The designations employed in ILO publications and databases, which are in conformity with United Nations practice, and the presentation of material therein do not imply the expression of any opinion whatsoever on the part of the ILO concerning the legal status of any country, area or territory or of its authorities, or concerning the delimitation of its frontiers or boundaries.

The opinions and views expressed in this publication are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the opinions, views or policies of the ILO.

Reference to names of firms and commercial products and processes does not imply their endorsement by the ILO, and any failure to mention a particular firm, commercial product or process is not a sign of disapproval.

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO member States. The annual report of the Committee of Experts covers numerous matters related to the application of ILO standards. The structure of the report, as modified in 2003, is divided into the following parts:

- (a) The Reader's note provides indications on the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (their mandate, functioning and the institutional context in which they operate) (Part A, pages 37–41).
- (b) Part I: the General Report describes the manner in which the Committee of Experts undertakes its work and the extent to which member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards, and it draws the attention to issues of general interest arising out of the Committee's work (Part A, pages 43–93).
- (c) Part II: Observations concerning particular countries cover the sending of reports, the application of ratified Conventions (see section I), and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities (see section II) (Part A, pages 95–1038).
- (d) Part III: General Survey, in which the Committee of Experts examines the state of the legislation and practice regarding a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations. This examination covers all member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the given Conventions. The General Survey is published as a separate volume (Report III(Part B)) and this year it concerns the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150) and the Labour Administration Recommendation, 1978 (No. 158) (Part B).

Overview of the ILO supervisory mechanisms

Since its creation in 1919, the mandate of the International Labour Organization (ILO) has included adopting international labour standards, promoting their ratification and application in its Member States, and the supervision of their application as a fundamental means of achieving its objectives. In order to monitor the progress of Member States in the application of international labour standards, the ILO has developed supervisory mechanisms which are unique at the international level.<sup>1</sup>

Under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, a number of obligations arise for Member States upon the adoption of international labour standards, including the requirement to submit newly adopted standards to national competent authorities and the obligation to report periodically on the measures taken to give effect to the provisions of unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

A number of supervisory mechanisms exist whereby the Organization examines the standards-related obligations of Member States deriving from ratified Conventions. This supervision occurs both in the context of a regular procedure through periodic reports (article 22 of the ILO Constitution),<sup>2</sup> as well as through special procedures based on representations or complaints to the Governing Body made by ILO constituents (articles 24 and 26 of the Constitution, respectively). Moreover, since 1950, a special procedure has existed whereby complaints relating to freedom of association are referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) of the Governing Body. The CFA may also examine complaints relating to Member States that have not ratified the relevant freedom of association Conventions.

Role of employers' and workers' organizations

As a natural consequence of its tripartite structure, the ILO was the first international organization to associate the social partners directly in its activities. The participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the supervisory mechanisms is recognized in the Constitution under article 23, paragraph 2, which provides that reports and information submitted by governments in accordance with articles 19 and 22 must be communicated to the representative organizations.

In practice, representative employers' and workers' organizations may submit to their governments' observations on the reports concerning the application of international labour standards. They may, for instance, draw attention to a discrepancy in law or practice regarding the application of a ratified Convention. Furthermore, any employers' or workers' organization may submit observations on the application of international labour standards directly to the Office. The Office will then forward these to the government concerned, which will have an opportunity to respond before the observations are examined by the Committee of Experts except in exceptional circumstances.<sup>3</sup>

Origins of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

During the early years of the ILO, both the adoption of international labour standards and the regular supervisory work were undertaken within the framework of the plenary sitting of the annual International Labour Conference. However, the considerable increase in the number of ratifications of Conventions rapidly led to a similarly significant increase in the number of annual reports submitted. It soon became clear that the plenary sitting of the Conference would not be able to examine all of these reports at the same time as adopting standards and discussing other important matters. In response to this situation, the Conference in 1926 adopted a resolution<sup>4</sup> establishing on an annual basis a Conference Committee (subsequently named the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards) and requesting the Governing Body to appoint a technical committee (subsequently named the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations) which would be responsible for drawing up a report for the Conference. These two committees have become the two pillars of the ILO regular supervisory system.

Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

Composition

The Committee of Experts is composed of 20 members, who are outstanding legal experts at the national and international levels. The members of the Committee are appointed by the Governing Body upon the recommendation of its Officers based on proposals by the Director-General. Appointments are made in a personal capacity from among impartial persons of competence and independent standing drawn from all regions of the world, in order to enable the Committee to have at its disposal first-hand experience of different legal, economic and social systems. The appointments are made for renewable periods of three years. In 2002, the Committee decided that there would be a limit of 15 years' service for all members, representing a maximum of four renewals after the first three-year appointment. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee decided that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, which would be renewable once for a further three years. At the start of each session, the Committee would also elect a Reporter.

Work of the Committee

The Committee of Experts meets annually in November–December. In accordance with the mandate given by the Governing Body,<sup>5</sup> the Committee is called upon to examine the following:

- the periodic reports under article 22 of the Constitution on the measures taken by Member States to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which they are parties;

<sup>5</sup> Terms of reference of the Committee of Experts, Minutes of the 103rd Session of the Governing Body (1947), Appendix XII, para. 37.

- the information and reports concerning Conventions and Recommendations communicated by Member States in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution;
- information and reports on the measures taken by Member States in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution.<sup>6</sup>

The task of the Committee of Experts is to indicate the extent to which each Member State's legislation and practice are in conformity with ratified Conventions and the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their obligations under the ILO Constitution in relation to standards. In carrying out this task, the Committee adheres to its principles of independence, objectivity and impartiality.<sup>7</sup> The comments of the Committee of Experts on the fulfilment by Member States of their standards-related obligations take the form of either observations or direct requests. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They are reproduced in the annual report of the Committee of Experts, which is then submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June every year. Direct requests are not published in the report of the Committee of Experts, but are communicated directly to the government concerned and are available online.<sup>8</sup> In addition, the Committee of Experts examines, in the context of the General Survey, the state of the legislation and practice concerning a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations chosen by the Governing Body.<sup>9</sup> The General Survey is based on the reports submitted in accordance with articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, and it covers all Member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the concerned Conventions.

Report of the Committee of Experts

As a result of its work, the Committee produces an annual report. The report consists of two volumes.

The first volume (Report III (Part A))<sup>10</sup> is divided into two parts:

- Part I: the General Report describes, on the one hand, the progress of the work of the Committee of Experts and specific matters relating to it that have been addressed by the Committee and, on the other hand, the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards.
- Part II: Observations concerning particular countries on the fulfilment of obligations in respect of the submission of reports, the application of ratified Conventions grouped by subject matter and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities.

The second volume contains the General Survey (Report III(Part B)).

<sup>9</sup> By virtue of the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008, a system of annual recurrent discussions in the framework of the Conference has been established to enable the Organization to gain a better understanding of the situation and varying needs of its members in relation to the four strategic objectives of the ILO, namely: employment; social protection; social dialogue and tripartism; and fundamental principles and rights at work. The Governing Body considered that the recurrent reports prepared by the Office for the purposes of the Conference discussion should benefit from the information on the law and practice of Member States contained in General Surveys, as well as from the outcome of the discussions of General Surveys by the Conference Committee. In principle, the subjects of General Surveys have therefore been aligned with the four strategic objectives of the ILO. The importance of the coordination between the General Surveys and recurrent discussions was reaffirmed in the framework of the adoption of a five-year cycle of recurrent discussions by the Governing Body in November 2016.

Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference

Composition

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards is one of the two standing committees of the Conference. It is tripartite and therefore comprises representatives of governments, employers and workers. At each session, the Committee elects its Officers, which include a Chairperson (Government member), two Vice-Chairpersons (Employer member and Worker member) and a Reporter (Government member).

Work of the Committee

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards meets annually at the Conference usually in June. Pursuant to article 7 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Committee shall consider:

- measures taken to give effect to ratified Conventions (article 22 of the Constitution);
- reports communicated in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution (General Surveys);
- measures taken in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution (non-metropolitan territories).

The Committee is required to present its report to the plenary sitting of the Conference.

Following the independent technical examination carried out by the Committee of Experts, the proceedings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards provide an opportunity for the representatives of governments, employers and workers to examine together the manner in which States are fulfilling their standards-related obligations. Governments are able to elaborate on information previously supplied to the Committee of Experts, indicate any further measures taken or proposed since the last session of the Committee of Experts, draw attention to difficulties encountered in the fulfilment of obligations and seek guidance as to how to overcome such difficulties.

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discusses the report of the Committee of Experts, and the documents submitted by governments. The work of the Conference Committee starts with a general discussion based essentially on the General Report of the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee then discusses the General Survey. It also examines cases of serious failure to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. Finally, the Conference Committee examines a number of individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions which have been the subject of observations by the Committee of Experts. At the end of the discussion of each individual case, the Conference Committee adopts conclusions on the case in question.

In its report <sup>11</sup> submitted to the plenary sitting of the Conference for adoption, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards may invite the Member State whose case has been discussed to accept a technical assistance mission by the International Labour Office to increase its capacity to fulfil its obligations, or may propose other types of missions. The Conference Committee may also request a government to submit additional information or address specific concerns in its next report to the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee also draws the attention of the Conference to certain cases, such as cases of progress and cases of serious failure to comply with ratified Conventions.

<sup>11</sup> The report is published in the Record of Proceedings of the Conference. Since 2007, it has also been issued in a separate publication. See, for the last report, Conference Committee on the Application of Standards: Record of Proceedings, International Labour Conference, 111th Session, Geneva, 2023.

The Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

In numerous reports, the Committee of Experts has emphasized the importance of the spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility that has always existed in relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. It has accordingly become the practice for the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend the general discussion of the Conference Committee and the discussion on the General Survey as an observer, with the opportunity to address the Conference Committee at the opening of the general discussion and to make remarks at the end of the discussion on the General Survey. Similarly, the Employer and Worker Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to meet the Committee of Experts during its sessions and discuss issues of common interest within the framework of a special session held for that purpose.

Part I. General Report

► I. Introduction

---

1. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, appointed by the Governing Body of the International Labour Office to examine the information and reports submitted under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the Constitution by Member States of the International Labour Organization on the action taken with regard to Conventions and Recommendations, held its 94th Session from 13 November to 9 December 2023 in a hybrid modality involving in-person participation by 19 members and online conferencing by one expert. The Committee has the honour to present its report to the Governing Body.

A. Composition of the Committee

2. The composition of the Committee is as follows: Mr Shinichi AGO (Japan), Ms Lia ATHANASSIOU (Greece), Ms Leila AZOURI (Lebanon), Mr James J. BRUDNEY (United States of America), Ms Graciela Josefina DIXON CATON (Panama), Mr Rachid FILALI MEKNASSI (Morocco), Mr. José HERRERA VERGARA (Colombia), Mr Benedict KANYIP (Nigeria), Ms Irene KASHINDI (Kenya), Mr Alain LACABARATS (France), Ms Elena E. MACHULSKAYA (Russian Federation), Mr Sandile NGCOBO (South Africa), Ms Mónica PINTO (Argentina), Mr Paul-Gérard POUGOUÉ (Cameroon), Ms Mia RÖNNMAR (Sweden), Mr Iain ROSS (Australia), Ms Kamala SANKARAN (India), Ms Ambiga SRENEVASAN (Malaysia) Ms Deborah THOMAS-FELIX (Trinidad and Tobago) and Mr Bernd WAAS (Germany). The Appendix of the General Report contains brief biographies of all the Committee members.
3. The Committee welcomed three new members appointed by the Governing Body at its 349th Session, namely, Advocate Irene Kashindi (Kenya); Professor Mia Rönmar (Sweden) and Judge Iain Ross (Australia).
4. Advocate Kashindi is a partner at Munyao Muthama and Kashindi Advocates with close to 15 years' significant experience in employment and labour relations matters as a practicing advocate in the areas of commercial and civil litigation as well as arbitration. Co-author of Kashindi's Digest of Employment Cases, a collection of key labour law judicial precedents, she represents the Law Society of Kenya in the Employment and Labour Relations Court Rules Committee, which has the mandate to review and make rules of procedure for the labour court under the Employment and Labour Relations Act, 2011. An Associate Member of the Chartered Institute of Arbitrators (Kenya Branch), Advocate Kashindi is admitted to practice before the High Court of Kenya. In the area of alternative dispute resolution, Advocate Kashindi has worked as a mediator, conciliator and arbitrator. She has been a Board Member of the Public Procurement Administrative Review Board since 2020. She received her Bachelor's and Master of Law degree (Financial Services Law) from the University of Nairobi.
5. Professor Rönmar is a full professor of Private Law specializing in labour law and industrial relations at Lund University in Sweden, after having served as Dean for six years from 2015 to 2020. She was a visiting professor at Sydney Law School, Sydney University, where she developed and taught an intensive LLM-course in International and Comparative Labour Law. Professor Rönmar conducted research in a national interdisciplinary research programme in industrial relations (including economics, economic history, labour law and political science) at Lund University. Formerly President of the International Labour and Employment Relations Association from 2018 to 2020, Professor Rönmar has taught various levels of labour law (international, European Union, comparative, social security and industrial relations). She was a joint editor of a 2021 publication entitled Making and Breaking Gender Inequalities in Work and has published a large variety of articles and books on labour law, equality law, human rights, age discrimination, internships and apprenticeships. Professor Rönmar holds a Doctor of Laws in Private Law (LLD) from the Faculty of Law, Lund University.

6. Judge Ross was appointed Judge of the Federal Court and President of Fair Work Australia until his retirement in 2022. His previous positions include serving as Judge of the Supreme Court of Victoria, President of the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal, and Vice-President of the Australian Industrial Relations Commission. Since 1997, Judge Ross has lectured at the Faculty of Law of the University of Sydney and was appointed Adjunct Associate Professor of Law in 2004. He has also been an Adjunct Professor in the University of Sydney's Business School since March 2014. He has been a member of various legislative reform committees, among them as Commissioner of the New South Wales Reform Commission, member of the Tribunal's Working Group to the Australian Law Reform Commission's (ALRC) Review of the Federal Civil Justice System and part-time Commissioner of the Victorian Law Reform Commission. Judge Ross holds a Master of Law and a PhD in Law from the University of Sydney and a Master of Business Administration from Monash University. He has also studied at the London Business School and Warwick Business School and since April 2023 he has been a part time board member of the Reserve Bank of Australia.
7. As a result of these three appointments, the Committee functioned with a full composition of 20 members.
8. This year, Ms Graciela Dixon Caton continued her mandate as Chairperson and Mr Shinichi Ago was elected as Reporter.
9. The Committee noted that this was the last year on the Committee for two of its outstanding members, Professors Filali Meknassi and Pougoué, both of whom had completed 15 years of service. The Committee expressed its great appreciation for the outstanding manner in which the two Experts carried out their mandate during their long years of service on the Committee and particularly commended them for their technical excellence, legal expertise, independence and moral standing.

B. Working methods

10. In order to guide the Committee's reflection on continuous improvement of its work, a Subcommittee on Working Methods was set up in 2001 with the mandate to examine the working methods of the Committee and any related subjects, in order to make appropriate recommendations to the Committee so that it can perform its functions in the best and most efficient manner possible and, in so doing, assist Member States in meeting their obligations in relation to international labour standards and enhance the functioning of the supervisory system. This year, under the Chairpersonship of Mr Bernd Waas, the Subcommittee on Working Methods met for the 23rd time.
11. The Subcommittee continued its discussion on a possible further modernization of the working methods and of drafting practices to ensure that the Committee's comments are providing precise, short and clear recommendations to Member States. The Subcommittee was also briefed by the Office on the discussions taking place at the ILO Governing Body with respect to strengthening ILO's supervisory mechanism and welcomed proposals to streamline reporting on the basis of thematic templates. Noting that the Governing Body will continue to discuss the matter in 2024, the Subcommittee asked the Office to share the draft thematic templates for inputs before their adoption. In the same context, it invited the Office to reflect on possible adjustments to advance the reporting timelines.

C. Information session with Government representatives

12. At its 92nd Session (2021), the Committee gave positive consideration to the request put forward by Government members of the Conference Committee to consider the possibility of a meeting between the Committee of Experts and Government representatives. Accordingly, an initial information session was organized at the Committee's 93rd Session (2022). This year, the Committee held another information session to which all Member States were invited. The session was attended by some 53 government representatives either virtually or in person. Many speakers expressed appreciation for this opportunity to acquaint themselves with the Committee and meet some of its representatives. Many underlined their high appreciation for the Committee's work, and some indicated that the Committee's comments had provided useful guidance to their governments for assessing laws and practices and preparing labour law reforms.
13. Several speakers said that simplifying the language in comments would make them more accessible and facilitate their follow up. They also expressed the view that detailed comments and requests for detailed information resulted in delays in the preparation of replies, given limitations in labour administrations and the need to coordinate with other ministries and sometimes regions. Several speakers referred to the reporting workload and thanked the Office for the possibility to participate in the pilot project on reporting baselines which greatly facilitated the preparation of reports of countries with an extensive ratification record, calling for the project to continue. Many governments also asked that the information sessions continue to be organized in future.
14. In reply to questions, the Committee emphasized that it was cognisant of the challenges faced by governments and increasingly tried to focus requests and streamline comments. The independence, technical expertise and commitment of its Members are the main attributes accounting for the Committee's ability to address its increasingly growing workload with success, while the diversity in its composition has well equipped it with the capacity to thoroughly ponder the often complex and varied considerations relevant to matters brought before it.

D. Relations with the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

15. A spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility has consistently prevailed over the years in the Committee's relations with the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference. In this context, the Chairperson of the Committee has been invited to participate in the general discussion of the Conference Committee at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference. The Chairperson was represented at that session by the Committee's Reporter as she was unable to attend in person. In addition, the Chairperson of the Committee on Freedom of Association was invited once again to address the Conference Committee in order to present the Committee's Annual Report.
16. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts invited the Employer Vice-Chairperson (Mr Paul Mackay) and the Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Marc Leemans) to participate in a special sitting of the Committee at its present session. They both accepted this invitation. An interactive and thorough exchange of views took place on matters of common interest.
17. The Employer Vice-Chairperson welcomed the opportunity to have this exchange with the Committee of Experts which had become a well-established practice. He emphasized that the credibility and effectiveness of the supervisory mechanism should be based on close dialogue of all actors involved, namely, the CAS, the Committee of Experts, the tripartite constituents of the Member States and the Office. He added that dialogue and tripartism were more crucial than ever in the context of the long-standing dispute on the right to strike, and the related developments at the last Governing Body sessions which put some strain on these core values.

18. The Employers' group was deeply concerned that the decision to refer the right to strike to the International Court of Justice (ICJ) was made by means of a vote against the opposition of a substantial part of the Governing Body and the wider membership. While he recognized that it was not the Committee of Experts who sent the matter to the ICJ, the Committee must now await the outcome. He added that for their part, the Employers' group would continue to advocate for inclusive social dialogue and tripartite discussions as the only way to achieve a long-lasting solution on all matters of interpretation, not just this one.
19. The Employer Vice-Chairperson called on the Committee to be part of the solution and to foster convergence among constituents. In line with its mandate, the Committee's assessments of compliance were, and should remain, sensitive and receptive to the views and needs expressed by the tripartite constituents in the CAS, through article 23 observations and in Governing Body discussions. He said that past experience had demonstrated that where the CAS and the Committee of Experts had common views, more positive responses were obtained from governments and social partners at the national level, leading to faster, better and more sustainable compliance with ILO standards, both in law and in practice. He also considered that it was imperative that when making observations and recommendations, the Committee remained within the boundaries of its mandate, as per the clear statement thereof contained in the Committee's annual report which was welcomed by the Governing Body in March 2014.
20. The Employer Vice-Chairperson emphasized that the Committee needed to focus on the technical analysis of implementation of ratified Conventions by Member States and make appropriately practical recommendations based on these analyses. In his view, while it was true that in doing so the Committee might sometimes be required to determine the legal scope, content and meaning of provisions of Conventions, it was important that this was not understood as creating new legal obligations which went beyond the currently understood scope of their provisions. He regretted that this was not the case with regard to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and added that the detailed rules and conditions for the exercise of the right to strike developed by the Committee were not compatible with the text of the Convention, which was approved with the recorded intention of excluding that right. He also said that the Committee of Experts had taken positions that created greater rights for workers than employers, for example, in relation to the employers' ability to lockout which was constrained to the workplace whereas the right to strike, as envisaged by the Experts, was not.
21. The Employer Vice-Chairperson expressed the view that the Committee of Experts should only develop future guidance on the basis of the outcome of tripartite consideration of a given matter, preferably in the form of a tripartite standard-setting process. In the meantime, the Committee should be careful not to suggest, or directly impose, obligations on ratifying States that were neither discussed nor agreed in a standard-setting process, or for that matter, ever submitted to Member States for ratification. As a short-term measure, the Employer Vice-Chairperson asked the Committee to suspend its assessment of the application of Convention No. 87, basically on a sub judice basis because the matter was before the ICJ pending the procedure for an advisory decision.
22. The Employer Vice-Chairperson finally reiterated proposals mentioned in previous exchanges with the Committee of Experts regarding the distinction between direct requests and observations, the criteria for double-footnoted cases, improving the length and clarity of comments and rendering government reports and observations from employers' and workers' organizations under articles 22 and 23 of the ILO Constitution accessible online. Expressing appreciation for the role that the Office had in the preparation of the Committee's comments he trusted that the concerns and suggestions he had expressed would be properly discussed between the Committee and the Office and that the Committee would provide all of the necessary guidance to the Office in this regard.

- 23. The Worker Vice-Chairperson thanked the Committee for this exchange as well as the Reporter for having attended the general discussion at the last CAS session. It was important to recall the objective of this session which should allow for a constructive engagement between the two committees through a collective reflection aimed at enhancing the impact of the supervisory system as a whole. The basis for this dialogue was respect for the independence and autonomy of the two bodies with a view to building on the many areas of convergence between them. Some divergent views expressed by some government representatives or one of the groups in the CAS should not be mistaken for divergence with the CAS as a whole. The CAS as such had never made any statement raising divergences with the Committee of Experts. The Worker Vice-Chairperson observed that the exchanges with the Committee of Experts were increasingly serving as opportunities to present a list of claims. They should reflect instead a culture of dialogue, lying at the basis of the ILO, which was not compatible with practices consisting in making systematic comments on the work of one body in an effort to influence its decisions.
- 24. The Worker Vice-Chairperson considered that some points raised repeatedly over recent years by the Employer Vice-Chairperson were non-issues. For instance, the length of the Committee's report reflected the quality of the Committee's work and it was pointless to raise it as a problem. It might be wiser to think collectively about how to make the Experts' observations more explicit in their expression. Also, the criteria for the distinction between observations and direct requests were explained in the Committee's report. The role of the CAS was not to supervise the work of the Committee of Experts which had the discretion to select independently the means through which it could carry out a dialogue with governments. Furthermore, the Workers' group was of the view that nothing prevented the CAS from taking into account direct requests during the examination of individual cases. Thus, the distinction did not have a negative impact on the work of the supervisory mechanism.
- 25. The Worker Vice-Chairperson also referred to a proposal by the Employers' group at the previous exchange with the Committee of Experts, to hold more frequent, regular and structured exchanges. However, the subjects proposed were not conducive to constructive dialogue. The Worker Vice-Chairperson considered that dialogue with the Committee of Experts could not provide a space for systematically contesting its approach in relation to certain Conventions. On numerous occasions, the Workers' group had reiterated that they did not share the views of the Employers' group on Conventions Nos 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). Putting into question the Committee's work in this area was an attack on its independence.
- 26. With respect to the request to integrate sustainable enterprises in the Committee of Experts' comments, the Worker Vice-Chairperson emphasized that this went beyond the mandate of the Committee of Experts and that respect for workers' rights was a necessary condition for sustainability in all cases. Sustainable enterprises were important economic players helping to create jobs, but they should ensure that their actions respected workers' rights and the standards that protected them.
- 27. The Worker Vice-Chairperson also referred to proposals that his group had made in the past and would like to bring to the Committee's attention. He referred to giving more consideration to the situation of countries under examination when these were confronted with acute crises. While ratification entailed the same obligations for all countries, different tools and approaches existed to accommodate the particular situation in which different countries were found so as to promote respect for international labour standards in all circumstances. This did not concern the content of standards but the means through which their effectiveness could be ensured. He also referred to the importance of having an inventory of steps taken in response to the conclusions of the CAS so as to ensure continuous follow up over a longer period of time.

28. Concerning the dispute on the right to strike between the Employers' and Workers' groups inside the CAS, the Worker Vice-Chairperson said that this had already been addressed by a decision of the Governing Body. The matter was for the moment pending before the ICJ and there was no point in continuing to raise it. Once the ICJ rendered its advisory opinion, it pertained to the Governing Body to draw the necessary conclusions and decide on appropriate follow up action.
29. The Committee of Experts shared with the two Vice-Chairpersons highlights of the discussion it had with Government representatives and the Chairs of the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies, informing the two Vice-Chairpersons that these dynamic exchanges were likely to continue in the future. It also recalled that while celebrating the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and Conventions Nos 87 and 98, it was important to have a special thought for those facing violations of their rights around the world and to recall that the two Conventions remained more relevant than ever and essential for upholding the basic human rights of all. The Committee expressed its appreciation to the Vice-Chairpersons for their continued engagement in dialogue and undertook to further reflect on suggestions made with a view to rendering the ILO supervisory system even more impactful and authoritative in the future.

E. Mandate

30. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body established by the International Labour Conference and its members are appointed by the ILO Governing Body. It is composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO Member States. The Committee of Experts undertakes an impartial and technical analysis of how the Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States, while cognisant of different national realities and legal systems. In doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions. Its opinions and recommendations are non-binding, being intended to guide the actions of national authorities. They derive their persuasive value from the legitimacy and rationality of the Committee's work based on its impartiality, experience and expertise. The Committee's technical role and moral authority is well recognized, particularly as it has been engaged in its supervisory task for more than 90 years, by virtue of its composition, independence and its working methods built on continuing dialogue with governments taking into account information provided by employers' and workers' organizations. This has been reflected in the incorporation of the Committee's opinions and recommendations in national legislation, international instruments and court decisions.

F. Application of international labour standards in times of crisis

31. In its previous report, the Committee noted with concern that multiple and interlocking crises were having an adverse impact on the application of international labour standards, stalling, and even reversing, decades of progress. It also referred to the ILO Director General's call for a Global Coalition for Social Justice, which was endorsed by the ILO Governing Body<sup>1</sup> as a platform for multilateral cooperation and partnerships galvanizing support for placing social justice high on the multilateral system's agenda in the runup to the 2024 UN Summit of the Future and the proposed 2025 UN World Social Summit.<sup>2</sup> The Committee notes that in September 2023, the world was well off track on nearly two-thirds of the SDG 8 indicators of progress with the environmental and social dimensions of SDG 8 lagging behind the economic dimension.<sup>3</sup> The Committee once again recalls that realizing labour rights as human rights is a necessary prerequisite for promoting social justice and emphasizes that a new social contract, drawing upon the common values expressed in international labour standards, is today more necessary than ever. It finds it timely to also recall the first preambular paragraph of the ILO Constitution according to which "universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice".

The polycrisis and its impact on the world of work

32. The world has moved to a state of "polycrisis" characterized by a convergence of economic, environmental, geopolitical and security risks of unprecedented magnitude. As the triple planetary crisis continues unabated and geostrategic tensions proliferate, a wave of austerity further exacerbates poverty, while civic space is regressing and labour market institutions founded on the principles of representative participation, solidarity and dialogue are being increasingly questioned.
33. Despite the unprecedented worldwide expansion of social protection during the COVID-19 crisis, more than 4 billion people around the world remain entirely unprotected by social security systems, as the pandemic response proved to be uneven, deepening the gap between countries with high- and low-income levels.<sup>4</sup> Debt distress currently affects over half of the world's poorest countries, with debt servicing crowding out critical investments in social protection, health care, education and other essential services.
34. Fuelled by austerity, skyrocketing income inequalities are driving political instability and damaging social progress. The Committee recalls once again the ILO Constitution in order to emphasize that "poverty anywhere constitutes a danger to prosperity everywhere."<sup>5</sup> It notes with concern that poverty is on the rise. The purchasing power of the lowest paid is not safeguarded, putting at risk a much-needed post-pandemic recovery.<sup>6</sup> An estimated 6.4 per cent of the global workforce representing 214 million workers were living in extreme poverty in 2022, earning less than US$1.90 per day.<sup>7</sup> Women and young people fare significantly worse, a fact indicative of large inequalities in the world of work globally. As noted in the latest report by the Special Rapporteur on extreme poverty and human rights, low wages are a major explanation for the growth of the category of "working poor", since productivity gains often fail to result in better wages for workers, largely due to the expansion of non-standard forms of work and the weakening of union rights.<sup>8</sup> The formidable challenges unions face in their recruiting strategies range “from non-respect for fundamental workers’ rights, the absence of an enabling environment, inadequate enforcement mechanisms, ethnic and religious conflicts, and the massive numbers of informal workers.”<sup>9</sup> Widespread informality challenges both the competitiveness of sustainable enterprises and the representativeness of Employer and Business Membership Organisations (EBMOs), since most informal economic units are not members of such organizations.<sup>10</sup>

- 35. Austerity measures place strains on labour administrations and the institutions governing the labour market, leaving the most vulnerable exposed to the risks of transitioning towards new digital, demographic, environmental and socioeconomic realities. This year’s General Survey on Labour Administration confirms this trend noting that in certain cases the budget allocated to labour administrations is as low as 0.3 per cent of the national budget and notes that the persistent lack of financial and material resources continues to be a challenge for many labour administrations, particularly in developing countries. This penalizes first and foremost the women, children, youth and elderly, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples and migrant workers among other groups in need of support. It prevents the effective functioning of labour market institutions, including labour inspectorates, public employment agencies, vocational training institutions, which are essential to proactively preparing for the future of work meeting the needs of women and men in the labour market.<sup>11</sup>

Supervision of international labour standards in conditions of austerity

- 36. Not for the first time must the Committee address the question of application of international labour standards in conditions of austerity. At its 2008 session, it had emphasized that the then financial crisis must not be used as an excuse for lowering standards. In a general observation on the application of the ILO social security standards, it underscored the need to avoid social regression and ensure that crisis response measures did not endanger social guarantees and were not taken at the expense of cutting the resources available to public social security schemes.<sup>12</sup> It had also emphasized that “bringing the economy out of the crisis requires enhanced measures of social protection and, indeed, making social security part of the solution.”<sup>13</sup> In its consideration of the Committee’s comments, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards highlighted in 2009 that the crisis must not be used as an excuse for lowering standards and that there could be no sustainable economic recovery without sustainable and up to date labour standards.<sup>14</sup> At that time, the International Labour Conference echoed the views of both supervisory bodies by integrating in its 2009 Global Jobs Pact the following reference to international labour standards: “14. International labour standards create a basis for and support rights at work and contribute to building a culture of social dialogue particularly useful in times of crisis. In order to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and build the recovery, it is especially important to recognize that: (1) Respect for fundamental principles and rights at work is critical for human dignity. It is also critical for recovery and development ...".<sup>15</sup>

- 37. In some instances, the Committee requested governments to assess the overall impact of economic adjustment policies on, for example, employment, gender discrimination, labour inspection, the sustainability of social security systems and the rise in poverty, particularly child poverty. In its continued dialogue with Governments, the Committee has been occasionally informed of a few ex post impact assessments, but never of any ex ante assessment estimating the possible effects of economic reform measures before they were launched, nor of any follow up measures aimed at protecting the most vulnerable from the undue consequences of economic reforms.
- 38. In this respect, the Committee recalls the 2016 report of the Independent Expert on the Effects of Foreign Debt and other related international financial obligations of States on the full enjoyment of all human rights, particularly economic, social and cultural rights who, drawing inter alia on the Committee's comments regarding the impact of austerity measures on the application of ratified Conventions, recommended to "Ensure respect for labour rights through Human Rights Impact Assessments".<sup>16</sup> In 2019, guidance on how to do so was adopted by the Human Rights Council<sup>17</sup> in the form of the Guiding Principles on Human Rights Impact Assessment of Economic Reforms. The Committee notes that in general, these Guiding Principles resonate well with international labour standards, including for instance, Principles 19–20 according to which the process of doing impact assessments should comply with the principles of participation, access to information, and accountability. The Committee has consistently recalled the importance, in the context of an economic crisis, of maintaining permanent and intensive dialogue with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations in particular in the process of adopting legislation, which may have an effect on workers' rights, including those intended to alleviate a serious crisis situation. The Committee once again recalls the importance for governments that are envisaging or implementing austerity measures and other economic reforms to vet the proposed policies in a participatory framework through social dialogue grounded on evidence-based assessments of the potential impact, especially on the most vulnerable, so that the views and proposals of those who are likely to be impacted by the measures can be duly taken into consideration. It also emphasizes that impact assessments should be carried out before any policies are adopted as well as during their implementation in order to prevent, mitigate and redress any undue negative repercussions, especially on the most vulnerable.
- 39. The Committee underlines the central role of policy coherence as one of the principal objectives of the Director General's initiative to forge a Global Coalition on Social Justice. It welcomes that policy coherence is already pursued in the context of the Global Accelerator on Jobs and Social Protection for Just Transitions through a principled dialogue founded on international labour standards with a view to carving out fiscal space for decent jobs and social protection policies in pathfinder countries. The Committee looks forward to receiving information on the results of this action in the framework of its regular supervision of social security and employment policy instruments in the near future.

G. Recent developments

The Governing Body and the right to strike

40. The Committee recalls its long-standing position on the right to strike, focused on the ways in which national laws and practices affecting the right have protected or impeded the ability of workers and trade unions to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In this regard, the Committee notes the ILO Governing Body's decision, in accordance with article 37, paragraph 1, of the ILO Constitution, to request the ICJ to render urgently an advisory opinion under article 65, paragraph 1, of the Statute of the Court, and under article 103 of the Rules of Court on whether the right to strike of workers and their organizations is protected under ILO Convention No. 87 and that, on 16 November 2023, the ICJ made an Order organizing the related proceedings.

Tackling inequalities

41. The Committee takes note of work carried out as a follow up to the 2021 ILC Resolution on Addressing Inequalities in the World of Work<sup>18</sup> and in particular the comprehensive and integrated ILO strategy to reduce and prevent vertical and horizontal inequalities in the world of work for the period 2022–27 endorsed by the Governing Body in October–November 2022.<sup>19</sup> It notes that the strategy draws upon and incorporates action on a wide spectrum of international labour standards in the areas of employment policy, wages, equality and non-discrimination, and social protection. The Committee considers that initiatives to support the constituents in this regard are indispensable to complement the supervision of international labour standards. It calls for increased synergies so that supervision, technical cooperation and research can advance hand in hand in order to inform national policies giving effect to international labour standards.

Data collection and the informal economy

42. In the current digital era, reinforcing national data collection capacities is crucial to identifying needs, monitoring progress and assessing policy effectiveness. The Committee recalls the Governing Body decision which invites the States parties to the Convention concerning Statistics of Wages and Hours of Work, 1938 (No. 63), which have not yet ratified the Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160), to do so without further delay as Convention No. 63 has been placed on the agenda of the 112th Session of the International Labour Conference (2024) with a view to its abrogation. It recalls that Article 2 of Convention No. 160 contains an in-built updating mechanism as it invites Members to take into consideration the latest standards and guidelines established under ILO auspices in designing or revising the concepts, definitions and methodology used in the collection, compilation and publication of the statistics required under this Convention. The Committee welcomes in this regard the latest adoption by the International Conference of Labour Statisticians of new statistical standards<sup>20</sup> to improve the measurement of the informal economy and calls on the Office to continue providing much needed technical assistance to Member States so that capacities to put the new statistical standards into effect can be reinforced, thereby facilitating the supervision of a range of standards of relevance to addressing informality.

Promoting freedom of association and collective bargaining

43. As 2023 and 2024 mark the 75th anniversary of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), respectively, the Committee takes this opportunity to recall the central importance of freedom of association and collective bargaining as the foundation of solid labour market institutions capable of responding to the transformational drivers of change already in operation.
44. The Committee emphasizes, as it has done on numerous occasions, that crisis situations “cannot be used to justify restrictions on the civil liberties that are essential to the proper exercise of trade union rights, except in circumstances of extreme gravity and on condition that any measures affecting [their] application are limited in scope and duration to what is strictly necessary to deal with the situation in question”.<sup>21</sup>
45. The Committee welcomes the decision by the ILO Governing Body to approve an integrated strategy for the promotion and implementation of the right to collective bargaining adopted at its 349th Session.<sup>22</sup> It notes that the strategy adopted by the Governing Body includes an extended research programme to demonstrate the role that freedom of association and collective bargaining play in economic development, the reinforcement of quantitative and qualitative databases and knowledge products, and finally, efforts to foster the integration of freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining into policies and activities within the multilateral system, with a view to contributing to the delivery of the 2030 Agenda and within the framework of the Global Coalition for Social Justice.

Leveraging standards to prepare the future of work

46. With a view to meeting the needs of the constituents in areas of critical importance for the future of work, the Committee welcomes the adoption of the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208), and the plan of action for its implementation<sup>23</sup> as well as the Governing Body decision to place on the agenda of the 113th Session of the International Labour Conference (2025) two standard-setting items on decent work in the platform economy and on biological hazards.<sup>24</sup> It also welcomes the Global Strategy on Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) 2024–30<sup>25</sup> and the plan of action for its implementation adopted by the Governing Body as the new three-year reporting cycle for the supervision of the fundamental Conventions on OSH enters into force. The Committee finally takes note of the review of the implementation of the strategy to give effect to the resolution concerning the elimination of violence and harassment in the world of work<sup>26</sup> building on the strong momentum in favour of ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). All these instruments strengthen the ILO’s normative arsenal by filling important protection gaps.

Work on supply chains

47. The Committee welcomes the Governing Body’s adoption of an ILO strategy for achieving decent work in supply chains, which is based on the guiding principle that the body of international labour standards will inform all actions undertaken in this framework and provide authoritative guidance for ensuring decent work across supply chains.<sup>27</sup> The Committee notes that the strategy aims through its output 3, to ensure that information from the supervisory mechanisms with relevance to supply chains is taken into account in ILO technical and research work, and conversely, the outcomes of ILO technical and research work are brought to the attention of the supervisory mechanisms. The Committee welcomes the work that will be undertaken in this respect, with a view to promoting a systematic use of information from the work of the supervisory mechanisms relevant to ensuring decent work in supply chains across ILO means of action and in varied tools; as well as initiatives to ensure that the outcomes of ILO work in this field are brought to its attention. On its part, the Committee undertakes to follow up on these tripartite-agreed objectives within its mandate, recalling that it has considered in the past the issue of supply chains in its supervision of international labour standards, given its relevance to many key decent work deficits.<sup>28</sup>

Modernized supervision of international labour standards

48. The Committee recalls the important innovations introduced in recent years to modernize the Committee's working methods either on the Committee's own initiative or following the Governing Body's examination of measures for the strengthening of the ILO supervisory system. These innovations led notably to the introduction of electronic working methods which made it possible for the Committee to hold extended annual sessions on a hybrid basis; the introduction of a new practice of urgent appeals to ensure that information reflected in the Committee's report is up to date and draws on all available sources of information even reports required under article 22 of the ILO Constitution are not received; the consolidation of the Committee's comments in a number of thematic areas and their streamlining through various means to improve their communication and facilitate follow up.
49. Taking due note of the latest discussions in the Governing Body on proposals to streamline reporting under article 22 of the ILO Constitution,<sup>29</sup> the Committee remains committed, through the work of its Subcommittee on Working Methods, to contribute to any steps envisaged in this context so as to further strengthen the impact and effectiveness of the supervisory mechanism.

Sustainable enterprises

50. The Committee recalls that the ILO Centenary Declaration for the Future of Work has reasserted the fundamental importance of international labour standards and has indicated the need for these standards to respond to the changing patterns of the world of work, protect workers and take into account the needs of sustainable enterprises, and be subject to authoritative and effective supervision.
51. In this respect, the Committee recalls the International Labour Conference conclusions concerning the promotion of sustainable enterprises (2007)<sup>30</sup> according to which, the enabling environment for sustainable enterprise development comprises a large array of factors, the relative importance of which may vary at different stages of development and in different cultural

<sup>28</sup> ILO, Gap analysis of ILO normative and non-normative measures to ensure decent work in supply chains, Geneva, 2021, 37–39. This has involved consideration of information provided by governments when reporting on efforts to apply ratified standards, the examination of unratified Conventions and Recommendations in its annual General Survey, and within a 2020 general observation on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122).

and socio-economic contexts. At the same time, the Conference considered that among the basic, interconnected and mutually reinforcing conditions generally considered to be essential for such enabling environment, featured the respect for universal human rights and international labour standards. The role of government included the implementation and enforcement of labour and environmental standards. Regulatory reform and the removal of business constraints were not to undermine labour and environmental standards as they facilitated formalization and boosted systemic competitiveness by ensuring fair competition.

52. The UN 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development pledged to foster a dynamic and well-functioning business sector, while protecting labour rights and environmental and health standards in accordance with relevant international standards and agreements, including international labour standards and other related initiatives such as the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights. The UN Guiding Principles hold that business must act with due diligence to avoid infringement of human and labour rights and encourage states to provide effective remedies to that end.
53. It is in this context that the Committee in its General Survey of 2020 on promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape recommended that, with the strategic objective of income generation and the creation of decent jobs front and centre, States adopt a three-pronged approach: promote the establishment and development of sustainable enterprises of all sizes; facilitate their transition to the formal economy where appropriate; and formulate an enabling environment that takes into account and concretely replies to the needs of these enterprises. This year's General Survey <sup>31</sup> provides that a well-functioning and efficient labour administration system is instrumental in ensuring that fundamental principles and rights at work are promoted and respected, that there is an enabling environment for sustainable enterprises to operate, that inspection and enforcement are effective and that when disputes arise, they are resolved efficiently.
54. The Committee is thus of the view that the mandate given to it, notably to undertake an impartial and technical analysis of how ratified Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States, is an important contribution both to the enabling environment in which sustainable enterprises can flourish and the responsible business practices sustainable enterprises are adopting. Its contribution is limited by the standards that States have voluntarily ratified. It also recalls that the Office draws on the Committee's work when providing advisory services in respect of materialization of the principles set out in non-binding instruments such as the ILO Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy <sup>32</sup> in conjunction with the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights and the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises on Responsible Business Conducts.

International labour standards and just transition

55. In carrying out its mandate, the Committee remains cognisant not only of different national realities and legal systems but also of regulatory balances that are struck between evolving policy objectives. In this respect, the Committee welcomes the Resolution concerning a just transition towards environmentally sustainable economies and societies for all, <sup>33</sup> adopted by the International Labour Conference in June 2023. The Conference concluded that just transition involves maximizing the social and economic opportunities of climate and environmental action, including an enabling environment for sustainable enterprises, while minimizing and carefully managing challenges. The Committee notes in particular that according to the resolution, just transition must be based on effective social dialogue, respect for fundamental principles and rights at work, and be in accordance with international labour standards.

56. The Committee further notes that the Conference endorsed the ILO Tripartite Guidelines for a just transition towards environmentally sustainable economies and societies for all (2015) which embody a vision of sustainable development meeting the needs of the present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs, and of an enabling environment for sustainable enterprises to enhance productivity, create jobs and promote decent work while complying with social, economic and environmental regulations.
57. Finally, the Committee notes that the Resolution and Conference conclusions in this area highlight the relevance of the guidance offered by the ILO MNE Declaration and the UN Guiding Principles to foster inclusive and sustainable trade and investment frameworks, value chains and supply chains that contribute to a just transition towards environmentally sustainable economies and societies.

Concluding reflections

58. In a world where uncertainty, risk, volatility and unpredictability are becoming regular features of everyday life, a new paradigm is gradually settling in, calling for enhanced proactiveness, responsiveness and impactful action at all levels, including with regard to the supervision of international labour standards. The Committee is in a position to embrace this challenge within the limits of its mandate with a view to ensuring continuity in the application of international labour standards in these times of crisis. It recalls that crises do not suspend obligations under ratified international labour standards and that any derogations should be exercised within clearly defined limits of legality, necessity, proportionality and non-discrimination. The protection afforded by international labour standards is not designed to apply in good times only. It is in times of crisis that international labour standards acquire their full significance by providing guidance on a way forward, safeguarding and promoting social justice through a rules-based multilateral system, of which the ILO supervisory system is an integral part.
59. The Committee is pleased to note that, as decided by the Governing Body,<sup>34</sup> it will prepare in 2025 a General Survey on the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), which will provide a vantage point on the impact that multiple crises have had on the exercise of rights at work and an opportunity for the Committee to formulate comprehensive guidance in this framework.

H. Collaboration with the United Nations

60. A joint statement of the Committee and the Chairs of eight UN human rights treaty bodies, appended as an Addendum to the Committee's previous report, underlined the timeliness of protecting and realizing labour rights as human rights.<sup>35</sup> In particular, the parties: (i) reaffirmed their responsibility to promote within their respective mandates the effective fulfilment of human rights, including labour rights, especially for those at risk of being left behind, and to continue ensuring the full realization of civil, political, economic, social, and cultural rights to all without discrimination; (ii) called upon all stakeholders without exception to maximize efforts for the effective implementation of the recommendations from the Human Rights Treaty Bodies and the

<sup>35</sup> ILO, 111th Session (2023), Report III(A)/Addendum, Joint statement by the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations and UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies Chairpersons.

ILO Committee of Experts; and (iii) decided to join efforts in order to promote full respect, defend, fulfil and promote all human rights, including international labour standards, through joint analyses, concerted action, and thematic periodic meetings to effectively address the challenges referred to in the joint statement.

61. This year, the first thematic discussion between the Committee and the Treaty Bodies commemorated the 75th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). Seven Chairs or treaty body members designated by the Chairs of the treaty bodies participated either remotely or in person. In addition, two Special Rapporteurs presented their recent findings on the state of freedom of association in the context of their mandate.
62. Ms Graciela J. Dixon Caton, Chairperson of the ILO Committee of Experts recalled that the Universal Declaration and Convention No. 87 proclaimed and entrenched fundamental rights that were essential to human beings at work or wherever their freedom and dignity needed to be protected or realized based on the rule of law. Mr Claude Heller, Chair of the 35th Annual Meeting of the Chairs of the Treaty Bodies and Chair of the Committee against Torture (CAT), recalled the long-standing collaboration between the ILO Committee of Experts and the human rights treaty body system as well as last year's joint statement, which had marked the third anniversary of the UN Secretary General's Call to Action for Human Rights. He observed that this event took the cooperation between the ILO Committee of Experts and the human rights treaty body system one step further by focusing the first thematic meeting on the fundamental right to freedom of association as an enabling right for people to defend their human and labour rights and pursue their interests collectively.
63. Mr Clément Nyaletsossi Voulé, Special Rapporteur on freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, recalled the instrumental role of the Universal Declaration in support of liberation movements and decolonisation across the world, including through the participation of workers and their organisations in liberation struggles. He added that Convention No. 87, adopted five months before the Universal Declaration, reinforced the latter in relation to the right of workers to organise which was recognised in the Convention along with the corresponding rights of employers. He noted that freedom of association was inextricably linked to freedom of peaceful assembly and remained at the core of human rights protection, enabling individuals to become agents of their own development when faced with poverty, crises and multiple transitions. He presented his recent report which addressed the issue of the recognition of freedom of association and freedom of assembly for workers in the informal economy, noting the devastating effect that COVID-19 had exerted upon informal economy workers who were excluded from any type of legal protection. He called for improved protection of their fundamental freedoms, including the right to organise, the right to association and the right to strike for workers in the informal economy, since guaranteeing these rights would not only help create better conditions of work, but also sustain livelihoods, decrease inequalities, improve inclusiveness and support the fight against poverty and exclusion. He concluded by emphasizing that workers' rights should be seen as human rights and that the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly, to freedom of association and to organise, were still more relevant than ever, 75 years after the adoption of the Universal Declaration and ILO Convention No. 87.
64. Mr Olivier De Schutter, Special Rapporteur on Extreme Poverty and Human Rights, considered that the human rights system could do more to explore synergies that enriched human rights law and made it more operational for governments by referring to international labour standards and their interpretation by the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association and the Committee of Experts. He illustrated this point by referring to article 8 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR) and article 22 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), both of which concerned freedom of association and should be read in accordance with ILO Convention No. 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). He observed that no general comment had been adopted on these provisions while no special procedure of the Human Rights Council had been tasked specifically with looking at the rights of workers and linking human rights norms to ILO developments. He briefly presented the content of his report which raised three issues in particular:

- (i) how to define a living wage for the purpose of defining statutory minimum wages;
- (ii) the right to a fair remuneration, as a human right required by Article 7(a)(2) of ICESCR. He highlighted three factors that determined wage levels, notably the ability of clients to pay, the fact that many poorly paid jobs providing essential services to society had been historically performed by women, often without recognition nor remuneration, and finally, the bargaining position of the employers and workers, including the possibility for workers to exercise the right to strike in order to pressure employers to conclude collective agreements leading to more fair and just outcomes;
- (iii) the issues faced by platform workers, in the hope that the report would serve as a source of inspiration for the upcoming standard setting discussions on this subject at the International Labour Conference.

He concluded by calling for more systematic exchanges and convergence between the ILO supervisory bodies, human rights treaty bodies and special procedures.

- 65. Mr Olivier de Frouville, Chair of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances (CED), emphasized that defenders of the right to freedom of association, including trade unionists, were among the main victims of enforced disappearances, as shown by the numerous cases before the ILO Committee on Freedom of Association. He observed that without freedom of association the legal concepts serving to describe this terrorising practice would simply not exist, as the term “enforced disappearance” originated in the association of the mothers of May Square in Argentina and in other parts of the Americas. He also observed that enforced disappearances were a gendered phenomenon as the associations of families were mostly composed of women often left alone after the enforced disappearance of one or several men of their family, given that in their majority, disappeared persons were men. He emphasized that through their associations they found help, social, legal and economic assistance and most of all human support, in order to recover their dignity and engage in a combat for truth and justice. He underlined that the right to truth and freedom of association were intrinsically linked because most often it was the associations that claimed the right to know and carry the memory of the disappeared, despite pressures to “turn the page”, as there could be no sustainable peace without truth and justice. He recalled that article 24(7) of the Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance acknowledged the importance of protecting the central role of associations and organisations of victims and extended legal protection to them. He observed that despite this, associations were still under attack in many countries while in others, the associations of victims of enforced disappearances were simply not recognised or had to operate in silence in order to protect themselves from repression in the context of a constantly shrinking civic space. He concluded by emphasizing that, in this context, it was fundamental that the ILO and UN bodies combined their efforts in order to defend the right to freedom of association, which lied at the heart of democracy and collective action in defence of human rights.
- 66. Ms Laura-Maria Crăciunean-Tatu, Chair of the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), recalled the constant and longstanding partnership between the ILO Committee of Experts and CESCR. She added that CESCR often drew upon the observations and direct requests of the ILO Committee of Experts in shaping concluding observations on questions raised during constructive dialogues with States parties and in the formulation of lists of issues on which the latter provided reports. She also referred to the joint statement on freedom of association, which had been released in 2019 by CESCR along with the Human Rights Committee<sup>36</sup> in order to emphasize the importance of this right under both Covenants as the most characteristic illustration of the universal, interdependent and interrelated nature of all human rights. She added that in its monitoring and thematic work, CESCR examined the right to freedom of association not only in relation to article 8 of the Covenant on the right to form and join trade unions, but also as an enabling right relevant to the enjoyment of several other rights enshrined in the ICESCR. To illustrate this point, she referred to CESCR's General Comments on the right to just and favourable conditions at work (No. 23), paragraph 1 of which referred to the crucial role of trade unions and the right to strike; on science and economic, social and cultural rights (No. 25); on the equal right of men and women to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights (No. 16); on the right to the highest attainable standard of health (No. 14); on the economic, social and cultural rights of older persons (No. 6); on persons with disabilities (No. 5); on and the right to adequate housing (No. 4). She concluded by sharing the views expressed by previous speakers on the absence of a general comment on article 8 of the Covenant that could elaborate on the legal obligations under this article in a systematic way and supported having a more structured exchange between the ILO and CESCR on this matter.

67. Ms Verene A. Shepherd, Chair of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) observed that because of the work of the ILO and the human rights treaty bodies, the world could take for granted today the right to organise, the right to collective bargaining, the right to form trade unions and to protest against inequalities and discrimination. However, such rights had been obtained at great cost. She wished to speak in memory of all those who had created the space within which these rights could be enjoyed today and especially recall the workers who had been killed by colonial regimes. She referred to her part of the world, the Caribbean, where the right to form unions and to protest used to meet with cruel punishment. She emphasized that today these rights could be defended, inter alia, by virtue of article 5 of the Convention on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination and concluded by emphasizing that CERD would continue to reinforce these rights in its interactive dialogues with States Parties and to defend the rights of workers through its work.
68. Ms Ana Peláez Narvaez, Chair of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), referred to the need to strengthen cooperation among all the mechanisms, which worked to ensure the full recognition of human rights across the world. She emphasised that the situation of women constituted a common challenge for all human rights treaty bodies and ILO supervisory bodies and that the practice of collaborating among human rights mechanisms and the ILO Committee of Experts was very relevant for strengthening the work of all bodies. She noted that CEDAW was currently working on a draft general recommendation on the equal and inclusive representation of women in decision-making systems, which was linked to the rights to freedom of association and women's equal participation in political and public affairs, and always kept a close eye on ratifications of ILO Conventions as many of them had an impact on women. She also thanked the two Special Rapporteurs for raising the point of intersectionality in their statements, as women often suffered discrimination on more than one ground. She called for a more systematic focus on intersectionality and invited all human rights experts to exercise leadership and guide States Parties in this respect.
69. Mr Khaled C. Babacar, Member of the Committee on the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families (CMW), speaking on behalf of its Chair, Mr Edgar Corzo Sosa, referred to the multiple reasons leading to human rights violations and exploitation of migrants and the need to develop trustworthy data on these trends. He recalled that in addition to the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Member of Their Families and the ILO Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), all other human rights instruments and international labour standards equally applied to migrant workers who were thus entitled to fundamental rights to non-discrimination, protection from forced labour and trafficking, and freedom of association and collective bargaining. The latter were protected under articles 26 and 40 of the Convention on Migrant Workers along with article 20 of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights and articles 21 and 22 of the ICCPR. He also welcomed the opportunity to strengthen collaboration with the Committee of Experts on shared concerns, emphasizing that CMW had a longstanding collaboration with the ILO and was in the process of strengthening it even further, through a plan of action adopted at the CMW 36th session in 2023.

- 70. Mr Daniel Fink, Vice-Chair of the Subcommittee on the Prevention of Torture (SPT), speaking on behalf of its Chair, Ms Suzanne Jabbour, welcomed the exchange as an important opportunity to ensure that all workers and people could fully enjoy the fundamental right to freedom of association. With reference to the SPT's mandate to carry out visits in detention facilities, he expressed interest in drawing on the Committee of Experts' work in relation to freedom of association of persons deprived of their liberty, especially in cases where they were forced to work. Recalling that the enjoyment of the right to freedom of association in these contexts was minimal and circumscribed to very particular conditions, he considered that this was a good basis for cooperation in the longer run.
- 71. Mr James J. Brudney, member of the Committee of Experts, agreed with the previous speakers that Convention No. 87 was at its core an enabling right : through social dialogue, including collective bargaining, peaceful assembly and organised protest actions, freedom of association had enabled workers and organizations to exercise a wide array of other human rights. These included the rights to adequate minimum wages, reasonable hours of work, safety and health at the workplace, equal treatment of women, minorities and indigenous peoples, and to promotion of employment, including through transition of workers from the informal to the formal economy. Nevertheless, in his view, freedom of association was not just a means to an end, but also an end in itself. He recalled that when the ILO in its founding documents had stated that "labour is not a commodity", this had conveyed the principle of individual free choice, moral agency and the capacity for full and democratic participation. Unfortunately, as observed by many speakers, today's challenges to the achievement of freedom of association and its promises were numerous. He added that the Committee of Experts was acutely aware of continuous attacks on trade union members, leaders and organisers based on reports received regularly. He referred to examples from the Committee's latest observations on cases of arbitrary arrests, surveillance and judicial prosecution of independent trade unionists, incidences of violence and deaths in the context of protests linked to wage negotiations, and police violence preventing trade unions and their members from exercising their rights to organise public meetings without fear of reprisals. He also said that freedom of association for workers in the informal economy continued to be a challenge to which the Committee of Experts was certainly attentive, referring to recent jurisprudence and legislative developments on this subject across the world. He concluded by saying that protecting freedom of association was fundamental to meaningful and inclusive participation at the workplace and in society at large.
- 72. Mr Heller welcomed this opportunity for the Treaty Body Chairs and the Committee of Experts to enter into dialogue. He observed that the right to freedom of association was linked to the human rights mandates of each and every treaty body. The mandate of the CAT included all categories of protected persons, including workers exercising the right to organize. He considered that discussions and exchanges with the Committee of Experts could explore further themes and raised the example of the labour chapters of free trade agreements, which contained important provisions on fundamental freedoms, including at work. He concluded by emphasizing that it was important to continue the thematic dialogues and deepen the cooperation between the Committee of Experts and the Human Rights Treaty Bodies.

- 73. Ms Dixon Caton thanked everyone for the very rich exchange. With gratitude for those who had equipped humanity with freedom of association as a tool that continued to speak to peoples' universal aspirations, she recalled the duty to stand together in order to ensure that this tool was being effectively used. She emphasized that freedom of association could not be exercised in the absence of all other fundamental civil liberties enunciated in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, such as freedom of assembly, freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, freedom from torture and ill-treatment, and protection from threats, pressure and violence of any kind. She also said that freedom of association depended on an expanding civic space, including for Trade Unions and other representative bodies, such as Employer and Business Membership Organizations, National Human Rights Committees and Parliaments. She added that the corollary to freedom of association was the right to collective bargaining and recalled that 2024 marked the 75th anniversary of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention No. 98. She emphasized that freedom of association and collective bargaining were more relevant than ever in a world navigating multiple environmental, geopolitical, economic, demographic and technological transitions, calling for increased representation, participation and dialogue for safeguarding social peace and social justice within and among countries. She concluded by expressing the hope of having additional thematic meetings in the future as today's challenges called for increased vigilance and proactiveness on behalf of all, including monitoring and supervisory bodies of the United Nations system.

► II. Compliance with standards-related obligations

A. Reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

74. The Committee's principal task consists of the examination of the reports supplied by governments on Conventions that have been ratified by Member States (article 22 of the Constitution) and that have been declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories (article 35 of the Constitution).

Reporting arrangements

75. In accordance with the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 258th Session (November 1993), the reports due on ratified Conventions should be sent to the Office between 1 June and 1 September of each year. The Committee invites reports to be sent as soon as possible before the due date of 1 September.
76. The Committee recalls that detailed reports should be sent in the case of first reports (a first report is due after ratification) or when specifically requested by the Committee of Experts or the Conference Committee. In all other cases, simplified reports are requested on a regular basis.<sup>37</sup>
77. The Committee also recalls that, at its 306th Session (November 2009), the Governing Body decided to increase from two to three years the regular reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions. At its 334th Session (October–November 2018) the Governing Body decided to increase the reporting cycle from five to six years for all other Conventions. In certain cases, reports may be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle.<sup>38</sup>

Compliance with reporting obligations

78. This year a total of 2,131 reports (2,014 reports under article 22 of the Constitution and 117 reports under article 35 of the Constitution) were requested from governments on the application of Conventions ratified by Member States, compared to 2,103 reports last year. At the end of the present session of the Committee, 1,605 reports were received by the Office, corresponding to

<sup>37</sup> In 1993, a distinction was made between detailed and simplified reports. As explained in the report forms, in the case of simplified reports, information need normally be given only on the following points: (a) any new legislative or other measures affecting the application of the Convention; (b) replies to the questions in the report form on the practical application of the Convention (for example, statistics, results of inspections, judicial or administrative decisions) and on the communication of copies of the report to the representative organizations of employers and workers and on any observations received from these organizations; and (c) replies to comments by the supervisory bodies. At its 334th Session, the Governing Body adopted a new report form to facilitate reporting by governments when they are expected to provide simplified reports (GB.334/INS/5).

<sup>38</sup> There are several ways in which a report can be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle: (i) the Committee can place a special request in a footnote at the end of a comment for a report to be sent earlier than the year it is due according to the reporting cycle (see General Report, para. 107); (ii) an "automatic" request is sent when the government has failed to send a report in the framework of the regular reporting cycle or the report sent did not contain an answer to the Committee's comments. If a government has failed to send a report for a number of years, the case is singled out in Part II (section I) of this report and examined every year by the Conference Committee during its discussion on serious failures to fulfil reporting obligations; (iii) the Conference Committee can ask a government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle following the examination of an individual case and when it discusses the cases of serious failure to report; (iv) the Governing Body may ask a government to send a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle based on the recommendations of tripartite committees established to examine representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution or the recommendations of Commissions of Inquiry established to examine complaints under article 26 of the ILO Constitution.

75.3 per cent of the reports requested.<sup>39</sup> Last year, the Office received a total of 1,490 reports, representing 70.9 per cent. The Committee notes in particular that 42 of the 79 first reports due on the application of ratified Conventions were received by the time the Committee's session ended (last year, 45 of the 67 first reports due had been received).

- 79. The Committee observes that the levels of reports received after the due date of 1 September decreased from last year. In particular, 971 reports were received by the due date of 1 September this year, representing 45.6 per cent of reports requested, compared with 862 reports received at the previous session, representing 41.0 per cent of reports requested. The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the Member States which made special efforts to ensure compliance with their reporting obligations and is pleased to note that the rate of reports received by the 1 September deadline has been growing consistently as of 2021 at levels which are higher than before the pandemic.
- 80. The Committee still notes that approximately one third of reports continue to be received late. More specifically, out of 2,131 reports due this year, 634 (29.8 per cent) were received after the deadline. The late submission of reports disturbs the sound operation of the supervisory mechanism as the examination of a number of reports received after the deadline might be deferred due to their late arrival. Their examination in subsequent Committee sessions prevents the experts from fully focusing on the specific thematic areas due for discussion each year and also prevents governments and the social partners from obtaining timely feedback on their reports. The Committee recalls that ILO technical assistance is available to help Member States comply with their constitutional obligations and asks the Office to provide every support in this regard. It urges those Member States who have received Office assistance to make special efforts to ensure timely submission of their reports.
- 81. The Committee asks all Member States to make every effort to send the reports due under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the ILO Constitution, to do so within the deadlines and to submit complete answers to the Committee's requests so as to allow for a thorough examination by the Committee.
- 82. When examining the failure by Member States to respect their reporting obligations, the Committee adopts "general" comments (contained at the beginning of Part II (section I) of this report). It makes general observations when none of the reports due have been sent for two or more years; or when a first report has not been sent for two or more years. It makes a general direct request when, in the current year, a country has not sent the reports due, or the majority of reports due; or it has not sent a first report due.
- 83. Furthermore, as of 2017 the Committee gradually introduced a practice of urgent appeals according to which it may examine how a Convention is implemented in a ratifying country on the basis of information at its disposal if the Government has failed to submit a first report after ratification. In the meantime, a number of countries responded to urgent appeals by submitting the reports due. As of 2018, the practice of urgent appeals was extended to all reports due for more than three years. In 2020, the Committee issued for the first-time repetitions of previous comments with a new introductory text ("chapeau") informing the government concerned in cases where reports were not received for three years or more,<sup>40</sup> that if no report is supplied in time

<sup>39</sup> Appendix I to this Report provides an indication by country of whether the reports requested (under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution) have been registered or not by the end of the meeting of the Committee. Appendix II shows, for the reports requested under article 22 of the Constitution, for each year since 1932, the number and percentage of reports received by the prescribed date, by the date of the meeting of the Committee of Experts and by the date of the session of the International Labour Conference.

<sup>40</sup> The introductory text ("chapeau") now reads: The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It expects that the next report will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments. The for examination by the Committee at its next session, then the Committee may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal.

84. This year, the Committee examined the following cases in the absence of a government report following an urgent appeal (table of countries and Convention).

List of cases in which the application of ratified Conventions was examined at the Committee's session in the absence of a report following an urgent appeal

State	Conventions Nos
Dominica	22, 108 and 147
Equatorial Guinea	100
Haiti	1/14/30/106
Kiribati	111
Somalia	22, 23, 45, 95 and 111
Vanuatu	185
Yemen	58, 81 and 185

85. Based on the information provided in the "general" comments (Part II, section I of the report), none of the reports due have been sent for the past two or more years from the following 15 countries: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Barbados, Comoros, Dominica, Grenada, Haiti, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tonga, Tuvalu, Vanuatu and Yemen. The Committee urges the Governments concerned to make every effort to supply the reports requested on ratified Conventions.

86. Moreover, the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Member States that have failed to submit a report for more than three years, drawing their attention to the fact that if the reports due are not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, it may proceed to examine the application of the Conventions concerned on the basis of public information at its disposal. This year, the Committee launches an urgent appeal in its repetitions of previous comments to which a reply has not been received, requesting the following countries to submit a report with replies to the Committee's comments at its next session:

Urgent appeals launched in repetitions of previous comments

State	Conventions Nos
Afghanistan	105, 138, 140, 141, 142, 144 and 182

Democratic Republic of the Congo	88
Dominica	87, 94, and 144
Equatorial Guinea	68/92
Grenada	105, 138, 144 and 182

Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

87. In addition, the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the following governments to submit reports due for more than three years, in the absence of any pending comments:

88. In relation to first reports, the Committee notes that 11 countries have failed to supply a first report for two or more years:

State	Conventions Nos
Cook Islands	– Since 2021: MLC, 2006
Djibouti	– Since 2022: Convention No. 183

State	Conventions Nos

Lebanon	– Since 2021: MLC, 2006
Marshall Islands	– Since 2021: Convention No. 182
Sudan	– Since 2021: MLC, 2006
Tonga	– Since 2022: Convention No. 182
Tuvalu	– Since 2021: Convention No. 182
Vanuatu	– Since 2021: Convention No. 138

89. The Committee urges the governments concerned to make a special effort to supply the first reports due. It is also pleased to note that all reports that were pending for more than three years have been examined following the launching of urgent appeals.
90. The Committee, like the Conference Committee, emphasizes the particular importance of first reports, which provide the basis on which the Committee makes its initial assessment of the application of the specific Conventions concerned. The Committee is aware that, where no reports have been sent for some time, it is likely that administrative or other problems are at the origin of the difficulties encountered by governments in fulfilling their constitutional obligations. The COVID-19 pandemic and subsequent crises have no doubt aggravated such difficulties.<sup>41</sup> The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the governments which submitted three first reports this year.<sup>42</sup> It recalls the importance for governments to request assistance from the Office, and for such assistance to be provided for the preparation of first reports.
91. The Committee is pleased to note that, over the last three years, all countries have provided information on the communication of reports to employers' and workers' organizations in accordance with article 23, paragraph 2 of the Constitution thereby enabling representative organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in supervision of the application of international labour standards in accordance with the tripartite nature of the ILO.<sup>43</sup>

Replies to the comments of the Committee

92. Governments are requested to reply in their reports to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee.
93. This year, no information has been received as regards all or most of the observations and direct requests of the Committee to which a reply was requested for the following countries: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Bahamas, Barbados, Cambodia, Comoros, Congo, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Fiji, France (New Caledonia),

<sup>41</sup> In certain exceptional cases, the absence of reports is a result of more general difficulties related to the national situation, which prevents the provision of any technical assistance by the Office.

94. The Committee notes with concern that the number of comments to which replies have not been received remains high. The Committee underlines that the value attached by ILO constituents to the dialogue with the supervisory bodies on the application of ratified Conventions is considerably diminished by the failure of governments to fulfil their obligations in this respect. The Committee urges the countries concerned to provide all the information requested and recalls that they may avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Follow-up to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil reporting obligations mentioned in the report of the Committee on the Application of Standards

95. As the functioning of the supervisory system is based primarily on the information provided by governments in their reports, both the Committee and the Conference Committee considered that failure by Member States to fulfil their obligations in this respect has to be given the same level of attention as non-compliance relating to the application of ratified Conventions. The two Committees have therefore decided to strengthen, with the assistance of the Office, the follow-up given to these cases of failure.
96. The Committee welcomes the fruitful collaboration that it maintains with the Conference Committee on this matter of mutual interest which is essential to the proper discharge of their respective tasks. It asks the Office to maintain the sustained technical assistance that it has been providing to Member States in this respect.

B. Examination by the Committee of Experts of reports on ratified Conventions

97. In examining the reports received on ratified Conventions declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories, in accordance with its practice, the Committee assigned to each of its members the initial responsibility for a group of Conventions. The members submit their preliminary conclusions on the instruments for which they are responsible to the Committee in plenary sitting for discussion and approval. Decisions on comments are adopted by consensus.
98. The Committee wishes to inform Member States that it examined all reports that were brought to its attention.

Observations and direct requests

99. First of all, the Committee considers that it is worthy of note that in 243 cases it has found, following examination of the corresponding reports, that no further comment was called for regarding the manner in which a ratified Convention had been implemented.
100. In other cases, however, the Committee has found it necessary to draw the attention of the governments concerned to the need to take further action to give effect to certain provisions of Conventions or to supply additional information on given points. As in previous years, its comments have been drawn up in the form of either "observations", which are reproduced in the report of the Committee, or “direct requests”, which are not published in the Committee’s report, but are communicated directly to the governments concerned and are available online.<sup>44</sup>

101. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They point to important discrepancies between the obligations under a Convention and the related law and/or practice of Member States. They may address the absence of measures to give effect to a Convention or to take appropriate action following the Committee’s requests. They may also highlight progress, as appropriate. Direct requests allow the Committee to be engaged in a continuing dialogue with governments often when the questions raised are primarily of a technical nature. They can also be used for the clarification of certain points when the information available does not enable a full appreciation of the extent to which the obligations are fulfilled. Direct requests are also used to examine the first reports supplied by governments on the application of Conventions.
102. This year the Committee made 612 observations and 1,053 direct requests. The Committee’s observations appear in Part II of this report, together with, for each subject, a list of direct requests. An index of all observations and direct requests, classified by country, is provided in Appendix VII to the report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards

103. The Committee examines the follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards as this information forms an integral part of the Committee’s dialogue with the governments concerned. This year, the Committee has examined the follow-up to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards during the last session of the International Labour Conference (111th Session, June 2023) in the following cases:

Follow-up of representations under article 24 of the Constitution and complaints under article 26 of the Constitution

104. In accordance with the established practice, the Committee also examines the measures taken by governments pursuant to the recommendations of tripartite committees (set up to examine representations under article 24 of the Constitution) and commissions of inquiry (set up to examine complaints under article 26 of the Constitution). The corresponding information forms an integral part of the Committee's dialogue with the governments concerned. The Committee considers it useful to indicate more clearly the cases in which it follows up on the effect given to the recommendations made under these constitutional supervisory procedures, as indicated in the following tables:

Follow-up given to legislative aspects referred by the Committee on Freedom of Association

- 106. In accordance with established practice, the Committee also examines the legislative aspects referred to it by the CFA. At the latter's request, the Committee decided to indicate these cases in the following table:

Special notes

- 107. As in the past, the Committee has indicated by special notes (traditionally known as “footnotes”) at the end of its comments the cases in which, because of the nature of the problems encountered in the application of the Conventions concerned, it has deemed it appropriate to ask the government to supply a report earlier than would otherwise have been the case and, in some instances, to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2024.
- 108. In order to identify cases for which it inserts special notes, the Committee uses the basic criteria described below, while taking into account the following general considerations. First, the criteria are indicative. In exercising its discretion in the application of the criteria, the Committee may also have regard to the specific circumstances of the country and the length of the reporting cycle. Second, the criteria are applicable to cases in which an earlier report is requested, often referred to as a “single footnote”, as well as to cases in which the government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference, often referred to as a “double footnote”. The difference between these two categories is one of degree. Third, a serious case otherwise justifying a special note to provide full particulars to the Conference (double footnote) might only be given a special note to provide an early report (single footnote) when there has been a recent discussion of the case in the Conference Committee. Finally, the Committee wishes to point out that it exercises restraint in its recourse to “double footnotes” in deference to the Conference Committee's decisions as to the cases it wishes to discuss.
- 109. The criteria to which the Committee has regard are the following:
- the seriousness of the problem; in this respect, the Committee emphasizes that an important consideration is the necessity to view the problem in the context of a particular Convention and to take into account matters involving fundamental rights, workers' health, safety and well-being, as well as any adverse impact, including at the international level, on workers and other categories of protected persons;

- the persistence of the problem;
- the urgency of the situation; the evaluation of such urgency is necessarily case specific, according to standard human rights criteria, such as life-threatening situations or problems where irreversible harm is foreseeable;
- the quality and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

- 110. In addition, the Committee wishes to emphasize that its decision not to double footnote a case which it has previously drawn to the attention of the Conference Committee in no way implies that it has considered progress to have been made therein.
- 111. At its 76th Session (November–December 2005), the Committee decided that the identification of cases in respect of which a government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference would be a two-stage process: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee the insertion of special notes; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final, collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.
- 112. This year, the Committee has requested governments to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in 2024 in the following cases:

Cases of progress

- 114. Following its examination of the reports supplied by governments, and in accordance with its standard practice, the Committee refers in its comments to cases in which it expresses its satisfaction or interest at the progress achieved in the application of the respective Conventions.
- 115. At its 80th and 82nd Sessions (2009 and 2011), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the identification of cases of progress:
- (1) The expression by the Committee of interest or satisfaction does not mean that it considers that the country in question is in general conformity with the Convention, and in the same comment the Committee may express its satisfaction or interest at a specific issue while also expressing regret concerning other important matters which, in its view, have not been addressed in a satisfactory manner.
  - (2) The Committee wishes to emphasize that an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measures adopted by the government concerned.
  - (3) The Committee exercises its discretion in noting progress, taking into account the particular nature of the Convention and the specific circumstances of the country.
  - (4) The expression of progress can refer to different kinds of measures relating to national legislation, policy or practice.
  - (5) If the satisfaction relates to the adoption of legislation, the Committee may also consider appropriate follow-up measures for its practical application.
  - (6) In identifying cases of progress, the Committee takes into account both the information provided by governments in their reports and the comments of employers' and workers' organizations.
- 116. Since first identifying cases of satisfaction in its report in 1964,<sup>45</sup> the Committee has continued to follow the same general criteria. The Committee expresses satisfaction in cases in which, following comments it has made on a specific issue, governments have taken measures through either the adoption of new legislation, an amendment to the existing legislation or a significant change in the national policy or practice, thus achieving fuller compliance with their obligations under the respective Conventions. In expressing its satisfaction, the Committee indicates to governments and the social partners that it considers the specific matter resolved. The reason for identifying cases of satisfaction is twofold:
- to place on record the Committee's appreciation of the positive action taken by governments in response to its comments;
  - to provide an example to other governments and social partners which have to address similar issues.
- 117. Details concerning these cases of progress are found in Part II of this report and cover 33 instances in which measures of this kind have been taken in 23 countries. The full list is as follows:

118. Thus the total number of cases in which the Committee has been led to express its satisfaction at the progress achieved following its comments has risen to 3,228 since the Committee began listing them in its report.

119. Within cases of progress, the distinction between cases of satisfaction and cases of interest was formalized in 1979.<sup>46</sup> In general, cases of interest cover measures that are sufficiently advanced to justify the expectation that further progress would be achieved in the future and regarding which the Committee would want to continue its dialogue with the government and the social partners. The Committee's practice has developed to such an extent that cases in which it expresses interest may encompass a variety of measures. The paramount consideration is that the measures contribute to the overall achievement of the objectives of a particular Convention. This may include:

- draft legislation that is before parliament, or other proposed legislative changes forwarded or available to the Committee;
- consultations within the government and with the social partners;
- new policies;

<sup>46</sup> Report of the Committee of Experts submitted to the 65th Session (1979) of the International Labour Conference, para. 122.

- the development and implementation of activities within the framework of a technical cooperation project or following technical assistance or advice from the Office;
- judicial decisions, according to the level of the court, the subject matter and the force of such decisions in a particular legal system, would normally be considered as cases of interest unless there is a compelling reason to note a particular judicial decision as a case of satisfaction; or
- the Committee may also note as cases of interest the progress made by a state, province or territory in the framework of a federal system.

120. Details concerning the cases in question are found either in Part II of this report or in the requests addressed directly to the governments concerned, and include 181 instances in which measures of this kind have been adopted in 95 countries. The full list is as follows:

Practical application

121. As part of its assessment of the application of Conventions in practice, the Committee notes the information contained in governments' reports, such as information relating to judicial decisions, statistics and labour inspection. The supply of this information is requested in almost all report forms, as well as under the specific terms of some Conventions. In the context of the COVID-19 pandemic and the interlocking crises that followed, such information is indispensable to complete the examination of national legislation and to help the Committee identify the issues arising from real problems of application in practice. The Committee wishes to emphasize to governments the importance of submitting such information and also encourages employers' and workers' organizations to submit clear and up-to-date information on the application of Conventions in practice.

Observations made by employers' and workers' organizations

122. At each session, the Committee recalls that the contribution by employers' and workers' organizations is essential for the Committee's evaluation of the application of Conventions in national law and in practice. Member States have an obligation under article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution to communicate to the representative employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports supplied under articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution. Compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards. In some cases, governments transmit the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports, sometimes adding their own comments. However, in the majority of cases, observations from employers' and workers' organizations are sent directly to the Office which, in accordance with the established practice, transmits them to the governments concerned for comment, so as to ensure respect for due process. For reasons of transparency, the record of all observations received from employers' and workers' organizations on the application of ratified Conventions since the last session of the Committee is included as Appendix III to its report. Where the Committee finds that the observations are not within the scope of the Convention or do not contain information that would add value to its examination of the application of the Convention, it will not refer to them in its comments. Otherwise, the observations received from employers' and workers' organizations may be considered in an observation or in a direct request, as appropriate.

In a reporting year

123. At its 86th Session (2015), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the treatment of observations from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalled that, in a reporting year, when observations from employers' and workers' organizations are not provided with the government's report, they should be received by the Office by 1 September at the latest, so as to allow the government concerned to have a reasonable time to respond, thereby enabling the Committee to examine, as appropriate, the issues raised at its session the same year. When observations are received after 1 September, they would not be examined in substance in the absence of a reply from the government, except in exceptional cases. Over the years, the Committee has identified exceptional cases as those where the allegations are sufficiently substantiated and there is an urgent need to address the situation, whether because they refer to matters of life and death or to fundamental human rights or because any delay may cause irreparable harm. In addition, observations referring to legislative proposals or draft laws may also be examined by the Committee in the absence of a reply from the government, where this may be of assistance for the country at the drafting stage.

Outside of a reporting year

124. At its 88th Session (2017), following its consideration of the Governing Body's review of the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years, the Committee indicated its willingness to consider the manner in which it might broaden the very strict criteria for breaking its cycle of review when receiving comments from workers' or employers' organizations on a specific country under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and decided that inspiration in this regard could be drawn from those criteria used for "footnoting" cases and set out in paragraph 73 of that year's General Report.

125. In light of the October–November 2018 Governing Body decision (GB.334/INS/5) expanding the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years and expressing its understanding that the Committee would further review, clarify and, where appropriate, broaden the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle with respect to technical Conventions, the Committee proceeded with the review of the criteria mentioned above at its 89th Session (2018).

- 126. The Committee recalls that, in a non-reporting year, when employers' and workers' organizations send observations which simply repeat comments made in previous years, or refer to matters already raised by the Committee, such comments will be examined in the year when the government's report is due, in accordance with the regular reporting cycle. In this case, a report will not be requested from the government outside of that cycle.
- 127. Where the observations on a technical Convention meet the criteria set out in paragraph below, the Committee will request the office to issue a notification to governments that the article 23 observations received will be examined at its subsequent session with or without a response from the government. This would ensure that governments have sufficient notice while ensuring that the examination of matters of importance are not further delayed.
- 128. The Committee would thus review the application of a technical Convention outside of a reporting year following observations submitted by employers' and workers' organizations having due regard to the following elements:
- the seriousness of the problem and its adverse impact on the application of the Convention;
  - the persistence of the problem;
  - the relevance and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.
- 129. With respect to any Convention (fundamental, governance or technical), recalling its well-established practice, the Committee will examine employers' and workers' observations in a non-reporting year in the year received in the exceptional cases set out in paragraph above, even in the absence of a reply from the government concerned.
- 130. The Committee emphasized that the procedure set out in the paragraphs above aims at giving effect to decisions taken by the Governing Body which have extended the reporting cycle and called for safeguards in that context, to ensure that effective supervision of the application of ratified Conventions is maintained. One of these safeguards consists in giving due recognition to the possibility afforded to employers' and workers' organizations to draw the attention of the Committee to matters of particular concern arising from the application of ratified Conventions, even in a year when no report is due. The approach above also pays particular attention to the importance of providing due notice to governments, except in exceptional circumstances, and in all cases the Committee will indicate its reasons for breaking the cycle.
- 131. The Committee notes that since its last session, it has received 1,276 observations (compared to 1,156 last year), 221 of which (compared to 212 last year) were communicated by employers' organizations and 1,055 (compared to 944 last year) by workers' organizations. The great majority of the observations received (1,220 compared to 955 last year) related to the application of ratified Conventions; <sup>47</sup> 551 of these observations (compared to 416 last year) concerned the application of fundamental Conventions, 166 (compared to 140 last year) related to governance Conventions and 503 (compared to 399 last year) concerned the application of other Conventions. Moreover, 56 observations were received in relation to the 2023 General Survey on Labour Administration. The Committee notes that, 735 of the observations received this year on the application of ratified Conventions were transmitted directly to the Office. In 485 cases, the governments transmitted the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports. The

<sup>47</sup> Appendix III to this Report.

Committee notes that in general the employers' and workers' organizations concerned endeavoured to gather and present information on the application of ratified Conventions in specific countries, both in law and in practice. The Committee recalls that observations of a general nature relating to certain Conventions are more appropriately addressed within the framework of the Committee's consideration of General Surveys or within other forums of the ILO.

Cases in which the need for technical assistance has been highlighted

- 132. The combination of the work of the supervisory bodies and the practical guidance given to Member States through development cooperation and technical assistance has always been one of the key dimensions of the ILO supervisory system. The Committee follows up on a number of these cases in the present report, especially where they relate to the follow-up to conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at its 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2023).<sup>48</sup> Moreover, assistance was provided by the International Training Centre of the ILO (Turin Centre) and international labour standards specialists based in the field to more than 70 countries for the preparation of article 22 reports on ratified Conventions, including the MLC, 2006.
- 133. The Committee notes that this year, the International Labour Standards Academy focused on the regions of Europe-Central Asia and the Arab States, delivering training on international labour standards to the ILO constituents, judges, law professors and other legal professionals across the two regions. The Committee notes the International Labour Standards Academy's important contribution to building the reporting capacities of governments, employers' and workers' organizations including in countries facing serious weaknesses in this field. The Committee also notes that in addition to the International Labour Standards Academy, the Turin Centre delivered:
- online courses on reporting in English and French as well as tailor-made training on reporting to constituents;
  - international labour standards training to judges in the Americas region;
  - a series of capacity-building events with a focus on promoting the ratification and legal implementation of the MLC, 2006, as well as reporting thereon;
  - finally, the Committee welcomes the tripartite digital activity carried out at the global level by the Office and the Turin Centre in order to facilitate the submission of reports under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and comments by workers' and employers' organizations for the preparation of the 2025 General Survey.
- 134. In addition to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil certain specific obligations related to reporting, the cases for which, in the Committee's view, technical assistance from the Office would be particularly useful in helping Member States to address gaps in law and in practice in the implementation of ratified Conventions, particularly in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, are highlighted in the following table and details can be found in Part II of this report:

C. Reports under article 19 of the Constitution

135. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body decided that the subjects of General Surveys should be aligned with those of the annual recurrent discussions in the Conference under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008. This year, governments were requested to supply reports under article 19 of the Constitution for the General Survey on the Labour Administration Convention, 1978 (No. 150), and Recommendation (No. 158).<sup>49</sup> The General Survey has been prepared on the basis of a preliminary examination by a working party comprising six members of the Committee in accordance with the practice followed in previous years.
136. The Committee notes with regret that, for the past five years, none of the reports on unratified Conventions and on Recommendations requested under article 19 of the Constitution have been received from the following 21 countries: Albania, Barbados, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Chad, Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Haiti, Marshall Islands, Mongolia, North Macedonia, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Uganda and Yemen.
137. The Committee once again urges governments to provide the reports requested so that its General Surveys can be as comprehensive as possible and provide a complete picture of developments relevant to the impact of COVID-19 in areas that are particularly affected by the pandemic.

D. Submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities (article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 of the Constitution)

138. In accordance with its terms of reference, the Committee this year examined the following information supplied by governments of Member States pursuant to article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization:
- information on measures taken to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference from June 1970 (54th Session) to June 2023 (111th Session) (Conventions Nos 131 to 191, Recommendations Nos 135 to 208 and Protocols); and
  - replies to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee at its 93rd Session (November–December 2022).
139. Appendix IV of Part II of the report contains a summary of the most recent information received indicating the competent national authorities to which the following instruments were submitted and the date of submission: the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), adopted at the 108th Session of the Conference, as well as the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Convention, (No. 191), and the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Recommendation, 2023 (No. 207), as well as the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208), adopted at the 111th Session of the Conference. In addition, Appendix IV summarizes the information supplied by governments in 2023 with respect to the instruments adopted in earlier years and submitted to the competent authorities.

140. Additional statistical information is found in Appendices V and VI of Part II of the report. Appendix V, compiled based on information provided by governments, shows where each Member State stands in terms of its constitutional obligation of submission. Appendix VI shows the overall submission status of each instrument adopted since the 54th Session (June 1970) of the Conference. All instruments adopted prior to the 54th Session of the Conference have been submitted to the competent national authorities. The statistical data in Appendices V and VI are regularly updated by the competent units of the Office and can be accessed in NORMLEX.

