their dependants, in particular as regards to payments made abroad of compensation due to injuries resulting from an accident at work.

Seafarers' Pensions Convention, 1946 (No. 71) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Articles 2 to 4 of the Convention. Pension scheme for seafarers. The Committee notes the Government's information that the National Social Security Fund (CNSS) has prepared a bill for submission to Parliament, amending section 9 of the Social Security Act to make it compulsory for seafarers to be entitled to a retirement pension. In addition, the Committee notes the information that Parliament is currently considering a bill establishing a pension scheme in line with international social security standards to replace the end-of-service allowance scheme. The Committee takes due note of the information concerning the replacement of the end-of-service -allowance scheme. However, the Committee notes with concern that, over the past 20 years, the Government has provided similar information in respect of the adoption of regulations to establish a compulsory pension scheme for seafarers but has not indicated any follow-up measures to ensure their adoption and that, to date, seafarers are still not entitled to a retirement pension. In this context, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and requests the Government to provide full details of steps taken or envisaged in this regard, in particular the finalization and adoption of national regulations to establish a compulsory pension scheme for seafarers.

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1958)

Previous comment

Article 7 of the Convention. Provision of additional compensation to workers suffering employment injury when their condition requires the constant help of another person. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, under section 188 of Act 51 of 27 July 2005, amending the Basic Act on the Social Security Fund and establishing other provisions, social security beneficiaries cannot receive more than one pension or form of compensation at a time. The Committee recalls that, given its nature, the additional compensation envisaged in Article 7 of the Convention may suppose an increase in the pension initially awarded for incapacity arising from employment injury, and not only the provision of a new or different pension. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to enable the provision of additional compensation to workers suffering employment injury when their condition requires the constant help of another person.

The Committee also draws the Government's attention to the recommendation of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM TWG), approved by the ILO Governing Body at its 328th Session (October-November 2016), that Member States for which Convention No. 17 is in force should be encouraged to ratify the more recent Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), or to accept the obligations in Part VI of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102). The Committee notes that the tripartite Higher Labour Council is due to be established in the future, with functions that include recommending the ratification of ILO Conventions. The Committee encourages the Government to take advantage of the potential momentum created by the establishment of the Higher Labour Council and to contemplate the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 121 or accepting the obligations in Part VI of Convention No. 102, as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 1 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 1 of Convention No. 44. Establishment of an unemployment insurance system. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report indicating that since 2020 a project has been under development entitled “Strengthening social protection in relation to unemployment in Peru”, which is executed by the ILO with the participation of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion. According to the Government, ILO technical assistance is intended to promote the design and development of a complete protection system for unemployment, by improving the protection of workers in the event of the loss of their jobs and supporting the development of a new policy to improve employability. Finally, the Committee observes that on 3 July 2023 Bill No. 05510/2022-CR respecting the Unemployment Insurance Act was submitted to the Congress of the Republic. In this context, the Committee welcomes the efforts made, trusts that an unemployment insurance system will soon be established in conformity with the Convention, and requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Part XIII (Common provisions). Article 72(1) of Convention No. 102. Participation of insured persons in management. Health system. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to guarantee the right of insured persons to participate in a consultative capacity in the management of private institutions providing health services, in conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

Workmen’s Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received despite its urgent appeal in 2019. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report, due since 2016, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2019, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 7 of the Convention. Additional compensation for the constant help of another person. For many years, the Committee has been noting that no provision is made in national legislation for the payment of additional compensation for injured workers requiring the constant help of another person. The Committee notes with concern that the legislative texts regulating the provision of compensation in case of work accident, particularly the National Insurance Corporation Act No. 18 of 2000 and the National Insurance Regulations of 2003, have not been amended in this respect. Recalling that Article 7 of the Convention requires that all injured persons whose incapacity is of such nature that they need the constant help of another person be provided with additional compensation, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to bring the national legislation in line with Article 7 of the Convention.

Articles 9 and 10. Medical, surgical and pharmaceutical aid, artificial limbs and surgical appliances free of charge. Since the adoption of the National Insurance Regulations of 2003, the Committee has been noting that, under its section 68(2), the compensation for medical, surgical or pharmaceutical expenses is limited to 20,000 East Caribbean dollars, whereas no such ceiling is foreseen in Articles 9 and 10 of the Convention in case of work accident. The Committee notes with concern that the provision of section 68(2) of the National Insurance Regulations of 2003 remains the same. Recalling that pursuant to Articles 9 and 10 of the Convention, necessary medical, surgical and pharmaceutical aid as well as the artificial limbs and surgical appliances shall be provided free of charge to the victims of work accidents, without limitation of cost, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to bring the national legislation in full compliance with Articles 9 and 10 of the Convention.

The Committee has been informed that, based on the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM Tripartite Working Group), the Governing Body has decided that member States for which Convention No. 17 is in force should be encouraged to ratify the more recent Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), accepting its Part VI (see GB.328/LILS/2/1). Conventions Nos 121 and 102 reflect the more modern approach to employment injury benefits. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to follow up the Governing Body's decision at its 328th Session (October-November 2016) approving the recommendations of the SRM Tripartite Working Group and to consider ratifying Convention No. 121 or Convention No. 102 (Part VI) as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government in its report that the ratification process of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) and of the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), has not yet been concluded. The Committee also takes note of the information that, simultaneously, a new Workmen's Compensation Act is being drafted. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and hopes that the new Workmen's Compensation Act will be in compliance with the ratified international labour standards concerning employment injury protection at the time of its adoption. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the ILO technical assistance in this regard..

Article 1 of the Convention. Ensuring the coverage and effective protection of workers in case of industrial accidents. The Committee notes that no information has been provided on measures taken to broaden the coverage to guarantee compensation to workers and their dependents as set out in the Convention. The Committee also notes the indication that statistical data on persons protected is not available due to budgetary constraints and that the Government is seeking funding to improve data collection. The Committee notes with concern that the number of workers engaged in informal employment is particularly high in Sierra Leone, achieving ninety-three percent of the workforce in 2018 (see ILOSTAT), which prevents most workers from accessing compensation in the event of work-related accidents. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures for the progressive extension of the coverage in case of work-related accidents to ensure that all victims of work-related accidents, or their dependents in case of death, are compensated as set out in the Convention. In addition, the Committee hopes that the Government will be soon in a position to provide comprehensive statistical data on the current coverage and benefits afforded within the workmen's compensation scheme.

Article 5. Compensation in case of permanent incapacity for work or death. The Committee takes note of the information that courts are the institutions responsible for conducting the review of the circumstances of work accidents and assessing whether the appropriate compensation has been paid and will be properly utilized. Moreover, according to section 13 of the current Workmen's Compensation Act, workers must rely on the courts in order to properly receive compensation due to a work-related accident, where procedures can be lengthy and costly. The Committee recalls that Article 5 of the Convention provides that, in principle, compensation shall be paid in the form of periodical payments and only authorizes the conversion into a lump sum when the competent authority is satisfied that it will be properly utilized. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the number of workers who have received work-related accident compensations in the period under review; and (ii) the number of judicial decisions in this regard. Furthermore, the Committee encourages the Government to ensure that the Workers' Compensation Act currently being drafted fully complies with the provisions of Article 5 of the Convention concerning periodical payments in the case of compensation payable to workers in the event of work-related accidents.

*Article 3(d) of the Convention. The Committee also notes the statistical information regarding the establishment of breastfeeding facilities in 16 workplaces.

Romania

Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2 (atypical forms of dependent work) read in conjunction with Article 6(2) of the Convention (benefits securing a suitable standard of living). The Committee notes that, according to information available from Eurostat, in 2011, Romania has one of the highest rates of persons at risk of poverty or social exclusion in the European Union – 40 per cent of the population, with a relatively high proportion of employed persons at risk of poverty (18.9 per cent). According to Eurostat, among part-time workers, the in-work at-risk-of-poverty rate was 61 per cent in 2012. In this situation, the Committee welcomes the fact that the minimum threshold of maternity benefit reported by the Government (600 Romanian new lei (RON) per month) exceeds the at-risk-of-poverty threshold established by Eurostat at 60 per cent of median equivalized income, that is to say, RON448 per month. The Committee notes also the medical benefits package granted to women earning income lower than the national minimum gross wage. Taking into account that maternity benefit represents 85 per cent of the previously insured earnings, which in certain cases may be lower than the national minimum wage, the Committee would like the Government to specify whether all employed women have the right to receive maternity benefit at the guaranteed minimum level and, if not, what additional forms of protection were provided to ensure that the amount of cash maternity benefit remains at a level allowing maintenance of the mother and child with a suitable standard of living, especially as regards women employed in atypical forms of dependent work, including part-time, temporary and domestic women workers.

Article 4(1). Minimum qualifying period for entitlement to maternity leave. Recalling that the Convention does not authorize the right to maternity leave to be made subject to the completion of a qualifying period, the Committee again asks the Government to explain whether a woman who has not been affiliated to the social security system for a minimum of one month would still be granted the right to maternity leave, regardless of whether she qualifies for cash maternity benefits during the duration of such leave.

Article 6(5)(6). Social assistance. Please indicate the maximum amount of benefits paid out of social assistance funds under the Emergency Government Ordinance No. 158/2005 to women who do not qualify for contributory cash maternity benefit.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Maternity Protection Convention (Revised), 1952 (No. 103) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that since the adoption of the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards, at its 100th Session in 2011, the Government has not yet provided information on concrete measures adopted to ensure compliance with certain provisions of the Convention. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government will take its comments below into consideration and provide up to date information on the measures taken in this respect in due course.

Article 1(1) and (4) of the Convention. Coverage. Domestic and agricultural workers. The Committee recalls the Government's previous indication that it would initiate the discussions at the tripartite forums of the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC), regarding the extension of coverage to subsistence agricultural workers, workers employed on plantations and domestic workers, in the terms guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee observes, however, that no information has been provided concerning effective actions taken in this regard. In this context, the Committee urges the Government to ensure the effective coverage of women engaged in domestic work and in the agricultural sector, including subsistence and plantation workers, under the terms guaranteed by the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the number of women currently working in these sectors.

Article 3(3). Compulsory post-natal leave of at least six weeks. The Committee takes note that the Government has not provided information concerning amendments to the legislation or measures adopted so as to extend from four to six weeks the compulsory post-natal maternity leave. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a compulsory period of post-natal maternity leave of not less than six weeks is established in the national legislation, in line with Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 4(1), read in conjunction with Article 3(4), (5) and (6). Leave and cash benefits in case of sickness resulting from pregnancy or childbirth. The Committee takes note that no information has been provided by the Government as to the amendment of national legislation to ensure paid leave in case of sickness resulting from pregnancy or confinement, or in case of earlier or delayed confinement. The Committee wishes to highlight that, according to Article 4(1) of the Convention, any extension of maternity leave resulting from the application of Article 3(4), (5) and (6) must qualify for cash benefits. The Committee urges the Government to adopt as soon as possible the necessary measures to ensure that, in case of earlier/delayed confinement or sickness resulting from pregnancy or confinement, women are provided with appropriate leave and cash benefits under the terms of the Convention.

Article 4(4) and (8). Employers' liability scheme. The Committee takes note of the Government's information that the replacement of the employers' liability scheme by a social insurance system to provide maternity benefits will be discussed. The Committee recalls that, following up on the Committee on the Application of Standards' conclusions in 2011, a technical report was commissioned by the ILO in 2013, to examine, among other non-conformity issues, the feasibility of the establishment of a maternity social insurance scheme to progressively replace the employers' liability system. The Committee also recalls that a tripartite workshop was held in 2014 to discuss the conclusions of the technical report and envisage measures to be adopted in this regard. In this context, the Committee wishes to highlight that the direct payment of maternity benefits by employers imposes a financial burden on them and may create a potential source of discrimination against women. Stressing once again that employers should not be individually responsible for the payment of maternity cash benefits, the Committee urges the Government to indicate, as soon as possible, the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that maternity cash benefits are provided through compulsory social insurance or from public funds.

Article 6. Protection against dismissal during maternity leave. The Committee takes note that protection against dismissal during pregnancy and maternity leave is provided to female workers covered by the Shop and Office Employees Act, by its section 18E. Moreover, the Committee observes that section 10 of the Maternity Benefits Ordinance also provides protection in this regard, but it does not specify whether it is extended to women employed in the public sector covered by the Establishments Code. The Committee takes note that the Government does not provide information on amendments to the national legislation that would expressly provide for protection against dismissal or notice of dismissal to public employees during pregnancy and maternity leave. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate any measures taken or envisaged aimed at extending protection against dismissal in the context of pregnancy and maternity leave to women employed in the public sector, under the terms of Article 6 of the Convention.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Convention, including statistical data on the total number of women receiving maternity benefits as well as the total amount of benefits paid on an annual basis.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2026.]

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 9 of the Convention. National framework governing labour clauses in public contracts. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to take all appropriate steps to give full effect to the principle of the Convention by incorporating it into the general administrative clauses set out in the specifications prescribed by Act No. 10/010 concerning public contracts (section 49). The Committee notes with regret that, in its last report, the Government merely reiterates that, according to the above-mentioned legislation and the implementing decree establishing the manual of procedures for the Act on public contracts, any bidder who has won a public contract is bound to apply the labour and social welfare legislation in force. The Committee recalls that the mere fact of the national legislation being applicable to all workers does not release the States which have ratified the Convention from the obligation to take the necessary steps to ensure that public contracts contain labour clauses that ensure that workers receive wages and enjoy other working conditions not less favourable than those established at the national level, including by way of collective agreements, for work of the same character in the trade or industry concerned in the district where the work is carried on. The Committee notes, however, that the Government requests ILO technical assistance in order to bring its legislation and practice into conformity with the requirements of the Convention and hopes that the Office will be in a position to provide the technical assistance requested in the near future. The Committee recalls that the amendment of the national legal framework in order to comply with the Convention depends directly and essentially on the willingness of the Government to fulfil its international obligations. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to act without further delay to give effect to the Convention. To this end, the Committee draws the Government's attention to several publications, including practical guides, which are high value-added tools for the purpose of effectively implementing the Convention, as they identify best practices in the area of public procurement with regard to the labour clauses contained in such contracts and the principle of the Convention. Therefore, in addition to the General Survey on the Convention, which provides a global overview of the way in which labour clauses are governed in public contracts, the Committee also draws the Government's attention to the existence of a practical guide on the application of Convention No. 94 and Recommendation No. 84, and the work of an interagency roundtable (ILO, UNCTAD and OECD) on corporate social responsibility in 2014, which focused on the topic of sustainable public procurement as a tool for promoting sustainable business practices, and which recognized the importance of ILO standards and the matter of labour clauses in public contracts.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

Articles 1 to 9 of the Convention. National framework governing labour clauses in public contracts. For many years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to bring the national legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention by ensuring that public contracts to which the Convention applies contain labour clauses that guarantee to workers conditions of remuneration and other conditions of labour which are not less favourable than those established at national level for work of the same nature in the occupation or industry concerned in the same region. The Government has on several occasions encountered difficulties in applying the Convention and has requested ILO technical assistance. In its latest report, the Government reiterates that in current practice some public contracts do not respect the labour legislation because employers consider the limited duration of the contracts to be a “discharging factor”. It once again undertakes to consult the competent authorities regarding the inclusion of labour clauses, conforming to the clauses provided under the Convention, in such contracts, then to submit the question to the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS). While regretting the lack of progress made and the fact that the Office’s technical assistance has not yet been provided, the Committee wishes to note that certain necessary measures, such as the amendment of the national legislation to explicitly enshrine the principle of the Convention, depend essentially and directly on the will of the Government to fulfil its international obligations under the Convention. In this regard, while reiterating its request that the Office reply favourably to the Government’s request for technical assistance, the Committee requests the Government to act without delay to give effect to the principle of the Convention. To do so, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to several publications, including practical guides, which are highly valuable tools for the correct implementation of the Convention, as they identify exemplary practices in including labour clauses and the principle of the Convention in public contracts. Thus, aside from the General Survey on the Convention, which gives a global overview of how labour clauses are integrated into public contracts, the Committee draws the Government’s attention to the practical guide on implementation of Convention No. 94 and Recommendation No. 84, as well as to the work of an inter-agency round table on Corporate Social Responsibility co-organized by UNCTAD, ILO and OECD in 2014 which focused on the topic of sustainable public procurement as a tool for promoting responsible business, recognizing the importance of ILO standards and the question of labour clauses in public contracts.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 6 of the Convention. Legislation giving effect to the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government has never supplied any information of a practical nature concerning the application of the Convention. It would therefore be grateful if the Government would collect and transmit together with its next report up-to-date information on the average number of public contracts granted annually and the approximate number of workers engaged in their execution, extracts from inspection reports showing cases where payments have been retained, contracts have been cancelled or contractors have been excluded from public tendering for breach of the Fair Wages Rules, as well as any other particulars which would enable the Committee to have a clear understanding of the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice.

Moreover, the Committee understands that the Government has entered into a World Bank-financed technical assistance project for growth and social protection with a view to improving, among other things, the transparent operation and the efficient management of public procurement. In this connection, the Committee would appreciate receiving additional information on the implementation of this project and the results obtained, in particular as regards any amendments introduced or envisaged to public procurement laws and regulations which might affect the application of the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Social Policy (Basic Aims and Standards) Convention, 1962 (No. 117) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that, once again, the Government's report does not contain a reply to the Committee's previous comments, initially made in 2014. It trusts that the next report will contain full information on each of the following points.