103rd Session

141. At its 103rd Session in June 2014, the Conference adopted the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203). The Committee notes that 130 governments have provided information on the submission of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, to the competent national authorities, whereas 115 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 203 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, which entered into force on 9 November 2016, has been ratified by 60 Member States: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Chile, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechia, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Djibouti, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mexico, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

104th Session

142. At its 104th Session in June 2015, the Conference adopted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 204 to the competent authorities ended on 12 June 2016, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 12 December 2016. The Committee notes that 112 governments have provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of Recommendation No. 204. It refers in this regard to Appendix IV of Part II of the report, which contains a summary of information supplied by governments on submission, including with respect to Recommendation No. 204. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit Recommendation No. 204 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

105th and 106th Sessions

143. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 105th Session of the Conference (May–June 2016). At its 106th Session, in June 2017, the Conference adopted the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent authorities ended on 16 June 2018, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 16 December 2018. The Committee notes that 97 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Recommendation No. 205 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

107th and 108th Sessions

144. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 107th Session of the Conference (May–June 2018). At its 108th Session, in June 2019, the Conference adopted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206). The 12-month period for submission of Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to the competent authorities ended on 21 June 2020, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 21 December 2020. The Committee notes that 98 governments have provided information on the submission of Convention No. 190, whereas 79 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 206 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that Convention No. 190, which entered into force on 25 June 2021, has been ratified by 36 Member States: Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Bahamas, Barbados, Belgium, Canada, Central African Republic, Chile, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Lesotho, Mauritius, Mexico, Namibia, Nigeria, North Macedonia, Norway, Panama, Papua New Guinea, Peru, Rwanda, San Marino, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, Uganda, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Uruguay. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

109th, 110th and 111th Sessions

145. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 109th Session of the Conference (May–June 2021 and November–December 2021). Moreover, no instrument was adopted at the 110th Session of the Conference (May–June 2022). At its 111th Session (June 2023), the Conference adopted the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Convention (No. 191) and the Safe and Healthy Working Environment (Consequential Amendments) Recommendation, 2023 (No. 207), as well as the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208). The 12-month period for submission of these instruments to the competent authorities will end on 12 June 2024, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) will end on 12 December 2024. The Committee notes that one government, Azerbaijan, has provided information on submission of these instruments to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit the above instruments to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to them.

Cases of progress

146. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Governments of the following countries: Benin, Botswana, Central African Republic, Chad, Kazakhstan, Maldives, Marshall Islands, Mozambique, Seychelles, the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and Viet Nam. It welcomes the efforts made by these governments in overcoming significant delays in submission and taking important steps toward fulfilling their constitutional obligations to submit to their legislatures the instruments adopted by the Conference over a number of years.

Special problems

147. To facilitate the work of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, this report only mentions those governments that have not submitted the instruments adopted by the Conference to their competent authorities for at least seven sessions. These special problems are referred to as cases of “serious failure to submit”. This time frame begins at the 99th Session (2010) and concludes at the 111th Session (2023), bearing in mind that the Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations during its 97th (2008), 98th (2009), 102nd (2013), 107th (2018), 109th (2021) and 110th (2022) Sessions. Thus, this time frame was deemed long enough to warrant inviting the governments concerned to a special sitting of the Conference Committee so that they could account for delays in submission. In addition, the Committee is also providing information in its observations concerning cases of “failure to submit”, in relation to governments that have not submitted to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the last six sessions of the Conference.

148. The Committee notes that, at the closure of its 94th Session on 9 December 2023, the following 26 Member States (48 in 2020, 45 in 2021 and 42 in 2022) were in the category of “serious failure to submit”: Angola, Belize, the Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Hungary, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Solomon Islands, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.

149. The Committee is aware of the exceptional circumstances that have affected some of these countries for years, as a result of which some of them have been deprived of the institutions needed to fulfil their obligation to submit instruments. At the 111th Session of the Conference (June 2023), some Government delegations supplied information explaining why their countries had been unable to meet their constitutional obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to their national legislatures. Further to the concerns raised by the Committee of Experts, the Conference Committee also expressed deep concern at the failure to respect this obligation. It pointed out that compliance with this constitutional obligation, which means submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to national legislatures, is of the utmost importance in ensuring the effectiveness of the Organization’s standards-related activities.

150. The above-mentioned countries have been identified in observations published in this report, and the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols that have not been submitted are indicated in the statistical appendices. The Committee considers it worthwhile to alert the governments concerned so as to enable them immediately, and as a matter of urgency, to take appropriate steps to bring themselves up to date and into compliance with this obligation. The Committee recalls that governments may benefit from the measures the Office is prepared to take, upon their request, to assist them in taking the steps required for the rapid submission to their legislature of the pending instruments.

Comments of the Committee and replies from governments

- 151. As in its previous reports, the Committee makes individual observations in section II of Part II of this report on the points that should be brought to the special attention of governments. In general, observations are made in cases where there has been no information for five or more sessions of the Conference. Furthermore, requests for additional information on other points have been addressed directly to a number of countries (see the list of direct requests at the end of section II).
- 152. As the Committee has already pointed out, it is important that governments send the information and documents required by the questionnaire appended to the Memorandum adopted by the Governing Body in March 2005. The Committee must receive for examination a summary or a copy of the documents submitting the instruments to the legislative bodies, an indication of the date of submission, and be informed of the proposals made as to the action to be taken on the instruments submitted. The obligation of submission is discharged only once the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted to the legislature and a decision has been taken on them. The Office must be informed of this decision, as well as of the submission of instruments to the legislature.
- 153. The obligation of submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the ILO Constitution is one of the fundamental obligations of Member States. Unlike other multilateral treaties, where States are not required to undertake any specific action, including ratification, even if they have participated in the adoption of the instruments, the ILO Conventions require going a step closer to international legislation, in the sense that the Constitution has made it an obligation for all Member States to give serious consideration to their implementation, including ratification, although ratification by itself is in the prerogative of a sovereign State and not required under this constitutional obligation on submission. The Committee, therefore, reiterates the importance of the reporting obligation of Member States with respect to submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the Constitution, differentiating itself from other ordinary treaties and making ILO Conventions stand out in the universal framework of the protection of social rights.
- 154. The Committee hopes to continue to note cases of progress in this matter in its next report. It again reminds governments that they may seek technical assistance from the ILO, particularly through the standards specialists in the field.

* * *

- 155. Lastly, the Committee would like to express its profound appreciation for the invaluable assistance rendered to it by the officials of the Office, whose expertise, competence and devotion to duty make it possible for the Committee to accomplish its complex task.

Part II. Observations concerning particular countries

► I. Observations concerning reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

---

Observations on serious failure to report

Afghanistan

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Nine reports are now due, which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the responsible authorities to send their reports without delay and advises them that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

While noting the complex situation prevailing in the country, and recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for South Asia, the Committee trusts that all responsible authorities will honour their international commitments and provide information in response to the Committee's previous comments.

Antigua and Barbuda

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-four reports are now due, including the first reports on the Home Work Convention, 1996 (No. 177), the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184), the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003, as amended (No. 185), the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), and the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189). Most of the reports due should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send their reports without delay and advises them that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Barbados

The Committee notes with concern that, for the second year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Thirteen reports are now due, which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Comoros

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the third year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-eight reports are now due, including the first reports on the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), and the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143). Most of the reports due should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send their reports without delay and advises them that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Cook Islands

The Committee notes with deep concern that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2021, has not been received.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first report without delay on the MLC, 2006, and advises it that, even in the absence of the report, the Committee may fully review the application of the Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report, in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Djibouti

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the application of the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), due since 2022, has not been received. In addition, the Committee notes that the reports due this year were not received. Nineteen reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Dominica

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the eleventh year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Nine reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

On the basis of the decision of the Committee concerning the treatment of urgent appeals, the Committee decided to examine, at this session, the application of Conventions Nos 22, 108, and 147 for which the reports have not been received for three years or more, based on public information at its disposal.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Fiji

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), due since 2022, has not been received. In addition, the Committee notes that the reports due this year were not received. Six reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Grenada

The Committee notes with deep concern that the first reports on the application of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), and the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), both due since 2021, have not been received. In addition, the Committee notes that the reports due this year were not received. Eight reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first reports without delay on the MLC, 2006, and on Convention No. 189, and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Haiti

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Thirteen reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

On the basis of the decision of the Committee concerning the treatment of urgent appeals, the Committee decided to examine, at this session, the application of Conventions Nos 1, 14, 30 and 106 for which the reports have not been received for three years or more, based on public information at its disposal.

While noting the complex situation prevailing in the country, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report in accordance with its constitutional obligation. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Papua New Guinea

The Committee notes with concern that for the second year the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Seventeen reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions

The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Saint Lucia

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the tenth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Eighteen reports are now due, including the first report on the application of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155). Most of the reports due should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send their reports without delay and advises them that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for the Caribbean and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Somalia

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the third year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Twenty-one reports are now due, including the first reports on the application of the Migration for Employment Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 97), the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). Some of the reports due should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions

On the basis of the decision of the Committee concerning the treatment of urgent appeals, the Committee decided to examine, at this session, the application of Conventions Nos 22, 23, 45, 95 and 111 for which the reports have not been received for three years or more, based on public information at its disposal.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the ILO Decent Work Team for North Africa and the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Sudan

The Committee notes with deep concern that the first report on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), due since 2021, has not been received. None of the reports due this year have been received, including the first reports on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). Thirteen reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first report on the MLC, 2006, without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of this report, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

While noting the complex situation prevailing in the country, and recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Syrian Arab Republic

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Thirty-six reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send the reports on Conventions Nos 29, 100, 105, 107, 111, 138 and 182 without delay and advises it that, even in the absence of these reports, the Committee may fully review the application of these Conventions at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments

Tonga

The Committee notes with concern that the first report on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), due since 2022, has not been received. The Committee hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report in accordance with its constitutional obligation.

Tuvalu

The Committee notes with deep concern that the first report on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), due since 2021, has not been received.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first report without delay on Convention No. 182 and advises it that, even in the absence of the report, the Committee may fully review the application of the Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit this first report in accordance with its constitutional obligation. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Vanuatu

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fifth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. The Committee also notes that the first report on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), due since 2021, has not been received. Nine reports are now due, some of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

The Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Government to send its first report without delay on Convention No. 138 and advises it that, even in the absence of the report, the Committee may fully review the application of the Convention at its next meeting on the basis of available information.

On the basis of the decision of the Committee concerning the treatment of urgent appeals, the Committee decided to examine, at this session, the application of Convention No. 185 for which the report has not been received for three years or more, based on public information at its disposal.

The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Yemen

The Committee notes with deep concern that, for the fourth year, the reports due on ratified Conventions have not been received. Eighteen reports are now due, most of which should have included information in reply to the Committee's comments, including on fundamental Conventions.

On the basis of the decision of the Committee concerning the treatment of urgent appeals, the Committee decided to examine, at this session, the application of Conventions Nos 58, 81 and 185, for which the reports have not been received for three years or more, based on public information at its disposal.

Recalling that technical assistance was provided on these issues this year by the International Training Centre of the ILO The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will soon submit all its reports in accordance with its constitutional obligation and that they will respond to the Committee's comments.

Freedom of association, collective bargaining, and industrial relations

Albania

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2019 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in which the latter alleged violations of trade union rights in practice and, in particular, that workers were often unable to join the union of their own choosing and it was difficult for union federations to open bank accounts. The Committee regrets that the Government provides no reply thereto. Emphasizing the importance of governments' replies to the observations of the social partners, the Committee reiterates its above request.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of foreign workers. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take without delay the necessary measures, including through possible legislative amendments, to ensure that all foreign workers, whether or not they have a residence or a working permit, benefit from the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes the adoption of Law No. 79/2021 on Foreigners, and the Government's indication that according to section 5 of the Law, foreigners residing in the Republic of Albania shall enjoy the rights enshrined in the Constitution and the ratified international Conventions. Furthermore, pursuant to the same provision, in the course of their decision-making concerning foreigners, the designated authorities shall apply the provisions of the Law in accordance with the fundamental rights and freedoms enshrined in the Constitution, and the ratified international Conventions and agreements. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Labour Code is the legislation that regulates freedom of association and the right to organize. The Committee notes the Government's indication that foreigners with regular stay in the country enjoy the right to join organizations and foreigners whose stay is irregular must leave Albania. The Government further indicates that in light of the Committee's request, it is necessary to carry out an analysis of the national legislation regulating the right of foreign workers to join trade unions with a special focus on workers without residence permits in order to prepare the necessary amendments to comply with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken to that end and recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate whether civil servants not exercising authority in the name of the state, and working in the transport and public television services may exercise the right to strike, subject to the possible establishments of minimum services and, if these civil servants are not able to exercise the said right, to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation (section 35 of the Act on civil servants (No. 152 of 2013)). The Committee notes the Government's indication that while civil servants enjoy the right to strike, except those who exercise authority in the name of the state, the right to strike is not allowed in essential services, such as transport and public television. The Committee considers that essential services, for the purposes of restricting or prohibiting the right to strike, are only those "the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population", and that transport and public television are not essential services in the strict sense of the term (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 131, 134 and 135). The Committee once again recalls that the introduction of a negotiated minimum service, as a possible alternative to the full prohibition of strike action in these public services in which it is important to deliver the basic needs of users, could be appropriate (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 136). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 35 of the Act on civil servants accordingly and to provide information on measures taken to that end.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has still not provided its comments on the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) submitted in 2019 and concerning, in particular, allegations of anti-union discrimination in an energy company, a footwear company and a public agency. The Committee reiterates its call for the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the cases of anti-union discrimination resolved or pending before the Commissioner for Protection against Discrimination (CPD) or the Court and to specify the duration of the proceedings and their specific outcomes.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government with respect to 14 cases of alleged discrimination against trade union members or trade union representatives examined by the CPD between January 2020 and February 2023. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) the CPD found that discrimination was established in five cases; (ii) in these five cases the decisions were challenged before the courts, the CPD resolutions being upheld in three instances while two cases still being pending; (iii) discrimination was not found in seven cases; (iv) the examination of two complaints was suspended by the CPD pending related judicial decisions. The Committee takes due note of this information. It notes, in particular, that the CPD was, on average, able to pronounce itself within eight months and that its decisions included, inter alia the reinstatement of dismissed workers. At the same time, the Committee observes however that no information was provided on cases of anti-union discrimination that may have been filed directly before the courts. With a view to being able to evaluate the effectiveness of the mechanisms in place the Committee therefore requests the Government to continue providing information on cases of alleged anti-union discrimination addressed both by the CPD and the Courts and to specify the duration of the proceedings and their specific outcomes.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, noting that section 161 of the Labour Code provides that a collective agreement can only be concluded at the enterprise or branch level and that no collective agreements had been concluded at the national level, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures to promote voluntary collective agreements at all levels, including at national level, and to provide information on the measures taken and their impact on the promotion of collective bargaining.

In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) no collective agreements have been concluded between the Government and workers and employers' representatives at the national level; (ii) between 2019 and 2023 a final total of 24 collective agreements at the level of branch/profession were concluded. The sectors covered by these collective contracts are in the field of the extraction and processing industry, electricity, agri-food, services, tourism, public order, professional education and health; (iii) in the public sector, 75 per cent of employees are covered by collective agreements, while in the private sector, 25 per cent of employees are covered by collective agreements; (iv) the collective agreement of the health sector has been registered in 2021 and is in force until 2024; and (v) the low level of coverage of collective bargaining in the private sector is the consequence of both the weak presence of unions in private companies and the lack of dialogue of employers towards trade unions.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government concerning: (i) the recognition by the National Employment and Skills Strategy 2023 – 2030 of the importance of collective agreements as a unique mechanism for regulating working conditions and employment conditions and of the need to strengthen collective bargaining in sectors characterized by a high level of employment and by workers' vulnerability; (ii) the planned tripartite national seminar, with the ILO support, on collective bargaining, and friendly resolution of disputes; (iii) the plans to expand the range of services available with respect to, conflict prevention and the promotion of collective bargaining; and (iv) the creation of a tripartite working group to determine the necessary legal and institutional changes to be adopted for this purpose. The Committee welcomes these different initiatives and prospects and invites the Government to: (i) take further measures to promote collective bargaining at all levels including at the national level when the parties so decide, and to revise article 161 of the Labour Code in this regard; (ii) inform about the specific action taken to effectively promote collective bargaining in the private sector, in particular with respect to sectors with a high proportion of vulnerable workers.

The Committee recalls that the Government may continue to avail itself of the ILO technical assistance.

Algeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the following representative employers' and workers' organizations received on: 12 February and 30 August 2023 from the General and Autonomous Confederation of Workers in Algeria (CGATA), 1 March 2023 from CGATA, the Trade Union Confederation of Productive Workers (COSYFOP), the National Autonomous Union of Public Administration Personnel (SNAPAP), the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG), Public Services International (PSI), the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) and IndustriALL Global Union; 31 August from COSYFOP; 1 September 2022 and 2023 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC); and 1 September 2023 from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) providing comments of a general nature. The Committee notes the responses provided by the Government.

Measures against trade union leaders. The Committee notes the information communicated by the Government in response to the 2021 observations of national and international trade union organizations. Concerning the information requested on the situation of several trade union leaders (Mr Kaddour Chouicha, Mr Felah Hammoudi, Mr Morad Ghedia), the Government indicates that it has regularly provided information to the various ILO supervisory bodies, including this Committee, the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) and the Committee on Freedom of Association. Noting that the information to which the Government refers relates essentially to measures for the reinstatement of workers dismissed from the public administration and workers of the SONEGAS group, and recalling the seriousness of the alleged offences against the aforementioned trade union leaders (harassment, arrest, detention, terrorism conviction), the Committee expects the Government to provide without delay updated information on the situation of these trade union leaders. The Committee further requests the Government to provide its comments on the situation of the many trade union members and leaders of the SNAPAP and the CGATA listed in the observations of the CGATA received on 30 August 2023, a copy of which was sent to the Government by the Office on 6 September 2023.

Inviolability of trade union premises. With regard to the alleged closure of the premises of the CGATA and COSYFOP, the Committee notes that the Government once again bases its argument on what it considers to be the lack of legitimacy of the trade union leaders of COSYFOP and the CGATA. The Government further points out that they use rented premises for propaganda purposes and to spread false information, breaching security and public order, which constitute illegal acts that are not related to trade union activities. The Government asserts that those concerned have the right to complain to the courts to challenge the closure of headquarters if they are legitimate holders of trade union office. The Committee notes that the Government does not dispute the closure of these premises by administrative decision. At the outset, the Committee recalls that organizations must be able to fully enjoy inviolability of their premises, correspondence and communications. When the legislation makes provision for exceptions in this respect, for example in emergency situations, or in the interests of public order, the Committee considers that searches should only be possible when a warrant has been issued for that purpose by the regular judicial authority, when the latter is satisfied that there is good reason to presume that such a search will produce evidence for criminal proceedings under the ordinary law, and provided the search is restricted to the purpose for which the warrant was issued (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 114). The Committee expects that the Government will fully guarantee the right of the inviolability of trade union premises, under the Convention, and that any decision to search or even close COSYFOP or CGATA premises will be taken by the competent judicial authority. Accordingly, the Committee urges the Government to reverse any decision to close trade union premises of COSYFOP and the CGATA taken by the administration without a court warrant. It also refers to the alleged closure of the SNAPAP's premises since 2019 by administrative decision as recalled in the most recent observations of the CGATA.

Legislative issues

Adoption of new legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 23-02 of 25 April 2023 on the exercise of the right to organize, and of Act No. 23-08 of 21 June 2023 concerning the prevention and settlement of collective labour disputes and the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee notes that these two Acts implement the provisions of the Convention by amending existing provisions while taking into account certain recommendations made previously, and introduce new provisions which provide clarification on the exercise of freedom of association and protection of the right to organize. Lastly, the Committee notes that the final provisions of Act No. 23-02 repeal Act No. 90-14 on the exercise of the right to organize.

However, the Committee notes with concern that the above-mentioned trade union organizations have made numerous observations concerning Act No. 23-02 and complained from the outset, in February 2023, that it had been developed without consulting the social partners. According to the trade union organizations, the consultations that the Government claims to have held involved only a minority of the country's trade unions and did not include the main representative organizations, including the country's leading trade union. The trade union organizations consequently requested that the adoption of the Act be postponed so that the Government could engage in genuine consultations with the social partners and hear their points of view. They shared proposed amendments in this regard. The Committee notes that, despite these requests, the Government decided to submit the Bill to Parliament, which adopted it in April 2023.

The Committee notes that the observations of the trade union organizations containing proposed amendments were submitted to the Government, which responded on numerous points. The Committee has taken into account both these comments from the trade union organizations and the Government's responses to them in its assessment of the new Act.

Scope of application (section 2 of Act No. 23-02). In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to initiate without delay consultations with the social partners on the measures to be taken to amend the requirements resulting from the application of section 2 of Act No. 90-14, so that trade union office in an enterprise is no longer restricted to persons employed by the enterprise in question, or to remove the requirement to belong to the occupation or to be an employee for at least a reasonable proportion of trade union officials. The Committee notes with regret that section 2 of Act No. 23-02 remains unchanged on this point in that it applies solely to salaried workers and public officials working in public institutions and administrations. The Committee must once again recall that provisions of this type infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to elect representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons (such as full-time union officers or pensioners) from being elected, or by depriving the organizations of the experience of certain officers when they are unable to provide enough qualified persons from among their own ranks (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 102). Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the new legislation complies fully with the Convention, in accordance with the principles recalled above.

Independence of trade union organizations (sections 12 to 15 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee notes that these provisions prohibit not only any structural or functional relationship between trade unions and political parties, but also prohibit trade unionists from holding office in the governing bodies of a political party. Furthermore, founding members and trade union leaders are required to refrain from the expression of any support for a political party or figure. The Committee wishes to recall in this regard its indication that while the promotion of working conditions by collective bargaining remains a crucial part of trade union action, the development of the trade union movement and its wider recognition as a social partner in its own right require workers' organizations to be able to voice their positions on political issues in the broad sense of the term, and, in particular, to express their views publicly on a government's economic and social policy. With regard to the political activities of the trade union movement, the Committee has also expressed the view that both legislative provisions which establish a close relationship between trade union organizations and political parties, and those which prohibit all political activities by trade unions, give rise to serious difficulties with regard to the principles of the Convention. Some degree of flexibility in legislation is therefore desirable, so that a reasonable balance can be achieved between the legitimate interests of organizations in expressing their point of view on matters of economic or social policy affecting their members or workers in general, on the one hand, and the separation of political activities in the strict sense of the term and trade union activities on the other hand. The Committee therefore recalls that provisions imposing a general prohibition on political activities by trade unions or employers' organizations for the promotion of their specific objectives are contrary to the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review the aforementioned provisions of Act No. 23-02, in consultation with representative employers' and workers' organizations at the national level, with a view to amending them so as to ensure respect for this principle.

Trade union constitutions and rules of procedure (sections 37 to 42 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee notes the detailed list of provisions that should be included in the constitution of a membership-based organization, federation or confederation (section 38). The Committee notes, for example, the requirement to include provisions on the representation of women and young people on management and/or governing bodies. Furthermore, the Committee notes that section 40 of the Act requires constitutions to guarantee broad deliberation within supervisory bodies on important decisions, such as decisions relating to strikes. The Committee recalls that legislative provisions which regulate in detail the internal functioning of workers' and employers' organizations pose a serious risk of interference which is incompatible with the Convention. The Committee further recalls that, under Article 3 of the Convention, national legislation should only lay down formal requirements respecting trade union constitutions, except with regard to the need to follow a democratic process and to ensure a right of appeal for the members (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 100). The Committee therefore requests the Government to consult representative workers' and employers' organizations to review the legislative provisions in question as well as their application in the light of the above principle.

Gifts and bequests (section 49 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee recalls that its previous comments have focused for many years on the need to remove the requirement to obtain prior authorization from the public authorities with regard to gifts and bequests from national trade union organizations or foreign entities. The Committee notes with regret that section 49 of Act No. 23-02 reproduces this obligation. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with representative workers' and employers' organizations, to amend section 49 of Act No. 23-02 and to indicate any measures taken in this respect.

Participation in trade union supervisory and/or governing bodies (section 54 of Act No. 23-02). Election of trade union representatives (section 101 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee notes that among the conditions to be met in order to take part in the management or administration of a trade union or to stand as a candidate for election as a trade union representative, any member must be over 21 years of age. It notes that Act No. 23-02 further provides that salaried workers must be of legal age to establish a trade union organization (section 28). Lastly, the Committee notes that the minimum age for admission to employment is fixed at 16 years, under section 15 of Act No. 90-11 on employment relationships. Recalling its consistent position that all workers who have reached the minimum age for admission to employment must be able to exercise their right of freedom of association, including the right to stand as a candidate for election as trade union representative, the Committee requests the Government to amend section 101 of Act No. 23-02 in consultation with representative workers' and employers' organizations to bring it in conformity with the Convention.

Term and number of trade union appointments (section 56 of Act No. 23-02). Noting that pursuant to section 56 of the new Act, the term of a trade union appointment may not exceed five years and is renewable only once, the Committee is bound to recall that the right of workers' organizations to draw up their own constitutions and rules, organize their administration and formulate their programmes means that matters such as the establishment of the term of appointments must be left to the unions themselves in their constitutions and rules. The Committee considers that provisions regulating in detail the alternation in the leadership of workers' or employers' organizations are incompatible with the Convention as they amount to interference by the public authorities in trade union affairs. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with representative workers' and employers' organizations, to amend section 56 of Act No. 23-02, in accordance with the above-mentioned principle.

Response to requests from the authorities (section 61 of Act No. 23-02). Whereas the Committee understands the need to maintain dialogue when communicating certain information on a regular basis in accordance with the Act, it nevertheless questions the wording of section 61, which imposes a duty to respond to all requests from the competent administrative authority but does not specify the nature, possible justifications or limits of such requests. Such a general provision poses challenges in that it could allow for continuous or harassing objections from the authorities and thereby give rise to risks of partiality or abuse. The Committee therefore requests the Government to delete section 61 of Act No. 23-02 or to initiate consultations with representative workers' and employers' organizations in order to amend it in accordance with the Committee's recommendation.

Dissolution of trade unions (sections 64 to 67 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee notes that pursuant to section 65, a trade union may be dissolved only through judicial channels in certain situations. The Committee further notes that certain situations, such as absence of activity relevant to trade union objectives over a period of three years, refusal to comply with or implement judicial decisions, or incitement to violence, threat or any other illegal behaviour that violates workers' rights, are potentially far-reaching and could allow objections and thereby give rise to risks of partiality or abuse. Recalling once again that the dissolution of trade unions constitutes an extreme form of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of this provision, specifying the number of administrative appeals seeking the dissolution of trade unions, including on the aforementioned grounds, and the outcomes.

Settlement of collective labour disputes and exercise of the right to strike pursuant to new Act No. 23-08 of 21 June 2023. The Committee notes that this law repeals Act No. 90-14 of 6 February 1990. Noting the observations from trade union organizations and the Government's response to certain points, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the following points:

Procedures for the exercise of the right to strike (sections 41 to 46 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee notes that pursuant to section 42 of the Act, strike action may only be taken for the purpose of having exclusively socio-professional demands met. Under section 45 of the Act, therefore, politically motivated strikes, sympathy strikes or strikes organized for causes or demands other than socio-professional, are illegal. In this regard, the Committee recalls that strikes relating to the Government's economic and social policy, including general strikes, are legitimate and therefore should not be regarded as purely political strikes, which are not covered by the principles of the Convention. Trade unions and employers' organizations responsible for defending socio-economic and occupational interests should be able to use, respectively, strike action or protest action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policies which have a direct impact on their members. Moreover, with regard to so-called "sympathy" strikes, the Committee considers that a general prohibition of this form of strike action could lead to abuse, particularly in the context of globalization characterized by increasing interdependence and the internationalization of production, and that workers should be able to take such action, provided that the initial strike they are supporting is itself lawful (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 124 and 125). Bearing in mind the principles recalled above, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that excessive restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike are removed.

The Committee further notes that section 42 of the Act defines a strike as a collective and concerted stoppage of work "compatible with the activity of the enterprise and the continuity of public services". The Committee requests the Government to clarify how the holding of a strike compatible with the employer's activity is envisaged under the Act and to provide the list of jobs considered indispensable to the continuity of public services.

Additionally, the Committee notes that the Act requires that strike action be taken after exhaustion of the dispute settlement procedures provided for under Title II of the Act (sections 5 to 40). The Committee notes that the established conciliation, mediation and voluntary arbitration procedures, which build on each other, could result in a settlement procedure lasting for several months before a strike is called. In this regard, the Committee recalls its position that prior procedures should have the sole purpose of facilitating bargaining and should not be so complex or slow that a lawful strike becomes impossible in practice or loses its effectiveness. With regard to the duration of prior conciliation and arbitration procedures, the Committee has considered, for example, that the imposition of a duration of over 60 working days as a prior condition for the exercise of a lawful strike may make the exercise of the right to strike difficult, or even impossible (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 144). The Committee therefore urges the Government to initiate consultations with representative workers' and employers' organizations in order to reduce this period of prior procedures in line with the principle recalled.

Period of notice (section 49 to 54 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee further recalls that the period of advance notice should not be an additional obstacle to bargaining, and should be shorter if it follows a compulsory prior mediation or conciliation procedure which itself is already lengthy. The Committee expects the Government to take this issue into account in its consideration of adjustments to be made.

Negotiated minimum service (sections 62 to 64 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee recalls that the maintenance of minimum services in the event of strikes should only be possible in certain situations, namely: (i) in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (or essential services “in the strict sense of the term”);(ii) in services which are not essential in the strict sense of the term, but in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population; and (iii) in public services of fundamental importance. However, such a service should meet at least two requirements: (i) it must genuinely and exclusively be a minimum service, that is, one which is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (ii) since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 136 and 137). The Committee requests the Government to indicate any consultations held with the social partners on the matter and to provide the regulatory text determining the list of industries and posts required to establish a minimum service, once it has been adopted.

Requisitioning (section 65 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee recalls that it is desirable to limit powers of requisitioning to cases in which the right to strike may be limited, or even prohibited, namely: (i) in the public service for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; and (iii) in the case of an acute national or local crisis, and considers that essential services, for the purposes of restricting or prohibiting the right to strike, are only those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 151 and 131). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of section 65 of the Act by the competent authorities and to indicate the list of occupations considered indispensable for the safety of persons, plants and property, for the continuity of public services, for the satisfaction of the vital needs of the country or for the provision of supplies to the population.

Prohibition of strikes (section 67 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee further recalls that the right to strike is not absolute and may be restricted in exceptional circumstances, or even prohibited. Over and above the armed forces and the police, the members of which may be excluded from the scope of the Convention in general, other restrictions on the right to strike may relate to the three areas identified in the above discussion of requisitioning. In these cases, compensatory guarantees should be provided for the workers who are thus deprived of the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any consultations held with the social partners on the issue and to provide the regulatory text determining the list of sectors, staff and occupations in which strike action is prohibited, once it has been adopted.

Strike resolution (section 69 of Act No. 23-08). The Committee requests the Government to remove the provision envisaging the participation of the employer or representative thereof in the general meeting at which it is to be decided whether or not to return to work.

The Committee urges the Government to provide information on the measures taken to comply with its comments on amendments to be introduced to the new legislative framework on the exercise of freedom of association in order to bring it into conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

Registration of trade union organizations

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it undertakes to review the registration applications of the Algerian Union of Employees of the Public Administration (SAFAP) and the Confederation of Algerian Trade Unions (CSA) in the light of the relevant new provisions of Act No. 23-02. The Committee expects the Government to complete processing the registration applications of the SAFAP and the CSA without delay.

With regard to the situation of SNATEG, the previous observations of which indicate numerous obstacles to the freedom to organize its activities, the Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association, during its last examination of the complaint (403rd report, June 2023, Case No. 3210), maintained its recommendations to the Government, including: (i) to conduct an independent inquiry to determine the circumstances that led to the administrative decision to dissolve SNATEG; and (ii) to review the decision to dissolve SNATEG without delay. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely states in its most recent report that the administration processed the application for the voluntary dissolution of SNATEG with all required attention and that it cannot overrule the will of the members to dissolve their trade union. Expressing its concern at the absence of progress in this matter, despite its repeated recommendations inviting the Government to take corrective measures, the Committee expects that the Government will finally take the necessary measures to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association.

Lastly, the Committee wishes to clarify the following points in response to the Government's reiterated position challenging the standing of members of COSYFOP (whose registration it contests) and the CGATA (whose registration it refuses) as trade union leaders. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent on registration and that the authorities should refrain from any interference which would restrict this right or impede its exercise, unless public order is disturbed or its maintenance seriously and imminently endangered. With regard to COSYFOP, the Committee notes that it informed the Committee on Freedom of Association of its situation (Case No. 3434 submitted in March 2022). The Committee expects the government to resolve the issue of registration of the CGATA and other trade union organizations awaiting registration under the new law without further delay.

In conclusion, the Committee urges the Government to further strengthen its efforts to ensure that full freedom of association is effectively guaranteed in law and in practice, and firmly hopes that the Government will hold consultations without delay with all of the social partners concerned to revise the provisions of Acts Nos 23-02 and 23-08 in the light of its comments. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the following representative employers' and workers' organizations received on: 12 February and 30 August 2023 from the General and Autonomous Confederation of Workers in Algeria (CGATA), 1 March 2023 from CGATA, the Trade Union Confederation of Productive Workers (COSYFOP), the National Autonomous Union of Public Administration Personnel (SNAPAP), the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG), Public Services International (PSI), the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) and IndustriALL Global Union; 31 August from COSYFOP; and 1 September 2022 and 2023 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee notes the replies provided by the Government to certain observations.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes with concern the observations provided regularly between 2022 and 2023 by national and international trade union organizations concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and interference against independent trade unions and their leaders. The Committee recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association has had before it several cases concerning harassment and dismissal of trade union leaders and members, as indicated in the observations of the trade union organizations. The Committee refers to the conclusions and recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in the cases concerned, such as that of the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG) (see 403rd Report, June 2023, Case No. 3210).

The Committee further wishes to recall that the situation of the dismissed trade unionists and the cases of interference were also the subject of the conclusions and recommendations of a high-level mission that visited Algiers in May 2019, in the context of the recommendations of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference concerning the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee previously expressed its concern at the allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference against the COSYFOP and affiliated trade union organizations, including threats against and dismissals of trade union leaders of BATIMETAL-COSYFOP, the Workers' Union of the Commission for Electricity and Gas Regulation (STCREG), the National Union of the Higher Institute of Management and the National Federation of Workers of the Social Security Funds, affiliated with the COSYFOP. The Committee expressed its expectation that the Government would ensure adequate protection for the leaders and members of these trade union organizations against any acts of anti-union discrimination and interference by the employers and administrative authorities concerned. Noting that the Government refers to its previous replies to the Committee and other supervisory bodies, while recalling that this information focuses on the reinstatement of dismissed workers in the public administration and workers of the SONEGAS group, the Committee is bound to reiterate its request to the Government to provide without delay its comments concerning the allegations of threats and anti-union dismissals affecting the above-mentioned organizations affiliated with the COSYFOP, indicating whether the organizations concerned continue their activities and are able to engage in collective bargaining in the establishments concerned.

Adoption of new legislation. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 23-02 of 25 April 2023 on the exercise of the right to organize, and of Act No. 23-08 of 21 June 2023 concerning the prevention and settlement of collective labour disputes and the exercise of the right to strike. These two Acts contain provisions implementing the Convention, some of which will be examined below.

Procedures for protection against anti-union discrimination. In general terms, the Government indicates that Act No. 23-02 gives greater protection in that it provides expressly that trade union leaders may not face any punishment, dismissal or discrimination on grounds of their trade union activities. This protection is also guaranteed to any worker who is a member of a trade union organization, whether representative or not. The Government draws attention to the new procedure allowing a salaried worker who considers him or herself to be the victim of an act of anti-union discrimination to refer the matter to the labour inspector covering the relevant area, who now has enhanced powers to investigate, give notice to comply to an employer who has committed an act of anti-union discrimination, or address a violation notice to the competent courts if the employer refuses to comply (sections 133 to 147 of Act No. 23-02). In the light of the repeated allegations of the trade union organizations concerning the failure of the labour inspectorate to act on the actions lodged with it following acts of anti-union discrimination and dismissals affecting organizations affiliated with the COSYFOP, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of sections 133 to 147 of Act No. 23-02 on procedures for the protection of salaried workers in the private sector and public servants and employees in public institutions and administrations against discrimination, including statistical data on the number of actions lodged with labour inspectorates, and the percentage of investigations carried out by the inspectorate that resulted in formal notice being given to the employer, or in violation notices on the employer's refusal to comply.

Furthermore, the Committee recalls that it previously noted the concerns expressed by the high-level mission concerning delays in complying with court rulings ordering the reinstatement of trade union leaders, which have still not been given effect, and the excessive use of judicial action against trade unions and their members by certain enterprises and authorities. The Committee also noted the difficulty, identified by the mission, in the application of Article 1 of the Convention for the founding members of unions. It noted that under the current legislation and procedures, it would be possible for an employer to dismiss the founding members of a union during the period when it was applying for registration (which in practice can take several years), without the latter benefiting from the protection afforded by the legislation against anti-union discrimination. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, the necessary measures to ensure adequate protection to trade union leaders and members during the period in which an established trade union is applying for registration. Noting that Act No. 23-02 makes no such provision and in the absence of information from the Government, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether consultations have been held or are envisaged to address the issue of the protection of trade union leaders and members during the period in which an established trade union is applying for registration. If not, the Committee requests the Government to initiate consultations with the social partners on the issue and to indicate any progress made in this regard.

Protection against interference. With regard to protection against interference, the Government states that the law prohibits any natural or legal person from interfering in the functioning of a trade union organization, except as expressly provided for by law (section 8 of Act No. 23-02). In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to specify the exceptions provided for in section 8 of Act No. 23-02, to provide the relevant legislation and to indicate whether in the implementation of the law, such exceptions have been invoked in alleged cases of interference.

Determination of trade union representativeness. The Committee notes that under the terms of section 69 of Act No. 23-02, the representativeness of a trade union organization is conditional upon its achievement of a specific unionization rate and a minimum voting strength in professional elections, under sections 73 to 77 of the Act, but that the financial transparency of its accounts and its political neutrality are also taken into consideration. The Committee underscores the importance of ensuring that the criteria to be applied to determine the representativeness of organizations are objective, preestablished and precise so as to avoid any opportunity for partiality or abuse. In this regard, the Committee: (i) notes that the criterion of political neutrality contained in this provision could give rise to difficulties in that it could allow objections and thereby give rise to risks of partiality or abuse; and (ii) wishes to know how the criterion of financial transparency is applied. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify the extent to which the criteria of financial transparency and political neutrality have been applied in practice when determining representativeness following professional elections. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to consult the social partners on the means of recognition of representativeness under section 69 et seq of Act No. 23-02, with a view to their revision.

The Committee further observes that pursuant to sections 79 et seq of the Act, the maintenance of the representative status of trade union and employers' organizations is conditional upon their obtaining, every three years, a certificate issued by the competent governmental authority after the organizations concerned have provided, via an electronic platform, information relating to their members, which, according to the Act, would make it possible to ascertain their representativeness (section 81 of Act No. 23-02). The Committee wishes to know how section 81 is implemented in practice, and, in particular, how it is applied to trade union organizations that have acquired representative status via election results pursuant to section 73 of the Act. The Committee considers that the requirement to provide information concerning the members of a representative organization in order to maintain representative status would obviate the criterion of election results.

The Committee would also like to draw the Government's attention to the requirement to provide the employer with information relating to the criteria for representativeness, under the terms of section 79(3) of the Act. The Committee notes the completeness of the information requested (the name and social security number of each member, their membership card number and date, and dues paid). It notes the concerns expressed by trade union organizations concerning the risks of anti-union discrimination that could ensue. In this regard, the Committee considers it unnecessary to draw up a list of names of members of trade union organizations in order to determine membership numbers, since this could be established from a statement of union dues without drawing up a list of names, which would entail a risk of acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in this respect, in consultation with the representative organizations concerned, and to remove the requirement to provide information that could facilitate acts of anti-union discrimination.

Lastly, noting that the administrative approval mechanism for the validation and maintenance of the representative status of trade union organizations could have an impact on the development of industrial relations and collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to provide timely information on the renewal of the representative status of organizations, and to indicate the number of certificates provided each year and the number of refusals to renew, appeals and outcomes thereof.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the extent to which it is anticipated that, if no trade union attains the requisite threshold to be declared representative in professional elections, minority organizations might unite to negotiate a collective agreement applicable to the negotiating unit or, at least, conclude a collective on behalf of their respective members. The Committee therefore requests the Government to specify the applicable regulations that allow minority trade unions of the unit to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their members, when there is no union that represents the majority of the workers.

Application of the Convention in practice. Noting the data provided on the total number of collective agreements and accords signed since the enactment of labour laws in 1990, the Committee encourages the Government to provide, as previously for the period from 2016 to 2020, statistics on the number of collective agreements and accords registered by the Labour Inspectorate, and to specify the sectors concerned as well as the number of workers covered.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Angola

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1976)

Previous observation

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection of workers against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous observation the Committee urged the Government to provide its comments regarding the observations made by the National Trade Union of Teachers (SINPROF) and Education International (EI), received on 1 September 2017, alleging the existence of anti-union reprisals by the Government in several province of the country. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has still provided no reply in this regard. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that action has been taken to fully address, in accordance with the Convention, the concerns raised by the SINPROF and EI and to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Measures to promote collective bargaining. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the indication of the Government that there was a contradiction between sections 20 and 28 of Act No. 20-A/92 on collective bargaining which impose compulsory arbitration on an array of non-essential services and the General Labour Act of 2015, and that the two mentioned provisions of Act No. 20-A/92 would be amended. The Committee notes that the government reiterates the statements contained in its previous report. Recalling that compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining is only acceptable in a very limited set of situations (General Survey of 2012, paragraph 247), the Committee requests the Government to take without delay the necessary action to amend sections 20 and 28 of Act No. 20-A/92 so as to put the legislation in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4 and 6. Collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that: (i) the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is protected under Act No. 20-A/92 and the General Labour Act of 2015; (ii) the National Assembly is in the process of approving the Act on Strike, Trade Union and the Right to Collective Bargaining, whose provisions are more specific with respect to the content of the Convention; and (iii) the text of the Act will be submitted with the Government's next report. The Committee takes due note of these elements while observing that the Government has not provided information about how collective bargaining would take place in practice in the public sector. It recalls that in its previous comments, it noted that the only public employees covered by the General Labour Act and Act No. 20-A/92 were those in public enterprises. The Committee recalls in this respect that the public servants not engaged in the administration of the State mentioned by Article 6 of the Convention are not confined to workers of public enterprises, but also cover, for instance, employees in municipal services, public sector teachers or public sector health workers. In the context of the adoption of the Act on Strike, Trade Union and the Right to Collective Bargaining and the revision of Act No. 20-A/92, the Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that all categories of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State are granted the right to bargain collectively. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any proposed legislative reforms relating to the Convention and reminds it, in this context, of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference, and had requested the Government to provide information on cases concerning anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that there are no cases to report with regard to anti-union discrimination and that the Antigua and Barbuda Constitution grants inalienable rights to citizens. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and requests the Government to provide information of any cases concerning anti-union discrimination (especially with respect to the procedures and sanctions imposed).

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Argentina

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2020 observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Autónoma). The Committee also notes the observations of the Federation of Energy Workers of the Argentine Republic (FETERA), received in 2021, and the observations of the Federation of Construction Workers of the Argentine Republic (UOCRA), received in 2022, which, like the observations of the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA), the CTA Autónoma and the Industrial Confederation of Argentina (UIA) received on 1 September 2023, raise issues which are examined in this comment. The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) recently examined a complaint concerning the alleged unlawful detention of Ms Milagro Sala, leader of the Túpac Amaru Civil Association, detained since 2016, and observed that the court cases for which she had been sentenced to imprisonment were not related to the exercise of trade union activities or to the exercise of activities of another nature that could have affected the exercise of trade union rights (Report 401, Case No. 3225, March 2023).

Social Dialogue Commission. Since the Social Dialogue Commission was established in 2019, the Committee has been encouraging the Government to reinforce this body and has expressed the hope that the matters raised in its comments will be examined and addressed in a tripartite manner within the framework of the standards subcommission of the Social Dialogue Commission. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that on 4 October 2023 a meeting was held to relaunch the standards subcommission and that on 18 October a second meeting was held at which the CGT, CTA Workers and CTA Autónoma, together with the UIA, adopted regulations for the standards subcommission and reaffirmed the interest in strengthening and deepening social dialogue, giving priority to honouring the commitments made with regard to the ILO and aiming to address at national level the representations made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution and the cases pending before the CFA.

Underlining the key role played by constructive tripartite dialogue to ensure full respect for freedom of association and collective bargaining, the Committee trusts that in the context of the standards subcommission of the Social Dialogue Commission it will be possible to achieve agreements through voluntary conciliation. The Committee also trusts that the other matters raised below will be submitted to the subcommission with a view to the adoption of specific measures in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on progress made in the work of this social dialogue body.

Articles 2, 3 and 6 of the Convention. Trade union independence and non-interference by the State. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been asking the Government to take steps to amend the following provisions of Act No. 23551 of 1988 on trade union associations (LAS) and of the corresponding implementing Decree No. 467/88, which are not in conformity with the Convention:

- Trade union status: (i) section 28 of the LAS, under which, in order to challenge an association's status, the petitioning association must have a "considerably larger" membership; and section 21 of implementing Decree No. 467/88, which qualifies the term "considerably larger" by providing that the association claiming trade union status must have at least 10 per cent more dues-paying members than the organization that currently has the status; (ii) section 29 of the LAS, under which an enterprise trade union may be granted trade union status only when no other organization with trade union status exists in the geographical area, occupation or category; and (iii) section 30 of the LAS, under which, in order to be eligible for trade union status, unions representing a trade, occupation or category have to show that they have different interests from the existing trade union or federation, and that the latter's status must not cover the workers concerned.

- Benefits deriving from trade union status: (i) section 38 of the LAS, under which the check-off of trade union dues is allowed only for associations with trade union status, and not for those that are merely registered; and (ii) sections 48 and 52 of the LAS, which afford special protection (trade union immunity) only to representatives of organizations that have trade union status.

The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the Supreme Court of Justice of the Nation and other national and provincial courts have found various provisions of the above-mentioned legislation unconstitutional, particularly with regard to trade union status and trade union protection. The Committee duly notes and welcomes the opinion of 4 March 2021 of the Public Prosecutor submitted to the Supreme Court indicating, as in previous opinions, that the trade union dues check-off system as set out in section 38 of the LAS is prejudicial to the freedom of association of organizations that are only registered and is therefore unconstitutional. The Committee also notes that the CTA Autonomous emphasizes that the Government continues to delay bringing the LAS into conformity with the Convention. Recalling that it has been requesting the amendment of the legislation referred to above for over 20 years, the Committee urges the Government to adopt specific measures in the very near future to bring the LAS and its implementing Decree into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to address these issues in a tripartite manner in the Social Dialogue Commission and expects to be able to note tangible progress in the near future.

Delays in procedures for the registration of trade unions and to obtain trade union status. The Committee and the CFA have been asking the Government to take the necessary measures to avoid unjustified delays in procedures for the registration of trade unions or the granting of trade union status. The Committee notes that the CTA Autonomous provides a long list of cases in which union registration or the granting of union status was refused, and denounces the fact that some complaints are still awaiting resolution after delays of between 5 and 20 years. The CTA Autonomous also underlines the fact that to date the Social Dialogue Commission has not addressed the problem of delays in processing applications for union registration. The Committee also notes that the Government provides a table indicating progress on dealing with applications for union registration or union status and states that in many of the cases referred to by the CTA Autonomous the administrative authority has granted union registration or union status where justified, and that in other cases formalities are pending until the legal requirements are fulfilled. The Committee also notes FETERA's indication that, over 21 years after requesting union status, the National Labour Appeals Chamber ordered the Ministry of Labour to grant it legal status and that this was done on 20 September 2021. The Committee welcomes this information and firmly hopes that this precedent will mark an important step towards improving the functioning of the procedures for granting trade union status. The Committee notes that in cases examined recently the CFA once again underlines the importance of the Government taking steps, with regard to applications for the granting of trade union status, to ensure that the authorities take decisions in this respect without unjustified delays (Cases Nos 3331 and 3232 examined in October 2021 (Report No. 396) and October 2023 (Report No. 404), respectively). In light of the above and duly noting the information provided by the Government on the status of the various formalities, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to avoid unjustified delays or refusals in the procedures for the registration of trade unions or the granting of trade union status. The Committee also trusts that this issue will be examined by the Social Dialogue Commission and requests the Government to keep it informed of all progress made in this respect.

Article 3. Right of trade unions to elect their representatives in full freedom and to organize their administration and activities. After noting allegations of interference by the Government in trade union elections, and delays in the certification of trade union authorities, the Committee expressed the firm hope that these matters would be examined in the standards subcommission of the Social Dialogue Commission, with a view to the adoption of appropriate measures. Since it has not received any information on this matter, the Committee reiterates its previous comment.

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Armenia (CTUA) transmitted with the Government's report and the additional observations of the CTUA received on 29 August 2023, which refer to the issues raised by the Committee below and to the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee previously urged the Government to take necessary measures to amend the Law on Trade Unions to ensure that employees of the Prosecutor's Office, judges (including of the Constitutional Court), civilians employed by the police and security services, self-employed workers, those working in liberal professions, and workers in the informal economy can establish and join organizations for furthering and defending their interests. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates that, while the possibility of amending the Law on Trade Unions is being discussed, the right of civilian personnel in the police and security services to join trade unions is not restricted by either section 6 of the Law on Trade Unions, the Law on the Police Service or the Law on the Service in the National Security Bodies. In this regard, the Committee recalls once again, that it stems from section 6 of the Law on Trade Unions, as amended in 2018, that only those with employment contracts can be members of a trade union and that pursuant to paragraph 3 of the same section, employees of the armed forces, police, national security, Prosecutor's Office, as well as judges, including judges of the Constitutional Court, cannot be members of a trade union organization. The Committee also recalls once again that all workers, without distinction whatsoever, should have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and that the only authorized exceptions concern members of the police and the armed forces. It considers, however, that civilians employed in such services should be granted the right to establish and join organizations to further and defend their interests.

In addition, the Committee notes that, as observed by the CTUA, the Constitutional Court decided on 11 April 2023 that section 6(5) of the Law on Trade Unions is unconstitutional insofar as it prescribes an absolute ban on freedom of association for the employees of the armed forces, the police, national security, the Prosecutor's Office, as well as judges (including of the Constitutional Court). For the same reason, the Constitutional Court found the following provisions to be unconstitutional: section 39(1) of the Law on the Police Service, section 43(1) of the Law on the Service in the National Security Bodies, and section 8(1) of the Law on Military Service. The Committee notes that the Constitutional Court has set a deadline of 11 November 2023 for the National Assembly to bring these provisions into compliance with the Armenian Constitution. The Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to give effect to the above-mentioned decision of the Constitutional Court and to amend the above-mentioned laws so as to ensure that employees of the Prosecutor's Office, judges (including of the Constitutional Court), civilians employed by the police and security services, self-employed workers, those working in liberal professions, and workers in the informal economy can establish and join organizations for furthering and defending their interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect in its next report, including copies of the amended laws if adopted.

Minimum membership requirement. The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to amend section 4 of the Law on Employers' Unions, providing for the number of employers required to form employers' organizations at the national level (over half of employers' organizations operating at the sectoral and territorial levels), sectoral level (over half of employers' organizations operating at the territorial levels) and territorial level (majority of employers in a particular administrative territory or employers' organizations from different sectors in a particular administrative territory); and to also amend section 2 of the Law on Trade Unions, setting out similar prerequisites for federations of trade unions at the territorial, sectoral and national levels, so as to lower the minimum membership requirements. The Committee recalls that it considers the minimum membership requirements as set out in the above legislative provisions to be too high as they would appear to ensure that there is in fact only one national level organization, one organization per sector and one territorial level organization per territory or a particular sector in the territory. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that it is working on amending the Law on Trade Unions as well as the Law on Employers' Unions, and adds that it is receiving technical assistance from the ILO in the process of amending the Law on Employers' Unions. Noting that the Government benefits from the technical assistance of the ILO, the Committee trusts that amendments will be made in the near future, in consultation with the social partners, to both the Law on Trade Unions and the Law on Employers' Unions, so as to reduce the minimum membership requirements and ensure the possibility of creation of more than one organization at different levels. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities in full freedom. The Committee previously requested the Government to amend sections 13(2)(1) and 14 of the Law on Employers' Unions, which regulate in detail matters that should be decided upon by organizations themselves (such as the obligatory use of the words "employers' union" for all employers' organizations and "Armenia" for a national organization and the rights and responsibilities of the congress of an employers' organization). Noting that the amendment process for the Law on Employers' Unions is under way, the Committee expects that, in consultation with the social partners, the Law on Employers' Unions will be amended in the near future so as to ensure that only formal requirements are laid down in the national legislation with regard to the functioning of organizations.

The Committee also requested the Government to amend the following sections of the Labour Code:

- section 74(1), which requires a vote by two-thirds of an organization's (enterprise's) employees to declare a strike (or a vote by two thirds of employees of the subdivision if a strike is declared by a subdivision of an organization, as the case may be), so as to ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast, and that the required quorum and majority are fixed at a reasonable level;
- section 77(2), according to which, minimum services are determined by the corresponding state and local self-governance entities, so as to ensure that social partners are able to participate in the definition of what constitutes a minimum service.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Law HO-160-N was adopted on 3 May 2023, which amended sections 74(1) and 77(2) of the Labour Code. The Committee notes with satisfaction the amendment made to section 74(1), which lowers the strike vote requirement (a vote is now required by "the majority of votes of workers who participated in the vote, which cannot be less than half of the total number of workers or half of the employees of the organization", or of the subdivision if the strike is declared by a subdivision).

The Committee notes with satisfaction the amendment made to section 77(2) of the Labour Code, which now provides for negotiations with the social partners to determine the minimum services required during a strike.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the Confederation of Trade Unions of Armenia (CTUA) received on 1 September 2023 concerning issues addressed in the present comment. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on observations from the CTUA received on 30 September 2020 regarding alleged violations of the Convention in practice. The Committee expects the Government to take all necessary actions to ensure full compliance with the Convention with respect to these alleged violations and to provide its detailed comments in this respect in its next report.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Government informs that Law HO-160-N, On Amendments and Additions to the Labour Code of the Republic of Armenia, was adopted on 3 May 2023.

Article 3 of the Convention. Machinery for ensuring respect for the right to organize. The Committee welcomes new clause 6 of section 25 of the Labour Code according to which the representatives of employees have the right to appeal to the court against the decisions and actions of employers which violate employees' rights. The Committee notes at the same time that the CTUA mentions that the draft law on Additions to the Code of Civil Procedure, by which the representatives of employees will be given the right to act as representatives in courts has not been circulated yet. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures so that the right recognized in clause 6 of section 25 of the Labour Code can be exercised in court. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Additions to the Code of Civil Procedure once adopted.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously expected the Government to amend section 23 of the Labour Code according to which both trade unions and "workers' representatives" enjoyed the right to negotiate collective agreements at the enterprise level. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 23 has been amended by Law HO-160-N and that, as a result, "workers' representatives" can only negotiate collective agreements in a determined enterprise in the absence of a trade union.

The Committee notes the amendment to section 45, "Collective agreements" paragraph 2 of the Labour Code according to which a party receiving notice of the desired collective bargaining is obliged to provide the other party its position on taking part in it within seven days pursuant to section 66. The Committee notes the observations from the CTUA that the amendment provides a deadline for expressing a position, but that trade unions do not have sufficient tools to invite employers to negotiate since there are no effective means set by the legislation to overcome a possible rejection. Recalling that the principle of negotiation in good faith, which is derived from Article 4 of the Convention, takes the form, in practice of certain obligations, namely recognizing representative organizations, endeavouring to reach agreement, and engaging in real and constructive negotiation (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 208), the Committee requests the Government to give clarifications on the application of section 45(2) of Law HO-160-N and on the available avenues in case of a rejection to enter into negotiations with a representative trade union.

The Committee notes the amendments to paragraphs 1 and 2 of section 51 of the Labour Code, replacing the terms "registration" by "reckoning", and "state authorized body" by "inspection body", and the addition of paragraph 3 to the aforementioned section 51 as well as the addition of section 59.1. The Committee notes that paragraph 3 of section 51 states that the procedure for recording republican, branch and territorial collective agreements shall be defined by the Government. The Committee notes that section 59.1 of the Labour Code deals with the procedures relating to the reckoning of collective bargaining and the bringing into force of an organization's collective bargaining agreement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that with the amendments made to section 51 and 59.1 of the Labour Code, it is envisaged that the body exercising state control over labour legislation will also carry out the accounting of national, branch, territorial and organization collective agreements, and that these amendments will encourage workers' representatives to undertake collective negotiations aimed at concluding collective agreements. Recalling that provisions whereby approval may be refused are only compatible if the agreement has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 201), the Committee requests the Government to clarify: (i) the nature of the inspection body mentioned in sections 51 and 59.1; and (ii) if the referred provisions of the Labour Code have any impact on the smooth registration of collective agreements.

The Committee had previously requested the government to amend sections 59(4) and 61(2) of the Labour Code, whereby if an enterprise is restructured or privatized, the collective agreement is considered to be unilaterally terminated, irrespective of its validity period. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the sections have been amended, particularly to remove the stipulation in section 59(4) that a collective agreement is no longer valid upon reorganization of the organization, as well as the case provided for section 61(2) of this Code when an organization is privatized.

The Committee finally notes from the observations of the CTUA concerning section 3 of the Labour Code (Principles of the labour legislation) that clause 9 of paragraph 1 of this section mentions "freedom" rather than the word "right" to collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government for clarification on the interpretation of this section.

Welcoming the mentioned amendments to the Labour Code, the Committee invites the Government to provide information on any further developments on the promotion and the protection of collective bargaining.

Previous comment

Legislative reform process. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any legislative developments or proposals concerning the industrial relations reform process. The Committee notes the Government's indication that numerous industrial relations reforms were adopted since its last report. The Committee notes, in particular: (i) the adoption of the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act, 2022 (assessed in more detail in its direct request); (ii) the adoption of the Industrial Relations and Other Legislation Amendment Act, 2022 (Queensland) (addressed in more detail in its direct request); (iii) the entry into force of the Human Rights Act, 2019 (Queensland), which protects freedom of association (section 22(2)) and also covers actions and decision-making of a public entity as an employer (section 58); (iv) the adoption of the Human Rights (Workers Rights) Amendment Act, 2020 (Australian Capital Territory), which introduces section 27B to the Human Rights Act, setting out the right to work and other work-related rights, including the right to form or join work-related organizations and trade unions; (v) legislative reforms in government procurement (Australian Capital Territory) aimed at including fair and safe conditions for workers and improving employment standards in procurement contracts; (vi) the adoption of the Union Encouragement Policy, 2018 (Australian Capital Territory) which details the Government's commitment to encourage union membership among its workers in the public sector; and (vii) the adoption of the Public Health and Wellbeing Amendment (Pandemic Management) Act, 2021 (State of Victoria), allowing for rapid pre-emptive responses to protect public health. Taking note of these legislative reforms, the Committee trusts that they will be applied in line with the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee previously requested the Government to review: (i) the provisions of the Competition and Consumer Act, 2010 prohibiting secondary boycotts; (ii) sections 423, 424 and 426 of the Fair Work Act, 2009 (FWA) relating to suspension or termination of protected industrial action in specific circumstances; and (iii) sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act, 1914, prohibiting industrial action threatening trade or commerce with other countries or among states, and boycotts resulting in the obstruction or hindrance of the performance of services by the Government or the transport of goods or persons in international trade, with a view to bringing them into full conformity with the Convention.

In relation to sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act, the Government reports that no changes were made to these provisions and no prosecutions were initiated.

Concerning the prohibition of secondary boycotts under the Competition and Consumer Act, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Australian Productivity Commission invited public comments on the issue and discussed it with the social partners, following which it did not recommend any changes to the legislation. The Government indicates that the Australian Chamber of Commerce strongly opposed any potential changes in this area and the Maritime Union of Australia did not support changes to these provisions or the supporting compliance and enforcement activities but considered the applicable penalties extremely onerous. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the relevant provisions were enforced on one occasion where a construction company and the Construction, Forestry, Maritime, Mining and Energy Union were both ordered to pay penalties for a boycott conducted in breach of competition laws.

While taking note of the above, in particular the limited use in practice of sections 30J and 30K of the Crimes Act and of the provisions of the Competition and Consumer Act prohibiting secondary boycotts, the Committee recalls that these provisions may nevertheless have a chilling effect on the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and carry out their programmes in full freedom. The Committee therefore requests the Government to bring the above-mentioned provisions into conformity with the Convention, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee further requests the Government to continue providing detailed information on the application of these provisions in practice.

With regard to sections 423, 424 and 426 of the FWA, which relate to suspension or termination of protected industrial action threatening trade or commerce with other countries or among states, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is not considering any reforms to the relevant provisions. The Committee further notes the information transmitted by the Government on the rationale of these provisions and on their practical application, in particular, that: (i) in 2022, there were three applications to suspend or terminate protected industrial action under section 423 and three applications under section 426; (ii) the Fair Work Commission (independent tribunal and statutory regulator of federally registered unions and employers' groups) did not make any decisions in relation to sections 423 and 426 as all applications were withdrawn or discontinued, or orders were otherwise not required; (iii) there were 18 applications under section 424 in 2022 and 9 applications in 2023, with only one order to suspend or terminate an industrial action; (iv) from 2020 to 2023, the Fair Work Commission made decisions on section 424 concerning the railway sector (order to terminate an industrial action due to a threat to endanger the welfare of the population of New South Wales), an aircraft engineers union (application dismissed for lack of evidence on any threat to the life, personal safety or welfare of the population), a harbour towage enterprise (order to suspend an intended lockout of all harbour towage employees), the healthcare sector (order to suspend the intended industrial action for two weeks), a gas company (order to suspend a company lockout for 30 days), a transport workers' union employed in court security and custodial services operations (order to suspend an industrial action for two months), a transport workers' union (application to suspend the industrial action dismissed for lack of evidence on the link between the industrial action and the threat to life, safety and health or welfare of the population) and the maritime transport sector (discontinuance of the application for termination of an industrial action).

Taking note of the detailed information provided by the Government, in particular as to the practical application of the above provisions, the Committee observes that while some of the sectors fall within essential services in the strict sense of the term or concern public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, and suspensions or terminations of industrial action would therefore not raise issues of compatibility with the Convention, in other cases which do not fall within these categories industrial action should not be fully restricted, although the Government may consider the establishment of negotiated minimum services. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the practical application of sections 423, 424 and 426 of the FWA and to indicate any measures taken to review these provisions.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comment

Legislative reform process. The Committee notes the Government's indication that numerous industrial relations reforms were adopted since its last report. The Committee notes, in particular: (i) the adoption of the Fair Work Legislation Amendment (Secure Jobs, Better Pay) Act, 2022 (assessed in more detail in its direct request); (ii) the adoption of the Industrial Relations and Other Legislation Amendment Act, 2022 (Queensland) (assessed in more detail in its direct request); (iii) the adoption of the Human Rights (Workers Rights) Amendment Act, 2020 (Australian Capital Territory), which introduces section 27B to the Human Rights Act, setting out the right to work and other work-related rights, including the right to protection against anti-union discrimination in employment; and (iv) legislative reforms in government procurement (Australian Capital Territory) aimed at including fair and safe conditions for workers and improving employment standards in procurement contracts, including the right to collective bargaining. The Committee welcomes the objectives of the legislative reforms related to the Convention and hopes that their implementation will contribute to its full application.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Scope of collective bargaining. Fair Work Act (FWA). In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government once again to review sections 186(4), 194 and 470-475 of the FWA, which impose restrictions on the content of collective bargaining by excluding certain "unlawful terms" from collective bargaining (any terms relating to the extension of unfair dismissal benefits to workers not yet employed for the statutory period, the provision of strike pay, the payment of bargaining fees to a trade union and the creation of a union's right to entry for compliance purposes more extensive than under the provisions of the FWA). The Committee notes the Government's indication that there have been no changes to these provisions. The Government adds, however, that the Secure Jobs, Better Pay Act amended the FWA to extend, in some aspects, the content of collective bargaining (sections 172A and 195(5), which confirm that "special measures to achieve equality" can form part of an enterprise agreement). While welcoming these amendments, the Committee observes that restrictions on the content of collective bargaining remain valid as per sections 186(4), 194 and 470-475 of the FWA and recalls the importance of leaving the greatest possible autonomy to the parties in collective bargaining to determine the content of such negotiations. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to review these provisions, in consultation with the social partners, to align them with the Convention.

(ratification: 1992)

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no reply to its previous comments. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 4 of the Convention. Bipartite negotiations. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments, it had noted that the legislation made a distinction between a "collective agreement", concluded at the enterprise level following bipartite negotiations between workers and employers, and a "collective accord", concluded at industry, territorial or national levels following bipartite (between trade unions and the authorities) or tripartite (between trade unions, employers' organizations and the authorities of the appropriate level) negotiations (section 36(1) of the Labour Code (1999)). In this respect, it had requested the Government to take measures, including of a legislative nature, in order to encourage and promote collective bargaining between trade unions and employers and their organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the participation of state bodies in the conclusion of collective accords meets the principle of tripartism, reflected in numerous ILO decisions and documents as well as in international labour standards. While understanding that the aim of the arrangement is to ensure that the obligations undertaken by all parties under collective accords signed following tripartite negotiations are respected, the Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention is aimed at promoting free and voluntary bargaining between workers' organizations and employers or employers' organizations. It considers that the principle of tripartism, which is particularly appropriate for the regulation of questions of a larger scope (drafting of legislation, formulating labour policies), should not replace the principle of autonomy of workers' organizations and employers (or their organizations) in collective bargaining on conditions of employment. The Committee therefore once again invites the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate measures, including of a legislative nature, in order to encourage and promote collective bargaining between trade unions and employers and their organizations, without involvement of public authorities. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to amend the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), and other texts, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. In particular, the Committee referred to the need to amend the following provisions:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations without previous authorization.

- Section 3 of the IRA and sections 39 and 40 of the Correctional Officers (Code of Conduct) Rules, 2014, so as to ensure that prison staff enjoy all rights and guarantees under the Convention; and
- Section 8 (1) (a) and the First Schedule of the IRA, so as to ensure that, beyond the verification of formalities, the Registrar has no discretionary powers to refuse the registration of trade unions and employers' organizations.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules and to elect their representatives in full freedom and to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes.

- Section 20(2) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct ballots for election or removal of trade union officers and for amendment of the constitution of trade unions without interference from the authorities;

- Section 20 (3) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct strike ballot without supervision by the authorities;
- Sections 73, 76(1) and 77 (1) of the IRA providing for compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike, so as to not excessively restrict the right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities;
- Sections 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA, so as to ensure that no penal sanctions may be imposed for having carried out a peaceful strike; and
- Section 75, so as to allow organizations responsible for defending socio-economic and occupational interests to use strike action or protest action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members.

Article 5. Right to affiliate to an international federation or confederation.

- Section 39 of the IRA, so as to ensure the right of workers' and employers' organizations to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Tripartite Council is continuing to review the IRA and that no amendments have yet been made to any of the abovementioned sections, or to article 31 of the Constitution (which, among others, defines prison services as "disciplined force" along with the police and military). The Government indicates that priority has been given to sections 20(2), 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA in the reviewing exercise and that it is examining the possibility of repealing section 39 of the IRA. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it will request ILO technical assistance to finalize any relevant pieces of legislation. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend its legislation in the near future, so as to ensure its full conformity with the Convention without further delay, and requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

Article 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of legislative provisions to protect workers' and employers' organizations against acts of interference by each other or each other's agents, accompanied by effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While noting that the Government acknowledges the concerns of the Committee with regard to the absence of legislative provisions providing for protection against acts of interference, the Committee observes that it does not provide information on the measures envisaged in this regard. Recalling that it has been addressing this matter since 2013, the Committee firmly expects that the Government will provide information on the measures taken with a view to giving effect to Article 2 of the Convention without further delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Representativeness. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 41 of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) provides that in order for a trade union to be recognized for bargaining purposes, it must represent at least 50 per cent of workers of the bargaining unit, and recalled that under a system of designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. While noting that the Government acknowledges the concerns of the Committee in this respect, it notes with regret that it does not provide any specific information on the measures taken or envisaged in order to align its legislation with the Convention. Recalling that it has been raising this issue since 2013, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to review the IRA so as to bring it into line with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Right of prison guards to bargain collectively. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that sections 39–40 of the Correctional Officers (Code of Conduct) Rules 2014, allowed the Bahamas Prison Officers Association (BPOA) to make representations to the Commissioner of the Department of Correctional Services in matters relating to the conditions and welfare of officers as a group. Noting that these provisions did not appear to provide collective bargaining rights to the BPOA, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that prison guards can fully enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indications that the above-mentioned provisions do not provide for the right of collective bargaining to the correctional officers and that there are no legislative discussions regarding the matter. Recalling once again that the right to bargain collectively also applies to prison staff, and that the establishment of a simple consultation procedures for public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State is not sufficient, the Committee firmly expects that the Government will take the necessary measures, including legislative, to ensure that prison guards can fully enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention and provide information on any developments in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country and to indicate the sector and the number of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's report of 19 September 2023 on progress made in the implementation of the road map of actions to address all outstanding issues in the complaint pending under article 26 of the ILO Constitution concerning this Convention, among others. It also notes the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 349th Session (November 2023) in this regard, requesting the Government to report on further progress to its 350th Session (March 2024) and to defer the decision on further action to that session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023 and of the Trade Union Committee of International Labour Standards (TU-ILS) (a committee of the workers' representatives from the National Coordination Committee for Workers' Education (NCCWE) and IndustriALL Bangladesh Council (IBC)) transmitted by the Government with its report, as well as the Government's comments thereon. Both the ITUC and the TU-ILS refer to matters addressed in this comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Bangladesh Employers' Federation (BEF), which are incorporated in the Government's report.

The Committee observes from the Government's statement to the Governing Body, within the framework of the discussions on the article 26 proceedings, that the Parliament approved an amendment to the Bangladesh Labour Act (BLA) in November 2023.

Civil liberties. The Committee has been expressing deep concern at the allegations of violence and intimidation of workers for a number of years and has urged the Government to take all necessary measures to prevent such incidents in the future and ensure that, if they occur, they are properly investigated. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to review all the allegations of violence, harassment and intimidation reported by the TU-ILS. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not elaborate on any concrete investigations undertaken into these incidents but simply reiterates that the Industrial Police maintain law and order, prevent violence and threats against unionists and that any alleged excess of law enforcement officials is investigated through established legal and administrative procedures. The Committee further notes from the Government's report in the framework of the pending article 26 proceedings that, in February 2023, the Ministry of Labour and Employment (MOLE) requested the Ministry of Home Affairs to create a dedicated committee for ensuring and monitoring proper investigation of alleged cases of violence and harassment by the police against workers, including in the context of protests. While welcoming this initiative, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to speed up its efforts to approve and establish the committee and to provide information on its composition and functioning in practice. The Committee expects these measures to significantly contribute to speedy and transparent investigations of violations of trade unionists' civil liberties.

The Committee further notes that, in its 2023 observations, the ITUC expresses concern as to the anti-union tendencies of the security and police forces in relation to the exercise of workers' rights and denounces new instances of violence and union busting. In particular, the Committee notes with deep concern the death of Shahidul Ismal, a labour organizer at the Bangladesh Garment and Industrial Workers' Federation (BGIWF), and the wounding of Ahmed Sharif, also a union organizer, in July 2023 in Dhaka. The two were attacked by a group of assailants after they were assisting garment workers to obtain unpaid salaries. The ITUC also reports: (i) injuries to at least 16 garment workers in April 2022 when, during a clash over unpaid salaries, the police charged them with batons; and (ii) a serious case of union busting in a garment factory in 2021 and 2022, involving intimidation, threats and torture of union officers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the specific ITUC allegations, as well as those reported by the TU-ILS in 2022, and urges the Government to ensure that rapid investigations are conducted by an independent entity to determine those responsible, punish the guilty parties and prevent the repetition of any such acts.

In its previous comments, the Committee also encouraged the Government to continue to provide all necessary training and awareness-raising to the police and other State agents on human and trade union rights and urged the Government to review their role to ensure that issues purely concerning labour relations are relegated to the unique authority of the relevant Ministry. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the training and sensitizing programmes offered to Industrial Police personnel (1,348 personnel trained between January and June 2023), as well as continued training of workers, management and government officials on the applicable laws and regulations and the prevention of violence provided by the Department of Labour (DOL) and the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Authority (BEPZA). The Government also indicates that a compendium of laws in Bangla has been drafted, allowing training of Industrial Police to focus on human and trade union rights, labour rights, labour law and other relevant laws and regulations. While taking note of the continued training and other initiatives undertaken, the Committee observes that, according to the TU-ILS, no steps were taken to relegate the authority regarding Industrial Police to the MOLE and the attitude towards trade union leaders has not changed, with new cases filed against them. The Committee is also aware, from publicly available information and the discussion in the Governing Body, of recent incidents of violence in the context of minimum wage protests, leading to injuries, arrests and the death of several workers. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide and indeed intensify targeted training to the Industrial Police on the use of minimum force when engaged in crowd control measures, in particular during labour protests, and urges the Government once again to review the role of the Industrial Police, with the workers' and employers' organizations concerned, so as to ensure that issues purely concerning labour relations are relegated to the unique authority of the relevant Ministry.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize. Registration of trade unions. For a number of years, the Committee has been addressing the need to simplify the registration process to make it user-friendly, objective, rapid and transparent, including by providing comprehensive training to the relevant officers responsible for registration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that training and workshops for DOL officials, as well as workers' representatives, are ongoing, as are discussions to explore the possibility of further simplifying both online and regular registration systems. The Government provides updated statistics on registration between November 2022 and June 2023, which show that 421 new applications were received in addition to 83 pending applications, out of which 236 were accepted, 75 rejected, 172 filed and 102 remain pending. It further informs about the main reasons for rejecting trade union registration (lack of minimum membership, use of fake names, fraudulent practices, etc.). The Committee understands from the above that, in the specified period, registration was only granted to about half of all the applications received, that a large number of the applications were considered as invalid and were filed and that around 15 per cent of all the applications were rejected. It further observes that the Government does not distinguish in its report between the reasons that render a registration application invalid or inadmissible (the application is then filed without assessing whether the material requirements of registration are fulfilled) and those invoked by the Registrar to reject a valid registration application because it does not meet the registration requirements.

The Committee also observes that the ITUC and the TU-ILS raise a number of concerns and point to obstacles with regard to the registration process, including procedural complexities in the online application, delays in registration, DOL-created layers of approval (investigation hearings and other procedures) leading to arbitrary decisions, employers' opposition to trade union registration and lack of consultations on the simplification of the registration process. The ITUC also alleges that the rejection rate of applications by independent unions is higher than indicated by the Government as many of the approved applications only concern government-controlled unions. In these circumstances, the Committee urges the Government to continue to engage with workers' representatives on ways to further simplify the registration process and eliminate any legislative or practical obstacles that prevent it from becoming a rapid, objective and transparent process. The Committee also requests the Government once again to provide detailed information on the reasons which were found in practice to render applications for registration invalid or inadmissible, as well as the reasons which justify the rejection of applications because they do not meet the registration requirements. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to provide adapted training to the relevant officials who are responsible for assessing registration applications. The Committee expects that the Government will be in a position to report progress on this long-standing issue in its next report.

Minimum membership requirements. The Committee had previously pointed to the need to review the BLA with a view to reducing the minimum membership requirements to a reasonable level (currently at 20 per cent, section 179(2)); ending the possible cancellation of trade unions that fall below minimum membership requirements (section 190(f)); and addressing the limits on the number of trade unions in an establishment (currently at three unions, section 179(5)). The Committee notes the Government's indication that no union has yet been cancelled under section 190(f) of the BLA and that the tripartite constituents in the Tripartite Working Group (TWG) for the BLA have discussed the issue of further lowering the minimum membership requirement and will make a comprehensive recommendation on the issue. The Committee further observes from the Government's statement to the Governing Body, within the framework of the discussions on the article 26 proceedings, that the minimum membership requirement for enterprises with over 3,000 workers was reduced from 20 to 15 per cent and the minimum membership requirement in groups of establishments from 30 to 20 per cent (section 183(6)). While taking due note of these amendments, the Committee understands that very few enterprises employ over 3,000 workers and recalls that a minimum membership requirement of 15 per cent in such enterprises and 20 per cent in groups of establishments is still excessive. The Committee further observes with regret that the Government has once again failed to take the opportunity of a legislative reform to address the Committee's previous concerns in relation to sections 179(2) and (5) and 190(f) and notes that the ITUC points to difficulties in almost all factories to reach the minimum membership requirement. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue to discuss the matter with a view to reducing the minimum membership requirements to a reasonable level (sections 179(2) and 183(6)), bearing in mind the recommendations of the tripartite constituents, and also with a view to amending sections 179(5) and 190(f) accordingly.

With regard to the application of the BLA to workers in the agricultural sector, in its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the practical application of the reduced minimum membership requirement in Rule 167(4) of the Bangladesh Labour Rules (BLR) applicable to groups of establishments, including small family farms (300 members). The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are 38 registered trade unions in groups of establishments in the agricultural sector in 20 out of 64 districts, covering 6,834 members and that the stakeholders did not report any hindrance in this regard. While taking note of this update, the Committee observes that the reported unionization rate in the agricultural sector seems extremely low given that tens of millions of workers are engaged in agricultural activities in Bangladesh, and that many of these may well be prevented from trade union activities as a practical matter. Recalling that a minimum requirement of 300 members may in practice restrict the right to organize, especially in case of small family farms, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures, in consultation with the social partners, to reduce the requirement in Rule 167(4) so as to ensure that agricultural workers can exercise their right to organize without hindrance.

Articles 2 and 3. Right to organize, elect officers and carry out activities freely. Bangladesh Labour Act. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to ensure that worker representation in the National Tripartite Consultative Council (NTCC), which is reviewing the BLA, reflects the independent choice of the trade union movement. The Committee notes the Government's indication that with the assistance of the Office, it is developing institutional mechanisms and capacity-building for the NTCC, as well as a road map on social partners' awareness and capacity-building for social dialogue and collective bargaining. The Committee however observes the concerns raised by the ITUC and the TU-ILS that malpractices in the selection process of workers' representatives in tripartite delegations continue, including lack of transparency and independence. Noting these allegations with concern, the Committee urges the Government once again to ensure that selection of workers' representatives into the NTCC reflects the independent choice of the labour movement, so as to allow the NTCC to expeditiously and transparently conduct its work in reviewing the BLA with the aim of aligning it with the Convention.

In relation to the review of the BLA, the Government further informs that, with the assistance of the ILO, a draft amendment of the BLA was discussed and finalized by the TWG, the Tripartite Labour Law Review Committee and the NTCC. While the Committee does not have at its disposal an official translation of the BLA amendment approved by the Parliament in November 2023, it takes note of the Government's indication to the Governing Body in the framework of the discussions on the article 26 proceedings that several amendments agreed on with the Office could not be implemented for technical reasons. The Committee understands, from the draft version of the BLA submitted to the Parliament, that besides the slight reduction in the minimum membership requirements mentioned above (referring to very large enterprises and groups of establishments), amendments were made to section 185 (broadening of the right to organize of seamen). While welcoming these amendments, the Committee observes that most of the other provisions previously highlighted by the Committee as raising concerns with regard to their compatibility with the Convention were not addressed by the labour law review. The Committee is, therefore, obliged to recall the need to further review and amend, or provide information on, the following provisions of the BLA: (i) scope of the law – restrictions on numerous sectors and workers remain, including, among others, Government workers, university teachers and domestic workers (sections 1(4), 2(49) and (65), 175 and 185 (further amendments necessary on the right to organize of seamen)); (ii) restrictions on organizing in groups of establishments (sections 179(5) and 183(1)); (iii) restrictions on trade union membership (sections 2(65), 175, 193 and 300); (iv) interference in trade union activity, including cancellation of registration for reasons that do not justify the severity of the act (sections 192, 196(2)(b) read in conjunction with 190(1)(c), (e) and (g), 229, 291(2)–(3) and 299); (v) interference in trade union elections (section 180(1)(a) read in conjunction with section 196(2)(d), and sections 180(b) and 317(4)(d)); (vi) interference in the right to draw up constitutions freely by providing overly detailed instructions (sections 179(1) and 188 (in addition, there seems to be a discrepancy in that section 188 gives the DOL the power to register and, under certain circumstances, refuse to register any amendments to the constitution of a trade union and its Executive Council whereas Rule 174 of the BLR only refers to notification of such changes to the DOL who will issue a new certificate)); (vii) excessive restrictions on the right to strike (sections 211(3)–(4) and (8) and 227(c)) accompanied by severe penalties (sections 196(2)(e), 291(2)–(3) and 294–296); and (viii) excessive preferential rights for collective bargaining agents (sections 202(24)(b), (c) and (e) and 204). Furthermore, the Committee is still awaiting information on whether workers in small farms consisting of less than five workers can, in law and practice, group together with other workers to form a trade union or affiliate to existing workers' organizations (section 1(4)(n) and (p) of the BLA). The Committee observes with regret that the Government did not avail itself of the opportunity to address these numerous and long-standing concerns during the recent amendment of the BLA despite continued and extensive technical assistance provided by the Office. Further noting the commitment of the Minister of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs expressed in the Governing Body to address other outstanding amendments previously discussed with the Office, the Committee has been subsequently informed that the President has sent the amended law back to the Parliament for further consideration and firmly expects that the opportunity will be taken to address its pending comments so as to ensure compliance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide an English translation of the amended BLA.

The Committee also observes the Government's indication to the Governing Body that section 34 of the Bangladesh Economic Zones Act, 2010 (BEZA) was amended so as to make the BLA applicable in special economic zones, instead of the Export Processing Zones Labour Act, 2019 (ELA). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of this amendment, in particular to indicate when the BLA will start to be applicable in special economic zones and to provide statistics on the formation of trade unions in these zones. The Committee requests the Government to provide an English version of the amended BEZA.

Bangladesh Labour Rules. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the application of Rule 188 (formation of election committees that conduct the election of worker representatives to participation committees in the absence of a union), as well as on the results of the Government's efforts to pilot such elections without any representation of employers (compared to the amended rule of one employer representative in election committees). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the DOL has been supervising the election of workers' representatives to participation committees but observes that the Government does not elaborate on the practical application of the amended Rule 188 or on the pilot project. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request in this regard.

In its previous comment, the Committee also took note of the 2022 BLR amendment and urged the Government to ensure an expedited review of the remaining issues of BLR compatibility with the Convention (Rules 2(g) and (j); 85, Schedule IV, sub-rule 1(h); 169(4); 190; 202; and 350)). The Committee notes that both the ITUC and the TU-ILS raise concerns in relation to the pending issues of BLR compatibility with the Convention and allege, in addition, that: employers use participation committees to suppress trade union activities at the factory level; Rule 172(3) requires both the Director General and the union to inform the employer about its registration; Rule 81(4) allows for a predominant role of employers in the selection of the safety committee secretary and Rule 81(10) gives employers, in certain circumstances, a role in determining workers' representatives in safety committees, leading to concerns as to the legitimacy of these committees, which are essential to ensure safe working conditions. The Committee further observes the amendment to Rule 183(2) which limits workers' representatives in participation committees to permanent workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on the practical application of these amendments and urges the Government once again to ensure an expedited review of all the remaining issues in relation to the Bangladesh Labour Rules, detailed in its previous and current comments, so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

Right to organize in export processing zones. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to expedite the review of the ELA to provide EPZ workers with all the rights guaranteed in the Convention, including on matters concerning the minimum membership requirements to establish Workers' Welfare Associations (WWAs) and federations and the right to associate with other entities. The Committee further requested the Government to provide detailed information on the number of applications and registrations of WWAs, WWA federations and employers' associations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the amendment process of the ELA started in July 2023, including consultations with the social partners, and should be completed by 2025; (ii) the issues raised by the Committee will be thoroughly reviewed in the process; (iii) the BEPZA and the ILO jointly conducted workshops on improving labour standards in the EPZs and trainings for relevant stakeholders; (iv) the BEPZA engaged in an exchange of views with WWA representatives on labour rights in EPZs and in consultations with workers' and employers' representatives on labour rights and best practices, the ELA and the EPZ Labour Rules adopted in 2022. The Committee also takes note of the statistical information provided on the formation and registration of WWAs between November 2022 and July 2023, showing that 31 applications for registration were received and granted. While taking due note of the Government's initiatives and welcoming the continued technical assistance of the Office, the Committee must recall that an exceptionally large number of provisions still need to be repealed or substantially amended to ensure the conformity of the ELA with the Convention and that many of the issues raised under the ELA continue under the newly adopted EPZ Labour Rules (an official translation has not yet been made available to the Committee for a detailed assessment). It also observes the allegations of the ITUC that the situation of the right to organize worsened with the implementation of the ELA, as workers can only join a WWA, where they may not be given the full scope of collective bargaining. The Committee therefore urges the Government to expedite the review of the ELA and the EPZ Labour Rules, in full consultation with the social partners, to ensure the conformity of the legislation with the Convention, in particular on the pending issues highlighted by the Committee in its previous and current comments. The Committee recalls that these include, among others, scope of the law, minimum membership requirements, various forms of interference in WWAs' or WWA federations' internal affairs, unduly broad powers and interference of the Zone Authority, and excessive restrictions on the administration and functioning of WWAs, federations and employers' organizations. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of applications and registrations of WWAs, WWA federations and employers' organizations in EPZs, and to provide an English translation of the EPZ Rules.

In its previous comment, the Committee also encouraged the Government to continue to review the inspection framework set out in the EPZ Labour Rules to ensure the necessary independence of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) and to continue to provide statistical information on inspections of the DIFE in EPZs. The Government informs that the DIFE inspection modality of EPZ factories had been incorporated in the EPZ Labour Rules and that the DIFE is conducting inspections independently and frequently (52 EPZ factories inspected as of July 2023). While taking note of this indication, the Committee recalls that sections 168(1) and 180(g) of the ELA stipulate that the BEPZA Chairperson retains ultimate supervision of labour standards in EPZs and that Rule 290 of the EPZ Labour Rules provides that the DIFE shall submit inspection reports to the Additional Inspector General of the zones who shall direct the concerned establishment to implement the recommendations which he deems feasible. Considering that these provisions may hinder the independent nature and proper functioning of labour inspection, the Committee requests the Government to continue to review the inspection framework set out in the EPZ Labour Rules to ensure the necessary independence of the DIFE and to continue to provide statistical information on DIFE inspections of EPZs. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to take steps to ensure that unrestricted access for and jurisdiction over labour inspection activities in EPZs is provided to DIFE inspectors. The Committee refers to its more detailed comments on this point made under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81).

Finally, noting the Government's indication that all relevant ministries and departments have been engaged in the implementation of the road map established to address all outstanding matters contained in the article 26 complaint, and recalling the overlapping nature of these matters and those raised in the present comment, the Committee expects full and genuine engagement of the Government in addressing these issues. In particular, the Committee firmly expects any upcoming measures taken by the Government, including any legislative amendments, to duly take into account the Committee's present and previous detailed comments to achieve a timely implementation of the road map and full compliance with the Convention.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's report dated 19 September 2023 on progress made in the implementation of the road map of actions to address all outstanding issues in the complaint pending under article 26 of the ILO Constitution concerning this Convention, among others, as well as the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 349th Session (November 2023) requesting the Government to report on further progress made to its 350th Session (March 2024) and to defer the decision on further action to that session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023 and of the Trade Union Committee of International Labour Standards (TU-ILS) (a committee of the workers' representatives from the National Coordination Committee for Workers' Education (NCCWE) and IndustriALL Bangladesh Council (IBC)) submitted by the Government, as well as the Government's response to the latter observations. Both the ITUC and the TU-ILS refer to matters addressed in this comment, pointing to legislative and practical difficulties in the application of the Convention. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the 2019 and 2020 ITUC observations alleging massive anti-union dismissal of garment workers.

The Committee notes the observations of the Bangladesh Employers' Federation (BEF), transmitted with the Government's report.

The Committee notes the 2022 amendment to the Bangladesh Labour Rules (BLR) and the adoption in 2022 of the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Labour Rules (EPZ Labour Rules). The Committee further observes from the Government's statement to the Governing Body, within the framework of the discussions on the article 26 proceedings, that the Parliament approved an amendment to the Bangladesh Labour Act (BLA) in November 2023. The Committee has however been subsequently informed that the President has sent the amended law back to the Parliament for further consideration and firmly expects that the opportunity will be taken to address its pending comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide detailed statistics on the follow-up to complaints of anti-union discrimination and encouraged continued training of the relevant labour officials. It requested information on the functioning in practice of the Workers' Resource Centre and expressed its expectation that the online database on anti-union discrimination would be fully functional. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between 2020 and April 2023, 60 complaints of anti-union discrimination and unfair labour practices were received by the Department of Labour (DOL), out of which 39 were settled (37 settled amicably and 2 cases filed in labour courts) and 21 cases are undergoing investigation. The Government also informs on trainings and workshops concerning the standard operating procedures (SOPs) on unfair labour practices and anti-union discrimination provided to relevant government officials and workers' and employers' representatives. It further provides information on the Workers' Resource Centre and a link to the online database on anti-union complaints. While welcoming this information, the Committee observes that the ITUC and the TU-ILS raise concerns as to anti-union tendencies of the security forces and anti-union discrimination by factories without investigations and dissuasive sanctions, as well as a backlog of labour cases in the courts. They allege that: there is a lack of appropriate procedures and remedies for unfair labour practice complaints in the BLR; DOL investigations of anti-union practices lack transparency and do not follow the SOPs; filing a case to the court remains a prerogative of the DOL, instead of the concerned workers; and there is a need for awareness-raising among workers on the online database. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to engage in training activities of the relevant officials to ensure an efficient and transparent handling of anti-union discrimination complaints in line with the applicable SOPs and to provide the relevant statistics on the follow-up to the complaints, specifying the number and the nature of the sanctions imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to clarify whether, in line with section 213 of the BLA, a worker can address a complaint concerning anti-union discrimination directly to the labour court or whether referral to the DOL is a mandatory step in the procedure. The Committee further encourages the Government to promote the use of the online database among the workers, including through the Workers' Resource Centre, and to work together with representative workers' organizations on improving the functioning of the database.

The Committee also requested the Government to take the necessary measures, after consultation with the social partners, to increase the amount of the fines imposable for acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee understands from the Government's statement to the Governing Body, within the framework of the discussions on the article 26 proceedings, that an amendment was made to section 291(1) of the BLA which increases the penalty for unfair labour practices and anti-union discrimination acts of employers (violations of sections 195 or 196A) from 10,000 Bangladeshi taka (BDT) (equals to US$120) to BDT15,000 (equals to US$136). While taking due note of this amendment, the Committee observes that the increase in penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination would still appear not to represent a sufficiently dissuasive sanction. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, after genuine consultation with the social partners, to review the relevant provisions of the BLA so as to increase the amount of penalties imposable on employers for acts of anti-union discrimination in order to ensure that such acts give rise to a just reparation and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

In its previous comment, the Committee also requested the Government to provide further information on the outcome of the 5,407 labour-related complaints received and solved through the helpline in the ready-made garment sector and on the measures taken to ensure anonymity of the process. It encouraged the Government to continue to formally expand the helpline to other geographical areas and industrial sectors. While observing that the Government does not provide any details as to the outcome of the complaints or the measures to ensure anonymity, the Committee welcomes the Government's statement that the helpline has now been expanded to all geographical areas and industrial sectors. The Government also indicates that 1,307 complaints were received between 2022 and 2023, out of which 1,210 were solved and 97 are being processed. Further noting the TU-ILS suggestion to conduct mass-level awareness raising campaigns among workers and to categorize the outcomes of the complaints to allow for appropriate remedial action, the Committee encourages the Government to engage with the social partners to further improve the functioning of the complaint procedure and to raise awareness about it among the workers. The Committee trusts that the helpline will contribute to a speedy resolution of reported labour complaints, including those related to anti-union practices.

Allegations of anti-union discrimination following the 2018–19 minimum wage protests. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to clarify its involvement in the investigations into the massive dismissals of workers following the 2018–19 minimum wage protests and to provide information on the concrete remedies applied in all cases of termination for anti-union reasons. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any updates in this regard and simply reiterates previously provided information. It adds that 29 committees composed of officials from the DOL and the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) were formed in eight labour intensive districts to, among others, publicize about a newly introduced DIFE helpline and to dispose of issues relating to termination or dismissal of workers. Given the time that has elapsed since the 2018–19 minimum wage protests and observing that the Committee on Freedom of Association is also examining these incidents in the framework of Case No. 3263, the Committee expects the Government to ensure that, where this has not yet been the case, independent investigations will be conducted and, where appropriate, adequate remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions ordered.

Case concerning dismissed workers in the mining sector. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed its expectation that the case pending against dismissed workers in the mining sector who were charged with illegal activities would be completed rapidly. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the case is currently pending at the District Sessions Court, Dinajpur and that despite several hearings having been scheduled, they did not take place due to requests by both parties for time extension. Regretting the delay in concluding these proceedings, which relate to incidents dating back to 2012, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the judgment and, in particular, to indicate any aspects of the case relating to alleged anti-union practices.

Allegations of anti-union discrimination in practice and of inadequate judicial response. The Committee observes the TU-ILS concerns that incidents of anti-union discrimination are very common and that cases in labour courts are lengthy and often dismissed. Recalling that improving measures to address instances of anti-union discrimination and unfair labour practices is one area of the Government's road map established in the framework of the article 26 proceedings and recalling that the Government regularly reiterates its commitment to reduce the backlog of cases in labour courts, including through the development of conciliation and arbitration as alternative dispute resolution mechanisms, the Committee urges the Government to provide updates in this respect and expects serious and concrete measures to be taken to eliminate the occurrence of systematic anti-union discrimination in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the average duration of judicial proceedings relating to allegations of anti-union discrimination.

Protection of workers in export-processing zones (EPZs) against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed statistics on the follow-up to anti-union discrimination complaints brought to the competent authorities in EPZs. While taking note of the Government's indication that, as of July 2023, out of the total of 7,192 calls received through the helpline established in EPZs, none were related to anti-union discrimination, the Committee observes that the Government does not refer to any of the other procedures that it had previously indicated were in place to ensure protection against anti-union discrimination, including inspection and monitoring by the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Authority (BEPZA) and other complaint procedures. The TU-ILS suggests that statistics compiled by the Government should be published to be accessible to workers' organizations. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government once again to provide statistical information on anti-union discrimination complaints in EPZs, whether received through the helpline or otherwise brought to the attention of the competent authorities, and to indicate, in particular, their follow-up and remedies and sanctions imposed.

The Committee further recalls from its previous comment that a number of provisions of the Bangladesh Export Processing Zones Labour Act (ELA) needed to be amended to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention are adequately protected against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Committee's recommendations will be placed before the Tripartite Standing Committee at the time of revision of the law and points to ongoing trainings on this matter provided by the BEPZA. The Committee also observes from the Government's report under the Freedom of Association and the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) that the amendment process of the ELA started in July 2023, including consultations with the social partners, and should be completed by 2025. Recalling the need to substantially amend the ELA to achieve its compliance with the Convention, the Committee expects the Government to ensure that the pending issues highlighted in its previous comment, which relate to sections 2(48), 93, 115(2), 121(2)-(4), 151 and 157, will be duly reviewed and addressed in the ongoing legislative reform, so as to ensure that all workers covered by the Convention are adequately protected against acts of anti-union discrimination.

The Committee also requested the Government to provide its observations on the allegations communicated by the ITUC referring to widespread anti-union practices in the country, illustrated by the dismissal of 36 workers in two EPZ factories in April 2019 following unsuccessful attempts at collective bargaining. The Government indicates that the BEPZA does not have sufficient information to provide a reply on this point. Considering that the Committee does not have in its possession any other details in this regard, it invites the Government to forward the 2019 ITUC observations to the relevant EPZ authorities and invites the ITUC to provide any relevant details that may assist the authorities in providing their observations and addressing the denounced practices.

Articles 2 and 3. Lack of legislative protection against acts of interference in the BLA and the ELA. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to take all necessary measures to broaden the scope of protection against acts of interference in the BLA and the ELA. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the applicable legal provisions offer sufficient protection against acts of interference. It also points to trainings, workshops and consultations with representatives of workers and employers in EPZs on the applicable legislation, promotion of labour rights and best practices. Taking note of the above, the Committee recalls that while the BLA and the ELA contain provisions which prohibit certain acts of interference, they do not cover all acts prohibited under Article 2 of the Convention, such as acts designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of the employer, to support workers' organizations by financial or other means with the objective of placing them under the control of an employer or an employers' organization and to exercise pressure in favour or against any workers' organization. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again, including in the framework of the legislative reform, to engage in consultations with the social partners, with a view to broadening the current scope of protection against acts of interference both in the BLA and in the ELA. The Committee trusts that, in the meantime, efforts will be made to ensure that, in practice, workers' and employers' organizations will be protected from any acts of interference against each other.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee encouraged the Government to consider amending Rule 202 of the BLR, which prohibits certain trade union activities in a way that could impinge on collective bargaining. The Committee observes with regret that although the BLR were amended in 2022 and the TU-ILS submitted a proposal for amendment in 2023, Rule 202 has not been substantially modified. Observing the Government's indication that this issue may be considered in further amendments to the BLR following the 2023 BLA amendment, the Committee trusts that Rule 202 will be amended to ensure that it does not unduly impinge on the right to collective bargaining.

Higher-level collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to consider further revisions to sections 202 and 203 of the BLA so as to clearly provide a legal basis for collective bargaining at the industry, sector and national levels. It also requested the Government to continue to provide statistics in relation to higher-level collective agreements concluded and in force. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) collective bargaining is conducted at the level of the enterprise or industry, except for wage fixation in the tea and shipping sectors, which are done at the sectoral level; (ii) despite provisions to this effect (section 210(3) of the BLA), employers generally fail to submit concluded bipartite collective agreements to the DOL, leading to a lack of statistics on this point but training programmes are being used to sensitize employers on this issue; (iii) when bipartite negotiations do not lead to an agreement, they are referred as disputes to the DOL and resolved through tripartite negotiations; and (iv) the DOL was involved in 34 such demands between January 2018 and May 2023, 32 of which were settled. The Committee also notes, from the Government's report under the article 26 proceedings before the Governing Body, that the DOL has developed a road map on social partners' awareness and capacity building for social dialogue and collective bargaining at all levels. Furthermore, according to the TU-ILS, workers' organizations are in favour of creating a legal basis for collective bargaining at the sectoral and national levels. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to ensure that collective bargaining is allowed and promoted at all levels, including at the sectoral and national levels, both in law and in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to engage in training of employers to increase compliance with section 210(3) of the BLA so as to allow for collection of statistics in this regard.

Collective bargaining in the agricultural sector. The Committee requested the Government to provide any available statistics on collective bargaining in the agricultural sector and to clarify the functioning in practice of tripartite negotiations in the sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are 38 registered trade unions in the agricultural sector covering 6,834 members but that the DOL has not received any charters of demands from such unions. According to the TU-ILS, the excessive minimum membership requirement of 300 workers to create a trade union in the sector prevents trade union formation and collective bargaining. In light of the above and referring to its comments under Convention No. 87 on the minimum membership requirements, the Committee requests the Government to take, both in law and in practice, and in consultation with the social partners, active measures to promote collective bargaining in the agricultural sector and to clarify the functioning in practice of tripartite negotiations in the sector, previously mentioned by the Government.

Determination of collective bargaining agents. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to clarify whether, in a case where no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as the exclusive collective bargaining agent under section 202 of the BLA, the existing unions are given the possibility, jointly or separately, to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members. The Government informs that if there are more unions in an establishment, they either elect a collective bargaining agent or the Director General of Labour can, upon application by either of the unions or the employer, hold a secret ballot to determine which union will be the collective bargaining agent for the establishment. According to the Government, in practice, at least one union reaches the required threshold to be the exclusive bargaining agent under section 202(15)(e) of the BLA. Further noting the Government's indication that simplification of the determination process is being considered as part of the revision of the BLA, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and to ensure that, where no union reaches the required threshold for the acquisition of the exclusive bargaining agent status under section 202 of the BLA, the existing unions can negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Promotion of collective bargaining in EPZs. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide statistics on collective bargaining in EPZs and to endeavour to further amend section 180 of the ELA to ensure that the determination of collective bargaining agents is the prerogative of an independent body. The Committee also requested the Government to clarify the implications in practice of section 117(2) which does not allow any proceedings before a civil court for the purpose of enforcing or recovering damages for breach of any agreement. While noting the Government's indication that Workers' Welfare Associations (associations formed for the purpose of regulating relations between workers and employers – WWAs) can engage in collective bargaining and are performing their activities in full freedom, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide any information on the Committee's previous comments. It also observes that the issue raised in relation to section 180 of the ELA (determination of the legitimacy of a WWA and its capacity to act as a collective bargaining agent by the Executive Chairperson) has been reproduced in Rule 195 of the EPZ Labour Rules. Furthermore, the ITUC alleges that the situation of workers in EPZs worsened with the implementation of the ELA, as workers can only join WWAs, where they may not be given the full scope of collective bargaining. In view of these concerns, the Committee requests the Government once again to endeavour to amend section 180 of the ELA and to take further measures to promote collective bargaining in EPZs. It also requests the Government to provide statistics on collective bargaining agreements in EPZs and to clarify the implications in practice of section 117(2) of the ELA.

The Committee also observes, from the EPZ Labour Rules that: (i) Rule 4 gives the Additional Inspector General discretion to shape the outcome of service rules and determine their conformity with the law; (ii) Rule 130(4) provides that the EPZ Wage Board can function with a quorum of 50 per cent of all members including the chairperson and one representative from workers and employers each and allows for proceedings in subsequent meetings not to be interrupted in the absence of any such member; and (iii) Rule 131(6) allows the chairperson to remove any member if it is contrary to public interest, for misconduct or any other reason. The Committee recalls that, according to Article 4 of the Convention, collective bargaining takes place between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations, and that collective bargaining must be free and voluntary and respect the principle of the autonomy of the parties (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 200). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these Rules in practice and, in particular, to ensure that Rule 4 is not used to limit collective bargaining.

Compulsory arbitration in the ELA. The Committee recalls from its previous comment that sections 131(3)-(5) and 132 of the ELA read in conjunction with section 144(1) allow for unilateral referral of disputes to EPZ Labour Court which could result in compulsory arbitration. Taking note of the Government's indication that the Committee's recommendations will be taken up by the Tripartite Standing Committee at the time of review of the ELA, the Committee expects the Government to ensure that the issue is properly addressed and recalls that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in cases of acute national crisis.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee requested the Government to indicate whether trade unions in the public sectors previously referred to by the Government (sector corporations, city corporations and municipalities, port authorities, secondary and higher secondary education boards, water development boards, energy sectors, banks and financial institutions, power sectors, jute mills and sugar mills) have the right to undertake collective bargaining and to provide examples of collective bargaining agreements. While noting the Government's indication that between January 2018 and May 2022 there were 32 collective bargaining agents formed in the public sector and the DOL settled 12 cases of charters of demands in 12 different public sectors, the Committee observes that the Government does not clarify whether organizations in all of the mentioned sectors can undertake collective bargaining and it does not provide examples of specific collective agreements.

The Committee further recalls from its previous comment the distinction made by the Government between public autonomous organizations, in which workers can form trade unions, and other public sector entities. The Government also indicated that only staff and not officers of public autonomous organizations can form trade unions. The Committee requested the Government to provide a list of public sector services or entities where collective bargaining is not allowed and to indicate the criteria used to distinguish between staff and officers for the purposes of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in line with section 1(4) of the BLA, collective bargaining is not allowed for the Government or any office under the Government (except the railway department, posts, telegraph and telephone departments, roads and highways department, public works department, public health engineering department and Bangladesh Government press), security printing press and ordnance factories. In accordance with Article 6 of the Convention, the Committee recalls that, only public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from the scope of the Convention while all other persons employed by the Government, by public enterprises or by autonomous public institutions, should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that collective bargaining is granted to all workers covered by the Convention, including public sector workers and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It requests the Government to clarify whether trade unions in the sectors previously referred to by the Government have the right to undertake collective bargaining and to provide examples of collective bargaining agreements concluded in the public sector. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the criteria used to distinguish between staff and officers for the purposes of collective bargaining.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee, in its previous comment, expressed hope that significant progress would be made to bring both the legislation and the practice relating to collective bargaining into conformity with the Convention. In reply, the Government informs about progress made in the promotion of effective conciliation and arbitration as a means of alternative dispute resolution. The Committee further notes the measures mentioned above in relation to higher-level collective bargaining and observes from the Government's statement to the Governing Body during the article 26 proceedings that amendments were made to the BLA to provide for SOPs on expert support during collective bargaining. The Committee, however, notes in this regard that the ITUC alleges that trade unions face serious obstacles when carrying out their activities which is demonstrated by the low number of collective agreements signed, including in the garment sector where only four trade unions reached an agreement with their management through conciliation. The Committee further observes that, according to ILOSTAT, the coverage of collective bargaining in 2020 was only 1.6 per cent. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts in bringing both the legislation and practice in line with the Convention and to take active measures to promote collective bargaining as a means of achieving balanced and sustainable industrial relations.

Finally, noting the Government's indication that all relevant ministries and departments have been engaged in the implementation of the road map established to address all outstanding matters contained in the article 26 complaint, and recalling the overlapping nature of these matters and those raised in the present comment, the Committee expects full and genuine engagement of the Government in addressing these issues. In particular, the Committee firmly expects any upcoming measures taken by the Government, including any legislative amendments, to duly take into account the Committee's present and previous comments to achieve a timely implementation of the road map and full compliance with the Convention.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 10 September 2014, concerning matters examined under this comment, as well as other allegations of violations of the Convention in the law. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2016, which are of a general nature. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government since 1998 to provide information on developments in the process of reviewing legislation regarding trade union recognition. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that there are no further developments in the process of reviewing legislation regarding trade union recognition, and that a number of the observations made by the ITUC refer to issues concerning trade union registration. Hoping that it will be able to observe progress in the near future, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in the legislative review process and it recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1967)

The Committee had noted the comments made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in a communication received on 31 August 2014. The Committee requests once again the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously noted that the new Employment Rights Act (ERA) only covered cases of anti-union dismissals (section 27) and limited this protection to employees continuously employed for a period of over one year. The Committee had recalled that the Government had adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination which should not be confined to penalizing dismissal on anti-union grounds, but should cover all acts of anti-union discrimination (demotions, transfers and other prejudicial acts) at all stages of the employment relationship, regardless of the employment period, including at the recruitment stage, and had therefore requested the Government to amend the new Act so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that section 40A of the Trade Union Act provides protection against acts of anti-union discrimination stating that an employer who dismisses a worker or adversely affects the employment or alters the positions of a worker to his prejudice because that worker takes part in trade union activities is guilty of an offence. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that under the proposed Employment (Prevention and Discrimination) Act, which is currently in an advanced stage of preparation, a person discriminates against another when that person on a ground specified (subsection (2)) creates an exclusion or shows a preference, the intent or effect of which is to subject the other person to any disadvantage, restrictions or other detriment, and that the Government will take immediate steps to include "trade union membership or trade union status" as a ground established in subsection (2). The Government further indicates that under the proposed Act, the Employment Rights Tribunal will have the power to make a range of orders, including paying to the complainant a compensation in an amount that may include exemplary damages. The Committee trusts that the new legislation will soon be adopted and will ensure adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

In its previous comment, the Committee had further noted that while sections 33–37 of the new ERA provided for the possibility of reinstatement, re engagement and compensation, the maximum amount of compensation awarded to workers who have been employed for less than two years is five-weeks wages, which, depending on the number of years of continuous employment, is increased by between two-and-a-half and three-and-a-half weeks wages for each year of that period (Fifth Schedule). The Committee had considered that the prescribed amounts do not represent sufficiently dissuasive sanctions for anti-union dismissal, and had therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Fifth Schedule of the new ERA so as to bring the compensation amount to an adequate level. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is proposing an amendment to the ERA that: (i) would allow the Chief Labour Officer to lodge cases before the Employment Rights Tribunal which may include persons employed for less than one year and where anti-union discrimination is being alleged; and (ii) gives power to the Tribunal to order an amount not exceeding 52 weeks' wages. The Committee recalls that the compensation envisaged for anti-union dismissal should: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; and (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprises concerned (it has considered, for example, that while compensation of up to six months' wages may be a deterrent for small and medium-sized enterprises, that is not necessarily the case for highly productive and large enterprises). The Committee trusts that the Government will take all the necessary measures to amend the ERA in line with the principles set out above, and requests the Government to provide information on any development in relation to the envisaged legislative amendment and its application in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belarus

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Belarus Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP), received on 24 and 31 August 2023, and of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, referring to matters addressed in this comment.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

The Committee notes the Resolution concerning the measures recommended by the Governing Body under article 33 of the ILO Constitution on the subject of Belarus, adopted at the 111th Session (June 2023) of the International Labour Conference. The Committee notes that the Conference urged the Government of Belarus to receive as a matter of urgency an ILO tripartite mission with a view to gathering information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and subsequent recommendations of the supervisory bodies of the ILO, including a visit to the independent trade union leaders and activists in prison or detention. The Committee further notes that at its 349th Session (October-November 2023), the Governing Body discussed the follow-up to the Conference resolution (see GB.349/INS/13\(Rev.1\)) and urged the Government to do the same.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it expressed deep concern regarding the situation of civil liberties in Belarus and the application of the Convention in law and in practice, and had urged the Government to take a number of measures to address them. At the outset, the Committee notes with deep regret that in its report, the Government once again merely reiterates the information it had previously provided and considers that the Committee misunderstands and misinterprets the situation on the ground.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee recalls that it urged the Government to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities, and to drop all related charges. The Committee also urged the Government to provide detailed information concerning the situation of these trade unionists, including charges brought against them, and give access, as a matter of urgency, to visitors, including officials of the ILO, to ascertain the conditions of arrest and detention and the welfare of the above-mentioned persons. If, in the meantime, any of the above trade unionists had been brought to court, the Committee urged the Government to provide information on the outcome of any proceedings against them and to communicate copies of any court decisions issued in their cases.

The Committee notes with deep concern the list of 47 trade union leaders and activists currently detained or whose freedom of movement is restricted, transmitted by the BKDP. The Committee further notes with deep concern the deteriorating conditions of imprisonment of the BKDP chairperson, Mr Aliaksandr Yarashuk. After a four-year prison sentence to a general regime colony was issued in December 2022, Mr Yarashuk was transferred to a strict regime prison where he is kept in a cell nearly all the time, with only the right to take short walks in the yard, while other normal prison privileges, such as telephone calls and visits from relatives, are reduced. The Committee also notes with deep concern the information provided by the ITUC to the Governing Body at its 349th Session to illustrate the conditions in which trade unionists were detained. The ITUC also indicates that while several trade union leaders arrested in April 2022 have been released, they still face charges. The ITUC further alleges that over the past months, throughout the country, police have proceeded with mass arrests and the detention of employees, deemed “disloyal to the regime”. The ITUC also refers to an instruction issued by the Belarus authorities to its embassies not to renew passports of Belarusian citizens abroad, in order to force them to return to the country and face persecution.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it had repeatedly drawn attention to the lack of grounds and outright absurdity of allegations that the country’s trade unions and citizens were persecuted for carrying out trade union activities and legally and peacefully exercising civil rights and liberties. According to the Government, the ILO is being misled by the complaints of politically motivated individuals and organizations, and therefore continues to erroneously assume that the 2020 protests were motivated by economic and social considerations, were lawful and peaceful, and were directed at protecting civil and trade union rights and liberties. The Government insists that purely political events, unrelated to the processes of social dialogue in the workplace and the exercise of trade union rights, should not serve as a basis for assessing compliance with the Convention and should not be considered when monitoring the implementation thereof. The 2020 protests were artificially encouraged by outside forces, were unlawful and intended to seize power by unconstitutional means. The protestors’ demands (the resignation of the Head of State, fresh elections, exoneration of law breakers) had nothing to do with the protection of citizens’ labour, social and economic interests or the tasks that trade unions are bound to perform. The Government considers that the authors of the complaints deliberately brought political issues to the ILO in order to discredit Belarus internationally, justify unprecedented unilateral restrictive measures against the country, escalate political pressure on the legitimate authorities and launch another wave of sanctions based on ILO decisions. The Government reiterates that all citizens and trade unions referred to in the complaints and comments of the ILO supervisory bodies had been prosecuted for specific unlawful acts not connected with the lawful and peaceful exercise of trade union rights and freedoms. Thus, all calls for the dismissal of all charges against them and their immediate release had no objective legal basis. The review of sentences, interaction with the convicted persons and their release from custody falls within the exclusive competence of law enforcement agencies and courts, interference in the activities of which is inadmissible and entails liability in accordance with the law. In this regard, and with reference to the above-mentioned list of detained trade unionists, the Government indicates that this was yet another attempt to convince the ILO of the alleged persecution of “independent” trade unions in order to escalate pressure on Belarus. The Government recalls that the activities of the BKDP and its member organizations were terminated by Supreme Court decisions on the basis that they contradicted the national Constitution and other legislation, and caused harm to the State or public interests. The Government indicates that six of the 47 persons listed as prisoners have already served their respective sentences and that four of them have not even been sent to correctional institutions. Regarding another 13 individuals (Ms Mikhniuk, Ms Britikova, Mr Yarashuk and Mr Antusevich (who was released after serving the entire sentence and after the receipt of the Government's report), Mishuk, Khanevitch, Zhernak, Berasneu, Fiadynich, Areshka, Gromov, Chichmarev and Sliazhou), the Government indicates that these citizens had been found guilty of committing specific serious offences. The Government further indicates that ten persons from the list were members of a group "Rabochy Rukh" ("Workers' movement"), an extremist formation, the activities of which are prohibited. In view of the gravity of the offences committed (creation and/or participation in an extremist formation, treason against the State, slander, unlawful acts with firearms, ammunition and explosives, and so forth), these citizens were sentenced to longer periods of deprivation of liberty. Other citizens on the list had been prosecuted for specific unlawful acts such as gross violation of public order resulting in disruption of transport and enterprise operations; violence against internal affairs officers; calls for actions aimed at harming national security; incitement to national or social enmity and discord on the grounds of national and social affiliation; and incitement to ethnic or social hatred and discord on the grounds of national or social origin. The Government points out that these acts are unrelated to the lawful and peaceful exercise of trade union activities, civil or other rights and freedoms. According to the Government, in the vast majority of cases, the sentences imposed on them did not exceed three years. Four persons were serving their sentences (restriction of liberty) at their place of residence, and two persons were serving their sentences in open-type correctional institutions.

The Committee deplores the Government's unwillingness to take steps for the release of the detained trade union leaders and members. The Committee further deplores that on the one hand the Government reiterates that trade unionists had been prosecuted for specific unlawful acts not connected with the lawful and peaceful exercise of trade union rights and freedoms and, on the other, it fails to provide a copy of the judicial decisions as previously requested by the Committee. The Committee once again requests the Government to communicate copies of court decisions issued in their cases.

The Committee further recalls that for a number of years the ILO supervisory bodies, including this Committee, have been drawing the Government's attention to the International Labour Conference 1970 resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties, which emphasizes that the rights conferred upon workers' and employers' organizations must be based on respect for civil liberties, as their absence removes all meaning from the concept of trade union rights. With reference to its previous comments and the 402nd Report (March 2023) of the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) on Measures taken by the Government of the Republic of Belarus to implement the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee considers that the failure of the Government to acknowledge, address and redress very serious allegations of violation of civil liberties or to act on the repeated specific requests of the ILO supervisory bodies, including those made by this Committee, reinforces the reality of wilful Government non-compliance with its obligations stemming from its membership in the Organization. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its previous request to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities, and to drop all related charges. The Committee urges the Government to receive without further delay an ILO tripartite mission with a view to gathering information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and subsequent recommendations of the supervisory bodies of the ILO, including a visit to the independent trade union leaders and activists in prison or detention.

Application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the outstanding issues of the application of the Convention relate to the following concerns: (1) right to establish workers' organizations, which includes the issue of legal address and the right, in practice, to form trade unions outside the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FPB); (2) the right of workers' organizations to receive and use foreign gratuitous aid (funding obtained from abroad); (3) the right, in law and in practice, to demonstrate and hold mass events; (4) the right to strike; (5) consultation with organizations of workers and employers; and (6) labour disputes resolution system. The Committee observes with deep regret the absence of information on the concrete measures taken by the Government to give effect to the Committee's previous requests aimed at addressing these concerns. Instead, the Government merely reiterates the information it has previously provided and points to a lack of contradiction between national law and practice and the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound once again to urge that the Government take measures to amend without further delay Decree No. 3 (on receiving and using foreign gratuitous aid), the Law on Mass Activities and the accompanying Regulation, as well as section 342-2, 369, 369-1 and 369-3 of the Criminal Code providing for restrictions on mass events and associated penalties, in order to bring them into compliance with the Government's international obligations regarding freedom of association. It also once again urges the Government to take measures to revise sections 388(1), (3) and (4), 390, 392 and 393 of the Labour Code restricting the right to strike; as well as section 42(7), which expressly allows an employer to dismiss or terminate a labour contract with a worker who is absent from work in connection with serving an administrative penalty in the form of an administrative arrest; who forces other workers to participate in a strike or calls on other workers to stop performing work duties without sound reason; or who participates in an illegal strike or other forms of withholding labour without sound reasons. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on all steps taken in this regard.

In its previous comment, the Committee deplored the effect of the dissolution of the BKDP on the work of the National Council on Labour and Social Issues (NCLSI) and of the tripartite Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere (the tripartite Council). In this respect, the Committee noted that with the dissolution of the BKDP, the only representation of workers' voice in these structures was now the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FPB), which enjoyed the publicly expressed support from State authorities at the highest level, and whose independence from the authorities was questionable. In these circumstances, the Committee questioned the continuing legitimacy of the NCLSI and the tripartite Council. Considering that the development of free and independent organizations and their involvement in social dialogue is indispensable to enable a government to confront its social and economic problems and resolve them in the best interests of the workers and the nation, the Committee urged the Government to take steps to review the situation of the dissolved trade unions in this light so as to ensure that they may again function.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the tripartite Council resumed its work in 2023 and had two meetings (on 26 May, to consider the recommendation of the CFA regarding a non-judicial mechanism for settling labour disputes and at which it was decided to establish an expert group from among its members to examine communications from trade unions and employers' organizations; and on 22 September, to consider information provided by the ILO on the right to strike and the interpretation of the Convention, as well as the issue of collective bargaining at various levels of social partnership). The Government further informs that the NCLSI also met twice: on 14 April 2023, to consider the implementation of the General Agreement (2022–2024) and the implementation of a set of measures to reduce the shortage of workers in 2022–2023 and on 26 July 2023, to discuss regulation of the crisis management mechanism to aid the financial recovery of insolvent organizations and the situation of the consumer market. While noting the above information, the Committee notes with deep concern the absence of any measures taken to review the situation of the dissolved trade unions so as to ensure that they may again function and fully participate in national tripartite bodies. The Committee reiterates in the strongest terms its previous requests and expects the Government to indicate concrete steps taken to that end.

The Committee notes that Law No. 225-Z of 12 December 2022 on Employers' Associations will enter into force on 16 December 2023. The Committee notes that the Law provides for the notion of a "confederation of employers of the Republic of Belarus", defined as the most representative employers' organization. The Committee observes that two employers' organizations are currently members of the tripartite Council and are signatories of the General Agreement. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the impact of the certification of one employers' organization as confederation under the Law on the membership of the tripartite Council.

The Committee deplores the total lack of progress in implementing the recommendations of the 2004 Commission of Inquiry and in addressing the outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, as well as the continuing deterioration of freedom of association in the country. The Committee once again urges the Government to engage with the ILO with a view to fully implementing all outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies without further delay.

The Committee notes that in its resolution, the International Labour Conference decided to hold at its future sessions a special sitting of the Committee on the Application of Standards for the purpose of discussing the application of the Convention by the Government and the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, so long as the Government has not been shown to have fulfilled its obligations.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted a number of concerns raised by the Belarus Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP) with regard to the application of the Convention, in law and in practice, referring to inadequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, the system of collective bargaining and the work of the tripartite Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere (hereinafter, tripartite Council).

The Committee notes with deep regret that in its report, the Government once again merely reiterates the information it had previously provided and indicates that the legislation and practice are in compliance with the Convention.

The Committee observes with grave concern the dissolution of the BKDP and all of its affiliates and the effect it has had on the work of the national tripartite bodies, including the tripartite Council under the auspices of which General Agreements are signed and their implementation is monitored, and social dialogue at all levels. The Committee further deplores the continuing deterioration of freedom of association in the country, as described in detail in its comments on the application of Convention No. 87.

The Committee notes that in its Resolution concerning the measures recommended by the Governing Body under article 33 of the ILO Constitution on the subject of Belarus, adopted at the 111th Session (June 2023), the International Labour Conference decided to hold at its future sessions a special sitting of the Committee on the Application of Standards for the purpose of discussing the application of the Convention by the Government and the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, so long as the Government has not been shown to have fulfilled its obligations.

The Committee once again urges the Government to engage with the ILO with a view to fully implement all outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies without further delay.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend the Settlement of Disputes in Essential Services Act 1939 (SDESA), which empowers the authorities to refer a collective dispute to compulsory arbitration to prohibit a strike or to terminate a strike in the banking sector, civil aviation, port authority, postal services, social security scheme and the petroleum sector, i.e. services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that the SDESA has not been amended. The Committee therefore reiterates its long-standing request and urges the Government to provide information on the steps taken, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the Schedule to the SDESA in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration or a prohibition on strikes is permitted only in services that are essential in the strict sense of the term – that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1983)

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled allegations by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of anti-union discrimination in the banana plantation sector and in export processing zones and requested the Government to ensure that the competent authorities take fully into account in their control and prevention activities the issue of anti-union discrimination, and that the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee notes that the Government states that no acts of anti-union discrimination were denounced to the authorities in the above-mentioned sectors during the reporting period (July 2017 to June 2021). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that its Labour Department has been closely monitoring these sectors by conducting inspections of workplaces to ensure that workers are adequately protected, including against acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of their employment. While it welcomes the information provided regarding the conduct of labour inspections, the Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that Belizean workers are fully informed of their rights with respect to anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to continue reporting on any statistics concerning the anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee raised the need to amend section 25 of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act (TUEOA), which provides that the tripartite body entrusted with the certification of the representative trade unions may, before granting any certification to a trade union, include additional employees to the bargaining unit, or exclude some employees therefrom in order to render the unit more appropriate. The Committee notes that the Government states that section 25 of the TUEOA was not amended but that discussions continue at the Labour Advisory Board and the Tripartite Body regarding the TUEOA, which is likely to be amalgamated with the Trade Unions Act. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that objective and pre-established criteria for the certification of the representative trade unions are provided under the new legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the text once adopted.

The Committee previously requested the Government to continue promoting social dialogue in order to bring section 27(2) of the TUEOA, which stipulates that a trade union may be certified as the bargaining agent if it is supported by at least 51 per cent of employees, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that no agreement was reached on any legislative changes in this regard, but that discussions continue at the Tripartite Body and the Labour Advisory Board regarding a proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act which would amalgamate the Trade Unions Act and the TUEOA. The Committee recalls that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativity to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 233). Noting the Government's indication that ten collective agreements covering a total of 1592 workers were concluded between 2007 and 2021, the Committee considers that the very low coverage of collective agreements in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining contained in the legislation. In this regard, the Committee also recalls that under a system of the designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 234). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the discussions concerning the proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act, to bring its legislation into line with the Convention with respect to the representativity of bargaining agents. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and reminds it of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. As already mentioned above, the Committee notes that the Government reports that the ten collective agreements reached between 2007 and 2021 were concluded in the energy, public services, port, communications, banking, food and municipal sectors, and that five of these agreements, including one which was renewed, were still in force at the end of the reporting period. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, and to report on any measures taken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish trade unions without previous authorization. The Committee has, on numerous occasions, insisted upon the need to amend section 83 of the Labour Code, which requires trade unions to deposit their by-laws with numerous authorities, in particular the Ministry of the Interior, in order to obtain legal status. The Government indicates that the Supreme Court has issued a technical notice on the draft new Labour Code and that the provisions of the latter are being updated in order to respond to the changes of the labour market. The Committee trusts that the process of the revision of the Labour Code will be concluded shortly and that the Government will finally be able to report on the revision of section 83 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised Labour Code once adopted.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities. With regard to the Committee's previous comments concerning Act No. 2001-09 on the exercise of the right to strike, as amended by Act No. 2018-34, the Committee notes with concern that the Government merely indicates that: (i) the provisions of the Act aim essentially at ensuring continuity of the public service, the vitality of the economy, and the well-being of the population; and (ii) it notes the Committee's recommendations. In the absence of information on how it envisages giving effect to such recommendations, the Committee is bound to recall that it is expected that the Government take the necessary steps in order to amend the following provisions of the Act in question:

- New section 2 of the Act. Scope of the Act in terms of the persons covered. Having noted that military personnel, paramilitary personnel (police, customs, water, forestry and hunting) and healthcare staff may not exercise the right to strike, the Committee recalls that it considers that States may restrict or prohibit the right to strike of public servants “exercising authority in the name of the State”, for example, civil servants in government ministries and other comparable bodies, and ancillary staff and that, when they are not exercising authority in the name of the State, they should benefit from the right to strike without being liable to sanctions, except in the case that the maintenance of a minimum service may be envisaged. This principle should also apply to civilian personnel in military institutions when they are not engaged in the provision of essential services in the strict sense of the term (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 130 and 131).

- New section 17. Requisitioning in the event of a strike. The Committee notes the general wording of the criteria set out in new section 17 of the Act - according to which public service employees and employees of public, semi-public or private institutions of an essential nature, whose stoppage of work would cause serious damage to peace, security, justice, the health of the population or the public finances of the State, may be requisitioned in the event of a strike. The Committee recalls, however, that it is desirable to limit powers of requisitioning to cases in which the right to strike may be limited, or even prohibited, namely: (i) in the public service for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; and (iii) in the case of an acute national or local crisis (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 151).
- New section 13. Duration of the strike. In light of the very restrictive provisions under new section 13 of the Act - which provides that the exercise of the right to strike is subject to certain conditions of duration which may not exceed ten days in any one year, seven days in a six-month period, and two days in the same month; and that regardless of the duration, the stoppage of work during a day shall be considered as a full day of strike action - the Committee recalls that workers and their organizations should be able to call a strike for an indefinite period if they so wish (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 146).
- New section 2. Sympathy strikes. Having noted that sympathy strikes are prohibited under new section 2 of the Act, the Committee recalls that a general prohibition of this form of strike action could lead to abuse, particularly in the context of globalization characterized by increasing interdependence and the internationalization of production, and that workers should be able to take such action, provided that the initial strike they are supporting is itself lawful (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 125).

In light of the foregoing, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to, in the near future, amend the provisions in question of Act No. 2001-09 on the exercise of the right to strike, as amended by Act No. 2018-34, and to ensure that they give full effect to the provisions of the Convention with regard to the above.

Previous comments

In its previous comment, the Committee noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of 2013, referring to a confrontation between the police and trade union demonstrators, which resulted in seven persons being wounded and 37 arrested and prosecuted. In the absence of a reply from the Government, the Committee requested it to provide information on the investigations and judicial procedures conducted. The Committee notes that the Government expressed its commitment to freedom of association and freedom of demonstration, in the framework of the rights and obligations established in the Constitution. However, the Committee regrets that the Government has never provided any information on the investigations and judicial procedures conducted in relation to the ITUC's observations. In the absence of a specific reply, the Committee once again reiterates its previous request.

Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Legislative issues. The Committee notes that, in its examination of Case No. 3413 in October-November 2022, the Committee on Freedom of Association recalled that the obligation imposed on trade union organizations to obtain the consent of a central trade union organization in order to be registered is in contradiction with the principle of the free establishment of organizations set out in Article 2 of the Convention, and referred the legislative aspects of the case to the Committee of Experts (see Report No 400). Likewise, the Committee requests the Government to initiate a dialogue with the parties concerned with a view to identifying the reforms necessary to ensure that workers can freely establish the organizations of their own choosing, even in the absence of the authorization of a higher-level trade union organization. The Committee requests the Government to inform in this respect.

The Committee recalls that, for many years, it has been requesting the Government to bring certain legislative texts into conformity with the Convention:

- With regard to the possibility of dissolving trade union organizations by administrative authority, the Committee notes the Government's indication that section 129 of Regulatory Decree No. 224 (of 23 August 1943) of the General Labour Act does not allow the executive authorities to dissolve trade unions unilaterally. A third party must justify the dissolution on the basis of specific grounds and the dissolution resolution cannot be a direct power of the State. The State can only intervene in response to requests from higher trade union bodies, and the Ministry of Labour must monitor compliance with the statutes without influencing the decisions of workers' organizations. In this respect, the Committee recalls the need to ensure the conformity of the legislative provisions with the Convention, even when they are no longer directly applied in practice.
- With regard to the prohibition on general strikes and sympathy strikes, and the imposition of penalties on the instigators or promoters of illegal strikes, the Committee notes that, in its previous comments, it noted the repeal of section 234 of the Penal Code, which criminalized the promotion of any lock-out, protest or strike declared to be illegal by the labour authorities, and requested the Government to indicate whether the reform of the Penal Code had led to the repeal of sections 1 and 2 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 (of June 1951), prohibiting and criminalizing illegal strikes. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the State's social and labour legislation seeks to protect trade union activity and strikes, not criminalize them, by introducing measures to protect social and trade union mobilization, while noting that the Government does not expressly indicate whether or not it has repealed sections 1 and 2 of the above-mentioned Decree and recalls once again the need to repeal these provisions.
- With regard to the exclusion of agricultural workers from the scope of the General Labour Act of 1942 (section 1 of the General Labour Act, and its Regulatory Decree No. 224 of 23 August 1943), which implies their exclusion from the guarantees afforded by the Convention, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that the fourth final provision of Act No. 1715 of 18 October 1996 – the Act on the national agrarian reform service – includes rural employees in the scope of the General Labour Act, under a special regime.
- With regard to the broad powers of supervision conferred upon the labour inspectorate over trade union activities (section 101 of the General Labour Act, which provides that labour inspectors shall attend the deliberations of trade unions and monitor their activities), the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that the intervention of labour inspectors is limited to the legalization of acts protecting labour rights, such as the signing of collective agreements, and to the prevention of labour disputes. The Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare ensures that trade unions observe their obligations without interfering in their internal decisions, in accordance with their statutes and the regulations in force, guaranteeing their autonomy and avoiding any undue surveillance.

The Committee also notes that the Government has provided information regarding other legislative issues that it has been raising for a long time:

- With regard to the denial of the right to organize of public servants (section 104 of the General Labour Act), the Committee notes the Government's indication that while the legislation in force prohibits the unionization of public servants and does not provide for collective bargaining for such workers, the Political Constitution recognizes the right to freedom of association, and collective bargaining is generally considered a democratic method, which has led to legislative reforms granting certain labour protections to workers in the municipal public administration, with the aim of adapting the law to contemporary needs and to changes in the public administration. The Committee nevertheless notes that the prohibition established in section 104 remains in force.
- With regard to the excessive requirement of 50 per cent of the workers in an enterprise to establish a trade union, in the case of an industrial union (section 103 of the General Labour Act), the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare issued Ministerial Resolution No. 123/06 of 2006, which issued a criterion for an interpretation of the provision in question. According to this interpretation, the establishment of trade union committees is permitted in enterprises and institutions with fewer than 20 workers, thus ensuring the right to organize, and no reports or complaints have been filed by trade union organizations since its implementation. The Committee notes that the above-mentioned Ministerial Resolution does not address the prohibition on the establishment of trade unions where less than 50 per cent of the employees are trade union members, in the case of industrial trade unions.
- With regard to the majority established in section 114 of the General Labour Act and section 159 of the Regulatory Decree; the illegality of strikes in the banking sector (section 1(c) of Supreme Decree No. 1958 of 1950); and the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration by decision of the executive authorities to bring an end to a strike, including in services other than those that are essential in the strict sense of the term, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, these provisions require a holistic interpretation, where the requirement of three quarters of workers for the declaration of a strike refers to workers in active service, that is, those on duty, and not to the total number of employees in the enterprise. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the possibility for the executive authorities to impose compulsory arbitration guarantees the enforcement of awards and respect for labour rights, in accordance with the principle of legality and avoiding non-compliance due to bad faith, since these awards constitute enforceable judgments by operation of law. The Committee also notes that the Government does not refer to the question of the illegality of strikes in the banking sector (section 1(c) of Supreme Decree No. 1958 of 1950).
- With regard to the provisions establishing requirements for trade union leadership, as well as the power of the authorities, in certain circumstances, to disqualify ex officio trade union leaders, the Committee notes that, according to the Government, section 138 of the General Labour Act, which sets out the requirements for leadership of trade union organizations, is currently being revised in order to bring it into line with the principles of inclusiveness enshrined in the Constitution of 2009, respecting the right to freedom of association without state intervention in decisions on trade union organizations, while maintaining the role of the State as guarantor of the labour regulations in force.

Recalling that the above-mentioned provisions are incompatible with the right of workers' organizations, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations, to organize their activities freely, to formulate their programmes and to elect their representatives in full freedom, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend or repeal them in order to ensure their conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

The Committee recalls that in its 2016 the Government indicated that work was being carried out together with the Bolivarian Workers' Confederation on the drafting of a new Labour Code and a preliminary draft of new legislation governing public servants. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the State is committed to developing social and labour legislation that reflects the ethical and moral values of the Constitution, promoting well-being, development, security and dignity, as well as intercultural and multilingual dialogue. Noting with regret the absence of progress in this respect over this many years the Committee urges the Government to adopt the new legislation governing public servants and the new Labour Code in the very near future and that, taking into account the Committee's comments, they will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect and once again reminds the Government that it may, if it so wishes, avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

(ratification: 1973)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Private Employers of Bolivia (CEPB), received on 31 August 2021 and 1 September 2023, which follow joint 2019 observations by the CEPB and the International Organization of Employers. The Committee notes that the CEPB alleges that, since 2006, the Government violates the principle of free and voluntary negotiation with regard to wages by: (i) it unilaterally fixing each year both the minimum wage and a margin for wage increases applicable to the private sector; (ii) obliging employers, on pain of a fine, to negotiate a collective agreement to implement the aforementioned wage increases within a specific deadline; (iii) making collective agreements on wages subject to approval by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare (MTEPS); and (iv) giving priority to dialogue on wages with the workers to the detriment of employers, which is in addition to the restrictive conditions and deadlines that contravene the essence and process of collective bargaining, which must be voluntary and autonomous. The CEPB states that such violations are evidenced by the provisions of Supreme Decree No. 4928 of 1 May 2023 and Ministerial Resolution No. 752/23 of 18 May 2023. The Committee also notes the Government's indications that: (i) it has held meetings with both employers and workers in order to maintain the equality of both sectors; and (ii) section 6 of Supreme Decree No. 4928 establishes that the wage increase in the private sector shall be agreed by employers and workers on the basis of a 3 per cent minimum increase, in accordance with article 49 of the Bolivian Political Constitution, which states that "the law shall regulate labour relations regarding contracts and collective bargaining agreements; general and sectoral minimum wages and salary increases; [...]". The Committee also notes that, under section 6 of Ministerial Resolution No. 752/23, "failure to submit the collective agreement on wage increase shall be penalized in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of Ministerial Resolution No. 212/18 of 1 March 2018".

The Committee notes these various points. The Committee wishes to emphasise that: (i) the fixing by the authorities of generally applicable protective floors, including in respect of remuneration, is not contrary to the Convention provided that, on this basis, the parties have a genuine opportunity to engage in free and voluntary negotiations; (ii) the imposition by the Government of the conclusion of a collective agreement is, however, contrary to the principle of free and voluntary negotiation; and (iii) it is incumbent on the Government to promote a climate of dialogue and trust with and between the social partners in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention. While recalling its long-standing comments to the Government in the context of the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) on the need for full consultation with both employers' and workers' organisations, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to eliminate legislative or regulatory provisions providing for the compulsory signing of collective agreements and the related penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the CEPB concerning the approval of collective agreements by the MTEPS.

Articles 1, 2 and 4 of the Convention. Legislative issues. In its previous comment, the Committee recalled two main issues relating to the above-mentioned Articles of the Convention, namely: (i) the urgency of updating the fines established in Act No. 38 of 1944, which currently range from 1,000 to 5,000 Bolivian pesos, in order to make them more effective in preventing discrimination and anti-union interference; and (ii) the need to guarantee the right to collective bargaining for both public servants not engaged in the public administration and agricultural workers (for the latter, such recognition is already provided for in the Constitution, but the General Labour Act has not yet been amended in this respect). The Committee also noted the Government's reply indicating that it was still working on updating fines in collaboration with the Bolivian Workers' Federation (COB), drafting a new law for public servants not engaged in the public administration, and drafting a new Labour Code to address the issue of the exclusion of agricultural workers. Noting with regret the lack of progress in this regard, the Committee firmly expects that the new Public Servants Act and the new Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future and that, taking account of the Committee's comments, they will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard and once again reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office if it so wishes.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requested the Government to provide full statistical data on the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, with an indication of the sectors and the number of workers covered. In the absence of information in this respect, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will be able to collect the statistical data in question in the near future and requests it to provide such data as soon as it becomes available.

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that both in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and in the Republika Srpska (RS), there were two main laws regulating the right to associate: on the one hand, the FBiH Labour Act and the RS Labour Act and, on the other hand, the FBiH Act on Associations and Foundations and the RS Act on Associations and Foundations. As the scope of these laws differs, the Committee noted that specific categories of workers were not covered by all the guarantees of the Convention. It therefore requested the Government to revise the relevant legislation to ensure that all workers, including workers without an employment contract, domestic workers, agricultural workers, workers in the information economy and self-employed workers enjoy, in law and in practice, all the rights guaranteed by the Convention. In the absence of any further information on this matter provided by the Government, the Committee reiterates its previous request in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Botswana

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Botswana Federation of Trade Unions (BFTU) received on 4 October 2022, relating to matters examined in the present comment, and the Government reply thereto, as well as their observations communicated with the Government report.

Legislative developments. Employment and Labour Relations Bill. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication regarding the imminent finalization of the Employment and Labor Relations Bill, 2023 (the Bill), which will replace both the Trade Disputes Act (TDA) and the Trade Unions and Employers Organizations Act (TUEO) and is to be tabled before the Parliament at its November 2023 session. The Government refers to a training for drafters organized by the ILO in early 2023, that provided in-depth understanding of international labour standards. The Committee notes with interest that the proposed Bill, if adopted would take into consideration its previous comments, regarding the following matters:

- penalties imposed on the officers of trade unions or federations who fail to apply for registration within 28 days of the establishment of the organization pursuant to section 8 of the TUEO will be repealed;
- section 86(4) of the Bill provides for an opportunity to rectify the absence of certain formal registration requirements;
- section 86(7) of the Bill provides that nothing prevents an unregistered or de-registered trade union from continuing to organize and to recruit members subject to the provisions of the Act;
- the prohibition of election of young members (15–18 years old) from being officers or trustees of a workers' or employers' organization enshrined in section 20(3) of the TUEO will be repealed;
- the broad supervisory powers of the Registrar over the financial assets of a trade union, provided in section 41(3) of the TUEO will be repealed. The Bill in section 108(1) only requires annual submission of a balance sheet giving a true record of the state of the financial affairs of such trade union at the end of every financial year;
- the power of the Registrar or the Attorney-General to apply for an interdict to restrain any unauthorized or unlawful expenditure of funds or use of any trade union property pursuant to section 39 of the TUEO, and the power of the Registrar to conduct inspection of accounts, books and documents of a trade union at "any reasonable time" provided in section 43 of the TUEO will be repealed;
- the denial of facilities at the enterprise to small unions pursuant to section 48B (1) of the TUEO Act, which grants certain facilities (such as access to premises or representation of members in case of complaint, etc.) only to unions representing at least one third of the employees in the enterprise, will be repealed. The Committee observes that the Bill grants authorized representatives of unions the right to represent members in case of complaints under section 239(1) and grants to all such representatives access to trade union premises under sections 234 and 237, regardless of the registration status of the unions they represent;
- the authorization for the employer to use replacement labour within 14 days of the commencement of the strike regulated by section 43(3) of the TDA will be repealed: section 265 (5) of the Bill restricts this practice to "the extent that it is necessary to maintain a minimum service, or in the circumstances where a disruption of service constitutes an acute national crisis";
- section 275(1) of the Bill allows peaceful picketing.

The Committee notes however, that certain other longstanding issues, that will be examined below, remain unaddressed in the Bill. The Committee notes the Government's indication that while the drafting continues, consultations are ongoing at various levels to get inputs on issues on which no consensus was reached. The Committee requests the Government to continue its consultation with the social partners with a view to incorporating all legislative issues raised in this comment into the reform agenda and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Public Service Bill. The Committee recalls that the Government previously informed the Committee that a process of review of Public Service Act of 2008 (PSA) was under way. The Committee notes in this respect the latest indications of the Government reaffirming that the PSA is included in the labour law review process and the bill will be presented to the parliament during the November 2023 session. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the review process and to send a copy of the latest draft or the law if adopted.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Prison staff. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 2(1)(iv) of the TUEO Act and section 2(11)(iv) of the TDA, which exclude employees of the prison service from their scope of application, as well as section 35 of the Prison Act, which prohibits members of the prison service from becoming members of a trade union. The Committee notes that section 3 of the Bill continues to exclude the prison service from the scope of trade union rights. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Law Review Committee (LLRC) considered this issue and engaged the Ministry but noted that any amendment to the provisions on prison service would require prior amendment of the Constitution. Some work on the review of the Constitution was done in 2021-2022 and the conclusions will guide the way forward. The Government adds that the Prisons Service Department maintains that prison staff perform a security function and are a disciplined force. The Committee further notes the observation of the BFTU confirming that the Prison Service Act is part of the laws being reviewed by the LLRC but that the matter has not been brought to a tripartite discussion with the relevant Ministry since 2018 and suggesting that tripartite discussion should be resumed to achieve progress. The Committee recalls that while the exclusion of the armed forces and the police from the right to organize is not contrary to the provisions of the Convention, the functions exercised by prison staff do not justify their exclusion from the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to initiate consultations on this issue, with the participation of all stakeholders including the parent Ministry and representatives of workers concerned, with a view to amending the law so as to recognize and guarantee the freedom of association of prison staff. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect.

Article 3. The right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee notes that section 111(1) of the Bill provides that a member of an organization or the Registrar may apply to the Industrial Court for an interdict to prohibit an officer of an organization from holding office in or controlling the funds of such an organization. Section 111(2) provides that the Industrial Court may grant the interdict where it is satisfied that there is a prima facie case against the officer in question for fraudulent misuse of the funds of the organization, or that such officer is disqualified from holding office. The Committee notes that this provision allows the removal of a union officer after an ex parte proceeding, where only the establishment of a prima facie case is required. The Committee recalls that any removal or suspension of trade union officers which is not the result of an internal decision of the trade union, a vote by the members or normal judicial proceedings, seriously interferes in the exercise of trade union office and requests the Government, in full consultation with social partners, to review section 111 of the Bill, with a view to ensuring the right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention.

The right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee notes that sections 86(6), 87(6) and 89(1) of the Bill provide that an unregistered organization or an organization whose registration has been cancelled “shall not enjoy the rights, immunities and privileges reserved for a trade union, federation of trade unions, employers’ organization or federation of employers’ organizations under this Act”. The Committee notes that pursuant to section 90 of the Bill, these rights include immunity from certain suits or other legal proceedings in a civil or penal court, including civil suits “in respect of any act done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute to which a member of the trade union is a party on the grounds only that such act induces some other person to breach a contract of employment or that it is in interference with the trade, business or employment of some other person or with the rights of some other person to dispose of his or her capital or labour as he or she determines”. The Committee recalls in this respect that, although the official recognition of an organization through its registration constitutes a relevant aspect of the right to organize, as it is the first measure to be taken so that organizations can fulfil their role effectively, the exercise of legitimate trade union activities should not be dependent upon registration. Considering that the exposure of unregistered organizations to the kind of legal action referred to in section 90 can significantly restrict their right to conduct legitimate trade union activities, the Committee requests the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to review the above-mentioned provisions of the Bill with a view to ensuring that unregistered organizations can freely exercise their legitimate trade union activities.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office with respect to all issues raised in the Committee’s comments.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Botswana Federation of Trade Unions (BFTU) received on 4 October 2022 and 6 June 2023 regarding, on the one hand, issues examined in the present comment, and, on the other hand, allegations of anti-union discrimination in the mining sector, including cases of non-renewal of contracts and dismissal of trade union members. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) labour inspections were carried out in 33 out of 55 identified companies in the diamond cutting subsector in May and June 2023; and (ii) engagement with stakeholders, including the Botswana Diamonds Workers Union (BDWU), Diamond Hub and Botswana Diamond Association, is scheduled to begin in October 2023. The Committee observes, based on the Labour Inspection Report of the diamond processing companies transmitted by the Government, that (i) there are impediments faced by trade unions regarding recognition by employers since the latter prefer to work with internal Workers’ Committees; and (ii) there were cases both of non-renewal of contracts and of the dismissal of certain trade union members, which the management states is unrelated to their union membership. The Committee takes due note of these elements. Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take all the necessary measures to ensure that unions, including unregistered ones, and their members in the mining sector are adequately protected against all acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the action taken and the results achieved in this respect.

Legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Employment and Labour Relations Bill, 2023 (hereinafter referred to as the Bill), which has the object of replacing the Employment Act, the Trade Disputes Act (hereinafter referred to as the TDA) and the Trade Union and Employer’s Organizations Act, was to be tabled before the Parliament at its November 2023 session. The Committee welcomes: (i) the explicit objective of the Bill to bring the legislation in conformity with the present Convention and with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87); and (ii) the Government’s indication that, with ILO assistance, the drafters of the Bill received an in-depth training on International Labour Standards. The Committee examines below the extent to which the Bill addresses its previous comments on the application of the Convention.

Scope of the Convention. Prison officers. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to grant members of the prison service their rights guaranteed under the Convention. The Committee notes that section 3 of the Bill continues to exclude prison officers from the scope of trade union rights. It notes the Government's indication in its report concerning the application of Convention No. 87, that the Labour Law Review Committee (LLRC) considered this issue and engaged the Ministry but noted that any amendment to the provisions on prison service would require prior amendment of the Constitution. Some work on the review of the Constitution was done in 2021–22 and the conclusions will guide the way forward. The Committee also notes the observation of the BFTU confirming that the Prison Service Act is part of the laws being reviewed by the LLRC, but that the matter has not been brought to a tripartite discussion with the relevant Ministry since 2018, and that these discussions should resume to achieve progress. In view of the foregoing, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to initiate consultations on this matter with the parent Ministry and the representatives of the workers concerned, with a view to changing the legislation and ensuring that prison officers enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any progress in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all union committee members, including those of unregistered trade unions, enjoy an adequate and specific protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with interest that section 22 of the Bill that protects workers, both prior and during employment, from discrimination against trade union affiliation and trade union activities makes no distinction between registered and non-registered unions.

Article 2. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously requested the Government to adopt specific legislative provisions that ensure adequate protection against acts of interference by employers coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee observes that although section 82(1) prescribes that trade union independence, defined as the absence of any kind of direct or indirect control or interference from any employer or employers' organization, is a prerequisite for trade union recognition, as the Bill does not contain provisions that explicitly prohibit acts of interference or sanction such acts. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in line with its previous request to ensure that the legislation includes provisions that give full effect to Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Trade union recognition. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that in the absence of a union that represents at least one third of the employees in a bargaining unit, existing unions are given the possibility to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes that the Bill: (i) still refers to the one third threshold as the first condition for a union to be recognized for collective bargaining purposes at the company level (section 245.1); (ii) provides however that if no union meets the referred threshold, the union with the most members may be recognized for the purpose of collective bargaining (section 245.2); (iii) mentions additional criteria to be taken into account for the recognition of a union for bargaining purposes (including the composition of the workforce and the importance of non-standard forms of employment, section 245.4); and (iv) prescribes that an employer may request the withdrawal of collective bargaining recognition if the union falls below the referred threshold (section 248.1). While welcoming the possibility set by the Bill to recognize unions that would not meet the one third threshold as bargaining agents, the Committee notes that it will only be able to determine to what extent this possibility will effectively contribute to broadening the opportunities for collective bargaining in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention once this provision is implemented. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide any information in this regard and expects that, if the Bill is adopted as it stands, sections 245.2 and 245.4 of the Bill will be applied taking full account of the obligation established by the Convention to promote collective bargaining.

The Committee also requested the Government to amend section 35(1)(b) of the TDA that permits an employer or employers' organization to apply to the Commissioner to withdraw the recognition for the purpose of collective bargaining granted to a trade union on the grounds that the trade union refuses to negotiate in good faith. The Committee notes with interest that the Bill does not contain a similar provision.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that, with a view to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining, it requested the amendment of section 20(3) of the TDA that allows the Industrial Court to refer a trade dispute to arbitration, including where only one of the parties made an urgent appeal to the Court for determination of the dispute. The Committee notes that, per section 283.1 of the Bill, arbitration in the context of a collective dispute can take place when: (i) both parties agree to refer the dispute to arbitration or the referring party to the Mediation and Arbitration Commission has requested arbitration; (ii) parties to the dispute are engaged in an essential service; and (iii) the Industrial Court has directed the Commission to arbitrate the dispute. The Committee observes that these provisions mandate compulsory arbitration in situations that exceed the scope of what the Committee considers is compatible with the Convention i.e.: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (General Survey of 2012 on fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the future legislation will not allow compulsory arbitration beyond the set of situations described above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee notes the indications of the BFTU and the Government that the Public Service Bargaining Council (PSBC) has not been resuscitated but that the Public Service Act, 2008 was included within the scope of the Labour Law Review Commission. Recalling its on-going dialogue with the Government with a view to ensuring that the material scope of collective bargaining for public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State is in conformity with the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide further information on the content of any on-going reform that would address the right to bargain collectively in the public sector; and (ii) provide practical examples of the content of collective agreements applicable to civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indications that there are 69 collective agreements signed and in force in the country, concluded both at the sector level and the company-level across various sectors. The Government indicates that statistics on workers covered by the agreements, although unavailable currently, would be collected hereon. While noting that, according to ILOSTAT, the coverage of collective bargaining in 2020 was 34.5 per cent, the Committee requests the Government to continue to make efforts to collect and provide information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country along with statistics on the sectors and workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to soon inform about the adoption of the Bill and that its content will contribute to the full implementation of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office with respect to all issues raised in the present comments.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Industry (CNI), received on 31 August 2023 and also forwarded by the Government with its report. It also notes the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), transmitted by the Government in its report. The Committee notes that these observations and the corresponding replies by the Government concern matters examined in the present comment.

With reference to the 2022 allegations by the CUT in relation to Act No. 14.437/2022 on the implementation by the executive authorities of alternative labour measures and an emergency programme for employment and income maintenance with a view to responding to the social and economic consequences of a state of public calamity, the Committee notes the Government's reply and refers to its 2020 comments on Act No. 14.020 in view of the similarity in content of the two instruments. The Committee observed on that occasion that the Act was not intended to set aside collective agreements and accords that are in force, but to establish a temporary system for reduced activity and income compensation that can be set in motion by individual agreement or collective accord. The Committee therefore emphasized the importance of promoting the full utilization of collective bargaining machinery as a means of achieving balanced and sustainable solutions in a time of crisis.

Application of the Convention and respect for civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with deep concern the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the murders of three trade union leaders and members in 2020 as well as several cases of death threats against other union leaders.

The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to indicating that: (i) there is no legal provision conferring upon the Ministry of Labour powers in criminal matters to undertake investigations or punish the instigators of violations against trade union leaders; and (ii) it is necessary to ascertain the progress made by the criminal justice or administrative procedures in that regard. The Committee also notes the observations of the CUT in which it deplors the Government's reply and calls on it to provide full information on the murders in question.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information from the Government on the progress made in the investigations of the crimes alleged by the ITUC and the protection measures adopted for trade union leaders who have received death threats. Emphasizing that compliance with ratified Conventions is incumbent on all the competent authorities, the Committee is bound to recall that the rights set out in the Convention, and particularly those respecting free and voluntary collective bargaining, can only be exercised in a climate free from violence and threats. The Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the necessary measures are taken to: (i) identify and punish the perpetrators and instigators of the alleged crimes; and (ii) ensure effective protection for the trade union leaders whose physical safety is under threat. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information on this subject without delay.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that, while noting the existence of constitutional and legislative provisions that provide general protection for trade union activities, it has been requesting the Government for many years to take measures to set out explicitly in the legislation specific sanctions that are sufficiently dissuasive against all acts of anti-union discrimination. Noting the absence of new information on this subject and recalling the essential importance of ensuring effective protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its request and hopes that the Government will be in a position to report tangible progress in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Relationship between collective bargaining and the law.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government, in consultation with the representative social partners, to take the necessary measures to amend sections 611-A and 611-B of the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT) so as to specify more precisely the situations in which clauses derogating from the legislation may be negotiated, as well as the scope of such clauses. In this regard, the Committee took note of the concerns expressed in 2021 by the ITUC, the CUT and the National Confederation of Workers in Teaching Establishments (CONTEE) with regard to the implementation of these provisions in the context of the economic crisis provoked by the COVID-19 pandemic which could in their view result in workers being obliged to accept, through collective bargaining, a sharp deterioration in their conditions of work and employment.

The Committee notes that the Government reaffirms that: (i) the primacy of collective bargaining over the legislation introduced by Act No. 13.467 of 2017 contributes to reinforcing confidence in bargaining mechanisms in accordance with the Convention and the Federal Constitution of 1988; (ii) by guaranteeing that the rights of workers set out in the Constitution (section 611-B of the CLT) cannot be derogated through collective bargaining, the legislator sought to clarify the scope of collective bargaining while conserving the fundamental rights of workers with constitutional standing; and (iii) the Supreme Federal Court confirmed in a ruling of June 2022 the validity, irrespective of the specific compensatory benefits outlined, of collective agreements which limit or restrict certain labour rights where they are not guaranteed by the Constitution.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the number of collective agreements and accords concluded in the country, according to which: (i) between January 2019 and June 2023, there were 181,838 registered collective instruments, of which 149,096 were collective labour accords (concluded at the level of one or several enterprises) and 32,742 were collective labour agreements (concluded at a broader level, such as a sector of activity or an occupation); (ii) in 2022, some 41,742 collective accords and agreements were concluded, in comparison with the 47,672 concluded in 2017. Finally, the Government reports the adoption of Decree No. 11.477 of 6 April 2023 creating an inter-ministerial working group responsible for preparing a proposal for the restructuring of industrial relations and the promotion of collective bargaining.

The Committee notes that the observations of the CNI confirm the information provided by the Government, with the employers' organization adding that since the entry into force of the reform, the number of court actions challenging the validity of the clauses of collective agreements has fallen by 80 per cent. The Committee notes the affirmation by the CUT that according to the analysis of the Inter-union Department for Statistics and Socio-economic Analyses: (i) collective bargaining has become more difficult since the entry into force of the 2017 reform, resulting in a decrease in the number of collective labour agreements and accords and greater discretionary power for enterprises; (ii) it is undeniable that the changes introduced by the labour reform, and particularly those set out in section 611-A of the CLT, are in violation of ILO Conventions Nos 98 and 154; and (iii) nothing has been done by the Government to give effect to the Committee of Experts' comments in this regard, while the commission established in 2023 to restructure industrial relations and promote collective bargaining has not currently included in its work plan action to follow up the Committee of Experts' comments.

The Committee notes the different information provided by the national tripartite constituents and notes the statistical indications that the total number of collective instruments concluded has fallen by 12.5 per cent since 2017 (the number of collective agreements concluded is stable, while the number of collective accords concluded at the enterprise level has fallen by 17.6 per cent). The Committee also notes the lack of action taken by the Government for the amendment of sections 611-A and 611-B of the CLT. The Committee recalls that it has considered that, while targeted legislative provisions covering specific aspects of conditions of work and providing, in a circumscribed and reasoned manner, for the possibility of their replacement by means of collective bargaining may be compatible with the Convention, a legal provision providing for a general possibility to derogate from the protective provisions of labour legislation by means of collective bargaining would be contrary to the purpose of promoting free and voluntary collective bargaining established in Article 4 of the Convention. While noting the limits already set out in section 611-B of the CLT, the Committee once again requests the Government, in consultation with the representative social partners, to take the necessary measures to amend sections 611-A and 611-B of the CLT so as to specify more precisely the situations in which clauses derogating from the legislation may be negotiated, as well as the scope of such clauses. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on developments in the number of collective agreements and accords concluded in the country, including data on the agreements and accords which contain clauses derogating from the legislation, with an indication of the nature and scope of such derogations.

Relationship between collective bargaining and individual contracts of employment. The Committee recalls that, by virtue of Act No. 13.467 of 2017, section 444 of the CLT has the effect that, in the domain covered by section 611-A of the CLT, the clauses of individual contracts of employment of employees who have a higher education diploma and who receive a salary that is at two times higher than the ceiling for benefits under the general social security scheme prevail over the content of collective agreements and accords, including where the clauses of individual employment contracts are less protective. The Committee recalls in this regard that: (i) the present Convention is fully applicable to the workers covered by section 444 of the CLT insofar as, under the terms of Articles 5 and 6, only members of the armed forces and the police (Article 5) and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6) may be excluded from its scope of application; and (ii) as explicitly set out in Paragraph 3 of the Collective Agreements Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), the obligation to promote collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention requires that the individual negotiation of the terms of the contract of employment cannot derogate from the rights and guarantees provided in the applicable collective agreements, on the understanding that contracts of employment can always set out more favourable terms and conditions of work and employment. Noting the absence of information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government, after consultation with the representative social partners concerned, to take the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of section 444 of the CLT with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Scope of application of the Convention. Autonomous and self-employed workers. The Committee recalls that, following the extension of the definition of self-employed workers resulting from new section 442-B of the CLT, it commenced a dialogue with the Government concerning the access of these workers to the right of collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee: (i) welcomed the Government's indications that, under the terms of section 511 of the CLT, which recognizes the right to organize of autonomous workers, these workers are also covered by the right to engage in collective bargaining; (ii) noted the indication by the CUT that, although section 511 of the CLT recognizes the right of autonomous workers to organize, this provision does not however grant them the possibility to have access to collective bargaining machinery, particularly in view of the absence of a counterpart and, in practice, the fact that the transition from the status of employee to that of autonomous worker under the terms of section 442-B would have the effect of excluding the workers concerned from the coverage of the collective agreements in force; and (iii) noted the Government's indication that the emergence of various non-standard forms of work is an additional challenge for collective bargaining in all countries, particularly in view of the low unionization rate. In light of these considerations, the Committee invited the Government to: (i) provide examples of collective agreements or accords negotiated by organizations representing autonomous or self-employed workers or, at the least, of which the scope of application would cover these categories of workers; and (ii) engage in consultations with all the parties concerned with the objective of identifying appropriate modifications to be introduced into collective bargaining machinery to facilitate its application to autonomous and self-employed workers.

Noting the absence of information from the Government on this subject, the Committee reiterates its previous requests to the Government and hopes that it will provide specific information on any collective agreements covering these categories of workers and on the holding of the requested consultations with the social partners,

Relationship between the various levels of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, under the terms of section 620 of the Consolidation of Labour Laws, as amended by Act No. 13.467, the conditions established in collective labour accords (which are concluded at the level of one or more enterprises) always prevail over those contained in collective labour agreements (which are concluded at a broader level, such as a sector of activity or an occupation). The Committee therefore recalled that, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, collective bargaining must be promoted at all levels and that, in conformity with the general principle set out in Paragraph 3(1) of Recommendation No. 91, collective agreements should bind the signatories thereto and those on whose behalf the agreement is concluded. Noting the absence of information provided by the Government in its report on the relationship between the various levels of collective bargaining, the Committee once again requests the Government to: (i) indicate the manner in which respect for the commitments made by the social partners in the framework of agreements concluded at the level of the sector of activity or occupation is guaranteed; and (ii) provide information on the impact of section 620 of the CLT on recourse to the negotiation of collective agreements and collective accords, and on the overall coverage rate of collective bargaining in the country.

Article 4. Promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. Subjection of collective agreements to financial and economic policy. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been emphasizing the need to repeal section 623 of the CLT, under the terms of which the provisions of an agreement or accord that are in conflict with the standards governing the Government's economic and financial policy or the wage policy that is in force shall be declared null and void.

In its more recent comments, after noting the Government's indication that section 623 of the CLT, adopted in 1967, is not in accordance with the objectives of the Constitution of 1988 and is therefore no longer applied, the Committee emphasized the need to remove from the statutes this provision that is contrary to the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention. Once again noting the absence of new information from the Government, the Committee again requests it to take the necessary measures to repeal section 623 of the CLT and to provide information in its next report on any measures adopted in this regard.

The Committee trusts that the inter-ministerial working group created in April 2023 to draw up a proposal for the restructuring of industrial relations and the strengthening of collective bargaining will take fully into account the various points raised and recommendations made in this comment and that the Government will soon be in a position to report tangible progress in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bulgaria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the adoption of the Protection of Persons Who Report or Publicly Disclose Information on Breaches Act, 2023 which protects persons in the public and private sectors who report or publicly disclose information on violations of the legislation, including labour legislation, which have become known to them in the course of or in connection with the performance of their work or official duties or in another context.

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the 2019 observations of the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions in Bulgaria (CITUB) that the Civil Servants Act is insufficient to guarantee in practice the right to organize of civil servants, as well as of other workers under a labour relation; and that, together with the Ministry of Interior Act and the Judiciary Act, it should be amended to fully guarantee all rights under the Convention to these workers and their organizations. The Committee notes the Government's detailed comments on the provisions granting the right to organize to the above categories of workers and, in particular, that the regime for the establishment, operation and closure of public servants' unions is governed by the regime for associations under the Not-for-Profit Legal Entities Act (NPLEA). In view of the CITUB's concerns as to the lack of administrative or criminal safeguards to protect the right to organize of several categories of public servants, the Committee requests the Government to provide further details on the applicable procedures that guarantee and protect in practice the right to organize of public servants, including procedures applicable in case of alleged violations of the right to organize.

In its previous comment, the Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the 2019 observations of the Bulgarian Industrial Association (BIA) alleging interference in freedom of association of employers' organizations, in particular as regards the autonomy and operation of branch associations of producers and traders, through certain sectoral regulations – the Forestry Act, the Act on Wine and Alcoholic Beverages and the Act on Tobacco and Related Products. The Committee takes due note of the Government's detailed observations, and its intention to amend some of the aforementioned legislation. The Committee trusts that any amendments to the legislation will be fully in line with the Convention and adopted in consultation with the social partners.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to amend section 11(2) of the Collective Labour Disputes Settlement Act (CLDSA), which provides that the decision to call a strike shall be taken by a simple majority of the workers in the enterprise concerned and section 11(3), which requires the strike duration to be declared in advance. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments concerning these provisions and to indicate what the requirements are for continuing a strike action beyond its initially determined duration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no changes were made to section 11(2) and (3) of the CLDSA and that a change in the initial duration of a strike should be made in the same way as the strike decision, that is, by a decision of the workers. The Committee recalls once again that requiring a decision by over half of all the workers involved in the enterprise or unit in order to declare a strike is excessive and could unduly hinder the possibility of calling a strike, particularly in large enterprises, and that if a country deems it appropriate to require a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast and that the required quorum and majority are fixed at a reasonable level (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 147). The Committee also recalls that workers and their organizations should be able to call a strike for an indefinite period if they so wish without having to announce its duration. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 11(2) and (3) of the CLDSA to ensure its full compliance with the Convention.

The Committee has also been raising the need to revise section 51 of the Railway Transport Act (RTA), which provides that, where industrial action is taken, satisfactory transport services must be provided to the population corresponding to no less than 50 per cent of the volume of transportation provided before the strike. In its previous comment, the Committee, while welcoming a proposal to amend the provision by providing for the participation of the social partners in the determination of the minimum services and for a mechanism for dispute resolution, noted that the proposed amendment retained an obligation to provide no less than 50 per cent of the amount of transport services. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the current text of section 51 has not precluded the exercise of the right to strike by railway workers and that the proposal of the Confederation of Labour Podkrepa to reduce the volume to 20 per cent would result in an inability to serve the rail transport needs of the population, even in a minimal volume. The Government adds that the Ministry of Transport and Communications proposed a new amendment, which provides that the managers and the railway undertakings shall annually negotiate and agree on a list of trains which shall provide the required percentage of transport (not less than 50 per cent) and will include the list on the contract for access to and use of the railway infrastructure. The managers and railway undertakings shall subsequently agree with any representative organizations of their workers on the type and number of staff needed to carry out the required volume of transport. The Committee observes that while the proposed amendment provides for the participation of the social partners in the definition of minimum services, it does not reduce the quantity of the service to be provided, which remains at no less than 50 per cent. While taking note of the Government's concerns about providing sufficient railway transport services to the population, the Committee recalls once again that minimum service must be limited to the operations strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear by the strike. A minimum service that is as broad as no less than 50 per cent restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their economic and social interests. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to revise section 51 of the RTA, in consultation with the most representative organizations, in order to ensure its compliance with the Convention. The Committee trusts that, through such consultations, a solution can be identified that will guarantee the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities through collective action while at the same time providing for transport services to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Confederation of Independent Trade Unions of Bulgaria (CITUB) transmitted with the Government's report in 2019 concerning issues examined in the present comment.

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the Labour Code was amended in 2020 to promote social dialogue and collective bargaining and that the amendments were drafted with active participation of experts of the social partners and adopted after consultations with the nationally representative organizations of workers and employers in the National Council for Tripartite Cooperation. The relevant amendments are assessed in more detail below.

The Committee further notes the adoption of the Protection of Persons Who Report or Publicly Disclose Information on Breaches Act, 2023. The Government indicates that the Law is also applicable to public disclosure of information on violations of labour legislation and legislation related to the performance of public service.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee invited the Government to collect statistical information on the application of the existing mechanisms against anti-union discrimination. It also encouraged the Government to hold consultations with the most representative organizations to assess, in light of the statistical information, the need for any additional measures in this respect. While observing that the Government does not provide any updated information in this regard, the Committee takes note of the judicial decisions provided in the Government's report, which mainly concern preliminary protection of trade union officials in the event of dismissal set out in section 333 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to collect statistical information on the application of the existing mechanisms to protect against anti-union discrimination and to provide information in this regard.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, having observed that national legislation does not provide adequate protection of workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers or employers' organizations, the Committee requested once again the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the national legislation accordingly. Noting the absence of a reply from the Government on this issue, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the 2020 amendments to the Labour Code aim to renew the interest in collective bargaining and notes the Government's indication that: (i) section 2 sets that the State shall regulate industrial relations through dialogue with the workers and employers and their organizations; (ii) section 57 allows workers who are not members of a trade union party to a collective agreement to accede to the agreement by an application to the employer or to the leadership of the union, and provides that any monetary contributions from these workers shall be determined by the parties to the collective agreement; and (iii) section 51b improves and supports the procedure for extending sectoral or branch collective agreements (a joint request by the parties to the collective agreement and a written consent of all workers' and employers' organizations representatives at the national level), thereby increasing the coverage of collective bargaining. The Committee takes due note of these amendments and requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the new extension procedure and its impact on the collective bargaining coverage.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to take, as soon as possible, the steps necessary to amend the Civil Servants Act so as to ensure the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In the absence of any information from the Government on this point, the Committee reiterates its request and trusts that the Government will be in a position to provide updates on this matter in its next report.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide statistics on collective bargaining and to inform on the measures taken to promote it. The Committee notes that the Government: (i) refers to the annual reports of the National Institute for Conciliation and Arbitration (NICA) for detailed information on the dynamics of collective agreements and collective labour disputes (available in Bulgarian) without giving details to the Committee on the statistical information requested; and (ii) states that the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy promotes social dialogue and collective bargaining mechanisms through, inter alia, capacity-building of the social partners and the development of an online information resource on collective bargaining agreements and collective labour disputes, which was welcomed by the CITUB. The Committee observes at the same time that, according to the CITUB: (i) there are many cases of employers who refuse to negotiate, delay negotiations or violate concluded collective agreements; (ii) measures to encourage the full development of collective bargaining in line with Article 4 of the Convention are absent; and (iii) there is a need to develop a methodology for calculating the coverage of collective agreements and monitoring the process at different levels, involving the expertise of the General Labour Inspectorate and the NICA. Based on the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the percentage of the workforce covered by these agreements. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to take measures to encourage and promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining at all levels and to provide information in this respect.

Burkina Faso

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's comments in response to the joint observations of six trade union confederations (General Labour Federation of Burkina Faso (CGT-B); National Confederation of Workers of Burkina (CNTB); Trade Union Confederation of Burkina Faso (CSB); Force Ouvrière/National Union of Free Trade Unions (FO/UNS); National Organization of Free Trade Unions (ONSL) and the Trade Union of Workers of Burkina Faso (USTB)) received on 29 August 2019, concerning the administrative suspension of two trade unions in the transport sector and the ban on the activities of a prison officials' union. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the suspension measures against the trade unions in the transport sector have been lifted but, with regard to the prison officials' union, that the activities in question have been suspended since they were not lawful as they aimed at inciting militants to engage in assaults and stop work illegally, and that legal proceedings are under way. Noting that such suspension measures involve a serious risk of interference in the very existence of organizations, and recalling that these measures should be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees, in particular adequate judicial safeguards (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 162), the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legal proceedings in question.

In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend certain legislative and regulatory provisions relating to the right to strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the process of adoption of the Labour Code has been further delayed, owing to the prevailing socio-economic situation in the country, and its reiteration that the process is under way and that the concerns expressed regarding the non-conformity of certain provisions have been taken into account. Under these conditions, the Committee is bound to recall that the Government is expected to take the necessary measures to amend, in particular, the following legislative and regulatory provisions:

- section 386 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which the exercise of the right to strike shall on no account be accompanied by the occupation of the workplace or its immediate surroundings, subject to the penal sanctions established in the legislation in force. In this regard, the Committee recalled that restrictions on strike pickets and the occupation of the workplace are acceptable only where the action ceases to be peaceful. However, it is necessary in all cases to ensure observance of the freedom of non-strikers to work and the right of management to enter the premises;
- the Order of 18 December 2009, issued under section 384 of the Labour Code, which lists establishments that may be subject to requisitioning for the purpose of ensuring a minimum service in the event of a strike. The Committee observed that certain of the services contained in the list could not be considered essential services or require the maintenance of a minimum service in the event of a strike, such as mining and quarrying, public and private slaughterhouses, university centres. The Committee therefore requested the Government to revise the list of establishments which may be subject to requisitioning for the purpose of ensuring a minimum service in the event of a strike to ensure that requisitioning is only possible in: (i) services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (essential services in the strict sense of the term); (ii) services which are not essential in the strict sense of the term, but in which strikes of a certain scope and duration could give rise to an acute crisis threatening the normal living conditions of the population; or (iii) public services of fundamental importance.

The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and that it will give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Code once promulgated, as well as any relevant implementing texts.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's comments in reply to the joint observations of six trade union confederations (the General Labour Confederation of Burkina Faso (CGT-B), the National Confederation of Workers of Burkina Faso (CNTB), the Trade Union Confederation of Burkina Faso (CSB), Force ouvrière - National Trade Union Alliance (FO-UNS), the National Organization of Free Trade Unions (ONSL), and the Trade Union of Workers of Burkina Faso (USTB)), received on 29 August 2019, relating in particular to acts of anti-union discrimination against trade union activists and leaders in the public sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) measures have been taken to remove sanctions against the trade union activists and officers in question; and (ii) the public servants suspended in the context of their trade union activities have been reinstated by court decision, even though some cases are still pending. Recalling that public servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State – including those who are not trade union officers – must be afforded effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination within the meaning of the Convention (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 188), the Committee requests the Government to ensure that all the public servants suspended in the context of their legitimate trade union activities are reinstated in their posts, and to provide information in this regard.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee once again asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, whether or not they are considered in national law as belonging to the category of public servants (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). Noting the Government's indication that it is seeking technical assistance from the Office, the Committee trusts that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on any new developments in this regard and on any collective agreement concluded in the public sector.

Burundi

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 29 August 2023, concerning matters examined in the present comment.

Revised Labour Code. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1/11 of 24 November 2020 revising the Labour Code (revision of legislative decree No. 1/037 of 7 July 1993).

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Public officials. The Committee notes that section 2 of the revised Labour Code excludes from its scope of application State civil servants governed by the General Civil Service Regulations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that in the absence of regulations concerning the exercise of the right to organize of magistrates, the Minister of Justice was due to set up a committee to revise the Magistrates' Regulations by incorporating provisions relating to the exercise of the right to organize.

Noting the Government's indication that the reform process remains under way, the Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that the Magistrates' Regulations are revised in the near future in order to ensure that judges benefit from the guarantees laid down in the Convention, and to provide a copy of the revised regulations once they have been adopted.

Minors. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the provision of section 271 of the Labour Code of 1993, which provided that minors under 18 years of age may not join a trade union without the express authorization of their parents or guardians, has been repealed in context of the revision of the Code.