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee once again invites the Government to submit information which would enable it to appreciate the manner in which the "improvement of standards of living" is treated as "the principal objective in the planning of economic development", as required under Article 2 of the Convention. In addition, the Committee once again invites the Government to provide information on the manner in which the family needs of workers have been taken into account in the framework of a social policy implemented in accordance with Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention.

Article 8(3). Transfer of part of wages and savings abroad. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on any agreements regulating matters arising in connection with the application of the Convention, including on any agreements including provisions that enable workers to remit their wages and savings.

Part IV. Remuneration. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to give effect to the questions of principle referred to in Article 10(3) and (4) and Article 11(1) and (7).

Advances on the remuneration of workers. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on measures envisaged or adopted to determine the maximum amount and manner of repayment of advances on wages in accordance with Article 12.

Voluntary forms of thrift. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on measures taken or envisaged to encourage voluntary forms of thrift among wage earners and independent producers and to protect wage earners and independent producers against usury.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the Government would take steps without delay to formulate standard bidding documents incorporating labour clauses in all public contracts (whether for construction works, goods or services) that are fully aligned with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that no measures have yet been taken by the Government to give effect to the Convention in either law or practice. The Government once again reiterates that all contracts, including public employment contracts, are subject to the minimum standards set out in the Employment Act, 2000. The Government indicates that this prevents a fluctuation in standards for public and private contracts. While noting the Government's indication regarding the applicability of the Employment Act, 2000 to public contracts, the Committee once again recalls that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that workers employed under public contracts enjoy the same conditions as workers whose conditions of employment are fixed not only by national legislation, but also by collective agreements or arbitration awards, and that in many cases the provisions of the national legislation respecting wages, hours of work and other conditions of employment provide merely for minimum standards which may be exceeded by collective agreements. Thus, the mere fact of the national legislation being applicable to all workers does not release States which have ratified the Convention from the obligation to take the necessary steps to ensure that public contracts contain the labour clauses specified in Article 2 of the Convention (see 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts, paragraphs 40, 41 and 45). The Committee, therefore, and once again, expresses the firm hope that the Government will take steps without delay to formulate standard bidding documents incorporating labour clauses in all public contracts (whether for construction works, goods or services) that are fully aligned with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention. It once again requests the Government to indicate progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the application in practice of the Convention, including summaries of inspection reports, information on the number and nature of infringements reported; and any other information which would enable the Committee to assess the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2, 4 and 5 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. Notice of working conditions. Inspections and sanctions. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures for the insertion in all public contracts covered by this Convention of labour clauses consistent with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention, and for the enforcement of such clauses in the manner prescribed by Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reference to Rule 12 of the Employment and Labour Relations (General) Regulations G.N 47/2017, which provides that the statements of employee's rights shall be in the manner prescribed in Form LAIF.9. The Committee notes, however, that Form LAIF.9 merely recalls the implementation of a set of rights covered under the Employment and Labour Relations Act, such as the right to exercise the rights to freedom of association, annual leave, payment for overtime work and night work allowances. The Committee therefore once again recalls that the mere fact that the general labour legislation is applicable to all workers does not release States that have ratified the Convention from their obligation to take the necessary measures to ensure that public contracts, whether for construction works, the manufacture of goods or the supply of services, include the labour clauses provided for in Article 2(1) of the Convention. This is because the general labour legislation only establishes minimum standards, which are often improved by means of collective bargaining or arbitration awards. If this is the case, under the Convention, the workers concerned must enjoy working conditions which are at least aligned with the most advantageous conditions set through collective agreement or arbitral award. The terms of the labour clauses must be determined after consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned (Article 2(3)), must be brought to the knowledge of tenderers in advance of the selection process (Article 2(4)), and notices informing workers of their conditions of work must be posted at the workplace (Article 4(a)(iii)) (2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts, paragraph 45). In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has noted the specific advice provided by the Committee in its comments on the Convention and that the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts will be addressed, following consultation with the social partners, in its upcoming expected review of the labour legislation. It adds that it will request ILO technical assistance in this respect to ensure that the amendments introduced to the labour legislation are aligned with the rules and principles enshrined in the Convention. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government regarding the measures taken to promote compliance with the Convention, including the launching of campaigns to raise awareness of the Convention which are aimed at stakeholders, such as contractors and subcontractors. Measures also include conducting workshops for all stakeholders on the requirements of the Convention and the national labour laws whenever the Government entities sign contracts for public works. With respect to labour inspection, the Government refers to the elaboration, in collaboration with the ILO Dar-es-Salaam Office of a labour inspection manual in 2020 covering various issues relating to international labour standards and the provision of capacity-building training on labour inspection and administration to labour officers. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take the opportunity presented by the review of the labour legislation to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the provisions of the Convention, particularly with respect to the inclusion of a provision requiring the insertion in all public contracts covered by this Convention of labour clauses of a specific content and nature in compliance with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention, as well as provisions to ensure the enforcement of such clauses in the manner prescribed by Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. It requests the Government indicate any progress made in this regard. The Committee further expresses the hope that technical assistance from the Office will be available in the near future.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Government reports that a draft Labour Code has been prepared in coordination with the ILO, and that it is in compliance with international labour standards. The Government adds that issues raised in the Committee's previous comments with regard to the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts as prescribed by Article 2 of the Convention will be brought to the attention of the Supreme Commission on Auctions and Bids. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it requires the technical assistance of the ILO in relation to the measures to be taken to ensure that all public contracts contain labour clauses that comply with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all public contracts contain labour clauses and hopes that the Government will be soon in a position to report progress in giving full effect to this core requirement of the Convention. The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Basic human rights. Freedom of association. The Committee notes with concern that the report of the Government does not provide information, in reply to its previous comments, on the protection of the right to organize of all foreign nationals. In this regard, it notes that the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW) expressed concern at the fact that undocumented migrant workers cannot join trade unions (CMW/C/ALB/CO/2, 8 May 2019, paragraph 41). In this context, the Committee also refers to the comment it addresses to the Government on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee requests the Government to take action to ensure that all foreign workers, regardless of their immigration status, can exercise trade union rights, and to provide information in this regard.

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

In view of the short report sent by the Government, the Committee notes with concern that the questions raised previously about measures to combat misleading propaganda, equality of treatment, maintenance of residence in the event of incapacity for work and statistics on migration flows have not been addressed since 2013. The Committee reiterates that without the necessary information, it is not in a position to fully assess the effective implementation of the Convention, or any progress achieved since its ratification in 1976. The Committee firmly hopes that the next report will contain full information on the points described below.

Article 1 of the Convention. Information on national policies, laws and regulations. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that all legislation concerning the Convention was previously submitted and that no legislative amendments were made to the Constitution, the Immigration Act Chapter 191, the Employment Act 2001 Chapter 321A, the Employment Act (Amended) 2017, and the National Insurance Act Chapter 350. The Committee notes that, once again, the Government refers in a very general manner to the existing legislation without providing further details on how current trends in migration flows have affected the contents and implementation of its national immigration and emigration policy and legislation. The Committee once again recalls that under Article 1 of the Convention, ratifying States undertake to make available on request information on national policies, laws and regulations relating to emigration and immigration; on special provisions concerning migration for employment and the conditions of work and livelihood of migrants for employment as well as general agreements and special arrangements concluded on these questions. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to: (i) indicate for each of the Articles of the Convention and questions set out in the report form, the relevant provisions of the legislation, as well as any other policy measures taken or envisaged, taking into account current trends in international migration; and (ii) provide information on the working and living conditions of male and female migrant workers.

Article 3. Measures to combat misleading propaganda. Noting that the Government's report contains no information on this matter, the Committee again asks the Government to indicate the steps taken to protect migrant workers from any misleading propaganda and advertising, including information on any infringements detected and sanctions imposed.

Article 6. Equality of treatment. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on this point. It notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), that the Government has failed to eliminate discrimination in the country, notably intersecting forms of discrimination, including against women of Haitian descent and migrant women (CEDAW/C/BHS/CO/6, 14 November 2018, paragraph 11). The Committee asks the Government to: (i) take practical measures to ensure that male and female migrant workers are treated on an equal footing with nationals with regard to conditions of work, trade union rights, accommodation, taxes, social security and access to the justice system; and (ii) provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to this end. The Committee also reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on: (i) the activities of the Department of Gender and Family Affairs to address issues of equal treatment regarding the protection of women migrant workers; and (ii) any measures adopted with respect to Haitian migrant workers.

Article 8. Maintenance of residence in the event of incapacity for work. The Committee once again requests the Government to clarify whether sections 17 and 18 of the Immigration Act, relating to the revocation of a permanent residence certificate, apply in case of a migrant worker who is permanently admitted and who is unable to follow his or her occupation by reason of illness contracted or injury sustained subsequent to entry into the country.

Statistics on migration flows. The Committee notes, that the Government does not provide any statistics on migration flows, and that the most recent data available is from the 2010 Census Migration Report, in which it is indicated that the immigration population represents 18.4 per cent of the total population and recent immigrants account for almost half (45 per cent) of total immigrants. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) actively seek, collect and analyse statistical data, disaggregated by sex and nationality, on the number of migrant workers in the Bahamas and of Bahamian workers seeking employment abroad; and (ii) provide this information.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Mauritius

Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Immigration Act (Act No. 14 of 2022), repealed and replaced the Immigration Act, 1973, to adapt to the new realities and needs of the country with a view to strengthening the law and regulating the admission and stay of non-citizens in Mauritius.

Article 4 of the Convention. Facilitate the departure, journey and reception of migrants for employment. The Committee recalls that section 4 of the Recruitment Act, 1993, requiring the examination of the criminal record of a candidate for emigration for the past ten years does not conform with the Convention. The Government indicates in its report that: (1) a new bill, the Private Recruitment Agencies Bill, was introduced before the National Assembly in July 2023 to replace the Recruitment of Workers Act 1993 and redress the loopholes of such law; and (2) this Bill reflects ethical recruitment standards in line with the recommendations of the International Labour Organization (ILO) and the International Organisation for Migration (IOM). The Bill aims at consolidating and strengthening the law about the recruitment of Mauritius citizens both locally and abroad, and the recruitment of non-citizens. The Government also indicates that a free service was set up by the National Employment Department (NED) for job seekers interested in working overseas. The NED has also set up the National Employment Dashboard, to ensure easy access, in a timely manner, to job vacancies and key labour market indicators. The Committee notes that the Bill was passed in the National Assembly on 17 October 2023. The Committee asks the Government to confirm that the requirement of examining the criminal record of candidates for emigration for the past ten years has been abolished by the new legislative provisions.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006) (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that in 2022, in the framework of the procedure of “urgent appeal”, it examined the implementation of the Convention by Albania on the basis of publicly available information given that the Government had failed to submit a first report for four consecutive years. The Committee welcomes the Government’s first report which was submitted in February 2023.

Article I of the Convention. General questions on application. Implementing measures. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, while ratification of the Convention gave the force of law to its terms in Albania, further regulations were necessary for its implementation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that while some legislation has been adopted in the area of medical care on board, further regulations implementing the requirements of the Convention have yet to be adopted, notably in what concerns minimum age, seafarers’ employment agreements, wages, shore leave, repatriation, accommodation and recreational facilities, health and safety and accident prevention, and enforcement. The Committee recalls that under Article I of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to give complete effect to its provisions in the manner set out in Article VI in order to secure the right of all seafarers to decent employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures without delay to give effect to all the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Seafarers’ Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 2-6 of the Convention. Seafarers’ identity documents. The Committee recalls that it has been commenting for several years on the Government’s failure to apply the Convention. In particular, the Committee has been requesting the Government to: (i) reinstate the identity document for national seafarers; (ii) enact new regulations or amend existing ones so that foreign seafarers may enter Barbados with a valid identity document issued pursuant to this Convention; and (iii) provide copies of the relevant legislative and/or regulatory texts ensuring the application of the Convention. The Committee notes with concern the indication in the report of the Government that the Convention was not being implemented in either law or practice. The Committee further notes the indication by the Government that it encountered difficulties in finding a cost-effective solution for the issuance of identity documents for seafarers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure that its obligations under the Convention are fully respected and reminds the Government that it may seek technical assistance from the Office in this regard.

The Committee further recalls that the Convention has been revised by the Seafarers’ Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185). It draws the Government’s attention to its general observation addressing the recent amendments to the annexes of Convention No. 185.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to submit its first report on the application of the Convention for the fourth consecutive year. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

Article I. General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the provisions of the Convention are mainly implemented by Act No. 30-63 of 4 July 1963 issuing the Merchant Shipping Code, amended by Act No. 63-65 of 30 December 1965; by orders and decrees of the Ministry of Transport, Civil Aviation and Merchant Shipping; and by Regulation No. 08/12-UEAC-088-CM-23 of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) adopting the Community Merchant Shipping Code of 22 July 2012 (CCMM), which is directly applicable in the Congo and is one of the documents that must be carried on board ships flying the Congolese flag and foreign ships operating in Congolese territorial waters. The Committee also notes that the Labour Code does not exclude seafarers from its scope of application. Having reviewed the available information, the Committee notes the inconsistency between certain national provisions and between these and the CCMM, as well as the absence of available information on the implementation of several provisions of the Convention. The Committee underscores the need to avoid any inconsistency in the applicable provisions. It recalls that, in accordance with Article I of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to give full effect to its provisions in order to secure the right of all seafarers to decent employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention, taking into account the matters raised in the request addressed directly to the Government. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of any legislative texts or other regulatory instruments once adopted, as well as full information on the implementation of the Convention, including updated statistics on the number of seafarers who are nationals or residents of the Congo or who work on board ships flying the Congolese flag. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to submit a report on the application of the Convention for the eighth consecutive year. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

The Committee recalls that, in the context of the Standards Review Mechanism, in accordance with the recommendation of the Special Tripartite Committee (STC) established under the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), the ILO Governing Body classified Convention No. 147 as "outdated". The STC decided to review the situation of this Convention at its sixth meeting in order to decide on its possible abrogation or withdrawal. At its 343rd Session (November 2021), the Governing Body placed an item concerning the abrogation of Conventions Nos 23, 55, 56, 58, 68, 92 and 134, all of which are included in the Appendix of Convention No. 147, on the agenda of the 118th Session (2030) of the International Labour Conference. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the eventual ratification of the MLC, 2006.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee recalls that in 2021, in the framework of the procedure of “urgent appeal”, it examined the implementation of the Convention by Gabon on the basis of publicly available information given that the Government had failed to submit a first report for four consecutive years. The Committee welcomes the Government’s first report which was submitted during the June 2023 session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter, the “Conference Committee”). The Committee notes the discussion, which took place during the same session of the Conference Committee concerning the application of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), by Gabon. It notes that the Conference Committee recalled the critical importance of effective national implementation of the Convention and the need for ratifying Member States to ensure they meet their regular reporting obligations within the prescribed time limits. The Conference Committee requested the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure its compliance in law and practice with the Convention, in consultation with the social partners; and to provide full information to the Committee of Experts regarding the application of the Convention in law and practice, including: (i) a copy of all legislative texts or other regulatory instruments, once adopted; and (ii) updated statistics on the number of seafarers who are nationals or residents of Gabon, or who work on board ships flying the Gabonese flag. The Committee also requested the Government to seek ILO technical assistance for the implementation of the above recommendations.

The Committee notes that two Government representatives participated in a course offered by the ILO Training Centre on reporting on the MLC, 2006, which led to the finalization of the report. It also notes that after the International Labour Conference, a number of exchanges and a follow-up meeting took place between the Office and the Government and that discussions are taking place concerning the most appropriate way to provide technical assistance. The Committee hopes that the Government will avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office to address the numerous issues still pending with a view to fully implementing the Convention.

Article I of the Convention. General questions on application. Implementing measures. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention. The Committee observes that, according to the Government’s report, legislative texts implementing the requirements of the Convention have not yet been adopted. The Committee recalls that under Article I of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to give complete effect to its provisions in the manner set out in Article VI in order to secure the right of all seafarers to decent employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without further delay the necessary measures to give effect to all provisions of the Convention.

Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

The Committee requested the Government to provide its comments in reply to the observations of the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) received on 4 August 2017, according to which the practice of Liberia to require all non-national seafarers to have a seafarers' identity document (SID) issued by its registry for the purpose of applying for special qualification certificates would contravene the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that its SID gives seafarers the protection afforded by Convention No. 108 and is therefore in compliance with it. The Government adds that seafarers from many countries serve on ships flying the Liberian flag and are expected to contribute to the safety of their team members and their vessels. Tracking and validating their qualifications and suitability to serve in the roles they seek for employment is consistent with the responsibilities of a flag State.

The Committee recalls that according to Article 2, paragraph 2, Members may issue a seafarer's identity document to a seafarer who applies for such a document. However, requiring every seafarer to have a Liberian SID, including those who might have an SID issued by his or her country of nationality or permanent residence contravenes the objective of the Convention. Indeed, under both Convention No. 108 and the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003, as amended (No. 185), the country of nationality or permanent residence of the seafarer has the primary responsibility to issue SIDs. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give full application to Article 2, paragraph 2 of the Convention by ensuring that SIDs are issued only upon request by the seafarer concerned and not as a precondition to apply for special qualification certificates.

Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Article I of the Convention. General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the Government's report contains insufficient information in reply to its previous comments, and that limited progress has been made by the Government regarding several issues of compliance previously raised, particularly in relation to guaranteeing that the protection afforded by the Convention is afforded to all seafarers under its scope of application. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures without delay to fully implement the provisions of the Convention. It further requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to transmit copy of any relevant texts adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comment

Article I of the Convention. General questions on application. Implementing measures. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that maritime labour law is currently governed by the Act of 9 November 1990, and that a Bill to amend this and several other Acts was in the process of being adopted. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that Bill No. 7329 to amend the Act of 9 November 1990 was subject to a number of amendments dated 29 April 2022 by the Parliamentary Commission on the Economy, Consumer Protection and Space in order to raise the formal opposition expressed by the Council of State in a first opinion. A second opinion of the Council of State is therefore awaited very soon and, in the absence of further objections, the Bill could be voted on by the Chamber of Deputies. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures without further delay with a view to the application of the Convention, taking into account the points raised in the request addressed directly to the Government, and to provide copies of the relevant texts once they have been adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1992)

Accommodation of Crews (Fishermen) Convention, 1966 (No. 126) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reports on the application of the fishing Conventions ratified by the country. In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues to be addressed in relation to the application of these Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine them in a single comment, as follows.

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113)

Article 4, paragraph 1 of the Convention. Period of validity of medical certificates. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comments, the Government provides a copy of the Decision of the Ministry of Health on Improving Compulsory Medical Examinations (No. 46 of 13 December 2012) and of the Rules for Performing Compulsory Medical Examinations approved by Decision No. 24/2 of the Ministry of Health of 15 May 2014. The Committee notes the Government's information that under Decision No. 46, all workers whose jobs are connected to water transport must undergo medical examinations every two years (point 12 of the list). It observes, however, that, while the Government indicates that young people should undergo medical examinations at least once a year, there appear to be no provisions in this respect in the legal texts supplied. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure full compliance with Article 4, paragraph 1 of the Convention.

Article 5. Independent examination by a medical referee. Noting that the Government provides no new information in reply to its previous comments, the Committee requests it again to indicate the national provisions or other measures giving effect to Article 5.

Accommodation of Crews (Fishermen) Convention, 1966 (No. 126)

Article 5 of the Convention. Inspections on crew accommodation. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comments on the application of Article 5 (inspections when accommodation has been substantially altered or reconstructed), the Government indicates that, pursuant to section 35 of the Merchant Shipping Code, any changes to a vessel may entail its re-registration after inspection and determination of its seaworthiness based on the inspection findings. On the basis of this provision, and in accordance with Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention, all plans and information on the construction, alteration and reconstruction of ships should be submitted in advance to the State Maritime and Port Agency, under the authority of the Ministry of Digital Development and Transport, for approval. The Committee takes note of this information.

Part III (Articles 6–16). Crew accommodation requirements. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that even if the Convention is considered as an integral part of the law of Azerbaijan, this would not be enough to give effect to the provisions of the Convention that are not self-executing. This is the case, for example, of Article 6(9) and of Article 8(4). In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in accordance with Article 6, paragraph 9, accommodation on ships must comply with the requirements of regulations on fire safety in construction, as there are no specific regulations regarding fishing vessels. The Government also indicates that the legislation does not set special standards for heating on fishing vessels. Noting the absence of legislation on this issue, the Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the accommodation requirements included in Part III of the Convention are fully implemented in law and in practice.

Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received despite its urgent appeal in 2021. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to submit its first report on the application of the Convention for the fifth consecutive year. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the issues covered by the Convention are mainly addressed by Act No. 30-63 of 4 July 1963 issuing the Merchant Shipping Code, amended by Act No. 63-65 of 30 December 1965, and by orders and decrees of the Ministry of Transport, Civil Aviation and Merchant Shipping. It observes that the Merchant Shipping Code has not been revised in order to take into account the requirements of the Convention. The Committee also notes that the Labour Code does not exclude fishers from its scope of application, and that Regulation No. 08/12 UEAC-088-CM-23 of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) adopting the Community Merchant Shipping Code of 22 July 2012 (CCMM), which is directly applicable in the Congo, also applies to fishing navigation. Having reviewed the available information, the Committee notes certain contradictions between national provisions and between these and the CCMM, as well as the absence of available information on the implementation of numerous provisions of the Convention. Noting that the Constitution of the Congo enshrines the supremacy of ratified international Conventions over national legislation, the Committee underscores, however, the need to avoid any contradiction in the applicable provisions, and recalls that the Convention includes requirements for which Member States have to take the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of national law and practice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention, taking into account the matters raised in the request addressed directly to the Government. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on consultations held with the representative organizations of fishing vessel owners and fishers concerned, as prescribed by the Convention. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of any legislative texts or other regulatory instruments once adopted, as well as full information on the implementation of the Convention, including updated statistics on the number of fishers who are nationals or residents of the Congo or who work on fishing vessels that fly the Congolese flag. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 112) (ratification: 1960)

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1960)

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reports on the application of Conventions Nos 112, 113 and 114. The Committee notes with regret that for several years it has requested the Government to provide information on the applicability of existing legislation to fishers. It notes the Government's indication that Liberian maritime regulations are applicable to fishers only to the extent that the Act creating the National Fisheries and Aquaculture Authority is silent. The Committee notes that the latter does not appear to address the matters covered by the Conventions on fishing.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on fishing, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine them in a single comment, as follows.

Impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comments, the Government indicates that Liberia had less COVID-19 caseload than most of the world; consequently, Liberian fishermen were not victimized by the large-scale lockdowns and were able to sell their products to the local market which they serve. Additionally, fishermen were given personal protective equipment by the National Fisheries and Aquaculture Authority and received training. The Committee takes note of this information.

Minimum Age (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 112)

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that various provisions of the Liberian Maritime Law, RLM-107 (hereinafter the “Maritime Law”) regulating minimum age for working on board Liberian vessels (sections 290 and 326), exclude from their application cases where only members of the same family are employed on board and fishing vessels under a certain tonnage. Noting the Government’s indication that the Maritime Law is applicable to fishing vessels, the Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all fishing vessels irrespective of tonnage or of the fact that only members of the same family are employed on board. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the national provisions implementing the Convention apply to all fishing vessels covered by it.

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113)

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. Noting the Government’s information that existing legislation only applies to fishing vessels of 500 tons or more, the Committee requested the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that fishers employed on board fishing vessels of less than 500 tons are subject to the same medical certification requirements in accordance with the Convention. The Committee observes that: (i) the maritime legislation, including Regulation 10.325(3) of the Liberian Maritime Regulations RLM-108 (hereinafter the “Regulations”) on medical certificates of seafarers does not appear to apply to fishers; and (ii) there is no indication of other legislation applicable to fishers which implements the requirements of the Convention. The Committee accordingly requests the Government to take without delay the necessary measures to ensure that the requirements of the Convention are implemented with respect to all fishing vessels as defined under Article 1, irrespective of tonnage, and to transmit copy of any relevant text adopted to that effect.

Fishermen’s Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to explain how effect is given to the provisions of the Convention and to provide clarifications on the application of the existing legislation to fishing vessels. While noting the Government’s general statement on the application to fishers of the maritime regulations, the Committee notes the absence of information on any specific provisions implementing the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to give full effect to the Convention and, in this connection, to indicate the relevant provisions of the applicable legislation which give effect to each of the requirements of the Convention.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 112 Australia Convention No. 113 Belgium, Bulgaria, Montenegro Convention No. 114 Belgium, Montenegro Convention No. 125 Belgium, Brazil Convention No. 126 Belgium, Brazil, Montenegro Convention No. 188 Congo, Denmark, Denmark (Faroe Islands), Lithuania, Morocco, Norway.

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention. Specific legislation on the protection of dockworkers against accidents. The Committee recalls that for more than 30 years its comments have addressed the need for the Government to adopt a legislative or regulatory text giving full effect to the Convention. At its last review, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, in connection with the updating of the texts relating to occupational safety and health that the Government indicated it wished to undertake. The Committee welcomes the indication that the Ministry of Labour is currently drawing up a draft executive decree on the protection of dockers against occupational risks to supplement the provisions of Executive Decree No. 08-363 of 8 November 2008 amending Executive Decree No. 06-139 of 15 April 2006 establishing the conditions and operating procedures for towing, handling and stevedoring activities in ports. The Government indicates that the text being prepared should cover personal protective equipment, adequate training on safe working procedures, and the establishment of risk management systems, as well as medical surveillance of workers, including those exposed to particular risks. The Committee expects the Government to conclude without delay the adoption process of the Executive Decree concerned. It further expects that the Government will soon indicate tangible progress with regard to the effective implementation of Articles 12, 13 and 15 of the Convention, and that it will provide all texts adopted for the protection of workers against accidents in dock work.

Prospects for the ratification of the most up-to-date Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it wishes in the first instance to ensure a solid regulatory framework providing effective protection to workers in dock work in accordance with the Convention before considering ratification of the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152). The Committee encourages the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 152, which is the most up-to-date instrument in this area, when conditions allow. Where appropriate, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Argentina

Protection against Accidents (Dockers) Convention (Revised), 1932 (No. 32) (ratification: 1950)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA) and the Industrial Confederation of Argentina (UIA), received on 1 September 2023, relating to the application of the Convention in practice.

Articles 8, 13(2), 14 and 18 of the Convention. Specific legislation on the protection of dockworkers against accidents. The Committee recalls that, for over 20 years, it has been requesting the Government to take specific measures to give effect to the requirements of these Articles of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on measures taken to this end, despite the time that has passed. The Committee considers that the full application of the Convention requires the adoption of specific measures on dock work, focused on the prevention of occupational risk and, in this case, with respect to Articles: 8 (the measures of security for hatch coverings and beams used for hatch coverings); 13(2) (the rescue of immersed workers from drowning); 14 (prohibiting the removal of or interference with any fencing, gangway, gear, ladders, etc.); and 18 (agreements of reciprocity). Therefore, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged, in consultation with the social partners, to give effect to Articles 8, 13(2), 14 and 18 of the Convention.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that the CGT RA indicates that, with regard to safety and health in docks, the Office of the Superintendent on Occupational Risks published a technical note on the loading and unloading of barges (2021), containing recommendations and good practices on prevention, intended to contribute to the minimum safety conditions that must be observed by workers who operate the grain barges during the loading and unloading processes in docks. In addition, the CGT RA states that the Argentine Port Council, within the framework of the first national workshop on safety and environment in ports (2021), drew attention to the need to regulate safety and health matters in docks through a regulation on safety and health of dockworkers in Argentina, which includes the introduction of joint committees in all ports, the improvement of port facilities, the possibility of developing a protocol on port hazards to reduce occupational accidents and the dissemination of environmental standards in each port. The CGT RA also indicates that the fact that labour inspection responsibilities are carried out by a wide variety of bodies, concessions and consortiums generates a dispersion of responsibilities, which caused a fatal accident in the port of Rosario in May 2023. The CGT RA highlights that, following the death of the dockworker, the Union of United Mar Del Plata Dockworkers (SUPA) reported the precariousness of safety standards in docks, referred to two previous fatal accidents, stated that several docks had been closed due to previous complaints, suspended port operations and announced the opening of legal proceedings against an enterprise in the port of Rosario. The enterprise claimed in its defence that, according to the terms of its concession, it was not responsible for making the necessary investments in the port. The Committee notes, however, the Government's information that no specific violations of the Convention have been registered. The Committee also notes the 2022 annual report on occupational accidents of the Office of the Superintendent on Occupational Risks, and notes the data relating to manual loading, showing 1,377 accidents reported, of which 1,324 resulted in days off work and disability, and two were fatal. The Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the manual loading services mentioned in the 2022 annual report on occupational accidents of the Office of the Superintendent on Occupational Risks refer only to handling in docks or whether they include manual loading in other transport sectors. Taking into account the allegations of the CGT RA on the dispersion of responsibilities for ensuring safety and health in ports, and the relatively high number of accidents reported annually in the report of the Office of the Superintendent on Occupational Risks, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to prevent accidents from occurring during work performed on shore or on board ship in the loading or unloading of any ship engaged in maritime or inland navigation, as required by the Convention. The Committee also invites the Government to provide information on any follow-up given to the recommendations of the Argentine Port Council relating to the adoption of the regulation on safety and health of dockworkers in Argentina, as well as on any other regulation for the sector.

Prospects for the ratification of the most up-to-date Convention. The Committee takes this opportunity to encourage the Government to follow up on the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 328th Session (October–November 2016), in which the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group were adopted, and to consider the possibility of ratifying the Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152), which is the most up-to-date instrument in this area. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this respect.

Congo

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 1986)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received despite its urgent appeal in 2019. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. In light of the urgent appeal made to the Government in 2019, the Committee will examine the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

The Committee notes first that, in addition to its failure to provide a report since 2012, the Government did not provide sufficient information in successive reports and the Committee has not therefore been able to assess the effect given to many of the provisions of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to the need to reply to the questions raised on the effect given to several Articles of the Convention, and not to confine itself to providing information on the general legislative provisions applicable to enterprises. The Committee also recalled that, although the Government appeared to consider that dockworkers should be treated in the same manner as other workers and ports treated like any other enterprise, the Government is required, particularly under the terms of Articles 4 to 7 of the Convention, to take occupational safety and health measures that are specific to dock work. The Committee expects that the Government will take all the necessary measures on an urgent basis to provide full particulars on the following points.

Article 6(1)(a) and (c). Measures to ensure the safety of dock workers. The Committee notes that, under the terms of section 132 of the Labour Code, enterprises must be maintained in a constant state of cleanliness and ensure the necessary safety and health conditions for the health of the personnel, and that they must be so organized as to ensure the safety of the workers. By virtue of subsection 5, instructions on the prevention of occupational risks shall be posted in each workplace and each worker shall be informed by the employer of these instructions at the time of recruitment. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which effect is given to this general provision in dock work in order to ensure that workers do not misuse or interfere without due cause with the operation of any safety device provided for their own protection or the protection of others at the workplace, and that they are able to report any situation which they have reasons to believe could present a risk and which they cannot correct themselves.

Article 7. Consultation with employers and workers or their representatives. The Committee notes that, under the terms of section 131 of the Labour Code, a National Technical Commission for Occupational Health, Safety and Risk Prevention shall be established in the Ministry of Labour to examine matters relating to occupational safety and health and the prevention of employment risks. It notes that Decree No. 2000-29 of 17 March 2000 determines the composition and operation of this Commission. In accordance with section 2 of the Decree, the Commission is a tripartite advisory body under the authority of the Minister of Labour with the mandate to: re-examine periodically a coherent national policy on occupational safety and health in the workplace; propose any measures likely to improve occupational safety and health; and provide opinions on any related draft law or decree. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the work of the National Technical Commission for Occupational Health, Safety and Risk Prevention in relation to occupational safety and health issues in dock work, as well as information on any other measures to ensure the collaboration of employers and workers or their representatives in the application of the measures giving effect to the Convention.

Article 8. Cessation of work in workplaces that are unsafe. The Committee previously recalled that Chapter II of Order No. 9036 of 10 December 1986, to which the Government referred, contains general protective measures, whereas the Convention requires the adoption of measures specific to dock work. The Committee urges the Government to indicate the provisions (regulations or other measures) requiring the adoption of effective protection measures (fencing, flagging or other suitable measures, including, where necessary, cessation of work) to ensure that when the workplace has become unsafe, workers are protected until it has been made safe again.

Article 12. Fire-fighting measures. The Committee notes that, under the terms of section 77 of Order No. 9036, heads of establishments shall take the necessary measures to control any incipient fires rapidly and effectively. However, the Committee notes that the only means envisaged to fight fires appear to be the use of extinguishers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which effect is given to section 77 of Order No. 9036 in dock work, and to specify whether other appropriate fire-fighting means are provided in docks, such as fixed systems, flexible hoses and fire hydrants.

Article 14. Construction, installation, operation and maintenance of electrical equipment. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the application of this Article is ensured by inspections of enterprises by labour inspectors. The Committee also notes that section 133 of the Labour Code contains general provisions on the prevention of risks related to electrical equipment and installations, and more specifically on work in wells, gas and water pipes, septic tanks, vessels and any equipment that may contain deleterious gasses. Noting that this information is still insufficient as a basis for assessing the effect given to this Article of the Convention relating to electrical equipment and installations, the Committee draws the Government's attention to section 3.6.4 (Electrical equipment) of the ILO Code of practice on safety and health in ports (2016), which provides indications on the main elements to be taken into consideration in the installation, operation and maintenance of electrical equipment and installations in ports. The Committee therefore urges the Government to indicate the texts or other measures which ensure that electrical equipment and installations used in dock work are so constructed, installed, operated and maintained as to prevent danger, and to specify the standards that have been recognized by the competent authority in this regard.

Article 17. Access to a ship's hold or cargo deck. The Committee previously noted that section 41 of Order No. 9036, cited by the Government, sets out measures for the immobilization when stopped of lifting devices mounted on wheels, such as bridge cranes, gantry cranes, hoists on monorails and derricks, and to prevent their movement under specific atmospheric conditions (wind action). Recalling that the information provided is insufficient to be able to assess the effect given to this Article of the Convention, which requires the competent authority to determine the acceptability of means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck, the Committee draws the Government's attention to section 7.3 (Access on board ships) of the ILO Code of practice on safety and health in ports (2016), which contains indications on the main elements to be taken into consideration in determining the means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck. The Committee urges the Government to indicate the texts or other measures setting out the means of access to a ship's hold or cargo deck, and to specify the manner in which the competent authority determines their acceptability.

Article 21. Design of lifting appliances, items of loose gear and lifting devices. The Committee previously noted that sections 47 to 49 of Order No. 9036 referred to by the Government only set out protection measures for some machinery or parts of machines that can be dangerous. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that all lifting appliances, every item of loose gear and every sling or lifting device forming an integral part of a load are designed, used and maintained in compliance with the provisions of the Convention.

Article 35. Evacuation of injured persons. The Committee previously noted that section 147 of the Labour Code regulates the evacuation of injured persons who can be moved and who cannot to be treated by the facilities made available by the employer. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted, under the terms of section 147 of the Labour Code, or by any other means, to ensure that adequate facilities, including trained personnel, are readily available for the provision of first aid.

Article 36(1)(d). Appropriate measures for the provision of occupational health services for workers. The Committee notes that Order No. 9033 of 10 December 1986 determines the organization and operation of the socio-health structures of enterprises installed in the country. In accordance with section 7 of the Order, socio-health personnel are responsible, among other tasks, in accordance with the laws and regulations in force, for: carrying out systematic medical examinations; ensuring the health education and information of workers; providing care to workers and their families who are ill; participating in the improvement of working conditions in the enterprise; and participating in the determination of occupational diseases. Recalling that, in accordance with this Article of the Convention, appropriate measures for the provision of an occupational health service for workers should be determined after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which employers' and workers' organizations are consulted in the organization and operation of socio-health centres, and in the activities of socio-health personnel, in enterprises engaged in dock work.

Article 37. Safety and health committees. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of this Article of the Convention, safety and health committees shall be formed at every port where there is a significant number of workers and, as necessary, at other ports. In this regard, the Committee recalls that Order

No. 9030 on safety and health committees in undertakings (10 December 1986) provides that such committees, which include the head of the undertaking or is representative, the responsible agent for safety issues, the occupational doctor, the chief of staff and the workers delegates, should be established in all industrial undertakings and enterprises. These committees would be in charge of determining and implementing the internal policy on occupational safety and health. However, the Committee had noted from the Government's previous report that the health and safety committees provided for by the law have not yet been established. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on any measures adopted for the establishment of safety and health committees provided for by the law in the port sector, with an indication of the manner in which the organizations of employers and workers concerned were consulted on the establishment, composition and functions of these committees.

Article 38(1). Adequate instruction and training. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 141-3 of the Labour Code, employers are required to ensure the information and instruction of workers and the prevention of occupational risks inherent to the occupation or activity of the enterprise. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the instruction and training of workers are entrusted to a specialist in this field at the enterprise level. The Committee urges the Government to indicate how instruction and training are ensured for workers engaged in dock work, particularly in relation to the potential risks attaching to the work and the main precautions to be taken. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide the available information on the activities of the specialists in instruction and training in enterprises engaged in dock work.

Occupational Safety and Health (Dock Work) Convention, 1979 (No. 152) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

*Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Implementation of the provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes with deep concern the Government's observation that the absence of safety and health legislation in dock work, which the Committee has been requesting for several years, is one of the causes of the dramatic explosion that occurred in the port of Beirut in August 2020. The Committee recalls that this explosion took place in a warehouse stocking ammonium nitrate in the port area and ravaged essential infrastructure of the harbour works and caused serious damage in the commercial and residential areas situated within the radius of the shock wave. According to the official figures, this catastrophe killed 235 persons and wounded 6,500 others. The Government indicates its intention to communicate a copy of the ILO code of practice on safety and health in ports \(Revised 2016\) to the General Directorate for Road Transport and Shipping of the Ministry of Public Works and Transport. The Committee expects that the Government will provide detailed information on the measures taken, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to adopt laws or regulations that aim to guarantee safety and health in dock work and their implementation.

*Article 7. Consultations by the competent authority of the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and collaboration between employers and workers. Noting with concern that the Government has stated that cooperation between workers and employers is virtually non-existent, the Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to engage consultations and ensure collaboration between the employers' and worker's organizations concerned on the application of the Convention, and especially on the adoption of laws and regulations in this respect.

*Article 11. Adequate width of passageways and separate passageways for pedestrians. Noting the Government's observation that there are no visible passageways in the port of Tripoli and that these need to be installed when rebuilding the port of Beirut, the Committee hopes that the Government will be able to introduce effective measures for the installation of passageways of adequate width for vehicles and cargo-handling appliances, and for separate passageways for pedestrian use in all national ports.

Article 38(2). Minimum age for the operation of lifting appliances and other cargo-handling appliances. The Committee notes that Decree No. 700 of 25 May 1955 which prohibited employment of persons under 17 years of age on lifting appliances and for all work which is hazardous in nature, and which poses a danger to life, or physical or mental health has been repealed. The Government refers to Decree No. 8987 of 2012 on the prohibition of minors under 18 years of age in works that may harm their health, safety, or morals. The Committee notes that persons of at least 16 years of age may be employed in the types of work listed in annex 2 of the Decree, which include work with mobile machinery, operating machinery and tools, whatever the means of transport, on condition that their physical and mental health and their morals are fully protected and that they have received specific instruction or appropriate vocational training in the relevant field of activity. Recalling that Article 38(2) of the Convention requires that a lifting appliance or other cargo-handling appliance shall be operated only by a person who is at least 18 years of age, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring its legislation into conformity with this provision of the Convention in the port sector and to report on all progress in this regard.

Absence of information on the effect given to several provisions of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government once again refers to Order No. 31/1 of 26 January 1996 approving the regulations for Lebanese ports and docks. It also refers to a list of bulletins published by the General Directorate for Road Transport and Shipping of the Ministry of Public Works and Transport. However, the Committee observes that these texts and bulletins do not contain provisions that give effect to the following Articles of the Convention: Article 1 (Definition of "dock work" and the manner in which employers' and workers' organizations concerned are consulted); Article 3 (Definitions); Article 6(1)(a) and (b), and (2) (Measures to ensure the safety of dock workers, and consultation of workers concerning working procedures); Article 8 (Measures to protect workers from health risks other than dangerous fumes); Article 9 (Safety measures with regard to lighting and marking of dangerous obstacles); Article 10 (Maintenance of surfaces for traffic or stacking of goods and safe manner of stacking goods); Article 12 (Suitable and adequate means for fighting fire); Article 13 (Effective guarding of all dangerous parts of machinery, possibility of cutting off the power to machinery in an emergency, protective measures during cleaning, maintenance or repair work); Article 15 (Adequate and safe means of access to the ship during loading or unloading); Article 16 (Safe transport to or from a ship or other place by water, safe embarking and disembarking, and safe transport to or from a workplace on land); Article 17 (Access to the hold or deck of a vessel); Article 18 (Regulations concerning hatch covers); Article 20 (Safety measures when power vehicles operate in the hold, hatch covers secured against displacement; ventilation regulations; safe means of escape from bins or hoppers when dry bulk is being loaded or unloaded); Article 21 (Design of lifting appliances, loose gear and lifting devices); Article 22 (Testing every lifting appliance and every item of loose gear after any substantial alteration or repair to any part liable to affect its safety; periodical testing of lifting appliances; retesting of shore-based lifting appliances, and certification of tests carried out); Article 23 (Thorough examination and certification of every lifting appliance and every item of loose gear); Article 24 (Inspection of loose gear and slings); Article 27 (Marking lifting appliances with safe working loads); Article 28 (Rigging plans); Article 29 (Strength and construction of pallets for supporting loads); Article 30 (Raising and lowering of loads); Article 31 (Operation and layout of freight container terminals and organization of work in such terminals); Article 32 (Handling, storing and stowing of dangerous substances, compliance with international regulations for transport of dangerous substances; prevention of worker exposure to dangerous substances or atmospheres); Article 33 (Protection against excessive noise); Article 35 (Removal of injured persons); Article 36 (Medical examinations; medical examinations are to be carried out free of cost to the worker, and confidentiality of the records of medical examinations); Article 37 (Safety and health committees); Article 39 (Notification of occupational accidents and diseases); Article 40 (Regulations concerning suitable sanitary and washing facilities); Article 41(a) and (b) (Assigned duties in respect of occupational safety and health, and appropriate penalties); and Article 42 (Time limits for the application of the Convention to the construction or equipping of ships, lifting appliances or loose gear). The Committee expects that any new national laws or regulations adopted by the Government concerning the protection of workers against accidents in dock work will include specific provisions in respect of all the above Articles of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Part V of the report form. Application in practice. In view of the major explosion that occurred in the port of Beirut in 2020, the Committee expects that the Government will take effective measures to strengthen safety and health inspections in dock work and hopes that it will report on progress in this regard. More generally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of dockworkers protected by the legislation and the number and nature of violations observed, the measures taken as a result and the number of occupational accidents and diseases recorded.

Norway

Dock Work Convention, 1973 (No. 137) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO), attached to the Government's report.

Article 3 of the Convention. Registered dockworkers. In its previous observation, the Committee noted the information provided by the Government and the LO's observations concerning the repercussions of the Supreme Court's decision of 16 December 2016 in Case No. HR-2016-2554-P, Holship Norge AS v. Norwegian Transport Workers' Union (NTF), on the implementation of the Convention, particularly as regards priority of engagement for registered dockworkers. The Committee recalls that, in this case, the Supreme Court concluded that the priority of engagement clause for dockworkers registered with the Administration Office of the Port of Drammen, contained in a collective agreement, constituted an unlawful restriction on the appellant enterprise's freedom of establishment under Article 31 of the Agreement on the European Economic Area (EEA Agreement). It observed that the principle of priority of engagement was originally established to improve the situation of dockworkers, and the priority of engagement clause is anchored in Article 3 of the Convention. It also referred to Article 2 of the Convention, observing that the purpose of the instrument was to establish regular employment and payment conditions for dockworkers. However, in reaching its conclusions, the Court held that these considerations could be fulfilled by means other than granting priority of engagement for loading and unloading work to one group of workers. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the parties to the case, considering the need for changes to the way dock work was organized and possible changes to the collective agreements, had engaged in dialogue. The Committee recalls the LO's reference to the consistent case law of the national courts, which had previously upheld the validity of the priority of engagement clause. The LO also noted the tendency to no longer apply the priority of engagement clause in some ports where it was previously applied. According to the LO, loading and unloading operations were carried out by employees of the enterprises located in these ports, by workers these enterprises employed temporarily, and by the ships' crew, at the expense of registered dockworkers, which was incompatible with Norway's obligations under the Convention.

The Committee notes that, following the Supreme Court's decision, the parties to the invalidated framework agreement negotiated and signed a collective agreement for ports and terminals in September 2017. It notes the Government's indication that, despite the removal of priority of engagement from the new collective agreement, the social partners have agreed to give preference to workers on permanent, full-time contracts in jobs involving loading and unloading. The Government draws attention to clause 1 of the collective agreement, which indicates that work at the terminal will be carried out primarily by terminal employees, and mainly on the basis of full-time open-ended contracts. The Government also emphasizes that clause 16 of the collective agreement addresses the issue of temporary work by manual workers and employed workers by providing that "the parties agree that it is important to strive to make the sector attractive and reliable and that the employed workers must benefit from decent wages and working conditions. The parties are determined to prevent 'social dumping' and to ensure that challenges posed by the international labour market are resolved in an acceptable manner". The Government therefore considers that its obligations under the Convention are fulfilled under this new framework. It indicates that dockworkers are guaranteed permanent employment and safe working conditions, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention, through legislation, together with collective agreements between the main social partners, ensuring their employment in full-time positions in ports and terminals.

The Committee also notes that, according to the LO, national practice may exclude certain workers from the definition of dockworkers, in particular workers from enterprises operating outside the framework of the collective agreement or who have no connection with the parties to the collective agreement. The LO also states that the collective agreement for ports and terminals now covers all full-time employees, temporary workers and casual workers employed by port operators, and loading and unloading offices in some ports. Under this new agreement, no register of workers deemed to be dockworkers has been established, as required by Article 3 of the Convention. The LO therefore considers that the Government is not applying this Article of the Convention and calls on the Government to comply with the long-standing request from the NFT and the Norwegian United Federation of Trade Unions to establish a register of dockworkers.

The Committee considers it useful to recall that the registration of dockworkers, under Article 3 of the Convention, originally responded to the need to ensure the permanent availability of qualified personnel for an occupation requiring versatility and training in modern cargo-handling techniques. In turn, membership for the workers concerned required them to be offered sufficient guarantees of employment and income. This balance could only be achieved by establishing registers of workers in order to implement a means of regularization of employment and stabilization of income, or to distribute the labour force in the ports. The Committee has always taken the view that the registration of dockworkers is merely an alternative to an ideal situation in which dockworkers benefit from or are guaranteed permanent employment. The Committee also recalled that the effectiveness of a means of regularization of employment in ports depends on a number of factors, such as the number of cargo-handling enterprises, the size and layout of the port and the diversity of cargo handled. Modern ports generally have a pool of workers benefiting from regular or even permanent employment, as well as a reserve pool of temporary or casual workers. Thus, the Dock Work Recommendation, 1973 (No. 145), provides for the possibility of separate registers for those in more or less regular employment and those in a reserve pool (paragraph 14) (see General Survey on Dock Work, 2002, paragraphs 112 and following). Lastly, the Committee recalls that the Convention and the Recommendation do not require any particular forms of register, as the form may be determined by national law or practice, depending on local circumstances (see General Survey, paragraph 120).

In the light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effects of the implementation of the collective agreement for ports and terminals in the Port of Drammen, in particular its effects on the employment of the permanent dockworkers associated with the port Administration Office and the reserve pool of workers identified in the previous framework agreement, and possibly in other major ports in the country. The Committee also invites the Government to report on any measures taken by the competent authorities or any initiatives taken by the parties to the collective agreement for ports and terminals concerning the establishment of a register of dockworkers, as requested by the Norwegian Confederation of Trade Unions (LO). Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the LO's observations concerning the exclusion of a category of workers from the definition of dockworkers under the Convention, thereby placing them outside its coverage.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide a general appreciation in its next report on the manner in which the Convention is applied in the country, including, for instance, relevant extracts from reports, particulars of the numbers of dockworkers in the country, possibly disaggregated by type of contract (open-ended, temporary and casual) and of variations in their numbers over time.

Indigenous and tribal peoples

Argentina

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT-RA), received on 23 August 2022 and 1 September 2023), as well as the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA), received on 26 July 2023.

Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention. Indigenous policy, indigenous participation and coordinated and systematic action. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the National Action Plan on Human Rights (PNADH) 2017–20 aimed at increasing coordination between State institutions in order to safeguard the rights of indigenous communities and to elaborate implementing regulations for Act 24.071 of 1992 approving the ratification of the Convention. It notes the Government's statement that the National Institute for Indigenous Affairs (INAI), besides playing an inter-institutional and inter-jurisdictional role, is also involved in coordinating non-State actors in the integrated and autonomous development of indigenous communities. In this connection, the INAI participates in the Inter-ministerial Round Table for Indigenous Peoples (MIMPI), which brings together the technical teams from various state units, with the provincial governments of Salta, Formosa, Chaco, Misiones, Neuquén and Tucumán, on a fortnightly basis. The INAI and the MIMPI have created space for provincial dialogue with indigenous communities in order to generate opportunities that encourage the integrated and autonomous growth of the communities (for example, promoting artisanal crafts, land cultivation, livestock farming and tourism). The Government emphasizes that this methodology has helped it to understand and analyse territorial and indigenous issues and has resulted in better provincial level policy coordination.

The Committee also notes that the INAI has entered into dialogue with the authorities on indigenous peoples' issues or on human rights at provincial level, with a view to ensuring the application of shared principles and standards for the implementation of the Convention within the framework of federalism, taking into account the criteria set out in the Supreme Court decision of 10 December 2013. That judgement establishes that the provinces have sufficient regulatory authority over the rights of indigenous peoples, in so far as this does not imply any contradiction with or lowering of the standards laid down in federal laws or regulations. The Committee notes that the Supreme Court, in a new decision of 28 December 2021 (FRE1168/2015/CS1), reaffirmed this principle and further emphasized that under the Constitution, authority divided between the provinces and the nation in respect of the rights of indigenous peoples is the reflection of a balanced federal regime that is able to take account of the multiple and various local realities in indigenous matters.