Article 3. Election of trade union officers. The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to amend section 275(3) of the Labour Code, so that a conviction for an act that does not call into question the integrity of the person concerned does not constitute grounds for exclusion from trade union office. The Committee notes with interest that new section 595(3) of the Labour Code provides that members with responsibility for the administration or management of a trade union must not have been sentenced "to more than six months' imprisonment without suspension of sentence for acts which, by their nature, call into question the integrity of the person concerned and present a real risk for the performance of trade union duties".

The Committee also recalls that it recommended deleting the provision under section 275(4) disqualifying candidates who have not worked in "the occupation or trade for at least one year" from trade union office, and allow persons who had previously worked in the occupation to stand for office or lift the requirement to belong to the occupation for a reasonable proportion of trade union officers. The Committee notes in this regard that new section 595(4) of the Code provides that members with responsibility for the administration and management of a trade union "must be working in or have worked in the occupation or trade".

Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom. Procedures for the exercise of the right to strike. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to adopt and provide a copy of the text to be issued under the Labour Code on the modalities for the exercise of the right to strike. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the revised Labour Code provides that: (i) an order of the Minister responsible for labour, further to the opinion of the National Labour Committee, shall determine indispensable services and the procedures for the exercise of the right to strike in these services (section 507), and (ii) an order of the Minister responsible for labour, further to the opinion of the National Labour Committee, shall specify the procedures for the application of Chapter III of the Code, The right to strike and lockout (section 514). In respect of the "indispensable" services referred to in section 507, the Committee notes that the definition of these services under section 4 of the revised Labour Code is potentially broader than that which the Committee deems essential services in the strict sense of the term, in that it includes services that must be maintained in order to safeguard "freedom of movement" and "freedom of communication and information". Recalling the importance of the right to strike for promoting and defending the interests of unionized workers, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to adopt and provide a copy of the regulations implementing the Labour Code in relation to procedures for the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to clarify the definition of indispensable services, so that prohibition of the right to strike is only possible in services "whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population" (essential services in the strict sense of the term).

The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to take the necessary steps to: (i) amend section 213 of the Labour Code of 1993, which provides that strikes are lawful when they are called with the approval of a simple majority of the employees of the workplace or enterprise; and (ii) to repeal the legislative decree prohibiting the exercise of the right to strike and the right to demonstrate throughout the country during electoral periods. On the first point, the Committee notes the Government's indication that under new section 502, a strike is lawful "when it is carried out by a group of workers with the approval of a simple majority of the workforce affected by the dispute". While observing that the provision no longer refers to the "employees of the workplace or enterprise", but to "the workforce affected by the dispute", the Committee wishes to recall that if a country deems it appropriate to require a vote by workers before a strike can be held, it should ensure that account is taken only of the votes cast. With regard to the second point, the Committee notes that the Government still does not provide information on the repeal of the legislative decree concerned. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to revise new section 502 of the Labour Code in order to ensure that the simple majority required to decide whether to call a strike relates to the votes cast, rather than to the workers affected by the dispute, and to repeal the above-mentioned legislative decree.

Internal administration of trade unions. The Committee notes that section 606 of the revised Code provides that "trade unions are required ... to provide all information requested by the Minister responsible for labour, insofar as this relates exclusively to trade union activities" and that failure to comply with this requirement may affect the very existence of the organization concerned (section 615 of the Code). In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall: (i) the principle, established by the Convention, that the public authorities are prohibited from interfering with the internal affairs of trade unions and (ii) the importance of ensuring that workers' and employers' organizations have the right to organize their activities in full freedom for the purpose of defending the occupational interests of their members. In this regard, the Committee notes that it has had occasion to welcome the removal, in some national laws, of the requirement for trade unions to submit to the labour authority all reports that the latter might request from them (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 113). In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the steps to repeal the requirement under section 606 of the revised Labour Code to provide "all information requested by the Minister responsible for labour" concerning trade union activities, in order to avoid any risk of interference by the public authorities in trade union activities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 29 August 2023, which relate to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee also notes the indication by COSYBU that the situation of workers who are members of the Trade Union of Workers of the University of Burundi (STUB) has been regularized, unlike that of its President, who has still not been reinstated in his job, despite a court ruling in his favour. Recalling that the reinstatement of a worker dismissed by reason of trade union membership or legitimate trade union activities with retroactive compensation constitutes the most effective remedy for acts of anti-union discrimination (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 182), the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the situation of the President of the STUB.

Revised Labour Code. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 1/11 of 24 November 2020 revising the Labour Code (revision of Legislative Decree No. 1/037 of 7 July 1993).

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that the sanctions established by the Labour Code for acts of anti-union discrimination and interference were not dissuasive and expressed the hope that the respective provisions would be amended in the context of the revision. With reference to the allegations made by the COSYBU of cases of anti-union discrimination in various economic sectors, the Committee notes with regret that they have not been referred to in the Government's comments. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the principles protected by the Convention are applied by sections 588 and 589 of the revised Labour Code (which relate, respectively, to protection against acts of discrimination liable to prejudice freedom of association in relation to employment and protection against acts of interference), and section 20(1) of Act No. 1/03 of 8 February 2023 amending Act No. 1/28 of 23 August 2006 issuing the General Regulations of public employees (which include trade union activities among the prohibited grounds of discrimination). The Committee also notes that the COSYBU, in its observations, calls for the adoption of additional measures, including effective and dissuasive sanctions and particularly for measures to be taken to amend section 158 of the revised Labour Code, which provides that, where the reinstatement of a worker who has been unjustifiably dismissed is not possible, in the absence of agreement between the parties (section 157 of the new Labour Code): "damages and interest shall be calculated taking into account the seniority of the worker in the enterprise, the workers' s age and salary (subsection 1). The amount to be paid by the employer to the unjustifiably dismissed worker shall correspond to one-third of the sum of the age and years of seniority multiplied by the last monthly remuneration (subsection 2). However, the amount of the damages and interest may not be higher than 36 months of the last remuneration (subsection 3)". The COSYBU observes that the average compensation would be around 15 months' salary, which in its view is very inadequate in relation to the damage suffered. The Committee recalls that the effectiveness of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination depends not only on the effectiveness of the remedies envisaged, but also the sanctions provided for which should, in the view of the Committee, be effective and sufficiently dissuasive (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 193). While reaffirming that the reinstatement of a worker dismissed by reason of trade union membership or legitimate trade union activities constitutes the most effective remedy for acts of anti-union discrimination, the Committee recalls that, when a country opts for a system of compensation, it considers that the compensation envisaged for anti-union discrimination should fulfil certain conditions, namely: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprises concerned; and (iii) the amount be reviewed periodically (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 182 and 185). In light of the above and in order to be able to assess whether the revised Labour Code ensures adequate protection against anti-union dismissal within the meaning of Article 1 of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) specify the method of calculating damages and interest established by section 158 of the revised Labour Code; and (ii) provide information on the application in practice of section 158 of the revised Labour Code.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on an allegation by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that section 224 of the Labour Code that was then in force authorized collective agreements with non-unionized workers and that section 227 of the Labour Code allowed interference by the authorities in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the revised Labour Code gives effect to the provisions of the Convention through sections 515 to 521. The Committee observes in this regard that: (i) section 515, which replaces section 224, provides that it is only in the absence of the most representative unions or federations that staff representatives on the enterprise council or workers can engage in collective bargaining; and (ii) section 520 of the Labour Code, which replaces section 227, provides that representatives of the labour administration shall participate in collective bargaining in an advisory capacity. While taking due note of the changes in the legislation, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 515 of the revised Labour Code, by specifying: (i) the manner in which the representative or most representative nature of a union organization is determined for the purposes of collective bargaining; and (ii) the number of collective agreements concluded by unions, and the number of collective agreements concluded by other actors under the terms of this section. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 520 of the revised Labour Code concerning the role played by the representatives of the labour administration in collective bargaining.

The Committee further notes that the COSYBU: (i) reiterates that collective agreements have not been concluded in all sectors since 2012; (ii) once again denounces the suspension of the bonuses and allowances linked to the economic situation established in the national inter-occupational collective agreement of 3 April 1980 governing long-service bonuses; and (iii) reaffirms that an agreement signed with the Government on 23 February 2017 to re-establish regulations on the exercise of freedom of association and collective bargaining has still not been applied. The Committee also notes that, in its reply, the Government reiterates that the ways and means of implementing the agreement signed on 23 February 2017 are under examination. Recalling that mutual respect for commitments made in collective agreements is an important element of the right to collective bargaining (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 208), the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the implementation of the agreement of 23 February 2017 and to respond to the allegations of the COSYBU concerning the suspension of the bonuses and allowances linked to the economic situation established in the national inter-occupational collective agreement of 3 April 1980. Noting the persistence of the divergent appraisals by the Government and the COSYBU regarding the implementation in practice of the right to engage in collective bargaining, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to encourage and promote collective bargaining and their impact. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the collective agreements concluded, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

Articles 4 and 6. Right of collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the measures adopted to promote collective bargaining by this category of workers, including in the context of the national wage policy. Noting with regret the absence of a response from the Government on this subject, the Committee requests it to ensure that information is provided on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that the organizations of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State have at their disposal machinery through which they can negotiate all of their terms and conditions of work and employment, including remuneration.

Cambodia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023 concerning: numerous obstacles to union registration; violence against trade unionists and impunity of perpetrators; misclassification of collective labour disputes and denial of judicial remedies; and gaps remaining in the Cambodian legislation which are incompatible with the Convention. Moreover, the ITUC alleges specific cases of serious union busting, police violence and the arrest and imprisonment of trade union leaders. The ITUC further refers to serious incidents of reported violations of the basic civil liberties of trade unionists including repression of their freedom of expression, accompanied by police intimidation and the persecution of union leaders for participating in peaceful strikes. The ITUC expresses its deep concern at the widespread anti-union climate in the country and the persistence of longstanding legal and practical obstacles to the exercise of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to provide its detailed comments on these serious allegations, as well as the remaining matters raised by the ITUC in its 2021 observations.

The Committee deeply regrets that the Government has not provided a report this year on the application of the Convention nor on the progress made in respect of the recommendations of the direct contacts mission which took place in March 2022 at the request of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2021. The Committee therefore finds itself obliged to consider the matters raised in its previous comments and the direct contact mission recommendations without the benefit of any feedback from the Government on the measures that it may have taken or envisaged.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

Murders of trade unionists. The Committee recalls that its previous comment related to its long-standing recommendation, as well as that of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, to carry out expeditious and independent investigations into the murders of trade union leaders Chea Vichea and Ros Sovannareth (in 2004) and Hy Vuthy (in 2007). While noting that the Government of Cambodia came before the Committee on Freedom of Association within the framework of paragraph 69 of its special procedures, with a view to informing the Committee of the progress made in this regard (Case No. 2318, 404th Report, November 2023, paragraph 6), the Committee must observe with deep concern that the Government has yet to provide any information on the progress made in this regard. Recalling once again the need to conclude the ongoing investigations and to bring to justice the perpetrators and instigators of these crimes, the Committee firmly urges the competent authorities to take all necessary measures to expedite the process of investigation and report on meaningful progress.

Incidents during the January 2014 demonstrations. As regards the trade unionists facing criminal charges in relation to incidents during the January 2014 demonstrations, the Committee, in its previous comment requested the Government to continue providing information on the pending legal procedures against trade unionists, in particular on any verdicts issued, and to provide detailed information on any court rulings resulting from the conclusions of the fact-finding committees investigating the allegations of killings, physical violence and arrests of protesting workers, as well as all materials from the fact-finding committees' reports that do not directly implicate internal affairs of the country. The Committee notes the 2022 recommendation of the direct contacts mission that the Government review the lists of workers who still have criminal charges pending with the unions concerned and provide greater clarity in respect of any remaining charges and action taken, as well as any final court judgments. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government has provided no information in this respect, over one year since the direct contacts mission visited the country and issued its recommendations. The Committee therefore urges the Government to review the list of pending cases with the trade unions concerned and provide detailed information on each and every case of criminal prosecution related to the January 2014 demonstrations.

Violence, intimidation, arrest and imprisonment of trade unionists for carrying out peaceful industrial action. Training of police forces in relation to industrial and protest action. The Committee further recalls the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards calling upon the Government to take all necessary measures to stop arbitrary arrest, detention and prosecution of trade unionists for undertaking legitimate trade union activity. The Committee notes with deep concern the latest allegations from the ITUC of ongoing arrests of workers involved in a dispute with a casino operation. The Committee notes that this matter has been raised before the Committee on Freedom of Association, which urged the Government to ensure the immediate and unconditional release of the union President (see 404th Report, paragraphs 203 and 207(c)). Recalling its previous request that the Government provide information on the number of police officers participating in training sessions, the duration of such training and the subjects covered, including whether disciplinary consequences of the use of excessive force are part of the training, the Committee notes the direct contacts mission recommendation concerning the criminalization and politicization of trade union activity and the need for clear instructions to be given so that resort to police in relation to strike action is only made if there is a genuine threat to public order and so that the intervention is proportionate to the threat to public order and avoids the danger of excessive violence. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that all trade unionists detained for undertaking legitimate trade union activity are immediately released. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to consider further measures, including through the development of guidelines, to ensure that peaceful industrial action is not repressed. It also requests information on the progress made to ensure regular and systematic training programmes of labour inspectors, labour dispute officers, police officers, workers and employers, as recommended by the direct contacts mission. Regretting that the Government has not provided any information in reply to its previous request, the Committee reiterates its request for detailed information on the number of police officers trained, the duration of the training, the subjects covered and whether disciplinary consequences for the use of excessive force are also part of the training.

Legislative issues

Article 2 of the Convention. Rights of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Civil servants and public sector teachers. Noting with regret that the Government has not provided any information on the manner in which the freedom of association rights of civil servants are protected, the Committee must once again urge the Government to take appropriate measures, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to ensure that civil servants – including public sector teachers – who are not covered by the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) are guaranteed their rights under the Convention, and that the legislation applicable to them is amended accordingly.

Domestic workers. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it observed the deep concern expressed by workers' organizations relating to the difficulties faced by domestic workers and workers in the informal economy in forming or joining unions, since the LTU provides for an enterprise union model, whose requirements are often very difficult to meet by these workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken to promote the full and effective enjoyment of the rights under the Convention by domestic workers and workers in the informal economy, and recalls that consideration of the adaptation of the legislative framework to expressly enable the formation of unions by sector or profession may facilitate the exercise of the rights under the Convention by those workers.

Application in practice. Trade union registration. The Committee recalls the 2021 conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards calling upon the Government to ensure that workers are able to register trade unions through a simple, objective and transparent process. The Committee notes in this respect the conclusions and recommendations of the 2022 direct contacts mission that practical hurdles to the formation and functioning of trade unions, particularly on trade union registration or recognition of their most representative status, should be rapidly addressed. The direct contacts mission proposed that simplifying the registration forms and ensuring that clear instructions are given to Ministry officials that only the requirements that are specifically set out in the law can be requested in order to grant registration would facilitate the process. The direct contacts mission further recommended that all discretionary authority be eliminated (such as requests to the union to provide the employee list) and training provided, including with ILO technical assistance, to build the capacity of Ministry officials and trade unions in the understanding of expectations in this regard. Lastly, the direct contacts mission suggested that an online database showing requests for registration, pending issues and final resolution would help the transparency of the process and demonstrate the consistency of application. Regretting that the Government has not provided any information on the steps taken to address the various practical hurdles to registration, the Committee urges it to provide detailed information in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3. Financial audit and maintenance of registration. In its previous comment, the Committee observed that the 2019 amendments to the LTU introduced: (i) a new section 27 requiring organizations not only to present a financial statement to their members but also to have them audited by an independent firm if so requested by either any donor or by a percentage of its members (10 per cent for local unions and 5 per cent for federations or confederations); and (ii) a new section 17 on maintenance of registration, requiring not only the submission of annual financial statements and activity reports, but also their audit by an independent audit firm if so requested by either any donor or by a percentage of its members (10 per cent for local unions and 5 per cent for federations or confederations). Observing that these provisions could subject unions to the threat of frivolous audit requests, which would entail an onerous burden to maintain registration, the Committee once again requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to revise sections 17 and 27 of the LTU, so that audits to the financial statements and activity reports are only required if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or to the law.

Article 3. Right to elect representatives freely. Requirements for leaders, managers, and those responsible for the administration of unions and of employer associations. In the absence of any information from the Government, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to remove the requirement to read and to write Khmer from sections 20, 21 and 38 of the LTU and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the need to amend section 326(1) of the Labour Law whereby, in the absence of agreement between the parties on the minimum service in an enterprise for the protection of the facility installations and equipment where a strike is taking place, the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training (MLVT) is empowered to determine the minimum service in question. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 326(2) of the Labour Law, in particular any example of the sanctions imposed on workers for serious misconduct. Regretting that the Government has not provided any additional information in this respect, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the steps taken, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to amend section 326 of the Labour Law and to provide information on its application in practice.

The Committee also noted in its previous comments that the ITUC denounced, as common practices, the replacement of workers and the granting of injunctions to preclude industrial action, even when all the procedures had been followed by the unions. The Committee notes the conclusions of the direct contacts mission concerning the need to clarify the role of the Committee on Strike and Demonstration in labour dispute resolution and ensure that it does not restrict the legitimate right of workers' organizations to engage in industrial action in defence of their members' interests. The Committee once again requests the Government to hold a comprehensive tripartite dialogue on the issues raised concerning the legality of the exercise of industrial action, with a view to reviewing existing regulations and their application in practice, and undertaking any necessary measures to guarantee the lawful and peaceful exercise of the right to strike.

Article 4. Dissolution of representative organizations. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned section 28(2) of the LTU, which provides that a union is automatically dissolved in the event of a complete closure of the enterprise or establishment and the need to ensure that workers' or employers' organizations should only be dissolved on the basis of the procedures laid down by their statutes, or by a court ruling. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 28 of the LTU by repealing section 28(2) and to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

Grounds to request dissolution by the Court. Recalling that the manner in which members may request dissolution should be left to the organization's by-laws, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 29 of the LTU so as to leave to the unions' or employers' associations own rules and by-laws the determination of the procedures for their dissolution by their members.

Practical application

Independent adjudication mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's observations denouncing the refusal of the MLVT to allow upper-level trade unions to represent or provide support to their members in collective disputes and the example given where the authorities allegedly declared that leaders of federations and confederations were not allowed to speak during the meeting of a collective labour dispute conciliation case. The Committee regrets that the Government has not provided any information in reply and observes that these concerns relate to the functioning of independent adjudication mechanisms, such as the Arbitration Council (AC). The Committee recalls in this respect its previous comments concerning the importance of ensuring the effectiveness of the judicial system as a safeguard against impunity, while at the same time, its encouragement to the Government in its commitment to strengthen the AC as an important means to protect workers' freedom of association rights during labour disputes. The Committee notes from the conclusions of the direct contacts mission that there were several complaints regarding the classification of disputes before the AC, such as the classification of termination of a trade union officer as an individual dispute, preventing that specific allegation from being heard. The Committee notes the recommendation in the report of the direct contacts mission that dismissals of trade union leaders prior to or after the union's registration should be considered as a collective dispute that may be referred for rapid action to the AC. Additionally, the direct contacts mission recommended that any evolution in the functioning of the AC considered by the Government should take place only after full and meaningful consultations with all parties and stakeholders. Lastly, the Committee notes the strong recommendation of the direct contacts mission that urgent action be taken to recruit and train new arbitrators and that union confederations and federations be able to represent their members without requiring prior approval from the MLVT. Emphasizing the importance of the independence of adjudication mechanisms, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on any evolution in the functioning of the AC, and to include statistics on the number and nature of disputes brought before it and the extent of compliance with non-binding AC awards, as well as on any court rulings to ensure that the AC awards, when binding, are duly enforced.

Finally, the Committee notes that the direct contacts mission observed that the road map and progress reports on the implementation of the 2017 direct contacts mission's recommendations were to some degree administratively complex, focusing more on procedure than action-oriented results. The direct contacts mission therefore suggested that the Government simplify the road map and its progress report, in full consultation with the social partners and with the support of the ILO, to identify priority areas of urgent action on the basis of its recommendations and those of the ILO supervisory bodies with clear deliverables and time frames, ensuring accountability and transparency. Regular review of the adequacy of the steps taken should be conducted with all the parties involved. The Committee regrets that the Government has not provided any information on the steps taken in this regard and requests it to indicate the measures taken to engage the social partners concerned in prioritizing areas for action with reference to all its above requests, setting out clear deliverables, responsible bodies and time frames.

The Committee notes with deep concern: the long-standing nature of important issues raised in this comment; the lack of progress on the development of a road map with the social partners, as recommended by the DCM, prioritizing matters for rapid attention and resolution; the new allegations of serious violations of basic civil liberties essential to the exercise of freedom of association, including the arrest and detention of trade unionists and; the total absence of a report from the Government this year. In these circumstances, the Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 109 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, alleging union busting practices in the garment and footwear industries, and denouncing a widespread anti-union climate, the persistence of long-standing legal and practical obstacles to the exercise of freedom of association, and the Government's failure to take action on the issues raised by the unions and the ILO supervisory bodies over the years. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC, received on 21 September 2020, alleging that the December 2019 amendments to the Trade Unions Law failed to bring it in conformity with the Convention and arguing in particular that anti-union discrimination sanctions remain far too low to be dissuasive. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) dated 1 September 2019 referring to matters examined in this comment.

The Committee takes note of the comments of the Government in reply to the 2016 and 2017 ITUC observations. Concerning the allegations of extended use of short-term contracts to terminate employment of trade union leaders and members and weaken active trade unions, the Government states that the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) provides remedies for both dismissal or non-renewal of fixed-term contracts due to anti-union discrimination and, if verified, the labour inspectors instruct the employer to reinstate the workers or impose a substantial fine. The Government adds that, to avoid misinterpretation of legal provisions concerning fixed-term contracts, the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training (MLVT) conducted consultations with the social partners and other actors, such as the Arbitration Council, and that a common understanding was reached that the maximum duration of fixed-term contracts would be four years and, if exceeding this maximum period, the contract would be considered as having unfixed duration. This was reflected in an Instruction on determination of the type of employment contract, issued by the MLVT on 17 May 2019. While taking due note of the information provided, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that all measures are taken to monitor, in consultation with the social partners, that fixed-term contracts are not used for anti-union purposes, including through their non-renewal, and to continue to provide information in this respect.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. For many years, several workers' organizations, in particular the ITUC – including in its most recent observations, have been denouncing serious and numerous acts of anti-union discrimination in the country. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in this regard that the MLVT: (i) issued an administrative letter on 31 May 2019 to all employers and their associations to ensure strict and effective implementation of the provisions relating to anti-union discrimination; (ii) invited employers' representatives from 50 companies to disseminate information on the special protections against anti-union discrimination; and (iii) met with the representative of the Cambodia Labour Confederation (CLC) on two different occasions (13 June and 18 July 2019) to follow-up on its 44 cases before the courts (the Government informs that 11 of these were resolved with acquittal of charges and that the MLVT is working closely with the Ministry of Justice to review the remaining cases). While welcoming the steps undertaken for the effective implementation of the protections against anti-union discrimination, the Committee observes that, other than the reference to two meetings with the CLC, it has not received more detailed information on the numerous and grave allegations of anti-union discrimination laid out in previous observations of workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the handling of the allegations of anti-union discrimination laid out in the observations of the ITUC in 2014, 2016 and 2019, and recalls the need to take all necessary measures to ensure that anti-union discrimination allegations are investigated by independent organs that enjoy the confidence of the parties and that, whenever such allegations are verified, adequate remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions are applied.

Furthermore, in its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to ensure that national legislation provided adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination, such as dismissals and other prejudicial acts against trade union leaders and members, including sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee had taken note, in this respect, of the ITUC's observations that penalties provided for under the LTU for anti-union practices by employers were too low (a maximum of 5 million Cambodian riels (KHR), equivalent to US$1,250) and may not be sufficiently dissuasive. The Committee was of the view that fines for unfair labour practices provided for in the LTU may be a deterrent for small and medium-sized enterprises, but would not appear to be so for high-productivity and large enterprise cases. The Committee had thus invited the Government to assess, in consultation with the social partners, the dissuasive nature of sanctions in the LTU or any other relevant laws. The Committee notes that the Government replies by affirming that the existing legal mechanisms set out adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Government indicates that: (i) in addition to the application of the provisions and remedies in the LTU concerning anti-union discrimination (Chapter 15), the LTU itself acknowledges (section 95) that other criminal laws may be applied to punish these actions (violence and discrimination against worker unions being criminal offences under sections 217 and 267 of the Penal Code) and that the employer could thus even face imprisonment, for example if the actions entailed violence; (ii) in addition to the fines imposed by the LTU, those affected can also claim compensation; (iii) the MLVT has never received complaints or grievances from trade unionists regarding existing sanctions; and (iv) the Government is committed to further strengthening the capacity of labour inspectors and raising the awareness of workers on their rights. The Committee observes, on the other hand, that, while several consultation meetings were held on the review and amendment of the LTU, the Government does not indicate that, as recommended by the Committee, these tripartite fora were used to assess the effective and dissuasive nature of the protections against anti-union discrimination. Moreover, the Committee notes that the ITUC observations, in addition to the concrete cases noted above, denounce in general a lack of action and adequate protection against rampant anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed statistical information on the application of the different mechanisms to protect against anti-union discrimination, including as to sanctions and other remedies effectively imposed, for example reinstatement or compensation. The Committee further requests the Government to assess, in light of such data, and in consultation with the social partners, the appropriateness of existing remedies, in particular the dissuasive nature of sanctions; and to provide information on any development in this regard.

Article 4. Recognition of trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining. In its previous observation, noting that the Government's statement that by lowering the most representative organisation threshold to 30 per cent, the law encouraged the increase of collective agreements, the Committee had invited the Government to assess the impact of the implementation of the LTU by providing statistics on: (a) the number of representative organizations identified based on their having secured at least 30 per cent of workers' support without an election, and the number of collective agreements concluded by these representative organizations; and (b) the number of separate elections organized based on no union having secured 30 per cent support, and the number of collective agreements concluded by the organizations so elected. The Committee notes that the Government provides the following information: (i) the number of representative organizations having secured at least 30 per cent of workers' support without election were four unions in 2018 (all in the garment sector, covering 3,226 workers) and 15 unions in 2019 (11 in the garment sector, covering 11,070 workers and four in the hotel sector, covering 890 workers); and (ii) the number of collective bargaining agreements concluded in 2018 and 2019 was seven (in 2018, four collective bargaining agreements were concluded between the employer and the shop steward; and, in 2019, three collective bargaining agreements between the employer and a most representative status union). The Government indicates that the information concerning point (b) above will be provided in its next report. The Committee further observes that the March 2017 direct contacts mission (DCM) recommended the Government to take the necessary measures, including issuing instructions to the competent authorities, to ensure that most representative status are recognized without delay and without the exercise of arbitrary discretion to workers' organizations or coalitions of organizations meeting the minimum threshold. In this respect, while noting that the Government indicates that it issued an Instruction on the Facilitation for the Most Representative Status Certification and that one of the objectives of the amendments to the LTU is to facilitate the requirements to obtain most representative status, the Committee observes that the number of organizations having secured at least 30 per cent of workers' support without election, as well as the number of collective bargaining agreements concluded, for 2018 and 2019, were very low. The Committee requests the Government to keep on providing information on the number of organizations recognized as having the most representative status, and the number of collective agreements in force, indicating the parties that concluded the agreement (in particular, if a most representative union, a bargaining council or a shop steward), the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements; as well as information on any additional measures undertaken to address the issues noted by the DCM concerning the recognition of most representative status organizations, and to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments the Committee had urged the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers, who are governed by the Law on the Common Statute of Civil Servants and the Law on Education with regard to their right to organize, enjoy collective bargaining rights under the Convention. The Committee notes that, in its reply, the Government indicates that civil servants, including teachers, can form associations in accordance with the Law on Associations and Non-Governmental Organizations (LANGO), but does not provide any information on measures to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State can exercise the right to collective bargaining. Regretting the lack of progress in this respect, the Committee urges once again the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers, enjoy collective bargaining rights under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report on any measures taken or envisaged in this regard and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Federally Regulated Employers – Transportation and Communications (FETCO), communicated with the Government's report, which are of a general nature.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of certain categories of workers. Province of Alberta. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the exclusion of agricultural workers, as well as budget officers, systems analysts and auditors working in the public sector, from either the Labour Relations Code (LRC) or the Public Service Employee Relations Act (PSERA), and requested the Government to indicate the manner in which these workers could enjoy their right to organize and all guarantees under the Convention. The Committee also noted the Government's indication that nothing prevented domestic workers from associating and organizing, and requested it to specify under which legislative provisions they could enjoy their right to organize and all guarantees under the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any new information in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how agricultural workers, as well as budget officers, systems analysts and auditors working in the public sector, can enjoy their right to organize and all guarantees under the Convention. The Committee also once again requests that the Government specify under which legislative provisions domestic workers may enjoy their right to organize and the guarantees provided by the Convention.

The Committee also noted the exclusion of certain categories of professional employees such as architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers, doctors and engineers from the LRC and the PSERA, and requested the Government to confirm that all these categories of workers, from both the public and private sector, could exercise all freedom of association rights under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the LRC, land surveyors are considered employees, and while the other professional categories are excluded from its scope, these employees still benefit from the right to freedom of association. With respect to workplaces covered by the PSERA, the Government indicates that the above-mentioned categories of workers can apply to the Labour Relations Board to be included in a bargaining unit. Taking due note of the information provided regarding land surveyors and workplaces covered by the PSERA, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which workers from the other excluded professional categories, such as architects, dentists, lawyers, doctors and engineers, can enjoy the freedom of association rights provided by the Convention in workplaces covered by the LRC.

Province of Ontario. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that agricultural workers were excluded from the Labour Relations Act (LRA), and that the Agricultural Employees' Protection Act (AEPA) did not clearly state that such employees had the right to join a trade union and did not grant them the right to strike. The Committee requested the Government to gather and provide information on the number of workers represented by an employee association or trade union under the AEPA, and to take any additional measures to guarantee that agricultural workers enjoy the rights recognized in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it considers that the AEPA protects the right of agricultural workers to form associations and does not prohibit them from exercising their freedom to collectively withdraw their services. The Committee notes with regret that the Government on the one hand, does not point to the specific provisions conferring trade union rights to agricultural workers and on the other, states that it does not plan to amend its legislation and does not have the requested data. Recalling that the guarantees under the Convention should apply, in law and in practice, to all workers, including agricultural workers, the Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to guarantee that this category of workers can benefit from the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention, both in law and practice. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government collect and compile statistical data on the number of workers represented by an employee association or trade union under the AEPA.

Furthermore, the Committee noted the exclusion of other categories of workers (architects, dentists, land surveyors, lawyers, doctors, engineers, principals and vice-principals in educational establishments, community workers and domestic workers) from the LRA, and invited the Government to ensure that these categories have the rights recognized under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that "professional engineer" is defined in section 1 of the LRA and not listed in any excluded category. The Government also states that no changes to the employee exclusions from the LRA were made during 2020-2023, and that labour laws originally enacted for industrial settings are not always suited to non-industrial workplaces, such as private homes and professional offices, which is the case with the above-mentioned categories of workers. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention applies to all workers, without distinction whatsoever (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 53). While noting the information provided with respect to engineers, the Committee once again invites the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that all other above-mentioned categories of workers benefit from the trade union rights provided by the Convention, both in law and practice.

Province of New Brunswick. The Committee previously expressed the hope that consultations held in 2016 regarding possible amendments to the Employment Standards Act, from which domestic workers were excluded, and an ongoing technical review of the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), would be finalized in the near future, and that the Government would ensure that domestic workers enjoy the right to organize and other guarantees under the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that no legislative changes have been made to date, and that Canada's recent ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), as well as its technical review of the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), have taken precedence over its technical review of Convention No. 189. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including through the possible amendment of the Employment Standards Act, to ensure that domestic workers enjoy all rights under the Convention, and to keep it informed of any progress made in this regard.

Other provinces. Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the exclusion of architects, dentists, land surveyors, doctors and engineers in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan, as well as the Government's indication that nothing impedes these categories from associating and organizing. The Committee requested the Government to specify under which legislative provisions these categories of workers enjoy the rights recognized in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) according to section 6-4 of the Saskatchewan Employment Act, employees have the right to organize, form, join or assist in the establishment of a union of their choice, and no provisions exclude the above-mentioned categories of workers from the application of the Act; and (ii) Doctors Nova Scotia is an association that can bargain with the Government of Nova Scotia on behalf of doctors and residents, and a similar association exists in Saskatchewan. While taking due note of the above, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information regarding Prince Edward Island. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether there are legislative provisions that expressly allow architects, dentists, land surveyors, doctors and engineers in these provinces to enjoy the rights recognized in the Convention.

The Committee also noted that domestic workers in Saskatchewan faced a practical limitation on organizing as a result of the definition of "employer" in the Saskatchewan Employment Act (defined as "an employer who customarily or actually employs three or more employees"), and invited the Government to ensure that they enjoy the rights provided under the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in this respect, but also notes from publicly available information that, following an amendment to section 2-1 (g) of the Act in 2020, the definition of "employer" now encompasses "any person who employs one or more employees". The Committee takes note of this positive development and requests the Government to indicate how domestic workers will now enjoy, in law and in practice, the right to organize under the Convention.

Article 3. Right of employers' and workers' organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Province of Saskatchewan. Employment Act. The Committee previously pointed out that the definition of "employee" in the Employment Act excluded anyone exercising authority and performing managerial or confidential functions, and that the term "union", "labour organization" and "strike" were defined with reference to the term "employee". The Committee reminded the Government that although it is not necessarily incompatible with Article 2 to deny workers who perform managerial functions or are employed in its confidential capacity the right to belong to the same trade unions as other workers, this category should not be defined so broadly as to weaken the organizations of other workers in the enterprise or branch of activity by depriving them of a substantial proportion of their present or potential membership. It hoped that the Government would bring the Act into full conformity with these considerations, while also requesting it to provide information on the number of employees declared "confidential". The Committee notes the Government's indication that the provisions which provided for the exclusion of supervisors from the same bargaining unit as employees were repealed from the Employment Act in January 2022. The Government also states that information on the number of employees declared "confidential" is not collected by the provincial government. Noting with interest the recent amendment to the Employment Act, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether workers performing confidential functions may now also be allowed in the same bargaining unit as employees.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the draft revised Labour Code communicated by the Government and notes that the Government received technical assistance from the Office in this regard.

Articles 2, 3, 5 and 6 of the Convention. Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee highlighted the need to amend the following provisions of the Labour Code in force:

- section 17, which limits the right of foreign nationals to join trade unions by imposing conditions of residence (two years) and reciprocity;
- section 24, which limits the right of foreign nationals to be elected to trade union office and executive functions by imposing a condition of reciprocity;
- section 25, which renders non-eligible for trade union office persons sentenced to imprisonment, persons with a criminal record or persons deprived of their right of eligibility under national law, even where the nature of the relevant offence is not prejudicial to the integrity required for trade union office;
- section 26, under which the union membership of minors under 16 years of age may be opposed by parents or guardians despite the minimum age for admission to employment being 14 years under section 259 of the Labour Code;
- section 49(3), under which no confederation may be established without the prior existence of occupational or regional federations.

The Committee welcomes the fact that sections 17 and 24 of the Labour Code are not included in the draft revised Labour Code. However, it notes with regret that sections 25, 26 and 49(3) are not amended as indicated by the Committee, and are set out in similar terms in sections 32, 33 and 57(3) of the draft Labour Code.

Registration of trade unions. The Committee further observes that section 27 of the draft Labour Code does not clearly define the procedures for the registration of trade unions without prior authorization. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 27(2) of the draft Labour Code, the regional labour inspectorate is responsible for issuing an opinion on the registration of a trade union, which is submitted to the Ministry of Labour under section 27(3). The Committee recalls that the legislation does not clearly define the procedures for the formalities which have to be observed or the reasons which may be given for refusal, and confers upon the competent authority a discretionary power to accept or refuse an application for registration, which may be tantamount in practice to imposing “previous authorization”. The Committee notes that the amendments to the statutes and changes in the management and administration of a trade union referred to in section 28 of the draft Labour Code must be notified to the same authorities in the same forms and under the same conditions as in section 27, and are therefore subject to the same concerns. The Committee requests the Government to amend sections 27 and 28 of the draft revised Labour Code in order to ensure that neither the opinion of the labour inspectorate nor the approval of the Ministry of Labour amounts to a form of previous authorization, which is not compatible with Article 2 of the Convention.

Holding of elections. The Committee notes that section 69 of the revised Labour Code establishes that candidates for the election of staff delegates are presented on a list by the most representative trade union in the enterprise and that, failing this, the employer invites individual candidates to apply. The Committee requests the Government to amend section 69 of the draft Labour Code to allow even non-representative organizations to submit lists of candidates for elections of staff delegates.

The Committee hopes that the revised version of the Labour Code, when adopted by the Parliament, will ensure full conformity of all the provisions described above with the requirements under the Convention, and requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised Labour Code as soon as it is adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the draft text of the revised Labour Code provided by the Government and notes that the Government benefited from technical assistance from the Office in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against any acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that protection measures for staff representatives, which cover both trade union delegates and elected representatives, are reinforced by sections 99 to 103 of the draft Labour Code. The Committee notes that these sections provide for: (i) the prior authorization of the labour inspector in the event of dismissal; (ii) the invalidity of the dismissal of a staff representative in the absence of authorization from the labour inspector; and (iii) the application of these measures to candidates and alternate candidates to the functions of staff representative, and to former staff representatives. However, the Committee notes that dismissals of workers who are not staff representatives on the grounds of their trade union activities shall be considered unjustified and give rise to the right, in the same way as any other type of unjustified dismissal, to damages and interest, of which the maximum amount, which varies on the basis of the seniority of the worker, is set out in section 182 of the draft Labour Code. While reaffirming that the reinstatement of a worker dismissed by reason of trade union membership or legitimate trade union activities constitutes the most effective remedy for acts of anti-union discrimination, the Committee wishes to recall that when a country opts for a system of compensation and fines, it considers that the compensation envisaged for anti-union dismissal should fulfil certain conditions: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprise concerned; and (iii) the amount be reviewed periodically (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 182 and 185). The Committee also notes that, with regard to the penalties applicable for acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal, section 39 of the draft text only provides for damages and interest in the event of the violation of section 38, which prohibits any form of anti-union discrimination by the employer. Recalling that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 190 and 193), the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the revised Labour Code provides for such penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide detailed information on the progress achieved at the legislative level in expanding protection against acts of interference. Noting that the draft text of the Labour Code does not contain provisions in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the Labour Code currently being revised provides that trade unions and employers' organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Section 40 of the Labour Code. The Committee previously requested the Government to specify whether, beyond the function of assisting trade union delegates mentioned by the Government, the new provisions of the draft text of the Labour Code explicitly recognize the right of federations and confederations to conclude collective agreements themselves. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft text of the Labour Code, in Title V, empowers the representatives of federations to assist trade union delegates in the discussions on collective agreements. The Committee observes that section 48 of the draft text of the Labour Code reflects the spirit of the provision of the Labour Code that is currently in force and does not explicitly refer to the right of federations and confederations to conclude collective agreements themselves. The Committee requests the Government to amend section 48 of the draft text of the Labour Code to explicitly recognize the right of federations and confederations to conclude collective agreements themselves. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide copies of any collective agreements negotiated and concluded by federations or confederations.

Collective bargaining with non-unionized actors. In its previous comments, the Committee raised the need to revise the Labour Code in order to ensure that bargaining with non-unionized actors can only take place in the absence of a union in the bargaining unit. The Committee notes that the draft text of the Labour Code provides: (i) in section 4 that collective labour accords are establishment collective agreements concluded by one or more representative trade union organizations, while collective agreements, which may have a broader scope of application, are concluded by trade union representatives or “occupational groupings of workers”; and (ii) section 252 of the draft text of the Labour Code provides that staff delegates may conclude establishment agreements, either to supplement collective agreements or to set minimum conditions of work and employment in the absence of collective agreements, and that staff delegates may be assisted by representatives of their union. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) ensure that staff delegates can only negotiate establishment agreements in the absence of a union in the unit concerned; and (ii) specify the meaning of the concept of occupational grouping of workers and ensure that the recognition of the right to collective bargaining for these groupings does not prejudice trade unions.

Sections 367 to 370 of the Labour Code. Conciliation and arbitration. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the amendment of sections 367 to 370 of the Labour Code that is currently in force which appear to establish a procedure whereby all collective disputes are subject to conciliation and, failing resolution, to arbitration. The Committee notes that sections 458 to 461 of the draft text of the Labour Code reproduce the provisions of sections 367 to 370 of the Labour Code that is currently in force without substantive modification. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, by virtue of the principle of the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention, recourse to compulsory arbitration in the case of disagreement between the parties to collective bargaining is only acceptable in certain specific circumstances, namely: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, health or personal safety of the whole or part of the population; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). The Committee therefore requests the Government to amend sections 458 et seq. of the draft text of the Labour Code as indicated above.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Section 211 of the Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 211 of the Labour Code that is currently in force provides for the possibility for the personnel of public services, enterprises and establishments that are not governed by specific conditions of service to conclude collective agreements. The Committee requested the Government to: (i) provide a list of public services and establishments that are not governed by specific legislative or regulatory conditions of service; (ii) specify whether the public servants in public establishments governed by such conditions of service can participate in genuine mechanisms for the collective bargaining of their terms and conditions of work and employment; and (iii) indicate whether the provisions of section 211 are affected by the text of the draft Labour Code. Noting that section 255 of the draft text of the Labour Code takes up the provisions of section 211 in identical terms, and in the absence of information provided by the Government on this point, the Committee requests the Government to indicate, on the one hand, the list of public services and establishments that are not governed by specific legislative or regulatory conditions of service and, on the other, whether, in law or practice, public servants who are governed by such conditions of service can participate in genuine mechanisms for the collective bargaining of their terms and conditions of work and employment.

The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the provisions referred to above are amended as indicated so that the Labour Code that is adopted is in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chile

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

In its previous comment, the Committee noted serious allegations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and by the Single Central Organization of Workers of Chile (CUT) in 2020, which included the violent repression of the protest against an anti-union reform, as well as the detention of trade union leaders and the death of a trade union leader of artisanal fishers (challenging the official version of suicide as the cause of death). The Committee regrets to note that the Government has sent no comments in this regard, and has likewise provided no comments in relation to the many observations made by the social partners in 2016 and 2019. The Committee again requests the Government to provide its comments without delay.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative matters. In its previous comment the Committee reiterated its hope that the Government would take the necessary measures as soon as possible to bring the following provisions into conformity with the Convention:

- article 23 of the Political Constitution, which provides that the holding of trade union office is incompatible with active membership of a political party and that the law shall establish penalties for trade union officials who engage in party political activities;
- section 48 of Act No. 19296, which establishes rules on associations of State administration officials and grants broad powers to the Directorate for Labour for the supervision of the accounts and financial assets and property of associations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that although the section has not been amended, the Directorate for Labour issued several opinions between 2015 and 2022, in which it emphasized that it is not for it to supervise the financial administration of associations, but for the associations themselves to perform that task. The Government stresses that the doctrine of the Directorate of Labour is consistent with the principles of freedom of association and leaves it to organizations to control their own accounts, financial assets and property;
- section 11 of Act No. 12927 on the internal security of the State, which provides that an interruption or strike in certain services may be penalized with imprisonment or banishment, and the amendment of section 254 of the Penal Code, which establishes criminal penalties in the event of the interruption of public services or public utilities or dereliction of duty by public employees. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that these provisions have not been applied. The Committee also recalls that on previous occasions, the Government indicated that no penal sanction should be imposed on a worker for participating peacefully in a strike, which is merely the exercise of an essential right.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's indications that some provisions have not been applied in practice as written, but emphasizing the importance of legal certainty on these subjects, the Committee hopes that the Government will not delay in taking the necessary measures to bring the provisions mentioned into conformity with the Convention and requests it to report thereon.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Exclusion from strike action of enterprises declared to be strategic. Section 362 of the Labour Code, under the heading of the determination of enterprises in which the right to strike may not be exercised, provides that a strike may not be called for workers providing services in corporations or enterprises, irrespective of their nature, purpose or function, which provide services of public utility or the cessation of which would cause serious damage to health, the national economy, the supply of goods to the population or to national security. The Committee observed that this definition of enterprises in which the right to strike cannot be exercised, renewed every two years and approved jointly by various ministries and subject to appeal before the Court of Appeal, potentially covers services which go beyond the definition of essential services in the strict sense of the term (those the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population). The Committee noted that the concepts of public utility and of damage to the economy are broader than that of essential services, observing that “services of public utility” are already covered by the system of minimum services established in section 359, which is distinct from the concept of essential services in the strict sense of the term. While reiterating that section 362 of the Labour Code should be amended to ensure that the prohibition of the right to strike can only cover essential services in the strict sense of the term, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of this section. The Committee notes that the Government provides a copy of the list, published in 2021, of public enterprises the workers of which are not able to exercise the right to strike, under section 362 of the Labour Code. The Government also cites a ruling of the Santiago Court of Appeal from 2017 which upheld a claim lodged by a trade union and ordered the removal of an enterprise from the list, thereby allowing the workers of that enterprise to exercise the right to strike. The Government also indicates that the Office of the Comptroller General of the Republic has reached similar conclusions in its opinions. The Committee takes due note of this information and also observes that it has received no new observations that refer to complaints submitted in relation to the list of enterprises in which workers are excluded from the right to strike. In light of the above, and reiterating once more the need to amend section 362 of the Labour Code to ensure that the prohibition of the right to strike can only cover essential services in the strict sense of the term, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of this section, specifying the categories of services provided by the enterprises excluded from the exercise of the right to strike, and the treatment of the complaints submitted in this regard. The Committee also recalls once more that, without calling into question the right to strike of the large majority of workers, a negotiated minimum service may be established for public services of fundamental importance that are not essential services in the strict sense of the term.

Replacement of workers. The Committee noted that although the Labour Code contains a provision prohibiting the replacement of striking workers, as well as sanctions in the event of such a replacement (sections 345, 403 and 407), other provisions could undermine or introduce uncertainty into such prohibition to replace striking workers. The General Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CGTP) previously referred to the possibility envisaged in section 306 of the Labour Code for an enterprise that has subcontracted work or services to another enterprise to carry out directly or through a third party the subcontracted work or services interrupted due to a strike. The Committee requested the Government to provide further information on the above-mentioned sections. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, between January 2019 and June 2023, a total of 272 complaints of strike replacement were lodged with the Directorate for Labour and that these resulted in 268 inspections of enterprises. The Committee also observes, according to the information provided by the Government in relation to the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Directorate for Labour maintains a register of convictions for anti-union or unfair practices and publishes a list of offending enterprises and trade union organizations every six months. The Committee notes that, according to this register, between the second half of 2020 and the first quarter of 2023, the fines applied in cases of replacement of striking workers varied from 20 to 120 Monthly Tax Units (approximately equivalent to US$1,400 to US$8,800). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on violations of the law prohibiting replacement of striking workers, the penalties applied in these cases, and on the impact of the hiring of workers under section 306 on striking workers or services interrupted due to a strike.

Exercise of the right to strike beyond the framework of regulated collective bargaining. The Committee noted that, in general terms, the exercise of the right to strike is regulated within the framework of regulated collective bargaining. It also recalled that the Committee on Freedom of Association: (i) given that existing legislation does not permit strike action outside the context of the collective bargaining process, requested the Government, in consultation with workers' and employers' organizations, to take all necessary steps to amend the legislation in line with the principles of freedom of association (367th Report, March 2013, Case No. 2814), and (ii) recalling the principle that the occupational and economic interests that workers defend through the right to strike do not only concern better working conditions or collective claims of an occupational nature, but also the seeking of solutions to economic and social policy questions and problems facing the enterprise which are of direct concern to the workers, requested the Government to take all the necessary measures, including legislative measures if necessary, to uphold this principle (371st Report, March 2014, Case No. 2963). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee notes that the Government indicates, with court rulings in support, that it cannot be maintained that the right to strike outside the framework of collective bargaining is prohibited, to the extent that it is an essential right, and as such requires a specific rule for its general limitation, which the national legislation does not provide. While taking note of these indications, the Committee reminds the Government of the need to adopt measures in relation to the Committee on Freedom of Association's recommendations cited above. The Committee once again requests the Government to report on all measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not responded to multiple observations from the social partners regarding the application of the Convention in law and practice sent in 2016, 2019 and 2020. The Committee again requests the Government to transmit its comments without delay.

Article 1 of the Convention. Anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee noted assertions from trade union organizations that the system of protection against anti-union discrimination is still ineffective and not dissuasive (indicating, for example, that the maximum penalty of 300 monthly tax units is not dissuasive for a multinational enterprise). In light of the above, the Committee invited the Government to engage in dialogue with the most representative organizations on the evaluation of the system of protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between July 2019 and June 2023, 3463 complaints of unfair and anti-union practices were lodged with the Directorate for Labour, of which 520 were for obstructing the formation or functioning of trade unions, applying pressure through threatening the loss of employment or benefits; 378 complaints for failing to give agreed employment to a trade union leader; 344 for unlawful dismissal of workers covered by trade union immunity; and 335 for acts of interference. The Committee notes that the Directorate for Labour maintains a register of convictions for unfair or anti-union practices and publishes the list of enterprises and trade union organizations convicted of infringements twice yearly. It observes that, according to the register, between the second half of 2020 and the first quarter of 2023, fines were imposed on nearly 100 enterprises. The fines varied from between 5 and 920 Monthly Tax Units (approximately equal to US$367 and US$67,000), and the highest penalty was imposed on one single occasion on an enterprise for unfair practices in collective bargaining. With respect to the request to the Government to engage in dialogue with the most representative organizations on the evaluation of the system of protection against anti-union discrimination, the Government indicates that Department for Social Dialogue of the Undersecretariat of Labour administers the Trade Union and Cooperative Labour Relations Fund, established by Act 20940, the aim of which is to finance projects, programmes and activities in respect of trade union training, promotion of social dialogue and the development of cooperative labour relations between employers and workers, including a programme designed for trade union leaders conducted in 2023. The Government also indicates that since 2006, the Department of Social Dialogue has been implementing the “Mesas de Diálogo Social” (Social Dialogue Roundtables) programme, in which the representatives of workers and employers take up issues related to employment and labour relations. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistical information related to acts of trade union discrimination denounced to the authorities. While encouraging any initiative aimed at strengthening social dialogue, the Committee requests that the Government, within the framework of the existing spaces for social dialogue, take up in a direct and effective manner, the concerns expressed previously by the trade union organizations as well as any other concern related to existing protection systems against trade union discrimination.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Workers’ organizations and negotiating groups. The Committee noted that: (i) in a ruling of 2016, the Constitutional Court found that it would be unconstitutional to provide that workers can only negotiate through unions, considering that, in accordance with the Chilean Constitution, collective bargaining is the right of each and every worker; (ii) the Directorate for Labour issued Opinion No. 3938/33 of 2018, indicating that agreements concluded by negotiating groups (groups of non-unionized workers coming together for the purpose of bargaining) constitute collective agreements recognized by the Labour Code; and (iii) while an appeal for protection against the opinion was upheld by the Santiago Court of Appeal, the ruling was subsequently overturned by the Supreme Court. The Committee observed that negotiating groups are not defined in the Labour Code and recalled that it has always considered that direct negotiation between the enterprise and groups of workers, without organizing in parallel with workers’ organizations, where they exist, is not in accordance with the promotion of collective bargaining, as set out in Article 4 of the Convention, and that groups of workers should only be able to negotiate collective agreements or contracts where no such workers’ organizations exist. The Committee requested the Government to adopt, through social dialogue, measures that effectively recognize the fundamental role and the prerogatives of representative organizations of workers and of their representatives and establish mechanisms to prevent the involvement of a negotiating group in collective bargaining from undermining the function of workers’ organizations or weakening the exercise of freedom of association.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that on 19 May 2022, the Directorate for Labour issued a statement modifying its interpretation of agreements concluded between employers and groups of workers coming together for the purpose of bargaining (negotiating groups), reconsidering its position as expressed in Opinion No. 2928/33 of 2018. The Government reports that under Opinion No. 810/15, the Directorate for Labour determined that: (i) negotiating groups, being entities that are not prohibited by law, may only undertake negotiation procedures of an atypical nature, since there are no legal rules in place to govern such negotiation; (ii) in so far as no regulatory procedure exists in the law, the Directorate for Labour cannot determine a procedure, nor give the agreements signed by these groups the value of collective instruments; (iii) these agreements are not collective instruments regulated by the Labour Code, and thus cannot have the legal effects the Labour Code ascribes to collective instruments concluded within the framework of regulated or non-regulated trade union collective bargaining; and (iv) neither can the agreements concluded with a negotiating group be the subject of an extension of benefits agreement, either through a unilateral extension by the employer, nor by agreement between the parties, since they do not meet the requirements of section 322 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes this opinion with interest and observes that, in the Opinion, the Directorate for Labour indicates that it considered it appropriate to issue a statement, both to resolve the issues that had been raised, and to bring its interpretation of the matter more closely into compliance with the provisions of the Convention, as with the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), which are binding for the Chilean State. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government highlights how the different trade union training programmes that are ongoing in the country contribute to the promotion of collective bargaining and that Act No. 20.940 enables the workers and employers of micro, small and medium-sized enterprises to request that the Directorate for Labour convene a technical assistance meeting on conducting collective bargaining. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures that contribute to promoting collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention. It requests the Government to report on the impact of the Opinion on collective bargaining and hopes that the Opinion will contribute to the recognition of the fundamental role of trade union organizations in collective bargaining. The Committee also requests the Government, by making use of statistical information on the registration of collective agreements with the labour inspection, to adopt measures to ensure that the involvement of negotiating groups in collective bargaining does not undermine the function of workers' organizations or weaken the exercise of freedom of association. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, as well as the sectors affected, and the number of workers covered by these agreements. Further noting from the statistical data provided by the Government, that almost 90 per cent of the collective instruments signed between July 2019 and June 2023 were concluded by a category of negotiating entity denominated as "other type of negotiating entity", the Committee requests the Government to provide details on the types of entities included in this category.

Enterprises financed by the State. The Committee observed that section 304 of the Labour Code does not allow collective bargaining in State enterprises dependent on the Ministry of National Defence, or which are connected to the Government through this Ministry, and in enterprises in which it is prohibited by special laws, or in public or private enterprises or institutions in which the State has financed 50 per cent or more of the budget in either of the last two calendar years, either directly or through duties or taxes. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that on 14 July 2023, the Directorate for Labour issued Opinion No. 995/30, reconsidering the doctrine laid down in 2019 regarding section 304 of the Labour Code, extending the capacity to bargain collectively to the workers to whom that section refers. The Committee observes that the Opinion refers expressly to the comments that the Committee has been formulating and, among other matters, indicates that: (i) the previous doctrine had not established any limit to the prohibition imposed in that section, enabling its application on the sole basis of the financing in question, disregarding any question of its origin, thereby depriving a large number of workers of their fundamental right to bargain collectively and to take strike action, which are essential parts of freedom of association; (ii) the prohibition to bargain collectively provided under section 304 of the Labour Code is exclusively applicable to public or private enterprises in which the State has financed 50 per cent or more of the budget in either of the two last calendar years, that is, a disbursement expressly established in the National Budget Act and not subject to any modality; (iii) the prohibition is not applicable to enterprises or institutions providing goods to the State through the award of State contracts (public tenders or framework and direct negotiation agreements), and (iv) resources transferred to a higher education institution to finance free education (student benefits) are not included under section 304 of the Labour Code, likewise, subsidized education establishments are exempted from the prohibition to negotiate, as are the benefactors of such institutions. The Committee also observes that the Opinion in question indicates that the reasoning applied has been taken into case law jurisprudence, and cites the example of a 2022 ruling by the Appeal Court of Santiago which emphasized that indirect financing is outside the scope of the exclusion provided under section 304 of the Labour Code, when it results from the award of projects and the conclusion of agreements in which the receipt of financing is conditional on effective execution of the contractual considerations. The Committee notes this Opinion with interest, since it seeks, through a restrictive interpretation of section 304, to limit the categories of workers excluded from the right of collective bargaining as a result of that provision. The Committee requests the Government to report on the impact of the interpretation in question on the exercise of the right to bargain collectively. However, recalling that under Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention, only the armed forces and the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from collective bargaining, the Committee reiterates that it is necessary for the Government to take measures to revise section 304 of the Labour Code to ensure that all categories of workers covered by the Convention are able to take part in collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to report on the measures taken in this respect.

Article 6. Scope of application of the Convention. Public employees not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which public servants and employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State enjoy the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee observes that, in its report regarding the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), the Government indicates that although collective bargaining is expressly prohibited for the public sector, in practice associations of public sector officials have periodically entered into negotiations with the Executive and an agreement on adjustments to the wages of workers in that sector was concluded in December 2022. The Committee refers to its comments regarding Convention No. 151 and invites the Government to consider adopting the necessary legislative reform to ensure a stable legislative framework for collective bargaining. The Committee also requests the Government to provide details regarding the application of the guarantees provided by the Convention to public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

China

Hong Kong Special Administrative Region

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (notification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 and the reply of the Government of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) of the People's Republic of China thereon, as well as the observations of Education International (EI), received on 31 August 2023, and the joint observations of the ITUC and the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) received on 27 September 2023, which refer to issues examined by the Committee in the present comment. It also notes the Government's reply to the observations made by the ITUC in 2021.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee notes that in their 2022 and 2023 observations, the ITUC, the ITF and the EI continue to denounce an acute decline in the respect for civil liberties and freedom of association, with independent trade unionists being targets of arbitrary arrests, surveillance and judicial prosecution. In particular, they allege: (i) the conviction of Mr Lee Cheuk Yan in 2022, for ten offences in relation to public protests in his capacity as General Secretary of the now disbanded Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) and his ongoing prosecution for acts done in his capacity as the Chair of the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of the Patriotic Democratic Movement in Beijing (HK Alliance); (ii) the conviction, in September 2022, to 19 months of imprisonment of five executives of the General Union of Hong Kong Speech Therapists (GUHKST) in relation to a union publication of children's books with stories based on the pro-democratic protests of the healthcare workers in 2019 and 2020; (iii) continued detention since February 2021 and denial of bail of Ms Carol Ng, former Chairperson of the HKCTU, and re-arrest of Ms Winnie Yu, former Chairperson of the Hospital Authority Employees Alliance (HAEA) allegedly for violations of her bail conditions; (iv) pending trial of the 47 pro-democracy activists, including Ms Ng and Ms Yu, arrested in connection with political party primary polls held in 2020, which is scheduled for November 2023; (v) the arrest of Ms Elizabeth Tang, the General Secretary of the International Domestic Workers' Federation and former Chief Executive of the HKCTU (she was released on bail in March 2023); (vi) the questioning by national security police of 13 trade union activists in March 2023; and (vii) arrest warrants issued against eight activists abroad, including the former Chief Executive of the HKCTU, Mr Mung Siu Tat Christopher (who is wanted by the Government on an award of HKD 1 million (equal to US$128,260)), for alleged crimes under the National Security Law (NSL). The ITUC and ITF further allege that the arrests of union leaders are often followed by arrests of other activists of their organizations, and that their release on bail is subject to stringent conditions, including obligations to regularly report to the police, the search of their homes and offices and the seizure of personal property, including travel documents, considerably limiting their union role. The Committee recalls in this respect that the arrest of Mr Lee Chuck Yan, Ms Carol Ng and Ms Winnie Yu, as well as of the five GUHKST leaders, are also being examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) (Case No. 3406), which urged the Government to take all appropriate measures to ensure that Mr Lee Cheuk Yan is not imprisoned for having exercised legitimate trade union activities and to ensure, in law and in practice, the full enjoyment of trade union rights (see 401st Report, March 2023, paragraph 322).

The Committee notes that, in its report and reply to the 2022 ITUC observations, the Government reiterates that the arrests of the above-mentioned union officials were unrelated to their position of union officials and that the appeals filed by some of the sentenced GUHKST officials were subsequently dropped. It reiterates that offences endangering national security are handled in accordance with the established procedures and in full compliance with due process, and that all law enforcement actions are based on evidence, strictly according to the law, without considering whether those concerned are trade unionists. The Government further reiterates previously provided information on legislative provisions that recognize the right to freedom of association and the right of trade unions to organize their activities and formulate their programmes, including the right to strike, but also points out the importance of respecting the law of the land in exercising the rights enshrined in the Convention. In particular, any act of protest or demonstration for which the police have not issued a notice of no objection, or in which violence or the threat of violence is used to express opinions, crosses the boundary of peaceful exercise of rights and enters the territory of unlawful activities, against which the police are obligated to take action. While taking due note of the Government's information on the legislative and procedural guarantees relating to the right to organize and the relevant civil liberties, the Committee observes with deep concern the reported continued decline of civil liberties and freedom of association, as a result of which, according to the ITUC and the ITF, independent trade union movement in Hong Kong is non-existent. The Committee recalls that the International Labour Conference 1970 resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties, emphasizes that the rights conferred upon workers' and employers' organizations must be based on respect for civil liberties, as their absence removes all meaning from the concept of trade union rights. Further recalling the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights and emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against trade union leaders and members, the Committee firmly expects the Government to ensure full respect of the above and urges it to provide its comments on the 2023 ITUC, ITF and EI observations, as well as full and detailed information on the outcome of all the proceedings along with copies of the relevant court judgments.

Articles 2, 3, 5 and 8 of the Convention. Application of the National Security Law. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide specific information on the application in practice of the NSL and on the public consultations that the Government indicated would provide clarity on the applicable legislative principles. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates information provided previously on the benefits of the NSL in achieving safety, security and stability and on the fact that the law emphasizes the protection and respect of human rights and adherence to rule of law values. The Government also maintains that all persons are obliged to observe the requirements under the law and shall not endanger national security or public safety, public order or the rights and freedoms of others. While further noting the awareness-raising activities organized by the Government to enhance the understanding of trade union officials, teachers and civil servants on the implementation of the NSL, the Committee regrets to note that, in spite of its request as well as the request made by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the CFA, no concrete consultations appear to have taken place with the social partners on the negative effects that the application of the NSL is alleged to have on the rights enshrined in the Convention.

The Committee further notes with concern the 2022 and 2023 observations of the ITUC, ITF and EI that the application of the NSL continues to result in the deregistration or disbanding of trade unions and the suppression of fundamental freedoms, and has been used to intimidate, harass, arrest, prosecute and convict trade unionists for alleged offences endangering national security. The allegations specifically refer to: (i) increased surveillance and harassment of independent trade unions, including sending inquiry letters, warning letters and summons to provide information (the Hong Kong White Collar (Administration and Clerical) Connect Union and the Hong Kong Financial Industry Employees General Union in December 2021; the Hong Kong Journalists Association (HKJA) in January 2022; the HKCTU in February and March 2022; its executives were arrested by the national security police following their failure to provide detailed information under the Societies Ordinance, and their personal property and trade union premises were searched and seized; the Environmental Education and Ecological Conservation Workers' Union and the Hong Kong Music Industry Union in March 2022; and the Accounting Bros' Sis Labour Union, the Construction Site Workers General Union, the Bar Bending Industry Workers Solidarity Union, the Catering and Hotels Industries Employees General Union, the New World First Bus Company Staff Union and the Citybus Limited Employees Union, all between January and August 2022); (ii) interference in trade union registration by requesting a pledge "not to endanger national security" or engage in activities "contrary to the interests of national security", as well as by inserting clauses on endangering national security in the Social Workers Registration Ordinance (SWRO) and similar initiatives for the Trade Union Ordinance (TUO); (iii) deregistration and forced dissolution of trade unions following State media anti-union campaigns, resulting in concerns about the safety of union members (the Hong Kong Professional Teacher Union in August 2020; the HKCTU in October 2021; the HKCTU Education Foundation in May 2022; the Hong Kong Journalists Association (HKJA), as well as some media under its control; and the Community Care and Nursing Home Workers General Union and the Confederation of Tertiary Institutes Staff Unions); (iv) invocation of section 10 of the TUO by the Registrar of Trade Unions, which can lead to cancellation of trade union registration (the Hong Kong White Collar (Administration and Clerical) Connect Union and the Hong Kong Financial Industry Employees General Union in December 2021 and the HKJA in January 2022); (v) particularly harsh surveillance and repression of the education community, including obligation to swear loyalty to the Government, investigations of professional misconduct and disciplinary sanctions, leading to an environment in which teachers can no longer engage in union activities without violence or intimidation; and (vi) other restrictions and violations of civil liberties (arrest of 260 persons and prosecution of 161 of them, including three unionists for offences endangering national security; pressure to cancel demonstrations (the Hong Kong Women Workers' Association); interrogation of HKCTU executives; freezing of bank accounts and assets; initiatives to impose stringent regulations on crowd-funding activities and to adopt further legislation regarding national security).

The Committee notes that, in its reply to the 2022 ITUC observations, the Government provides its comments on some of the above allegations. It asserts that the allegations are factually incorrect and that the isolated incidents referred to by the ITUC are associated with suspected unlawful activities not related to the exercise of trade union rights or relate to voluntary decisions of the trade unions concerned to initiate dissolution. The Committee notes in this regard that, based on the statistics supplied by the Government, as of 31 May 2023, there were 1,460 registered trade unions and federations in the country, which reflects a decline from the 1,541 registered unions in October 2021, according to Government information. Regarding the allegations of arrests and seizure of properties of union members, the Government indicates that legal sanctions are imposed only when a recipient fails to comply with a notice to provide information to the court with no valid explanation. Concerning the inclusion of a provision on national security in the TUO and the SWRO, the Government indicates that this reflects the seriousness of the offence and ensures that a person convicted of such offence temporarily loses their rights under the TUO or their registration as a social worker. It states that such offences shall include but are not limited to, "secession", "subversion", "terrorist activities" and "collusion with a foreign country or with external elements to endanger national security" stipulated in the NSL, and the offences of "treason" and "sedition" in the Crimes Ordinance. The Committee observes in this regard that the non-exhaustive formulation and broad scope of the provision could lead to arbitrary interpretation. Finally, the Government indicates that it has been carrying out relevant work in respect of its constitutional responsibility to enact legislation on section 23 of the Basic Law, including conducting legal research in relation to national security, and that it will take concrete measures to clearly explain the legislative principles to avoid misunderstandings.

The Committee understands from the above that, despite the Government's assurances that the NLS retains the protection of basic civil liberties and trade union rights, numerous instances of serious violations were reported by the ITUC and the ITF in relation to the application of this law, allegedly leading to a decline in civil liberties and trade union rights, in violation of the Convention. The Committee once again recalls that the principal objective of the Convention is to protect the autonomy and independence of workers' and employers' organizations in relation to the public authorities, both in their establishment and in their functioning and dissolution, and that the authorities should refrain from any interference which would restrict freedom of association and assembly or impede the lawful exercise thereof, provided that the exercise of these rights does not cause a serious and imminent threat to public order. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the NSL in practice and to monitor, together with the social partners, any negative effects it may have on the exercise of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee expects these to be assessed and adequately addressed, including in the framework of public consultations and publications referred to by the Government, and requests the Government to provide details in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information on the proposed amendments to include provisions relating to national security in the TUO and the SWRO and their application in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of trade unions dissolved or de-registered, voluntarily or otherwise, in the past seven years along with a detailed list of trade unionists who were prosecuted, arrested, or convicted by the authorities during the same time-period, along with the charges against them. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure, in law and in practice, the full enjoyment of the rights enshrined in the Convention.

Noting the ITUC and ITF's indication that the local legislation on national security under section 23 of the Basic Law will expire at the end of 2024 and that other legislation will be enacted to ensure the protection of national security, the Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (notification: 1997)

Previous comment

In its previous observation, the Committee requested the Government of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) of the People's Republic of China to provide its comments on the 2020 observations of the Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) (now disbanded) and the 2016 observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the HKCTU, denouncing violations of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2020 HKCTU observations but observes that it concerns matters examined within the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and does not address the allegations of violations of this Convention in practice. The Committee also notes with regret that the Government has still not provided any comments on the 2016 ITUC and HKCTU allegations. The Committee recalls that the pending observations on which it awaits the Government's reply concern: (i) the interdiction (suspension from duty) by the Civil Service Bureau of 42 regular and probationary civil servants, including trade union members for their suspected participation in unauthorized public protests in April 2020; (ii) transfer of Dr Lam Kuen, chairperson of the Hospital Authority Workers General Union in 2019; (iii) demotion of Michael Ngan, chairperson of the Union for New Civil Servants, from his position at the Department of Labour in June 2020; (iv) lack of prosecution of anti-union allegations in two enterprises in April and November 2015; and (v) non-recognition of trade unions, as well as refusal to bargain collectively in eight companies in 2016. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide its comments on the 2020 HKCTU's allegations of violations of the present Convention in practice, as well as on the 2016 observations from the ITUC and the HKCTU.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the amended Employment Ordinance (EO), which now allows the Labour Tribunal and the courts, in case of an unreasonable or unlawful dismissal (among others, dismissal by reason of exercising the right to trade union membership or participation in trade union activities), to make a compulsory order for reinstatement or re-engagement without having to secure the agreement of the employer. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate any allegations of anti-union discrimination and to impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Department of Labour conducts vigorous and prompt investigations into every complaint of suspected anti-union discrimination and, since its previous report, conducted criminal investigation into ten such cases, which did not lead to prosecution due to insufficient evidence to establish the relevant offences. The Government adds that, since the implementation of the amended EO, no order for reinstatement or re-engagement has been made by the courts or the Labour Tribunal. While taking note of the above, the Committee observes that despite regular allegations of anti-union practices reported by the unions, very few investigations seem to have taken place and none of those led to a decision favourable to the workers. Further observing the high standard of proof required in criminal proceedings, which may prevent any findings on anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether complaints of anti-union discrimination can also be dealt with outside of the criminal legal system. It further requests the Government to provide updated statistics on the number and nature of complaints of anti-union discrimination filed to the competent authorities, their follow-up and outcome, including any reinstatement ordered by the courts under the amended EO for anti-union practices.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that it has been pointing to the need to strengthen the collective bargaining framework in the country in light of the low levels of coverage of collective agreements and the absence of an institutional framework for trade union recognition and collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates information provided previously that: (i) collective bargaining must be voluntary and the community is sharply divided on whether to introduce compulsory collective bargaining by legislation (previously vetoed five times by the Legislative Council); (ii) voluntary collective bargaining underpinned by conciliation services of the Labour Department contributes to harmonious industrial relations; (iii) measures are taken at the enterprise and industry levels to promote communication and voluntary bargaining, including the industry-based tripartite committees; (iv) collective agreements were concluded in several sectors (previously enumerated); and (v) the Government does not keep statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and the number of workers covered. The Committee observes that no concrete measures were taken to address its previous concerns as to the lack of an institutional framework for trade union recognition and collective bargaining (scope, protection and enforcement) and recalls once again, that establishing such a framework and administrative structure to which the parties may have recourse, on a voluntary basis and by mutual agreement, does not lead to compulsory bargaining but can facilitate the conclusion of collective agreements under the best possible conditions. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to seriously consider taking measures, including of a legislative nature, to strengthen the legislative framework for collective bargaining so as to encourage and promote free and voluntary collective bargaining in good faith between trade unions and employers and their organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded, the sectors to which they apply and the number of workers covered.

Article 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers and employees in public enterprises, enjoy the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret the Government's reiteration that all civil servants are excluded from the application of the Convention and observes that no measures have been taken to address the Committee's prior comments in this respect. The Committee must recall once again that a distinction should be made between, on the one hand, those civil servants who, by their functions, are directly employed in the administration of the State and may be excluded from the scope of the Convention (for instance public servants in government ministries and other comparable bodies, and ancillary staff) and, on the other hand, all other persons employed by the Government and other public entities (for instance employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, as well as air transport personnel) who should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government once again to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers and employees in public enterprises, enjoy the right to collective bargaining. The Committee expects the Government to genuinely endeavour to address this longstanding issue so as to ensure compliance with the Convention.

Macau Special Administrative Region

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (notification: 1999)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right to organize of all categories of workers. Right of organizations to organize their activities. In its previous comment, the Committee noted with regret that the draft Trade Union Law, which was meant to give effect to the right to organize and collective bargaining, has been pending adoption since 2005 and urged the Government to intensify its efforts to achieve consensus on the draft Law and to bring about its adoption in the near future. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it undertook a public consultation between 31 October and 14 December 2021 in order to collect information and inputs on the legislation from all sectors of the society; a preliminary draft of the Law was then prepared and submitted to the Standing Committee for Social Coordination for consultations by the social partners, and later submitted to the Legislative Council for deliberation. The law was passed on 16 January 2023 and is currently under detailed review. The Committee notes the Government's indications that further information will be provided in its next report and firmly expects that the Law will give full effect to the Convention and that a copy of the adopted legislation will be submitted with the Government's next report.

The Committee previously requested the Government to continue to provide information on developments regarding the adoption of legislative frameworks regulating rights of specific categories of workers, including part-time workers and seafarers, and to indicate whether these instruments include any provisions on the promotion and protection of the rights granted in the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no updated information with regard to the draft Part-Time Labour Relations Law or the Seafarers' Labour Relations Law and maintains that both legislations require comprehensive discussion in order to be adopted into law. The Committee once again notes the Government's reiteration that while these draft laws are specialized regulations to address the specific characteristics of labour relations in the above sectors, the basic regulations concerning these workers are contained in the Labour Relations Law and that workers in all industries, including seafarers and part-time workers, are entitled to freedom of association, organization, and the right to participate in trade union activities. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that any legislative frameworks regulating the rights of specific categories of workers will be in full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee takes note of Law No. 13/21 of 15 September 2021, setting out the General Rules on Security Forces and Security Services Personnel, section 98 of which, according to the Government, imposes certain restrictions on the exercise of the rights to freedom of association of the officers included within the scope of the legislation during their term of employment. The Committee observes that section 2 of the Law extends its application to certain categories of workers, including agents from the ranks of the Fire Brigade and the Customs Services. Recalling that the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention are members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the above-mentioned categories of employees upon whom restrictions are imposed have the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing and without previous authorization. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken to this end.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee welcomes the updated statistics provided by the Government on the number of trade unions and observes that by May 2023, there were 463 registered workers' organizations, which shows that, in comparison to the numbers of 2020, the number of registered worker-related associations continued to rise.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (notification: 1999)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the representative organizations of workers communicated with the Government's report while observing that the Government does not provide the names of these organizations. The Committee notes the Government's replies to previous observations from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC).

Legislative developments. The Committee previously recalled that while the Labour Relations Law adopted in 2008 contained some provisions that prohibit anti-union discrimination and provided sanctions for such acts, it did not include a chapter on the right to organize and collective bargaining, and that the draft Trade Union Law, which would give effect to these rights, had been pending adoption for fifteen years since 2005.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, subsequent to a public consultation undertaken in 2021, a draft law was passed in January 2023 by the Legislative Council after social partner consultations at the Standing Committee for Social Coordination. The Government indicates that the draft Trade Union Law is currently undergoing detailed review. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indications that owing to a lack of societal consensus during the public consultation, the draft law, as it is currently, does not accommodate the right to collective bargaining. Recalling that the legislation of the Trade Union Law has been a protracted process which has been ongoing for 18 years since 2005, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, whether through the Trade Union Law currently under review or otherwise, to ensure that collective bargaining rights as enshrined in the Convention are made explicitly available to all workers and employers without further delay. The Committee expects that the Government will provide, in its next report, specific information on the measures taken to ensure the adoption of a legislation that guarantees the right of collective bargaining to all workers under the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this respect.

The Committee also previously requested the Government to provide information on any developments regarding the adoption of legislative frameworks regulating the rights of seafarers and part-time workers and expressed the expectation that any such instruments would, in full conformity with the Convention, allow these categories of workers to exercise their right to organize and to bargain collectively. The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government and refers to its more detailed comments made under Convention No. 87.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. On several previous occasions, the Committee had noted that fines imposed by section 85(1)(2) of the Labour Relations Law for acts of discrimination against workers due to their union membership or the exercise of their rights might not be sufficiently dissuasive, particularly for large enterprises (from 20,000 to 50,000 patacas (MOP) which is equivalent to US$2,500–6,200). It also requested the Government to provide clarification on the use, if any, of sanctions provided for in the Penal Code, to which the Government made reference. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the draft Trade Union law would ensure the right of trade unions to organize and carry out trade union activities. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates its previous position on the issue that section 10(1) of the Labour Relations Law is applied for all illegal acts violating workers' rights, including any act by an employer to treat adversely or deter an employee in the exercise of their rights. The Committee observes that the penalty amounts in the provision remain constant and therefore, still appear to be insufficiently dissuasive, particularly for large enterprises. In light of the above, the Committee firmly requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to strengthen the pecuniary sanctions applicable to acts of anti-union discrimination in order to ensure their sufficiently dissuasive character. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

The Committee also previously noted the 2014 ITUC observations, that section 70 of the Labour Relations Law, which allows rescission of contract without just cause accompanied by compensation, was in practice used to punish union members when they take part in union activities or industrial actions, and requested the Government to take the necessary measures, including legislative, to ensure that this provision is not used for anti-union purposes. The Committee is bound to note that the Government has not elaborated on any measures taken to address the concerns raised by the ITUC in 2014. The Committee observes, based on the Government's indications in its current report and its supplementary report, that the Labour Affairs Bureau has received no complaints of anti-union dismissals between June 2019 and May 2023. Recalling once again that anti-union acts may not, in practice, always result in the filing of complaints to the competent authorities, the Committee firmly requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to ensure that section 70 of the Labour Relations Law on the termination of employment contracts is not used for anti-union purposes.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that sections 10 and 85 of the Labour Relations Law did not explicitly prohibit all acts of interference as described in Article 2 of the Convention or guarantee adequate protection by means of dissuasive sanctions and rapid and effective procedures. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the Basic Law of the Macau SAR and the Regulation on the Right to Association provide adequate protection against acts of interference. The Government indicates that the draft Trade Union Law, which is currently under review, prohibits persons from obstructing or restricting the trade union rights of others. The Committee expects that the Trade Union Law will include provisions that align with Article 2 of the Convention and specifically and adequately protect workers' and employers' organizations against all acts of interference, including by providing sufficiently dissuasive sanctions accompanied by rapid and effective procedures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee also previously requested the Government to provide statistical information on the functioning, in practice, of the Labour Affairs Bureau and the Labour Tribunal, including the number of cases of anti-union discrimination and interference brought before them, the duration of the proceedings and their outcome. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between June 2019 and May 2023, the Labour Affairs Bureau did not receive any complaints concerning any violation of trade union rights of employees. The Government adds that there were no Court judgements dealing with cases of anti-union discrimination and interference during this period. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the functioning, in practice, of the Labour Affairs Bureau, the Labour Tribunal and any Courts with regard to allegations of anti-union discrimination and interference brought before them, the duration of the proceedings and their outcome.

Articles 1, 2 and 6. Protection of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee previously observed that the General Provisions on the Personnel of the Public Administration did not contain any provisions against anti-union discrimination and interference and that the Government did not indicate any other specific provisions to this effect. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that the protection of civil servants against discrimination or interference in the exercise of their trade union rights is guaranteed. While noting the information provided by the Government on the protections afforded to ensure the participation of public servants in staff associations and other trade-union-like organizations, the Committee observes once again that it does not point to specific legislative provisions to this effect. In these circumstances, recalling that the scope of the Convention covers public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee once again firmly requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to explicitly prohibit acts of anti-union discrimination and interference and grant all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, adequate protection against such acts.

Articles 4 and 6. Absence in legislation of provisions on collective bargaining for the private sector and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to ensure the full application of Article 4 of the Convention both for the private sector and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, whether through the adoption of the draft Law on Fundamental Rights of Trade Unions or any other legislation. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indications that the draft Trade Union Law, as it has been drafted currently, does not ensure the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further notes, with respect to collective bargaining rights in the private sector, that the Government reiterates that it always conducts discussions and consultations with the social partners, either through the tripartite consultation platform of the Standing Committee for the Coordination of Social Affairs which has become an essential platform to communicate, negotiate and reach consensus and helps construct stable and harmonious employer–worker relations, or through the permanent consultation mechanism established by the Civil Service Pay Review Council to formulate standards and procedures for pay adjustment in the civil service. The Government further indicates that section 27 of the Basic Law and the Regulation on the Right to Association is currently implemented to ensure that all employees enjoy their right to freedom of association, assembly, organization, and demonstration. While taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee observes that there have been no measures taken to incorporate into law the right to collective bargaining for employees in the private sector and public servants not engaged in the administration of the state. Recalling once again that the Convention promotes bipartite negotiations of terms and conditions of employment and that the establishment of simple consultation procedures instead of real collective bargaining procedures is not sufficient, the Committee once again firmly requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the very near future to ensure the full application of Article 4 of the Convention both for the private sector and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, whether through the adoption of the draft Trade Union Law or any other legislation, and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee once again notes that the Government has not conducted any relevant statistical analysis on collective agreements concluded. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistics as to the number of collective agreements concluded, specifying the sectors concerned, their level and scope, as well as the number of enterprises and workers covered.

The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in order to address the different points raised in this observation.

Colombia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), received on 1 September 2023, and the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, as well as the corresponding comments by the Government. The Committee notes that these various observations refer to matters addressed by the Committee in the present comment, as well as allegations of violations of the Convention in practice.

The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 31 August 2021, on the discussions held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter Conference Committee) in relation to the application of the Convention in June 2021, and the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 1 September 2023, relating to matters addressed in the present comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 109th Session, May-June 2021)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Conference Committee in June 2021, in which it welcomed the efforts made by the Government for the application in law and practice of the Convention and the positive steps taken by the Government to address the situation of violence in the country, and encouraged the Government to continue to engage in measures to ensure a climate free from violence.

The Conference Committee requested the Government to ensure that the Standing Dialogue Forum for Collective Compensation for the Trade Union Movement was convened and worked to fully carry out its mandate.

Legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a process of legislative reform is being carried out, one of the objectives of which is to give full effect to the ILO Conventions that have been ratified. The Committee notes that the Government communicated the content of the draft legislation submitted to the Congress of the Republic on 24 August 2023. The Committee observes that the draft text that was submitted follows on from a first draft text referred to the Congress of the Republic in March 2023 and set aside in July 2023, on which the Office had made technical comments. The Committee refers first to the provisions of the draft text that are related to the points raised in its previous comments on the application of the Convention, before turning to the examination of other relevant aspects of the draft text.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee recalls that for many years, in the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association, it has been examining allegations of violence against trade unionists and the situation of impunity in this regard. The Committee notes, first, the information provided by the Government concerning 34 murders committed in 2018 and denounced by the ITUC in 2019, in relation to which it indicates that: there have been convictions in eight cases, and one acquittal; seven cases are before the courts; one is under investigation with the issue of an arrest warrant; eleven cases are under investigation; four cases have been shelved; one case has been referred to the indigenous justice system, and one case has been terminated due to a death. The Government adds that, between 2020 and 2023, the Office of the Public Prosecutor has reported 45 cases of murders of members of the trade union movement, in relation to which it indicates that: the sentences were handed down and are being implemented in four cases; six cases are before the courts; in seven cases, charges have been brought; six cases are under investigation with arrest warrants issued by the courts, while one case has been terminated due to the death of the suspect, which amounts to the facts being discovered in 53.33 per cent of the murders. The Committee also takes due note of the information provided by the Government on the strategies implemented by the Office of the Public Prosecutor for the effective investigation of murders, threats and other acts of anti-union violence. The Committee notes the emphasis placed by the Government on the complexity of managing investigations of criminal threats and the information provided on the action taken, including: the establishment in 2021 of a Threats Group in the Human Rights Department, which has ten prosecutors; the existence of a comprehensive strategy for threats against union leaders, with the active participation of a specialized prosecutor and coordination with the National Protection Unit; and the specific attention accorded by the Threats Group to cases involving the Colombian Federation of Education Workers (FECODE), with a prosecutor being detached and the development of a specific strategy.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the action taken by the National Protection Unit to guarantee the life and safety of trade union leaders and activists who are at risk through the Prevention and Protection Programme which, between 1 September 2020 and 14 May 2023 responded to the following number of requests: 1,100 in 2020, 726 in 2021, 1,196 in 2022 and 493 in 2023, making a total of 3,515. The National Protection Unit undertook 1,823 individual risk assessments of situations which were then classified as extraordinary, extreme and ordinary and took protection measures for around 300 beneficiaries a month, provided means of communication, protective vests, call buttons, protection personnel, conventional and armoured vehicles.

The Committee notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT denounce the persistence of stigmatization and violence against trade unionists. They allege that in 2022 there were 287 cases of anti-union violence, including 238 cases of threats, 33 cases of relocation, 29 murders, 16 cases of attacks with or without injuries, seven cases of harassment, five kidnappings and one disappearance. The unions report an increase of 46.68 per cent in reports of acts of anti-union violence in relation to 2021.

The Committee further notes the indications by the ITUC that in 2021 and 2022 there were 13 murders of trade unionists; six attempted murders; 99 death threats; and eight arbitrary detentions of trade unionists. The Committee notes the information provided by the ANDI indicating that the figures provided by the Government reflect the efforts carried out by the various institutions to make progress in the protection of union leaders and to combat impunity.

The Committee expresses deep concern at the persistence of so many murders and other acts of anti-union violence against members of the trade union movement in the country. The Committee notes the allegations by the trade union confederations of the frequency of acts of anti-union violence, particularly in the education sector.

While aware of the complexity of the challenges faced by the institutions responsible for criminal investigations and the considerable efforts made to maximize the effectiveness of the investigations, the Committee is nevertheless once again bound to note the absence of data on the number of convictions of the instigators of anti-union violence and it once again emphasizes in this regard the essential importance of the identification and conviction of the instigators of these crimes in order to break the cycle of anti-union violence.

While recognizing the significant action that the public authorities are continuing to take, the Committee urges the Government to continue strengthening its efforts and the resources allocated for the provision of adequate protection for all trade union leaders and members who are at risk, and for their organizations, with full attention and the necessary resources being directed at the sectors most affected by anti-union violence. While taking due note of the sentences handed down, the Committee also urges the Government to continue taking all the necessary measures to ensure that all acts of anti-union violence, including murders and other acts, that occur in the country are investigated and that the instigators and perpetrators are convicted. The Committee particularly hopes that all the necessary further measures will be taken and the necessary resources will be allocated to significantly improve the effectiveness of the investigations and criminal proceedings undertaken for the identification and punishment of the instigators of acts of anti-union violence. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on this subject.