Moreover, the Committee notes that Decree No. 672/16 established the Consultative and Participatory Council of the Indigenous People of the Argentine Republic as the instance for indigenous representation and intercultural dialogue under the aegis of Secretariat for Human Rights and Cultural Pluralism of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights. The Council's objectives include: (i) promotion of areas of interaction between the different ministries and public bodies; (ii) adoption of legislative measures for applying the Convention, including on prior consultation and indigenous community property; (iii) implementation of education and health programmes for indigenous peoples; and (iv) redefining indigenous policy with a view to ensuring the participation of the peoples concerned.

Recalling the importance of coordinated and systematic action as a basis to ensure the rights of indigenous peoples enshrined in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to continue to adopt measures to ensure communication and coordination between the federal government and the different provincial governments in respect of implementation of the Convention for which responsibility lies with the provinces. It also requests the Government to: (i) continue to make efforts to adopt regulations for the implementation of Act No. 24.071; (ii) report on the measures and programmes proposed and adopted within the Inter-ministerial Round Table for Indigenous Peoples and their outcomes; and (iii) take the necessary measures to ensure the good functioning of the Council for Indigenous Participation, indicating how often it meets, how many peoples are represented and how it coordinates its action with the different government entities.

Article 3. Human rights. 1. Use of violence at protests. The Committee notes that the CGT-RA and the CTA report in their observations instances of violence and the excessive use of force by the police during indigenous peoples' protests against the constitutional reform of Jujuy Province in 2023. It also observes that the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) referred to the scale of the provincial security forces' response to those demonstrations which resulted in several injuries (IACHR press release of 20 June 2023). The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the allegations of the CGT-RA and the CTA.

The Committee notes the alleged instances of violence with deep concern. The Committee recalls that indigenous and tribal peoples must be able to exercise the right to protest in defence of the rights enshrined in the Convention, without recourse to violence, and the Government must adopt appropriate measures to avoid any type of violence in this regard. Moreover, in the context of public demonstrations, the authorities must only make use of public force where the public order is genuinely threatened and intervention by the police must be proportionate to the threat to public order that it seeks to control. The Committee requests the Government to report on the outcomes of the investigations into the alleged facts and trusts that such investigations will make it possible to determine responsibilities and impose the appropriate penalties.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of all Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD) in its 2023 concluding observations on Argentina expressed concern regarding: (i) the persistence of the practice of racial profiling by the police forces and other law enforcement officials in particular against persons belonging to indigenous peoples; and (ii) the numerous allegations of violence committed by the police and private security companies, including some that resulted in the death of the victim, which disproportionately impact on persons belonging to indigenous peoples (CERD/C/ARG/CO/24-26). The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure a climate free from physical and psychological violence in which indigenous peoples and their representatives may defend the rights guaranteed them under the Convention.

2. Indigenous women. The Committee notes from information provided by the Ministry of Culture, that the Ministry has launched a project entitled "Mujeres de Raíz" (Grass roots Women), which creates spaces for dialogue and support for indigenous women. This accompaniment seeks to fortify the nexus between indigenous women and their community, spreading information on public policies that benefit them and reinforcing their autonomy (Ministry of Culture press release of 5 September 2022).

However, the Committee notes with concern from the CERD concluding observations, that there are certain complaints of abuse and sexual violence suffered by women and girls and committed by Creole men, particularly in the north of the country, such as the case of the women and girls of the Wichí people in Salta. Furthermore, according to the same observations, in October 2022, seven women and six girls and boys of the Mapuche Lafken Winkul Mapu community in Villa Mascardi in the province of Rio Negro were detained incommunicado for at least 72 hours in the context of a violent entry and search raid (CERD/C/ARG/CO/24-26). Regarding the latter case, the Committee notes that according to information available on the website of the Public Prosecutor's Office, the Federal Prosecutor's Office of Bariloche is carrying out investigations in relation to the events that took place in Villa Mascardi. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of these investigations.

Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure the physical and psychological integrity of the women and girls belonging to indigenous communities and, if applicable, to investigate the complaints of sexual violence against them committed.

Article 6. Consultation. In reply to the Committee's previous comments regarding the absence of a regulatory framework for consultation, the Government indicates that it is in the process of regulating the right to prior consultation of indigenous communities and that a preliminary draft law will itself be subject to prior consultation among the indigenous communities of the country through a "consultation on the consultations" process. The Government points out that, while there are no regulations governing the holding of consultations, such consultations have nonetheless been held in the framework of productive and energy projects of national importance. INAI supported indigenous communities during those consultations in their dialogue with the provincial governments and the enterprises responsible for the projects. The Government adds that consultations have been convened by provincial governments, and these were governed by the regulations of the respective jurisdictions. In this connection, the government of Rio Negro province is working with the Indigenous Community Development Council and with the Coordinator of the Mapuche Parliament to formulate a protocol for consultations, and that Parliament is also consulting with the different communities in the province.

The Committee notes that the CGT-RA and the CTA maintain in their observations that the indigenous peoples of the province of Jujuy were not consulted in respect of the constitutional reform of the province, approved in June 2023. According to those organizations, the reform contains provisions which are contrary to the Convention, in particular:

- section 36, which recognizes the right to private property and provides that its exercise shall not challenge the social function or be detrimental to health, safety, freedom or human dignity;
- section 50, which provides that the province shall protect indigenous peoples through appropriate legislation that will lead to their integration, and economic and social progress;
- section 68, which recognizes the full dominion and exclusive ownership of the province over the natural resources existing in its territory against any undue interference by the nation or other provinces, promoting the sustainable use of these resources and common goods for the benefit of human development and the progress of the population;
- section 74, which provides that the State shall promote the investigation, development, production and use of knowledge and tools that apply biotechnology with a view to creating goods and services that improve the quality of life of persons;
- section 94(2), which recognizes land as a labour and production good, and provides that the law shall regulate the administration, disposition and use of public land that may be put to productive use, establishing to that end development regimes that promote territorial development and the socioeconomic interest of the province.

In this regard, the Committee notes from an Opinion of the Attorney General issued on 4 August 2023 (CSJ 1309/2023), that the State filed a claim of unconstitutionality in respect of several provisions of the reformed constitution of Jujuy province, including section 94 cited above, on grounds of contravening Convention No. 169. In his Opinion, the Attorney General considers the Supreme Court competent to pronounce on such a claim. The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the allegations. It therefore has no further information regarding the process of the Jujuy constitutional reform, or whether indigenous peoples are being consulted thereon.

The Committee also notes, from a reading of sections 36, 68, 74 and 94(2) of the reformed Jujuy constitution, that these sections clearly deal with general issues, rather than specific provisions on indigenous peoples or their rights. Nevertheless, the Committee considers that the implementation of the constitution, and of the regulations to be adopted for that purpose, must avoid directly affecting the rights of indigenous peoples recognized under the Convention, specifically in respect of property and land traditionally occupied by these peoples, and as such must be subject to consultation. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the consultation provided for in Article 6 of the Convention is a means of institutionalizing dialogue on questions that affect indigenous peoples, to ensure inclusive development processes, reduce tensions and prevent conflict. Consultations must be undertaken in good faith and allow full expression of the opinions of the peoples concerned, with a view to influencing the outcome of the measures under consultation.

Moreover, with specific reference to section 50 of the reformed constitution of Jujuy, which refers to the adoption of appropriate legislation that will lead to the integration and social and economic progress of indigenous peoples, the Committee wishes to recall that the objective of Convention No. 169 is to replace a focus based on integration with one based on the recognition of the right of indigenous peoples to decide on their own development priorities. Accordingly, this principle must be the basis of all provincial legislation adopted with regard to indigenous peoples.

Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure:

- the adoption of a national regulatory framework for consultation, announced by the Government, which must be subject to prior consultation with the indigenous peoples concerned;
- that consultations under the competence of the provincial governments, as well as any provincial regulations adopted governing such consultations, are held in coordination with the INAI as the institution responsible for ensuring coordinated action in implementing the rights provided under the Convention.

With regard to the reformed constitution of the province of Jujuy, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any law or regulation adopted to give effect to sections 36, 50, 68, 74 and 94(2) of that constitution, in so far as they directly affect the rights of indigenous peoples, are duly subject to consultations with the indigenous peoples of the province, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention.

Article 14. Lands. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Act No. 26.160 of 2006 declaring the emergency regarding the possession and ownership of land traditionally occupied by the indigenous communities entered in the National Register of Indigenous Communities. Act No. 26.160 provides for the suspension of rulings and administrative land eviction orders for an initial period of four years, during which the territorial survey and titling in the name of the communities can take place, under the coordination of the INAI. The Committee notes that this provision has been extended on several occasions due to non-completion of the survey and titling process.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, under Act No. 26.160 and its respective extensions, the territorial, legal, technical and cadastral survey of 479 communities, amounting to approximately 2,983,259 hectares has been completed (24 hectares in Buenos Aires, 2 in Catamarca, 14 in Chaco, 36 in Chubut, 6 in Córdoba, 2 in Entre Ríos, 1 in Formosa, 120 in Jujuy, 6 in La Pampa, 7 in Mendoza, 43 in Misiones, 6 in Neuquén, 51 in Río Negro, 52 in Salta, 5 in San Juan, 7 in Santa Cruz, 29 in Santa Fe, 54 in Santiago del Estero, 1 in Tierra de Fuego and 14 in Tucumán), 467 communities are in the process of being surveyed.

The Committee also notes that Act No. 26.160 was subject to a new extension until November 2023 under Decree 805/2021. The Government also indicates that, under the initiative of the INAI, consultations have taken place with the provinces and with the indigenous territorial organizations to draw up a preliminary draft of a law on community ownership. There are currently several draft laws under debate before the Legislature. Moreover, the Government indicates that the Executive has expressed its willingness to reach a federal agreement that will enable the State and the provinces to come to a consensus on the regulation of community ownership.

The Committee notes from the CGT-RA's observations that the question of the regularization of indigenous lands remains an ongoing issue of concern which has given rise to instances of violence and the eviction of indigenous communities in Patagonia, as well as in the north-east and north-west of the country, which have yet to be clarified.

It also notes that, in its report on its visit to Argentina in 2023, the United Nations Working Group on business and human rights refers to: (i) the legal risk for indigenous communities arising from continuous extensions of Act No. 26.160; (ii) the slow pace of the territorial survey process in indigenous communities; (iii) complaints of violent evictions of indigenous communities to make way for large-scale real estate and resource extraction projects.

The Committee further notes the ruling of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights of 24 November 2020, in the case of the Indigenous Community Members of the Lhaka Honhat (our lands) Association vs. Argentina, in which the Court determines that Argentina does not have an adequate body of regulations in place to secure indigenous peoples' right of community ownership satisfactorily.

The Committee notes with concern the apparent slow pace of the process of territorial survey and the titling of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples, to which the continuous extensions of Act No. 26.160 bear witness. This has given rise to a context of legal uncertainty which imperils respect of the rights of ownership and possession of those peoples over their lands, as recognized under Article 14 of the Convention. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to make every possible effort to complete the process of territorial survey and titling of the indigenous communities of the country provided under Act No. 26-160, in coordination with the INAI and the respective provincial governments. It requests the Government to provide updated information on progress made regarding the survey and regularization (identification, demarcation and titling) of community land by province; and while the process is ongoing, to take the necessary measures to establish mechanisms for the resolution of conflicts related to the occupation of the land between the indigenous peoples and third parties.

Articles 20 and 21. Admission to employment and training programmes. The Committee notes with interest that the National Plan for Indigenous Peoples: "Promote better jobs through integrated employment and training programmes" was adopted by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security, in March 2023. The Committee notes that the preparation of the plan involved consultations with the indigenous peoples in various provinces, as well as an analysis of the difficulties faced by those peoples in the labour market. Such difficulties included: (i) restricted access to employment and training opportunities due to the geographical distance separating the indigenous communities from the urban centres where the employment offices and training institutions are located; (ii) the institutions and local actors lack and understanding of cultural differences, resulting not only in a scarcity of offers, but also in persistent discriminatory attitudes towards the indigenous peoples; (iii) training and employment programmes poorly aligned with the specific needs of the indigenous communities; (iv) communication problems due to the predominant use, particularly among indigenous women, of indigenous languages; and (v) institutional weakness and poor access to technical assistance activities for indigenous communities. To overcome these challenges, the Plan includes actions to promote the inclusion of indigenous peoples, such as working with indigenous organizations to prepare vocational training proposals, taking account of the need to make entry conditions and requirements more flexible; strengthening employment offices in indigenous communities; and the provision of cash allowances to promote and maintain participation by highly vulnerable indigenous persons in vocational and employment training activities.

The Committee notes, according to the statistical information included in the Plan, that in the period from January 2015 to June 2021, a total of 4,731 indigenous persons took part in labour market integration programmes, 8,555 in vocational training activities and 899 in self-employment programmes. The Committee notes that a mandatory quota of 25 per cent indigenous participation was applied in respect of vocational training and employment programmes provided by the National Institute of Agricultural Technology.

The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the results of the measures implemented under the National Plan for Indigenous Peoples, giving examples of vocational training and labour market integration programmes formulated in cooperation with indigenous communities. It also requests the Government to provide, to the extent possible, updated statistical information on the number of persons belonging to indigenous peoples who are unemployed or under-employed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 6 of the Convention. Consultation. Regulatory framework. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the Act on the electoral system (Act No. 26) of 30 June 2010. The Act provides that the exercise of political rights within the framework of intercultural democracy includes the right of indigenous people to prior consultation (section 4). Section 39 recognizes prior consultation as a mechanism of direct and participatory democracy in relation to the implementation of projects, works or activities in relation to the exploitation of natural resources. In the case of the participation of indigenous peoples, consultation shall take place respecting their own standards and procedures. The Act also provides that the Plurinational Electoral Body, through the Intercultural Service for the Strengthening of Democracy (SIFDE), shall observe and support processes of prior consultation in coordination with the organizations and institutions involved (section 40). The conclusions, agreements or decisions adopted in the context of prior consultation are not binding, but shall be taken into consideration by the authorities and representatives at the corresponding decision-making levels (section 39). The results of the consultation shall be communicated and disseminated through an accompanying report prepared by the SIFDE (section 41).

While noting that the Act on the electoral system provides for a general procedure for consultation, the Committee once again observes that the Government has not provided information on progress in the process of adopting legislation on the prior consultation of indigenous peoples, in relation to which the Committee noted previously that a process of dialogue had been undertaken with indigenous and Afro-Bolivian organizations.

The Committee recalls the importance of establishing a regulatory framework for consultation with the peoples covered by the Convention as a priority, and of carrying out prior consultations with indigenous peoples for the development of such a mechanism (see general observation, 2018). In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of a regulatory framework for prior consultation, in consultation with the peoples covered by the Convention. In the meantime, it requests the Government to provide examples of consultation processes that have been accompanied and monitored by the Intercultural Service for the Strengthening of Democracy of the Plurinational Electoral Body, and on the results of these processes.

Articles 6, 15(2) and 16. Consultation. Construction of a highway in the Isíboro Sécore Indigenous Territory and National Park (TIPNIS). For several years, the Committee has been referring to the project to construct a highway affecting the TIPNIS and, in this regard, has requested the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the indigenous peoples affected by the project. In its previous comment, it noted Act No. 969 of 13 August 2017 on the protection and sustainable and comprehensive development of the Isíboro Sécore Indigenous Territory and National Park (TIPNIS), under the terms of which activities related to the construction of highways in the TIPNIS which seek to improve or maintain the rights of indigenous peoples to freedom of movement shall be designed in a participatory manner with the indigenous peoples (section 9).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2022 the authorities in Beni collected proposals for the construction of a road to connect Beni and Cochabamba, as a result of which the idea was developed of the construction of a route passing directly through the TIPNIS. The first of the three branches of the route (Tramo I Villa Tunari – Isinuta), which is the responsibility of the Cochabamba region, is at an advanced stage and has reached the Monte Grande del Apere community, near San Ignacio de Moxos. In this regard, the Committee observes that the Government has not provided information on the consultations carried out with the indigenous peoples affected by this road project.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the indigenous peoples whose lands have been or may be affected by the construction of the Beni-Cochabamba road or any other construction that goes through the TIPNIS are consulted in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. In this regard, it requests the Government to indicate whether, as a consequence of this road project, indigenous communities have been transferred from their lands and, if so, to provide information on the procedures established to obtain the consent of those communities to such a transfer.

Article 14. Land. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to provide information on progress in the processes of issuing titles and registering lands for the peoples covered by the Convention. The Committee notes with concern the continuing absence of information on this subject. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the peoples covered by the Convention are able to rely on titles to the lands that they traditionally occupy. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard, and on the surface area of the lands that have been registered for the peoples covered by the Convention, with an indication of the number of communities or peoples who have benefited and their location. It further requests the Government to provide information on the bodies responsible for resolving issues relating to the lands of indigenous peoples and for following up the respective adjudication processes.

Article 15(2). Consultation in relation to mining activities. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has not provided information on the measures adopted for the revision of section 207 of the Act on minerals and metallurgy (No. 535) of 2014, which exempts mining prospection and exploration operations from the requirement of consultation, as well as administrative mining contracts for the rehabilitation of sites and lease and shared risk contracts, as pre-established rights.

The Committee also notes the special report of 2021 of the Ombudsperson on the violation of rights through mining activities in the Leco "Santa Rosa" indigenous community of the municipality of Guanay in the Department of La Paz. The report refers to the complaint lodged in July 2020 by members of the Leco Santa Rosa indigenous community of the municipality of Guanay concerning gold-mining activities reportedly undertaken in their lands in violation of their collective rights. According to the report, mining activities have been carried out by a private enterprise without having engaged in the respective prior consultations on the grounds that the enterprise held pre-established mining rights and that, in accordance with section 207 of Act No. 535 prior consultation is not applicable in cases of the adjustment of mining rights. In a press release dated 9 February 2022, the Ombudsperson indicated that he had verified that the mining activities carried out in the municipality of Guanay are in violation of various rights of the Leco Santa Rosa indigenous community and that there are no guarantees of consultations being held in practice in pre-established mining areas.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that Article 15(2) of the Convention establishes the requirement to consult indigenous peoples before undertaking or permitting any programmes for the exploration or exploitation of natural resources pertaining to their lands. The Committee observes that, even in situations in which mining rights are pre-established, whether or not they are prior to the Convention, prior consultation must occur on each occasion that a new activity is envisaged for the exploration or exploitation of subsoil resources in lands traditionally occupied by the peoples covered by the Convention for the purpose of determining whether the interests of the indigenous peoples would be prejudiced and the extent of such prejudice. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to amend section 207 of the Act on mining and metallurgy so that: (i) mining exploration or exploitation projects in lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples are not exempt from the requirement of prior consultation; and (ii) in cases of pre-established mining rights in such lands, prior consultations are held on every occasion that new exploration or exploitation activities of resources are planned which may affect the rights of the peoples covered by the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 31 August 2023. It also notes the observations of the Authentic Trade Union Federation of Honduras (FASH), received on 7 November 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Follow up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 109th Session, May–June 2021)

The Committee notes that the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in its conclusions requested the Government to: (a) ensure the implementation of the Convention in a climate of social dialogue and understanding, free from violence and intimidation; (b) conduct, without delay, independent investigations and proceedings against perpetrators of criminal acts against indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and their representatives; (c) establish appropriate consultation and participation procedures in line with the Convention; (d) implement without delay the Convention in law and practice, based on the extensive consultations held with the social partners, and in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention, on the requirement to consult indigenous peoples; (e) continue to take effective measures to improve the conditions of work of Misquito dive-fishers; and (f) ensure the awareness of rights and access to justice of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to accept an ILO direct contacts mission (hereinafter, the mission).

The Committee notes that the mission was undertaken in May 2022 and that it addressed the subjects of violence and impunity, consultation and participation, the situation of the Misquito people and lands. The Committee notes that the mission heard with deep concern the description by the representatives of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples of their situation of abandonment, exclusion and marginalization, aggravated by the historical structural weaknesses of the State, including in areas from which it is absent, which is prejudicial to respect for the rights of these peoples. The mission took note that the new Government authorities have expressed their full will to establish a climate of respect for the rights set out in the Convention and to fulfil the undertakings given to the mission in the areas referred to above. The Committee welcomes the will expressed by the Government in this regard and hopes that the implementation of the mission's recommendations, as well as the comments set out below, will contribute to finding solutions to the difficulties raised in relation to the application of the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Human rights. The Committee observes that, within the context of the mission, the competent authorities recognized and expressed their commitment to combating the situation of violence, the weakness of systems of protection and the lack of an adequate judicial response. The mission recommended the implementation without delay of exhaustive investigations, prosecutions and the imposition of penalties on both the instigators and the perpetrators who are guilty of acts of violence against indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples; the strengthening of the justice system, and particularly the Special Prosecutor for the Protection of Ethnic Minorities and the Cultural Heritage, with the allocation of sufficient personnel and resources to fulfil its mandate (it also recommended that the prosecutors, with specific knowledge of the situation of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples, can also investigate or participate in investigations into crimes against the lives of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples); and the strengthening of the national protection system, with the guarantee of universal access and rapid and effective responses for members of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples who are at risk.

The Committee notes the provision by the Government in its report of statistics on complaints filed with the Special Prosecutor for the Protection of Ethnic Minorities and the Cultural Heritage between 2021 and 2023, showing, among the various crimes, that in 2021 there were 26 threats, one murder and seven injuries; in 2022, there were 11 threats, three murders and two injuries; and in 2023, there were 15 threats. The Committee observes that murders and injuries were not reported in 2022 and 2023.

The Committee emphasizes that the absence of convictions against those guilty of acts of violence results in de facto impunity, which aggravates the climate of violence and insecurity, and which is extremely prejudicial to the exercise of the rights of indigenous peoples. The Committee also recalls the importance of prosecutions being completed rapidly, as slow justice can become justice denied. Under these conditions, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to give effect to the recommendations of the mission. The Committee also firmly urges the Government in relation to the specific acts of violence that it noted in its previous comment, to: (1) investigate them, establish responsibilities and punish those responsible for the kidnapping and disappearance of four members of Garifuna community of El Triunfo de la Cruz on 18 July 2020, and the murder in December 2020 of José Adán Medina, a member of the Tolupán indigenous community, and Félix Vásquez, an environmental activist of the Lenca community; and (2) identify and punish the instigators of the murder of Berta Cáceres (former President of the Civic Council of Popular and Indigenous Organizations of Honduras (COPINH)).

Articles 6 and 7. Appropriate consultation and participation procedures. The Committee notes that the mission: (1) noted with concern that the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples still do not have a formal dialogue mechanism with the authorities in which they can express their demands, priorities and concerns on a regular basis; (2) observed that all the parties emphasized the importance of the establishment a legal consultation framework in accordance with the Convention; (3) took note positively of the commitment made by the Government to establish a technical working group so that the Inter-Institutional Commission for the Affairs of Honduran Indigenous Peoples can draw up preliminary draft legislation on prior, free and informed consultation; and (4) trusted that the Government would take the necessary measures to fully integrate from the beginning the representatives of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples in this process and for the preliminary draft legislation to be the subject of full consultations with the representatives of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) in accordance with the commitments made as a result of the mission's visit, the Secretariat of Labour and Social Security (SETRASS) agreed with the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) the development of a project for a comprehensive strategy of training and the promotion of interaction with indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples with a focus on rights and social participation (April-December 2023). The objective of the project is to support the policy of a dialogue strategy to establish and develop the mechanism for the implementation of free, prior and informed consultation with the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples, and to define forms of participation both with the representatives of the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and with State institutions with responsibilities and functions in areas related to the application of the Convention; (ii) the operational support of the UNDP is supplemented by the assistance provided by the ILO for the development of two products, namely: Product 1: Enabled the process of institutionalized social dialogue with the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples for the development of a plan of action for the implementation of Convention No. 169; Product 2: Strengthened the capacities of the SETRASS for the promotion of interaction mechanisms for the resolution of disputes relating to lands; and (iii) through the specific activities of both products, it is intended to give effect to several of the mission's recommendations, some of which are directly related to the creation of mechanisms through which the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples can express their demands and priorities to the authorities.

The Government adds that: (1) the Secretariat for Social Development (SEDESOL) indicated that the Secretariat for Human Rights has worked on the legal analysis to control the compliance with the Convention of the proposed preliminary draft legislation on free, prior and informed consultation; (2) in the analysis, it was found that the implementation of the draft legislation would constitute progress in relation to human rights through the presence of a mechanism to guarantee consent and prior, free and informed consultation; (3) it was emphasized that the draft text was drawn up in 2014–15, for which reason various modifications are required; (4) the Office of the Public Prosecutor, through the Special Prosecutor for the Protection of Ethnic Minorities and the Cultural Heritage, indicated that action has been taken in the courts against officials for not having practiced prior, free and informed consultation with the members of communities in which projects are being undertaken that affect their lands, territories and natural resources; (5) in 2021, public servants were trained through the modular updating course on the role of prior, free and informed consent in the reduction of disputes in the mining sector, and since 2022 an inter-institutional dialogue mechanism has been developed and strengthened through the National Forum for the Prevention and Treatment of Social Conflict; and (6) through this mechanism, work has been undertaken on the strengthening of capacities relating to the importance of reinforcing and engaging in processes of consultation and prior, free and informed consent through existing channels.

The Committee notes the indication by the COHEP that: (1) since the ratification of the Convention, no measures have been taken to establish a serious and responsible consultation mechanism, and the social partners have not been consulted on that subject; (2) the consultations that have been undertaken have been carried out in accordance with the Act on open councils of 1919, which called for the holding of popular consultations with the population at the municipal level, which implies that consultations have not been held with the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples in accordance with the Convention and the draft legislation drawn up in 2018 was not subject to appropriate consultations; (3) the process of drawing up new draft legislation on consultation in accordance with the Convention should be the priority of the Secretariat of Labour and Social Security and it is important that before the text is forwarded to the National Congress it is referred to the Economic and Social Council for consultation and approval by the social partners; and (4) no action or initiative by the present Government is known for the establishment of an inter-institutional dialogue forum with indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples.

While welcoming the commitments made by the Government in line with the mission's recommendations, the Committee observes that consultation processes do not appear to have been undertaken with indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. The Committee trusts that the implementation of the project referred to by the Government, with UNDP support, for the establishment of a comprehensive strategy for training and the promotion of interaction mechanisms with indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples will result in the development and establishment of a mechanism for full, free and informed consultation with indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. The Committee recalls the great importance of the legislative framework proposed for prior consultation being subject to a process of full, free and informed consultation with all indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. In this regard, it encourages the Government to develop a social dialogue mechanism through which it can share with the social partners the proposal for a legal framework for consultation agreed with the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples.

Until such a consultation framework is adopted, the Committee recalls the requirement for the Government to made every effort to consult the peoples covered by the Convention in relation to any legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly and once again requests the Government to provide information on the consultation processes carried out and their outcomes.

Articles 8 and 12. Access to justice. The Committee observes that the mission recommended the Government to take measures to ensure the presence of an adapted system in all regions to ensure the effective access of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples to justice. In this regard, the Government provides information on the on-site visits made by the Secretariat of State in the Human Rights Office to approach communities whose rights have been violated with the objective of identifying violations of rights, threats and situations of risk, providing support and protection, analysing the objectives and challenges for their effective protection, and developing state responses with the competent authorities (for example, the visit to the Garifuna community of Punta Gorda in light of their forced transfer; to the Maya-Chortí community of Azacualpa, La Unión and Copán in light of threats and the criminal charges against their defenders; support and capacity-building for the Negro English-speaking community of Crawfish Rock on the national system for the protection of human rights). The Government also refers to the legal analyses by the Secretariat on controlling compliance with the Convention, particularly in relation to forced transfers, draft legislation and development projects.

The Committee notes the reference in the COHEP's observations to the preliminary observations of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights on its visit to Honduras (in April 2023), according to which there is a generalized lack of trust in the institutions of the justice system and there is insufficient human rights training of justice operators from ethnic and racial perspective.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to facilitate the access to justice of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and to develop capacity-building programmes for indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples so that they are aware of their rights and the means of asserting them; and the competent authorities to continue undertaking on-site visits with a view to approaching communities whose rights have suffered violations and providing them with legal support and personal protection when they are subject to threats. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the training activities undertaken for the police and judicial authorities on the scope of the rights of indigenous peoples guaranteed by the Convention.

Article 14. Lands. The Committee notes that the mission observed with concern that, in addition to their historical claims, which have still not been resolved, the indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples are also confronted with the occupation of their lands by third parties, including drug traffickers. Disputes relating to lands are not only at the root of various situations of conflict and violence, but have also resulted in criminal action against defenders of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. The mission emphasized that land recognition and clarification measures and the establishment of land titles are important means of reducing conflicts in this respect. The mission encouraged the Government to continue taking measures in response to the claims of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and indicated that in order to address the issue of lands more effectively, it is necessary to: take measures to clarify the areas of competence of State institutions at the national and local levels in relation to issuing land title; ensure improved coordination between such institutions; and allocate the necessary budgets to them for the clarification of land-related issues for indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that 14 technical forums have been established at the national level to respond to problems related to the lands occupied by indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples and that a protocol has been developed on addressing situations of conflict and forced transfers with the objective of shedding light on and taking articulated follow-up action in cases of transfers.

The Committee notes with concern the indication that land disputes give rise to violence affecting indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. In the same way as the mission, the Committee emphasizes the importance of coordinating and clarifying the areas of competence of State institutions in relation to the delivery of land titles for indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the effective protection of the rights of ownership and possession of indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples over the lands which they traditionally occupy and to provide information on the processes of clarifying and issuing titles to lands.

Articles 20, 24 and 25. Protection of the rights of the Misquito people. The Committee notes that, as it indicated in previous comments, the mission received testimony concerning serious accidents, sometimes fatal, which had occurred during dive-fishing activities, the difficult conditions of work faced by dive-fishers and the inadequate assistance received by injured dive-fishers and their families. The mission received information from the Government on progress in relation to: (1) the training of 11 labour inspectors in subjects of concern to dive-fishers and fishers so that they can inspect their conditions of work in port and on the high seas; (2) the organization of courses on safe dive-fishing for fishers and employers; and (3) the recruitment of a labour prosecutor to provide assistance to the Misquito people in relation to access to justice. The mission urged the authorities to make every effort without delay to: (1) ensure the effective operation of the labour inspection services, not only in port but also on the high seas; (2) ensure that dive-fishers have formal contracts so that they can have access to their labour rights and social protection; (3) take measures to ensure the provision to injured dive-fishers of compensation or benefits which cover their needs; (4) provide training to dive-fishers on safe fishing methods; (5) reinforce the Inter-Institutional Commission for Problem Prevention and Assistance in Dive-Fishing (CIAPEB) so that it can ensure the implementation of the regulations and address the demands of dive-fishers; and (6) make available a sufficient number of hyperbaric chambers, with specialized personnel for their correct use, located in easily accessible areas.

The Committee notes the Government's recognition that the Misquito people has suffered marginalization, discrimination and violence as a result of the absence of the State, the failure to implement comprehensive public policies, and the low level or absence of enforcement and protection of their labour rights, which has resulted in precarious working conditions with a serious deterioration in their environment and opportunities for economic and social development, and serious consequences for their mental and physical health. During the mission, the authorities of the SETRASS reaffirmed their commitment to the implementation of practical measures to take into special consideration the needs and situation in practice of the Misquito people and guarantee their labour rights. With a view to reducing the gap that currently separates indigenous and Afro-Honduran peoples from access to decent work, the SETRASS set out a series of commitments with a view to improving the labour conditions of the Misquito people through short-term action in the fields of inspection, occupational health and safety and social welfare. The SETRASS, through the Subsecretariat for Labour Relations, undertook an initiative in April 2023 for the strengthening of the labour situation of the Honduran Misquito area, and particularly in the area of the municipality of Puerto Lempira. A work team participated in the initiative composed of the General Directorates of labour inspection, employment, social welfare and the Office of the Labour Prosecutor, which worked to strengthen the presence and broaden the framework of action by the SETRASS in the region so that it can provide the Misquito people and the population in general with access to a broad range of services that are normally located in the central headquarters or in the nearest regional offices, such as in Ceiba and Trujillo. The team held meetings with Government institutions and members of the community in Puerto Lempira and Kaurika to establish alliances and take common action: including, for example, training on the implementation of occupational safety and health regulations in underwater dive-fishing, the discussion on decompression sickness and the implementation of socio-economic studies on a sample of two dive-fishing families, one of an injured dive-fisher and one of the family of an active dive-fisher in the community.

With reference to labour inspection activities, the Government makes reference to the following: the establishment of joint procedures with the personnel of the hospital of Puerto Lempira for the referral of cases of employment accidents of dive-fishers for further attention and the calculation of compensation payments by the SETRASS; the assessment of two dive-fishers who had suffered from inadequate decompression for the delivery of the respective medical diagnosis; accompanying normal inspections by labour inspectors from Puerto Lempira to approve the action taken and the documentation required in each of the cases set out in the Labour Inspection Act; the establishment of channels of communication and procedures for use between the Puerto Lempira and La Ceiba offices for the inclusion of the local office in Roatán in the investigation of administrative complaints by workers. The Government adds that a public pardon was issued as part of the action to give effect to the ruling in the case of the Misquitos v. Honduras and the recognition was coordinated of responsibility for violations of the human rights of 42 Misquito indigenous persons. Work is also being undertaken on socio-economic measures for the provision of cash transfers to dive-fishers with disabilities and their family members and the establishment of offices for disabled Misquito dive-fishers.

The Committee welcomes the recognition by the Government of the importance of taking measures to remedy the difficult situation faced by the Misquito people and the need to take specific measures, particularly to ensure that Misquito dive-fishers benefit from labour rights, as indicated by the mission. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to improve the working conditions of Misquito dive-fishers, including through the reinforcement of the presence and activities of the labour inspection services.

Finally, the Committee encourages the Government to continue having recourse to ILO technical assistance in relation to all the matters raised.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the National Confederation of Private Business Institutions (CONFIEP) received in 2021. The Committee also notes the new observations of CONFIEP, received on 31 August 2023, and the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), received on 15 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article (3) of the Convention. Human rights and fundamental rights. 1. Judicial proceedings with respect to the murder of indigenous trade union leaders in Alto Tamaya-Saweto. For a number of years the Committee has been asking the Government to take the necessary steps to investigate and punish those responsible for the violent murders of four indigenous leaders from the Asháninka indigenous community of Saweto (department of Ucayali) in September 2014, after the leaders had reported illegal logging in their community. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that on 23 February 2023 the Collegiate Penal Court of Ucayali handed down a ruling convicting five suspected perpetrators of the murders of aggravated premeditated homicide and sentencing them to 28 years' imprisonment.