Collective compensation measures for the trade union movement. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and the trade union confederations on the establishment of the Standing Dialogue Forum for Collective Compensation for the trade union movement. The Government indicates that the trade union movement is officially recognized as eligible for to receiving compensation and that this is a priority for the Government. The Committee also notes the observations of the trade union confederations, which consider that, despite the establishment of the Forum, there is insufficient pressure to ensure the real and comprehensive compensation of the trade union movement. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government and the trade union confederations and hopes that, in light of the acts of violence suffered by the trade union movement, measures of collective compensation will be adopted in practice. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Section 200 of the Penal Code. In previous comments, after noting the failure to impose penal sanctions for violations of this provision of the Penal Code, despite the very high number of complaints of criminal offences made since 2011, the Committee previously requested the Government to engage, together with the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the social partners, in an assessment of the effectiveness of section 200 of the Penal Code (which establishes penal sanctions for a series of acts that are contrary to freedom of association and collective bargaining) and its enforcement and to report the outcome and any action taken as a result.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, within the context of the Inter-institutional Human Rights Commission, on which workers' and employers' organizations and the Government are represented, information has been provided on the progress made in the investigations related to section 200 of the Penal Code. The Government indicates that between 2017 and March 2023, the Office of the Public Prosecutor received 1,279 referrals, of which 1,053 cases had the following outcomes: (i) four cases resulted in acquittals, each of which were appealed; (ii) 91 cases resulted in conciliation (conciliation takes place before a prosecutor or conciliator and if there is an agreement between the parties it has the effect of res judicata); (iii) 124 cases were not pursued (the Government indicates that in these cases there is usually a negotiated outcome between the worker and the enterprise); (iv) 624 cases were shelved (either due to the absence of a criminal act or because the complainant had no legal standing); (v) 210 cases were terminated for other reasons; and (vi) 226 cases are still active, of which 160 are at the pre-trial stage, 62 are under investigation and four are currently before the courts.

The Government also indicates the following action undertaken during 2022 in relation to section 200 of the Penal Code: (i) capacity-building through specific training courses for prosecutors and investigators; (ii) the development of a “Schedule for the investigation and criminalization of the crime of violating the rights of assembly and association”; (iii) action to promote cases and support days for departmental units throughout the country; and (iv) support for the Office of the Public Prosecutor in 91 cases in which reconciliation was achieved between 2017 and 2023. The Government indicates that there are plans to continue strengthening investigations and disseminating the above Schedule.

The Committee also notes the observations of the trade union confederations, which indicate that: (i) the percentage of cases in which there is conciliation is very low in relation to the number of complaints lodged; (ii) over half of the cases have been shelved; (iii) in 26 per cent of the cases, prosecution was ended (which may also be due to the lack of investigations by the State); and (iv) all the active cases from 2021, 2022 and 2023 are at the investigation stage, without any significant progress or clear information from the Office of the Public Prosecutor, for which reason, despite the efforts reported by the Government to improve the action taken in relation to this type of crime, it is still ineffective.

In light of the foregoing, the Committee observes that, although progress has been made in dealing with a significant number of criminal actions for violations of section 200 of the Penal Code, it has still not been informed of any convictions, despite the very high number of criminal charges brought since 2011 under this section. In light of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government, together with the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the social partners, to engage in an exhaustive assessment of the criminal offence set out in section 200 of the Penal Code and its enforcement with a view to examining the possible need for legislative or institutional adjustments. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the findings of this assessment.

Articles 2 and 10 of the Convention. Trade union contracts. The Committee recalls that, in light of the allegations made by the trade unions, it has been examining the compatibility with the Convention of the legislation on trade union contracts, a concept under which one or more unions undertake to provide services or perform work through their members for one or more enterprises or employers’ organizations. After observing that the attribution to a workers’ union of the power of management and decision-making concerning the employment of its members is likely to generate a conflict of interest and may therefore endanger its capacity to fulfil the specific functions of trade unions to support and defend independently the claims of their members in relation to terms and conditions of employment and work, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) plan and conduct in the near future a detailed assessment of the use of trade union contracts, particularly in the health sector; and (ii) take the necessary measures, including legislative measures where necessary, to ensure that the concept of trade union contracts does not undermine the trade union rights of workers and is not used for purposes that are incompatible with Article 10 of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, in accordance with the commitments made to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and other institutions, the draft labour reform referred to the Congress of the Republic provides for the amendment of section 482 of the Substantive Labour Code to prohibit the conclusion of trade union contracts for the purpose of attributing to workers' organizations the implementation of works or services for third parties in exchange for payment.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: (i) 1,652 trade union contracts were concluded in 2020, 2,898 in 2021, 2,611 in 2022 and 1,385 between 1 January 2023 and 30 June 2023, making a total of 8,456 (of which 7,607 are in the health sector); (ii) through Decision No. 0345 of 20 February 2020, the Ministry of Labour adopted a policy to reinforce the capacity to identify unlawful labour mediation and other forms of contracts that are prejudicial to the rights of workers; and (iii) between 2020 and 2023, there were 24 administrative investigations into the undue use of trade union contracts.

The Committee notes that the trade union confederations, the CUT, CTC and CGT: (i) once again denounce the continued use of trade union contracts concluded by false unions as tools for the unlawful intermediation of work; (ii) indicate that, although the draft legislative reform prohibits the use of such contracts, the provision still has not been adopted; (iii) note that barely 1 per cent of the enterprises that have concluded trade union contracts have been subject to inspections by the Ministry of Labour, with only 24 investigations being opened; and (iv) emphasize the need to abolish trade union contracts, especially in sectors such as health and agriculture, where they allege the existence of serious forms of unlawful subcontracting.

The Committee also notes the observations of the ANDI, which indicates that trade union contracts are not in contravention of the provisions of the Convention and that they enable trade unions to maintain a constant dialogue with employers, have more members and generate more benefits for workers.

The Committee takes due note of the various elements set out above. The Committee notes in particular the persistent concern expressed by the three principal trade union confederations in the country concerning the effects of trade union contracts and regrets to note the low level of activities undertaken by the labour inspection services in this regard. In light of its previous comments on the risk of the use of trade union contracts undermining trade union activities and the protection of the trade union rights of workers, the Committee notes with interest that the draft labour reform currently before the Congress envisages the elimination of trade union contracts through an amendment to section 482 of the Substantive Labour Code. The Committee firmly expects that the current labour reform process will contribute to the elimination of the risks to trade union action arising out of the concept of trade union contracts. Observing that section 482 of the Substantive Labour Code currently continues to be in force, the Committee also urges the Government to ensure a significant increase in inspections focusing on the use of trade union contracts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Article 4. Judicial cancellation of trade union registration. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the reasons that could justify the application of the short procedural time limits set out in section 380(2) of the Substantive Labour Code in relation to the cancellation of trade union registration and also the extent to which a work stoppage that is considered to be unlawful may constitute a reason for the dissolution of a trade union.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the dissolution, liquidation or cancellation of the registration of a trade union is not an automatic outcome of a judicial ruling that a strike is unlawful; (ii) it is necessary to exhaust a judicial process in which the defendant enjoys the guarantees of the right to defence and due process; and (iii) the time limits set out in the law do not prejudice other procedures and are not in violation of the right of defence of the union, as the only difference in the summary procedure set out in section 380(2) of the Substantive Labour Code lies in the time limit to lodge an appeal and submit evidence, which is five days; and (iv) the draft labour reform proposes the amendment of section 450 of the Substantive Labour Code to prevent the participation of workers in a strike that has been declared unlawful from being grounds for the suspension or cancellation of the legal status of the union.

The Committee notes that the trade union confederations: (i) emphasize that actions leading to dissolution normally form part of strategies to undermine the right to organize; (ii) continue to consider that the time limits for the procedure are too short to be able to exercise the right of defence of trade unions; and (iii) after describing two specific situations of dissolution processes, insist on the need to review the judicial procedure for the cancellation of trade union registration.

The Committee takes due note of the various elements indicated. Recalling once again that the cancellation of trade union registration constitutes an extreme form of interference that must be confined to serious violations of the law after exhausting other less drastic means of action for the organization as a whole and that it is important for such measures to be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees that can only be ensured by normal judicial procedures, the Committee notes with interest that the proposed legislative reform envisages the amendment of section 450 of the Substantive Labour Code to eliminate participation in a strike which has been declared unlawful being a reason for the suspension or cancellation of the legal status of a union. The Committee invites the Government to consider, during the discussion of the reform of the labour legislation, the inclusion of the possibility of extending the time limits to lodge an appeal and provide evidence under section 380(2) of the Substantive Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Articles 3 and 6. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it requested the Government to: (i) revise the legislative provisions on the right to strike in essential services; and (ii) take the necessary measures to amend section 417 of the Substantive Labour Code, which prohibits the right to strike of federations and confederations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft labour reform submitted to the Congress of the Republic envisages: (i) the amendment of section 430 of the Substantive Labour Code, under the terms of which services would be considered essential which, in the discharge of their functions, are so considered by the supervisory bodies of the ILO, as being services the interruption of which, in the strict sense, would endanger the life, safety or health of the whole or part of the population; and (ii) the amendment of section 417 of the Substantive Labour Code to eliminate the prohibition of the exercise of the right to strike by federations and confederations.

The Committee also notes the observations on this subject of the trade union confederations indicating that the restrictions continue to be applied to the right to strike by employers and judicial personnel who are unaware of legal precedents that give broader recognition to the right to strike. The Committee also notes that the ANDI, after reiterating its view that the right to strike is not covered by the Convention, once again expresses the view that Colombia has defined the subject of essential services in its legislation, which the high courts of the country have reviewed and consider to be in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution and ILO Conventions on this subject.

The Committee takes due note of these various views. The Committee also recalls that in previous comments it noted that both the Constitutional Court, in relation to the oil sector, and the Supreme Court, with regard to the various services defined as essential in the legislation, have called for a revision of the legislation to better limit the restrictions imposed on the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee notes with interest that the proposed legislative reform submitted to the Congress envisages the amendment of sections 417 and 430 of the Substantive Labour Code with a view to ensuring conformity of the legislation with the Convention. The Committee expects that the reform, once adopted, will take fully into account the longstanding comments that it has been making on this subject. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Legislative reform. Additional aspects of the draft legislation. In addition to welcoming, as emphasized in the previous paragraphs, the various provisions of the draft legislation which address a series of specific comments made for many years by the Committee, it also notes with interest other provisions intended to broaden the scope and reinforce the application of the rights set out in this Convention. The Committee notes in particular in this regard: (i) the proposal to amend section 352(a) of the Substantive Labour Code so that the second part of the Code applies to all men and women workers, irrespective of their contractual status; (ii) the proposal to amend section 354 of the Substantive Labour Code to recognize a series of facilities for the exercise of trade union representational activities; (iii) the proposal to amend section 356 of the Substantive Labour Code to envisage an open list of categories of trade unions in accordance with the principle of trade union autonomy; (iv) the proposal to amend section 391(a) of the Substantive Labour Code, which envisages greater independence for trade unions to establish sections and chapters; and (v) the proposal to amend section 430 of the Substantive Labour Code which envisages the determination by the parties of agreed minimum services in the event of a strike in essential services, as well as their determination by an independent committee in the event of disagreement among the parties.

However, the Committee considers that, with a view to ensuring its full conformity with the Convention, the proposed amendment to section 448(3) of the Substantive Labour Code should be reviewed so that, even in the case of a strike movement supported by a majority of workers of the enterprise, the freedom to work of non-strikers is protected.

With regard to the provisions of the Bill on protection against anti-union discrimination and the promotion of collective bargaining, the Committee refers to its comments on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Draft legislation and tripartite consultation. While noting the information provided by the Government on the dialogue pursued with the social partners on the current draft legislative reform, the Committee notes that the ANDI, in its observations, alleges the absence of genuine consultations on the contents of the two Bills submitted to the Congress by the Government in March (a Bill which was eventually set aside in July 2023) and August 2023. The Committee recalls the need for all draft legislation which affects the interests of employers' and workers' organizations and their members to be subject to full consultation with them and emphasizes the special importance of such consultations for draft legislation respecting collective labour relations. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure the full consultation of representative social partners on the draft legislative reform so that their legitimate interests and concerns are duly taken into consideration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

The Committee trusts that, taking duly into account the indications provided in the previous paragraph on tripartite consultation, the legislative reform process will make it possible to address the comments that it has been making for a long time in relation to the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls the availability of the Office to provide any assistance that may be considered relevant in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

The Committee notes: (i) the observations of the National Union of Workers in Enterprises, Operators, Subcontractors of Services and other Activities in the Oil, Petrochemical and Allied Industries (SINDISPETROL), received on 9 June 2023; (ii) the joint observations of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT), the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), received on 1 September 2023; and (iii) the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 1 September 2023. All of these observations refer to matters addressed by the Committee in the present comment.

Legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a process of legislative reform is currently being undertaken, one of the objectives of which is to ensure the full application of ratified ILO Conventions. The Committee notes the communication by the Government of the contents of the draft reform that was submitted to the Congress of the Republic on 24 August 2023. The Committee notes that the draft reform follows up on a first draft submitted to the Congress of the Republic in March 2023 and shelved in July 2023, on which the Office had made technical comments. The Committee refers first to the provisions of the draft reform that are related to the points raised in its previous comments on the application of the Convention, before examining other relevant aspects of the draft reform.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government, after consulting the social partners, to take the necessary measures, including through laws and regulations, to revise the procedures for the examination of administrative labour disputes in relation to freedom of association, on the one hand, and the judicial procedures concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, on the other.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of administrative disputes dealt with by the Ministry of Labour between 2018 and 2023, indicating that 518 disputes were filed, of which 195 are still active and 323 have been finalized. The Committee notes that the Government has also provided information on the number of administrative labour disputes dealt with by the various special offices and regional departments of the Ministry of Labour.

The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government concerning the investigations carried out under section 200 of the Penal Code, which the Committee is examining in the context of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee also notes that the trade union confederations: (i) denounce the fact that the measures adopted by the Government to accelerate judicial and administrative procedures relating to protection against anti-union discrimination are inadequate and that there is a high incidence of impunity; (ii) reiterate that the procedure under section 354 of the Substantive Labour Code respecting administrative labour disputes is excessively slow in practice; and (iii) allege that only 2 per cent of the administrative disputes lodged between 2018 and 2020 in relation to freedom of association resulted in the application of sanctions.

The Committee notes the various elements provided by the Government and the trade union confederations. The Committee observes, on the one hand, that the trade union confederations maintain their allegations concerning the excessive duration of procedures to deal with administrative labour disputes by the labour administration and, on the other, that the Government has not provided specific data on the cases of anti-union discrimination dealt with by the labour justice system.

However, the Committee observes that the draft legislative reform submitted to the Congress of the Republic on 24 August 2023 contains various provisions to broaden and strengthen protection against anti-union discrimination. In this regard, the Committee notes in particular that: (i) the proposals for the revision of sections 66 and 354 of the Substantive Labour Code establish specific protection for all workers, whether or not they are protected by trade union rights, against acts of anti-union discrimination, and provide for the reversal of the burden of proof in the event of allegations of discrimination and prohibit dismissal on discriminatory grounds; and (ii) section 66 of the draft reform provides for the establishment of a summary procedure for the protection of trade union rights in labour courts, including a shorter time frame and the possibility of ordering precautionary measures. The Committee notes these provisions with interest as they seek to address its previous comments on the need to revise judicial procedures in relation to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference to make them more effective.

The Committee hopes that, once it has been adopted, the current draft legislative reform will take into account its comments on the need to offer an effective and rapid judicial response to all acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to make the procedures more effective for dealing with administrative labour disputes relating to anti-union practices. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect and recalls that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Articles 2 and 4. Collective accords with non-unionized workers. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the conclusion of collective accords (pactos colectivos) with non-unionized workers is only possible in the absence of trade union organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft labour reform that is currently before the legislative body seeks to amend section 481 of the Substantive Labour Code and prohibit the conclusion of collective accords when unions are present at any level. The Government indicates that it has taken into account the views received from the Supreme Court of Justice, the ILO supervisory bodies, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Employment, Labour and Social Affairs Committee, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights Special Rapporteur on economic, social, cultural and environmental rights, the trade union confederations and employers' organizations, as well as the experiences of comparative labour reform in Spain, Mexico and Chile in the context of the Tripartite Reform Subcommission.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: between 1 July 2014 and 30 April 2023, a total of 1,626 collective agreements were concluded (signed with trade unions) and 4,149 collective accords (signed with non-unionized workers); including 73 collective agreements and 469 collective accords concluded in 2021, 470 collective accords and 232 collective agreements in 2022, and 106 collective accords and 56 collective agreements adopted between January and April 2023. In this regard, the Committee notes the contrasting figures provided by the ANDI, according to which, between 2015 and 2022, an annual average of 415 collective agreements and 99 collective accords were concluded, with 2022 seeing the highest number of agreements concluded (476).

The Committee further notes that: (i) the trade union confederations emphasize the need to eliminate the option of negotiating collective accords with non-unionized workers, as in practice the co-existence of collective accords and collective agreements gives rise to negative effects on collective bargaining, as emphasized by the Supreme Court of Justice in ruling SL-1309 of 2022; and (ii) the ANDI affirms that accords between non-unionized workers and the employer cannot be used to prevent union membership, or to create conditions that discriminate against workers who are members of trade unions, and that collective accords are one expression of freedom of association.

The Committee observes with interest that the draft amendment to section 481 of the Substantive Labour Code takes into account its request that the conclusion of collective accords with non-unionized workers should only be possible in the absence of trade unions. Recalling that the Convention recognizes in Article 4 as the parties to collective bargaining, on the one hand, employers or their organizations and, on the other, workers' organizations, the Committee hopes that the reform, once adopted, will take fully into account its longstanding observations concerning collective accords.

Article 4. Personal scope of collective bargaining. Apprentices. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the remuneration of apprentices is not excluded by law from the scope of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft labour reform seeks to amend section 81 of the Substantive Labour Code so that an apprenticeship contract is a labour contract, under which all labour rights are guaranteed, including remuneration. The Committee notes that the trade union confederations: (i) recognize the Government's intention to convert apprenticeship contracts into labour contracts in the draft labour reform; and (ii) indicate that section 30 of Act No. 789 of 2002 establishes the prohibition on maintenance support (the term for the remuneration received by apprentices) being regulated through collective agreements or contracts or arbitration awards issued in the context of collective bargaining. The Committee notes with interest the proposed changes to the apprenticeship contract indicated in the draft labour reform, which assume that apprentices are governed by the various provisions of the Substantive Labour Code, including those respecting collective bargaining. The Committee also observes that, since it made its previous comment, the Quality Apprenticeships Recommendation, 2023 (No. 208), has been adopted, Paragraph 16(g) of which indicates that States should take measures to ensure that apprentices are afforded freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the reform, once it has been adopted, will take fully into account its longstanding observations concerning the right of apprentices to collective bargaining, including on their remuneration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Subjects covered by collective bargaining. Pensions. The Committee notes the observations of SINDISPETROL concerning the amendment of Article 48 of the Constitution of Colombia by Legislative Act No. 1 of 2005, the purpose of which was to extend and consolidate the General Pension System and to phase out special company pension schemes created by collective agreement. The Committee recalls that, in the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2434, it has on various occasions expressed its views concerning the impact of that reform on the application of the present Convention and on the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154).

In this respect, the Committee recalls that in its comments on these two Conventions, it: (i) noted the respect for the acquired rights of workers who fully met the conditions for conventional retirement pensions on 31 July 2010, and asked the Government to clarify whether the trade unions which signed collective agreements prior to 31 July 2010 could conclude agreements containing provisions to take account of the situation of workers who only partially met the conditions for access to pension under the collective agreement, in particular if the contributions paid were higher than those under the current scheme; and (ii) requested information on the application in practice of the possibility to conclude collective agreements and, within the context of the General Pensions System, supplementary pension benefits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) under the case law of the Constitutional Court relating to Legislative Act No. 1 of 2005, it is not possible to conclude agreements to take account of the situation of workers who only partially met the conditions for access to pension under the collective agreement; (ii) it has no information on collective agreements containing clauses relating to supplementary pension benefits; and (iii) the applicable law does, however, provide that collective agreements may envisage supplementary pension benefits, in view of the legal authorization contained in Act No. 100 of 1993. The Committee also notes the view of the trade union confederations that the constitutional prohibition set out in Legislative Act No. 1 of 2005 does not prevent the improvement of statutory benefits through supplementary benefits. Further, the Committee notes the comments provided by ANDI reaffirming that Legislative Act No. 1 of 2005 is in line with the Convention, in both its wording and its spirit. The Committee notes the different views expressed in this regard. Concerning the situation of workers who only partially met the conditions for access to pension under their company collective agreement on 31 July 2010, stressing the importance of respecting as far as possible the commitments made through collective agreements, the Committee requests the Government to indicate precisely the situation and destination of employer and employee pension contributions paid under collective agreements but which have not subsequently given rise to the allocation of company retirement pensions, particularly in cases where the contributions paid were higher than those under the current General Pension System. The Committee also once again requests the Government to: (i) provide detailed information on collective agreements which in practice provide for supplementary pension benefits within the parameters of the General Pensions System and in accordance with its provisions; and (ii) inform the social partners of this possibility when promoting collective bargaining.

Promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee notes with satisfaction the conclusion on 23 June 2023 of a new State Agreement with 35 trade unions benefiting around 1,300,000 public sector workers. The Committee notes the observations of the trade union confederations in this respect, which it is examining in the context of its comments on Convention No. 154.

Promotion of collective bargaining in the private sector. In its previous comments, noting the very low level of coverage of collective bargaining in the private sector, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) take measures, including legislative measures, for the effective promotion of collective bargaining in the private sector, especially at levels higher than the enterprise level; and (ii) provide detailed information on the coverage rate of collective bargaining in the private sector.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft labour reform seeks to add a new section to the Substantive Labour Code (section 467) to regulate collective agreements at the level of the branch or sector of activity, enterprise groups, the enterprise or any other level that the parties consider appropriate. The Committee also notes that the trade union confederations welcome this proposal. The Committee further notes the indication by ANDI that, according to studies by the Centre for Social and Labour Studies: (i) between 2006 and 2021, there was an annual increase in collective bargaining prior to the pandemic in 2020; (ii) in 2022, a total of 476 agreements were signed by enterprises and unions, which represents an increase on previous years, and more specifically in relation to 2014, when 328 agreements were concluded; and (iii) between 2015 and 2021, some 81 per cent of collective agreements were concluded in private sector enterprises.

The Committee notes these various elements, while observing that it has not been provided with information on developments in the coverage rate of collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it emphasized the importance of action to facilitate collective bargaining at levels higher than the enterprise level in a context in which: (i) collective bargaining at the sectoral level, in contrast with enterprise bargaining, is not covered by a specific legislative framework and is almost non-existent in practice (with the exception of the banana sector in Urabá); and (ii) workers in small enterprises may have difficulty in gaining access to enterprise-level collective bargaining as they do not have enterprise unions, for the establishment of which a minimum of 25 members is required. In this context, the Committee notes with interest the inclusion of provisions in the draft labour reform intended to promote collective bargaining at all levels and to establish a legal framework for sectoral collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the reform, once it has been adopted, will take fully into account its longstanding comments on the need for effective measures to promote collective bargaining, especially at levels higher than the enterprise level. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on developments in the coverage rate of collective bargaining in the private sector.

Settlement of disputes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that 25 cases were referred in 2022 to the Committee for the Handling of Conflicts referred to the ILO (CETCOIT), of which:

(i) 22 cases are still pending; (ii) one case was closed with an agreement being reached; and (iii) two cases have been closed without an agreement being reached. The Government indicates that in 2023, the CETCOIT has received eight new cases approved by the Subcommittee for the Analysis of Cases and five further cases were carried forward as a follow-up to previous cases. The Government, as well as the trade union confederations and the ANDI, refer to the resignation of the CETCOIT facilitator at the end of 2022. The Government indicates that there is already a promising application that meets the required profile, the appointment of whom is pending. The Committee hopes that the appointment of the CETCOIT facilitator will take effect as soon as possible and that the pending cases will be examined without delay. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Legislative reform. Additional aspects of the draft legislation. In addition to welcoming, as indicated in the paragraphs above, the various provisions of the draft legislation that address a series of specific comments that the Committee has been making for many years, the Committee also notes with interest other provisions aimed at putting an end to imbalances in collective labour relations emphasized repeatedly by the social partners, the resolution of which would facilitate the effective application of the Convention. The Committee notes in particular that: (i) the provisions of the draft legislation which envisage the broadening and strengthening of protection against anti-union discrimination, especially in the case of workers not covered by trade union protection, are accompanied by others prohibiting trade union practices intended to abusively extend the personal or temporal scope of trade union protection (new subsections (d) and (e) of section 379 of the Substantive Labour Code); and (ii) it is planned to extend to the private sector the system of bargaining unity (the participation of several unions in a single negotiation in proportion to their level of representativity), which already exists in the public sector to channel and organize collective bargaining in a context of trade union pluralism (section 76 of the draft legislation).

The Committee refers to its comments on the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), in relation to the provisions of the draft legislation that are directly related to the content of that Convention.

Draft legislation and tripartite consultation. While noting the information provided by the Government on the dialogue pursued with the social partners on the current draft legislative reform, and the observations of the trade union confederations welcoming the content of the current draft legislative reform, the Committee notes that the ANDI alleges an absence of genuine consultations on the contents of the two Bills submitted to the Congress by the Government in March (a Bill which was eventually shelved in July 2023) and August 2023. The Committee recalls the need for all draft legislation which affects the interests of employers' and workers' organizations and their members to be subject to full consultation with them and emphasizes the special importance of such consultations for draft legislation respecting collective labour relations. The Committee therefore hopes that the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure the full consultation of representative social partners on the draft legislative reform to ensure that their legitimate interests and concerns are duly taken into consideration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

The Committee trusts that, taking duly into account the indications provided in the previous paragraph on tripartite consultation, the legislative reform process will make it possible to address the comments that it has been making for a long time in relation to the application of the Convention. The Committee recalls the availability of the Office to provide any assistance that may be considered relevant in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Comoros

(ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the Workers' Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 August 2017, relating to matters examined by the Committee in the present observation, and it requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee notes that, in response to the observations of the CTC in 2013, the Government indicates that the trade union leaders who had been dismissed have been reinstated. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the other matters raised by the CTC, and particularly the allegations of employer pressure against trade union leaders of the CTC, the Union of Health and Education Workers and a new trade union in a communications enterprise to persuade them to end their trade union activities.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining in the private and public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). In its previous comments, the Committee once again regretted the absence of progress in relation to collective bargaining which, according to the CTC, was not structured and had no framework at any level, and particularly that joint bodies in the public service had still not been established. The Committee notes that the CTC in its 2017 observations makes particular reference to decrees and implementing orders covering the Higher Council of the Public Service, the Joint Commission and the Medical Commission established to provide a framework for bargaining, but which have still not been signed following their preparation in 2015, thereby opening the way for regulations and measures which are not in conformity with the law to the prejudice of employees of the public service. While taking note of the request made by the Government in its report for technical assistance, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining in both the private and the public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Act of 28 June 2012 repealing, amending and supplementing certain provisions of Act No. 84-108/PR issuing the Labour Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) and the National Association of Nursing Professionals (ANPE) of 2020. The Committee also notes the joint detailed observations of the CTRN, the Costa Rican Confederation of Democratic Workers (CCTD), the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Central (CMTC), the General Confederation of Workers (CGT) and the Workers' Unitary Confederation (CUT), received on 1 September 2023 which, like those of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) transmitted by the Government with its report, concern issues that the Committee is examining in this observation, as well as in the direct request that accompanies this observation. The Committee further notes the detailed observations of the Unity in Trade Union Action (UAS), received on 31 October 2023, which also cover issues examined below. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Pending legislative issues. Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that for several years its comments have referred to the following issues:

- The need to amend section 344 of the Labour Code to establish a short, specific period for the administrative authority to reach a decision on the registration of trade unions, after which, in the absence of a decision, they are deemed to have obtained legal personality. The Committee notes that although the Government reiterates that this situation has been remedied in practice for more than a decade, it highlights its agreement to seek possible reforms and assistance in this matter. The Committee also notes that the trade union confederations highlight that there remains an urgent need to amend section 344 of the Labour Code since, in practice, the deadlines set forth in this provision extend by months, and this situation generates confusion among affiliates and compromises the worker-employer relationship, leading to employers taking advantage so as not to recognize the organization.
- The need to amend section 346(a) of the Labour Code, which requires the executive board of trade unions to be appointed every year. While the Committee notes that the Government has not provided information in this respect, it recalls that previously the Government indicated that the Register of Civil Organizations does not apply this provision and the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTSS), in practice, guarantees organizations full autonomy in determining the term of their executive boards. The Committee notes that the trade union confederations highlight that while it is true provisions of more subordinate law have resulted in the Department of Social Organizations of the MTSS accepting the registration of executive boards for a duration of more than one year, this does not entail legal certainty.
- The need to amend article 60(2) of the Constitution and section 345(e) of the Labour Code, which prohibit foreigners from holding office or exercising authority in trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while it understands and supports the Committee's request, the process of constitutional reform entails particular difficulties which have prevented progress in this respect to ensure the participation of foreigners in trade union office. The Committee notes that the trade union confederations highlight that it is unacceptable that the Government, due to a lack of political will, has not acted as necessary to present a reform or derogation of section 60(2) of the Constitution and of section 345(e) of the Labour Code. The trade union confederations also highlight that the migrant population constitutes 95 per cent of the working population in agro-industrial activities and the construction industry, and that they are all prevented from holding positions of management or authority in trade unions.

While regretting to note once again that no progress has been made in relation to the matters raised, the Committee takes due note that the Government highlights its agreement to seek possible reforms and assistance in some of these matters. Reiterating the need for the Government to take all necessary measures to amend the above-mentioned provisions of the Labour Code and the Constitution, as well as the practice of their application by the relevant authorities into conformity with the Convention, the Committee hopes that the Government will receive the assistance referred to and will take the measures requested as soon as possible. The Committee requests it to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the Workers' Union of Banco Popular (SIBANPO), the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), as well as the joint observations of the Juanito Mora Porras Trade Union Federation (CSJMP) and the National Association of Nursing Professionals (ANEP), sent in 2020. The Committee notes the joint observations of the CTRN and the Trade Union of JAPDEVA and related port workers (SINTRAJAP) received on 1 December 2022. The Committee also notes the joint and detailed observations of the CTRN, the Costa Rican Confederation of Democratic Workers (CCTD), the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Central (CMTC), the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), and the Workers' Unitary Confederation (CUT) received on 1 September 2023, concerning issues examined by the Committee in this comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) sent by the Government together with its report, as well as the detailed observations of the Unity in Trade Union Action (UAS) received on 31 October 2023, which address issues examined below.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The 2017 Act on reforming labour procedures introduced amendments with the objective of making judicial procedures relating to acts of anti-union discrimination more expeditious and effective, and the Committee noted that between 2017 and 2019, the procedures for these cases were before the administrative authorities for four months. The Committee requested the Government to continue sending statistics. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between 2019 and 2022, the inspection directorate examined a total of 14 cases of anti-union harassment or unfair labour practices. The Government further highlights that recently, with the support of the ILO, inspection guides were developed for dealing with complaints of unfair labour practices of an anti-union nature. With regard to legal proceedings, the Government indicates that in 2021, one case of appeal for dismissal of a trade union leader was examined and that in that same year the labour courts ruled on three cases of dismissal of trade union leaders in the private sector, procedures which lasted approximately 65 months, and two cases of trade union dismissal in the public sector, procedures which lasted approximately 77 months. While noting this information, the Committee observes that: (i) the Government has not provided any legal data on proceedings for 2022 and 2023, or on the content of the decisions adopted by the various competent authorities; and (ii) the average period before the rulings in the above-mentioned legal cases is especially long. The Committee further notes that the trade union confederations allege that anti-union acts in the pineapple and banana plantation sectors, domestic work and paid transportation of passengers are recurrent. Recalling the fundamental importance of ensuring flexible and effective protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide full information on the decisions adopted by the inspection directorate and the courts with regard to anti-union discrimination; (ii) indicate, in the context of the application of the Act on reforming labour procedures, the reasons why the legal proceedings are still so slow; and (iii) include detailed information on the sectors mentioned by the trade union confederations.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in the public sector. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the measures at its disposal to strengthen the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in addition to the collective agreements currently being negotiated: (i) 18 collective agreements are in force in the municipal sector and 15 are in the process of being approved; (ii) in the education sector, the collective agreement of the Ministry of Public Education is in force until 2024, and collective agreements of two universities are being approved; and (iii) four state enterprise collective agreements are in force in the banking, postal, electricity and fuel sectors, and another three are being approved in the banking, insurance and electricity sectors. The Government also indicates that, following a broad consultation process, which began in 2019, Framework Act No. 10159 on public employment was adopted and has been in force since 9 March 2023. The Government indicates that that Act seeks to regulate the statutory public employment and mixed employment relations between the Public Administration and public servants, in order to ensure efficiency and effectiveness in the provision of public goods and services, by establishing identical conditions of efficiency, position, working hours, conditions, and equal pay for equal work for public servants. The Government also indicates that even though, after two constitutionality consultations regarding the dossier based on which the Framework Act on public employment was enacted, the Constitutional Chamber ruled that there were no unconstitutional irregularities in the Bill, once the Act entered into force, several trade unions brought various claims of unconstitutionality which are pending resolution.

The Committee notes that the trade union confederations indicate that section 49 of Act No. 10159 sets forth that in the public sector collective bargaining may not be engaged in to make amendments or changes to the general wage scale, or to create new incentives, benefits or further expenditure. The confederations express their concern in this regard and underscore that this empties collective bargaining of its content. They also indicate that, as a corollary of this Act and the freezing of wage increases under Act No. 9635 on strengthening public finances of 2019, the Committee on Public Sector Wages, the only forum for collective wage bargaining, was disbanded. The confederations highlight that, when it examined the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), in June 2023, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards urged the Government to take measures to ensure that Act No. 9635 is fully aligned with the Convention and does not violate fundamental labour rights and principles.

The Committee notes that Framework Act No. 10159 on public employment only excludes from its scope of application non-state public bodies. The Committee expresses its concern at the impact of Act No. 9635 on strengthening public finances and Framework Act No. 10159 on public employment on collective bargaining of an economic nature in the public sector. The Committee notes that, while the Government indicates that Act No. 10159 reiterates the role that the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining play in the national legal system and that collective bargaining is not at risk in the country, the Act prohibits collective bargaining of an economic nature in the branches of the Republic (Executive, Legislative and Judicial), their offices and attached bodies and the Supreme Electoral Court; the decentralized institutional public sector comprising autonomous institutions and their attached bodies, including state universities, and the Costa Rican Social Security Fund; semi-autonomous institutions and their attached bodies and state public enterprises; the decentralized territorial public sector comprising municipalities, municipal district councils and their enterprises; as well as the competent public enterprises and institutions. The Committee once again recalls that all workers in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State shall enjoy the right to collective bargaining, including with respect to wages, and that while the special characteristics of the public service require some flexibility, there are mechanisms through which compliance with budgetary limitations and the principle of equality in public employment can be reconciled with the recognition of the right to collective bargaining. Based on the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures to revise Act No. 9635 on strengthening public finances and Framework Act No. 10159 on public employment to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State can exercise their right to collective bargaining on economic and wage matters in accordance with the Convention. While requesting the Government to report on the outcome of the above-mentioned claims of unconstitutionality, the Committee once again recalls the importance of taking measures to strengthen the right to collective bargaining in the public sector, such as those provided for in the Labour Relations (Public Service)

Convention, 1978 (No. 151) and the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), whose ratification the Committee has encouraged on previous occasions.

Direct agreements with non-unionized workers. Having noted that up to 2019 the number of direct agreements increased considerably in comparison to the number of collective agreements in the private sector, the Committee requested the Government to take all necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to step up the promotion of collective bargaining with trade union organizations within the meaning of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the inspection directorate issued circular No. 01304-20 which states that: (i) in cases where the Department of Trade Union Organizations establishes that a trade union or union section is registered in the enterprise, the signatories to the agreement and the representative of the union or union section must report, within five days, the total number of workers providing their services in the enterprise and the number of affiliated workers; and (ii) if the affiliation of workers to the trade union or union section is at least half plus one of the workers in the enterprise, the General Labour Inspectorate, through a reasoned decision, shall return the direct agreement to the signatories without approving it, otherwise it shall proceed with the examination of the direct agreement. The Government also indicates that the inspection directorate is clear that direct agreements and collective agreements are legal instruments of collective labour law, which fall under the general concept of collective bargaining and are regulated by the Labour Code. The Committee notes the statistical data provided by the Government and observes that from 2019 to 2022, a total of 131 collective agreements were concluded in the private sector (approximately 30 per year) which covered a total of 52,015 workers and 333 collective agreements in the public sector (approximately 80 per year) which covered 603,161 workers. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has not provided statistical information on the number of direct agreements concluded with non-unionized workers. The Committee notes the trade union confederations' indication that the trend and increases in direct agreements, and the decrease in collective agreements, continue. Regarding circular No. 01304-20 which provides that the labour administration will not process direct agreements where there is only one trade union that affiliates more than half of the enterprise's workers, the Committee reiterates that it has always considered that direct bargaining between the enterprise and unorganized groups of workers, in avoidance of workers' organizations, where they exist, is not in accordance with the promotion of collective bargaining, as set out in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to: (i) in consultation with the social partners, take all the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to ensure that the conclusion of direct agreements with non-unionized workers is only possible in the absence of trade union organizations and to provide information in this respect; and (ii) provide detailed statistical information on the number of collective agreements signed in the public and private sectors, and the number of direct agreements with non-unionized workers.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP), communicated with the Government's report, in which reference is made to the matters addressed below. It also notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) and the Workers' Union of the Atlantic Coast Port Administration and Economic Development Board (SINTRAJAP), received on 1 December 2022, alleging violations of the Convention in practice, including the suspension of trade union leave. The Committee also notes the joint observations of the CTRN, the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Central (CMTC), the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), the Costa Rican Confederation of Democratic Workers (CCTD) and the Workers' Unitary Confederation (CUT), received on 1 September 2023, alleging violations of the Convention in law and in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

In its previous comments, the Committee considered that it would be desirable to extend the protection provided under section 365 of the Labour Code to a greater number of trade union representatives. It noted that the issue of protection against acts of anti-union discrimination was the subject of a bill known as the Labour Procedures Reform Bill. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Procedures Reform Act was adopted on 25 January 2016 and introduces a host of innovations in the area of the defence of workers' rights. It also notes the information provided by the UCCAEP, in its observations, concerning the main changes introduced by the Act. In this respect, the Committee notes that, in 2013, in the context of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), it noted with satisfaction the amendments introduced by the Act with the objective of making judicial procedures relating to acts of anti-union discrimination more expeditious and effective. Nevertheless, the Committee notes that the protection provided to trade union representatives under the Labour Code (section 367(b)) continues to cover one trade union leader for the first 20 unionized workers and one for every additional 25 workers, up to a maximum of four. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 367(b) of the Labour Code with a view to increasing the number of trade union representatives protected, especially in the case of organizations with a large membership, and to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the impact of the Labour Procedures Reform Act with respect to the protection of workers' representatives.

Furthermore, the Committee noted another bill (Bill No. 13475) also relating to the improvement of existing protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Bill No. 13475 was shelved on 16 November 2016 following the issuance of a unanimously negative opinion. The Committee also notes the indication of the UCCAEP that this decision was taken because Bill No. 13475 was outdated by the regulations provided for under the Labour Procedures Reform Act, which surpasses the aspirations set out in the aforementioned Bill, in particular with respect to protection for workers' organizations.

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Union of Chambers and Associations of the Private Business Sector (UCCAEP), communicated with the Government's report, which are general in nature.

In its previous comments, the Committee encouraged the Government to continue taking steps to promote the participation of rural workers' organizations. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the programmes developed by the Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock Farming, as well as the Institute of Rural Development (INDER) in this respect. In particular, it notes the Government's indication that both the National Development and Public Investment Plan for 2019–22 and for 2023–26 undertook to promote and encourage the participation of rural workers' organizations, and that the Plan for 2023–26 includes a capacity-building programme, which aims to encourage compliance with labour/management rights through training on labour rights and collective bargaining techniques. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that INDER, in its operational plans, supported the participation of young people and rural women in various associations. Taking due note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on existing rural workers' organizations, including information on solidarity associations (number of associations and members, as well as the type of activities that they carry out).

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2026.]

Croatia

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Independent Trade Unions of Croatia (NHS) submitted by the Government, concerning matters addressed by the Committee in its present comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Rapid appeal procedures. In its previous comments, having observed with concern that the judicial resolution of anti-union discrimination cases was characterized by excessive delays and having noted that amendments to the Civil Procedure Act adopted in 2019 aimed at contributing to dispute resolution, the Committee requested the Government to continue providing information on the average duration of the resolution of anti-union discrimination cases. The Committee observes that the Civil Procedure Act was further amended in 2022 but notes that the Government does not provide any updated information on this issue. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee previously noted that while the legislation recognized the primacy of collective agreements concluded with trade unions, where they exist, both agreements concluded with works councils and working regulations, subject to consultation with works councils, have a material scope which may coincide with that of collective agreements (sections 26 and 160 of the Labour Act). It therefore requested the Government to provide detailed information on the respective number of company collective agreements concluded with trade unions and agreements concluded with works councils. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that agreements concluded with works councils may not regulate issues regulated by collective agreements, unless the parties to the collective agreement authorize so, and indicates that it does not have information on the number of concluded agreements. In view of the Government's assertion, the Committee trusts that negotiation between the employer and its workers through work regulations and agreements concluded with works councils will not be used in practice to bypass sufficiently representative organizations, where they exist, so as to promote collective bargaining, as enshrined in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to endeavour to collect information on the number and scope of collective agreements concluded with trade unions and works councils.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cuba

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the Independent Trade Union Association of Cuba (ASIC) received on 4 March 2021, the Government's reply received on 7 May 2021, as well as ASIC's observations received on 22 September 2023 and the Government's reply received on 29 November 2023. The Committee notes that ASIC alleges the imposition of restrictions on the freedom to work and the freedom to join trade unions through a new National Economic Activity Classifier, published on 10 February 2021 by the Ministry of Labour. This classifier, which covers 124 economic activities, limits own-account work and includes prohibitions on activities of business associations, trade unions and other associations. According to ASIC, these restrictions violate the fundamental rights established in the present Convention and in the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), as well as statements of the United Nations and the Organization of American States (OAS) on human rights and are unacceptable to the independent trade union movement. The Committee notes that the Government firmly rejects ASIC's allegations as false, because the new National Economic Activity Classifier does not impose restrictions on the free development of the non-state sector nor intends changing the list of permitted activities to prohibited activities. The Committee also notes the allegations made by ASIC in its observations received in September 2023, stating that the Government has applied collective agreements in a totally biased manner, favouring the organizations aligned with it - which are able to exercise their right to freedom of association - but excluding independent trade unions by treating democratic principles and labour rights with contempt. The Committee also notes that, according to ASIC, the Government severely restricts freedom of association by prohibiting the organization of independent trade unions, as well as restricting the exercise of the right to strike, while constraining workers to join the official trade union - the Worker's Central Union of Cuba (CTC) - which results in systematic repression of members of the independent trade unions and a widespread failure to defend labour rights. The Committee also notes ASIC's allegation that section 143 of the new Criminal Code, adopted on 1 September 2022, sets out custodial penalties for those who, while representing international non-governmental organizations, associations or any persons or legal entities, provide financial support to activities against the State and its constitutional order. According to ASIC, this adversely affects various civil society groups, including trade union members, self-employed workers, lawyers, independent journalists and so forth, especially those who receive foreign assistance. While noting that the Government essentially rejects the allegations made by ASIC and reiterates, as it has done on other occasions (see Case No. 3271 examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association), that their members are not genuine workers' representatives, the Committee notes that the Government has not commented on the allegations concerning the new Penal Code in relation to custodial penalties The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it had expressed regret that the Government had not provided copies of the court rulings connected with specific cases of convictions of workers belonging to the Independent National Workers Confederation of Cuba (CONIC), persecution and threats of imprisonment against delegates of the Light Industry Workers' Union (SITIL) and the confiscation of equipment and humanitarian aid sent from abroad to the Single Council of Cuban Workers (CUTC). The Committee noted the Government's repeated indication that the trade unionists were convicted in accordance with the law, denying claims of violations of the Convention, and that, in its latest report, the Government claimed that the ILO supervisory bodies were being manipulated, while arguing that the Committee should not request information relating to Case No. 2258, which had been examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association. The Committee once again requests the Government to send copies of the above-mentioned rulings.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Right to organize in the public service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that: (i) under the terms of section 94 of Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees, freedom of association is guaranteed for public service employees; and (ii) under section 93 of the Act, the exercise of the right to strike by public service employees can only be restricted under the conditions established by the law, in particular, so as to ensure the normal provision of "public services of vital interest, which cannot suffer any type of interruption." A Decree of the Prime Minister establishes the list of services of vital interest, as well as the details of the minimum service in these services. The Committee notes the Government's indications that a copy of the Decree will be communicated following its publication in the Official Journal. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the right to strike may be restricted or prohibited: (i) in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; or (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (iii) in the case of an acute national or local crisis. The Committee trusts that the Decree in question will be adopted shortly, taking into account the Committee's observations, and requests the Government to provide a copy of the Decree with its next report.

With regard to the trade union rights of judges, the Committee previously noted that, according to the Government, the freedom of association of judges is recognized under the provisional Order of 1996 and that judges' trade unions exist. The Committee had noted that Organic Act No. 06/020 of 10 October 2006 on the conditions of service of judges, to which the Government refers in its report, did not contain any provisions that address the concerns of the Committee and therefore requested the Government to indicate whether provisions were envisaged to explicitly ensure that judges enjoy the rights laid down in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the provisional Order of 1996 remains in force pending the amendment of the Act of 2006, which was being discussed in Parliament. The Committee trusts that the revision process of the Act of 2006 will be concluded as soon as possible and will ensure freedom of association of judges. It requests the Government to provide, with its next report, a copy of the revised Act.

Article 3. Right of foreign workers to hold trade union office. In its previous comments the Committee noted with regret that Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 amending and supplementing Act No. 015-2002 on the Labour Code did not remove the provision requiring 20 years of residence in order to be eligible for appointment to administrative or executive positions in trade unions (new section 241). The Committee recalled that a period of three years is reasonable in this respect but that a 20-year period for access to trade union office is excessive (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 103). The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has undertaken to bring this matter before the National Labour Council. Recalling once again that national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country, the Committee expects the Government to take measures, in the near future, to amend section 241 of the Labour Code, as revised by the Act of July 2016, accordingly.

Articles 3 and 4. Other legislative and regulatory issues. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government, on numerous occasions, to take steps to amend: (i) section 11 of Order No. 12/CVAB.MIN/TPS/113/2005 of 26 October 2005, which prohibits striking workers from entering and remaining on work premises affected by the strike; (ii) section 326 of the Labour Code and in that regard suggested including an additional provision stipulating that penalties against strikers must be proportionate to the offence committed and that no prison sentence shall be imposed unless criminal or violent acts have been committed; (iii) section 28 of Act No. 016/2002 concerning the establishment, organization and functioning of labour tribunals so as to allow recourse to the labour tribunal, should conciliation and mediation procedures have been exhausted, only on the basis of a voluntary decision of the parties to the dispute; and (iv) section 251 of the Labour Code to ensure that the issue of the dissolution of trade union organizations will be regulated by their union constitutions and rules.

The Committee notes with concern that, despite the adoption of Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 (amending and supplementing the Labour Code) and of Act No. 016/2002 (concerning the establishment, organization and functioning of labour tribunals), the above provisions are still not in conformity with the requirements of the Convention, and that the Government only indicates that the above matters will be brought before the National Labour Council. The Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to amend the above provisions and that it will refer to specific progress made in its next report.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the observations of Education International, received on 31 August 2023, alleging anti-union discrimination cases (suspension without pay for taking part in union action or denouncing irregularities). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously recalled that although section 235 of the Labour Code prohibits all acts of interference by employers' and workers' organizations in each other's affairs, section 236 provides that acts of interference shall be defined more precisely in an Order issued by the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare in consultation with the National Labour Council. The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that the matter will soon be submitted to the National Labour Council. Noting with concern that the Order in question has still not been adopted, the Committee trusts that the Government's next report will finally indicate that specific progress has been made in this regard, and that the Order will include the various cases envisaged under Article 2 of the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to establish the right to collective bargaining of all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State explicitly in the national legislation, so that the legislation is consistent with the practice. The Committee noted in this regard that while Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 on the conditions of service of permanent public service employees recognizes the right of public servants to organize and to strike and establishes consultative bodies, it does not provide for machinery for collective bargaining on conditions of employment. The Committee noted at the same time that the persons covered by the Act are primarily employees engaged in the administration of the State (section 2). The Committee recalls once again that, under Article 6, the Convention applies to workers and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State (for instance, employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, as well as transport personnel) (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 172). Noting with regret that there has been no progress on this point, the Committee urges the Government to specify how the right to collective bargaining is granted to various categories of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and to take, if necessary, steps to ensure that this right is granted to them both in law and in practice. It also requests the Government to provide information on the creation and functioning of the joint Government/trade union committees to which the Government refers in its report, as well as to any collective bargaining process in the public sector.

Branch-level collective bargaining. The Committee observes with concern that the Government does not provide information on the adoption of the Order defining the functioning of the joint committees, provided for under the terms of section 284 of the Labour Code relating to branch-level collective bargaining. Recalling once again that its initial request in relation to this matter was made in 2003, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Order defining the functioning of the joint committees will be adopted without further delay.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote collective bargaining, the number of collective agreements concluded and in effect in the country, as well as on the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1955)

Previous comments

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Danish Trade Union Confederation (FH), the United Federation of Danish Workers (3F) and the Danish Maritime Officers (Lederne Søfart) attached to the Government's report, as well as the Government's comments thereon. The Committee notes that these observations are relevant to the issues addressed in the present comment.

Article 4 of the Convention. Right to free and voluntary collective bargaining of seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee first welcomed the amendment of the Act on the Danish International Register of Shipping (DIS Act), which now allows Danish trade unions to conclude collective agreements on behalf of all seafarers primarily engaged in the relevant activities on ships operating in Danish territorial waters or in the area of the Danish continental shelf for more than 14 days per month. The Committee, however, then requested the Government to continue its dialogue with the social partners to ensure that Danish trade unions may freely represent in the collective bargaining process all their members working on ships sailing under the Danish flag whether they are within or beyond Danish territorial waters or the Danish continental shelf, and regardless of their activities.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) neither the legislation nor the main sectoral framework agreement of 28 February 2013 prevents seafarers from joining the trade union of their choice, whether Danish or foreign; (ii) ships sailing under the Danish flag offer a high level of social and employment conditions in a context of very strong international competition; and (iii) under the Danish labour market model, it is up to the social partners to reach an agreement on the points raised in this comment through the joint working group established for this purpose. The Committee also notes: (i) the FH's observations regretting the lack of sufficient action by the Government to ensure the conformity of section 10 of the DIS Act with the Convention, a point raised before the Committee for over 30 years now; (ii) 3F's observations that it was not consulted on the amendment of the DIS Act, as it was not part of the joint working group established for this purpose; and (iii) Lederne Søfart's observations that a significant number of seafarers are currently unable to be represented by the trade union of their choice because shipping enterprises governed by the DIS Act negotiate collective agreements only with the Danish Metal Workers' Union. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's response that it will continue to refrain from interfering in the negotiations between the social partners, including on the matter of who should be party to collective agreements.

The Committee notes from the above that, since its previous examination of Denmark's application of the Convention, section 10 of the DIS Act has not been further amended and that, as a result, Danish trade unions are still not authorized to negotiate collective agreements for foreign seafarers employed on ships sailing under the Danish flag and operating mainly beyond Danish territorial waters or the Danish continental shelf. In order to ensure the compatibility of section 10 of the DIS Act with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to continue, in consultation with all the social partners concerned, to make every effort to ensure full respect of the principles of free and voluntary collective bargaining so that Danish trade unions may freely represent in the collective bargaining process all their members working on ships sailing under the Danish flag whether they are within or beyond Danish territorial waters or the Danish continental shelf, and regardless of their activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Djibouti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's communication, dated 17 November 2019, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning ongoing violations of freedom of association in Djibouti. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not provided the information requested on the reasons why Mr Mohamed Abdou was prohibited from leaving the country and prevented from participating in the 103rd Session of the International Labour Conference (May-June 2014). Noting that the recent observations of the UDT and the UGTD no longer refer to this matter, the Committee trusts that Mr Abdou is no longer subject to such prohibitions.

Trade union situation in Djibouti. The Committee recalls that allegations of violations of freedom of association in the country are repeatedly brought before the ILO supervisory bodies and that mention is often made of the phenomenon of “clone unions” (duplication of trade union organizations, established with the Government’s support). The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates that this phenomenon of “cloning” trade union organizations does not exist in Djibouti and that the representation of the UDT and the UGTD continues to be usurped by Mr Mohamed Abdou and Mr Diraneh Hared, authors of the observations addressed to the Committee. In this respect, the Committee notes the findings of the Credentials Committee of the 110th Session of the Conference (June 2022) on a new objection concerning the appointment of the Workers’ delegation. The Committee notes with deep concern the Credentials Committee’s indication that confusion continues to reign over the trade union landscape in Djibouti. The Credentials Committee particularly regrets that the Government has not addressed the allegations repeated every year by the objecting organizations concerning the “cloning” of the UDT and UGTD and usurpation of their names, “other than by stating flatly that the authors of the objection had no legitimate union mandate, without any explanation as to how, in particular, Mr Mohamed Abdou might have lost the leadership of the UDT, which he undoubtedly held in the past”. Noting the information from the Credentials Committee that the Government has stated that it accepts the terms for technical assistance from the Office to proceed with an evaluation of the situation of the trade union movement in the country, the Committee firmly urges the Government to take concrete measures to this effect in the near future, with a view to ensuring the development of free and independent trade unions in accordance with the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers’ organizationsto organize their administration and activities in full freedom. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information expected concerning the need to amend:

- section 5 of the Act on Associations, which requires organizations to obtain authorization prior to their establishment as trade unions; and
- section 23 of Decree No. 83-099/PR/FP of 10 September 1983, which confers upon the President of the Republic broad powers to requisition public servants.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take all measures necessary to amend the above provisions and will report on specific progress in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1978)

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s communication, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning the persistence of anti-union discrimination in the education and rail transport sectors. The Committee notes in particular the Government’s indication that decisions must be taken to discontinue criminal proceedings against the teachers who had been arrested in 2019 in the context of the case of the Baccalaureate exams, and that most of the railway workers concerned following the 2019 social conflict have been reintegrated into their posts. With regard to the transfers described as “punitive”, concerning the leaders of the teachers’ trade unions, the Government denies the allegations, however. Noting that the information brought to its knowledge does not provide a definitive reply to all the allegations presented by EI, UDT and UGTD, and recalling the obligation, under the terms of the Convention, to ensure that workers are adequately protected against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures required to ensure full respect of Article 1 of the Convention in the above-mentioned activity sectors.

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the draft inter-occupational collective agreement, which was examined and approved unanimously in September 2020, by the members of the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and on the total number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2013, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in relation to certain sections of the Industrial Relations Act (Act No. 18 of 1986) concerning compulsory arbitration and which unduly restrict the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. The Government has been requested to make the following amendments to the Act: (i) exclude the banana, citrus and coconut industries as well as the port authority, from the schedule of essential services annexed to the Act, which makes it possible to stop a strike in these sectors by compulsory arbitration, and (ii) amend sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the Act, which empower the Minister to refer disputes to compulsory arbitration if they concerned serious issues in his or her opinion. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2011 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee once again requests the Government to send its comments in relation to the joint observations sent by the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD) in 2020, which allege that practical difficulties persist in obtaining the registration of trade union organizations, particularly in the tourist transport sector.

In its previous comment, the Committee noted the observations of the CNUS, CASC and CNTD regarding the alleged lack of effectiveness of the Round Table established in 2016 to ensure compliance with international labour standards. The Committee notes with interest that the Round Table was reactivated by an agreement signed on 25 October 2023. The Committee trusts that the matters covered in this observation will be taken into account in the discussions within the Round Table.

Legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the following legislative provisions which are not in conformity with Articles 2, 3 and 5 of the Convention:

- section 84(I) of the regulations implementing the Civil Service and Administrative Careers Act (Decree No. 523-09), which maintains the requirement to affiliate at least 40 per cent of the total number of employees enjoying the right to organize in the institution concerned, in order to be able to establish an organization of civil servants;
- section 407(3) of the Labour Code, which requires at least 51 per cent of workers' votes in the enterprise in order to call a strike; and
- section 383 of the Labour Code, which requires federations to obtain the votes of two-thirds of their members to be able to establish confederations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is in the process of revising and amending the Labour Code and that it has prioritized the inclusion of content aimed at facilitating the application of the Convention. The Government emphasizes that the Committee's comments have been taken into account and discussed in the preparatory work for the Labour Code reform and indicates that the Committee for reviewing the Labour Code will continue to meet regularly until the revision is completed. The Committee urges the Government, through effective social dialogue, to adopt the new Labour Code in the very near future, and firmly expects that, taking into account the Committee's comments, these legislative amendments will be in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect and to provide it with a copy of the new Code once it has been adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate what measures have been taken to bring legislation governing public sector workers into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee recalls that the Government may, if it so wishes, avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee notes the observations of the Ibero-American Confederation of Labour Inspectors (CIIT) received on 5 June 2023, in which it denounces relocations of trade unionists from the Labour Inspectors' Association of the Dominican Republic and indicates that the anti-union acts examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3071 concerning members of the Association continue to take place despite the Committee's recommendations (Report No. 375, June 2015). The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this respect, and on the joint observations sent by the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC) and the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD) in 2018, 2019 and 2020, which denounce repeated acts of anti-union discrimination.

In its previous comment, the Committee noted the observations of the CNUS, CASC and CNTD regarding the lack of effectiveness of the Round Table established in 2016 to ensure compliance with international labour standards. The Committee notes with interest that the Round Table was reactivated by an agreement signed on 25 October 2023. The Committee expects that the matters addressed in this observation will be taken into account in the discussions within the Round Table.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Articles 1, 2 and 4 of the Convention. Effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to adopt procedural and substantive reforms to enable the effective and rapid application of penalties as a deterrent against anti-union acts and to provide detailed statistics concerning judicial proceedings in this regard. The Committee also drew the Government's attention to the need to amend sections 109 and 110 of the Labour Code to allow collective bargaining without requiring the representation of an absolute majority of workers in order to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is in the process of revising the Labour Code and that it has prioritized the inclusion of content aimed at facilitating the application of the Convention. The Government emphasizes that the Committee's comments have been taken into account and discussed in the preparatory work for the Labour Code reform and that the Committee for reviewing and updating the Labour Code will continue to meet regularly until the revision is completed. The Committee firmly hopes that, through effective social dialogue, the new Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future, and that, taking into account the Committee's comments, these legislative amendments will be in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard and once again requests the Government to send the detailed statistics on anti-union discrimination mentioned in its previous comment.

Application of the Convention in the public service.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6. Protection of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. Right to collective bargaining. Noting that Act No. 41-08 on the public service only covered a union's founders and a number of its leaders, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State fully enjoyed specific protection against acts of interference from their employer, providing for sufficient dissuasive penalties against acts of discrimination and interference. The Committee also noted that there was no reference to the right to collective bargaining in Act No. 41-08 or its implementing regulations. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in this respect. The Committee reiterates its previous requests and strongly hopes that the Government will take the requested measures. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard.

The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Ecuador

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's partial reply to the 2022 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the alleged detention of demonstrators who took part in a national strike in 2021. The Committee notes that the Government replies in its report to the joint observations of the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador, sent in 2022. The Committee also notes the joint observations of FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the United Workers' Front (FUT), received on 31 August 2023, which cover in detail questions examined by the Committee in the present comment, indicate that the delay in the process of registering new union executive committees has become an ongoing problem that obstructs the proper functioning of trade unions, and highlight the refusal to register trade unions for reasons not covered by the Constitution or the legislation. The Committee notes that, according to FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT, the Basic Employment Bill, which they had indicated did not take into account the Committee's comments, was discarded. The unions also indicate that on 3 May 2023 Executive Decree No. 730 was issued, ordering the armed forces to take action to suppress organized crime, and they point out that this could be applied with regard to any attempt at social mobilization or protests. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the above-mentioned matters.

Technical assistance. Direct contacts mission. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee), when examining the application of the Convention by Ecuador in June 2022, invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and requested the Government to accept a direct contacts mission. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in view of the current political situation in the country and the change of Government, the Ministry of Labour will resume talks and liaise with the Office in 2024 with a view to a possible direct contacts mission. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee will take place as soon as possible and also hopes that the Government will avail itself of technical assistance from the Office, trusting that such assistance will contribute to progress in the adoption of specific, effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention with regard to the points set out below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Murder of a trade unionist. In its last comment, the Committee deplored the murder on 24 January 2022 of Mr Sandro Arteaga Quiroz, secretary of the Union of Workers of the Manabí Provincial Government, and strongly urged the Government to take without delay all necessary measures to determine responsibility and punish those guilty of this crime. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it consulted the Public Prosecutor's Office, which sent it information on the offences in which Mr Arteaga Quiroz featured as a complainant. The Committee notes that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT indicate that the file has been under investigation at the Public Prosecutor's Office since 25 February 2022 but that the corresponding judicial proceedings have still not been initiated, which, according to the unions, demonstrates lack of due diligence on the part of the State. The Committee notes with regret that there has been no progress in the investigation and once again underlines the need for independent judicial investigations without delay in order to fully elucidate the facts and determine responsibility, punish the perpetrators and instigators and prevent any recurrence of such acts. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to determine responsibility and punish those guilty of this crime and keep it informed in this respect.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 2 of the Convention. Excessive number of workers (30) required for the establishment of workers' associations and enterprise committees. Possibility of creating trade union organizations by branch of activity. For several years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend sections 443, 449, 452 and 459 of the Labour Code in such a way as to reduce the minimum number of members required to establish workers' associations and enterprise committees and enable the establishment of primary-level unions comprising workers from several enterprises. The Committee notes that the Government does not refer in its report to the revision of the sections of the law relating to the number of workers required for the establishment of workers' associations and enterprise committees, although the Committee has previously noted the position of several trade unions that the number of no less than 30 is disproportionate and unreasonable in view of the Ecuadorian business structure. The Committee notes that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT indicate that, according to data provided by the Ministry of Labour, in 2022 the biggest enterprises in the country represented barely 0.5 per cent and it would be impossible to form trade unions in over 90 per cent of production units in the country. FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT also emphasize that it is imperative that the possibility of organization is guaranteed for autonomous workers and informal workers. As regards the establishment of organizations comprising workers from a number of enterprises, the Committee noted with interest in its last comment that, in compliance with a ruling handed down in 2021, the Ministry of Labour was ordered to register the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC) as a branch union, despite being formed of workers from various enterprises, and the Ministry was also ordered to adopt regulations for the registration of unions by branch of activity. In early 2022, the Ministry registered ASTAC as a branch union. The Committee noted that the Ministry and the Office of the Procurator-General had applied for an extraordinary protection order against the ruling for lack of adequate grounds and legal certainty and failure to comply with due process. The Committee notes the indication of the Government, FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT that a decision on the application for the extraordinary protection order is still pending in the Constitutional Court. The Committee notes the indication of FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT that the Government has not fully complied with the ruling since it has refused to adopt regulations for the establishment of branch unions, asserting that the ruling on the registration of ASTAC is only applicable between the parties and its legal effects do not extend beyond them. The Committee notes that these issues were examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) in Cases Nos 3148 (Reports Nos 381 and 391, March 2017 and October 2019) and 3437 (Report No. 404, October 2023) and that on these occasions the CFA noted with regret that, despite its recommendations and follow-up by the Committee, both the national legislation and the practice of the Ministry of Labour still did not allow the establishment of primary-level unions comprising workers from various enterprises. Recalling once again that, under the terms of Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, workers must be able, if they so wish, to establish primary-level organizations at a level higher than the enterprise, the Committee reiterates its strong expectation that the above-mentioned ruling will contribute to allowing the establishment of trade union organizations by branch of activity, and also hopes that the Committee's assessment of this important development in the application of the Convention will be brought to the attention of the Constitutional Court of Justice. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to revise the sections of the laws referred to above in the manner indicated and to keep it informed of all developments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to report on the proceedings before the Constitutional Court relating to the extraordinary protection order and to indicate whether self-employed and informal workers enjoy the rights established in the Convention, specifying the corresponding legislative provisions.

Article 3. Compulsory time limits for convening trade union elections. The Committee has been asking the Government to amend section 10(c) of the Regulations on Labour Organizations No. 0130 of 2013, which provides that trade union executive committees shall lose their powers and competencies if they do not convene elections within 90 days of the expiry of their term of office, as set out in their respective union constitutions, to ensure that the consequences of any delay in holding elections shall be determined by the union constitutions themselves, subject to the observance of democratic rules. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour is currently reviewing a draft reform of the Regulations on Labour Organizations particularly with regard to section 10(c) and that it will keep the Committee informed of progress made. The Committee notes that, according to FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT, the Government has repeatedly maintained that trade union organizations can regulate in their own constitutions how to proceed in cases where they are without leadership, respecting the unions' right to draft their constitutions and regulate their own administration; but when it comes to revising the constitutions, the Government demands that the possibility for executive committees to extend their functions should only be allowed "in duly verified cases of force majeure". The above-mentioned unions also indicate that where unions are without leadership as a result of not convening elections within the deadline specified in the Regulations, this has an impact on federations and confederations because the Ministry of Labour does not recognize decisions taken by these organizations when they have not “registered their executive committees”, thereby limiting second- and third-level organizations’ capacity for action. Recalling that, under Article 3 of the Convention, trade union elections are an internal matter for organizations and must be determined by the union constitutions themselves, and observing that the consequences under the Regulations if the deadlines are not respected – the loss of powers and competencies for trade union committees – run a serious risk of paralyzing the trade union’s capacity for action and limiting the capacity for action of second- and third-level organizations, the Committee once again reiterates its strong expectation that the draft reform will take its comments into consideration, and that section 10(c) will be amended along the lines indicated. The Committee requests the Government to report on all developments in this regard.

Requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible for trade union office. The Committee recalls that, while in 2015 it had noted that section 49 of the Labour Justice Act had amended section 459(4) of the Labour Code and removed the requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible to be an officer of an enterprise committee, in its 2021 comment it observed that section 49 was declared unconstitutional by a ruling of 2018 because it violated the principle of trade union independence by providing that the legislation determined how the executive bodies of enterprise committees were constituted and who had the right to vote in their elections. The Committee noted with regret that, as a result of the declaration of unconstitutionality, section 459(4) had reverted to its original wording, imposing the requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible to be an officer of an enterprise committee. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Constitutional Court rulings are final and are not subject to appeal; that the Constitution guarantees the enjoyment of individual rights under equal conditions for nationals and naturalized foreigners and that the guaranteed rights include the right to elect and be elected. The Committee recalls the Government’s previous indication that Ecuadorian nationality is required to be an officer of an enterprise committee, but not to be a leader or member of other forms of association. In this regard, the Committee noted that, under the terms of the Labour Code, enterprise committees are one of the forms that trade unions can take within an enterprise. The Committee emphasizes once again that, under Article 3 of the Convention, all workers’ and employers’ organizations shall have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom and that national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, if permitted under the organization’s constitution and rules, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to amend section 459(4) of the Labour Code and to keep it informed of all developments in this regard. It also invites the Government to bring the Committee’s comments in this regard to the Constitutional Court’s attention.

Elections as officers of enterprise committees of workers who are not trade union members. The Committee had previously indicated to the Government the need to amend section 459(3) of the Labour Code, which provided that the role of officer of an enterprise committee may be filled by any worker, whether or not a union member, who stands for office. The Committee noted that the Constitutional Court ruling of 2018 referred to above also had an impact on the wording of section 459(3), which reverted to its original wording, according to which there is no provision for non-unionized workers to be able to participate in enterprise committee elections. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Constitutional Court rulings are final and not subject to appeal and that the Government considers it necessary to maintain tripartite dialogue in order to determine the viability of a possible reform of the text in force. Taking due note of these indications, the Committee once again requests the Government to hold consultations with the social partners in relation to the need to amend section 459(3) of the Labour Code to bring it into full compliance with the principle of trade union autonomy and to keep it informed of all developments in this respect.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Article 2. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee previously noted that although section 11 of the Basic Act reforming the legislation governing the public sector (Basic Reform Act), adopted in 2017, establishes the right to organize for public servants, certain categories of public employees were excluded from that right, especially those under contract for occasional services, those subject to free appointment and removal from office, and those on statutory, fixed-term contracts. Recalling that, under Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention, with the sole possible exception of members of the police and of the armed forces, all workers have the right to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing, the Committee asked the Government to take the measures required to bring the legislation into line with the Convention. Noting with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this respect, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to bring the legislation into line with the Convention in such a way that all workers, with the sole possible exception of members of the police and of the armed forces, have the right to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of all measures taken in this regard.

Right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Organizations of public servants other than the committees of public servants. The Committee previously observed that, according to the provisions of the Basic Reform Act, the committees of public servants, which must comprise “50 per cent plus one” of the staff of a public institution, are responsible for defending the rights of public servants and are the only bodies that can call a strike. Although the Government indicated that public servants, when establishing their organizations, have the right to draft their constitutions, in which they may adopt any means to defend their interests, the Basic Reform Act indicates that the committees of public servants are responsible for defending the rights of public servants and are the only bodies that can call a strike. Underlining the fact that all organizations of public servants must be able to enjoy the various guarantees established in the Convention, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on organizations of public servants other than the committees of public servants and to indicate what means they have for defending the occupational interests of their members. The Committee once more notes with regret that it has not received this information and reiterates its request to the Government to provide information in this respect. Recalling that, under Article 2 of the Convention, trade union pluralism must be possible in all cases, and that no organization of public servants should be deprived of the essential means for defending the occupational interests of its members, organizing its administration and activities, and formulating its programmes, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation does not restrict recognition of the right to organize to the committees of public servants as the sole form of organization.

Article 3. Right of workers’ organizations and associations of public servants to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee previously drew the Government’s attention to the need to amend section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code, which provides for a term of imprisonment of one to three years for stopping or obstructing the normal provision of a public service, so as to prevent the imposition of criminal penalties on workers engaged in a peaceful strike. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the appropriate procedure for public servants to assert the right to strike is regulated in chapter III (on strikes) of the Basic Public Service Act and refers to the provisions of the Act relating to declaring strikes illegal, indicating that the State has recourse to criminal proceedings as a last resort. The Committee notes with regret that the information provided by the Government suggests that no progress has been made on taking account of its comments. The Committee recalls that several trade unions previously indicated that section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code was being used to criminalize social protest. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code is amended in the manner indicated and, until such measures are taken, to ensure that this provision is not used to criminalize social protest.

Article 4. Dissolution of associations of public servants by the administrative authorities. Recalling that Article 4 of the Convention prohibits the suspension or administrative dissolution of associations of public servants, the Committee previously urged the Government to ensure that the provisions of Decree No. 193, which maintains engagement in party-political activities as grounds for dissolution and provides for administrative dissolution, do not apply to associations of public servants whose purpose is to defend the economic and social interests of their members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Basic Reform Act establishes that associations of public servants can only be dissolved by judicial ruling. The Committee also recalls that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and other organizations pointed out that although the provision of Decree No. 193 that maintained engagement in party-political activities as grounds for dissolution was declared unconstitutional in 2022, and that while Decree No. 193 regulates only social organizations and not trade unions, the Government nevertheless applies the grounds for forced dissolution of social organizations to trade unions because it considers that they are "civil society" organizations and not of a trade union nature. In view of the above, and recalling that Article 4 of the Convention prohibits the suspension or administrative dissolution of associations of public servants, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the provisions of Decree No. 193 are not applied to associations of public servants whose purpose is to defend the economic and social interests of their members.

Administrative dissolution of the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE). After noting the registration of social organizations related to the UNE (which was dissolved by an administrative act issued by the Under-Secretariat of Education in 2016), the Committee asked the Government: (i) to indicate whether the registration of the UNE-E with the Under-Secretariat of Education in Quito meant that the UNE had been able to resume its activities of defending the occupational interests of its members; (ii) to take all necessary measures to ensure the registration of the UNE as a trade union organization with the Ministry of Labour, if the UNE so wished; and (iii) to ensure the full return of the property seized as well as the removal of any other consequences resulting from the administrative dissolution of the UNE. The Committee noted that the UNE had filed several legal actions against the dissolution decision and that the Constitutional Court ruling on an extraordinary protection order was still pending. The Committee notes the indication of FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT that the Constitutional Court, by Ruling No. 579-18-EP/23 of 12 July 2023, partially admitted the extraordinary protection order, declared that the right to due process had been violated as regards ensuring adequate grounds for public authority decisions, invalidated the ruling of 18 January 2018 (which had dismissed the appeal filed by the UNE chairperson) and ordered that a new associate judge of the Special Chamber for Administrative Disputes at the National Court of Justice, assigned by drawing lots, should decide whether or not to admit the appeal filed by the complainant. FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT also consider that, irrespective of the judicial decision on this case, the Government could revise its own acts and overturn the administrative act which dissolved the UNE without a judicial order to that effect being essential. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any ruling handed down by the Special Chamber for Administrative Disputes at the National Court of Justice as well as on whether the Government is able to revise its own acts as suggested by the trade unions, and once again requests the Government to provide the other information requested by the Committee in its previous comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the detailed joint observations of the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador, and the United Workers' Front (FUT), received on 31 August 2023, which address thoroughly the matters examined by the Committee in the present comment and allege acts of anti-union persecution. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect, and also with respect to the observations sent in 2022 by the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC), the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), FETRAPEC, the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE), and PSI in Ecuador.

Technical assistance. Direct contacts mission requested by the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in the context of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). In its last comment, the Committee noted that the Conference Committee, when examining the application of Convention No. 87 by Ecuador in June 2022, addressed matters that had a direct impact on workers' capacity to negotiate collectively their terms and conditions of work, and therefore on the application of the present Convention. The Conference Committee invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and asked it to accept a direct contacts mission. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report on Convention No. 87, that in view of the current political situation in the country and the change of Government, the Ministry of Labour will resume talks and liaison with the Office in 2024 with a view to a possible direct contacts mission. The Committee firmly hopes that the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee with regard to Convention No. 87 will take place as soon as possible and also hopes that the Government will avail itself of technical assistance from the Office, trusting that such assistance will contribute to progress in the adoption of specific, effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention with regard to the points set out below.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. For more than a decade, the Committee has been referring to the need to include provisions in the legislation that guarantee protection against acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of access to employment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new executive and legislative authorities will analyse the necessary reforms once they take up office. The Committee recalls that Article 1 of the Convention prohibits anti-union discrimination at the time of the recruitment of individual workers, so that access to employment is not made subject to the condition that workers shall not join a union or shall relinquish union membership. In light of the above, the Committee once again emphasizes the need for provisions expressly prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of access to employment to be included in the legislation and requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, under section 221 of the Labour Code, collective labour agreements must be concluded with the enterprise committee (one of the forms that, under the Labour Code, trade unions can take within an enterprise) or, if one does not exist, with the organization with the largest number of worker members, on condition that it represents over 50 per cent of the workers in the enterprise. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 221 so that, if there is no organization that represents over 50 per cent of the workers, minority trade unions can, either separately or jointly, negotiate at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates once again that this requirement for the negotiation of a collective agreement is closely related to principles such as democracy, participation and transparency, since the benefits obtained in the collective agreement apply to all workers in the enterprise or institution. The Committee is bound to emphasize once again that, even though the requirement of representativeness for signing collective agreements is fully compatible with the Convention, the level of representativeness set should not be such as to hinder the promotion and implementation of free and voluntary collective bargaining, as referred to in Article 4 of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls that in previous comments it noted the low rate of coverage of collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between May 2021 and May 2023, a total of 57 collective agreements were concluded in the private sector. The Committee notes that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT, apart from highlighting the low number of collective agreements in the private sector, indicate that the Government does not specify whether the figures it provides refer to new collective agreements or revised versions thereof and that it also does not provide exact data on the number of persons covered by any collective agreements concluded or in which sectors they are concentrated. Once again emphasizing the link between the low coverage of collective agreements in the country and the restrictive requirements set out in law for participation in collective bargaining, the Committee once again urges the Government, after consulting the social partners, to take the necessary steps to amend section 221 of the Labour Code as indicated above. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, with an indication of the sectors covered (including the agricultural and banana sector), the number of workers covered and whether they are new or revised collective agreements.

Collective bargaining in sectors composed mainly of small enterprises. The Committee recalls that, in its comments on the application of Convention No. 87, it has been calling for many years for the amendment of the following aspects of the legislation, which significantly restrict the capacity of workers to organize in unions: (i) the requirement of a minimum of 30 workers to establish unions and enterprise committees; and (ii) the impossibility of establishing primary-level unions composed of workers from different enterprises. Having noted with concern that these restrictions on the right to organize, combined with the absence of a legal framework for collective bargaining at the sectoral level, as denounced by the trade unions, appear to exclude any possibility for workers in small enterprises to exercise their right to collective bargaining, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in sectors of production composed mainly of small enterprises. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a decision on an extraordinary protection order applied for in the Constitutional Court is still pending, in relation to a ruling ordering the Ministry of Labour to register ASTAC as a branch union, despite it being composed of workers from various enterprises, and to adopt regulations on the registration of branch unions. The Government also indicates that, as indicated by the Basic Act to promote the Violet Economy, published on 20 January 2023, its priority focuses on promoting, through collective bargaining, the establishment of positive action measures for the effective application of the principle of equality of treatment and non-discrimination in conditions of work for women and men. While noting this information, the Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the measures requested by the Committee. In light of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in sectors of production composed mainly of small enterprises.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Articles 1, 2 and 6 of the Convention. Protection of workers in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation applicable to the public sector contains provisions that explicitly protect the leaders of all organizations of public servants against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes the Government's assertion that the legislation grants protection to public servants against acts of discrimination through the fact of their belonging to the committees of public servants and reiterates once again that protection against acts of discrimination and the right to establish unions is provided for in both the Political Constitution and the Basic Public Service Act (LOSEP), which prohibits any act of discrimination against public servants. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates what it already indicated on previous occasions, and in the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association, when it examined Case No. 3347, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of the legislation providing the same type of protection against possible acts of anti-union discrimination and interference for all leaders of all public servants' organizations alike. In light of the above, the Committee is bound to urge the Government once again to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation applicable to the public sector includes provisions that explicitly protect the leaders of all organizations of public servants, and not only the leaders of the committees of public servants, against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, as well as provisions establishing penalties that act as a deterrent in the event of such acts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged in this respect. The Committee also previously noted a ruling issued in 2020 declaring unconstitutional the compulsory redundancy purchase mechanism under which the public administration, in exchange for the payment of compensation, could unilaterally terminate the employment of public servants without the need to indicate the grounds for such termination. The Committee observed that although the ruling removed the prohibition for persons who have been dismissed to return to work in the public sector, PSI in Ecuador alleged that the Government had not complied with this aspect of the ruling. The Committee notes that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT indicate that: (i) although by an agreement of March 2023 that the Government had undertaken to examine a possible return to office in the April-May period of 15 dismissed former public officials and a road map for the recall of another 192 persons by August 2023, so far five individuals have been recalled but under temporary arrangements instead of within the career public servant system; and (ii) through a series of judicial actions, a number of persons have been reinstated in the public posts from which they were dismissed and in some cases have even been the beneficiaries of rulings with financial compensation for the injury suffered. The Committee duly notes this information provided by the trade unions and once again requests the Government to send information on any action taken to comply with this ruling.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously observed that the Basic Reform Act and Ministerial Order No. MDT-2018-0010 did not recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants and that only public sector workers governed by the Labour Code could engage in collective bargaining. The Committee also noted that the 2015 amendments to the Constitution excluding the entire public sector from the scope of collective bargaining had been annulled by the Constitutional Court in 2018 and that Ministerial Order No. 373 had been issued in 2019 to give effect to the ruling. The Committee notes the Government's indication that further to the amendments adopted by the National Assembly in 2015 being declared unconstitutional, the text that existed prior to their promulgation remained valid, and so the Constitution does not enshrine public servants' right to organize for the defence of their interests and improvements in the provision of services. The Committee notes the Government's indication that from May 2021 to May 2023, a total of 139 collective agreements were concluded in the public sector. The Committee notes that FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT indicate that the small number of collective agreements in the public sector is due, inter alia, to the fact that only the special committees composed of workers governed by the Labour Code can conclude collective agreements, and budgetary approval is required. Furthermore, the Committee notes that, according to FETRAPEC, PSI in Ecuador and the FUT, the Basic Employment Bill, which, they indicated, would contain a provision on the elimination of collective bargaining in the public sector, was discarded. The Committee is bound to note with concern that the legislation still does not recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants, despite the fact that many of them (public sector teachers, employees in the public health system, employees in public enterprises, municipal services and decentralized bodies, etc.) are not engaged in the administration of the State and should therefore benefit from the guarantees provided by the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that, despite its requests, the Government has not provided information on specific initiatives for the re-establishment of the rights referred to above. Recalling once again that there are mechanisms that permit the harmonious coexistence of the public sector's mission to serve the public interest and the responsible exercise of collective bargaining, the Committee once again urges the Government, in consultation with the representative organizations of workers, to take the necessary steps to establish adequate collective bargaining machinery for all the categories of public sector employees covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect and to also provide information on the motions submitted to have the Humanitarian Act of June 2020, declared unconstitutional, which, according to PSI in Ecuador, imposed restrictions on collective bargaining by public sector workers governed by the Labour Code.

Egypt

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 20 September 2023, in relation to the application of the Convention in law and in practice. It further takes due note of the parallel report transmitted by the Central Trade Union of Workers' Services on behalf of a number of Egyptian trade unions on 31 August 2023. The Committee further duly notes the detailed comments provided by the Government in 2021 on the observations of the ITUC and Public Services International (PSI).

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Application in law and in practice. The Committee recalls from its previous comments the Government's creation of a legal and technical committee reporting directly to the Minister of Manpower, mandated with examining all problems facing union organizations that had failed to regularize and then offering the required technical support. Noting numerous challenges to registration that had been raised, the Committee trusted that the remaining organizations awaiting registration would receive their certificates of legal personality without delay so that they would be able to exercise their activities fully. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour follows up with all affiliated directorates on the implementation of the provisions of the law in a sound manner, and on the promotion of the freedom of association principle at all levels. It refers in particular to Ministerial Order No. 162 of 2020 which set up the standing committee to examine complaints submitted by trade union organizations. The Government also refers to the work carried out within the framework of the ILO Project "Strengthening Labour Relations and its institutions in Egypt". In particular, the Government states that 60 cases were examined by the standing committee, where 54 committees requesting registration by the Appeals Committee were invited during 15 plenary meetings and 10 subsidiary meetings, 6 cases were missing, 12 committees were absent while 42 committees attended in order to discuss outstanding problems, resulting in the establishment of 30 committees at present. Work is still under way to resolve the problems of other committees and address the causes of disruption. The Government adds that a Consolidated Standard Procedures Manual on the Standardization of Procedures for the establishment of trade union organizations was published by virtue of Ministerial Resolution No. 227 of 2022 and disseminated to all specialized workers at the labour directorates in the governorates, as well as to those who wish to establish trade union committees, so that everyone is informed of the necessary procedures. Finally, a training programme was developed to build capacities to enhance the performance of officials in the management of effective and fair registration so as to ensure a common understanding by all specialized staff. As regards the allegations of the need to obtain the employer's stamp and approval for registration, the Government indicates that it has issued Circular No.17 of 2022 to all labour directorates specifying that this is not necessary.

As regards allegations of obstacles to trade union registration, the Government indicates that the Trade Union Committees of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Kafr Al Sheikh (incorporated on 12 November 2020), Giza (regularized upon promulgation of the law) and Beni Sewaif; Trade Union Committee of Workers in the Water and Sanitation Company in Qena (incorporated on 17 November 2020); Trade Union Committee of Sanitation Workers in Gharbeya (incorporated on 24 November 2020); Trade Union Committee of Quality Assurance in Giza (incorporated on 29 November 2020); Trade Union Committee of Representatives of associations and private institutions; Trade Union Committee of Workers in Hunting in Giza; Trade Union Committee of Workers in Transportation and Transport in Giza; Trade Union Committee of Workers in Cement in Suez; Trade Union Committee for Workers in Transportation and Transport in Damietta; and Trade Union Committee for Workers in Telecommunications in Qena completed the incorporation procedures in 2020 and 2021. The Committee also notes the detailed information provided by the Government in 2021 and in its latest response to the ITUC received on 26 November 2023 as to the status of certain trade unions not yet registered and their cooperation or the lack thereof in the committee established to address pending concerns.

The Committee observes that ITUC's allegations referred to the following organizations awaiting registration: Real Estate Tax Authority General Union, Union of Workers in Alexandria Company for Ready-made Garment, General Union of Workers in Tourism and Touristic Transportation, Trade Union Committee for Workers in Educational East Mansoura Administration, Occupational Union for Workers in Cement Services in Helwan, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Asuot, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Beheira, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Daqahlia, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Gharbya, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Giza, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Port Said, and Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Qena; while the following trade unions are reported to have had their legal status recognized but are still awaiting the acknowledgement of receipt which allows them to operate and run their activities: Trade Union Committee for Transportation Services in Qaluobia, Trade Union Committee for Workers in Education in Qena, Trade Union Committee for Workers in Educational Kooss Administration, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Fayoum, Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Ismailia and Trade Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate Tax in Qaluobia. The Committee further notes the ITUC's allegations that some directorates deliberately obstruct the activities of some independent trade unions in order to force them to join the Government-affiliated Egyptian Trade Union Federation (ETUF), while the Ministry of Labour declines any responsibility and refuses to instruct Labour Directorates in duly processing registration applications, for example, the Committee of Drivers in the province of Qalioubia. In these circumstances, the Committee urges the Government to accelerate its efforts so that these trade unions may be registered without further delay and may fully exercise their activities. The Committee also requests the Government once again to provide detailed information on the number of trade union registration applications received overall, the number of registrations granted, the reasons for any refusals to grant, as well as information on the average time taken from filing to registration.

Trade union monopoly by decree. The Committee notes with deep concern the ITUC's allegations that the Trade Union Committee of Workers in Bibliotheca Alexandrina registered in September 2022 found its legal status immediately challenged by a "Fatwa" (advisory opinion) from the State Council claiming the illegality of their organization due to the existence of another ETUF-affiliated trade union in parallel. According to the ITUC, the employer, Bibliotheca Alexandrina, now refuses to recognize or deal with the independent trade union. The Committee urges the Government to reply to this serious allegation and indicate all steps taken to resolve the matter so as to ensure that workers may form the organization of their own choosing, even if another trade union already exists at the undertaking.

Minimum membership requirements. The Committee recalls its previous comments requesting the Government to review, with the social partners, the minimum membership requirement to form a trade union of 50 workers for the formation of a trade union committee at enterprise level, ten union committees and 15,000 members for a general union and seven general unions and 150,000 members for the establishment of a trade union federation (namely, a confederation). The Committee observes that the ITUC continues to consider these thresholds too high and that they could not even be met by all ETUF federations, while the Government states that they are not prohibitive. The Government nevertheless indicates that it will again refer the issue to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue at its next meeting in October 2023 to reconsider the minimum membership requirements for registration. The Committee expects that this will result in lowering the thresholds and requests the Government to inform it of the outcome of the review of these requirements with the social partners concerned.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration without interference and to enjoy the benefits of international affiliation. As regards its previous comment concerning penalties imposed under section 67 of Law No. 142, the Committee notes the Government's statement that the penalty imposed upon a trade unionist was not related to this section and that it has published several periodicals to guide workers in the competent administration, in the labour directorates in the governorates and has also provided judicial training, including in respect of the rights of workers wishing to establish trade union organizations even if the incorporation procedures have not been completed.

As regards the provisions in the Trade Union Law setting out conditions for trade union office (section 41.1 and 41.4) which the Committee considered interfered with the right of workers' organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, in particular the requirement to read and write as well as matters related to military service, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it will refer the matter to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue at the Council's next session in October 2023. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken to bring these provisions into conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to inform it of the progress made in this regard.

In the past, the Committee pointed out problems with the following provisions: Sections 30 and 35 of the Trade Union Law, which set out the competencies of executive committees and the election procedure for general assemblies; section 42, concerning detailed rules on the membership of executive committees and their functions; and section 58 which makes the accounts of organizations subject to the control of a central accounting body amounting to interference in their administration, read with section 7 which empowers the Minister in vague and broad terms with the authority to request the competent labour court to hand down a decision to dissolve the administrative board of a trade union organization if there is a violation of the law or a perpetration of gross financial or administrative violations. The Committee takes due note of the explanations given once again by the Government as to the aim of these provisions and its indication that it will take the Committee's comments into account when submitting them to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue. The Committee trusts that the necessary steps will be taken to amend these provisions as appropriate to ensure the right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities without interference.

Trade union elections. The Committee notes the ITUC's allegations that in 2022, many trade unions could not proceed with their internal elections as their application for registration was still pending, despite having been deposited years ago. The ITUC additionally refers to Ministerial Decree No. 61 of 24 April 2022, which establishes the composition of the High Committee for the follow-up and monitoring of trade union elections at the national level composed of the Minister of Labour, with the participation of representatives of the Ministries of Justice, Finance, and Local Development as well as a representative of the administrative prosecution, a representative of the General Federation of Workers Trade Unions, and the legal advisor of the Ministry of Labour. According to the ITUC, the High Committee is clearly under the control of the Government and has simply annulled the candidacy for trade union elections of no fewer than 1,500 trade unionists, often for the benefit of ETUF candidates. The ITUC refers to information received from the CTUWS of the annulment of candidacies, or even the elections as a whole, for trade union elections in the Real Estate Authority in Qalyobia; the Real Estate Authority in Central Office; the independent Union Committee in Nile Lenin Group for Textiles; the trade union committees of Real Estate Taxes in Ismailia and Kafr El Sheikh; the trade union committees of workers in the clubs of Suez Canal Company, and in Fayoum organism of ambulances; the Union Committee of Workers in Real Estate In Qena; the trade unions of workers in Qena entity for potable water and sewages, and in Qalioubia and Qena Real Estate Taxes. The Committee notes these allegations with concern and requests the Government to provide full particulars in this regard.

Labour Code. The Committee has been noting for a number of years that a draft Labour Code was transmitted to the Manpower Committee of the Parliament for debate. In reply to the Committee's considerations in relation to the right to strike, the Committee notes the Government's indication that its comments will be presented to the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue to discuss in a tripartite manner and that these comments will be taken into account in the draft law when discussed by the House of Representatives. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Senate has just finalized the formulation of the new draft Labour Code in preparation for its final discussion by the House of Representatives and that the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue after its recomposition (in accordance with the recommendations of the Project on promoting labour relations and its institutions in Egypt) shall discuss the draft law and examine the comments before it in order to resolve them, and subsequently refer them to the House of Representatives. Noting that the draft Labour Code has been pending adoption by the Parliament for many years now, the Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made for its final adoption and trusts that, in its final form, the Code will ensure full conformity with the Convention.

As regards the work on a law regulating domestic work, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is currently revising the draft law on domestic workers with the social partners and will provide a copy as soon as it is adopted. Although the Trade Union Law has explicitly specified the right of domestic workers to form trade union organizations, the Government indicates that no trade union committee from this category has submitted its papers but that it will continue to disseminate information in this regard. Recalling that the draft Labour Code excludes domestic workers from its coverage, including the chapters relating to collective labour relations, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the draft law regulating domestic work as soon as it is adopted.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1954)

Previous comment

The Committee takes due note of the Government's detailed reply received on 24 November 2021 to the 2021 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and Public Services International (PSI), most of which are addressed in its comment under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee takes due note of the Government's detailed reply denying the allegations of anti-union discrimination in relation to a number of trade unionists in the process of forming new and independent trade unions and to the various acts of interference. Noting the Government's previous reply as to the various legislative provisions protecting workers from anti-union discrimination and interference, the Committee requests the Government to provide with its next report statistics on the number of complaints brought under these provisions, the sanctions imposed and remedies provided.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the exclusion from the scope of application of the draft Labour Code of the right to collective bargaining of civil servants of state agencies, including civil servants of units under local governments. The Committee notes that the Government refers once again to the Trade Union Organizations Law under which all civil workers have the right to form and join unions and to enjoy all the rights and privileges afforded to such organizations, including collective bargaining and consultation to defend their rights. The Government further provides examples of the employees in the Public Transport Corporation, employees at the Ministry of Tourism, as well as employees at the Ministry of Transport that have all benefited from the advantages of collective bargaining. Recalling that the Trade Union Organizations Law does not establish mechanisms and procedures for the engagement in collective bargaining, the Committee notes the Government's reference to Order No. 50 of 2022 which determines the implementing rules governing the exercise of collective bargaining within the administrative body of the State and the preparation of collective labour agreements. The Government further indicates that in order to ensure that State employees who are not engaged in administration, enjoy the right to collective bargaining and collective agreements, the Minister of Labour and the President of the Central Agency for Regulation and Administration (the body which is specialized in matters related to State employees) amended a few provisions in the new draft Labour Code so as to ensure that civil employees in the State are prescribed by clear provisions related to collective bargaining, collective disputes and collective labour agreements. The Committee trusts that the amendments proposed will ensure that public servants not engaged in the administration of the State have the benefit of appropriate machinery ensuring their engagement in voluntary negotiation with a view to the regulation of their terms and conditions of employment and requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

Order No. 50 of 2022. The Committee takes due note of the efforts of the Ministry of Manpower to establish a framework for the exercise of collective bargaining through the adoption of Order No. 50 of 2022. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government: (i) to indicate the criteria for determining the trade union organisation entitled to negotiate in the event of the presence of several trade unions within the enterprise; and (ii) observing that the last paragraph of section 5 of the Order provides that if one of the parties at the enterprise level refuses to engage in bargaining, the labour administration may, at the request of the other party, notify the employers' organisation or the general trade union concerned to begin negotiations on behalf of the recalcitrant party, to specify whether, on this basis, an agreement can be concluded despite the opposition of one of the interested parties.

Finally, the Committee recalls that it has been raising comments relating to restrictions on collective bargaining rights in the Labour Code No. 12 of 2003 for several years, many of which would appear to be addressed in the draft Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Senate has just finalized the formulation of the new draft Labour Code in preparation for its final discussion by the House of Representatives and that the Supreme Council for Social Dialogue after its re-composition (in accordance with the recommendations of the Project on promoting labour relations and its institutions in Egypt) shall discuss the draft law and examine the comments before it in order to resolve them, and subsequently refer them to the House of Representatives. Noting that the draft Labour Code has been pending adoption by the Parliament for many years now, the Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made for its final adoption and trusts that in its final form, the Code will ensure greater conformity with the Convention.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements signed, as well as the sectors involved and the number of workers covered.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 10 November 2022, which refer to matters examined in the present comment.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it expressed concern at the serious allegations made in 2020 by the National Business Association (ANEP), with the support of the IOE, in relation to acts of defamation and intimidation of the President of the ANEP, and of the organization itself. The Committee notes that, in this respect, in communications sent during the course of 2022, the Government indicates that in April 2022 the members of the ANEP freely and independently elected a new President for the period 2021-23. The Government claims that it has respected the independence of the ANEP as an association representing employers and indicates that there has not been any conduct involving harassment, interference or aggression towards the organization. The Committee notes that these matters were examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3380 and the Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in 2022 and 2023 in relation to the application of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee notes the IOE's indication in its observations that, despite the fact that in 2022 the Conference Committee urged the Government to refrain from any aggression and from interfering in the establishment and the activities of employers' and workers' organizations, in particular the ANEP, the Government has continued to show aggression towards employers' organizations and to interfere in their activities. The Committee notes that in 2023 the Conference Committee urged the Government to immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, and to adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated, in particular for the ANEP and its members. The Committee refers to its comments in relation to Convention No. 144 and urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to adopt as soon as possible each and every measure that it has been urged to take by the Conference Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard, with an indication of the measures adopted to guarantee that no other acts of hostility and interference occur against the ANEP or its members and leaders in respect of the freedom of employers to establish organizations of their own choosing, organize their administration and activities and formulate their programmes without interference by the public authorities.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Murder of a trade unionist. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Office of the Attorney-General of the Republic is continuing to investigate the case of the murder of Victoriano Abel Vega, which occurred in 2010. The Committee notes that, in its most recent examination of Case No. 2923, the Committee on Freedom of Association deplored the absence of tangible progress towards the resolution of the case more than 13 years since the murder and firmly urged the Government and all the competent authorities to make, in a coordinated manner and as a matter of urgency and priority, all the necessary efforts to expedite and conclude the investigations under way in order to identify and punish as soon as possible both the instigators and the perpetrators of the murder of Victoriano Abel Vega. The Committee refers to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in that case (403rd Report, June 2023).

The Committee also notes that, when examining Case No. 3395 in relation to the murder of the trade union leader Weder Arturo Meléndez Ramírez, the Committee on Freedom of Association noted that a proposal for the reform of the Criminal Code, drafted by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare with the aim of improving the protection of freedom of association for trade union leaders and members was under examination by the Ministry for subsequent submission to the Legislative Assembly (404th Report, October 2023). The Committee invites the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Pending legislative reforms. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the following legislative and constitutional provisions:

- articles 219 and 236 of the Constitution of the Republic and section 73 of the Civil Service Act, which exclude certain categories of public servants from the right to organize (members of the judiciary, public servants who exercise decision-making authority or are in managerial positions, employees with duties of a highly confidential nature, private secretaries of high-ranking officials, diplomatic representatives, assistants of Public Prosecutors, auxiliary agents, assistant prosecutors, labour prosecutors and delegates);
- section 204 of the Labour Code, which prohibits membership of more than one trade union, so that workers who have more than one job in different occupations or sectors are able to join different trade unions;
- sections 211 and 212 of the Labour Code (and the corresponding provision of the Civil Service Act in respect of unions of public service employees), which establish, respectively, the requirement of a minimum of 35 members to establish a workers' union and a minimum of seven employers to establish an employers' organization, so that these requirements do not hinder the establishment of workers' and employers' organizations in full freedom;
- section 219 of the Labour Code, which provides that, in the process of registering the union, the employer shall certify that the founding members are employees, so as to ensure that the list of the applicant union's members is not communicated to the employer;
- section 248 of the Labour Code, by eliminating the waiting period of six months required for a new attempt to establish a trade union when its registration has been denied;
- article 47(4) of the Constitution of the Republic, section 225 of the Labour Code and section 90 of the Civil Service Act, which establish the requirement to have attained the age of majority and to be a national of El Salvador by birth in order to hold office on the executive committee of a union, which are excessive restrictions on the right of workers to freely elect their representatives;
- article 221 of the Constitution of the Republic so as to limit the prohibition of the right to strike in the public service to officials exercising authority in the name of the State and those who perform their duties in essential services in the strict sense of the term (while recalling that it is also possible to restrict the exercise of the right to strike through the establishment of minimum services in public services of fundamental importance);
- section 529 of the Labour Code so that, when a decision is taken to call a strike, only the votes cast are taken into account, and also that the principle is recognized of the freedom to work of non-strikers and the right of employers and managerial staff to enter the premises of the enterprise or establishment, even where the strike has been decided upon by an absolute majority of the workers; and
- section 553(f) of the Labour Code, which provides that strikes shall be declared unlawful "where inspection shows that the striking workers do not constitute at least 51 per cent of the personnel of the enterprise or establishment", which is inconsistent with section 529(3) of the Labour Code and which restricts excessively the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes.

Furthermore, recalling that prison staff must enjoy the right to organize, the Committee on Freedom of Association and the Committee of Experts requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure full respect of the right of prison staff to organize (Case No. 3321, Report No. 392, October 2020).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the constitutional and legislative reforms referred to above, including the reform of the Labour Code, are under examination by the Legislative Assembly. The Government emphasizes that in August 2022 the Trade Union Office was established, within the National Department of Social Organizations, and indicates that as of March 2023 credentials were issued through that Office for a total of 122 trade union organizations. The Government indicates that an average of 18 organizations a month were accredited between August 2022 and March 2023, which shows that since the establishment of the Office credentials have been issued within an average of ten days, and that the process may take a maximum of 15 days. The Government emphasizes the firm commitment to undertake more labour reforms over the coming years and expresses its good will to continue convening the social partners to engage in working days jointly with the Higher Labour Council and the National Minimum Wage Council. The Government adds that workers in prisons have established unions within the institution for which they work, which is the Ministry of Justice, and that, although three unions have been registered, they have been without leadership for several years.

The Committee takes due note of this information and of the Government's commitment to undertake labour reforms and continue to convene the social partners to the Higher Labour Council and the National Minimum Wage Council. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, at its session in June 2023, the Conference Committee urged the Government to reactivate, without delay, the full operation of the Higher Labour Council and other tripartite bodies and to ensure the development and adoption, in consultation with the social partners, of clear, objective, predictable and legally binding rules to ensure their effective and independent functioning, without any external interference. Moreover, while welcoming the Government's indications concerning the establishment and operation of the Trade Union Office which, as it emphasizes, has facilitated the processes of issuing credentials for trade unions, the Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to put a stop to the delays in issuing the credentials of workers' and employers' organizations, including the ANEP, in line with their right to representation. The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association made specific recommendations in relation to the excessive requirements for the registration and for issuance of credentials for the executive committees of unions (such as the submission of copies of individual identity documents and pay slips in order to verify whether members of executive committees are nationals of El Salvador by birth or to verify the worker's type of contract) and it requested the Government, in consultation with the most representative trade union organizations, to take the necessary measures to review the rules applicable to the registration of executive committees in order to guarantee the right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom and to ensure swift process (Case No. 3258, 393rd Report, March 2021). The Committee further notes the Government's indications in relation to unions in the prison sector and observes that one of the three unions referred to by the Government was the union that made the complaint to the Committee on Freedom of Association, in relation to which the latter requested the Government to take measures to ensure full respect for the right to organize of prison staff.

The Committee firmly expects to be able to note progress in the near future on all the legislative matters referred to above that have been pending for many years. The Committee reminds the Government that ILO technical assistance is available to it and urges it, following tripartite consultation, to take the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of the provisions referred to above with the Convention. The Committee also urges the Government as soon as possible, in consultation with the social partners, to take the measures that it was urged to adopt by the Conference Committee and that have been requested by the Committee on Freedom of Association. The Committee hopes that the Trade Union Office will play an important role in ensuring the expeditious nature of the processes of registration and issuing credentials for the executive committees of unions and requests the Government to provide statistical data on procedures for the registration of the executive committees of employers' and workers' organizations. Moreover, observing that the case examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the prison sector, as referred to above, was filed by a union in the sector, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full recognition of the right to organize of workers in that sector.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee has been commenting for a number of years on the need for the Government to bring labour legislation into conformity with the Convention and, in its 2020 observation, it urged the Government to provide a full reply in that respect. In particular, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) amend section 5 of Act No. 12/1992 on trade unions and collective labour relations so that enterprise trade unions may be established; (ii) amend section 10 of Act No. 12/1992 so as to reduce the minimum number of workers required for an occupational association to obtain legal personality; (iii) confirm that, as a result of a revision of the Fundamental Act in 1995 (Act No. 1 of 1995), the right to strike is recognized in public utilities and the manner in which this right is exercised; (iv) provide information on the services deemed to be essential and the minimum services to be ensured, as provided for in section 37 of Act No. 12/1992; and (v) provide information on whether public servants who do not exercise authority in the name of the State enjoy the right to strike, in accordance with section 58 of the Fundamental Act. The Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour, Employment Promotion and Social Protection has set up a Legislative Committee and a General Directorate for Regulations with a view to updating social labour legislation, and that work is currently being carried out to amend the Act on the general labour regulations, the Act on inspections and Act No. 12/1992 on trade unions and collective labour relations, based on the comments and observations of the ILO supervisory bodies; and that the Government hopes that shortly the texts will be discussed with the social partners and shared with the ILO. While welcoming the Government's information, the Committee urges the Government to, as soon as possible and in consultation with the social partners, and the technical assistance of the Office, bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention.

Furthermore, the Committee noted the comments of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2011 on the application of the Convention and the persistent refusal to register various trade unions, namely the Trade Union of Workers of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Services Union (SIS), the Teachers' Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Agricultural Workers' Organization (OTC). The Committee notes the Government's indication that it regrets that those organizations have not been able to register due to administrative problems and hopes that, even though their applications may have expired under the current law, they can initiate new processes in conformity with the current legislation. Taking due note of this information and regretting to note that time has lapsed without the organizations being able to be registered, the Committee urges the Government to provide information relating to these organizations, indicating whether it has been possible to proceed with their registration.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that, further to its urgent appeal in 2020, it was bound to examine the application of the Convention in 2021 in the absence of information from the Government. The Committee notes the first report provided by the Government since 2007 on the application of the Convention and encourages it to provide information regularly from now on concerning the application of this fundamental Convention.

Article 4 of the Convention. Collective bargaining. The Committee previously noted the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the repeated refusal to recognize various unions, namely the Workers' Federation of Equatorial Guinea (UST), the Independent Service Union (SIS), the Teachers' Trade Union Association (ASD) and the Rural Workers' Organization (OTC), and the lack of a legal framework for the development of collective bargaining. In this regard, it emphasized once again that the existence of freely established trade unions is a prerequisite for the application of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indications relating to the establishment of a Legislative Commission and a General Directorate of Legislative Regulation, which are currently working on the amendment of the Act on General Labour Regulation, the Action on Inspections and the Act on Trade Unions and Collective Labour Relations, and its hopes that it will soon be possible to discuss these texts with the social partners and share them with the ILO. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it regrets that it has not been possible to register the organizations referred to above due to administrative problems and hopes that, despite the fact that their applications have expired under the legislation that is in force, it will be possible to set in motion new procedures under the current legislation. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to create appropriate conditions for the establishment of trade unions that are able to engage in collective bargaining with a view to regulating terms and conditions of employment. The Committee also urges the Government once again to proceed without delay to the registration of the trade unions referred to above which, when they have fulfilled the legal requirements, once again apply for registration, and to provide information on this matter in its next report.

Article 6. Right of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, despite the fact that the Special Act on the Right to Organize of Employees in the Public Administration has not yet been approved, important administrative measures are being adopted with a view to the adoption of legislation on this matter in the near future, and that public employees who are not public servants are already covered by the Act on Trade Unions, the general labour regulations and other labour legislation for the defence of their rights. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that it will soon request ILO technical assistance for the various areas of the world of work. The Committee refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and urges the Government to adopt the necessary legislative measures to guarantee the right to organize of workers in the public administration and to provide detailed information on the application of the Convention in respect of public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it does not have available information on the existence of collective agreements in the country, where the only workers' trade union, the Trade Union of Small-scale Farmers (OSPA), is limited in its operation and only represents the farming sector, but that it hopes to be able to provide this information in the near future.

Emphasizing with concern the existence of serious shortcomings in compliance with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to adopt in the near future the measures necessary to enable workers, in law and practice, to bargain collectively their conditions of work through freely established trade union organizations. Taking due note of the Government's intention to continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance, the Committee trusts that the Government will be able to provide information in the near future on substantial progress in the application of the Convention.

Eritrea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Civil liberties. The Committee notes that in reply to its repeated past requests to provide information on how the right of trade unions to hold public meetings and demonstrations is secured in law and in practice, the Government indicates that fundamental human rights, including freedom of assembly and freedom of opinion and expression, are secured under the 1994 National Charter of Eritrea. It adds that trade unionists were able to hold meetings freely on their own premises for the discussion of trade union matters without prior authorization or interference by public authorities. To hold public meetings, organizations must observe the general rules applicable to such gatherings. The Government indicates that the National Confederation of Eritrean Workers (NCEW) has annually conducted May Day processions or demonstrations in support of social and economic demands. The NCEW also attended every meeting of regional African trade unions and international confederations to which they are affiliated. The Government further adds that where trade unionists are arrested or charged for breaching public order, they are entitled to refer the case to the judiciary, with all guarantees of due process of law. Penal procedure guarantees are set out in the Transitional Penal Code of Eritrea and applied in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning the rules that generally apply to public meetings and demonstrations and preservation of public order, and to provide copies of any laws or regulations governing this matter. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate whether organizations other than the NCEW have been able to hold public demonstrations and meetings, including examples as to the dates and approximate size of such demonstrations and meetings, and to provide information concerning the number of trade unionists arrested or charged for breaching the public order, and the sentences imposed in their cases.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Compulsory national service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that large numbers of Eritrean nationals were denied the right to organize for indefinite periods of their active lives while they were forced to perform work as part of their compulsory national service and recalled that the exception in Article 9(1) of the Convention is justified on the basis of the responsibility of the police, security and armed forces for the external and internal security of the State and must be construed in a restrictive manner, so as to apply only to purely military and policing functions and not to the whole active population mobilized for work in non-military areas as diverse as agriculture, construction, civil administration and education for indefinite periods of time under martial law that denies them the right to organize. The Committee urged the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied the right to organize beyond the period of military service, during which they would perform work only of a purely military character. The Government indicates in this regard that the national service is limited to 18 months and large-scale demobilization has taken place by assigning national servicepersons under civil services or other public sector jobs to carry out civilian functions with adequate salary. According to the Government, after the 18 month-service, servicepersons are no longer conscripts but are civil servants and have the right to organize. The Committee notes however, that the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Eritrea of 9 May 2023 indicates that: (i) the policy of national service includes a civil service component and compulsory military service component; (ii) no progress has been made towards reforming national service, ensuring that the legal limits for its duration are respected or protecting the rights of citizens serving in the programme; (iii) the Special Rapporteur identified an upsurge in forced recruitment between mid- and late 2022, when in several regions, reservists over 50 years of age, and according to reports up to 70 years old, were called upon to serve in Tigray and in the border areas with Ethiopia (A/HRC/53/20, paragraphs 27, 30, 34). The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government does not indicate any measures taken to review the Proclamation on National Service (No. 82 of 1995) which allows the use of servicepersons in development work; that the national service continues to have a “civil service” component and that the practice of forced conscription for indefinite periods continued and even intensified during the reporting period. In view of the foregoing, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to guarantee that the imposition of national service does not deny Eritrean nationals their right to organize beyond the legal period of service during which they would perform only work of a military nature, through: (i) reviewing the National Service Proclamation with a view to ensuring that servicepersons are not forced to do development or other non-military work as part of their national service, while they are subject to martial law and denied the right to organize; (ii) ensuring that legal limits for the duration of national service are respected in practice and putting an end to forced conscription for indefinite periods. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Civil servants. In its previous comments the Committee noted that Eritrean law does not guarantee the right of civil servants to organize, as they were excluded from the scope of the Labour Proclamation while the declared process of adoption of a special law governing their status was not progressing. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous indications in this regard, that the freedom of association of civil servants is fully guaranteed as they can form professional associations under sections 404 and 406 of the Civil Code and adds that the drafting process of the civil servants’ code is still in the final stage of approval. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it noted that Civil Code “professional associations” did not enjoy the same capacity as labour law associations in terms of representation of the occupational interests of their members. Furthermore, these associations cannot form or join trade union federations and confederations, and are susceptible to dissolution by the administrative authority where their “object or activities are unlawful or contrary to morality” (section 415 of the 2015 Civil Code). The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that demobilized conscripts are assigned to civil service and other public service jobs where they enjoy the right to organize, specifying that workers of public or semi-public enterprises are covered under the Labour Proclamation, while civil servants can form associations under the Civil Code. In view of the foregoing, the Committee notes that demobilized conscripts assigned to civil service will not fully enjoy the rights guaranteed by the Convention. Noting with regret the lack of progress on this matter, the Committee urges the Government to take adequate normative and practical measures to ensure, that pending the process of adoption of the civil service code, public servants can fully and without further delay enjoy the rights guaranteed in the Convention and establish organizations with full capacity of representing and defending their occupational interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Domestic workers. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that section 40 of the Labour Proclamation, which provides that the Minister may determine by regulation the provisions of the proclamation that shall apply to all or a category of domestic employees, casts doubt on the application of freedom of association guarantees to this group of workers. The Committee therefore requested the Government to either abrogate section 40 or rapidly adopt the regulation referred to therein. The Government indicates that it has no intention of abrogating section 40 but has committed to adopting the regulation concerning domestic employees, and adds that domestic workers are covered by general standards of the Civil Code and are entitled to the rights and freedoms guaranteed in the Labour Proclamation. Recalling that domestic workers and their organizations should be guaranteed the full range of the rights enshrined in the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning: (i) any organization representing domestic employees in Eritrea and, (ii) any progress in the adoption of the section 40 regulation concerning domestic workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Legislative issues. The personal scope of the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that Eritrean law does not explicitly provide domestic workers the rights guaranteed under the Convention and that all civil servants, including those not engaged in the administration of the State are excluded from the scope of the Labour Proclamation and no other special law provides them with the rights guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee notes that regarding domestic workers the Government indicates that it is because of the personal nature of the services rendered by these workers and the isolation in which they work that the law gives the Minister the power to issue a regulation specifically applicable to them and reiterates that the process of drafting the regulation that will afford domestic workers the rights enshrined in the Convention is still underway. The Government further indicates that the 2015 Civil Code also includes certain provisions on the rights of domestic employees. The Committee notes that the 2015 Civil Code contains provisions on the contract of domestic employment without however covering the rights to organize and collective bargaining. Concerning civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Government reiterates that they will have access to the right to organize and collective bargaining upon the adoption of the Civil Service Code, and in the meantime, the provisions of the Civil Code shall apply to them. The Committee notes that section 2182 of the Civil Code refers to the determination of the procedure for collective bargaining, the form and content of a collective agreement, and its duration according to special legislation, namely sections 99-114 of the Labour Proclamation No. 118/2001 (LP). Whereas civil servants not engaged in the administration of the state and domestic workers are not covered by these provisions, the Committee notes with concern that Eritrean law still fails to guarantee these two groups of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to accelerate the process of adoption of the Ministerial Regulation concerning domestic workers and the Civil Service Code and to ensure that the rights enshrined in the Convention are duly guaranteed in this framework. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect and to communicate the relevant legislative drafts.

Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the LP neither provides for remedies in case of anti-union discrimination at recruitment and during employment, nor for reinstatement of union members other than leaders dismissed for union membership or activities. It had further noted that legal compensation and sanctions against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference are inadequate. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in this regard that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare is engaged to finalize the amendments of the LP concerning protection against anti-union discrimination during employment and the compensation provided. Concerning sanctions against acts of interference and anti-union discrimination, the Government indicates that these acts are unfair labour practices entailing punishment and it is up to the complainant or the labour inspector to file a suit in the First Instance Labour Court of Eritrea in this regard. The Government also once again refers to the provisions of the Transitional Penal Code of Eritrea (TPC) concerning “petty offences” as legal basis for further applicable sanctions. The Committee notes however that section 692 of the TPC refers to penalties provided in special legislation, namely a fine not exceeding 1,200 Nakfa – US$80 – pursuant to section 118(5) of the LP. The Committee is bound to note that this fine cannot be considered an effective or dissuasive sanction. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to review the Labour Proclamation with a view to: (i) providing adequate protection against anti-union discrimination to all workers at every moment of the employment relationship, including recruitment, during employment and at its termination; (ii) ensuring that adequate compensation is provided to victims both in occupational and financial terms; and (iii) modify section 118(5) of the LP, with a view to providing effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Compulsory national service. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that during the compulsory national service, which is of indefinite duration and contains both a military and a civilian component, Eritrean nationals were deprived of their right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that while conscripts are excluded from the right to collective bargaining during the service of purely military character, those who perform national service in state-owned enterprises have bargaining rights equal to that of other workers, and those who work in other public sector positions can exercise their rights under the Civil Code. The Committee considers that the servicepersons who perform non-military work in public service positions and are not engaged in the administration of the State should have the right to collective bargaining and notes that the Civil Code does not provide a framework for collective bargaining. As to the duration of the service, the Committee notes that pursuant to the report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights in Eritrea it continues to be indefinite, both in its military and civilian components (A/HRC/53/20, paragraph 27). In view of the foregoing, the Committee notes that all persons performing compulsory national service, with the probable exception of those assigned to work in state-owned enterprises, continue to be deprived of their right to collective bargaining for periods that have no limitation in practice. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied their right to bargain collectively beyond the scope of the exceptions set out in Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to take action to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining and to provide updated information on collective agreements concluded and in force. The Committee notes that the Government merely repeats information provided in its previous report. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to: (i) take action to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining and to inform on the initiatives taken in this respect; and (ii) provide updated information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force disaggregated by the sectors concerned, the names of employers' and workers' organizations party to those agreements and the number of workers covered.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance regarding the issues raised in this comment.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1996)

Article 2 of the Convention. Facilities afforded to workers' representatives in the enterprise. The Committee notes the adoption and entry into force on 22 November 2021 of the amendments to the Act on Trade Unions and the Act on Staff Representatives. The Committee notes with interest that the above-mentioned amendments provide for an increase in accredited hours to be attributed by the employer to the staff representatives to carry out their functions, in the event that there is more than one staff representative in any given enterprise.

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations received on 4 September 2023 from the Trade Union Congress of Swaziland (TUCOSWA), on 27 September 2023 from the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) and on 28 September 2023 from Education International (EI), all denouncing the deteriorating state of trade-union rights and the excessive violence of the police forces against gatherings and marches organized by trade unions, the harassment and death threats against union leaders, and the murder of Mr Thulani Maseko, a human rights and trade union rights defender. The Committee notes the Government's reply to these observations, as well as to observations received in 2019 from TUCOSWA providing information on the report of the Committee of investigation set up to hear the cases and make recommendations. The matters raised in the above communications are addressed in this comment.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. Anti-union repression. The Committee notes with deep concern the serious allegations from the ITUC and ITF regarding the persecution and murders of trade unionists and the excessive violence against strikers that increased in 2022 and 2023, with allegedly more than 80 people reported to have lost their lives because of police crackdown on protests that demanded democracy and wage increases. In its reply, the Government refers to the situation in the country since June 2021 with an outbreak of violence, looting, attacks on public and private property and ruthless killings of public officers and civilians in a gross breach of public peace and security. According to the Government, these unprecedented riots, looting and violence could be associated with political insurgencies and should not be associated with the exercise of rights under the Convention. Investigations into these acts are still ongoing to identify and punish the perpetrators. The ITUC and ITF further allege that Mr Thulani Maseko, a human and trade union rights lawyer was brutally shot on 23 January 2023 at his home in Manzini. To date, no arrest in connection to this murder has been made. In its reply, the Government indicates that the death of Mr Maseko was a loss for the country at large, however political opportunists have saturated social media with stories about the motive and alleged perpetrators of this assassination. As regards the allegations that the police and security forces intervened violently during protest actions organized by the Swaziland Transport, Communication and Allied Workers' Union (SWATCAWU) (October 2021 and November 2022) and during a march of public sector workers demanding a wage increase (October 2021) and causing serious casualties among workers, the Government states that the protest October 2021 was by no means peaceful. In the capital city of Mbabane, a large group of protesters was demanding regime change and causing structural damage, looting and burning tyres on the highway. The situation was out of control and the police had to mount several check points and roadblocks at strategic places. The police applied minimum force to disperse the protestors and restore order, warning shots were fired in the air and tear gas was discharged against the protestors who had turned violent towards the police. During the commotion, a person was shot and died on arrival at hospital. In November 2022, after a court ruling against five public transport workers charged with assault, a group of workers who had gone to protest around the court premises shifted to the surrounding areas burning tyres and looting shops. The police had to disperse the crowd in an effort to restore order. Finally, as regards allegations that the personal assets of leaders of the Amalgamated Trade Union of Swaziland (ATUSWA) were ravaged in April 2022, a week after a protest action in the textile and garment industry, the Government states that there were numerous burnings of homes and buildings belonging to political figures, influential people, police officers and targeted individuals. The police are still investigating the incidents. The Committee recalls that the rights of workers' and employers' organizations can only develop in a climate free of violence, threats and pressure, and that it is for the Government to guarantee that these rights can be exercised normally. It further recalls that Article 8 of the Convention provides that workers and their organizations, like other persons or organized collectivities, shall respect the law of the land and that the law of the land shall not be such as to impair, nor shall it be so applied so as to impair, the guarantees provided for in this Convention. The authorities should resort to the use of force only in situations where law and order is seriously threatened. The intervention of the forces of order should be in due proportion to the danger to law and order that the authorities are attempting to control, and governments should take measures to ensure that the competent authorities receive adequate instructions so as to eliminate the danger entailed by the use of excessive violence when controlling demonstrations which might result in a disturbance of the peace. Where investigations have concluded abuse, the absence of convictions against those guilty of crimes against trade union officers and members creates, in practice, a situation of impunity, which reinforces the climate of violence and insecurity, and which is extremely damaging to the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide copies of the court decisions against the five public transport workers charged with assault, as well as information on the outcome of the police investigations mentioned above.

Harassment in the education sector. The Committee notes with deep concern the serious allegations from the ITUC, ITF, EI and TUCOSWA of violations of trade union rights in the education sector, in particular against the Swaziland National Association of Teachers (SNAT): (i) serious acts of anti-union discrimination against and harassment of Mr Mbongwa Dlamini, President of SNAT, since his election at the head of the teachers' union. Through the Teaching Service Commission (TSC), the authorities harassed Mr Dlamini with misconduct charges, leading to decisions of suspension of pay and transfer. Despite a decision of the Industrial Court dated May 2023 in favour of Mr Dlamini, who has not been paid since September 2022, the authorities have still failed to pay him and have appealed the court decision. Mr Dlamini has now been dismissed from his duties by the Teaching Service Commission as he was expected to go to work without being remunerated. EI denounces the dismissal of the President of SNAT for merely bearing his mandate as representing teachers; (ii) in February 2023, Mr Dlamini went into hiding after receiving multiple death threats while he was outside of Eswatini. This decision was made after the assassination of the human rights lawyer, Thulani Maseko. The SNAT executive determined that it was necessary for the union President to relocate to a safe place outside the country; (iii) the TSC is now allegedly threatening the Secretary General of SNAT, Mr Lot Mduduzi Vilakati, for defending the President and SNAT members; (iv) the authorities refused in 2023 to implement the 3 per cent increase in dues for SNAT members and also refused to include new members recruited by SNAT. According to EI, this is a move by the Government to reduce the membership of SNAT to less than 50 per cent so that they can deregister the union. New members are not put in the system and members are removed from the system by the Government without the members' knowledge; (v) the Government continues to initiate and encourage union-bashing as seen in the Government sponsored splinter groups, casualization of teachers, print and electronic media threats against SNAT, suspension of union officials, implementation of the "no work no pay" policy, use of threats, spying, and vilification of SNAT leaders and members. The consequences of the Government's deliberate actions to weaken SNAT, lead to increased intimidation, a decrease in SNAT membership, an increase in conflicts and grievances in schools, incapacitated leadership leading to a fear of assuming union positions, and low turnout in union activities; (vi) violent repression by the police against protests and a march organized by SNAT between 2018 and 2019; (vii) EI is alarmed by the threats made against SNAT and its members, including the declaration of SNAT as a terrorist entity by people holding high positions in Eswatini; and (viii) Ms Xolile Mnisi Sacolo, Chairperson of the Limkokwing Branch of the National Workers Union of Higher Institutions (NAWUSHI), appealed against a predetermined disciplinary action targeting her as a union official was wrongfully dismissed by a court decision in August 2023 on claims that she was causing delays.

In its reply, the Government denies the allegations that Mr Mbongwa Dlamini, President of SNAT, was forced into exile following threats by security forces and asserts that he is actively participating and engaging in union activities. Furthermore, the Government states that there is no criminal matter pending against Mr Dlamini, nor is there an arrest warrant issued or pending. Additionally, the judicial appeal against the Industrial Court decision of May 2023 in favour of Mr Dlamini is still pending before the High Court. Regarding its alleged attempt to stop collection and remittance of the union dues, the Government declares the allegations as fallacy and untrue. The Government and SNAT have a clear and standing Recognition Agreement that dates back many years, which it fully respects.

With regard to the allegations of threats against the leadership of SNAT, the Committee firmly recalls that acts of intimidation and physical violence against trade unionists constitute a grave violation of freedom of association and the failure to protect against such acts amounts to de facto impunity, which can only reinforce a climate of fear and uncertainty highly detrimental to the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments to the remaining allegations, to indicate any measures taken to enable SNAT to develop its activities in the education sector without threats against its leadership or interference, on the present status of Mr Mbongwa Dlamini who was allegedly harassed and threatened because of his union mandate, and on the outcome of the judicial appeal against the decision of May 2023 of the Industrial Court in favour of Mr Dlamini and any follow-up to it.

Article 3 of the Convention. Ban on trade union gatherings by administrative order. The Committee notes with concern the allegation from all of the above-mentioned trade unions that the rights of the freedom of assembly of workers' organizations is considerably restricted as the laws regulating gatherings are suspended by an administrative order of October 2021 of the Ministry of Housing and Urban Development, which extended the ban on demonstrations, marches and petition deliveries in all urban areas and towns. The said ministerial order revoked the powers of Municipal Councils to entertain gathering notices. The situation is akin to an undeclared state of emergency as the police can only allow up to three people to march. Despite a court ruling lifting the ban in February 2022, the Government allegedly continues to prohibit and cracks down on gatherings and protests. This matter remained unresolved at the mediation. In the midst of a voluntary conciliation meeting to resolve the issue in July 2023, the Government issued a public announcement, purporting a relaxation of the ban, thereby allowing the Municipal Councils, as of 18 July 2023, to issue permits for gatherings not exceeding ten people. TUCOSWA recalled however that the Public Order Act, 2017, permits the gathering of not more than 50 people without notice requirements. The trade unions regretted that trade union gatherings remain banned in Eswatini.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that trade unions should be able to hold meetings, in accordance with the principle embodied in Article 3 of the Convention, whereby organizations have the right to freely organize their activities without interference from the authorities. The authorities should refrain from any interference which would restrict freedom of assembly or impede the lawful exercise thereof, provided that the exercise of these rights does not cause a serious and imminent threat to public order (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 115). The Committee also considers that trade unions must conform to the general provisions applicable to all public meetings and must respect the reasonable limits which may be fixed by the authorities to avoid disturbances in public places. Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure in law and in practice that representative organizations fully enjoy the right to hold public meetings enshrined in the Convention, and therefore to repeal any text whose application would considerably limit the possibilities of representative organizations to hold large-scale public meetings to defend the occupational interests of their members.

Police violence against industrial actions. Findings of the Investigation Committee. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the outcomes of the examination by the Independent Investigation Committee of the complaints made in September 2018 and September 2019 by TUCOSWA and the ITUC on the alleged violence against peaceful industrial actions. The Committee notes that the Investigation Committee recommended, inter alia, the following: (i) training of lower ranked police officers, the union leadership and Marshalls, and the public at large in trade union rights and the handling of industrial actions; (ii) both police and union leadership should commit to upholding the law during industrial actions and develop a culture of cooperation; (iii) video recording of industrial actions should be considered for review purpose; and (iv) an independent monitor (individual or organization) should be involved in the preparation during the industrial action.

The Committee notes that in parallel to this investigation process, the Government and TUCOSWA negotiated and agreed in May 2023 to resort to a national voluntary conciliation on matters giving rise to a complaint lodged before the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 3425 presented by TUCOSWA in March 2022), and those addressed in this comment. The Committee observes, from the report of the conciliation issued in September 2023, that the parties agreed to avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office regarding the regulatory and practical issues concerning the handling of industrial action and public gatherings organized by trade unions.

The Committee recalls that allegations of police violence while handling trade union demonstrations have been recurrent in the past years and that the Government has benefited from the technical assistance of the Office for the adoption and the dissemination of the Code of Good Practice for Industrial and Protest Actions (Legal Notice No. 202 of 2015), the Code of Good Practice on Gatherings (Legal Notice No. 201 of 2017) and the Public Order Act of 2017, as a capacity-building strategy of the various stakeholders on how industrial and protest actions can be well managed in the country, in order to minimize unwarranted confrontations between protestors and members of the law enforcement agencies and Municipal Councils. In its 2019 report, the Government reported plans for the sensitization of members of Parliament, Cabinet Ministers and executive leaders of trade unions in this regard. The Committee acknowledges the tangible measures taken by the Government in 2022 and 2023 to investigate the matters previously raised by the unions and to seek corrective measures. Taking note of the recommendations of both the Investigation Committee and the national voluntary conciliation, the Committee expects that the Government will take measures without delay and in consultation with the social partners for the dissemination of codes of good practices so that trade union rights to engage in protest and industrial action in defence of occupational interests are indeed protected, both in law and practice. The Committee hopes that the Government will avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to report fully on progress made in this regard and once again requests that the Government also provides information, where appropriate, on violations identified and penalties imposed pursuant to section 49(1) of the Police Service Act, No.22 of 2018 (disciplinary action against abuse of power by members of the police).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2021, as well as those of Education International (EI), received on 31 August 2023 concerning matters examined in this comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 109th Session, June 2021)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention and examines the effect given to its conclusions below.

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The right to establish and join federations and confederations. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to amend section 3 of the Labour Proclamation No. 1156/2019 (LP) to recognize and guarantee the right to organize for the categories of workers excluded from its scope. The Committee recalls that section 3(2) of the LP excludes the following categories of employment relations or workers in both public and private sectors from its scope: (a) contracts for the purpose of upbringing, care or rehabilitation; (b) contracts for the purpose of educating or training other than apprentices; (c) managerial employees; (d) contracts of personal (domestic) service, and (e) employees of state administration, judges, prosecutors and others whose employment is governed by special laws. The Committee notes that, regarding domestic workers, section 3(3)(c) of the LP provides that the Council of Ministers shall issue a Regulation governing their conditions of work. The Committee further notes that certain excluded groups such as teachers have formed “professional associations” governed by the Organizations of Civil Societies Proclamation No. 1113/2019 (CSOP), but that according to the ITUC and EI, these organizations cannot join federations and confederations. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that every effort will be made to solve the problem by conducting a research-based discussion with the stakeholders using the newly created platform relating to the inclusion of the right to establish and join organizations in the special laws governing the conditions of work of excluded workers. The Committee notes with concern that four years after its previous examination of the application of the Convention in Ethiopia and two years after the Conference Committee discussion, no concrete measures have been taken to recognize and guarantee the right of excluded workers and employers to establish and join organizations. Recalling that the only possible exception to the application of the Convention pertains to the members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee urges the Government to either amend section 3 of the LP or adopt adequate legal provisions to recognize and guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention to the excluded categories of workers and employers. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this respect.

Civil servants. The Conference Committee requested the Government to provide information on the status of the ongoing civil service reform as regards the granting of the right to organize to all civil servants. The Committee previously noted that the Government had repeatedly affirmed its readiness to address the matter and that, in full consultations with the social partners, it would take all the necessary measures to grant civil servants and employees of the state administration the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not report any progress in this regard but only indicates that civil servants can form “professional associations” and that the Government is still in the process of studying and discussing measures to ensure their right to organize. The Committee further notes that the “professional organizations” formed under the CSOP do not appear to enjoy important rights specific to employers and workers’ organizations, such as the right to represent their members in labour relations and to establish or join federations and confederations, whereas these rights are defined within the framework of the LP only. The Committee is therefore bound to urge the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with organizations representing the employees concerned, to recognize and guarantee the right to organize of all civil servants, including employees of state administration, teachers in public schools, care workers, judges, prosecutors and managerial workers and to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Teachers. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to take all necessary measures, in law and in practice, to ensure that teachers' trade unions are registered and recognized as such and can join other trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National High Court ruled that, due to the existence of a professional association previously registered under the name of the National Teachers' Association (NTA), no other association could be registered under this name. The Committee also notes the Government's submission to the Conference Committee that the Ethiopian Teachers' Association (ETA), an affiliate of EI which has more than 600,000 members, has been registered since 1949 and operates for the advancement of teachers' rights and interests. The Committee notes that according to the EI, the ETA is unable to become a member of the Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions because of the exclusion of workers involved in education and training from the coverage of the LP. It further notes the ITUC's indication that while the registration request of the NTA appears to have failed, the ETA is only recognized as an occupational organization, although it has been requesting recognition as a trade union for a long time to be able to fully represent its associates in collective bargaining and to join a trade union confederation; however, in absence of legislative reforms, such recognition remains impossible. The Committee recalls that in May 2013, in the framework of the Joint Statement on the Working Visit of the ILO Mission, the Government had committed itself to registering the NTA under the Charities and Societies Proclamation (the predecessor of the CSOP). The Committee notes with regret that despite this longstanding formal commitment of the Government, the NTA has not succeeded in obtaining registration. The Committee notes that the legal issues raised in relation to the full recognition and guarantee of Ethiopian teachers' right to organize are due to: (i) the exclusion of private and public sector teachers from the scope of the LP and, (ii) the inadequacy of the guarantees granted to teachers' associations governed by the CSOP, which do not allow the ETA to join a confederation or represent its members in collective bargaining. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to, in full consultation with the social partners, review the legislation with a view to giving full recognition and guarantee to the rights of private and public sector teachers under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect.

Articles 2 and 7. Right to establish organizations without previous authorization, conditions of recognition of legal personality. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to revise section 59.1(b) of the CSOP in order to ensure that the grounds for refusal of trade union registration are not excessively broad. The Committee notes that section 59.1(b) provides that the Civil Societies Organization Agency shall refuse to register an organization where it finds that the aim of the organization or the activities description under its rules are contrary to law or public morals. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this regard, while in its written submission to the Conference Committee it had indicated that this provision primarily aims to prevent wrongdoing by civil society organizations and NGOs. The Committee further notes that pursuant to section 61 of the CSOP, the acquisition of legal personality depends on registration. The Committee once again recalls that registration should be a simple formality and should not amount to a requirement of prior authorization for establishment of organizations, and that "public moral grounds" constitute too wide and vague a ground for refusal of registration and acquisition of legal personality, giving an excessively broad discretion to the authorities to block the registration and acquisition of legal personality for organizations. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise section 59.1(b) of the CSOP with a view to removing "contrary to public morals" as grounds for refusal of registration of an organization and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. Essential services. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to delete air transport and urban light rail transport services from the list of essential services. The Committee notes the Government's indication that currently, light rail transport constitutes the main means of transportation for large numbers of people in urban areas and would be deleted from the list of essential services when other public transportation options start being widely used. The Committee recalls that these services do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term – that is services, the interruption of which may endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee therefore requests once again that the Government take the necessary measures so that the air and urban light rail transport services are deleted from the list of essential services in section 137.2(a) and (d) of the LP and recalls that it may give consideration instead to the establishment of a system of minimum service in these services of public utility. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken or envisaged in this respect.

Quorum required for a strike ballot. The Committee notes that section 159.3 of the LP requires that a decision to take a strike action must be supported by a simple majority of the workers concerned in a meeting attended by at least two-thirds of the trade union members. The Committee recalls that it requested the Government to revise the legislation, with a view to reducing the two-thirds quorum required for the strike ballot, which may unduly hinder the possibility of calling a strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the right to strike would not be effective in the absence of support by the majority of workers. Recalling that strikes are essential means available to workers and their organizations to protect their interests, the Committee considers that where the law requires a vote by workers before a strike can be held, account should be taken only of the votes cast and the required quorum and majority should be fixed at a reasonable level. The observance of a quorum of two-thirds of union members may be difficult to reach and can unduly hinder the right to strike in practice. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 159.3 of the LP and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by the administrative authority. The Conference Committee called upon the Government to make sure that the appeal of members, founders or managers against dissolution of their organization by administrative decision has suspensive effect. The Committee notes that section 77.4 of the CSOP gives the Director General of the Civil Societies Organization Agency the power to order the suspension of the activities of an organization for a period not exceeding three months, when investigation has revealed a grave violation of the law in relation to those activities. A right to appeal of the organization to the board of the Agency and then to the Federal High Court is provided in section 77.5. The power of the Director General to suspend the activities of the organization is also provided under section 78.4, in case an organization does not alter or rectify its practice after receiving a strict warning. In this case, the suspension order can entail the dissolution of the organization unless it has been lifted by the Board of the Agency or by court order. Section 78.5 of the CSOP provides for a right to appeal to the Federal High Court for the members, founders or managers of the organization dissolved by decision of the Board. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information regarding the suspensive effect of appeals, and recalls that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations and should therefore be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees. This can only be ensured through a normal judicial procedure, which should also have the effect of a stay of execution (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 162). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the CSOP so as to ensure that the appeal against such administrative decisions has suspensive effect. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance regarding the issues raised in this comment.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

Articles 1–6 of the Convention. Personal scope of the Convention. In its previous comment the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 3 of Labour Proclamation No. 1156/2019 (LP) or adopt other adequate legislative provisions to recognize and guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention to the categories of workers excluded from the scope of the LP. Section 3(2) of the LP excludes the following employment relations or workers in both public and private sectors from its scope: (a) contracts for the purpose of upbringing, care or rehabilitation; (b) contracts for the purpose of educating or training other than apprentice; (c) managerial employees; and (d) contracts of personal (domestic) service. The Committee notes the Government's indication in this regard that it will continue its efforts to ensure the protection of the right to organize and collective bargaining by conducting research-based discussions with social partners about the necessity and inclusion of such right in the special laws governing the working conditions of excluded categories. The Committee notes with concern, that the Government does not report any progress regarding this longstanding issue. The Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all workers, with the sole exception of members of the police and the armed forces and public servants engaged in the administration of the State and that workers in care, education and domestic work sectors, as well as managerial employees should be guaranteed all the rights enshrined in the Convention in law and in practice. Based on the above, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the categories of workers and employers excluded from the scope of the Labour Proclamation are guaranteed the rights enshrined in the Convention, either by amending section 3(1) of the Labour Proclamation, or through the adoption of adequate provisions in the special laws that apply to those categories. The Committee further requests the Government to: (i) communicate the texts of the special laws that govern the working conditions of excluded categories, including any Council of Ministers Regulation concerning "personal services" (domestic work) that may be adopted pursuant to section 3.3(c) of the Labour Proclamation; and (ii) to provide information on any steps taken to extend legal protection to the excluded categories.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the LP does not provide specific protection against acts of interference and had requested the Government to take measures in this regard. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this regard. The Committee recalls that to provide the guarantees enshrined in Article 2 of the Convention, the law should prohibit acts of interference, for instance acts designed to promote establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of an employer or an employers' organization, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers or employers' organizations. Express provision should also be made for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 194–197). Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government once again to take the necessary legislative measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to prohibit acts of interference and provide for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts. It requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Articles 4–6. The personal and material scope of the right to collective bargaining. Religious and charitable organizations. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 5(1) of the Council of Ministers Regulation No. 342/2015, which dispensed religious and charitable organizations from the obligation to enter into collective bargaining concerning wage and benefits with their employees in charge of administrative or charity work. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the rationale behind section 5(1) is that it is unethical and impracticable to allow negotiations concerning salary and benefits in non-profit organizations which are funded by donations from various bodies to do religious and charity work. The Government adds that charitable and religious organizations with better financial capabilities, may apply section 5(2) of Regulation No. 342/2015 which provides that increments of wages, benefits, incentives and other similar matters may be governed by work rules or employment contracts. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not report any progress on this longstanding issue, which has been the object of its comments since 2006, when the draft regulation was first brought to its attention. The Committee recalls that the Convention covers employees of non-profit organizations, and that the right to collective bargaining provided in Article 4 of the Convention covers "terms and conditions of employment", and that wages and benefits are essential elements of such terms and conditions. The non-profit nature of the activities of the employer organization, or the fact that it is mainly funded by donations, do not justify the deprivation of its employees from their rights to collective bargaining under the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to amend section 5 of the Council of Ministers Regulation No. 342/2015 to bring it into conformity with the Convention and to provide information on any steps taken in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. The right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, including teachers in public schools. In its 2003 observation, the Committee had noted that the newly adopted Federal Civil Servants Proclamation (FCSP) No. 262/2002 did not guarantee the right of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the FCSP currently in force (No. 1064/2017) equally fails to guarantee this right. The Committee further notes that in its observations concerning the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organize Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the International Trade Union Confederation indicates that the Ethiopian Teachers' Association (ETA), which is recognized only as an occupational organization, has, due to legal and practical obstacles, failed to gain recognition as a trade union and therefore remains unable to represent its associates in collective bargaining. For several years the Government has reported that a comprehensive civil service reform is underway, without however indicating any progress regarding the guarantee of the right of public servants to collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret that in its latest report the Government once again has failed to indicate any progress concerning this matter. The Committee therefore urges the Government, in full consultation with organizations representing the public employees concerned, to take the necessary legislative measures to fully recognize and guarantee the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State and to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the supplementary information provided by the Government in light of the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 338th Session (June 2020). The Committee proceeded with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the supplementary information received from the Government and the social partners this year, as well as on the basis of the information at its disposal in 2019.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2019 and 15 September 2020 and of the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) received on 23 May and 13 November 2019, denouncing violations of civil liberties and lack of progress on the legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government's general reply thereto, as well as to the 2017 and 2018 FTUC observations, and requests it to provide further details on the specific incidents of alleged violations of civil liberties reported by the FTUC.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereafter the Conference Committee) in June 2019 concerning the application of the Convention. It notes that the Conference Committee observed serious allegations concerning the violation of basic civil liberties, including arrests, detentions and assaults, and restrictions of freedom of association and noted with regret the Government's failure to complete the process under the Joint Implementation Report (JIR). The Conference Committee called upon the Government to: (i) refrain from interfering in the designation of the representatives of the social partners on tripartite bodies; (ii) reconvene the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) without delay in order to start a legislative reform process; (iii) complete without further delay the full legislative reform process as agreed under the JIR; (iv) refrain from anti-union practices, including arrests, detentions, violence, intimidation, harassment and interference; (v) ensure that workers' and employers' organizations are able to exercise their rights to freedom of association, freedom of assembly and speech without undue interference by the public authorities; and (vi) ensure that normal judicial procedures and due process are guaranteed to workers' and employers' organizations and their members. The Conference Committee also requested the Government to report on progress made towards the implementation of the JIR in consultation with the social partners by November 2019 and called on the Government to accept a direct contacts mission to assess progress made before the 109th Session of the International Labour Conference. While duly noting the context of the current COVID-19 pandemic, the Committee trusts that the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee will be able to take place as soon as the situation so permits and, if possible, before the next International Labour Conference.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to respond in full detail to the FTUC allegations of continued harassment and intimidation of trade unionists, in particular with respect to its National Secretary, Felix Anthony. The Committee notes the Government's general statement that Mr Anthony has been able to organize and carry out trade union activities without any interference from the Government and that the arrest, search and detention of persons previously alleged by the ITUC and the FTUC were not intended to harass or intimidate trade unionists but to allow the Commissioner of Police to conduct investigations into alleged violations of applicable laws. The Government also affirms that the Commissioner of Police and the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions are both independent and neither the entities nor their decisions are subject to the direction or control of the Government. The Committee notes, however, the 2020 ITUC allegations that Mr Anthony is currently charged with one count of malicious acts under the Public Order Act, 1969 in relation to his trade union activities following the mass termination of 2,000 workers' contracts by the Fiji Water Authority in April 2019, which led to protests and the arrest of trade unionists and union members, including Mr Anthony. The ITUC alleges that Mr Anthony was to appear before the court on 1 September 2020 and if convicted, he could receive a fine of up to US$2,500 or be imprisoned for up to three years. The Committee notes the Government's reply that the arrest and subsequent criminal prosecution of Mr Anthony are not a targeted attack but a matter that is criminal in nature and that the presiding court will make a determination on the criminal charges and penalties imposed, if any. The Committee further notes with concern the ITUC and FTUC allegations of continued intimidation by the police, arrests, detention, interrogation and the filing of criminal charges against trade unionists, as well as prolonged confiscation of personal and union property and violent dispersal of gatherings between April and June 2019. Recalling the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights and emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations, the Committee requests the Government to make serious efforts to ensure that state entities and their officials refrain from anti-union practices, including arrests, detentions, violence, intimidation, harassment and interference in trade union activities, so as to contribute to an environment conducive to the full development of trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to consider issuing instructions to the police and the armed forces in this regard and to provide training to ensure that any actions taken during demonstrations respect the basic civil liberties and fundamental labour rights of workers and employers. Furthermore, the Committee firmly expects that any charges against Mr Anthony related to the exercise of his trade union activities will be immediately dropped.

Appointment of members to and the functioning of the Employment Relations Advisory Board to review labour legislation. In its previous comments, having observed the FTUC concerns that the Government had systematically dismantled tripartism by removing or replacing the tripartite representation on a number of bodies with its own nominees, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which it designated individuals to these bodies and the representative nature of the organizations that appeared therein. The Committee notes the detailed reply provided by the Government on the appointment of members to the ERAB, the Fiji National Provident Fund, the Fiji National University, the Wages Council and the Air Terminal Service (Fiji) Limited. The Committee also notes the Government's clarification that, in addition to the ERAB, the National Occupational Health and Safety Advisory Board (NOHSAB) and the National Employment Centre Board (NECB) also have tripartite membership. The Government further indicates, with regard to the ERAB, that: (i) the Minister for Employment is the appointing authority and representatives of workers and employers are appointed from persons nominated by workers' and employers' organizations; (ii) appointment of members is undertaken through a consultation process to allow expanded representation of workers from various organizations; (iii) there is no interference from the Government in the designation of representatives of the social partners; and (iv) as the current ERAB membership ended in October 2019, the social partners were invited to submit nominees and both the Fiji Commerce and Employers Federation (FCEF) and the FTUC have already done so at the end of October 2019. The Committee observes, however, that, according to the FTUC, there is no indication as to when the appointment of ERAB members will take place, despite the urgency of the situation, and that the ITUC remains concerned about government manipulation of national tripartite bodies, thus curtailing the possibility of genuine tripartite dialogue. The Committee trusts that the Government will refrain from any undue interference in the nomination and appointment of members to the ERAB and to other tripartite bodies, and will ensure that the social partners can freely designate their representatives. The Committee expects the appointment of ERAB members to take place without delay so as to allow this mechanism to reconvene and meet regularly in order to pursue the labour law review and meaningfully address all outstanding matters in this regard.

Progress on the review of labour legislation as agreed in the Joint Implementation Report. The Committee previously noted with regret the apparent lack of progress on the review of the labour legislation as agreed in the JIR and urged the Government to take the necessary measures with a view to rapidly bringing the legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that several meetings took place with the tripartite partners and the ILO between June 2018 and August 2019, in which it was agreed that a number of matters under the JIR have already been implemented and that the tripartite partners are making good progress on the outstanding matters concerning the review of labour laws and the list of essential services and industries, despite the FTUC's boycott and withdrawal from the tripartite dialogue within the ERAB in June 2018, February and August 2019. The Committee notes that, according to the FTUC, the Government's reference to boycott clearly reveals that there remain issues in the appointment process of ERAB members and shows the Government's lack of genuine commitment to previously agreed timelines that had led to the boycott. The Committee notes from the resolutions adopted at the 48th biennial delegates conference of the FTUC provided by the Government in its supplementary report that: (i) the FTUC maintains its position on boycotting participation in any tripartite forums until its role as an important stakeholder with sincere engagement is recognized; and (ii) the FTUC expresses concern about the Government's failure to uphold its commitment to engage in genuine social dialogue and to take any positive action to review the labour legislation, and denounces the way in which the Ministry of Employment, Productivity and Industrial Relations has handled the review process. The Committee further observes that the ITUC calls on the Government to return to the negotiating table with the social partners to fully implement the JIR and to grant safeguards and guarantees to those participating in the dialogue. Finally, the Committee welcomes the Government's indication in its supplementary report that a detailed Plan of Action with timelines was elaborated with the ILO Country Office in September 2020 to give guidelines to the tripartite partners and the Plan of Action enumerates issues to be addressed in order to implement recommendations of the ILO supervisory mechanisms, including the reconvening of the ERAB, the ERA matrix, the reform of the essential services list, training and sensitization of the police on civil liberties and freedom of association, as well as the organization of the direct contacts mission. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to continue to review the labour legislation within the reconvened ERAB, as agreed in the JIR and the September 2020 Plan of Action, with a view to rapidly bringing it into line with the Convention, taking into account the Committee's comments below.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously noted that the following issues were still pending after the adoption of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2016: denial of the right to organize to prison guards (section 3(2)); and excessively wide discretionary power of the Registrar in deciding after consultation whether or not a union meets the conditions for registration under the Employment Relations Promulgation, 2007 (ERP) (hereinafter, ERA, section 125(1)(a) as amended). The Committee notes, on the one hand, the Government's indication that the tripartite partners met in August 2019 to discuss the proposed amendments and all clauses in the ERA matrix but observes, on the other hand, the ITUC and the FTUC allegation that no progress has been achieved since then and the matrix agreed by the tripartite partners is still pending with the Solicitor General's office. In the absence of any substantial progress in this regard, the Committee urges the Government to finalize the process of review on the basis of the tripartite-agreed matrix so that the necessary amendments for bringing the legislation into full conformity with the Convention may be rapidly submitted to Parliament and adopted.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee had previously observed that, pursuant to section 185 of the ERA as amended in 2015, the list of industries considered as essential services included: (i) the services listed in Schedule 7 of the ERP; (ii) the essential national industries declared under the former Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree, 2011 (ENID) (financial industry, telecommunications industry, civil aviation industry and public utilities industry), and the corresponding designated companies; and (iii) the Government, statutory authorities, local authorities and government commercial companies (following the adoption of the Public Enterprise Act, 2019, these are now referred to as public enterprises – an entity controlled by the State and listed in Schedule 1 of the Act or designated as such by the Minister).

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that, as agreed in the JIR and with the technical assistance of the Office, a workshop was held on 16 and 17 October 2019 with the participation of the tripartite partners to consider, gauge and determine the list of essential services and industries. The Committee also welcomes that, as a result of the workshop, the tripartite parties agreed on a time-bound plan of action to review the existing list of essential services within the ERAB and to engage in discussion with the aim of restricting limitations on the right to strike to essential services in the strict sense of the term and public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Government informs that it has received proposals for amendments from representatives of workers and employers and is currently considering them. The Committee notes, however, the concerns expressed by the FTUC that due to the Minister's absence from the workshop, all decisions had to be referred to the Solicitor General's office and that the timelines continue to be ignored without any justification for the delay in convening meetings to finalize the essential national industries list and the ERA matrix.

The Committee wishes to reiterate that while some essential industries are defined in line with the Convention, namely those which had been initially included in Schedule 7 of the ERP, other industries where strikes may now be prohibited due to the inclusion of the ENID in the ERA do not fall within the definition of essential services in the strict sense of the term, including: statutory government authorities; local, city, town or rural authorities; workers in managerial positions; the financial sector; radio, television and broadcasting services; civil aviation industry and airport services (except air traffic control); public utilities industry in general; pine, mahogany and wood industry; metal and mining sector; postal services; and public enterprises in general. The Committee also wishes to emphasize that provisions which prohibit the right to strike on the basis of potential detriment to public interest or economic consequences are not compatible with the principles relating to the right to strike. The Committee recalls, however, that for services which are not considered essential in the strict sense of the term, but in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population or in public services of fundamental importance in which it is important to deliver the basic needs of users, a negotiated minimum service, as a possible alternative to fully restricting industrial action through imposed compulsory arbitration, could be appropriate. The right to strike may also be restricted for public servants but only those exercising authority in the name of the State. Given the extensive breadth of the services where workers' rights to take industrial action may be prohibited, as noted above, the Committee urges the Government to meaningfully engage with the social partners without further delay to review the list of essential services, as agreed in the JIR and the October 2019 and the September 2020 action plans, so as to restrict limitations on the right to strike to essential services in the strict sense of the term and public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

In addition, the Committee has been requesting for a number of years that the Government take measures to review numerous provisions of the ERA. In the absence of any progress reported in this regard, the Committee recalls that the following issues in the ERA are still pending: obligation of union officials to be employees of the relevant industry, trade or occupation for a period of not less than three months (section 127(a) as amended); prohibition of non-citizens to be trade union officers (section 127(d)); interference in union by-laws (section 184); excessive power of the Registrar to request detailed and certified accounts from the treasurer at any time (section 128(3)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (sections 175(3)(b) and 180); compulsory arbitration (sections 169 and 170, section 181(c) as amended, new section 191BS (formerly 191(1)(c)); penalty in form of a fine in case of staging an unlawful but peaceful strike (sections 250 and 256(a)); provisions likely to impede industrial action (section 191BN); penalty of imprisonment in case of staging a (unlawful or possibly even lawful) peaceful strike in services qualified as essential (sections 191BQ(1), 256(a), 179 and 191BM); excessively wide discretionary powers of the Minister with respect to the appointment and removal of members of the Arbitration Court and appointment of mediators, calling into question the impartiality of the dispute settlement bodies (sections 191D, 191E, 191G and 191Y); and compulsory arbitration in services qualified as essential (sections 191Q, 191R, 191S, 191T and 191AA). In this regard, the Committee observes, from the resolutions adopted at the 48th biennial delegates conference of the FTUC provided by the Government in its supplementary report, the concerns expressed by the FTUC about the inefficiency of the Arbitration Court and the Employment Tribunals, as well as the need to improve the current dispute resolution system in order to reduce considerable delays in resolving disputes. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take measures to review the above provisions of the ERA, in accordance with the agreement in the JIR and in consultation with the representative national workers' and employers' organizations, with a view to their amendment, so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Public Order (Amendment) Decree (POAD). With regard to its previous comments concerning the practical application of the POAD, the Committee notes that the Government simply reiterates that the POAD facilitates the maintenance of public order and that prior permission is required to ensure the carrying out of administrative functions and the provision of law enforcement officers to maintain order. While further noting that the Government points to two instances, in October 2017 and January 2018, in which the FTUC obtained a permit and undertook marches, the Committee observes that, according to the FTUC, its recent requests to march from May, August and November 2019 were all refused. The ITUC and the FTUC denounce that permission for union meetings and public gatherings continues to be arbitrarily refused and that section 8 of the POAD has been increasingly used to interfere in, prevent and frustrate trade union meetings and assemblies. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 8 of the POAD into line with the Convention by fully repealing or amending this provision so as to ensure that the right to assembly may be freely exercised.

Political Parties Decree. The Committee had previously noted that, under section 14 of the 2013 Political Parties Decree, persons holding an office in any workers' or employers' organization are banned from membership or office in any political party and from any political activity, including merely expressing support or opposition to a political party; and that sections 113(2) and 115(1) of the Electoral Decree prohibit any public officer from conducting campaign activities, and any person, entity or organization that receives any funding or assistance from a foreign government, intergovernmental or non-governmental organization to engage in, participate in or conduct any campaign (including organizing debates, public forums, meetings, interviews, panel discussions, or publishing any material) that is related to the election. In its previous comments, the Committee further observed that the Political Parties Decree was unduly restrictive in prohibiting membership in a political party or any expression of political support or opposition by officers of employers' or workers' organizations, and requested the Government once again to take measures to amend the above provisions, in consultation with the representative national workers' and employers' organizations. Observing that the Government does not provide any new information and noting the ITUC concerns about the restrictive effect of the Political Parties Decree on legitimate trade union activities, the Committee reiterates its request in this respect.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by administrative authority. The Committee notes the ITUC allegations that in February 2020, the Government suspended five trade unions for failing to submit their annual audited reports and indicated that they faced penalties and deregistration if they continued to fail to comply with the legislation (the Hot Bread Kitchen Employees Trade Union, the Fiji Maritime Workers Association, the Viti National Union of I-taukei Workers, BPSS Co Limited Workers and Carpenters Group of Salaries Association and the I-taukei Land Trust Board Workers Union). According to the ITUC, such arbitrary measures represent a clear attempt at quashing independent trade unions and the legislation does not provide for sufficient guarantees for trade unions to operate without undue interference by the authorities, as demonstrated by section 128(3) of the ERA, which gives the Registrar excessive power to request detailed and certified accounts from the treasurer at any time. The Committee notes that the Government refutes this allegation as baseless and untrue and asserts that any suspension of trade union activity is done in accordance with section 133(2) of the ERA. With regard to the mentioned trade unions, the Government informs that: (i) in June 2019, the Registrar issued notices to 11 unions for failure to submit their annual returns under section 129 of the ERA; in August 2019, the Registrar issued a follow-up notice; and in September 2019, seven trade unions, which had not rectified their breach, were issued a notice of suspension; (ii) the notice of suspension provided the unions two months to show cause as to why their registration should not be suspended; (iii) despite the notice, four unions failed to rectify their breach and in June 2020, the Registrar published a notice of cancellation concerning the four unions; and (iv) the unions were again given two months to rectify their breach and the Registrar only cancelled the registration of those unions that failed to respond to the notice, whereas the remaining three suspended unions were able to submit their annual reports. The Government adds that there are currently 46 active unions in Fiji, which freely conduct their activities and the Registrar does not have the authority to dictate how they operate or function under their constitution, thus ensuring absolute freedom for trade unions to deal with their affairs. The Committee takes due note of the steps taken by the Registrar before suspending or cancelling the registration of the above trade unions and recalls that under section 139 of the ERA, a trade union may appeal a decision against suspension or cancellation of registration to the competent court. Further recalling however that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference and should be reserved for serious breaches of the law after exhausting other possibilities with less serious effects for the organizations, and observing the ITUC's allegations that these measures constitute an attempt at quashing independent trade unions, the Committee requests the Government to consider, in consultation with the most representative organizations, any measures that are appropriate to ensure that the procedures for suspension or cancellation of trade union registration are, both in law and in practice, in full accordance with the guarantees set out in the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1974)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the supplementary information provided by the Government in light of the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 338th Session (June 2020). The Committee proceeded with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the supplementary information received from the Government this year (see Article 4 below), as well as on the basis of the information at its disposal in 2019.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2019 and of the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) received on 23 August 2018, and 23 May and 13 November 2019, denouncing massive dismissals of workers, including members of the National Union of Workers (NUW), restrictions on collective bargaining, especially in the public sector and essential services, and lack of progress on the legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government's reply thereto. In its previous comment, the Committee also requested the Government to provide a reply to the 2016 observations from Education International and the Fiji Teachers' Union (FTU) concerning the lack of consultation in regard to wages and terms and conditions of employment. The Committee notes the Government's reply that it has been continuously meeting with representatives of the FTU and the Fijian Teachers' Association (FTA) in relation to the terms and conditions of employment, including in November 2018 and February 2019.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. With reference to the long-standing dispute in relation to the Vatukoula Mining Company (concerning the refusal to recognize a union and the dismissal of striking workers over 20 years ago), the Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, it had noted the Government's indication that the Vatukoula Social Assistance Trust Fund (VSATF) had been established to benefit around 800 recipients through money grants and assistance for relocation, small and microenterprise development and education for dependants. The Committee noted the completion of a mediation process and requested the Government to supply detailed information on its outcome and the follow-up measures taken to compensate the persons concerned, as well as in relation to the VSATF fund. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, following the mediation process and keeping in mind that it does not have any legal obligation to compensate the concerned workers, it is considering making an ex gratia payment to the workers in view of resolving their grievances but that this will require Cabinet approval. The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide any details as to the actual outcome of the mediation or the use of the VSATF fund. Recalling that this long-standing dispute has caused great hardship to the dismissed workers, the Committee expects that it will be finally and equitably resolved through the implementation of a mutually satisfactory settlement. The Committee requests the Government to supply information on the outcome of the mediation process and any compensation granted to the concerned workers, including any recourse to the VSATF fund. It also invites the Fiji Mine Workers' Union (FMWU) to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee welcomed the repeal of the Essential National Industries (Employment) Decree, 2011 (ENID) through the adoption of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2015, as well as the removal of the concept of bargaining units from the Employment Relations Promulgation, 2007 (hereinafter Employment Relations Act (ERA)) through the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2016. The Committee noted with regret however that the abrogation by ENID of the collective agreements in force which it had considered contrary to Article 4, had not been addressed and requested the Government to engage in consultations with the representative national workers' and employers' organizations with a view to exploring a mutually satisfactory solution in this respect. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has provided the necessary conditions under section 149 of the ERA for trade unions and employers' organizations to engage in good faith employment relations. It indicates that, between 2016 and 2018, there has been successful bargaining between employers and workers resulting in the signing of 63 collective agreements and 59 amendments to collective agreements and that, between August 2019 and September 2020, the Ministry of Employment, Productivity and Industrial Relations registered 20 collective agreements and processed 46 disputes filed by trade unions, including on allegations of failure to engage in negotiations or to implement collective agreements and unfair dismissal of trade union representatives. The Committee observes, however, that, according to the FTUC: (i) all negotiations have been reverted to zero instead of using the abrogated agreements as a basis for discussion; (ii) the topics that can be negotiated in the local Government sector are severely restricted; and (iii) there is a continued refusal of the Government to engage in collective bargaining in the public sector. The FTUC also denounces that all Government-owned entities, including those employing teachers, nurses and civil servants, insist on imposing individual fixed-term contracts without any consultation with the unions, as a way of undermining the right of workers to bargain collectively and achieving the goals of the abrogated ENID. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take concrete measures to facilitate negotiations and promote collective bargaining between workers and employers or their organizations in the public sector so as to create an enabling environment for collective agreements to be concluded in replacement of those abrogated by ENID. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any additional measures undertaken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that sections 191Q(3), 191(R), 191(S) and 191AA(b) and (c) of the ERA, as amended in 2015, allowed for compulsory conciliation or arbitration and requested the Government to take measures to review the above provisions with a view to their amendment so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Minister for Employment, Productivity and Industrial Relations conducts compulsory arbitration only where he or she considers that the dispute may be resolved by conciliation and that one such dispute has been resolved through compulsory conciliation in 2018. The Government informs that the Employment Relations Advisory Board (ERAB) will review the relevant laws and consider any appropriate amendments. The Committee recalls once again that compulsory arbitration is contrary to the voluntary nature of collective bargaining and is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention) or in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in cases of acute national crisis. The Committee expects that the above provisions of the ERA will be reviewed within the ERAB, in accordance with the agreement in the Joint Implementation Report and in consultation with the representative national workers' and employers' organizations, with a view to their amendment so as to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1951)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), received on 29 August 2023, and the Government's replies in this regard. The Committee notes that the CGT's observations contain in particular allegations of: (i) restrictions on the exercise of collective rights, including collective bargaining during the COVID-19 pandemic; and (ii) acts of anti-union discrimination in the public and private sectors in a general context, according to the CGT, of increasing restrictions on trade union rights. The Committee also notes in relation to this latter point the general information contained in the observations of the French Confederation of Management – General Confederation of Professional and Managerial Employees (CFE-CGC), provided in relation to the application of the Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135), and the Government's corresponding replies. The Committee takes due note of the detailed replies by the Government on the measures adopted to facilitate collective bargaining and workers' representation activities in the specific context of the pandemic. The Committee also notes the Government's views concerning protection mechanisms against anti-union discrimination and the replies provided in relation to certain specific allegations. In light of the allegations of a general nature by the representative organizations in relation to anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to engage in dialogue with representative social partners on the effectiveness of measures to prevent and punish acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Follow-up to the recommendations of a tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution)

The Committee notes that in March 2023, the Governing Body approved the report of a tripartite committee appointed to examine a representation made by the General Confederation of Labour – Force Ouvrière (CGT-FO) and the CGT under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (GB.347/INS/18/3) concerning the application by France of Conventions Nos 87 and 98 and certain limited aspects of the reforms adopted in 2016 and 2017 in relation to social dialogue and collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the tripartite committee requested the Committee of Experts to follow-up its recommendations, particularly in relation to the application of Article 4 of this Convention. The Committee notes that the tripartite committee requested the Government to: (i) engage with the social partners to ensure that the legislation on the relationship between the different bargaining levels is implemented in a manner that ensures the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining; (ii) review and assess with the social partners concerned the application of the provisions granting the employer the option of holding a consultation with employees with a view to approving an enterprise agreement that would not have received the support of the majority trade unions in the enterprise and for which the signatory unions have not put the matter to a workplace referendum; and (iii) provide information on the implementation of the reforms and their effects on collective bargaining in practice. While noting the Government's indications concerning the rulings of the Council of State of 7 October 2021, which are examined below in the present comment, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the dialogue with the social partners called for by the tripartite committee concerning, on the one hand, the implementation of the reform with regard to the relationship between bargaining levels and, on the other, the consultation of employees at the initiative of the employer for the purposes of the adoption of an enterprise agreement; and (ii) continue to provide information on the implementation and effects of the 2016 and 2017 reforms in relation to collective bargaining.

Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination and promotion of collective bargaining for platform workers considered to be self-employed workers. The Committee recalls that, after noting the initiatives taken by the Government in this regard, it requested it to provide information on the adoption of any text concerning the exercise of the rights recognized by the Convention by platform workers, irrespective of their contractual status. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) Ordinance No. 2021-484 of 21 April 2021 on the procedures for the representation of self-employed workers using platforms for their work and on the conditions for exercising this representation, approved by Act No. 2022-139 of 7 February 2022, has organized the representation of platform workers on the principle of a national election under the auspices of a new public establishment, the Authority for Industrial Relations of Employment Platforms (ARPE); (ii) provisions for the protection of workers' representatives apply during their mandate and for a period of six months following the end of their mandate: the termination by the platform of the commercial contract concluded with a workers' representative during this protection period is subject to prior administrative authorization and representatives who consider that they have suffered a decline in their activity due to the platform can appeal to the courts, with the burden of proof being reversed in such a case; (iii) the first election of the organizations representing platform workers was held in May 2022; (iv) Ordinance No. 2022-492 of 6 April 2022 organizes social dialogue and collective bargaining at the sectoral level for the sectors of passenger vehicles with drivers and the delivery of goods using two- or three-wheel vehicles; (v) to be valid, a sectoral collective agreement must be signed by at least one platform organization and by workers' organizations representing over 30 per cent of the votes cast during the elections and must not have been opposed by workers' organizations representing 50 per cent of the votes cast; (vi) the agreement that is concluded applies to platforms affiliated to the signatory organizations and their workers in the sectors concerned; it is compulsory for commercial contracts binding the platforms and workers in the sector concerned, unless there are more favourable provisions in commercial contracts; and (vii) the Ordinance sets out the obligation to engage in bargaining every year at the sectoral level on certain subjects. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the instruments referred to above recognizing and organizing the collective rights of self-employed platform workers and, in two specific sectors, establishing a complete framework to facilitate the exercise of the right to collective bargaining of the self-employed workers concerned. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest the conclusion in 2023 of several collective agreements in the two sectors referred to above relating, among other areas, to the remuneration of self-employed workers and the conditions governing the termination of their contractual relationship with the platform. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts so that all platform workers, irrespective of their type of activity and their contractual status, are able to exercise effectively the rights recognized by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on this subject.

Article 4. Collective bargaining with non-unionized workers in small enterprises. The Committee recalls that, on the basis of successive observations by the CGT-FO, the CFE-CGC and the French Democratic Confederation of Labour (CFDT), it examined the possibilities for the conclusion of agreements with non-unionized workers opened up by the 2017 Ordinance.

On the basis of the information provided by the Government, the Committee recalls that it noted the existence of three main methods of concluding collective agreements in small enterprises, each subject to specific rules and conditions: (i) the conclusion of an agreement with one or more trade union delegates or one or more employees mandated by a trade union (the latter may also be elected staff representatives); (ii) in the absence of a trade union delegate, the conclusion of an agreement with one or more elected staff representatives not mandated by a trade union; and (iii) the approval under certain conditions in enterprises with up to 20 employees of an employers' proposal by a direct vote of the employees in the enterprise by a two-thirds majority. The Committee observed that the first method is in line with Article 4 of the Convention, under the terms of which collective bargaining takes place between employers and employers' organizations, on the one hand, and workers' organizations, on the other. With regard to the second method, the Committee recalled that direct negotiation with elected staff representatives should only be possible in the absence of trade unions at the relevant level. In relation to the third method, the Committee considered that the adoption of an employer's proposal by a direct vote of the employees does not have the characteristics of a collective bargaining mechanism within the meaning of the Convention. On the basis of the above, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) clarify whether, in a small enterprise where there is an employee mandated by a representative trade union for the purposes of collective bargaining, the employer may freely choose another method of concluding a collective agreement; (ii) continue to provide statistics on the use of the different methods for the conclusion of collective agreements in small enterprises; and (iii) continue to provide information on the measures to promote collective bargaining between the employer and workers' organizations in small enterprises.

With reference to the choice by the employer of the method for the conclusion of an agreement, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in enterprises with fewer than 50 employees and in the absence of a trade union delegate, the Labour Code permits the employer to choose negotiation either with an employee mandated by a trade union, or with an elected employee, whether or not the latter is mandated; (ii) in enterprises with between 11 and 20 employees, in the absence of an elected member of the staff delegation on the social and economic committee (CSE), the employer may opt to negotiate with an employee mandated by a trade union or to consult the employees directly.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the different types of agreements concluded in small enterprises in 2021: (i) for enterprises with fewer than 50 employees as a whole, 24.8 per cent of agreements or addenda, except those covering salary savings schemes, were concluded by trade union delegates (19 per cent in 2020), 14.1 per cent by elected representatives and employees mandated by trade unions (17.7 per cent in 2020); 20.2 per cent by elected representatives not mandated by trade unions (20.7 per cent in 2020) and 40.2 per cent by votes by employees with a two-thirds majority (41 per cent in 2020); and (ii) 40.2 per cent of agreements, except those covering salary savings schemes, were concluded by votes by employees with a two-thirds majority in enterprises with between 11 and 20 employees (72.9 per cent in 2020) and 82.6 per cent in enterprises with fewer than 11 employees (89 per cent in 2020). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the development of recourse to alternative methods for the conclusion of agreements in small enterprises is not replacing negotiation with representatives of trade unions, as the proportion of agreements signed with trade union delegates rose in 2021 and their presence in enterprises with between 10 and 49 employees rose from 3.6 per cent in 2014 to 4.5 per cent in 2021.

The Committee notes the Government's further indication that: (i) the employee mandated by the union is not empowered to represent the union in the enterprise on a permanent basis, but only for a specific negotiation; (ii) only trade unions can present candidates to stand in the first round of elections to the CSE and 54 per cent of the employees elected from the personnel in enterprises with fewer than 50 employees are unionized; (iii) the method of the trade union mandating an employee is very rarely used; and (iv) the conclusion of agreements by a vote by the personnel with a two-thirds majority does not consist of the mere approval of an employer's decision, but gives rise to dialogue between employees and the employer.

The Committee notes that the Government also recalls that: (i) in order to avoid all small enterprises from being structurally excluded from the possibilities offered by enterprise agreements, methods of negotiation are offered that are adapted to their specific characteristics, including those of enterprises without any trade union actors (mandated employees or elected staff representatives who are unionized or mandated), which has resulted in a significant increase in the agreements concluded in this type of enterprise; and (ii) the organization of an election every four years has been provided for since 2012 with a view to measuring the support for trade unions in enterprises with fewer than 11 employees.

The Committee takes due note of these various elements. While recalling that Article 4 of the Convention sets out the obligation to promote collective bargaining with workers' organizations, the Committee is also aware of the specific context of collective bargaining in small and very small enterprises, particularly due to the weak presence of trade unions. The Committee recognizes in this respect the efforts made by the Government to enable the conclusion of agreements in small enterprises and the existence of specific mechanisms (particularly, the mandating of employees) so that these agreements are concluded with trade union actors. However, the Committee emphasizes the need for workers and their organizations to be able to set this type of measure in motion independently. In this regard, the power attributed to the employer to be able to set aside negotiations with an employee who has been mandated by a representative trade union in favour of other methods of concluding agreements without the involvement of trade union actors does not appear to be in conformity with the Convention insofar as: (i) it does not promote collective negotiation with workers' organizations, as provided in Article 4 of the Convention; and (ii) by virtue of the principles of non-interference and free and voluntary collective negotiation, as established in Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention, respectively, it is for the workers, and not the employer, to choose their representatives for the purposes of negotiation. On the basis of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with representative social partners, to take the necessary measures to: (i) ensure that the methods for the conclusion of collective agreements not involving the participation of trade unions are only possible in the absence of trade union actors capable of negotiating collectively in the specific enterprise; and (ii) ensure that in the event of a plurality of options for the representation of workers in collective bargaining, the choice does not lie with the employer. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this regard.

Possibility of derogating through agreements concluded by non-union actors from the protective clauses contained in higher-level agreements concluded by trade unions. The Committee recalls that it previously noted that, following the reforms introduced by the 2017 Ordinance, enterprise agreements not signed by a trade union, in particular in enterprises with fewer than 50 employees, including those resulting from an employer's proposal submitted to a vote by the employees, are able to set aside, in relation to a significant number of subjects open to collective bargaining, clauses that are more favourable to employees contained in the branch agreements negotiated and signed by representative trade unions. The Committee emphasized that this option is not consistent with the obligation to promote collective bargaining set out in Article 4 of the Convention and therefore requested the Government to provide information on the occurrence in practice of this possibility of derogation and to take the necessary measures to review the power of derogation from higher-level agreements available through agreements signed by non-union actors.

The Committee notes the reference by the Government to the rulings of the Council of State of 7 October 2021 providing that the minimum level of overall remuneration set by a branch agreement is compulsory for the enterprise, and the margin for manoeuvre left for the enterprise agreement only covers the manner in which this minimum level is attained. The Committee understands that this information is intended to indicate the limits upon the possibilities for derogation accorded to enterprise agreements by the 2017 Ordinance.