The Committee notes that the CATP states in its observations that: (1) on 29 August 2023, the First Criminal Appeals Chamber of the High Court of Ucayali, in response to an appeal submitted by the accused, decided to quash the decision of the criminal court which had convicted the accused and ordered new oral proceedings to be initiated; (2) in its ruling the High Court established that the lower court ruling did not fulfil the requirements for the assessment of circumstantial evidence and contained apparent motivation which should be corrected in oral proceedings; (3) the High Court also highlighted the fact that the proceedings were flawed because of a deficient investigation which had failed to furnish sufficient evidence to link the accused to the acts under investigation; (4) there were excessive delays in the investigation of the crime by the prosecution service and the necessary procedures were not implemented to locate all the perpetrators of the murders despite information having been supplied by witnesses; and (5) the information on the proceedings was withdrawn from the prosecution service without administrative proceedings having been opened against the prosecutors who had been in charge of the case.

Lastly, the CATP reiterates that the motive for the events of the case was illicit logging facilitated by the habilitación system in the area, which involves subjecting indigenous persons to forced labour and obliging them to provide the operator of the system with wood in exchange for the provision of foodstuffs, under an endless scheme of debt bondage. The CATP also claims that the perpetrators of the crime have not been arrested but are still in the vicinity of the community and continue to engage in illicit activities on the territory of the Saweto community, thereby creating a constant situation of insecurity for the families of the victims and the community; that some members of the victims' families who moved to the city continue to receive threats; and that the chief spokesperson for the families of the murdered leaders was the victim of reprisals in the city of Pucallpa.

The Committee deeply deplores the fact that, ten years after the murders of the indigenous leaders in Alto Tamaya–Saweto, the criminal proceedings which would enable all the perpetrators and instigators of these murders to be punished have still not been concluded. The Committee recalls the importance that it attaches to the expeditious conclusion of judicial proceedings since justice delayed amounts to justice denied. The Committee also notes with concern the new allegations regarding threats and assaults on the personal integrity of members of the victims' families. While recalling that a climate of violence and impunity constitutes a serious obstacle to the exercise of the rights of indigenous peoples established in the Convention, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the urgent measures which are needed to: (i) protect the life, physical safety and psychological well-being of the members of the families of the murdered indigenous leaders; (ii) provide all the necessary resources to ensure that all the perpetrators and/or instigators of these murders are prosecuted and punished once and for all.

The Committee also notes with regret that the Government has not provided the requested information on progress in the investigations into the complaints concerning illegal logging and the cases of forced labour linked to the habilitación system in the department of Ucayali. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information in this respect.

2. Protection of indigenous human rights defenders. The Committee notes that the Government, in reply to its comments on the need to protect the integrity of indigenous peoples and their leaders in exercising the defence of their rights, reports the adoption in 2022 of the Protocol on prosecution action to prevent and investigate crimes against human rights defenders, the aims of which are to: (i) establish procedures to prevent criminal conduct related to damaging the legal assets of these rights defenders; (ii) define guidelines for the investigation of crimes against rights defenders; and (iii) define procedures for the care and protection of rights defenders, including their family members and witnesses. The protocol includes indigenous peoples in the category of human rights defenders.

The Government also indicates that, as part of the inter-sectoral mechanism for the protection of human rights defenders, the Register of risk situations faced by human rights defenders was established. The register makes it possible to collect, analyse and manage information on high-risk areas for the work of human rights defenders and the most frequent patterns of attack, in order to implement prevention and protection measures. The inter-sectoral mechanism can be activated through an early warning procedure which allows the adoption of urgent measures to eliminate or reduce the risks faced by human rights defenders. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights (Ministry of Justice) has promoted the setting up of regional committees for the protection of human rights defenders in order to address and follow up on risk situations for rights defenders who are faced with illicit activities such as drug trafficking, illegal logging and land trafficking. As at 2023, three regional committees had been established in the regions of Madre de Dios, Ucayali and San Martín. The Ministry of Justice has also conducted high-level visits to areas considered high-risk, such as Ucayali, Huánuco, Piura and Madre de Dios. In this context, the Ministry has met indigenous representatives from the Peruvian rainforest in order to conduct a dialogue on making progress on the protection of human rights defenders.

The Committee notes that CONFIEP states in its observations that the increase in illegal and informal activities such as illegal logging and mining within the territories of indigenous peoples in the country is a source of the utmost concern, particularly because the indigenous peoples are being threatened in this context while defending their territories and the environment. CONFIEP adds that the Government only provides for reactive measures with respect to human rights defenders, and so it only activates an alert or takes action after a harmful incident has occurred.

The Committee also notes the information from the Ombuds Office regarding the murder of the indigenous leader Santiago Contoricón in April 2023 after reporting the existence of illegal activities in the Asháninka territory in the province of Satipo. It also notes that in a joint communication issued on 30 November 2023, four ministries reported the murder of the indigenous leader Quinto Inuma Alvarado, apu (chief) of the indigenous community of Santa Rosillo de Yanayacu (region of San Martín) when he was returning to his community. Quinto Inuma Alvarado was an indigenous environmental defender who, according to the official newspaper El Peruano, was an activist against illegal logging. According to the communication, the national police is undertaking a thorough investigation of this crime.

The Committee further notes that according to the report entitled Observations on the human rights situation in the context of the protests in Peru, published on 19 October 2023 by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, there are various testimonies that during the national protests that occurred between December 2022 and September 2023: (i) there was an excessive use of force by the police against indigenous persons in regions outside the capital; and (ii) there were stigmatizing speeches and racist harassment inciting violence against demonstrators belonging to indigenous communities, particularly indigenous women. The Committee also notes that, according to the report published in 2023 by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights concerning the human rights situation in Peru in the context of the social protests, the protests initiated in December 2022 were mostly driven by indigenous peoples in the regions of Apurímac, Ayacucho, Puno and Arequipa, where the highest numbers of victims of violence were recorded.

The Committee notes with deep concern this information indicating the persistence of acts of violence and attempts against the life of indigenous persons in the context of defence of their rights.

While commending the various measures adopted by the Government to prevent and investigate acts of violence and protect the integrity of indigenous human rights defenders, including in remote areas, the Committee takes note with deep concern of the persistence of such acts and therefore strongly urges the Government to intensify its efforts to guarantee a climate free of any kind of violence for indigenous peoples and their defenders. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to prevent, investigate and punish not only the excessive use of force by public law enforcement bodies against indigenous persons in the context of protests in defence of their rights but also the use of racist speeches inciting violence. The Committee also requests the Government to strengthen the inter-sectoral mechanism for the protection of human rights defenders, in particular to protect indigenous rights defenders who are faced with illicit activities such as illegal logging and mining in the Amazon region.

Article 6. Consultation. In reply to the observations of CONFIEP on the need to follow up on agreements reached as a result of consultations, the Government indicates that such follow-up action is taken through the Standing Multisectoral Committee for the Application of the Right to Consultation, attached to the Ministry of Culture, in which national indigenous peoples' organizations participate. The Ministry of Culture also provides assistance to entities that promote consultations on key points of agreements (beneficiaries, activities to be performed and related deadlines, source of verification, and so on). As at September 2023, a total of 1,155 agreements had been processed by the technical secretariat of the Multisectoral Committee, corresponding to 45 consultation processes. The Government also indicates that between July 2021 and April 2023 the Directorate for Prior Consultation trained 4,570 public officials and indigenous persons.

The Committee notes that the Ombuds Office of Peru, in the annex to its report published on 28 September 2023 relating to the fourth cycle of the universal periodic review, refers to the lack of regulations covering the holding of consultations with indigenous peoples on legislative measures.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking steps to ensure the effective implementation of processes of consultation with the indigenous peoples and requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the Standing Multisectoral Committee for the Application of the Right to Consultation, explaining the manner in which the aforementioned Committee follows up on agreements and takes action in cases of non-compliance with agreements concluded in the consultation processes. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the applicable procedure for consulting indigenous peoples on measures which may affect them directly.

Articles 7 and 15. Consultation and impact assessment. Mining projects. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, further to the adoption of Ministerial Decision No. 254-2021-MINEM/DM, the body responsible for implementing consultations in the mining sector is the General Office of Social Management (OGGS) at the Ministry of Energy and Mining. As at 2023, the OGGS has carried out 34 consultation processes, of which 27 correspond to mining exploration projects and 7 to exploitation projects. The Committee notes that, under section 3 of the Decision, the consultation process can begin once the corresponding environmental certification has been issued by the Ministry of the Environment and before the mining concession is authorized. The OGGS will proceed to identify whether there are indigenous peoples whose rights might be affected only after approval of the environmental management instrument, which must include information from the mining operator on the possible impact on collective rights. The Committee also notes that the Ombuds Office, in its report published on 28 September 2022 relating to the fourth cycle of the universal periodic review, indicates that the Government has not guaranteed any consultation of indigenous peoples during the environmental impact assessment stage on measures which may affect them directly.

The Committee recalls that, under Article 7(3) of the Convention, governments must ensure that, whenever appropriate, studies are carried out, in cooperation with the peoples concerned, to assess the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact on them of planned development activities. The Committee considers that, in order for the consultation process to be full and indigenous peoples to have all the necessary information to take an informed decision, the cooperation of these peoples must be ensured with regard to both the environmental impact assessment and the assessment of the social, spiritual and cultural impact of the project in question.

The Committee also notes the detailed observations of CONFIEP regarding the implementation of prior consultation in the mining sector. In this regard, the Committee notes CONFIEP's claim that there is no clarity regarding the way in which the indigenous peoples to be consulted are identified or regarding the way in which the impact is determined; nor is there any clear framework on how to proceed when indigenous peoples refuse to participate in consultations.

The Committee requests the Government to take steps to identify and address the difficulties which continue to arise in the implementation of consultation processes in the mining sector and requests it to provide information on:

- how provision is made to secure the cooperation of the indigenous peoples in assessing the social, spiritual, cultural and environmental impact of mining exploration or exploitation projects which may affect their rights;
- the criteria used by the Ministry of Energy and Mining to determine which indigenous peoples must be consulted with regard to a project; and
- the measures taken to inform indigenous peoples regarding the importance of consultation and to promote their participation in these processes.

Article 14. Lands. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information on progress regarding processes for the identification, demarcation and titling of the lands traditionally occupied by the peoples covered by the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Ombuds Office emphasizes in its report of 28 September 2022 that there are some 1,700 native and campesino (peasant farming) communities for which land titling is pending, and refers to the need to simplify existing administrative procedures for the legal and physical regularization of the communities. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations on Peru, expressed concern at the lack of legal certainty regarding the titling of indigenous territories and at the high levels of pollution in these territories from hydrocarbons and minerals (CCPR/C/PER/CO/6).

The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to move forward in the processes for the identification, demarcation and regularization of the lands traditionally occupied by the peoples covered by the Convention in the various regions of the country, and requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1980)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union "Solidarność", received on 30 August 2021 raising issues addressed by the Committee below, as well as the Government's reply thereon.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. National policy concerning nursing services and nursing personnel. Consultations with social partners. The Committee notes that the Government informs of the adoption on 15 October 2019 of the "Long-term State Policy for the Development of Nursing and Midwifery in Poland" (hereinafter "State Policy"). Its objective is to ensure access to high quality nursing and midwifery care by increasing the number of nurses and midwives in the Polish healthcare system. In this regard, it envisages the adoption of measures to motivate persons to enter into the profession, halt their economic migration and retaining nurses and midwives, including those acquiring retirement rights. According to information available in the government's website, the State Policy envisages the adoption of measures to improve the working conditions of nurses and midwives; determine the actual number of nurses and the number of midwives in the health care system; and develop mechanisms to motivate medical entities with an agreement with the National Health Fund to define minimum employment standards. With regard to the conditions of remuneration of nursing personnel, the Government refers to the introduction of several amendments to the Act of 8 June 2017 on the manner of determining the lowest base remuneration of employees in medical professions employed in medical entities (hereinafter "Act of 8 June 2017"). Changes were introduced to the annex to the Act of 8 June 2017 related to the different professional groups of nurses and midwives and work factors applicable to the determination of their lowest base salary (Act of 13 September 2018). Moreover, the base amount on the basis of which the lowest base remuneration is calculated, was increased from Polish zloty (PLN)3,900 (approximately US$897.31) to PLN4,200 (US$966.51) (Act of 19 July 2019). In addition, following consultations with employers' and workers' organizations that were reflected in the position of the Tripartite Team for Health Care of 17 March 2021, the requirement for all health entities to achieve the statutory guaranteed levels of base salaries of medical employees took effect on 1 July 2021 (Act of 28 May 2021). The work coefficients for persons employed in nursing or midwifery positions where a bachelor's degree is required was increased from 0.73 to 0.81. Therefore, as of 1 July 2021, the lowest base salary was fixed at PLN4,186 gross (approximately US$963.25) for nurses and midwives employed in positions where a bachelor's degree is required. Moreover, the Government refers to the adoption of the Act of 27 November 2020 amending certain acts in order to ensure health personnel during the declaration of the state of epidemic emergency, which established that medical entities employing nurses or midwives, which obtained an increase in remuneration on the basis of regulations issued pursuant to Act of 27 August 2004 on health care services financed from public funds (section 137 paragraph 2), are obliged to provide them with remuneration in an amount not lower than their remuneration they received on 30 June 2021. This requirement was introduced into the Act at the request of the Polish National Trade Union of Nurses and Midwives. Furthermore, since February 2021, tripartite consultations have been held within the Tripartite Team for Health Projection regarding further amendments to be introduced to the Act of 8 June 2017. During its meetings, it was agreed to continue working on the regulation of minimum remuneration in line with the envisaged increase in health care financing at 7 per cent by 2027. Lastly, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that, in the framework of the project "Development of nursing competences" a campaign was launched to promote the nursing and midwifery profession. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the content and the impact of the measures taken to ensure that all nursing personnel are provided with employment and working conditions, including in relation to career prospects and remuneration, aimed at attracting individuals to the profession and retaining them in the nursing profession. In particular, it requests to provide information on those measures taken in the framework of the State Policy.

Article 3. Education and training of nursing personnel. The Committee observes that the State Policy envisages the adoption of measures to increase the number of students and to improve the quality of education in the fields of nursing and midwifery as well as changes in the postgraduate education system. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that a six-day paid training leave for nurses and midwives was introduced with the aim of increasing the number of nursing personnel undertaking postgraduate education, and thus improving their professional qualifications and competencies. The possibility of taking up education in the nursing profession in a part-time was also introduced. The Government reports that the Ministry of Health provides annual subsidies for the professional development of nurses and midwives (of a maximum of PLN3,950 per student – approximately US$908.46 – during the entire period of specialization). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the nature, the content and the impact of the measures adopted with a view to ensuring that nursing personnel are provided with education and training appropriate to the exercise of their functions, including those adopted in the framework of the State Policy.

Article 6. Employment conditions of nursing personnel under civil law contracts. The Committee notes that, in its observations, Solidarność argues that a large number of nursing personnel work in healthcare entities on the basis of civil law contracts, which are not covered by the working standards established in the Act of 15 April 2011 on medical activity (hereinafter "Act of 15 April 2011") and the Labour Code. Solidarność points out that, as of 1 July 2020, there were 166,525 nurses working under employment contracts, 47,672 under civil law contracts, and 465 working in the framework of a professional relationship. Solidarność claims that nurses employed on civil law contracts work from 14-hour to 24-hour shifts, often working more than 200 hours per month. Solidarność states that, according to a survey carried out by the Digital Nurses Association, among 2,334 women and 195 men in the nursing and midwifery profession, 42 per cent of the respondents earned between PLN3,001 (approximately US$689.95) and PLN4,500 (approximately US$1,034.65), 35 per cent between PLN2,500 (approximately US$574.93) and PLN3,000 (approximately US$689.93), and 12.1 per cent between PLN4,001 (approximately US$920.04) and PLN5,000 (approximately US$1,149.77). Moreover, 45.4 per cent of the respondents worked in an additional medical entity, most of them due to economic needs. In its reply, the Government indicates that, in accordance with the Act of 15 April 2011 and Act of 15 July 2011 on the profession of nurse and midwife, nurses can be employed in a medical entity under both employment and civil law contracts, and they may also practice the profession in the form of self-employment. Regarding the applicability of the working time limits and standards established in the legislation to nursing personnel under civil law contracts, the Government indicates that a civil law contract concluded by the head of a medical entity with a nurse or other health employee, the subject of which is to provide healthcare services, should guarantee not only the proper functioning of a medical entity but above all the safety of both patients and employed staff. The Government adds that, if concluded contracts lack a guarantee of necessary daily and weekly rest, they do not guarantee the provision of proper care to patients.