While recalling that under the 2017 Ordinance, with the exception of a number of subjects specifically defined in law, the content of enterprise agreements henceforth prevails over that of higher level agreements (section L.2253-3 of the Labour Code), the Committee observes that the Government has not provided information on the specific point raised in its previous comments, namely the possibility accorded to agreements signed by non-union actors to derogate from higher-level agreements concluded by the social partners. Emphasizing once again that this possibility is not in conformity with the obligation to promote collective negotiation with workers' organizations as set out in Article 4 of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government, in consultation with representative social partners, to take the necessary measures to review the possibility accorded to enterprise agreements concluded by non-union actors to derogate from protective provisions in higher-level agreements concluded by the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

In its previous comments, further to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) relating to restrictions on the right to strike in the public sector on the repeatedly invoked grounds of ensuring public safety, the Committee asked the Government to provide detailed information on the number of strikes called in the public sector, the sectors concerned and the number of strikes prohibited on the grounds of a possible disruption of the public order.

Moreover, further to the observations received from Education International (EI) denouncing the adoption of various regulations which are making the exercise of trade union activities in the education sector increasingly difficult, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken in that sector to ensure that trade unions have access to educational establishments so that they can perform their representative functions and defend their members' interests.

The Committee notes that according to the Government, only 12.34 per cent of school establishments across the entire national territory were affected during the unlimited general strike called in September 2021 by the National Congress of Education Sector Unions (CONASYSED) and the National Education Union (SENA). However, the Government adds that it is not able to provide the information requested by the Committee, since the collection and centralization of data is ongoing.

The Committee regrets the Government's inability to provide the requested information, and reiterates its request with the hope that the Government will shortly be able to provide said information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, relating to the discussions held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) on the application of the Convention by Guatemala. The Committee also notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), received on 1 September 2023, which relate to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), on the one hand, and of the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement, Global Unions of Guatemala, on the other, received on 27 and 29 September 2023, respectively, which also refer to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee notes the Government's replies to the corresponding observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion held in June 2023 in the Conference Committee on the application of the Convention by Guatemala. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, after noting with deep concern the persistence of allegations of murders of trade unionists and other acts of anti-union violence, as well as the general situation of impunity that prevails in the country, urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: take immediate measures to address the general situation of violence and intimidation, put an end to acts of violence and the threat thereof against trade union leaders and members; fully implement the road map adopted on 17 October 2013 without further delay, as well as any recommendations prepared by the ILO; investigate without delay all acts and threats of violence against trade union leaders and members to determine responsibilities, punish the perpetrators and identify the root causes of violence; provide rapid and effective protection to all trade union leaders and members who are under threat by increasing the budget for such programmes and ensure that protected individuals do not personally have to bear any costs arising from those schemes; adopt without delay the agreed amendments to eliminate legislative obstacles to the full exercise of freedom of association and develop legislation to allow for the formation of trade unions at the sectoral level; ensure the efficient registration of trade unions, including the implementation of the electronic tool designed by the ILO; and increase the visibility of the awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association in the media and ensure that there is no stigmatization of trade unions, their leaders and collective agreements.

Follow-up by the Governing Body of the progress achieved in the implementation of the ILO technical cooperation programme "Strengthening of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association in Guatemala for the effective application of international labour standards"

The Committee notes that for the third and final year, the Governing Body followed up at its session in October-November 2023 the action taken by the Office in the context of the ILO technical cooperation programme "Strengthening of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association in Guatemala for the effective application of international labour standards (GB/349/INS/10(Rev.1)). The Committee recalls that the purpose of the action is to support the implementation of the road map on freedom of association adopted in 2013 by the Government of Guatemala. The Committee notes that on this occasion special attention was paid to the implementation of the priority actions identified by the joint mission undertaken by the ILO, IOE and ITUC in September 2022.

Presentation of a complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee notes that, at its 349th Session, the Governing Body declared receivable a complaint made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution by various delegates to the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference alleging non-observance by Guatemala of this Convention and of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the content of which will be examined by the Governing Body at its session in June 2024 (GB/349/INS/19/2).

Trade union rights and civil liberties

The Committee regrets to note that it has been examining since 2005 allegations of serious acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, including numerous murders, and the related situation of impunity. In this regard, the Committee notes the examination by the Committee on Freedom of Association at its session in March 2023 of Case No. 2609 in relation to numerous murders and other acts of violence against members of the trade union movement.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the status of the investigations and court proceedings relating to the murders of 98 members of the trade union movement between 2004 and 2022, according to which, up to now: (i) in 26 cases there have been a total of 37 sentences handed down (26 convictions, ten acquittals and one security and corrective measure); (ii) the criminal prosecutions in seven cases were terminated due to the deaths of the persons accused; (iii) in seven cases, arrest warrants have been issued and are being served; (iv) in one case, the hearings have begun, one is at an intermediary stage and one is at the stage of the public hearings; (v) ten cases are under investigation; and (vi) 46 cases have been shelved, in accordance with section 327 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, due to the material impossibility of identifying the perpetrators of the murders, although it is still possible that the cases will be reopened. The Committee notes that the Government adds that: (i) of the sentences, 15 were imposed on the perpetrators of the murders, three on the instigators and ten on both the perpetrators and the instigators; (ii) 14 of the 98 victims referred to were not members of the trade union movement, with two of those murders resulting in sentences being handed down; (iii) in none of the sentences referred to was an anti-union motive identified; (iv) since 1 January 2023, four new convictions have been handed down, and five acquittals; and (v) the most recent procedures show a significant reduction in the period between the commission of the crime and the sentence being handed down. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the funding and resources available to the Office of the Public Prosecutor in general and to the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists in particular have been increased substantially and that the results achieved show that there is no impunity in the country. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) following its doubling between 2021 and 2022, the annual budget of the Office of the Special Prosecutor rose from US$1,288,252 in 2022 to US$1,539,774.51 in 2023; and (ii) while in 2017 there were only 64 municipal public prosecutors, the Office of the Public Prosecutor now has a presence in a total of 340 municipalities in the country. The Committee further notes the emphasis placed by the Government on regular contacts between the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) concerning progress in the related investigations, particularly through personal appearances by the Prosecutor-General.

The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government on the security measures adopted for members of the trade union movement who are at risk, according to which: (i) between 1 June 2022 and 15 January 2023, the Ministry of the Interior received 97 individual or collective applications for risk analyses (of which 58 were from the Office of the Public Prosecutor), with 128 protection measures being granted; (ii) the risk analyses are carried out immediately, within one week; (iii) the Ministry of the Interior is updating with workers' representatives the Ministerial Decision on the unit for the analysis of attacks against trade union leaders and members to ensure that it is in line with the needs raised by the unions; and (iv) there are six canteens in the capital so that the meals of police officers are not at the expense of protected trade union members.

The Committee also notes that the ITUC regrets the murder of over 100 members of the trade union movement and deplores the fact that the Government attributes their murders to the general situation of violence in the country, thereby contributing to the persistence of the situation of impunity. The Committee also notes that the national trade union confederations: (i) hope that, in the case of the murder of Tomás Ochoa, Secretary-General of the Sitrabremen union, the Office of the Public Prosecutor will challenge, on the basis of the existing evidence, the decision by the court of first instance to find that the alleged instigators were not connected to the crime; and (ii) expect progress in the investigation of the murder in 2022 of Hugo Eduardo Gamero González, the disputes secretary of the SINEPORC union. The Committee also notes with deep concern the references, during the discussion of the ILO technical cooperation programme for Guatemala in the Governing Body in October-November 2023, to the murder of Ms Doris Lisseth Aldana Calderón, leader of the SITRABI union, which occurred on 4 October 2023. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indications concerning the investigations carried out by the Office of the Public Prosecutor.

In light of the foregoing, while taking due note of the significant action that the Government is continuing to take, the results reported and the difficulties involved in shedding light on older murders, the Committee deeply regrets to note that in the case of the great majority of the many murders of members of the trade union movement that have been reported there have not been any convictions and that in an even more limited number of cases the instigators of the murders have been identified and punished.

In this context, in the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2609, the Committee notes with deep concern the indication that 46 older cases of the murder of members of the trade union movement in which it has not been possible to identify the potential perpetrators have been shelved. Although it recognizes the particular difficulties involved in shedding light on older murder cases, the Committee emphasizes the importance, in cases involving anti-trade union violence, of investigations achieving specific results with reliable findings concerning the crimes committed, the motives for the crimes and those responsible so that the corresponding sanctions can be applied and action taken to avoid their recurrence in future. While welcoming the continuing increase in the budget allocated to the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists and the regular contacts between the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the CNTRLLS on the subject of anti-union violence, the Committee once again urges the Government to continue taking and intensifying as a matter of urgency all the necessary measures to: (i) investigate all acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, with the objective of determining responsibilities and punishing both the perpetrators and instigators of these acts, taking fully into consideration in the investigations the trade union activities of the victims; and (ii) provide prompt and effective protection for all trade union leaders and members in situations of risk so as to prevent any further acts of anti-union violence. In relation to the specific action required in this regard, the Committee refers to the recommendations made by the Committee on Freedom of Association in the context of Case No. 2609. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing all relevant information in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to:

- amend section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires a membership of "50 per cent plus one" of the workers in the sector to establish a sectoral trade union;
- amend sections 220 and 223 of the Labour Code, which establish the requirement to be of Guatemalan origin and to work in the relevant enterprise or economic activity to be eligible for election as a trade union leader;

- amend section 241 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which strikes have to be called by a majority of the workers and not by a majority of those casting votes;
- amend section 4(d), (e) and (g) of Decree No. 71-86, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 35-96 of 27 March 1996, which provides for the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration in non-essential services and establishes other obstacles to the right to strike;
- amend sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code and Decree No. 7186, which establish labour, civil and criminal penalties in the event of a strike by public officials or workers in certain enterprises;
- ensure that the various categories of public sector workers (hired under item 029 and other items of the budget) enjoy the guarantees afforded by the Convention.

In its previous comment, the Committee noted the new impetus given to the process of legislative reform by the joint mission by the ILO, IOE and ITUC in September 2022. In particular, the Committee noted that: (i) following the mission, the President of the Republic had submitted to the Congress of the Republic a Bill containing the texts which had received tripartite approval in March 2018 and September 2022 (Bill No. 6162) on the requirements for election to trade union office, compulsory arbitration in services that are not essential and other obstacles to the right to strike, the sanctions in the event of strikes set out in various legislative provisions and the application of the guarantees of the Convention to various categories of public workers; and (ii) on the basis of the guiding principles agreed in August 2018, bipartite and tripartite discussions with support from the Office would be held for the development of an agreed text of proposed reforms on sectoral unions and the conditions for strike ballots. The Committee regrets to note that, according to the information provided by the Government and the social partners, Bill No. 6162 has still not been adopted and that social dialogue has not been resumed on sectoral unions and the conditions for strike ballots. In this regard, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of amending section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which establishes membership requirements for the establishment of sectoral unions that are contrary to Article 2 of the Convention. In a context that is characterized, on the one hand, by a large number of small enterprises and, on the other, legislation that requires a minimum of 20 workers to establish a union, the excessive membership requirements established for the creation of sectoral unions has the effect of excluding a large number of workers from being able to exercise their right to organize. In light of the foregoing, the Committee once again urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee firmly expects to be able to note tangible progress in this regard in the near future and recalls the availability of the Office to provide the necessary technical assistance.

Application of the Convention in practice

Registration of trade unions. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the persistent differences between the indications provided by the Government and the trade unions concerning the process of the registration of unions by the labour administration. The Committee took specific note of the allegations by unions concerning the role reported to be attributed to the employer in the registration process. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: (i) 2,579 unions are registered (749 in the public sector, 901 in the private sector and 929 in the self-employed sector); (ii) 34 applications for the registration of unions were received in 2022, and 25 organizations were registered; and (iii) 16 applications for the registration of unions were received between 1 January and 6 July 2023, with eight organizations being registered.

The Committee notes the further indications by the Government that: (i) the law does not require the labour administration to inform the employer when applications for registration are received; (ii) the authorities in Guatemala respect the principle of non-interference by employers in the establishment and operation of unions as set out in Article 2 of Convention No. 98; (iii) at the time of its publication in the Official Journal, information on the registration of a union becomes public and, in accordance with section 275 of the Labour Code, the decisions of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare can be challenged through administrative appeals; and (iv) in 2021 and 2022, nine decisions to register trade unions were challenged through appeals lodged by employers, with three appeals being set aside, one rejected as being out of time and five awaiting a decision.

The Committee notes the indication by the ITUC that trade unions continue to complain of challenges by employers against the registration of unions, the denial of registration and delays by the labour administration in updating lists of trade union members.

The Committee takes due note of these various elements. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistical information on the registration of trade unions, including the grounds for refusals of registration and to maintain an open dialogue with trade union confederations on administrative practice in this respect. With reference to appeals by employers against registration decisions, the Committee requests the Government to indicate: (i) the grounds given for the appeals; (ii) whether the filing of an appeal has the effect of suspending registration; and (iii) whether the employer has access to the identity of the members of the union that has just been registered.

Campaign on freedom of association. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) at the beginning of 2023, materials were disseminated on freedom of association in 35 municipalities in the country; (ii) an awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association continued to be carried out through media with broad circulation, reaching around 7,500 readers of the Official Journal, 66,876 users of social networks and 432,000 readers of a broadly read outlet. The Committee notes these initiatives with interest and encourages the Government to: (i) continue the awareness-raising campaign in media with broad circulation; and (ii) take measures for the awareness-raising campaign to reach sectors characterized by a very low unionization rate, such as agriculture and the maquila. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Noting with concern the persistence of serious violations of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government, with the technical assistance of the Office, to intensify its efforts to overcome the legislative and practical difficulties examined in the present comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), received on 1 September 2023, which relate to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee also notes that the observations concerning the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), on the one hand, and the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement: Global Unions of Guatemala, on the other, received on 27 and 29 September 2023, respectively, contain elements relating to the application of the present Convention, examined in this comment. The Committee notes that the observations of the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement: Global Unions of Guatemala also contain numerous allegations of anti-union discrimination and obstacles to collective bargaining in the private and public sectors. While noting the Government's responses to these observations, the Committee requests it to continue its specific follow-up on each of the cases indicated by the trade unions with a view to ensuring the application of the guarantees set out in the Convention.

The Committee notes that, since its previous examination of the application of the Convention by Guatemala, the Governing Body has continued the follow-up to the ILO technical cooperation project "Strengthening of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association in Guatemala for the effective application of international labour standards" (GB/346/INS/10 and GB/349/INS/10(Rev.1)). The Committee observes that the Governing Body noted in particular the joint mission to Guatemala by the ILO, the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the ITUC in September 2022 to follow up the technical cooperation provided by the ILO in relation to the application of the road map on freedom of association approved by the Government in 2013. The Committee notes that the mission and the members of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) jointly identified a series of priority actions, several of which are related to the application of the present Convention.

Submission of a complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution

The Committee notes that at its 349th Session the Governing Body declared receivable a complaint filed by various delegates under article 26 of the ILO Constitution alleging non-observance by Guatemala of this Convention and of Convention No. 98, the content of which will be examined by the Governing Body at its session in June 2024 (GB.349/INS/19/2).

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination. Activities of the labour inspection services. In its previous comments, the Committee referred once again to the effects on protection against anti-union discrimination of the implementation of Legislative Decree No. 7/2017, which restored the power of the labour inspection services to impose penalties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the General Labour Inspectorate applies a special investigation procedure for freedom of association and collective bargaining, which contains a series of methodological and technical recommendations. The Government adds that, between 1 January 2021 and 16 August 2023, the General Labour Inspectorate: (i) dealt with 211 cases relating to trade union organizations and collective bargaining; (ii) noted 36 violations of the law in respect of freedom of association and imposed the same number of penalties to a total amount of 1,021,532.73 quetzales (approximately US$132,800). The Government adds that, under the legislation that is in force, those penalties may be subject to administrative appeals and action. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, at the request of worker representatives, the General Labour Inspectorate has established 80 dialogue roundtables to resolve collective disputes, with solutions being found that are satisfactory to the workers, such as the reinstatement of dismissed workers and the payment of wage arrears in 19 cases. The Committee takes due note of this information. Also observing the persistence of many allegations by trade unions of anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to continue strengthening measures so that violations of trade union and collective bargaining rights are addressed as a priority by the labour inspection services. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and type of penalties imposed by the General Labour Inspectorate in trade union matters, with an indication of the stage of their implementation and the number of administrative or judicial appeals made against them.

Effective judicial proceedings. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take action as soon as possible to overcome the obstacles to effective compliance with reinstatement orders handed down by the courts and to adopt new procedural rules to ensure that all cases of anti-union discrimination are examined by the courts in summary proceedings. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in 2022, a coordinating group was established between the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the judicial authorities and the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare to address bilaterally cases raised by workers' representatives, and is still waiting for the workers to indicate a date for meetings to begin; (ii) on 10 February 2023, the Pluripersonal Court of Penal Resolution was inaugurated to hear crimes relating to the failure to give effect to labour and social welfare rulings, and is based in the City of Guatemala; (iii) its competence includes cases of failure to comply with reinstatement orders issued by courts; (iv) up to 27 July 2023, a total of 137 orders had been referred to the Court, with 38.34 per cent of the cases being under investigation and hearing dates have already been set for the third quarter of 2023 for another 38.4 per cent of the cases and/or procedural solutions have been applied. The Committee notes the Government's further indication that it does not have available specific data on reinstatement procedures in cases of anti-union dismissals, as not all the economic and social disputes referred to the courts by the executive committee of unions concern anti-union dismissals. Despite that, the Government indicates that, between 2020 and 2022, the courts examined 21 cases relating to the reinstatement of trade union leaders or the members of unions that were being established, with the following outcomes: (i) the employer accepted the reinstatement in one case; (ii) the employer has not accepted it in four cases; (iii) it was not possible to examine the issue in 12 cases; and (iv) the court ruling was not implemented in four cases. The Government adds that, as agreed by the joint mission by the ILO, IOE and ITUC and the CNTRLLS, the ILO is currently carrying out an analysis of the challenges faced in achieving compliance with court reinstatement orders in cases of anti-union dismissals. The Committee also notes a series of further initiatives reported by the Government with the intention of facilitating judicial processes in labour matters, including in particular: (i) the establishment of a system for the electronic notification of the parties to cases; (ii) the specialization of various labour and social insurance tribunals, with their separation from the family branch; and (iii) the creation by the Supreme Court of the sixth chamber for labour and social insurance, which will allow the more rapid treatment of cases in which appeals are lodged.

The Committee takes due note of this information and particularly welcomes the establishment of the Pluripersonal Court for crimes of non-compliance in labour matters. However, the Committee observes: (i) the persistence of many allegations of the lack of judicial protection in relation to anti-union discrimination; (ii) the observation by the joint mission by the ILO, IOE and ITUC of the existence of a combination of legal, institutional and practical factors preventing the effective operation of the justice system in relation to anti-union discrimination in general and compliance with reinstatement orders in particular; and (iii) that the data provided by the Government on a limited number of cases confirm the difficulties involved in enforcing court reinstatement orders. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to continue and intensify the current efforts to ensure compliance with reinstatement orders, taking due account of the guidance provided in the analysis that is currently being prepared by the Office, and to provide statistics on the specific results achieved by the new judicial body in terms of compliance with and the execution of reinstatement orders. Furthermore, observing the lack of legislative progress in relation to judicial labour procedures, the Committee once again urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures for the adoption of new procedural rules to ensure that all cases of anti-union discrimination are examined by the courts in summary proceedings and that the respective court rulings are implemented rapidly.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous observations, the Committee noted the existence of various legislative obstacles (particularly those deriving from section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires at least 50 per cent membership in a particular sector to be able to establish an industry union, which has the effect of preventing any collective bargaining at the sectoral level) and practical obstacles to the exercise of collective bargaining, and noted the very low number of collective agreements concluded and approved in the country. The Committee notes that the Government refers firstly to a series of activities to promote collective bargaining, including (i) the campaign on freedom of association and the initiatives to facilitate the registration of trade unions described in the Committee's comments on the application of Convention No. 87; (ii) the various initiatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare in general, and the General Labour Inspectorate in particular, to resolve collective disputes through dialogue (and particularly the dialogue round-tables referred to above in relation to Article 1 of the Convention); and (iii) the capacity-building for labour judges, especially on the subject of collective bargaining. The Government also indicates that it is awaiting the technical assistance of the Office to facilitate tripartite dialogue on the legislative reform relating to industry unions and sectoral bargaining. The Committee notes the information provided by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare to the Governing Body indicating that, between 2015 and July 2023, the Ministry approved a total of 140 collective agreements (in the private and public sectors). The Committee also notes that trade union and international organizations continue to allege the persistence of major obstacles to the exercise of collective bargaining in both the private and public sectors, especially in relation to the process of approval by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare. The Committee regrets to note, in light of the above, that legislative obstacles persist which prevent collective bargaining at the sectoral level and that it has not been provided with specific information on the number of enterprise collective agreements concluded and approved over the past two years. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take the necessary measures to: (i) reform the legislation so that collective bargaining is possible at all levels; and (ii) actively promote the use of free and voluntary collective bargaining and ensure that the approval procedure does not constitute an obstacle to it. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed in this regard and to provide full information on the number of collective agreements adopted and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the workers covered.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. In previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the timeframe for the approval of public sector collective agreements on conditions of work and on the reasons for decisions not to approve such agreements. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on developments in relation to cases in which the validity of certain clauses of public sector collective agreements has been subject to legal challenges. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) the period for the approval of collective agreements, whether in the private or public sectors, is 25 working days, although the application of that period is subject to the comments (previos) made by the labour administration to guarantee the legality of the agreements and the response time of the parties to those comments; (ii) the reasons for decisions not to approve agreements are due to the absence of responses by the parties to the comments made by the labour administration; (iii) between 2012 and July 2023, a total of 119 collective agreements were approved in the public sector, of which 23 were approved with reservations, while 25 were not approved; (iv) within the context of the priority actions identified by the joint mission of the ILO, IOE and ITUC, the implementation of a tripartite examination, with ILO assistance, of the practice relating to the approval of collective agreements in the public sector is still pending; and (v) the Government needs to obtain more detailed information on specific cases that have given rise to legal action by the authorities against collective agreements in the public sector.

The Committee also notes the observations by national and international trade union organizations, which continue to denounce, based on a series of specific allegations, that the procedure for the approval of public sector collective agreements by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare gives rise to practices that are contrary to free and voluntary collective bargaining and that the Office of the National Attorney-General is continuing to challenge in the courts the validity of certain collective agreements that have already been concluded.

While noting the information provided by the Government, both in general and in relation to specific cases raised by the unions, the Committee notes the existence of profound discrepancies between the Government and the unions concerning the practices of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare in relation to the approval of collective agreements and the alleged challenges by the Office of the Attorney General against collective agreements concluded in the public sector. The Committee recalls that, in previous comments, it encouraged the Government to make efforts to ensure that there is a clear and balanced regulatory framework for collective bargaining in the public sector, but that it has not been provided with any further information on this subject. In view of the above, and recalling that Guatemala has also ratified the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee requests the Government to carry out broad consultations with the unions concerned with a view to: (i) evaluating and guaranteeing, in the specific context of the public administration, the conformity of the approval procedure for collective agreements with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining; and (ii) identifying the reforms necessary to ensure that collective bargaining in the public sector is based on a clear and balanced regulatory framework. The Committee recalls that the Government can continue to rely on ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The maquila sector. In its previous comments, the Committee regretted the persistence of a very low level of the exercise of collective rights in the maquila (export processing) sector and the absence of initiatives focusing specifically on their promotion. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) four of the cases examined by the recently created Pluripersonal Court of Penal Resolution to hear cases of failure to comply with labour and social welfare orders are related to the maquila sector; (ii), in 2023, the General Labour Inspectorate carried out inspections in 177 enterprises in the maquila sector, without identifying violations of freedom of association and collective bargaining; and (iii) training activities are being carried out for women working in the maquila sector, such as the diploma in auxiliary nursing specializing in reproductive rights and the promotion of human rights, which includes references to ratified ILO Conventions. While noting this information, the Committee observes that: (i) it has not received any further information on the exercise of collective rights in the maquila sector (such as bargaining, the conclusion of collective agreements or the registration of unions); (ii) it has not been provided with information on specific action to promote trade union rights and collective bargaining focusing on the maquila sector; and (iii) the complaint filed in June 2023 under article 26 of the ILO Constitution alleges that anti-union harassment is common in the sector. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government, in collaboration with the social partners and in accordance with the campaign described in the Committee's comments on the application of Convention No. 87, to take specific measures to promote freedom of association and collective bargaining in the maquila sector and to provide information on this subject. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on the exercise of collective rights in the sector, including the number of collective agreements in force and the number of workers covered by them, and the number of active unions.

Application of the Convention in municipal authorities. In its previous comments, in light of the existence of allegations of the violation of the Convention in various municipal authorities in the country, the Committee urged the Government to take all the necessary measures, including legislative measures where necessary, to ensure the application of the Convention at the municipal level. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) three of the cases examined by the recently created Pluripersonal Court of Penal Resolution are related to municipal authorities; (ii) as indicated previously, a coordination group has been created between the Office of the Public Prosecutor, the judicial authorities and the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare which is at the disposal of workers' representatives to examine cases that they consider to have priority; (iii) the General Labour Inspectorate is addressing as a priority 54 complaints concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining made against municipal authorities between 2022 and April 2023; and (iv) 12 of the 19 dialogue round-tables established by the General Labour Inspectorate in which satisfactory results have been obtained are related to municipal authorities. The Committee welcomes the various institutional efforts referred to by the Government to resolve disputes that have arisen in a series of municipal authorities and takes due note of the detailed information provided on the specific cases raised by the unions. However, the Committee observes that, despite the above: (i) there are still a high number of allegations of anti-union discrimination and obstacles to collective bargaining in the municipal sector which may reflect the existence of structural difficulties in industrial relations in the sector, which is an important source of formal employment; and (ii) the fact that new mayors are taking office in January 2024 following the elections held in 340 municipalities in the country in 2023 is likely to give rise to new disputes. In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to: (i) reinforce its current efforts to resolve existing disputes in municipal authorities in accordance with the Convention; and (ii) engage in broad dialogue with the social partners and the respective authorities with a view to finding lasting solutions, including of a legislative nature, to the issues arising in relation to the exercise of the collective rights of municipal workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Tripartite settlement of disputes in relation to freedom of association and collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee regretted to note that the Subcommittee on Mediation and Dispute Resolution of the CNTRLLS had not yet started to discharge its functions in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) the Subcommittee does not yet have a mediator, for which reason it has not been able to examine the 14 cases that it has accepted; (ii) the joint mission by the ILO, IOE and ITUC identified the determination of the profile of the mediator as a priority action; and (iii) the Subcommittee has met on two occasions in 2023 and the determination of the profile of the mediator is continuing. In light of the numerous disputes referred to by the Government and the unions, the Committee emphasizes the importance of developing dispute resolution machinery based on social dialogue. The Committee therefore encourages the tripartite constituents in the country to renew their efforts to provide the Subcommittee on Mediation and Dispute Resolution with one or more mediators so that it can begin to discharge its functions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Noting the persistence of significant shortcomings in compliance with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government, with ILO technical assistance, to intensify its efforts to overcome the legislative and practical difficulties examined in the present comment.

Haiti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 30 August 2023, as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, which once again refer to the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, and the repercussions this has on the exercise of trade union rights, which are already particularly under threat. Taking note of the extent of the crisis in which the country is immersed at all levels, the Committee can only refer to its previous observation and direct request of 2020 and express the hope that the Government will be able to comment on all of the issues raised in the near future. To this end, the Committee reiterates that any request for technical assistance addressed by the Government to the Office will be acted upon as soon as possible.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, which relate to the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, and which largely refer to those formulated in 2022.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which contain new allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in the textile sector, such as anti-union dismissals. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH), received on 2 November 2022, which, in the context of the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, denounce the blatant limitations on the right to organize and bargain collectively in practice. The Committee notes the extent of the crisis affecting the country at all levels and hopes that the Government will be able to comment on the issues raised in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, which has been expected since 2014, has not been received. In light of the urgent appeal made to the Government in 2020, the Committee is proceeding with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal. While being aware of the difficulties faced by the country, the Committee recalls that it raised questions concerning the application of the Convention in an observation, which particularly concerned the need to strengthen protection against anti-union discrimination as well as the penalties provided in this regard. It recalls also that its comments concern allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in practice, especially in several enterprises in textile export processing zones, and the lack of social bargaining in the country. In the absence of additional observations from the social partners and having no indication at its disposal of progress made on these pending issues, the Committee refers to its previous observation of 2020 and urges the Government to provide a complete response in 2022 to the questions raised. For that purpose, the Committee expects that any request for technical assistance, in relation with Conventions ratified by the country, that the Government may wish to address to the Office will be taken up as soon as possible.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Honduras

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) sent by the Government together with its report. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Authentic Trade Union Federation of Honduras (FASH), received on 27 September and 7 November 2023, respectively, which relate to matters examined in the context of the present observation and also contain allegations of anti-union dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this respect.

Trade union rights and civil liberties

In its previous comment, having expressed deep concern at the persistence of acts of anti-union violence and the lack of sufficient progress in taking specific and rapid measures in this regard, the Committee once again urged the Government and all the competent authorities to: (i) take specific and rapid measures, including budgetary measures, to comply fully with the elements in the tripartite agreement, signed after the direct contacts mission 2019, concerning action against anti-union violence, giving the Committee on Anti-Union Violence, also established in 2019, the necessary and vital impetus for it to succeed in the performance of its functions, and ensuring the active involvement of all relevant authorities; (ii) institutionalize and make effective the participation of the representative trade unions in the National Council for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders; (iii) draw up a special investigation protocol to enable the Office of the Public Prosecutor to examine, systematically and effectively, any anti-union motives behind the acts of violence affecting members of the trade union movement; (iv) ensure that the criminal courts give priority treatment to cases of anti-union violence; and (v) ensure adequate and prompt protection for all at-risk members of the trade union movement. The Committee also requested the Government to continue providing detailed information on criminal investigations and proceedings relating to acts of violence against members of the trade union movement, including in relation to the murder of Jorge Alberto Acosta Barrientos and of Oscar Obdulio Turcios Funes, on 17 November 2019 and 13 July 2020, respectively.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, according to a report by the Prosecutor for Crimes against Life, of the 12 cases currently under investigation and prosecution, final judgments have been handed down in 2 cases and 10 are still under investigation. The Government states that the investigation into the death of Oscar Obdulio Turcios Fúnes is still ongoing. The Government also provides statistical information concerning crimes of threats and usurpation, without indicating what these statistics refer to, or their relation to acts of anti-union violence.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has not provided any further information concerning the progress made in the investigations and prosecutions relating to specific cases of murders of members of the trade union movement. The Committee also observes that the Government does not indicate in which two cases final judgments have been handed down. The Committee recalls that, as observed in its previous comment: (i) seven cases remain under investigation (the murders of Sonia Landaverde Miranda, Alfredo Misael Ávila Castellanos, Evelio Posadas Velásquez, Juana Suyapa Posadas Bustillo, Glenda Maribel Sánchez, Fredy Omar Rodríguez and Roger Abraham Vallejo) and (ii) five cases remain before the courts (the arrest warrants for the murders of Alma Yaneth Díaz Ortega, Uva Erlinda Castellanos Vigil, José Ángel Flores and Silmer Dionisio George remain to be issued and the conviction against the perpetrator of the murder of Claudia Larissa Brizuela is under appeal). In addition to those 12 cases, the Committee recalls that the Government had provided information on the investigations carried out by the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Life to shed light on the murder, on 17 November 2019, of Jorge Alberto Acosta Barrientos.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comment, it noted with concern the slow progress in the investigations of murders committed almost a decade ago, and the low number of judicial convictions to date. The Committee most particularly and deeply regrets that it has not received any information on the progress in these investigations and emphasizes once again that justice delayed is justice denied. The Committee also regrets that it has not received any information from the Government relating to protection measures taken in respect of members of the trade union movement who are at risk.

The Committee notes that COHEP and FASH express concern about unresolved cases related to anti-union violence and indicate that anti-union violence continues to increase. The Committee notes that, according to statistical data provided by COHEP, between 2020 and 2022, the impunity rate for homicides in the country ranged from 87 to 95 per cent. The Committee recalls that the Committee on the Application of Standards examined the application of the Convention in 2018 and 2019 and noted with grave concern the absence of convictions against the perpetrators of the crimes, which created a situation of impunity reinforcing the climate of violence and insecurity. The Committee notes that COHEP and FASH emphasize that they have not received any update on the investigations and criminal proceedings concerning acts of violence that have affected members of the trade union movement from either the Committee for the Handling of Disputes referred to the ILO (MEPCOIT) or the Committee on Anti-Union Violence. Both COHEP and FASH also express concern about the limited impact of the Committee on Anti-Union Violence. The Committee recalls that the Committee on Anti-Union Violence was established after the Office conducted a technical assistance mission in 2019 to support the implementation of the tripartite agreement signed following the direct contacts mission. The Committee notes with regret that, according to COHEP and FASH, although the Committee on Anti-Union Violence was moderately functioning from 2019 to June 2021, it has not been functioning for two years and did not hold any meetings in 2023.

In the light of the above-mentioned concerns, the Committee firmly urges once again the Government and all the competent authorities to: (i) take specific and rapid measures, including budgetary measures, to comply fully with the elements in the tripartite agreement of 2019 concerning action against anti-union violence, ensuring that the Committee on Anti-Union Violence holds its meeting and giving it the necessary and vital impetus for it to succeed in the performance of its functions, ensuring the active involvement of all relevant authorities; (ii) institutionalize and make effective the participation of the representative trade unions in the National Council for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders; (iii) draw up a special investigation protocol to enable the Office of the Public Prosecutor to examine, systematically and effectively, any anti-union motives behind the acts of violence affecting members of the trade union movement; (iv) ensure that the criminal courts give priority treatment to cases of anti-union violence; and (v) ensure adequate and prompt protection for all at-risk members of the trade union movement. The Committee urges the Government to report in the near future on the progress made on each of these points, as well as the progress made in the investigations and prosecutions relating to the acts of violence that have affected members of the trade union movement.

Legislative issues

Articles 2 et seq. of the Convention. Establishment, autonomy and activities of trade unions. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government for many years to amend the following provisions of the Labour Code to bring them into conformity with the Convention:

- the exclusion from the rights and guarantees of the Convention of workers in agricultural and stock-raising enterprises which do not permanently employ more than ten workers (section 2(1));
- the prohibition of more than one trade union in a single enterprise (section 472);
- the requirement of at least 30 workers to establish a trade union (section 475);
- the requirement that the officers of a trade union must be of Honduran nationality (sections 510(a) and 541(a)), be engaged in the corresponding activity (sections 510(c) and 541(c)) and be able to read and write (sections 510(d) and 541(d));
- the prohibition on strikes called by federations and confederations (section 537);
- the requirement of a two-thirds majority of the votes of the total membership of the trade union organization in order to call a strike (sections 495 and 563);
- the authority of the competent minister to end disputes in oil industry services (section 555(2));
- government authorization or a six-month period of notice for any suspension of work in public services that do not depend directly or indirectly on the State (section 558);
- the referral to compulsory arbitration, without the possibility of calling a strike for as long as the arbitration award is in force (two years), of collective disputes in public services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term (sections 554(2) and (7), 820 and 826).

In its previous comment, after regretting that there had been no progress in the tripartite discussion process envisaged in the tripartite agreement signed in 2019, the Committee reiterated that while it was aware of the obstacles that the COVID-19 pandemic might have raised, it trusted that the Government, with the technical support of the Office, would move forward as soon as possible with holding tripartite discussions and make progress in the preparation of the reforms that had been requested for many years. The Committee encouraged the development of agreements in the framework of the Economic and Social Council (CES) that reflect the recommendations of the Committee. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the CES remains firmly convinced that social dialogue is a useful and appropriate mechanism for reaching the necessary agreements and reflecting the Committee's recommendations; (ii) the various technical bodies attached to the Technical Secretariat of the CES should be revived in the short term, with a view to holding the appropriate discussions to facilitate decision-making at the highest level of the CES; (iii) although the Technical Secretariat of the CES requested in March and December 2022, as well as in February 2023, that the worker, government and employer sectors accredit their representatives to form sectoral committees (technical bodies), including the MEPCOIT, to date, it has only received a reply from the employer sector through COHEP; and (iv) although the CES addressed a wide range of issues in 2022, no issues related to the reforms to the Labour Code that were linked to freedom of association were discussed. The Committee also notes that the ITUC stresses the need for immediate action to be taken to amend the above-mentioned provisions of the Labour Code to bring them into conformity with the Convention. The Committee also notes that FASH indicates its willingness to discuss possible reforms to the Labour Code.

The Committee once again notes with regret that, although it has been requesting an amendment to the provisions of the Labour Code for several years, no progress has been made in this respect. The Committee strongly encourages the Government and all the parties concerned, with the technical support of the Office, to make every effort to revive the various technical bodies attached to the Technical Secretariat of the CES and to hold tripartite discussions to enable progress to be made in the implementation of the reforms that have been requested for many years. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard.

New Penal Code. In its previous comment, after noting some concerns regarding the impact of certain provisions of the Penal Code adopted in 2020 on the free exercise of trade union activities, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the consultation process initiated in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government describes in detail the issues addressed by the CES at its meetings and observes that these meetings did not address issues related to the Penal Code. The Committee also notes that, according to COHEP, a new Government took office on 27 January 2022 and most of the technical staff of the executive branch was removed, so it is unclear whether the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has continued since then the consultation process on the Penal Code. The Committee regrets that it does not have any information on the consultation process in question and once again requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comment, while aware of the obstacles that the COVID-19 pandemic may have created in relation to the operation of the MEPCOIT, the Committee emphasized the essential role that the MEPCOIT could and must play in the resolution of industrial disputes and hoped that it would resume its activities at the earliest possible opportunity. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, although it recognizes the MEPCOIT as a privileged space for addressing various issues and reaching consensus to reduce conflict and harmonize industrial relations, the MEPCOIT has not held any meetings since 2021. The Government expresses the wish that dialogue resume and that the MEPCOIT meet the commitments set out in the tripartite agreement concluded in 2019. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, the Technical Secretariat of the CES requested in 2022 and early 2023 that the worker, government and employer sectors accredit their representatives to form sectoral committees (technical bodies), including the MEPCOIT, and that to date, it has only received a reply from the employer sector through COHEP. The Committee notes with regret that even though several years have passed since its establishment and despite the role, as recognized by the Government, it can play in the resolution of labour disputes, the MEPCOIT has not been able to meet. Noting the Government's indications regarding the accreditation of the representatives of the various sectors to form sectoral committees (technical bodies), including the MEPCOIT, and recalling the essential role that the MEPCOIT can and must play in the resolution of labour disputes, the Committee urges the Government and all the parties concerned to make every effort to ensure that this committee resumes its activities as soon as possible. The Committee requests the Government to report on this matter.

The Committee requests the Government to take, as soon as possible, the necessary measures to bring its legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to ensure that the Committee on Anti-Union Violence and the MEPCOIT resume their meetings and that progress is made in respect of the above-mentioned measures through social dialogue. The Committee reiterates that the technical assistance of the Office is at its disposal and requests the Government to provide detailed information in its next report on any progress made with regard to the issues raised.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023 concerning the discussions that took place at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards with respect to the application of the Convention. The Committee further notes: (i) the observations of the Employers' Association of Indonesia (APINDO) received on 31 August 2023; (ii) the joint observations of the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions (KSPI), the Confederation of All Indonesian Workers' Union (KSPSI) and the Indonesian Trade Union Prosperity (KSBSI), received on 31 August 2023; and (iii) the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 27 September 2023. All of the above noted observations refer to the matters addressed below.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee), in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the significant gaps in law and practice regarding the protection against anti-union discrimination, the scope of collective bargaining permitted under the law, the promotion of collective bargaining, and interference in free and voluntary collective bargaining with respect to the Convention. The Conference Committee further urged the Government to: (i) review the Law on Job Creation in consultation with the social partners and adopt without delay the amendments necessary to bring that law into compliance with the Convention; (ii) ensure in law and practice that there is no interference of employers or government officials in a voting procedure of trade unions in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention; (iii) ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration as a way to avoid free and voluntary collective bargaining is employed only in very limited circumstances and ensure its use does not impede the right of trade unions to freely organize their activities; (iv) promote collective bargaining, and provide information to the Committee of Experts on the measures taken in this regard as well as on the results achieved, including the number of collective agreements specifying the sectors of activity concerned; (v) ensure that the rights under the Convention are guaranteed for workers in all the zones, equivalent to export processing zones, where export products are produced, and provide information to the Committee of Experts on the trends and number of collective agreements in force in these zones; (vi) prevent any act of violence and ensure, in law and practice, adequate protection of individuals for their legitimate exercise of their rights under the Convention, including through effective and expeditious access to justice, adequate compensation as well as the imposition of effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions; (vii) provide to the Committee of Experts statistics on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and interference filed, the number of complaints brought before the courts, as well as any remedies and sanctions imposed and the average duration of proceedings under each category; and (viii) take decisive and effective measures to promote a climate of non-violence, as well as constructive social dialogue and labour relations at all levels. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee concluded by requesting the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance with a particular focus on labour law reform, including the Job Creation Law, and with the full involvement of the social partners so as to ensure full compliance with the Convention's obligations.

The Job Creation Law. In respect of the tripartite review of the law and its regulations, the Committee notes that, according to the Government: (i) Law No. 11 of 2020 concerning Job Creation had been revoked and replaced with a Government Regulation in Lieu of Law (Perppu), No. 2 of 2022, which was later enacted into law as Law No. 6 of 2023; (ii) discussions were held across 18 regions to gather inputs on Government Regulations Nos 35 and 36 of 2021 implementing the Job Creation Law; and (iii) the said discussions covered all provinces and were attended virtually by all stakeholders, including workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee further notes in this regard APINDO's indication that the Government had engaged with its members to provide information on and receive inputs with respect to the Law on Job Creation. As concerns the abovementioned laws, the Committee notes that the Job Creation Law's validity was upheld by the Constitutional Court in October 2023 and that Government Regulation No. 36 of 2021 on wages was enacted as Government Regulation No. 51 in November 2023. In respect of these developments, the Committee notes with concern the KSPI, KSPSI and KSBSI allegations that although they constitute the nation's largest workers' organizations, they had not participated in the consultations referred to by the Government and were not consulted or involved in the determination of the composition of the National Tripartite Council (LKS tripartite). Additionally, the Committee notes with regret that the technical assistance proposed by the Office with regards to the mentioned consultations on the Government Regulation could not take place.

The Committee notes moreover that the Indonesian unions and the ITUC continue to raise several concerns with respect to the Job Creation Law, in particular that it: (i) exposes certain categories of workers to greater risk of anti-union discrimination; (ii) restricts the scope of collective bargaining, especially for workers in micro and small enterprises (MSEs); and (iii) undermines collective bargaining by removing many protective regulations regarding the use of fixed-term contracts and outsourcing. In light of these allegations and bearing in mind the conclusions of the Conference Committee, the Committee requests the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to carefully monitor the impact of the Job Creation Law and its attendant regulations, with a view to ensuring the full application, in practice, of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide statistics on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and interference filed, the number of complaints brought before the courts, as well as any remedies and sanctions imposed and the average duration of proceedings under each category. The Committee notes the information supplied in this regard, particularly the list of complaints submitted to the Ministry of Manpower regarding alleged violations of freedom of association. As regards complaints of violations of freedom of association handled by labour inspectors, the Government indicates that: (i) in 2020, one case was resolved by a decision of the Tangerang High Court resulting in two convictions; (ii) no cases of violations of freedom of association were recorded in 2021; and (iii) two cases were resolved through mediation, and one through bipartite negotiation in 2022.

The Committee notes the very small number of complaints reported by the Government, particularly in view of the size of the country's workforce. The Committee also notes the conclusions of the Conference Committee highlighting the existence of significant gaps in law and practice regarding the protection against anti-union discrimination, the Government's acknowledgment of the concerns raised by trade unions in this respect, as well as its indication that it would continue to pay attention to this important matter and receive the Office's technical assistance as appropriate. Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government to review, in full consultation with the social partners concerned, the existing system of protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, with a view to ensuring that it establishes comprehensive protection against anti-union discrimination, including swift recourse to mechanisms that may impose sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts, in accordance with Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee further encourages the Government to avail itself of the Office's technical assistance in respect of this matter and to report on the results of the referred review.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee recalls its longstanding comments on the need to amend section 122 of the Manpower Act, so as to discontinue the presence of the employer during a voting procedure held in order to determine which trade union in an enterprise shall have the right to represent the workers in collective bargaining. It furthermore recalls that in its previous comment, it had noted with concern the Government's statement that it was satisfied with this provision and did not deem it necessary to amend it. The Committee regrets to note that the Government once again largely repeats the indications it had previously provided, including that the employer and the Government are merely present during the vote as witnesses and that their presence will not affect the voting. Once again emphasizing the need to ensure adequate protection against acts of interference in practice, the Committee reiterates its expectation that the Government will amend section 122 of the Manpower Act so as to prohibit the presence of the employer during voting procedures. It once again requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously urged the Government to review sections 5, 14 and 24 of Law No. 2 of 2004 concerning the Industrial Relations Dispute Settlement Act (IRDS Act), to ensure that compulsory arbitration during collective bargaining can only be invoked under exceptional circumstances. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the IRDS Act promotes the resolution of disputes through the negotiation of the involved parties. Ministerial regulation No. 31/2008 requires the holding of bipartite negotiations before resorting to mediation and conciliation; should these procedures fail, the Industrial Relations Court may settle the dispute as a last resort. The Government further indicates that the arbitration procedure must be based on written agreements between the parties involved (section 32 of the IRDS Act), before repeating its previous assertion that there is therefore no strong reason to amend the above-noted sections.

The Committee notes this information and observes, additionally, that the settlement of disputes through arbitration is established by sections 29-54 of the IRDS Act. The Committee recalls, however, that sections 5, 14 and 24 of the IRDS Act allow one of the parties to an industrial dispute to file a legal petition to the Industrial Relations Court for final settlement of the dispute, if conciliation or mediation fails. The Committee highlights in this respect that the possibility for a single party to collective bargaining to submit the resolution of the dispute to the decision of a court has the same restrictive effect on the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining as compulsory arbitration mechanisms. In this sense, unilateral recourse to a court to settle a collective bargaining process is only acceptable: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; and (iv) in the event of an acute crisis. Accordingly, the Committee once again urges the Government to take measures to amend sections 5, 14 and 24 of the IRDS Act to ensure that the unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration or to a tribunal to settle a collective bargaining process may only occur in the limited set of situations mentioned above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue providing statistics on the number of collective bargaining agreements (CBAs) in force, specifying the sectors of activity concerned and the number of workers covered. The Government indicates in this respect that nationwide there were a total of 18,144 CBAs and provides the following information on the number of CBAs by sector: Wholesale and Retail Trade, Repair of Motor Vehicles and Motorcycles (4,086); Manufacturing Industry (3,985); Rental and Leasing Activities without Option of Labour Travel Agent (1,347); Professional, Scientific and Technical Activities (1,025); and Accommodation and Food Service Activities (889). The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistics on the number of CBAs in force, specifying the sectors of activity concerned and the number of workers covered.

Collective bargaining at the sectoral level. The Committee previously requested the Government to also promote collective bargaining at the sectoral and regional levels and to provide information in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's information concerning the general activities carried out to promote collective bargaining during the 2015–23 period, including trainings on negotiation skills conducted in 34 provinces. Recalling once again that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to also promote collective bargaining at the sectoral and regional levels and to provide information specifically thereon in its next report.

Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that workers in all the zones equivalent to EPZs are covered by the Convention's guarantees, and to inform it of the progress made in the tripartite consultations on the alleged denial of the rights under the Convention to workers in EPZs. It further requested the Government to provide detailed information, including statistics, on the existing collective agreements and collective bargaining practice in the referred zones. In this respect the Committee notes that, according to the Government, 687 CBAs had been concluded in EPZs. As highlighted in its previous comment, the Committee requests the Government to complement the information on the number of collective agreements in force in these zones with elements on the number of workers covered and to provide information, including statistical data, on any trends observed in the coverage of the collective agreements concluded in the referred zones. Observing finally that the Government provides no information on the tripartite consultations previously referred to, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will take all the necessary measures to address the different points raised in this comment and that it will fully avail itself of the Office's technical assistance as requested by the Conference Committee.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the following observations concerning matters addressed in this comment, as well as the Government's replies thereto: the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) and of the Japan Business Federation (Nippon Keidanren), transmitted with the Government's report; and the observations of the Firefighting Personnel and Ambulance Workers (ZENSHOKYO), received on 10 August 2023.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of firefighting personnel. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize for firefighting personnel. For the past years, the Government has been referring to the operation of the Fire Defence Personnel Committee (FDPC) system, which was presented as an alternative. The role of the FDPC was to examine proposals on working conditions of the personnel and to submit its conclusions to the chief of the fire department. Surveys directed to fire defence headquarters are regularly conducted to gather information on the deliberations and results of the FDPC. In its latest report, the Government refers to specific surveys, conducted in 2018 and 2022, aimed at assessing the operation of the FDPC system and seeking improvement. The Government also reports that, from January 2022 up to March 2023, the Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communications (MIC) held the seventh to the tenth consultation with the workers' representatives, where it discussed the Government's opinion that fire defence personnel are considered as police in relation to the implementation of the Convention, as well as various topics such as the re-employment of fire defense personnel, harassment in the workplace, the employment and empowerment of female firefighters, the state of the ambulance services and working hours.

In this regard, the Committee notes the ZENSHOKYO indication that since 1977 it handles issues such as the improvement of the equipment and facilities for firefighting and ambulance personnel, as well as their working conditions without being able to negotiate and consult with management due to the denial of the right to organize. The sanitary crisis during the COVID-19 pandemic led to worsened working conditions for emergency personnel and in particular the ambulance services. Despite clear proposals gathered from the first-responder firefighters, ZENSHOKYO was unable to engage with management on urgent remedial measures in the absence of a system where labour and management could cooperate. Based on such experience and in anticipation of any future crises, ZENSHOKYO calls for the recognition of the right to organize for firefighting personnel. The Committee notes that the Government recalls the emergency measures taken in cooperation with concerned organizations to reduce the burden on firefighters and ambulance services during the sanitary crisis, as well as initiatives to increase the personnel and the budget. The Government also recalls that the use of the FDPC system, even during the sanitary crisis, enabled the review of about 5,000 opinions per year - of which 40 per cent are considered appropriate for implementation. Since the authorities were able to address the difficult situation of ambulance transport during and after the COVID-19 pandemic, and taking into account the concerns raised by the Fire Chiefs' Association of Japan, and other organizations, that the granting of the right to organize may disrupt the firefighting staff's reporting line and organizational order, and thus hinder the activities during wide-scale disasters, the Government does not share the view of ZENSHOKYO that the right to organize of firefighters is indispensable to prepare for future crises. The Committee further notes that JTUC-RENGO reiterates that the reporting systems, consulting services or fairness committees set up by the Fire and Disaster Management Agency are not functioning, and amount to nothing more than makeshift measures and the Government's denial of the right to organize hampers fire and emergency services by lowering morale among personnel, impedes firefighting and emergency services and ultimately endangers the lives and properties of citizens and residents. The Committee also notes that Nippon Keidanren shares the view expressed by the Government.

The Committee is bound to recall that the implementation policy for the FDPC remains distinct from the recognition of the right to organize under Article 2 of the Convention. It notes that views remain divergent on the meaningfulness of the consultations held under the FDPC system and notes with regret that no progress was made towards bringing positions closer together on the right to organize of firefighting personnel. The Committee once again expresses its firm expectation that continuing consultations will contribute to further progress towards ensuring the right of firefighting personnel to form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on developments in this regard.

Article 2. Right to organize of prison staff. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments concerning the need to recognize the right to organize of prison staff. The Committee notes that the Government recalls its position that prison officers are included in the police, that this view was accepted by the Committee on Freedom of Association in its 12th and 54th Reports, and that granting the right to organize to the personnel of penal institutions would pose difficulty for the appropriate performance of their duties and the proper maintenance of discipline and order in the penal institutions. The Government reiterates that, in cases where any emergency occurs in a penal institution, it is required to bring the situation under control, by force if necessary; therefore, granting the right to organize to the personnel of penal institutions could pose a problem for the performance of their duties and maintenance of discipline and order. Since 2019, the Government decided to grant expanded opportunities for the personnel of penal institutions to express their opinions in the eight regional correctional headquarters across the country. In 2022, the sessions took place partly online with the participation of 222 general staff members (from 75 penal institutions). The participants exchanged opinions on improving the work environment, on the staff training and on the reduction of the workload. The Committee notes Nippon Keidanren's observations supporting the Government's view that prison officers should be considered part of the police.

The Committee notes that according to JTUC-RENGO: (i) the various measures described by the Government to provide opportunities for the personnel of penal institutions to express their opinions on their working conditions are irrelevant to union rights, including the right to organize. They merely constitute an exchange of views with individual employees and cannot be considered negotiation; and (ii) the measures described by the Government serve as substitutes for a meaningful discussion on granting the right to organize to the personnel of penal institutions.

While noting the information on the Government initiatives to give opportunities to the personnel of penal institutions to provide their opinions on various aspects, including on their working conditions, the Committee must reiterate that, in its view, these initiatives remain distinct from the recognition of the right to organize under Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that, despite reiterated calls from this Committee and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (hereafter the Conference Committee), the Government has again failed to engage in consultation with the social partners to determine the categories of prison officers that may form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in previous reports, the Government referred to the following distinction among staff in penal institutions: (i) prison officers with a duty of total operations in penal institutions, including conducting security services with the use of physical force, who are allowed to use small arms and light weapons; (ii) penal institution staff other than prison officers who are engaged directly in the management of penal institutions or the treatment of inmates; and (iii) penal institution staff designated, by virtue of the Code of Criminal Procedure, to carry out duties of judicial police officials with regard to crimes which occur in penal institutions and who have the authority to arrest, search and seize. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to engage without further delay in consultations with the social partners and other stakeholders concerned to determine the necessary measures to ensure that prison officers, other than those with the specific duties of the judicial police, may form and join an organization of their own choosing to defend their occupational interests, and to provide detailed information on the steps taken in this regard.

Article 3. Denial of basic labour rights to public service employees. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments on the need to ensure basic labour rights for public service employees, in particular that they enjoy the right to industrial action without risk of sanctions, with the only exception being public servants exercising authority in the name of the State and workers employed in essential services in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes the general information provided once again by the Government on its overall approach, which remains to continue to hear opinions from employee organizations. The Government refers once again to the procedures of the National Personnel Authority (NPA) presented as a compensatory guarantee for public service employees whose basic labour rights are restricted. The Government indicates that the NPA held 180 official meetings with employees' organizations in 2021 and 190 official meetings in 2022, making recommendations enabling working conditions of public service employees to be brought into line with the general conditions of society. The Government invokes the example of the use of the NPA recommendation system through fact-finding surveys nationwide for revision of the remuneration of public service employees, implemented since 1960. Therefore, the Government restates that these compensatory measures maintain appropriately the working conditions of public service employees. The Committee notes the Nippon Keidanren observations supporting the Government's intention to continue to carefully review and consider measures for an autonomous labour-employer relations system, taking into account views from employees' organizations.

The Committee notes, however, the observations from the JTUC-RENGO regretting that the Government's position on the autonomous labour-employer relations system has not evolved and the Government's failure to initiate consultation with the organizations concerned. Furthermore, JTUC-RENGO reiterates that the NPA recommendations are left to political decision, making it obvious that such a mechanism is defective as a compensatory measure. JTUC-RENGO regrets that on all occasions the Government merely and invariably repeats its statement made in 2013 in the House of Representatives that "an autonomous industrial relations system would have a wide range of issues and as citizens' understanding has not been gained yet, it will be necessary to continue to consider this carefully." JTUC-RENGO deplores the evident lack of intention on the part of the Government to reconsider the legal system regarding the basic labour rights of public service employees.

Noting with deep regret that the report fails to provide any sign of progress on the matter, the Committee is bound to urge the Government to engage without further delay in consultations with the social partners and other stakeholders concerned to determine the necessary measures to ensure that public service employees, who are not exercising authority in the name of the State, enjoy fully their basic labour rights, in particular the right to industrial action. Moreover, the Committee also urges the Government to resume consultations with the social partners concerned for the review of the current system with a view to ensuring effective, impartial and speedy conciliation and arbitration procedures, in which the parties have confidence and can participate at all stages, and in which the awards, once made, will be fully and promptly implemented. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on meaningful steps taken in this regard.

Local public service employees. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comments, representative organizations in the local public sector had referred to the adverse impact of the entry into force of the revised Local Public Service Act in April 2020 on their right to organize on the following grounds: (i) non-regular local public service employees and their unions are not covered by the general labour law that provides for basic labour rights and their ability to appeal to the labour relations commission in case of alleged unfair labour practice; (ii) the new system, which aimed at limiting the use of part-time staff on permanent duties (through special service positions appointed by fiscal year just as regular service employees), has the effect of increasing the number of workers stripped of their basic labour rights; (iii) the conditional yearly employment system in place has created job anxiety and weakens union action; and (iv) these situations further call for the urgent restoration of basic labour rights to all public service employees.

The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates that the legal amendments ensure proper appointment of special service personnel and temporary appointment employees and clarify the framework of appointment of regular service part-time staff. In the Government's view, the amendments guarantee the status of these personnel and employees along with the introduction of some allowances due to them. The change in the conditions of basic labour rights is therefore the consequence of the guarantee of the terms of appointment of these persons, as originally set out. The Government also states that it will carefully examine what the basic labour right of local public service employees should be "in a manner consistent with the measures for the labour-employer relations system of national public service employees" as prescribed by the supplementary provision of the Civil Service Reform Act. The Committee notes Nippon Keidanren's observations supporting the position of the Government for careful examination regarding the basic labour rights of local public service employees. The Committee further notes JTUC-RENGO's indication that while the legal amendments are a step to ensure proper appointment of special service personnel and temporary appointment employees, the basic labour rights of local public service employees remain unaddressed and should be addressed in the overall framework of the restoration of basic labour rights to all civil servants.

The Committee is once again bound to observe that the legal amendments to the Local Public Service Act that entered into force in April 2020 for local public service employees had the effect of broadening the category of public sector workers whose rights under the Convention are not fully ensured. Therefore, the Committee is once again bound to urge the Government to expedite without further delay its consideration of the autonomous labour-employer relations system, in consultation with the social partners concerned so as to ensure that municipal unions are not deprived of their long-held trade union rights through the introduction of these amendments. It expects the Government to provide detailed information on meaningful steps in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3. Consultations on a time-bound action plan of measures for the autonomous labour-employer relations system. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely repeats that it is examining carefully how to respond to the conclusions and recommendations formulated by the Conference Committee in 2018, and reiterates that it is exchanging opinions with JTUC-RENGO in this regard. The Committee notes, however, that JTUC-RENGO denies that such exchange of opinions took place and deplores that, despite the five years that have lapsed since the Conference Committee called on the Government to develop a time-bound action plan together with the social partners in order to implement its recommendations, the Government has taken no steps towards its materialization. The Committee observes with concern that the Government has made no tangible progress in engaging with the social partners to draw-up the action plan requested by the Conference Committee since 2018. Therefore, the Committee is bound to urge the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to define, in consultation with the social partners concerned, a time-bound plan of action to give effect to the recommendations of the Conference Committee. The Committee expects the Government to report specific steps in this respect.

Jordan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2023 which concern certain matters examined in this comment.

Articles 1–6 of the Convention. Scope of application of the Convention. Foreign workers. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the legal restrictions to the freedom of association of foreign workers, in addition to the dominant union monopoly, have strongly contributed to a situation where, in many sectors foreign workers have no access to collective bargaining, while in some others, their bargaining power is significantly constrained in practice. In view of the foreign workers' large share in the workforce in Jordan, the Committee had noted that this issue significantly affected the exercise of freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining in the whole Jordanian economy and had urged the Government to repeal sections 98(f)1 of the Labour Code and 7(a) of the Jordanian Teachers' Association Act (JTA Act) which exclude foreign workers from the right to establish and join unions, and to promote collective bargaining in the sectors where foreign workers make up most of the workforce and encourage the existing unions to adopt an inclusive approach to the participation of foreign workers in collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Jordanian Constitution grants the right to establish unions only to Jordanians and therefore repealing section 98(f)1 would be anti-constitutional. Regarding section 7(a) of the JTA Act, the Government indicates that pursuant to its section 19(d), proposals to amend the JTA Act must be made by the board of the union, and subsequently submitted to the Central Authority of the Association and finally to the Minister who will take the necessary legal measures. Regarding the promotion of collective bargaining in sectors where foreign workers make up most of the workforce (including agriculture, construction, domestic work and the garment industry), the Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that in 2022, the number of collective labour contracts reached 47, which covered 263,123 workers including foreign workers. In the first half of 2023, these numbers reached 31 and 146,746 respectively. The Government adds that in the construction sector there is a cooperation protocol between the General Union of Construction Workers and the Association of Investors in the Jordanian Housing sector, and negotiations between that union and the Jordanian Construction Contractors' Association are ongoing.

Noting the Government's replies to the legislative review requests, the Committee recalls that States have the obligation to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions they ratify, and it is in view of fulfilling this fundamental obligation that they must bring their law and practice into conformity with those Conventions. Considering that the Convention does not allow the exclusion of foreign workers from its scope, the Committee once again urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to repeal all the legal provisions that exclude foreign workers from the right to engage in collective bargaining, in particular sections 98(f)1 of the Labour Code and 7(a) of the JTA Act. The Committee further requests the Government to promote collective bargaining in the sectors where foreign workers are highly represented and take measures to ensure that their demands and concerns are taken into account in this process, and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

Agricultural and domestic workers. In its previous comment the Committee had noted that domestic workers are not covered by the Labour Code provisions concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee also noted that since the adoption of Decision No. 2022/45 of the Ministry of Labour (MOL), domestic workers can join a pre-existing sectoral union. The Committee had requested the Government to take measures towards the express recognition of the rights of domestic workers to organize and bargain collectively and to provide information on collective bargaining in domestic work and agriculture sectors. It notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in reply to these requests. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take appropriate measures to: (i) revise the Labour code or the Regulation on domestic work with a view to expressly recognizing the right of domestic workers to organize and bargain collectively; (ii) encourage and promote collective bargaining in agriculture and domestic work sectors and; (iii) provide information on any collective agreements concluded in these two sectors and the number of workers covered by them.

Workers aged between 16 and 18 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that minors between 16 and 18 years of age have access to employment but are prohibited from joining trade unions and had requested the Government to revise the law so that these workers can enjoy their rights under the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates in this respect that the purpose of subjecting the right to establish and join unions to the attainment of age of 18 is to protect the workers' will; that amending section 98(f) would go against Jordanian civil law provisions concerning the age of majority and the capacity to exercise civil rights; and that the Jordanian Chamber of Commerce has expressed its agreement with the current age limit. Recalling that it has always emphasized the need to guarantee that minors who have reached the minimum legal age for admission to employment, both as workers and as apprentices, can exercise their trade union rights, the Committee regrets the lack of progress on this matter. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 98(e)2 and 98(f) of the Labour Code, with a view to fully recognizing and protecting the right of the workers aged between 16 and 18 years to exercise their rights under the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Education sector workers. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that despite the existence of a union they can join, public sector teachers, and private sector teacher members of the Jordanian Teachers' Association (JTA), do not appear to enjoy the right to collective bargaining in law or in practice and had requested the Government to ensure that this right is recognized and effectively respected. The Committee had also noted that at least two cases concerning JTA members and executives were pending before courts: (i) the case concerning the dissolution by judicial decision of the JTA executive board; and (ii) a penal case involving charges of incitement to hatred, disturbing the order at an educational institution, and instigating an unlawful assembly. The Committee had also noted the ITUC's observation alleging the arrest and detention of 14 leading members of the JTA. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on all the court proceedings involving the JTA, the unionists involved in them and the concrete acts that had entailed their charges. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that contrary to the General Union of Workers in Private Education (GUWPE), the JTA is established under the JTA Act and is not an association governed by Labour Law, therefore, the Ministry of Labour does not deal with any disputes related to this organization. The Government adds however, that JTA members who are teachers in private educational institutions, have the worker status under the Labour Code and enjoy the rights contained therein. According to the Government, a new collective labour contract was concluded between the GUWPE and the Association of Private School-Owners, which initiated a unified labour contract for all workers in private schools and kindergartens, strengthening their labour rights. Concerning the proceedings involving the JTA and its members, the Government indicates that on 12 December 2022, the Amman Magistrate's Court issued a judgment acquitting the JTA and the members of the first session of its Council from charges of misuse of authority and wasting public money. Nevertheless, the Court convicted 10 other members of the JTA Council for the offence of wasting public money. The Government adds that the Court of Appeal annulled this judgment on 27 April 2023 and the case was sent back to the first instance Court where it is still pending. The Committee also notes the observations of the ITUC stating that JTA members still face persecution from the authorities, and that although the organization has re-started its activities, its leadership has been replaced and members face restrictions in organizing collective actions. The ITUC alleges that genuine leadership and members have been unable to resume their trade union activities. Noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee regrets that no measures have been taken in view of guaranteeing the right to collective bargaining of the JTA members. The Committee recalls in this respect that education sector workers in both public and private sectors should enjoy the rights enshrined in the Convention including the right to collective bargaining. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government does not reply to the request for information concerning the JTA members who were accused of "incitement to hatred, disturbing the order at an educational institution, and instigating an unlawful assembly". Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures, including legislative measures, to ensure that the right to collective bargaining of the JTA and all workers in the public and private education sector is explicitly recognized in law and effectively respected in practice. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on all the penal and civil cases pending against the JTA and its members, including the identity and trade union office of the prosecuted JTA member and the concrete acts that have entailed the charges against them. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the observations of the ITUC.

Workers not included in the 17 sectors recognized by the Government. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the principle embodied in section 98(d) of the Labour Code, which provides for the existence of a closed list of industries and economic activities in which trade unions – only one per sector – can be established, is incompatible with the principles set out in the Convention concerning the workers covered as in view of the evolving nature of the economy and the continuous coming into existence of new activities, a closed list will inevitably have the effect of excluding entire categories of workers from the right to establish and join organizations and, therefore, from exercising the right to collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that the Convention covers all workers, with the only possible exceptions of the armed forces, the police and the public servants engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour continuously amends the Decision on classification of industries and economic activities in which workers may establish unions, with a view to ensuring the inclusion of all workers in all sectors. The Committee recalls that the existence of a closed list of sectors where unionization and collective bargaining is allowed is incompatible with the Convention and notes with regret the lack of progress with respect to this long-standing issue. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to review section 98(d) of the Labour Code and to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers in all sectors of the economy can exercise their right to organize and freely bargain collectively through the organization of their choosing. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that a bill amending section 139 of the Labour Code, which establishes the penalty applicable to acts of interference by employers, was pending before the House of Representatives, but that the proposed amendment still did not establish sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee had requested the Government to revise the draft submitted to the parliament with a view to effectively strengthen the penalties for interference. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the draft was adopted as such and therefore the highest fines imposed on employers in case of breach of labour law (including acts of interference) have increased from 100 Jordanian Dinar (JD) to JD1,000 (US$1,410). The Committee notes that this fine, which can neither be adjusted with inflation nor adapted in proportion to the size of the enterprise may not be sufficiently deterrent in the long term and in cases in which the interfering employer disposes of considerable financial resources. The Committee therefore requests the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to review section 139 of the Labour Code with a view to effectively strengthen the penalties for acts of interference, so as to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Trade union monopoly. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there is a situation of union monopoly in Jordan where 17 sectoral trade unions all affiliated to a single confederation are the only recognized workers' organizations and no new trade union has been registered since 1976, despite several requests by groups of workers. The Committee noted that this situation is based on sections 98(d) and 102(c) of the Labour Code, as well as on the Decision on classification of industries and economic activities. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in this respect that the refusal of the Registrar of Trade Unions and Employers' Associations to register any new trade union with the same aims and purposes as an existing trade union is to avoid rendering the sector vulnerable to fragmentation and conflict of interest and that the rationale behind section 98 is to defend the workers' interest. Noting with regret the lack of progress on this very important and longstanding issue, the Committee recalls that the right of workers to free and voluntary collective bargaining should include the right to be represented in collective bargaining by the organization of their choice. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to remove obstacles to trade union pluralism in law and in practice, including by removing the requirement of "one union per sector" in section 98(d) of the Labour Code and the Decision on the classification of industries and economic activities where trade unions may be established (Ministerial Decision No. 2022/45) so as to ensure that all workers can fully exercise their right to free and voluntary collective bargaining.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that in Jordan, the exercise of the right to collective bargaining in the public service is still not possible in the absence of a legal framework that would expressly recognize this right and regulate its exercise and had urged the Government to take measures in this respect. It had also requested the Government to provide information on any existing public service trade unions besides the JTA and the regulatory texts governing their establishment and functioning. The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates in this respect that employees in any Ministry, department, body or government institution may establish a special trade union for themselves, provided that this is done by virtue of regulations issued for this purpose in accordance with the opinion of the legislative authority which has the original competence with respect to the matter. The Committee notes therefore that the creation of organizations by public servants requires special legislation and that no such special legislation has been issued besides the JTA Act. In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) adopt legislation enabling public servants not engaged in the administration of the State to establish their organizations; and (ii) to ensure that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State have an effective framework in which they may engage in collective negotiations over their working and employment conditions through the trade union of their choice, for example, by revising the Civil Service Regulation No. 9 of 2020, or by extending the scope of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance regarding the issues raised in this comment.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Facilities for workers' representatives in the undertaking. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that an adequate regulatory framework guaranteeing the workers' representatives access to appropriate facilities in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention was yet to be adopted, despite the Government's indication that recommendations regarding principles and criteria governing the granting of time off from work for union activities were drawn up in 2017 by a committee nominated by the Ministry of Labour and made up of representatives of the General Federation of Trade Unions and the Jordanian Chambers of Industry and Commerce. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reports no progress in this regard and simply indicates that it was agreed to submit the recommendations on time off for union representatives to the next meeting of the Tripartite Committee for Labour Affairs (TCLA), the body competent for establishing the rules enabling trade union representatives to carry out their duties pursuant to section 107 of the Labour Code. In view of the foregoing, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that criteria and principles governing time off for union activities are submitted to the TCLA without further delay. It further urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that an adequate regulatory framework, guaranteeing the workers' representatives all the facilities enabling them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently, such as those listed in the Workers' Representatives Recommendation, 1971 (No. 143), is submitted to tripartite consultation and approval. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Lebanon

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL) transmitted with the Government's report, which refer to matters addressed in the present comment.

2015 and 2016 observations of Education International. Wage increases in the education sector. The Committee previously requested the Government to clarify, in relation to the 2015 and 2016 observations of Education International, which concerned reported wage increases for teachers in the public and private sectors, whether such increases were the result of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the increase in wages mentioned in Act No. 46 of 21 August 2017 is the outcome of collective bargaining over several years. The Government further reports that in the public sector, wage increases have been approved over the past two years in the form of social assistance and are thus currently not included in the salary and that although relative increases to the value of educational and hospital grants were approved, they are insufficient. The Committee notes that the CGTL highlights in this regard that workers in State administration, who are not subject to the Public Sector Staff Act (applicable to employees in public administration) or the Labour Code but to Decree 5883/1994 would benefit from mainstreaming the provisions of the Labour Code and further reviewing the salaries and boosting the allowances owing to the economic crisis in the country.

Welcoming the wage increases obtained as a result of collective bargaining and noting the Government's indication that further improvements can be made for public sector teachers, the Committee encourages the Government to continue to promote and strengthen collective bargaining, in law and in practice, as an effective means of enhancing working conditions of teachers both in the private and public sectors.

Legislative amendments

Labour Code review. The Committee recalls that for many years, it has been emphasizing the need to revise a number of provisions of the Labour Code and the draft Labour Code submitted by the Government in 2004. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, following several consultative meetings between employers and workers, a draft Labour Code was sent to the Cabinet of Ministers in April 2022 but has not yet been adopted due to the persistent change of governments. The Committee understands from the Government's report that one of the objectives of the draft Labour Code is to address the issues raised by the Committee, as described below. The Committee also notes the observations of the CGTL, which indicates that the review of the Labour Code should be done in compliance with the Convention and points to the need to conduct genuine awareness-raising in this regard among the relevant stakeholders, as well as cooperation among the Government, the social partners and the relevant actors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the adoption of the draft Labour Code and expects the legislative reform to fully take into account the Committee's previous and present comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide a full copy of the draft Labour Code.

Scope of application of the Convention. Domestic workers. The Committee recalled in its previous comments that domestic workers who work for private households are excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Code of 1946 (section 7(1)). The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code proposes to amend sections 7 and 8 to make foreign and Lebanese domestic workers alike subject to the provisions of the Labour Code. The Government further states that: (i) domestic workers have the right to address ill-treatment or conflicts with employers or recruitment agencies by filing complaints at the Ministry of Labour, either individually, through their embassy or with the assistance of civil society groups and non-governmental organizations; and (ii) if amicable settlements fail, legal recourse is available through competent courts, including Labour Arbitration Councils, which have issued various rulings, including compensation for losses, damages and unpaid wages. While taking note of the procedures to address violations of domestic workers' individual rights, the Committee observes that the information provided by the Government does not refer to the possibility for domestic workers to join workers' organizations and be represented by them. The Committee trusts that the new Labour Code, once adopted, will fully guarantee all the rights enshrined in the Convention to domestic workers, whether national or foreign workers, including the right to join organizations of their own choosing and to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to promote the enjoyment of these rights by domestic workers in practice and to provide information in this regard, such as the names of relevant workers' organizations and the number of collective agreements concluded.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's information that the new draft Labour Code: (i) aims to effectively assert the right to collective bargaining and to active social dialogue (section 3); (ii) stipulates that collective bargaining is a dialogue between workers' and employer's representatives, which regulates and improves working conditions, regulates relations between employers and workers and creates means and resources to secure fundamental principles and rights at work (section 195); (iii) defines a collective employment contract (section 107); and (iv) regulates the procedure for collective bargaining, including in relation to the scope, the parties, the location of bargaining and its mandatory aspects (section 106). The Committee further observes, on the basis of the provisions of the draft Labour Code provided by the Government that some aspects of the draft law may raise issues of compatibility with the Convention, in particular: (i) section 106(1) gives the labour authorities the power to approve the subject of collective bargaining previously agreed to by the parties (this should not be subject to the approval of the authorities); and (ii) section 110 establishes excessive requirements for the validation of collective agreements (a quorum of more than half of union members present at a meeting and the approval of two-thirds of those members, as previously reported by the ITUC). The Committee also observes certain issues relating to the extension of collective bargaining agreements. In particular, it is unclear whether agreement is required from the employers or their organizations and workers' organizations in the establishments to which the agreements aim to be extended (section 118). The Committee further observes that under section 121, the collective contract follow-up committee (composed of the Director General of the Ministry of Labour, two representatives of workers and two representatives of employers), which is responsible for providing opinion on the extension of collective agreements, can engage in valid meetings if more than half of its members are present. The Committee understands that this could lead to situations where opinions are issued only by the Chairperson and representatives of either workers or employers. Furthermore, the Minister has broad powers to accept or refuse extension of a collective agreement after the opinion of the collective contract follow-up committee (opinion is only binding for refusal to extend) (section 118). In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to engage in further consultations with the social partners to ensure that all provisions of the draft Labour Code, including those on collective bargaining, are in line with the Convention and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. Recalling the importance granted to the involvement of workers and employers in the process of extension by Paragraph 5(2)(c) of the Collective Agreement Recommendation, 1951 (No. 91), the Committee requests the Government to provide clarification on the concerns raised in relation to the extension of collective agreements and to provide further information on the special provisions and penalties regulating violations of collective agreements, referred to by the Government (section 128 of the draft Labour Code).

Excessive restrictions on the right to collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee recalled that the support of 50 per cent of Lebanese workers concerned, for collective bargaining to be considered as valid, stipulated in the draft Labour Code (a proposed reduction from 60 per cent), could pose problems of compatibility with the Convention, as it would prevent a representative union without an absolute majority from being able to engage in bargaining. The Committee observes in this regard that section 108 of the draft Labour Code stipulates that the discussion, amendment or cancellation of a collective agreement (but not its renewal without change) require workers' representatives to obtain the mandate of at least 51 per cent of members of the body and that the Minister of Labour shall determine the method for verifying the validity of the mandate. The Committee recalls that a workplace threshold of over 50 per cent of workers to be able to negotiate a collective labour agreement covering a workplace or an enterprise, is not conducive to harmonious industrial relations and does not promote collective bargaining in line with Article 4 of the Convention. For the same reason, as well as to respect the collective autonomy of the trade union organization, the Committee considers that the approval of a collective agreement by a two-thirds majority of the participants in a general meeting of the body, which brings together at least half of its members and associates, as stipulated in section 110, may constitute an obstacle to the right to organize and collective bargaining. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that, if no union represents the required percentage to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members and that trade unions should subsequently be able to make decisions in line with their statutes.

Right to collective bargaining in the public sector and the public service. The Committee recalled, in its previous comment, that public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, governed by Decree No. 5883 of 1994, should be able to enjoy the right to collective bargaining and observed that the draft Labour Code proposed amendments to this effect. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 15 of the draft Labour Code establishes that all employers and workers at all establishments of all kinds, including workers and staff of municipalities and unions of municipalities (unless they are subject to special regulations) and staff working in public administrations and institutions who are not subject to special regulations (such as workers assigned to work by the administration itself) are subject to the provisions of the Labour Code. According to the Government, the different categories of workers will be eligible for the same protection and entitlements as those granted to other workers, while public servants are subject to their own system or to staff regulations for public administrations and institutions. It also notes that municipalities can provide their staff with a special status. While taking note of this information, the Committee recalls that only public servants engaged in the administration of the State can be excluded from the right to collective bargaining (Article 6 of the Convention). The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify the exact categories of public servants or employees that are excluded from the scope of application of the draft Labour Code or who can be excluded therefrom as a result of being subject to specific regulations, and to indicate to what extent these workers have the right to organize and engage in collective bargaining under the different provisions regulating their status and working conditions.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that, according to Decree No. 13896 of 3 January 2005, all public and private economic enterprises responsible for managing public services on behalf of the State or on their own account must resort to compulsory arbitration should negotiations fail. The Committee pointed to the need to take the necessary measures to ensure that compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining can only be imposed in line with the Convention, that is, in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and in the event of an acute national crisis. The Committee notes that while the Government refers to an amendment of section 222 of the draft Labour Code of 2010 with regard to collective labour dispute resolution mechanisms, it does not clarify what the amendment is. The Government further points to section 182 of the draft Labour Code, which defines a collective labour dispute and section 183, which establishes that mediation and arbitration, as a means of settling collective labour disputes, shall be free and voluntary. While taking note of these proposed amendments, the Committee observes that the Government does not inform about whether Decree No. 13896, which provides for compulsory arbitration, continues to be applicable to economic enterprises responsible for managing public services on behalf of or on the account of the State. The Committee therefore requests the Government to clarify the status of Decree No. 13896 and the amendment to section 222 of the draft Labour Code, reported by the Government, and trusts that any amendments made will take into account the above considerations in relation to collective bargaining.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the last collective agreement adopted was an agreement between the Association of Banks in Lebanon and the Federation of Unions of Bank Employees in Lebanon. The Committee requests the Government once again to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force and to indicate the sectors and number of workers covered.

Observing that support took place at a previous stage of the elaboration of the draft Labour Code, the Committee recalls that the Government can continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this respect.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, which reiterate the comments made at the discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 on the application of the Convention by Liberia. It further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2023 and referring to the issues addressed by the Committee below. While noting the Government's indication that there has been progress in the resolution of the frictions in the trade union movement in Liberia and, in particular, that with the election of a new leadership of the Liberia Labour Congress (LLC), supported by a majority of its member organizations, the labour dispute caused by the elections was being resolved, the Committee notes the ITUC's allegation of the Government's interference in the election process. The Committee requests the Government to reply to this serious allegation of violation of trade union rights.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. The Conference Committee, noting the long-standing nature and the prior discussion of the case, most recently in 2022, expressed its regret that the Government had not implemented its previous recommendations and requested it to take urgent steps, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring its law and practice into line with the Convention and in particular to: (i) ensure that all workers are able to exercise their labour rights under the Convention in an environment of respect for civil liberties, including the right to freedom of association, freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and protest without interference and fear for their personal safety and physical integrity; (ii) ensure that trade union leaders and members are not jailed for engaging in trade union activities and that threats against trade union leaders for their trade union activities are fully investigated and the perpetrators duly punished; (iii) put in place measures, including effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, to ensure that trade unions can only be dissolved following due process and by a judicial authority only as a last resort; (iv) register the National Health Workers' Union of Liberia (NAHWUL) as a trade union organization without further delay and provide additional information to the Committee of Experts on any pending allegations; (v) review the Decent Work Act and any other related legislation to ensure that all workers are able to exercise the right to form or join a trade union of their choice and in particular, ensure that public sector workers and civil servants enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention; (vi) ensure that the rights enshrined in the Convention are afforded to maritime workers, including trainees, and that any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged cover this category of workers; and (vii) ensure that foreign workers are entitled to form and join unions of their own choosing in line with the Convention. The Conference Committee urged the Government to provide information to the Committee by 1 September 2023 on all the measures taken to implement these recommendations and to comply with its obligations under the Convention and on any developments in this regard. The Conference Committee also called on the Government to continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and to accept a direct contacts mission.

The Committee recalls that it previously urged the Government to conduct an independent investigation into the allegations by the African Regional Organization of the ITUC (ITUC – Africa) denouncing the dissolution of a trade union by a state-owned company; the use of police force to break up peaceful strikes; and the arrest of union leaders and wrongful dismissal of workers for their participation in strike actions and that it requested the Government to provide information on the outcome. The Committee further requested the Government to provide its comments on the ITUC's recurring allegations pertaining to the increasing intolerance towards workers exercising their civil liberties and rights under the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no trade union leaders are currently in the custody of the national security forces and that preventive measures have been taken. The Committee regrets that the Government does not indicate whether an independent investigation has been conducted into the above-mentioned allegations with a view to punishing the perpetrators, as requested by the Conference Committee. Noting with concern the ITUC's most recent observations denouncing the continuously shrinking space for the exercise of trade union rights, the Committee urges the Government to investigate all of the above-mentioned allegations and to provide detailed information on the outcome. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the nature and scope of the preventive measures it referred to in its report.

Scope of application. The Committee previously requested the Government to grant full recognition to NAHWUL through the harmonization of the Decent Work Act 2015 and the Civil Servant Standing orders. In this respect, it requested the Government to provide specific information on developments regarding the creation of a framework for the harmonization of the Decent Work Act and the Civil Service Standing orders for the enjoyment by public sector workers of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there was a sequence of meetings scheduled with legislators, beginning 31 August 2023, to facilitate the creation of exemptions through amendments of the Decent Work Act that would grant both NAHWUL and the National Teachers Association in Liberia recognition. The Committee notes the ITUC's allegation that there has been no progress with the harmonization of the law to ensure the right of civil servants and public servants to form or join a trade union. Recalling that all workers, with the sole possible exception of the police and the armed forces, are covered by the Convention, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that necessary measures will be taken to that end without further delay. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to harmonize the Decent Work Act and the Civil Servant Standing orders in order to enable NAHWUL to register as a trade union organization and grant it full statutory recognition in law and in practice without further delay, in accordance with the Committee's previous request and the most recent call to this effect by the Conference Committee, and expects the Government to provide detailed information on the developments, including any legal measures adopted or envisaged in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations. The Committee previously noted that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Decent Work Act excludes from its scope of application, maritime workers, including trainees, and requested the Government to provide information on the application of the rights enshrined in the Convention for such workers and on any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged covering this category of workers. The Committee reiterates its deep regret at the lack of information in this respect and firmly expects that the Government's next report will contain the relevant information.

The Committee recalls that it previously requested the Government to amend section 45.6 of the Decent Work Act to guarantee foreign workers their right to work, and that, having taken note of the Government's indication that discussions had been opened with existing foreign workers' bodies with regards to their rights to organize and defend their occupational interest, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the outcome of the discussions. The Committee notes the Government's indications that there were no requests received in connection with trade unions for foreign workers or any complaints made to the Government regarding the refusal of existing unions to admit such workers. Noting with regret that the Government provides no information pertaining to the discussions which it previously indicated it had commenced or regarding any legislative measures taken to guarantee foreign workers the right to organize, the Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures, in the near future, including through the amendment of section 45.6 of the Decent Work Act, to fully guarantee, in law and in practice, foreign workers their right to organize. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of developments in this regard.

Article 3. Determination of essential services. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on how the designation of essential services by the National Tripartite Council operates in practice, to clarify whether the President is also bound by the definition of the notion of essential services set out in section 41.4(a) of the Decent Work Act (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or any part of the population of Liberia), and to provide information on any presidential decisions concerning the designation of essential services and how such designation operates in practice. The Committee notes the ITUC's indication that, although according to section 4.1 of the Act, recommendations by the National Tripartite Committee inform the designation of certain services as essential, the final decision on such designation is taken by the President who is not bound by the recommendations of the National Tripartite Committee. Noting with regret that the Government provides no information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to provide the relevant information.

Noting the Government's indication that it avails itself of the offer of ILO technical assistance, the Committee expects that all of the above-mentioned issues will be addressed without further delay so as to bring the national law and practice into full conformity with the Convention. Like the Conference Committee, the Committee calls on the Government to accept a direct contacts mission.

Madagascar

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2023, and the observations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance, received on 30 September 2023, which relate to issues examined in the present comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 on the application of the Convention by Madagascar, during which it noted with concern the long-standing issues relating to the restrictions on trade union activities in the maritime sector, the absence of any elections for staff representatives since 2015 and the use of compulsory arbitration. The Committee expressed its deep concern regarding the imprisonment of Mr Zotiakobanjina Fanja Marcel Sento and noted the Government's information regarding his release by Presidential Decree. Taking into account the discussion of the case, the Committee urged the Government to:

- take all necessary steps in order to ensure that the new Maritime Code guarantees to seafarers the right to freely establish and join the organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization;
- organize as soon as possible the elections for the designation of workers' representatives;
- refrain from intervening in the activities of workers' and employers' organizations, including in the designation process of their representatives in the various social dialogue bodies;
- ensure that unilateral recourse to compulsory arbitration as a way to avoid free and voluntary collective bargaining is employed only in very limited circumstances and take the necessary measures to amend sections 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code to bring them in conformity with the Convention;

- immediately and unconditionally quash the conviction of Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento;
- refrain from using the criminal law to target trade unionists;
- amend all provisions of the Criminal Code hindering the right to freedom of association of workers and employers; and
- provide a copy of the Maritime Code once adopted and detailed information to the Committee of Experts before 1 September 2023 on the outcome of any meeting concerning allegations of anti-union acts in the maritime sector, on any developments on the adoption of the Maritime Code and on the factors that have prevented the holding of elections for staff representatives since 2015.