In this respect, the Committee observes that the recourse to non-standard forms of work has been increasing globally, resulting in greater use of temporary work, part-time work, temporary agency work and subcontracting, dependent self-employment and disguised employment relationships. It notes that well-designed and regulated non-standard forms of employment (NSFE) can provide flexibility to both employers and workers and facilitate the participation of workers in the labour market by allowing those who wish to freely choose part-time work arrangements to better reconcile work, life and family responsibilities. However, at the same time, certain flexible forms of employment are often associated with greater insecurities for workers and when widespread, workers risk cycling between non-standard jobs and unemployment. Where contractual arrangements have blurred the employment relationship, there is evidence that workers have difficulty exercising their fundamental rights at work, or gaining access to social security benefits and on-the-job training. Employment injury rates are also higher among workers in NSFE. From the employer perspective, short-term cost and flexibility gains from using NSFE may be outweighed by longer-term productivity losses. There is evidence that greater reliance on NSFE tend to underinvest in training, both of temporary and permanent employees, as well as in productivity-enhancing technologies and innovation. The Committee therefore wishes to highlight that it is essential to design policies to improve the quality of non-standard jobs, while helping enterprises to adjust to market volatility and to guarantee that, regardless of their contractual arrangement, workers are provided with adequate and stable earnings, protection from occupational hazards, social protection and the right to organize and bargain collectively (2022 General Survey on Securing decent work for nursing personnel and domestic workers, key actors in the care economy, paragraphs 440, 443 and 1097 (i)). Recalling that the Convention applies to all nursing personnel irrespective of their employment status (Article 1(3) of the Convention), the Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the manner in which it is ensured that nurses and midwives working under civil law contracts enjoy conditions at least equivalent to those of other workers in the country, particularly with regard to the terms and conditions of employment stipulated in Article 6 of the Convention.

Application in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region concerning: the ratio of nursing personnel to the population; the number of persons enrolled in nursing schools; the number of female and male nurses who enter and leave the profession each year; the organization and the operation of all institutions which provide healthcare services; as well as official studies, surveys and reports addressing health workforce issues in the health sector.

Nursing Personnel Convention, 1977 (No. 149) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 2(b) and 5 of the Convention. National policy concerning nursing services and nursing personnel. Working conditions. Working time and remuneration. The Government indicates that in order to eliminate staff imbalances in medical organizations and their units located in rural areas or in workers' settlements, urban-type settlements and cities with a population of up to 50,000 persons, since 2018 the Government has co-financed the expenses of medical workers, including nursing staff (paramedics), posted from cities to rural areas, through one-off compensation payments with the aim of retaining these medical workers on a permanent basis. The Government further indicates that current legislation provides for the differentiation of five levels of remuneration for nursing staff based on the qualifications, complexity and specificity of the professional activity. Moreover, an assessment of the development of workers' skills is carried out as part of their certification for qualification categories, with a corresponding increase in the level of salaries. The Government also reports that obtaining a qualification category or recognition of a high level of specialist training grants a slight increase in salary, but not greater clinical powers. At the federal level, the average salary for nursing staff in each healthcare organization must be at least 100 percent of the average monthly labour income in the region. According to the Government, specific remuneration agreements have been established at the medical organization level. Furthermore, the Government reports that all health care workers have a reduced working time of 39 hours per week (as opposed to 40 hours per week in other sectors).

Depending on the complexity of the work, additional social benefits are granted in the form of reduced working hours by a percentage (36, 33, 30, 24 hours per week) and, in the case of employees working under harmful conditions, they are granted increased paid annual leave. As for shift work, it is regulated by collective agreement in a medical organization and is usually for periods of 12 or 24 hours. The Government further states that the health care system has a unified nomenclature of specialties, which provides for differentiation of nurses and other comparable staff in terms of qualification level in various areas of health care with limited access to employment based on educational background. According to the Government, consultations are currently underway between the federal health authority and the social partners, including the professional nursing association to decide whether this nomenclature needs updating. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature and impact of the measures taken to provide nursing personnel with employment and working conditions, including career prospects and remuneration, which are likely to attract persons to the profession and retain them in it, particularly in rural and remote areas of the country. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to supply information regarding wages, benefits and career prospects for nurses as compared to other similar occupations in all regions. The Committee also requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the consultations carried out with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, with regard to such measures, including the results of the consultations on the updating of the unified nomenclature of specialties.

Article 2(2)(a) and (3). Education and training. The Government indicates that, under the 2018 Healthcare National Project, the Federal Project "Providing health system medical organizations with qualified personnel", provides for the implementation of a set of measures in the area of education and training aimed at increasing the number of nurses, included those whose training is financed from the state and municipal budgets; and developing specific training to prepare a professional for a known job position in advance, with additional benefits and social support during the training period. The Government further indicates that there is a unique bachelor's degree programme in nursing which offers the same conditions and the same programme to medical graduates and nursing graduates from medical schools, including those with specialized work experience. Moreover, in order to increase the number of doctors and nurses, Decree No. 1304 of 9 October 2019 on the "Principles of modernization" of primary health care was issued, which ordered the increase of the number of students in professional educational organizations by at least 30 percent annually due to the existing shortage of specialists (section 1.4.7), by training specialists with secondary medical education, starting 2020/21. In 2021-22, it was envisaged to increase the total number of admissions for specialty, bachelor's and master's degree programmes by 7.8 per cent compared to previous year. On the other hand, the Government indicates that in order to support the employment of nurses in rural areas and remote settlements it attracts school-leavers living in these places with accommodation and social support measures for the duration of their studies; and establish a network of college branches in isolated areas. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature and the impact of the measures implemented in the framework of the Decree No. 1304 of 9 October 2019 on the "Principles of modernization" of primary health with regards to the increase of the number of nurses, as well as on any measures taken or envisaged to ensure that nursing personnel are provided with education and training appropriate to the exercise of their functions. It further requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information, disaggregated by sex, age and region, on the number of persons enrolled in nursing schools and the number of female and male nurses who enter and leave the profession each year, including in rural and remote areas of the country.

Article 7. Occupational safety and health. The Government indicates that Federal Law No. 426-FZ of 28 December 2013 on the special assessment of working conditions provides that the assessment of risks in the workplace of nurses is carried out through a special procedure that takes into account the hazard class. In case of working in harmful and/or dangerous working conditions, medical workers, including nurses, receive additional salary and holidays. The Committee welcomes the information that negotiations between the federal health authority and professional nursing associations take place regularly to ensure effective protection of the occupational safety and health at work of nurses. Recalling the recent recognition of the right to a safe and healthy working environment as a fundamental principle and right at work, the Committee requests the Government to provide copies of collective agreements that have been concluded between the federal health authority and professional nursing associations regarding the occupational safety and health at work of nurses. It also requests the Government to provide information on any safety measures taken or envisaged to improve working conditions in respect of safety, health and security for nursing personnel.

Application in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the latest accessible OECD data, in 2019 there were 8.5 nurses per 1,000 inhabitants. The Committee requests the Government to provide information, including updated statistics, on how access to healthcare in both rural and urban areas has evolved over the last 10 years. The Government is also asked to supply copies of reports by inspection services as regards compliance with the labour law framework in the healthcare sector. It also requests the Government to provide updated detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region concerning: the ratio of nursing personnel to the population; the organization and the operation of all institutions which provide healthcare services; as well as official studies, surveys and reports addressing health workforce issues in the health sector.

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 149 Belarus, Belgium, Italy, Philippines Convention No. 172 Belgium, Netherlands (Sint Maarten) Convention No. 177 Belgium Convention No. 189 Belgium, Brazil, Madagascar, South Africa.

► II. Observations concerning the submission to the competent authorities of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference (article 19 of the Constitution)

Albania

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government once again has not replied to its previous observations. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. Referring to its previous observations, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the Albanian Parliament of 25 instruments: the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947, adopted by the Conference at its 82nd Session, the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), adopted by the Conference at its 90th Session, as well as the instruments adopted at the 78th, 84th, 86th, 89th, 92nd, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206)).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Angola

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that the 19 pending instruments were transmitted to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 29 May 2023. The Government further indicates that the instruments were discussed with the social partners in the framework of the tripartite National Commission of the International Labour Organization. However, no information has been received regarding the submission of those instruments to the National Assembly. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again reiterates its request that the Government provide the information required under article 19 of the ILO Constitution on the 19 instruments pending submission to the National Assembly. These are: the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Recommendation, 1992 (No. 180), adopted by the Conference at its 79th Session; the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947, adopted by the Conference at its 82nd Session; and the instruments adopted at the 86th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions of the Conference (2003–19).

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Antigua and Barbuda

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has yet again provided no reply to its 2018 direct request. It therefore recalls the information provided by the Government in April 2014 that the instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions (1996–2012) were resubmitted by the Minister of Labour to the Cabinet of Antigua and Barbuda on 11 March 2014. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. In this context, the Committee reiterates once again its request that the Government specify the dates on which the 13 instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions were submitted to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda. The Committee also once again reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to Parliament of the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session.

Tripartite consultation. The Committee notes with interest the ratification of the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183) and the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) by Antigua and Barbuda on 6 and 9 May 2022, respectively. It requests the Government to provide information on the tripartite consultations held prior to the ratification, as required by the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144).

Bahamas

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with interest that on 30 November 2022, the Government ratified the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), as well as the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159). The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government indicating that a draft report was prepared with technical assistance from the ILO Caribbean Office containing 24 instruments pending submission adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1997 and 2017. The Committee notes, however, that the report lacks information regarding the submission of the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206). This Recommendation is associated with Convention No. 190 and also needs to be submitted to the competent authority in the event of ratifying the said Convention. It further notes the Government's indication that the report will be sent to Cabinet for approval prior to submission to Parliament. The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to complete the submission process without delay. It once more requests the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the 25 instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1997 and 2019 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions).

Bahrain

Failure to submit. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the National Assembly in compliance with its obligation of submission pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution. In this respect, it notes the information provided by the Government in its communication of 11 July 2023, in which it reiterates that: (i) it has complied with its constitutional obligations by submitting the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to its Council of Ministers, as the competent authority; and (ii) indicated that a new mechanism for submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference would require the revision of the Constitution of Bahrain and of a number of laws which regulate this aspect and which specify the mandate and powers of the Council of Ministers. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in order to fully comply with the constitutional obligation of submission, Bahrain may wish to transmit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the Council of Representatives (the lower house of the Bahraini National Assembly for information), once the Council of Ministers has reviewed them.

Against this backdrop, the Committee recalls once more that when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in Bahrain, the Council of Ministers is the authority competent to ratify a Convention or Protocol, as well as to decide on any other action which it may deem appropriate in respect of the instruments adopted by the Conference (2005 Memorandum, Part I(b)). The Committee nevertheless recalls once again that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum transmission to a deliberative assembly of information concerning the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The obligation to submit is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore once again expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to report not only on the submission to the Council of Ministers of the 25 instruments adopted by the Conference at 14 sessions held between 2000 and 2019 (88th Session, 89th Session, 90th Session, 91st Session, 92nd Session, 94th Session, 95th Session, 96th Session, 99th Session, 100th Session, 101st Session, 103rd Session, 104th Session and 108th Session), but also on the submission of these instruments to a deliberative assembly such as the Council of Representatives.

Iraq

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has once again provided no response to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. It therefore once again recalls the detailed information provided by the Government in November 2017, including the dates of submission to the Council of Representatives (Majlis Al-Nuwaab) of each of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2000–12). The Committee further recalls the Government's indication that Recommendations submitted to the Council of Representatives were not examined by the Council, but were transmitted to the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs which, according to the Government's indication, is the competent authority with respect to Recommendations. The Committee further recalls the information provided by the Government in March 2017, indicating that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, was submitted to the competent authority. It noted in this regard that no information was provided on the date of submission, or on whether the instrument in question was in fact submitted to the Council of Representatives (Majlis Al-Nuwaab).

Against this backdrop, the Committee once again recalls that when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. Submission does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, nor does it imply the application of one or more of the principles set out in an unratified Convention or a Recommendation. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the 2005 Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in Iraq, the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs is considered to be the competent authority in relation to the submission of Recommendations. The Committee nevertheless recalls once more that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum provision to a deliberative assembly of information concerning all of the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference, regardless of whether these are Conventions, Protocols or Recommendations – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive, as in this case the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The obligation to submit is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore once again expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to provide more specific information on the submission to the Council of Representatives of the remaining 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 2000 to 2015. The Committee also once again reiterates its request for the Government to provide information on the submission to the Council of Representatives of the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, and the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session (June 2019). It reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to meet its constitutional obligation of submission.

Kyrgyzstan

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has once again failed to reply to its previous comments. The Committee therefore refers yet again to the comments it has been formulating since 1994, and recalls that, under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the competent national authority of the 43 instruments adopted by the Conference at 22 sessions held from 1992 to 2019. The Committee reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to assist it in overcoming this serious delay.

Lebanon

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the information sent by the Government, received on 25 August 2023. ## United Arab Emirates

Failure to submit. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in response to its previous comments, indicating that the ratification of international conventions and treaties in the United Arab Emirates is subject to national regulations requiring the examination by all authorities in the State regarding the identification of the State's obligations arising from ratification, for their submission to the competent authority. The Government indicates that the purpose of this examination is to enable the Government to decide whether or not to ratify an instrument. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the 11 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions were submitted. It nevertheless notes that there is no indication in the Government's communication of the competent authorities to which the instruments were submitted, or of the dates of such submission. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO.

The Committee recalls that, when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. Submission does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, nor does it imply the application of one or more of the principles set out in an unratified Convention or a Recommendation. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the 2005 Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in the United Arab Emirates, instruments adopted by the Conference are submitted to the Council of Ministers as the authority competent to ratify a Convention or Protocol, as well as to decide on any other action which it may deem appropriate in respect of the instruments adopted by the Conference (2005 Memorandum, Part I(b)). The Committee nevertheless recalls that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum, transmission to a deliberative assembly of information concerning the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The objective of submission is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore once again expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to provide information on the submission to a deliberative assembly, such as the Federal National Council (Majlis Watani Ittihadi), of the 11 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2006, 2010–19).

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021, June 2022 and June 2023, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the Parliament of Vanuatu). The Committee firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Parliament of Vanuatu of the 18 instruments adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions held between 2003 and 2019 (91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions).

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Yemen

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes the Government's communication of 28 March 2023, in which it indicated that it had not been able to submit the instruments pending submission to the competent authorities, but that the Ministry of Labour would initiate consultations with the social partners in this respect. While noting the complex situation in the country, particularly the ongoing conflict, the Committee trusts that, when national circumstances permit, the Government will be in a position to provide information on the submission to the House of Representatives of the 21 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th (Maternity Protection Recommendation, 2000 (No. 191)), 89th (Safety and Health in Agriculture Recommendation, 2001 (No. 192)), 90th, 92nd (Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195)), 94th, 95th (Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Recommendation, 2006 (No. 197)) and the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2000–19).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Zambia

Serious failure to submit. Date of submission. Consultation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the Conference in June 2023, indicating that it has begun the process of ratification and submission of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions. The Government reports that the 2014 Protocol to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and its Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, were reviewed by the Tripartite Consultative Labour Council (TCLC), which recommended their ratification. The Government adds that the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), the Social Protection Floors Recommendation, 2012 (No. 202), the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204) and the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205) are in the process of being submitted to Cabinet for information. The Government does not provide information regarding the submission of the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203) or the Domestic Workers Recommendation, 2011 (No. 201). The Committee further notes that the Government has yet again provided no reply to its previous comments with respect to the information provided by the Government in September 2010, indicating that 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 1996 to 2007 had been submitted to the National Assembly, but without specifying the date of submission. In addition, the Government has provided no information in response to the Committee's previous request for information concerning any action taken by the National Assembly with regard to the 12 instruments referenced, nor has it provided information regarding prior tripartite consultations. The Committee recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once more reiterates its request that the Government indicate the dates on which the 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 1996 to 2007 were submitted to the National Assembly. The Committee also once again reiterates its previous request that the Government provide information on any action taken by the National Assembly in relation to these submissions, as well as with respect to the prior tripartite consultations that took place with the social partners. In addition, the reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the ten instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and the Protocol) adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19). The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will provide the information requested without further delay.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Appendices

Appendix I. Reports requested on ratified Conventions registered as at 9 December 2023 (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization provides that “each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request”. Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the next meeting of the Conference a summary of the reports communicated to him by Members in pursuance of article 22, and that each Member shall communicate copies of these reports to the representative organizations of employers and workers.

At its 204th Session (November 1977), the Governing Body approved the following arrangements for the presentation by the Director-General to the Conference of summaries of reports submitted by governments under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution:

- (a) the practice of tabular classification of reports, without summary of their contents, which has been followed for several years in respect of reports subsequent to first reports after ratification, should be applied to all reports, including first reports;
- (b) the Director-General should make available, for consultation at the Conference, the original texts of all reports received on ratified Conventions; in addition, photocopies of the reports should be supplied on request to members of delegations.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures for rationalization and simplification.

Reports received under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution appear in simplified form in a table annexed to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations; first reports are indicated in parentheses.

Requests for consultation or copies of reports may be addressed to the secretariat of the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization prescribes, in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 that Members shall bring the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the International Labour Conference before the competent authorities within a specific time period.