The Conference Committee also recommended that the Government avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not submitted the report requested under the Convention. The Committee considers that the absence of information in this regard indicates not only an apparent lack of action by the Government to follow-up on these recommendations, but also an apparent lack of commitment to ensure compliance with its standards-related obligations. The Committee urges the Government to take, without delay, all the above-mentioned measures which the Conference Committee requested the Government to take, and which require immediate action, and to report any progress achieved in the implementation of these measures. The Committee also urges the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee noted the Government's indications that the trade unionist Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento had been released. However, the Committee notes with deep concern that he has been reimprisoned following a decision of the Court of Appeal of Madagascar dated 16 June 2023. The Committee deplores the treatment of Mr Sento, who is accused of having posted on Facebook the results of meetings held with the management of an enterprise in the textile sector, which was in the performance of his trade union duties. In these circumstances, the Committee wishes to firmly recall that the resolution adopted by the Conference in 1970 concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties reaffirms the essential link between civil liberties and trade union rights, which was already emphasized in the Declaration of Philadelphia (1944), and enumerates the fundamental rights that are necessary for the exercise of freedom of association, which include: the right to freedom and security of person and freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention; freedom of opinion and expression and in particular freedom to hold opinions without interference and to seek, receive and impart information and ideas through any media and regardless of frontier; and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). In the same way as the Conference Committee, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to immediately and unconditionally quash the conviction of Mr Zotiakobanjinina Fanja Marcel Sento.

Article 2 of the Convention. Workers governed by the Maritime Code. The Committee previously noted that a new Maritime Code was to be adopted and requested the Government to ensure that the Code provides for the right of seafarers to establish and join trade unions. The Committee urges the Government to provide a copy of the Code once adopted, and to indicate the specific provisions providing for the right of seafarers to establish and join trade unions.

Articles 2 and 3. Right to organize and free exercise of trade union activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) on allegations of restrictions on the right to organize, and especially the right of trade unions to organize their management and training activities, and on the difficulties encountered in establishing trade unions. The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC, deploring the fact that the Government's current legislation does not fully guarantee the right to organize, and that the legal provisions on elections of staff representatives are ineffective. Recalling the Government's responsibility to ensure that the rights provided for in the Convention are respected both in law and in practice, the Committee urges the Government to provide the information due on the measures taken to ensure the effective application of sections 136 et seq. of the Labour Code, as well as Decree No. 2011-490 and its implementing order No. 28968-2011 providing for the promotion of trade union rights in the country.

Restrictions on trade union activities in the maritime sector. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the initiatives taken to put an end to the conflict between the General Maritime Union of Madagascar (SYGMMA) and an enterprise in the port sector (see Case No. 3275 of the Committee on Freedom of Association, which concerns SYGMMA and for which replies have long been awaited from the Government). The Committee urges the Government to provide any relevant information on the possibility for SYGMMA to freely exercise its activities in the port sector.

Article 3. Representativeness of workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide specific information on the factors that have prevented the holding of elections for staff representatives since 2015, and to provide its comments on the serious allegations of the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA) concerning the unilateral changing of the names of its representatives by the Government. The Committee takes note of the observations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance that the Ministry of Labour: (i) refused to validate the staff representative election results in favour of the Alliance in an enterprise in the sugar industry; (ii) encourages candidates who are not members of trade union organizations to occupy trade union posts; and (iii) unilaterally appointed new administrators in the National Social Welfare Fund. The Committee requests the Government to respond to these allegations and to provide specific information on any issues relating to the holding of elections for staff representatives.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code, which provide that if mediation fails, the collective dispute is referred by the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation to a process of arbitration and that the arbitral award ends the dispute and the strike, and for the possibility of requisitioning striking employees in the event of disruption of public order. The Committee is once again bound to repeat its previous request and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend articles 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code, and to communicate any new developments in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1955)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee recalls that last year it noted the establishment of a Commission of Inquiry concerning the non-observance by Myanmar of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and indicated that it would resume its examination of the application of the Convention once the Commission had completed its mandate. The Committee notes the detailed report issued by the Commission of Inquiry on 4 August 2023, which was noted by the Governing Body at its 349th Session (November 2023).

The Committee notes that the Commission of Inquiry highlighted the interdependence and complementarity between this Convention and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) and the importance of taking this into account in the implementation of its recommendations. The Committee shares the views of the Commission that freedom of association lies at the heart of democracy and the rule of law and is a prerequisite for social dialogue, collective bargaining and tripartite cooperation.

The Committee notes that in its report the Commission of Inquiry concluded that the various measures imposed by the military authorities, including the labour authorities under their control, in combination with the climate of complete insecurity and constant threats to trade union leaders and members, resulted in far-reaching restrictions on the specific trade union rights set out in Convention No. 87 (paragraphs 520–594). In particular, the Commission of Inquiry concluded:

- that multiple and wide-spread actions of the military authorities constitute severe impediments to the exercise of the following civil liberties, all of which represent a sine qua non for the exercise of freedom of association: the right to life, security and the physical and moral integrity of the person; freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention; freedom from cruel and inhumane treatment; the right to a fair trial and due process of law; freedom of movement; freedom of assembly; freedom of opinion and expression; and the protection of the private property of trade union leaders and members.
- that there currently exist serious practical obstacles to the establishment of workers' organizations without previous authorization, including a lengthy registration procedure, the use of bribes to discourage registration or for registration, pressure from the labour authorities to return registration certificates, an environment of union-busting in the private sector and a lack of recourse to independent authorities to challenge restrictions on registration, contrary to Article 2 of the Convention.
- that the military authorities have interfered in the freedom of unions to elect their leadership, including in the particular case of the Confederation of Trade Unions of Myanmar (CTUM); that the right to strike, as an essential means for workers to defend their interests, has been severely limited since the coup, both as a result of military orders restricting assemblies of more than five persons in public spaces and because of the significant risks and repercussions faced by strike participants, contrary to Article 3 of Convention No. 87; and that the right of workers' organizations to freely organize their administration, activities and programmes is further inhibited by the climate of violence and intimidation of trade union leaders and members, resulting from their persistent stigmatization and prosecution.
- that the military authorities' declaration of 16 trade unions and civil society organizations as not being registered legally in accordance with the Labour Organization Law (LOL) is contrary to Article 4 of the Convention.

The Committee also notes that based on the above-mentioned findings, the Commission of Inquiry urged the military authorities to (paragraph 643):

- (a) immediately cease all forms of violence, including gender-based violence, torture and other inhumane treatment against trade union leaders and members and other persons in relation to the exercise of legitimate workers' or employers' activities, including ethnic, religious and other minorities; this includes, in particular, violence perpetrated in the context of the suppression of peaceful public protests and demonstrations, at the time of arrests, during detention, as well as military attacks against civilian infrastructure, which all together create a climate of violence and terror that undermines the effective exercise of freedom of association;
- (b) unconditionally and without delay release all trade unionists arrested, sentenced and detained in relation to the exercise of their civil liberties and legitimate trade union activities, including those that have been arrested, sentenced and detained for having expressed

- opinions critical of the military authorities, or for having participated in, or organized, peaceful protests or otherwise peacefully demonstrated opposition to the military authorities following the coup d'état;
- (c) withdraw all criminal charges pending against trade unionists and others peacefully exercising their civil liberties in relation to legitimate trade union activities; and immediately stop all forms of intimidation, threats, stigmatization, harassment and surveillance of trade unionists and their families, as well as attacks against and destruction of trade union premises and property;
  - (d) revoke any military orders or other measures, including those of a legislative nature, decreed since February 2021 and identified as restricting freedom of association and the basic civil liberties of trade unionists; and fully restore the protection of the basic civil liberties necessary for the exercise of freedom of association that have been suspended or restricted, including freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal, freedom of assembly, opinion and expression and the protection of private property;
  - (e) cease all disproportionate or arbitrary punitive measures against those peacefully exercising their civil liberties in calling for the return to democratic rule in which their freedom of association rights could be fully exercised;
  - (f) revoke the withdrawal of citizenship and return travel documents to the trade union leaders and members concerned without delay;
  - (g) stop any form of interference in the establishment, administration and functioning of trade unions at all levels, including interference in the election of trade union leadership, labour dispute resolution, conduct of collective action and administrative dissolution or suspension of trade unions; and
  - (h) refrain from taking any action and measures or issuing statements that condone, facilitate or encourage union-busting, interference and other abuses of trade union rights by private and public employers.

The Committee notes the recommendation of the Commission of Inquiry that the military and the authorities under its control should immediately cease or reverse any measures or actions that violate Myanmar's obligations under the Convention.

The Committee further notes that the Commission of Inquiry, observing that genuine implementation of the Convention will require the return to a civilian government, fully democratic institutions and the rule of law, formulated additional recommendations addressed to Myanmar to be implemented as soon as there is a return to democratic rule (paragraphs 645–647 and 649).

The Committee notes that in a communication dated 29 September 2023, the military authorities indicated to the Governing Body that Myanmar's position regarding the Commission of Inquiry's recommendations would be communicated within three months.

The Committee deeply deplores the reports of the continuing grave violations of the basic civil liberties of workers and employers committed by the military authorities. It notes with deep concern that the Commission of Inquiry has only confirmed the deepest concerns it had previously expressed and has not been able to observe any positive steps to ensure the application of the Convention. The Committee strongly urges the military authorities to immediately implement the Commission of Inquiry's recommendations and to provide a detailed report on the steps taken in this regard, as well as on all the detailed requests set out in its 2021 comment.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2023 on the application of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee takes note of the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) fully implement all pending recommendations of the Conference Committee; (ii) refrain from any undue interference with the right to freedom of association of employers' and workers' organizations, including any interference through the promotion of organizations that are not freely established or chosen by workers and employers, and ensure that this right is fully guaranteed both in law and in practice; (iii) ensure in law and practice the ability of workers' and employers' organizations to establish higher-level organizations in full freedom, including for the purpose of participation in the Socio-Economic Council (SER); (iv) ensure that workers' and employers' representatives on the SER are appointed by autonomous organizations freely established by workers and employers and convene the SER without delay; (v) engage in a dialogue with autonomous organizations freely established by workers and employers on all matters affecting their interests or of their members; and (vi) ensure that public sector workers are able to fully exercise the rights and guarantees protected under the Convention in law and practice. The Conference Committee once again encouraged the Government to request technical assistance from the ILO, with a view to bringing national law and practice fully in conformity with the Convention. Finally, the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide a report containing information on all measures taken and progress achieved to the Committee of Experts before 1 September 2023.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously noted with deep regret the information from the Sint Maarten Employers Council (ECSM) that the Government had apparently granted the Soualiga Employer Association (SEA), whose establishment had been facilitated by a governmental agency, one seat on the SER, and had urged the Government to ensure that workers' and employers' representatives to the SER are only appointed by organizations which are freely established or chosen by workers and employers and to engage with the ECSM on matters affecting its interests. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government indicates that the SEA is a legally established organization, that section 3 of the National Ordinance of the Social Economic Council of Sint Maarten allows for multiple employer organizations to be represented on the SER, and that nomination letters dated 23 May 2023 were sent to the ECSM and the SEA to ask them to jointly select three members for the term 2023-2026 of the SER. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that it met with the ECSM to discuss the applicability of the Convention, and that it requested technical assistance from the Office. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the employers' representatives to the SER are only appointed by organizations which are freely established or chosen by employers, and requests it to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to specify whether public employees, who were prevented from striking by section 374(a), (b) and (c) of the old Penal Code, are forbidden from striking under the Penal Code of 2015. It had also noted that the National Ordinance on Substantive Civil Service Law had been amended to allow the courts to forbid strikes which threaten public welfare or safety, and requested the Government to provide detailed information on the circumstances in which strikes may be prohibited on the basis of that Ordinance. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any information in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether public employees, such as teachers, are forbidden from striking under the new Penal Code, and to provide a copy thereof. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide detailed information on the circumstances in which strikes may be prohibited based on the National Ordinance on Substantive Civil Service Law.

Nicaragua

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 7 March 2023, in which it expresses deep concern at the ministerial decisions adopted on 3 March 2023 through which the Government arbitrarily and unlawfully annulled the legal personality of the Higher Council for Private Enterprise of Nicaragua (COSEP), the most representative employers' organization in Nicaragua established three decades ago and a member of the IOE, as well as its 18 affiliated associations. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its reply, received on 14 March 2023, that: (i) neither COSEP nor the 18 associations are registered in the Directorate of Trade Union Associations of the Ministry of Labour, as COSEP is a non-profit-making organization to which the Ministry of Labour does not grant legal status; and (ii) the IOE's arguments bear no legal relation to the functions of the ILO. The Committee observes that these issues were examined during the discussion held in the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 on the application of the Convention by Nicaragua.

The Committee also notes the observations of the IOE received on 1 September 2023, in which it reiterates the comments made to the Conference Committee and indicates that several Employer delegates to the International Labour Conference in 2023 submitted a complaint under article 26 of the ILO Constitution alleging non-compliance by Nicaragua with this Convention, as well as the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). The Committee notes that the complaint was declared receivable by the Governing Body at its 349th Session (October 2023) and that its content will be examined by the Governing Body at its session in March 2024.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards \(International labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023\)

The Committee notes the discussion at the Conference Committee at the 111th Session of the Conference (2023) and observes that, after noting with deep concern the persistent climate of intimidation and harassment of independent workers' and employers' organizations, and the allegations of the arrest and detention of employer leaders and the further deterioration of the situation, as well as the absence of any progress and cooperation on the part of the Government since last year, the Conference Committee urged the Government to:

- ensure that workers and employers can establish their own organizations and operate without interference, including the COSEP;
- immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, including COSEP, and adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated including the return of the Nicaraguan nationality of those who have been deprived of it for this reason;
- immediately release any employer or trade union member who may be imprisoned in connection with the exercise of the legitimate activities of their organizations and provide information on all the measures taken in that regard;
- promote social dialogue without further delay through the establishment of a tripartite dialogue round table under the auspices of the ILO, that is presided over by an independent chairperson who has the trust of all sectors, that duly respects the representativeness of employers' and workers' organizations in its composition and that meets periodically, as recommended by the Committee in 2022;
- repeal Act No. 1040 on the regulation of foreign agents, the Special Act on Cybercrimes and Act No. 1055 on the defence of the rights of the people to independence, sovereignty and self-determination for peace, which limit the exercise of freedom of association and freedom of expression.

The Conference Committee also urged the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention in law and practice.

The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to the recommendations made by the Conference Committee and indicates that it has consulted the most representative social partners in the country in this regard. The Government claims that full freedom of association exists in the country without any type of discrimination, that there are no trade union leaders who have been deprived of their freedom for exercising the right to organize or engaging in trade union activities, that there are no restrictions on the right to organize and that there is no trade union persecution or repression. The Government adds that it is continuing to take initiatives in support of the right to organize and emphasizes that, although there is full freedom to organize in the country and there is no persecution of different ideas or views, there are legal provisions in the country that have to be complied with. The Government reiterates that since 2007 it has been working to ensure the restoration and protection of the labour rights of workers through tripartite dialogue and consensus as the principal means of achieving labour stability and peace.

While taking due note of the above indications, the Committee observes with deep concern that the Government does not indicate in its report that it has taken any action to give effect to the recommendations made by the Conference Committee in 2022 and 2023. The Committee also deeply regrets to note that, despite the Conference Committee urging the Government on both occasions to promote social dialogue without delay through the establishment of a tripartite dialogue round table under the auspices of the ILO and to avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention, the Government has not commented on this subject.

The Committee notes that various United Nations bodies, including the Human Rights Council, the Group of Human Rights Experts on Nicaragua and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights have indicated in various reports and resolutions issued in 2023 that human rights violations and abuses in the country are continuing and are worsening, and have expressed profound concern at the deterioration of restrictions on civic and democratic activities. The Committee also recalls that in its previous comments it noted with deep concern that, as denounced by the IOE, the President, Vice-President and former President of COSEP had been arbitrarily detained and that both the Inter-American Court of Human Rights and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights had urged the Government to proceed to their immediate release. The Committee observes that, according to the indications provided during the discussion in the Conference Committee, those employer leaders were released from prison in February 2023, expelled from the country and stripped of their nationality. The Committee deplores all these events and observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, including COSEP, and to adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated, including the return of Nicaraguan nationality to those who have been deprived of it for this reason.

The Committee expresses deep concern at the fact that, despite its reiterated comments and the recommendations made by the Conference Committee over the past two years, not only has it not been possible to observe any progress in this regard, but it appears from the Government's report that there is no recognition of the need to take action to give effect to these recommendations. Under these conditions, the Committee is once again bound to urge the Government in the strongest terms to adopt as soon as possible, in consultation with the social partners, each and every measure that it has been urged to take by the Conference Committee. It also requests the Government to provide information on all the measures adopted to ensure that effect is given to each of the recommendations made by the Conference Committee and on any progress achieved in the implementation of these measures. The Committee also urges the Government, with a view to achieving tangible progress in this regard, to establish without delay the tripartite dialogue round table recommended by the Conference Committee and to have recourse to ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that for over a decade it has been referring to the need to take measure to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code, which provide that collective disputes shall be referred to compulsory arbitration once 30 days have elapsed since the calling of the strike. The Committee notes in this respect that the Government reiterates that, as a sovereign nation, it does not see the need to amend the wording of sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code, as those provisions do not restrict trade union activities as, to reach such an extreme situation, the parties will have had to hold 23 negotiating sessions. The Committee is once again bound to remind the Government that the imposition of compulsory arbitration to end a strike, beyond the cases in which a strike may be limited or even prohibited, is contrary to the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom. The Committee therefore once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration is only possible in cases in which strikes may be limited or even prohibited, namely in cases of disputes in the civil service involving officials exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in the event of an acute national crisis. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect and firmly hopes that progress will be achieved in compliance with the Convention.

Article 11. Protection of the right to organize. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the statistical information on the establishment of new trade unions, as well as the updating of existing unions, and recalled that the rights conferred upon the employers' and workers' organizations protected by the Convention are totally void of meaning when there is no respect for fundamental freedoms, the right to protection against arbitrary detention and imprisonment and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal. Further recalling that Article 11 of the Convention establishes the requirement to take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that workers and employers can freely exercise the right to organize, the Committee requested the Government to report on the initiatives taken to guarantee the exercise of this right by workers and employers, and to provide information on their results. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is continuing to promote initiatives in support of the right to organize, that policies have been adopted to promote and encourage trade union organization and that, between 2018 and the first quarter of 2023, 156 new trade unions were established with a membership of 5,586 workers and that the existing 4,992 unions that have 352,454 members were updated. While noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee recalls once again that the rights of employers' and workers' organizations protected by the Convention are totally void of meaning when there is no respect for fundamental freedoms, the right to protection against arbitrary detention and imprisonment and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government, in light of the above and taking into account the recommendations made by the Conference Committee, to provide detailed information on the initiatives adopted to guarantee the free exercise of the right to organize by both workers and employers.

North Macedonia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls the 2021 observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Macedonia (KSS), alleging restrictions on the right to strike in the education sector, the failure to transfer to trade unions the dues withheld by the employers, as well as pressure on workers to leave their trade unions. The Committee addresses some of these allegations below and notes that these issues were also raised and discussed during the Direct Contacts Mission (DCM) on the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No.98), which took place from 3–6 October 2023, pursuant to a request by the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2023.

Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, pursuant to article 37 of the Constitution, the conditions for exercising the right to union organization in "administrative bodies" (in addition to the police and the armed forces) can be limited by law and that these "administrative bodies" included ministries, other state administration bodies and administrative organizations. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend article 37 of the Constitution to eliminate the possibility for the law to restrict the conditions for the exercise of the right to trade union organization in administrative bodies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it will notify the Parliament in case of possible amendments to the Constitution in the future and that the Committee's comments shall be taken into account. Recalling once again that under the Convention only the armed forces and the police may be subject to limitations concerning the enjoyment of the guarantees provided by the Convention, as well as the need to ensure conformity of national constitutional provisions with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that article 37 of the Constitution is amended accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that, under the Law on Public Enterprises and the Law on Employees in the Public Sector: (1) employees in the public sector are obliged to provide minimum services in the event of strikes, taking into account the rights and interests of citizens and legal entities; and (2) the head of the respective institution determines the performance of the institutional activities of public interest that are to be maintained during a strike, the manner in which the minimum service will be carried out and the number of employees that will provide services during the strike. In this respect, the Committee had recalled that the maintenance of minimum services in the event of strikes should only be possible in the following situations: (i) in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (essential services in the strict sense of the term); (ii) other services in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population; (iii) in public services of fundamental importance; and (iv) to ensure the security of facilities and the maintenance of equipment. The Committee had further recalled that minimum services imposed should meet at least two requirements: (i) they must genuinely and exclusively be minimum services, that is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (ii) since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. The Committee had requested the Government to amend the legislation so as to ensure that the determination of minimum services in public enterprises conformed with the situations described above, and to provide further information concerning such determination in practice (in particular as to the types of activities, and percentage of employees in those activities, that have been affected by a determination of minimum services, as well as the possibility for employee organizations to participate in the definition of minimum services).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that to regulate the participation of trade union representatives in the definition of minimum services during a strike, the Government and the Trade Union of Workers from the Administration, Judicial Bodies and Citizens' Associations of the Republic of Macedonia (UPOZ) signed a Branch Collective Agreement for the State Administration Bodies. According to the Government, pursuant to article 35 paragraph 6 of the Collective Agreement, the employer together with the UPOZ President shall agree on the rules to determine the list of public interest activities which cannot be interrupted during a strike, the number of employees who will perform their duties during a strike, as well as the way of providing conditions for the exercise of the right to strike. According to paragraph 7 of the same article, in the absence of an agreement, only the tasks that must not be interrupted during a strike, i.e. the termination of which would cause disproportionate damage to the state, citizens and the employer and which could not be compensated by any additional measure or activity after the end of the strike, will be maintained. The Committee requests the Government to clarify the application in practice of the above-mentioned paragraph 7 on the determination of minimum service in the absence of an agreement by the social partners. It further once again requests the Government to provide information on the types of activities, and percentage of employees in those activities, that have been affected by a determination of minimum services. While welcoming that currently, a Branch Collective Agreement regulates the determination of minimum services in consultation with the relevant trade union, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend the relevant legislation so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 38(7) of the Law on Primary Education and section 25(2) of the Law on Secondary Education, which oblige the school directors to provide for the realization of educational activities by replacing the striking employees when the educational activity is interrupted due to a strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that while it has not yet amended the above-mentioned legislation, in practice, these provisions were not referred to during the education strike in April 2022 organized by the Trade Union for Education, Science and Culture and no substitute workers were used. The Committee further notes the Government's commitment to remove the above provisions during the next amendments to the Law on Primary Education and the Law on Secondary Education. The Committee expects the Government to proceed without further delay to amending the Law on Primary Education and the Law on Secondary Education, so as to remove the possibility of replacing striking workers and to enable workers in the primary and secondary education sectors to effectively exercise their right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended legal texts once adopted.

Law on Labour Relations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the preparation of the new Law on Labour Relations is underway, and that representatives from all trade unions and employers' associations are involved. The Committee notes from the report of the DCM that under that Law, in order to obtain legal personality, enterprise level trade unions need to obtain an approval from a higher-level union and that this restriction negatively impacts the rights and interests of enterprise level trade unions. The Committee recalls that by virtue of Article 7 of the Convention, the acquisition of legal personality cannot be made subject to conditions of such a character as to restrict the application of Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee expects that, in the context of the review of the Law on Labour Relations, the Government will take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention in line with the preceding comments and requests it to provide information on any developments, including a copy of the revised Law on Labour Relations once adopted.

Papua New Guinea

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the new Industrial Relations Bill (IRB 2014) was undergoing a vetting process at the Government Executive Committee and the Central Agency and Consultative Council to harmonize it with other relevant legislation and that the revised Bill should be presented to Cabinet before November 2016 or early 2017 and consultations on the matter should be held in the national Tripartite Consultative Council. Noting that the last information sent by the Government through an anticipated report dates back to 5 January 2017 and that its 2018 report was not received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide in its next report information on the outcome of these consultations and whether the IRB 2014 has been enacted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective implementation of the prohibition of anti-union discrimination in practice and to provide statistics on the number of anti-union discrimination complaints brought before the competent authorities, their follow-up, sanctions and remedies imposed. Noting that the Government did not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Power of the Minister to assess collective agreements on the grounds of public interest. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 50 of the Industrial Relations Bill (2011) into conformity with the principle that the approval of a collective agreement may only be refused if it has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation. While observing once again that the Government does not provide a copy of the Bill, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that section 50 of the IRB 2014 has been amended and that under the revised version the Attorney General is not entitled to appeal against the making of an award on the grounds of public interest.

Compulsory arbitration in cases where conciliation between the parties has failed. While recalling that it had noted the conformity of section 78 of the IRB 2014, as described by the Government, with the Convention, the Committee notes that the Government has still not clarified the content of section 79 of the IRB 2014. The Committee trusts once again that the Government, taking into account the Committee's comments, will ensure the full conformity of any revised legislation with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes and requests it to provide detailed information on the process of revision of the Industrial Relations Bill.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers, received on 1 September 2023, in which it reiterates the comments made at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention by Peru. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation, received on 27 September 2023, relating to matters examined in the present comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place at the 111th Session of the Conference Committee in June 2023 and observes that, while the Conference Committee welcomed certain legislative developments, it expressed concern at the ongoing restrictions in law and in practice on the right to freedom of association and the right to organize, and requested the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to adopt time-bound measures to:

- ensure that existing and prospective legislation is in conformity with the Convention;
- ensure that public servants, including judges, prosecutors and employees in positions of trust and leadership in the public administration, without distinction whatsoever, have the right in law and practice to establish and join workers' organizations of their own choosing;
- ensure the proper functioning of the National Labour and Employment Promotion Council (CNTPE) with a view to facilitating social dialogue and consultation with the social partners on labour law reform;
- ensure in law and practice the right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes in full freedom.

The Conference Committee also requested the Government to provide information, before 1 September 2023, in consultation with the social partners, on the application of the Convention in law and in practice, and invited the Government to accept a direct contacts mission in order to fully implement those recommendations.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it aims to decisively promote tripartite social dialogue as a central focus of the management of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion. To that end, on 13 July 2023 the 129th Ordinary Session of the CNTPE was held, attended by the Ministry of Labour and Employment and the main representatives of employers' associations and trade union confederations. The Government indicates that, after almost one year, it was possible to obtain the willingness of the social partners to reactivate the Council. The Government further indicates that it was agreed to resume dialogue within the CNTPE and to reactivate its technical committees and, also, that the agreements adopted at Ordinary Sessions Nos 127 and 128 (May and July 2022) and the requests made by the parties at the July 2023 session would be addressed in accordance with the Rules of Procedure of the CNTPE. With the resumption of the sessions of the CNTPE, the Government reiterates its firm will and commitment to prioritize social dialogue as an engine, tool and governance instrument for achieving sustainable labour development in the country. The Government emphasizes that employers and workers showed willingness to continue the dialogue and that it is confident that it can continue to rely on the will and commitment of the social partners, without whom tripartite social dialogue is impossible. The Government also indicates that on 21 July 2023, a high-level meeting was held at which officials from various ministries and state bodies expressed their willingness to carry out a joint technical analysis in order to respond to the request of the Conference Committee and of this Committee, with social dialogue as a central focus. The Government also expresses its willingness to coordinate the future visit of the contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee.

The Committee takes due note of this information. The Committee welcomes the reactivation of the CNTPE and its technical committees and further welcomes the fact that a high-level meeting was held and that the commitment of the various institutions to social dialogue was reaffirmed. The Committee also welcomes the Government's willingness to coordinate the future visit of the contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee. The Committee encourages the Government and all parties concerned to make every possible effort to ensure that the CNTPE continues to function and fulfil a fundamental role as a tripartite body for social dialogue. The Committee reiterates the importance of consultations in the preparation and drafting of legislation on collective labour relations and expects that any concerns in this respect will be duly addressed within the CNTPE. The Committee also reiterates its hope that the implementation of Supreme Decree No. 014-2022-TR which, according to the Government, has its origins in concerns at the situation of freedom of association in the country, will contribute to ensuring the full enjoyment and exercise of the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Supreme Decree's application. Moreover, in the light of the concerns expressed by the Conference Committee in respect of the ongoing restrictions in law and in practice on the right to freedom of association and the right to organize, the Committee firmly hopes that through strengthened social dialogue, it will be able to note progress in the very near future on the matters highlighted by the Conference Committee and which the Committee has highlighted in its previous comments. The Committee reminds the Government the technical assistance of the Office remains available and hopes that the direct contacts mission can be carried out within the shortest possible period and that it will contribute to the full implementation of the Convention.

The Committee recalls below the points that it has highlighted in its previous comments, which require the adoption of specific measures to bring the legislation into full conformity with the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of all workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. For several years, the Committee has been indicating to the Government the need to revise Act No. 28518, its implementing Regulations and the General Education Act in order to ensure the express recognition of freedom of association in vocational training schemes. The Government has indicated that: (i) on 13 April 2022, Ministerial Decision No. 092-2022-TR provided for the pre-publication of the preliminary draft of the Labour Code drawn up by the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion, which, in section 75, defines vocational training arrangements as special types of employment contracts, recognizing the labour element of such contracts; and (ii) that it received comments and suggestions concerning the preliminary draft text from the public until June 2022, which were shared with the workers' and employers' representatives participating in the CNTPE. For their part, the trade union confederations have indicated that: (i) to date, there has been no initiative to amend Act No. 28518; (ii) the generic recognition in the Constitution of trade union rights does not on its own empower persons engaged in training schemes to exercise those rights; and (iii) section 76 of the preliminary draft indicates that vocational training arrangements are not covered by general labour regulations, which means that the preliminary draft text maintains the policy direction of the current legislation of failing to offer express recognition of the trade union rights of persons engaged under vocational training schemes. The Committee hopes that the preliminary draft of the Labour Code will be the subject of extensive tripartite consultation and that, during this process of dialogue, consideration will be given to the adoption of specific measures to revise the legislation so as to set out the explicit recognition of the right to freedom of association of workers engaged under vocational training schemes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

In previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to revise the relevant provisions of the legislation to secure the exercise of the right to organize, in law and practice, of judges and prosecutors, and of employees in positions of trust and leadership in the public administration. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee noted with regret the Government's indication that it had noted the request for information and would provide it shortly. The Committee recalled that Article 2 of the Convention guarantees the basic right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to all workers without distinction whatsoever, including all public servants, irrespective of the nature of their functions, the only exceptions permitted by the Convention being members of the armed forces and the police. However, the Committee has indicated that senior public officials may be barred from joining trade unions provided that they are entitled to establish their own organizations to defend their interests (see the General Survey of 2013 on collective bargaining in the public service, paragraphs 43 et seq., and the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 66). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the relevant provisions of the legislation in order to secure the right to organize, in law and practice, of judges and prosecutors, and of employees in positions of trust or leadership in the public administration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Determining the unlawfulness of strikes. Having observed that the Civil Service Support Commission was competent to decide whether a strike is inappropriate or unlawful and given that it had not yet been established, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that competence to determine the lawfulness of strikes, in both the private and public sectors, lay not with the Government but with an independent body trusted by the parties. In this respect, the Government indicated that while the body competent to determine the lawfulness of a strike in the private sector is the Administrative Labour Authority, which issues its decision with independence, impartiality and in accordance with the law, the preliminary draft of the Labour Code provides that, at the request of the employer or employers affected by the measure, the judicial authority shall determine the lawfulness or unlawfulness of a strike. With regard to the public sector, the Government recalled that, in accordance with the Tenth Supplementary Transitional Provision of the Regulations of the Civil Service Act, the Administrative Labour Authority shall assume the functions of the Civil Service Support Commission until the latter is established. The Committee observed that the trade union confederations considered that the fact that the Administrative Labour Authority continued to determine the lawful nature of strikes in both the private and the public sectors (in view of the persistent failure to establish the Civil Service Support Commission with guarantees of its real impartiality) bore witness to the reluctance of the State to bring the legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention and they indicated that 100 per cent of strikes in 2020 were found to be unlawful by the Administrative Labour Authority. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the authority to determine the lawful nature of strikes in the private sector does not lie with the labour administration, but rather with an independent and truly impartial body that has the trust of all the parties. The Committee hopes that the proposed amendment contained in the preliminary draft of the Labour Code will be the subject of extensive tripartite consultations, and requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this regard. Observing with concern the indications of the trade union confederations, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures so that the Civil Service Support Commission is established without further ado and expresses its firm hope that it will be a genuinely independent body. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Definition of minimum services in essential public services. The Committee previously observed that the Consolidated Single Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act provided that the Civil Service Support Commission would be the competent body to determine the minimum services required during strikes affecting essential services, and it trusted that the Civil Service Support Commission would be established in the near future. The Government indicated that section 435 of the preliminary draft of the Labour Code provides that, in the event of disagreement, the matter shall be referred to an independent technical body for the determination of the minimum service and that the decision shall be binding. The Committee noted that, in addition to reiterating that the Civil Service Support Commission had still not been set up, the trade union confederations indicated that section 68 of the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act, as amended by Supreme Decree No. 014-2022-TR, provides that, while the Administrative Labour Authority may avail itself of the support of an independent body to resolve any disagreement concerning minimum services in essential public services, the Administrative Labour Authority shall resolve the matter on the basis of the report of the independent body. While taking due note of the modifications introduced by Supreme Decree No. 014-2022-TR, the Committee recalls that disagreements between the parties on the number and functions of workers should not only be examined, but also resolved by an independent body. The Committee reiterates the need for the Civil Service Support Commission to be established without delay and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Right of trade unions to hold meetings and to access workplaces. The Committee previously requested the Government to revise the final provisions of Supreme Decree No. 017-2007-ED, which defines as serious offences by head teachers and deputy head teachers in schools the acts of providing school premises for trade union meetings and allowing political and/or union advocacy in educational institutions, in order to enable head teachers of schools to determine with the trade unions arrangements for access to workplaces that do not jeopardize the efficient operation of those institutions. In this respect, the Government indicated that the Ministry of Education was carrying out an assessment of the legislation in relation to the matter as a basis for determining the need to amend or repeal certain provisions of the Regulations of Act No. 28988 declaring regular basic education to be an essential public service, as approved by Supreme Decree No. 17-2007-ED. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in relation to the revision of the final provisions of the above-mentioned Supreme Decree so that head teachers in educational institutions can agree with the trade unions concerned on an arrangement for access to workplaces that does not jeopardize the effective operation of those institutions.

Lastly, the Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 3245 concerning the determination by means of Regulations of which trade union authority appoints the regional representatives of the teachers' unions that are granted paid leave. The Committee invited the Government, in full consultation with the representative trade unions in the sector, to consider how to revise the current regulations such that it is the organizations of education workers themselves that determine the internal mechanisms by which the representatives that will receive union leave are named (see 403rd Report, June 2023). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2023 on the application of the Convention, and the Government's reply thereto. It further notes the joint observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF), received on 27 September 2023, relating to matters addressed below and alleging continued and serious violations of workers' civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee also notes the observations of the Center of United and Progressive Workers (SENTRO), received on 19 October 2023, referring to matters addressed below and alleging the murder of a trade union officer. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in June 2023 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) put an immediate end to any act of violence and intimidation against union members for the legitimate exercise of their rights under the Convention as well as violations of freedom of association, in line with the recommendations of the ILO high-level tripartite mission; (ii) immediately and effectively undertake investigations into the allegations of violence in relation to members of workers' organizations with a view to establishing the facts, determining culpability and punishing the perpetrators; (iii) operationalize the monitoring bodies, including by providing adequate resources, and provide regular information on these mechanisms and on progress on the cases assigned to them; and (iv) ensure that all workers without distinction are able to form and join organizations of their own choosing in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention. The Conference Committee also urged the Government to take decisive and effective measures to promote a climate of non-violence, as well as constructive social dialogue and labour relations at all levels in the country. Finally, the Conference Committee requested the Government to finalize, with ILO technical assistance and in consultation with the social partners, the road map on effectively addressing all outstanding issues and transmit a report on progress made to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2023.

Tripartite road map to implement the 2019 Conference Committee conclusions and achieve full compliance with the Convention. High-level tripartite mission. The Committee had previously called on the Government to rapidly and genuinely engage with the social partners in order to elaborate a constructive tripartite road map detailing progressive steps to be taken to implement the conclusions of the 2019 Conference Committee and to achieve full compliance with the Convention. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that it would develop such a road map and review its Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders relative to the exercise of workers' rights and activities through the institutionalized tripartite process, and expected both instruments to significantly contribute to addressing in a meaningful manner the long-standing concerns and serious violations of civil liberties in the exercise of freedom of association rights.

The Committee notes the report of the high-level tripartite mission requested by the 2019 Conference Committee, which visited the country in January 2023. It further notes the Government's indication that discussions on the road map continued with the social partners and that, on 23 August 2023, the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (NTIPC) convened to consider a draft road map structured along the areas of action identified by the 2019 Conference Committee. The Committee notes that during this meeting, the NTIPC issued Resolution No. 3, which approved the tripartite road map on freedom of association, and Resolution No. 2, which called on the Department of Budget Management, the House of Representatives and the Senate to increase the budget of the Commission on Human Rights (CHR) to allow it to independently perform its constitutional mandate to promote and protect human rights and to provide remedies in case of violations (both resolutions are still being circulated to NTIPC members for signature). As regards the review of the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders, the Committee notes that the Government states that the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE) convened four inter-agency technical working group meetings to draft consolidated Guidelines, which have been approved in principle and elevated to the NTIPC. The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that, in line with the recommendations of the high-level tripartite mission, the President of the Philippines issued Executive Order No. 23 on 30 April 2023, thereby creating an Inter-Agency Committee (EO23 IAC) to promote and protect freedom of association and the right to organize of workers. The Government adds that the EO23 IAC, which is directly under the Office of the President, chaired by the Executive Secretary, and has already convened twice, is tasked, inter alia, with receiving inventories of cases and incidents related to freedom of association from concerned agencies, consolidating and evaluating reports from such agencies, and monitoring progress in the implementation of their action plans. The Government also informs of the recent signing of a Memorandum of Agreement (MOA) between DOLE, the Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) and the Philippine Economic Zone Authority (PEZA), which provides for the establishment of an Ecozone Tripartite Advisory Council, as well as ecozone tripartite working committees, with the aim of promoting industrial peace in ecozones. The Government adds that on 10 August 2023, a first ecozone tripartite working committee was established in the Mactan Export Processing Zone. The Committee also notes that on 20 October 2023, another MOA was concluded between DOLE and the CHR to foster cooperation on the promotion and protection of the human rights of Filipino workers, the conduct of investigations, the referral of cases, the provision of legal advice, and the conduct of trainings and activities.

The Committee notes that the ITUC and the ITF, in their joint observations, confirm that the road map is being finalized, but state that the social partners were not consulted in the drafting of Executive Order No. 23, and consider that the latter falls short in several fundamental aspects, as it does not include representation from social partners, and fails to connect the work of the EO23 IAC with that of a specialized, eminent, independent non-judicial body or provide dedicated funding. The Committee further notes that SENTRO, in its observations, similarly states that the issuance of Executive Order No. 23 occurred without any discussion with workers' organizations and that the social partners have been excluded from the EO23 IAC, the members of which are mainly elements of the National Task Force to End Local Communist Armed Conflict (NTF-ELCAC). SENTRO also affirms that DOLE, DTI and PEZA concluded their MOA without any consultation with workers' organizations. While the Committee welcomes the progress achieved with respect to the elaboration of the tripartite road map and the review of the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders, it also notes the concerns raised by the ITUC, the ITF and SENTRO regarding certain elements linked to the recommendations of the high-level tripartite mission, namely the lack of consultation with the social partners in the preparation of Executive Order No. 23 and the MOA between DOLE, DTI and PEZA, the lack of reference to a specialized, eminent, independent non-judicial body in Executive Order No. 23, and the composition of the EO23 IAC. Underlining the importance that should be attached to full and frank consultation taking place on any questions or proposed legislation affecting trade union rights, the Committee expects that the tripartite road map, with agreed timelines as requested by the high-level tripartite mission, and the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders will be finalized shortly and will significantly contribute to ensuring full respect for the civil liberties of trade union leaders and members. It requests the Government to transmit both documents once they are adopted. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review Executive Order No. 23 in full consultation with the social partners, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Civil liberties and trade union rights

Previous allegations. The Committee recalls that it has received repeated allegations of serious violations of basic civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights submitted by the ITUC in 2015, 2019, 2020 and 2021, by Education International (EI) in 2019, and jointly by EI, the Alliance of Concerned Teachers (ACT) and the National Alliance of Teachers and Office Workers (SMP-NATOW) in 2020, all of which are detailed in its previous comments. The Committee has, on numerous occasions, requested the Government to ensure that these allegations were duly investigated and perpetrators punished to effectively prevent and combat impunity.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates, with respect to the alleged killings of three union leaders reported in 2015 by the ITUC, that: (i) in the case of Florencio Romano, the investigation is still ongoing; (ii) in the case of Rolando Pango, the police are still unable to locate the only potential witness; and (iii) in the case of Victoriano Embang, the two people accused in 2015 remain at large. As regards the allegations of extra-judicial killings of eight trade unionists in the education sector submitted in 2020 by EI, ACT and SMP-NATOW, the Committee notes the Government's indication that four cases are pending before the courts, one case was dismissed by the prosecutor, and three are under investigation. The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide updated information on the status of investigation of the other serious allegations, which concern specific incident of killings, attempted killings, death threats, profiling, surveillance, violent strike dispersal and military and police raids on union offices. Noting with deep regret that no concrete progress appears to have been made in the investigation of these incidents and the punishment of their perpetrators, the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that all allegations presented by the ITUC, EI, ACT and SMP-NATOW since 2015 are properly and fully investigated, and that the cases are reviewed by the CHR when unresolved, so that the facts are established, including any links between the violence and trade union activities, culpability determined and perpetrators brought to justice, thus contributing to the prevention and elimination of impunity. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the status of the investigations and their outcome.

The Committee had previously noted with concern the 2022 ITUC allegations that the police entered the offices of SENTRO without justification and repeatedly inquired about union activities in November 2021, and that the police brutally repressed a strike and arrested 44 workers in a pasta-making company in December 2021. The Committee had requested the Government to ensure that the incidents were adequately addressed, that any unionists detained in relation to the legitimate exercise of trade union activities were released, and that the criminal system was not used to repress freedom of association rights. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the police visit, which was a fact-finding and validation exercise prompted by a reported labour dispute, was misinterpreted as a form of harassment. The Government adds that after a dialogue took place between representatives of the FCCU-SENTRO and the Philippines National Police (PNP) on 5 October 2022, no further incidents of surveillance have taken place. The Committee further notes that SENTRO, in its observations, states that the unannounced visit to its office followed a complaint against members of the police, and occurred within a larger context of red-tagging and harassment, including recent incidents at a plantation in Governor Generoso, at a mining company in Surigao, and at a cable company in Davao City. With respect to the alleged arrests at the pasta-making company, the Committee notes the Government's indication that complaints have been filed against 44 arrested workers for alarms and scandal, absence of permit, disobedience to authority and disregard of COVID-19 protocols, among other charges. The Government indicates that these complaints were dismissed by the prosecutor for lack of probable cause, but that an appeal was filed by the management of the above-mentioned company before the Office of the Justice Secretary on 2 March 2022. The Government informs that this appeal is currently on hold, as it was filed during the previous administration. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that trade unionists are able to exercise their activities in a climate free from violence, harassment and intimidation, and within the framework of a system which guarantees the effective respect of civil liberties and freedom of association rights. The Committee also requests the Government to provide its observations on the new allegations of red-tagging and harassment submitted by SENTRO.

New allegations. The Committee notes that the ITUC and the ITF, in their 2023 observations, allege that Alex Dolorosa, an officer of the BPO Industry Employees Network (BIEN), was stabbed to death in April 2023. According to these organizations, 16 killings of trade unionists have been documented by Filipino trade unions since 2019. The ITUC and the ITF also affirm that two organizers of the Kilusang Mayo Uno (KMU), Alipio “Ador” Juat and Elizabeth “Loi” Magbanua, disappeared on 3 May 2022, and that in September 2022, the Court of Appeal ruled that military officers and officials were accountable for their enforced and continued disappearance. The organizations further allege that two labour organizers, Elgene “Leleng” Mungcal, and Elena “Cha” Cortez Pamposa, went missing on 3 July 2022 after having been subjected to red-tagging, that two union leaders were abducted, detained and questioned about their political activities by state security forces for six days in January 2023, and that two union leaders were arbitrarily arrested and accused of assault and robbery during a rally in June 2020 before being released on bail. The Committee further notes that SENTRO, in its 2023 observations, also denounces the murder of Alex Dolorosa. Noting these serious allegations with deep concern, the Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon.

Measures to combat impunity. Monitoring mechanisms. In its previous comments, the Committee strongly encouraged the Government to fully engage with the social partners in the review of the operational guidelines of the monitoring mechanisms, including in the framework of the mentioned tripartite road map, and requested it to continue to further strengthen these mechanisms, including by allocating sufficient resources, staff and security to personnel. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that DOLE has strengthened the role of the Bureau of Labor Relations (BLR) in performing overall supervision and monitoring of the Convention and related issues, and that funds have been allocated to strengthen the operation of monitoring mechanisms in the 2024 General Appropriations Act. The Government also indicates that the tripartite road map, as presently drafted, includes action points towards the strengthening of monitoring bodies, ensuring adequate budget allocation, and assignment of focal persons and support staff for tripartite activities and mechanisms. The Committee further notes that the Government provides the following information on the status of the 30 cases involving 43 killed trade unionists reported to the 2019 Conference Committee, and on the additional 12 incidents involving 22 victims reported by the ACT Teachers Partylist, the Nagkaisa Labour Coalition, and other labour groups: 12 cases were filed in court, eight are with the prosecutor’s office, one was closed due to the death of the accused, and 21 are still under investigation.

The Committee also notes that the ITUC and the ITF, in their 2023 observations, allege that the existing monitoring bodies, such as the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council Monitoring Body (NTIPC-MB) and the Regional Tripartite Monitoring Body (RTMB), lack budget and staff to operate properly. They also affirm that the Inter-Agency Committee on Extrajudicial Killings, Enforced Disappearances, Torture and Other Grave Violations of the Right to Life, Liberty and Security of Persons under Administrative Order 35 (AO35 IAC) was supposed to address grave human rights violations, including labour-related killings, but that despite its resources, few cases have progressed or have been resolved. Taking due note of the Government’s indication that funds have been attributed in the 2024 General Appropriations Act and action points have been included in the tripartite road map to strengthen the monitoring bodies, the Committee expects that these bodies will be allocated more resources and staff in the very near future, with a view to ensuring their full operationalization and, in turn, the effective and timely monitoring, investigation, and, as appropriate, referral for prosecution of all pending labour-related cases of extra-judicial killings and other violations against trade union leaders and members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, as well as updates on the progress made by the monitoring mechanisms in collecting the necessary information to bring the pending cases of violence against trade unionists to the courts.

Measures to combat impunity. Training and Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders. The Committee previously encouraged the Government to continue to promote comprehensive training activities, with a solid focus on freedom of association and collective bargaining, among government agencies, and looked forward to receiving the revised Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between June and August 2023, DOLE organized consultations and orientations with the CHR, the NTF-ELCAC and the National Intelligence Coordinating Agency (NICA) to coordinate and strengthen their programs on freedom of association. The Government adds that DOLE has conducted four area-wide dialogues to promote common understanding of the principles of freedom of association between unions, employers, law enforcement agencies and other government stakeholders, which took place in the national capital region on 2 March 2023, in Visayas on 17 March 2023, in Mindanao on 28 March 2023, and in Luzon on 26 April 2023. The Government informs that these social dialogues will be a continuing activity under the tripartite road map, which will provide for the conduct of capacity-building activities and trainers' training to ensure the effective implementation of the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that Executive Order No. 23 requires concerned agencies to submit a comprehensive education and capacity-building program to foster common understanding among these agencies of the principles, policies, laws and regulations on freedom of association and the rights to self-organization and collective bargaining. The Government also states that it is looking at the possibility of availing itself of technical assistance from the ILO to strengthen the forensic capacity of its investigative bodies with a view to expediting fair investigation and resolution of the cases related to freedom of association. Welcoming these initiatives, the Committee expects that the above-mentioned training activities will continue within the framework of the tripartite road map and significantly contribute to raising awareness on matters related to freedom of association and collective bargaining among State officials. Noting the Government's interest in receiving technical assistance from the Office, the Committee hopes that this assistance will be provided in the near future.

Measures to combat impunity. Pending legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that Senate Bill No. 2121 (defining and penalizing the crime of red-tagging) had been filed in March 2021, and requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in its adoption. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Senate Bill No. 2121 was not refiled in the Senate of the current Congress, but that House Bills Nos 1152 and 4941, which also seek to define and criminalize red-tagging, were filed in the House of Representatives. The Government informs that these two bills have been pending with the House Committee on Justice since August and September 2022, respectively. In this regard, the Committee notes that SENTRO, in its 2023 observations, states that the proposed new legislation to help address red-tagging has yet to show any real prospect of enactment and has not been recommended by DOLE as urgent. Taking due note of the above, the Committee encourages the Government to take concrete time-bound measures towards the adoption of House Bills Nos 1152 and 4941, and requests it to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee had also previously noted the Government's indication that House Resolution No. 392 (calling for justice for the victims and urging the House Committee on Human Rights to investigate the state of enforced disappearances in the country) and House Resolution No. 45 (directing the Committees on Justice and Human Rights to jointly conduct an inquiry into the implementation of the Act against Enforced or Involuntary Disappearance of 2012) had been filed in Congress, and encouraged the Government to continue to support legislative efforts that could have a positive impact on the exercise of civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee notes the Government's indication that House Bill No. 407, which seeks to declare unlawful and criminalize wilful interference with, harassment and coercion of any worker, workers' association or trade union in the exercise of their right to self-organization, was filed in the House of Representatives and has been pending before the House Committee on Labour and Employment since July 2022. The Government adds that four other bills advocating for civil liberties and trade union rights in both the public and private sectors (House Bills Nos 1513, 1518, 550 and 7043) were filed in the House of Representatives. Taking due note of these initiatives, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in the adoption of House Resolution No. 45, House Bills Nos 407, 1513, 1518, 550 and 7043, or any other draft legislation aimed at ensuring respect for civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights.

Anti-Terrorism Act. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take any necessary measures to ensure that the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2020 does not have the effect of restricting legitimate trade union activities. The Committee understood that following a Supreme Court judgement of December 2021 which nullified two provisions of the above-mentioned Act, terrorism as defined in section 4 does not include advocacy, protest, dissent, stoppage of work, industrial or mass action, and other similar exercises of civil and political rights, and welcomed this development. The Committee notes that the Government states that the judicial process provided in the Act for declaring a group of persons, an organization or an association as terrorist includes three levels of investigation, and that with the Supreme Court's ruling, there is no leeway by which the law can be used to restrict legitimate trade union activities and related civil liberties. The Committee expects that the Government will continue to ensure that the Anti-Terrorism Act is not implemented in a way which has the effect of restricting legitimate union activities and related civil liberties.

Legislative issues

Labour Code. The Committee had previously noted that no recent amendments had been made on the matters raised in its previous comments, even though a number of measures had been filed with the Senate and the House of Representatives over the years, and expected concrete measures to be taken to pursue the revision of the Labour Code without additional delay. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that several labour relations bills have been filed and are now pending in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the present Congress. It refers in particular to: (i) House Bills Nos 1518 and 5141, as well as Senate Bill No. 560, on union registration and membership requirements under the Labour Code; (ii) House Bills Nos 5536 and 5789, as well as Senate Bill No. 741, on the power of the Secretary of Labour and Employment under section 278 of the Labour Code; and (iii) House Bill No. 5789 on the penalty of imprisonment during a strike or lockout under article 279 of the Labour Code. Noting with regret that despite the filing of these new bills, no concrete amendments appear to have been made in relation with the pending matters, the Committee once again reiterates all its previous comments, and firmly expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention as soon as possible.

The Committee also reiterates its comments contained in the 2020 request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

Legislative reform. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend certain provisions of Law No. 62/2011 (the Social Dialogue Act). It further recalls that, following the 2021 Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, which discussed the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), an ILO technical assistance mission was carried out in May 2022, at the end of which the Office prepared, at the request of the Government, a technical memorandum concerning the project to reform the Social Dialogue Act. The Committee notes the adoption of Law No. 367/2022 on Social Dialogue (Social Dialogue Act – SDA), which repeals Law No. 62/2011, and notes with satisfaction that it addresses some of the issues previously raised by the Committee, as detailed below. The Committee also notes the adoption of Law No. 283/2022 amending the Labour Code (Law No. 53/2003) and Emergency Ordinance No. 42/2023 amending and supplementing the SDA and the Labour Code.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Threshold requirements. The Committee had previously requested the Government to review the minimum membership criteria, taking into consideration the high prevalence of small and medium-sized enterprises in the country, so as to ensure the right of all workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes with interest that, in the SDA, the minimum threshold to form a union was lowered from 15 employees to 10 employees from the same employer or 20 employees from different employers belonging to the same bargaining sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of this amendment in practice and, in particular, to indicate its effect on the number of registered trade unions.

Non-standard forms of work. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take measures to ensure that workers engaged in non-standard forms of work can benefit from the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that the scope of the SDA extends to all workers, regardless of their contractual situation, including workers with an individual employment contract, in a legal employment relationship, in a service relationship, civil servants and civil servants with special status, cooperative members and farmers, self-employed workers, as well as unemployed persons (sections 1 and 3 of the SDA).

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration, as well as their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures to: (i) delete or amend section 2(2) of the SDA, according to which workers' organizations shall not carry out political activities; and (ii) delete or amend section 26(2) in order to avoid excessive control of trade union finances (powers afforded to state administrative bodies to control the economic and financial activity and payment of debts to the state budget). The Committee observes that sections 154 and 26 of the newly adopted SDA continue to reflect the above provisions of the now repealed legislation. Noting that no progress has been made in this respect despite a legislative reform, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures so as to bring sections 26 and 154 of the Social Dialogue Act into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1958)

Previous comment

Legislative reform. The Committee recalls that: (i) since 2012, it has been requesting the Government to amend the Social Dialogue Act of 2011 to ensure its conformity with the Convention; (ii) the application of the Convention gave rise, in 2021, to a discussion before the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee); (iii) at the request of the Conference Committee, a technical assistance mission was conducted in May 2022, at the end of which the Office, at the request of the Government, prepared a technical memorandum concerning the draft reform of the Social Dialogue Act.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Act No. 367/2022 on social dialogue was promulgated on 19 December 2022 and that, particularly with regard to the promotion of collective bargaining in the private sector, the Act took into consideration many comments and recommendations made by the Committee of Experts, the Conference Committee and the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) with respect to Case No. 3323.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee recalls that, for several years, it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the penalties applicable in cases of anti-union discrimination and interference, to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive, particularly for large enterprises. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the legislative amendments made by Act No. 367/2022 and by Act No. 283/2022 which revises several provisions of the Labour Code. The Committee notes in particular that: (i) Act No. 283/2022 incorporates into sections 5 and 6 of the Labour Code provisions that protect workers, including trade union representatives, against any reprisals following actions to defend rights; fines between 4,000 Romanian New Lei (RON) and RON8,000 (equivalent to between US$220 and US$880) may be imposed; (ii) similarly, Act No. 367/2022 prohibits any discrimination based on trade union membership or activity, and also prohibits any anti-union acts, including dismissal, and provides for the protection of trade union representatives and elected representatives against any act intended to prevent them from exercising their representation mandate; and (iii) section 175 of Act No. 367/2022 establishes fines of between RON30,000 and RON50,000 (between US$6,600 and US$11,000) for anti-union acts. The Committee also notes the detailed information of the National Council for Combating Discrimination (CNCD) on its mandate, its activities, and the penalties that it is authorized to impose, including fines of between RON1,000 and RON30,000 (between US$220 and US$6,600) for discrimination against individuals and between RON2,000 and RON100,000 (between US$440 and US$22,000) for discrimination against a group of persons or a community. The CNCD adds that, between 2019 and 2022: (i) it examined 39 complaints of anti-union discrimination; (ii) in nine cases, discrimination was determined, leading to six warnings and three fines (RON2,000 (US$440), RON4,000 (US$660), and RON10,000 (US$2,200), respectively); and (iii) four of the nine decisions were appealed before the courts.

The Committee notes these various elements. While welcoming the increase in the fines established by Act No. 367/2022, which revised the Social Dialogue Act of 2011 (an increase of over 50 per cent from which, however, the effects of inflation should be deducted), the Committee notes at the same time that: (i) the only information on the imposition of fines concerns small fines levied in three cases by the CNCD, and no details were provided on any decisions taken by the labour inspectorate or the courts; and (ii) the Government did not indicate, as had been requested, whether the competent authorities have the possibility to order the reinstatement of persons dismissed for their trade union activities. Recalling the importance of being able to apply dissuasive penalties through effective procedures for cases of acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the application in practice of the penalties established by section 175 of Act No. 367/2022; (ii) specify whether reinstatement is a possible penalty in cases of dismissal based on trade union affiliation or activity; and (iii) provide full information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination and interference brought before the various competent authorities (the labour inspectorate, the courts and the CNCD), the average duration of proceedings and the type of decisions taken.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining at the enterprise level. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, further to its previous comments, Act No. 367/2022 has: (i) strengthened the key role of trade union organizations by providing that elected staff representatives may only negotiate collective agreements in the complete absence of trade union organizations in the enterprise (sections 57, 58 and 102 of the Act); (ii) lowered from 50 per cent to 35 per cent the proportion of affiliated workers in an enterprise required in order for a trade union to be considered representative (section 54); and (iii) provided for various arrangements (section 102) to allow for bargaining with workers' organizations if no trade union reaches the aforementioned representativeness threshold in the enterprise (in particular through the participation of representative federations or confederations at the sectoral or national level, to which the enterprise trade union would be affiliated or, in the absence of such organizations, by allowing for joint bargaining by all trade unions present in the enterprise). The Committee further notes the extension of the obligation to bargain to enterprises with between ten and 20 workers (section 97).

Promotion of collective bargaining at the sectoral and national levels. The Committee notes with satisfaction that, further to its previous comments, Act No. 367/2022 (section 54): (i) reduces from 7 per cent to 5 per cent the percentage of affiliated workers in a sector of activity required in order for a trade union federation to be considered representative; (ii) provides that, if a trade union organization does not reach this threshold in the sector concerned, a representative confederation at the national level may bargain on behalf of its members in that sector; and (iii) explicitly provides for the possibility of negotiating agreements at the national level (section 102). The Committee adds that the Act contains various additional measures aimed at promoting collective bargaining and increasing its coverage: (i) the redefinition of sectors of economic activity to facilitate collective bargaining within them; (ii) the establishment of a procedure to extend sectoral and national collective agreements beyond their signatories; and (iii) the creation of an obligation to bargain at the sectoral level.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation in practice of the various provisions referred to above which are aimed at promoting collective bargaining at all levels, by providing, in particular, detailed information on: (i) the number and level of collective agreements concluded, the sectors concerned and the level of coverage of collective bargaining, distinguishing the contribution of each level of negotiation; and (ii) the respective proportion of agreements concluded by trade union organizations and by elected workers' representatives at the enterprise level.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining with public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls the 2021 conclusions of the Conference Committee on collective bargaining in the public sector, and its 2019 comments concerning the need for wages to be included in the scope of the collective bargaining for all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding the provisions of section 105 of Act No. 367/2022 on staff paid from the state budget, according to which: (i) collective agreements cannot contain clauses regarding wage entitlements of which the granting and amount are established by the legislation in force; (ii) collective labour agreements may, nevertheless, provide for bargaining after the approval of the income and expenditure budgets of the respective units, within the limits and under the conditions established by the latter; and (iii) where wage entitlements are set in special laws between minimum and maximum limits, the concrete wage entitlements are determined by collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to specify: (i) the different categories of public sector workers covered by section 105 of Act No. 367/2022; and (ii) the content and scope of financial negotiations for employees paid by the State to which the aforementioned provision refers.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee recalls that it had requested the Government to reply to its previous comment as set out below, in 2023. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report was submitted too late after the deadline of 1 September to ensure its translation. The Committee will examine the information provided by the Government at its next meeting.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of the Russian Federation (KTR), communicated with the Government's report and referring to the issues raised by the Committee below, as well as the Government's reply thereon.

The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) drew to its attention the legislative aspects of Case No. 3313 [see 396th Report, October 2021, paragraphs 529–595]. The Committee notes, in particular, the conclusions and recommendations of the CFA with regard to: (1) the right of trade unions to express opinions and (2) the application to trade unions of the legislative provisions regulating non-commercial organizations performing functions of a foreign agent.

Freedom of expression. With regard to a situation where a union's publications criticizing the State's policy were declared as being contrary to the law and the union's statutes, the CFA recalled that the right to express opinions through the press or otherwise is an essential aspect of trade union rights and the full exercise of trade union rights calls for a free flow of information, opinions and ideas within the limits of propriety and non-violence. The CFA further recalled that freedom of expression which should be enjoyed by trade unions and their leaders should also be guaranteed when they wish to criticize the government's economic and social policy. The CFA requested the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that the right of trade unions to express opinions, including those criticizing the Government's economic and social policies is duly protected in law and in practice. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all steps taken in this respect.

Foreign agents. Furthermore, and with reference to Case No. 3313, this Committee notes that by virtue of the Law on Non-Commercial Organizations, trade unions must register as organizations performing the functions of a "foreign agent" if they receive funding from foreign sources and that such status entails certain additional obligations imposed on a trade union under sections 24 and 32 of the Law. The Committee further notes that section 32 provides for scheduled (once a year) and unscheduled inspections of non-commercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent. The Committee notes that the reasons for unscheduled inspections include the receipt of information from the state authorities, local self-government authorities, citizens or organizations on: (i) a violation of law or its own by-laws by a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent; (ii) non-registration as a foreign agent; and (iii) participation in events carried out by a foreign or international non-governmental organization whose activities have been declared undesirable on the territory of the Russian Federation. If during an investigation it appears necessary to obtain documents and/or information through inter-agency information exchange, to undertake complex and/or lengthy research or special expert analyses and investigations, the time limit for carrying out the investigation may be extended to 45 working days. The Committee considers that legislation which seriously hampers activities of a trade union or an employers' organization on the grounds that they accept financial assistance from an international organization of workers or employers to which they are affiliated infringes the principles concerning the right to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee also notes that pursuant to section 32 of the Law, an authorized body can prohibit a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent from implementing a programme (or part thereof). Failure to execute that decision entails the liquidation of the organization by a court. The Committee notes heavy penalties set out by the Code of Administrative Offences in connection to the failure to register as a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent, and also for production or distribution of materials (including through the mass media and/or the Internet), without indicating that these materials were produced, distributed or sent by a non-commercial organization acting as a foreign agent. In light of the above, the Committee, like the CFA, considers that it is difficult to reconcile the additional bureaucratic burdens imposed on trade unions receiving financial assistance from abroad (including from an international trade union to which they are affiliated), as well as various hefty penalties that can be imposed on the organizations, their leaders and members, with the right of trade unions to organize their administration, to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes as well as with the right to benefit from international affiliation. The Committee recalls that the control exercised by the public authorities over trade union finances should not normally exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports. The discretionary right of the authorities to carry out inspections and request information at any time entails a serious danger of interference in the internal administration of trade unions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to find an appropriate solution through social dialogue in order to ensure that the regulations on non-commercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent are compatible with the rights of trade unions, and employers' organizations, under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee notes with utmost concern, from the Kremlin website (www.kremlin.ru), the entry into force, on 1 December 2022, of the Law on Control of Activities of Persons Under Foreign Influence. The Committee notes that pursuant to the new legislation, foreign influence is defined as a support (financial and/or other) provided by, among others, international and foreign organizations, and that non-compliance with the requirements of the law, which are now more stringent than those described above, entails a dissolution of the organization in question. The Committee notes that while employers' organizations are explicitly excluded from its scope, trade unions are not. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to exclude trade unions and their organizations from the scope of application of the new Law and to inform the Committee of all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee notes, from the Official Internet Portal of Legal Information, the entry into force, on 5 December 2022, of the related legislation, the Law on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of the Russian Federation, which amends, among several other pieces of legislation, Federal Law No. 54-FZ of 19 June 2004 (as amended on 30 December 2020) on Meetings, Rallies, Demonstrations, Marches and Pickets. The Committee notes with deep concern that the amendment not only restricts areas where a public event can take place to the extent that the organization of demonstrations, marches, pickets might become virtually impossible, but also forbids the organization of such events by foreign agents. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these developments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. The Committee had previously invited the Government to review, in consultation with the social partners, various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of the narrowly interpreted category of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its explanation on the classification of civil service positions in the national legislation set out in section 9 of the Law on State Civil Servants, and indicates that all civil servants covered by that legislation exercise authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that the KTR reiterates its opinion that far from all civil servants covered by the Law are "officials exercising authority in the name of the State". The Committee questions to what extent "support specialists" (clerical, documentation, IT, accounting, specialists etc.), for example, exercise authority in the name of the State. The Committee recalls that too broad a definition of the concept of civil servant may result in a very wide restriction or even a prohibition of the right to strike for these workers. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it is prepared to conduct, where necessary, consultations with social partners regarding possible improvements. The Committee reiterates its request and expects the Government to inform it of the outcome of the review, in consultation with the social partners, of various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of this narrowly interpreted category and whose right to strike should be guaranteed.

With regard to its previous request to take the necessary measures to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to ensure the right to strike of railway workers, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it believes there is no need to amend the legislation on the rail transport, as section 413 of the Labour Code provides that the right to strike may be restricted by federal law. The Government indicates that temporary work stoppages by certain categories of railway workers may pose a threat to the defence of the country and state security, as well as human life and health, and it is therefore reasonable to restrict their right to strike. The Committee reiterates that railway transport does not constitute an essential service in the strict sense of the term where strikes can be prohibited and that instead, a negotiated minimum service could be established in this public service of fundamental importance. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2015, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in an observation and a direct request, with longstanding requests for information on the application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention with respect to fire service personnel, prison staff and public servants. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation and direct request adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2015, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising questions concerning compliance with the Convention in an observation, including a longstanding request for the Government to ensure that national legislation expressly recognizes the right to collective bargaining of prison staff and fire service personnel. Not having received any observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2020, and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. ### Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its legislation imposes sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against anti-union discrimination aimed at all the workers covered by the Convention. It notes that the Government: (i) indicates that the revised Labour Code, promulgated in 2019, does not introduce any changes in this respect, but retains a number of specific provisions that give effect to Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention; and (ii) recognizes at the same time that it is necessary to legislate against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference in order to promote collective bargaining processes in the country. Noting that the sections of the Labour Code mentioned by the Government were referenced in its previous observation, the Committee emphasizes once again that the Labour Code does not provide specific sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination affecting workers who are not trade union representatives or candidates for the post of representative. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take appropriate steps to include sanctions in the legislation that are both effective and dissuasive against such acts of discrimination, applicable to all workers covered by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Absence of a legal framework for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining and absence of collective bargaining in practice. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed concern at the lack of collective agreements in the country, highlighting that the absence of a legal framework could hamper the exercise of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government recognizes that: (i) under the First Republic, collective bargaining in the agricultural sector took place in public entities; (ii) the country is still not equipped with a legal framework for collective bargaining and there is currently no collective agreement in the country; and (iii) the Government will shortly be advancing initiatives in this area and will request ILO technical assistance accordingly. While taking due note of the Government's expressed intention to request ILO technical assistance, the Committee requests the Government once again, as a matter of urgency, to take all necessary measures, in law and in practice, to encourage the development and use of collective bargaining, and to provide information on progress in this regard.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of legislative provisions imposing sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference against trade union organizations of public employees. The Committee notes firstly that, under section 3(1)(a) of the Preamble to Act No. 6/2019 on the Labour Code: without prejudice to special legislative provisions, the provisions of the Labour Code relating to, inter alia, equality and non-discrimination are applied mutatis mutandis to the legal public employment relationship conferred on the public servant or the public administration official. The Committee also notes that: (i) the Government indicates that section 362(2) and (3) specify that any form of interference in trade union associations is prohibited; and (ii) under section 363 of the Code, any act or agreement is prohibited that: (a) makes the employment of a worker subject to their membership or non-membership of a trade union association or their withdrawal from an association of which they are a member; and (b) dismisses, transfers or otherwise prejudices a worker because of their exercise of rights relating to participation in collective representation organizations or membership of a trade union. The Committee also notes that the Code prohibits employers from engaging in any discrimination, direct or indirect, based on trade union membership (section 17), and from following discriminatory procedures in the treatment of workers because of workers' trade union membership (section 101(2)(b)). With regard to the penalties for these acts, the Committee notes the Government's indication that sections 534 and 539 of the Labour Code provide for applicable penalties in the area of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes in this regard that section 539 provides that: (i) bodies or organizations that violate the provisions of section 362(1) and (2) (acts of interference) and section 363 (anti-union discrimination) are punishable by a fine of up to 120 days (section 539(1)); and (ii) administrators, directors or managers and workers occupying managerial positions who are responsible for the acts referred to in the previous paragraph are liable to imprisonment of up to one year (section 539(2)). Observing that section 539, unlike other similar provisions of the Labour Code, does not clearly define the unit of measurement for calculating the fine incurred (expressed in days without any other indication), the Committee requests the Government to specify what this provision corresponds to in terms of a financial penalty. In addition, the Committee notes that section 534 does not impose any specific penalties for violations of section 17 and section 101(2)(b) of the Code. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt legislative provisions imposing sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination and for acts of interference against trade union organizations of public employees.

Article 8. Settlement of collective disputes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 11 of Act No. 4/92 on Strikes provides for compulsory arbitration but noted that the legislation does not establish any mechanism for mediation or conciliation in the event of a dispute between the parties. While noting that the Acts on trade unions and on strikes are henceforth part of Act No. 6/2019 issuing the Labour Code, under the Preamble of the Code, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the settlement of collective disputes in the public administration, as well as on the mediation mechanisms that are under the responsibility of the Directorate of the Public Administration.

Previous comment

Article 5 of the Convention. Collective bargaining in the public administration. In its previous comment, the Committee, having noted both the absence of a legal framework for collective bargaining and its application to public servants, requested the Government to take the necessary measures to remedy this situation and thus give effect to Article 5 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government: (i) mentions that bargaining takes place when the National Council for Social Dialogue deems it appropriate or when the situation so justifies; and (ii) emphasizes that there are no collective agreements in the country, that there is still no legal framework for collective bargaining and that the Government is willing to work with the social partners to remedy that situation, for example during the reform of the Labour Code (Act No. 6/2019). Recalling that under the Convention, while taking full account of the particular conditions in the public service, persons employed by the public administration must be able to bargain collectively in respect of their working conditions and terms of employment, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) give clear details on the participation of trade unions in the National Council for Social Dialogue and on the content and results of the negotiations taking place therein; and (ii) take the necessary measures, in consultation with the representative trade union organizations concerned, to establish a legal framework to promote the application of collective bargaining within the public service. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress achieved on this matter and recalls that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Previous comments

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had urged the Government to indicate what circumstances fall within the definition of “taking over a trade union” contained in paragraph 2 of section 200 of the Criminal Code on the violation of trade union rights and to provide information on its application in practice. The Committee takes note of the indications of the Government that section 200 of the Criminal Code, which serves as a blanket legal provision, requires reference to several pieces of legislation, including the Trade Union Representativeness Act, the Employment Relations Act, the Collective Agreements Act and the Strike Act, as well as specific trade union statutes, in order to establish the existence of violations of trade union rights. In spite of the comprehensive nature of these references, the term “trade union take-over” remains undefined and will therefore require future legislative interpretation and case law in order to clarify its substantive meaning. As yet, Slovenian courts have not ruled on this specific issue, leaving a degree of uncertainty in the legal field. The Committee takes due note of these elements. The Committee considers that the difficulties in clarifying the meaning and scope of section 200(2) of the Penal Code may hamper the effectiveness of this provision. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention requires the existence of clear and precise legislative provisions to adequately protect workers’ organizations from acts of interference, such as those aiming to place workers’ organizations under the control of employers or employers’ organizations by financial or other means. The Committee requests the Government to consider, in consultation with the social partners, complementing its legislation regarding the prohibition of anti-union interference and to provide information of any new developments concerning the interpretation and application of section 200(2) of the Penal Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government’s report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the Government’s first report on the application of the Convention. It notes with interest the Government’s indication that a draft Labour Code (the content of which is examined in the direct request accompanying this observation), was developed in collaboration with the ILO to revise the 1972 Labour Code, and that all tripartite partners were involved in the process. It further notes that this draft Labour Code and a draft Civil Service Law are currently pending approval by the Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to inform on the adoption process of the draft Labour Code and the draft Civil Service Law and to transmit copies of the laws once adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU), received on 1 October 2020, alleging violations of the right to organize, including the right to strike, at an airport management company, as well as pressures and threats by the police against trade union officials. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

South Africa

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comments

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Allegations of violent repression of strike actions and arrests of striking workers. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government provides no information on the findings of the investigation into the arrest of 100 community health striking workers in July 2014 and the killing of a union steward of the Association of Mineworkers and Construction Union (AMCU) in January 2014. The Committee recalls the requirement of independent judicial investigations to be conducted rapidly in the case of allegations of violations of the rights and principles guaranteed by the Convention with a view to establishing the facts, violations and determining responsibilities, punishing the perpetrators and instigators and preventing the recurrence of such acts. In this regard, the Committee recalls that excessive delays in the procedures set in motion in response to such allegations create, in practice, a situation of impunity, which reinforces the existing climate of violence and insecurity (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 60). The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to take all necessary measures with a view to expediting the process of investigation and requests the Government to inform it of the findings.

In its previous observation, the Committee had requested the Government to provide detailed comments on the serious allegations of violations of trade union rights and civil liberties contained in the 2022 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC). The Committee recalls that the ITUC alleged that strike actions in South Africa were often met with intimidation and anti-union dismissals, violence and arrests and referred in this respect to: (i) the assassination of a campaigner and organizer for the National Union of Metalworkers of South Africa (NUMSA) in August 2021; (ii) the killing of a member of the NUMSA in October 2021, during a protest march for a salary increase in the metal and engineering sector; (iii) the NUMSA allegation that some of its members have been attacked by the police and private security companies, and in some instances, have even been shot at, causing injuries; (iv) the alleged intimidation of South African Commercial Catering and Allied Workers Union (SACCAWU) members by employers during protests, in particular through the use of legal notices, unpaid leaves to self-isolate for allegedly violating COVID-19 safety rules, and text messages telling workers they had been replaced; (v) the alleged violence, such as threats, the use of rubber bullets and petrol bomb attacks against striking dairy workers, members of the General Industries Workers Union of South Africa (GIWUSA); and (vi) the alleged suspension of four members of the National Emancipated and Allied Workers Union of South Africa (NEAWUSA) following a month-long strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that freedom of association is a fundamental right enshrined in the Constitution of South Africa, and that the laws support the right to strike when industrial action is peaceful. The Government adds that the laws do not support the use of violence and destruction of property; when the law is violated and the intervention of police is solicited, their intervention must be within the ambit of the law. The Government further indicates that in instances where the police or private security agents violate the law, the trade unions or aggrieved individuals have the right to approach the courts. The Government emphasizes that all industrial actions are required to operate within the parameters of the law for them to be protected. The Government indicates that it is important that the allegations and complaints against the Government are supported by evidence. While noting the general explanation provided by the Government, the Committee notes with deep regret that there appears to be no investigation conducted into the ITUC serious allegations involving a number of national trade unions. The Committee emphasizes the importance of properly investigating all alleged instances of violence against trade union members and recalls that the authorities, when informed of such matters, should systematically request information from the unions involved and carry out an immediate investigation to determine who is responsible and punish the guilty parties. The Committee urges the Government to conduct a thorough investigation into the alleged instances of violation of civil liberties and trade union rights and requests the Government to provide information on the outcome.

The Committee further notes with regret that the Government did not provide detailed information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into the events at Marikana Mine in Rustenburg regarding the violent death of 34 workers during a strike action in August 2012. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to transmit full particulars with its next report.

The Committee takes note of the Accord on Collective Bargaining and Industrial Action, the Code of Good Practice on Collective Bargaining, Industrial Action and Picketing, and Picketing Regulations and the Government's indication that the Accord is the product of social dialogue and consensus between the State, Organized Business, Organized Labour and Community Constituency under the auspices of the National Economic Development and Labour Council (NEDLAC).

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had noted the Government's indication that the social partners have deliberated under the auspices of the NEDLAC during 2015 and 2016 and have established amendments to the Labour Relations Act (LRA) with regards to picketing, secret ballots and the establishment of an advisory arbitration panel. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the status of the amendments and to provide a copy thereof once adopted.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Rights of vulnerable workers to be effectively represented by their organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide a copy of the research report on the impact of the amendments of the Labour Relations Act on trade unionization of temporary employees, and information on any developments regarding the Government's interventions to address difficulties in the exercise of the right to organize by farmworkers, including on the ITUC's 2015 observations alleging difficulties for farmworkers to engage in legally protected industrial action. The Committee notes the Government's reply that it has not conducted any research, because there is nothing in the legislation that impedes trade unions from organizing in any sector irrespective of the workers' status. The Government points out that while it is its responsibility to create a conducive environment for organizations and workers to exercise their rights, it is not the Government's responsibility to organize on behalf of workers. The Committee refers to its 2019 observation wherein it took note of the Government's various initiatives aimed at addressing difficulties encountered by temporary workers and farmworkers, which included, among others, a commissioning of the above-mentioned research. The Committee reiterates its previous requests and expects the Government to transmit full details with its next report. In particular, the Committee expects clarification as to whether the research report that was announced in the past will be produced after all, or how else the Government intends to create a framework within which vulnerable workers can engage in legally protected industrial action.

Sudan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Sudan of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) on 17 March 2021. The Committee notes at the same time with concern the public announcement made on 28 November 2022 by the Head of the Transitional Sovereignty Council concerning: (i) the suspension of the activities of all workers' and employers' organizations; and (ii) the decision to establish a committee headed by the general registrar of work organizations aimed at forming new steering committees for trade unions and employers organizations as well, to prepare for elections and general assemblies. The Committee urges the Government to refrain from any interference with regard to the functioning of the workers' and employers' organizations and to guarantee the necessary civil liberties so that they can freely exercise their activities, including through free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide full information on the measures taken to ensure full respect for the right to organize and collective bargaining.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee, noting that a draft Labour Code was in the final stages of revision, requested the Government to ensure that compulsory arbitration, which is currently allowed by section 112 of the Labour Code of 1997, would only be imposed in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Code of 1997 was revised and submitted to the Council of Ministers in 2021, and that it is currently being assessed by a consultative committee on labour standards which includes employers and workers. Taking due note of these developments, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the revised Labour Code is adopted shortly and only allows the imposition of compulsory arbitration in the above-mentioned cases. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide statistical information on collective bargaining in practice. It notes with regret that the Government merely states that it does not have any data. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information, including statistics, on the number of collective agreements concluded in the country since 2017, as well as the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Trade union rights in export processing zones (EPZs). In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the application of trade union rights in EPZs. Noting that the Government does not transmit the information requested, the Committee reiterates its request that it provide specific information on the application of trade union rights in EPZs, including the number of unions and collective agreements, as well as copies of the pertinent labour inspection reports.

Trade Unions Act. The Committee had previously observed that various provisions of the Trade Unions Act of 2010 are not consistent with the principles of freedom of association (for example, the imposition of trade union monopoly at federation level; the ban on joining more than one trade union organization; the need for approval from the national federation in order for federations or unions to join a local, regional or international federation; and interference in the finances of organizations) and invited the Government to bring the Act into line with such principles. Regretting that the Government does not provide any information in this regard and highlighting the recent ratification of Convention No. 87, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring the Trade Unions Act of 2010 into conformity with the principles of freedom of association so as to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining machinery, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention.

Reiterating its concern about the 28 November 2022 public announcement concerning the freezing of the activities of all workers and employers' organizations, the Committee further urges the Government to ensure that, pending the revision of the Trade Union Act, all the conditions required for the application of the Convention are fully respected in practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Syrian Arab Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes that in its reply to the 2012 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging the use of police and paramilitary force in dealing with protests, deaths, arrests and imprisonment of political and human rights activists, the Government indicates that: (i) the ILO has no constitutional mandate to interfere in countries' internal political affairs, rather its mandate is to examine allegations of economic nature or dealing with working conditions; (ii) the matter raised by the ITUC is being discussed by the Human Rights Council since 2011; (iii) the Government categorically refutes the use of violence against its citizens; the protests, killings and acts of vandalism were carried out by armed terrorist groups in order to destabilize the country; and (iv) the right to strike is provided for in article 44 of the Constitution (2012), which specifies that citizens have the right to assemble, to peacefully demonstrate and to strike. The Committee recalls that freedom of association is a principle with implications that go well beyond the mere framework of labour law. It further recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee expects the Government to ensure respect for this principle.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether independent workers, civil servants, agricultural workers, domestic workers and similar categories, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers (workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day) shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations. The Committee considers, however, that the right to organize of the abovementioned categories of workers excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Act should be explicitly protected in law. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take measures, in consultation with social partners, to adopt the necessary legislative provisions so as to ensure that these categories of workers enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee further notes that agricultural workers and agriculture work relationships, including collective bargaining, are governed by Agricultural Relations Law No. 56 of 2004, that domestic workers are governed by Law No. 201 of 2010, and that civil servants are governed by Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. The Committee requests the Government to indicate specific legislative provisions that regulate particular aspects of freedom of association rights of civil servants, agricultural workers, and domestic as well as independent workers, and to provide a copy thereof.

Trade union monopoly. For several years, the Committee has been referring to the need for the Government to amend or repeal the legislative provisions which establish a trade union monopoly (sections 3, 4, 5 and 7 of Legislative Decree No. 84; sections 4, 6, 8, 13, 14 and 15 of Legislative Decree No. 3, amending Legislative Decree No. 84; section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 250 of 1969; and sections 26–31 of Act No. 21 of 1974). The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that workers have the right to establish independent trade unions if the union is affiliated to the General Federation of Trade Unions in Syria (GFTU). According to the Government, the application of trade union pluralism in several countries weakened trade unions and diminished workers' rights. Observing that all workers' organizations must belong to the GFTU and that any attempt to form a trade union must be subject to the consent of this Federation, the Committee considers that although it is generally to the advantage of workers and employers to avoid a proliferation of competing organizations, the right of workers to be able to establish organizations of their own choosing, as set out in Article 2 of the Convention, implies that trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases. The Committee considers that it is important for workers to be able to change trade unions or to establish a new union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice. Consequently, trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention (General Survey 2012, op. cit., paragraph 92). The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in full consultations with the social partners, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. It requests the Government to inform it of any progress made in this regard.

Article 3. Financial administration of organizations. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to the need to amend section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, so as to lift the power of the Minister to set the conditions and procedures for the investment of trade union funds in financial services and industrial sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the rights afforded to them by the Constitution, the GFTU and other unions are financially independent and have the right to conclude agreements and labour contracts in accordance with section 17 of the Law on Trade Union Organizations and the right to dispose of their funds and income in accordance with their internal regulations and decisions. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects the Government to undertake, as soon as possible, the revision of section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, in full consultations with the social partners. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken or contemplated to repeal or amend section 1(4) of Act No. 29 of 1986, amending Legislative Decree No. 84 which determines the composition of the GFTU Congress and its presiding officers. The Committee has stated on multiple occasions that it should be up to trade union constitutions and rules to establish the composition and presiding officers of trade union congresses. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, in order to amend or repeal the above-mentioned provision in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that organizations are able to elect their representatives in full freedom. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested that the Government take the necessary measures to amend legislative provisions that restrict the right to strike by imposing heavy sanctions including imprisonment (sections 330, 332, 333 and 334 of Legislative Decree No. 148 of 1949, issuing the Penal Code). The Committee had further observed that no reference was made to the possibility for workers to exercise their right to strike in the chapter on collective labour disputes of the Labour Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 67 of the Labour Act provides protection against dismissals of unionized workers for taking part in trade-union activities. Recalling that in the past, the Government had indicated that the GFTU was working to modify the Labour Act to ensure coherence with articles of the Constitution granting workers the right to strike, the Committee expects that the law will be amended so as to bring it into line with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information in this regard. While noting the Government's indication that the agricultural sector is now governed by Law No. 56 of 2004, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether workers of this sector enjoy the right to strike and identify the relevant legislative provisions.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Scope of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify and provide details concerning the legislative provisions affording to the following categories of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention: independent workers, civil servants, domestic servants and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day. The Committee notes the Government's indication that : (i) pursuant to section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations; and (ii) civil servants are governed by the Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. Noting that section 5(b) of the Labour Act excludes several categories of workers from its scope of application and exclusively refers to the content of their individual contracts of employment, the Committee requests the Government to specify the legislative provision recognizing the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate legislative provisions regulating the right of collective bargaining for civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It further requests the Government to indicate whether independent workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention and to specify the relevant legislative provisions.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, noting that the Labour Act of 2010 does not expressly prohibit acts of interference on the part of the employers' or workers' organizations in each other's affairs, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures with a view to adopting clear and precise provisions prohibiting acts of interference, accompanied by sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While observing that the Government does not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 2 of the Convention, workers' and employers' organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration. Acts of interference are deemed to include acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of an employer or an employers' organization, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers and employers' organizations (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 194). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation explicitly prohibits all of the acts covered by Article 2 of the Convention and that it provides for sufficiently dissuasive penalties in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that section 187(c) of the Labour Act grants an excessive power to the Ministry to object and refuse to register a collective agreement on any grounds that it deems appropriate during a 30-day period after filing the collective agreement and therefore requested the Government to amend the provision in order to fully guarantee the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established in the Convention. Additionally, it pointed out that pursuant to section 214 of the Labour Act, if mediation fails, either party may file a request to initiate dispute settlement through arbitration and accordingly recalled that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration in the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and acute national crises. The Committee observes that the Government merely states that all laws and subsequent amendments on the Labour Act were adopted in full consultation with social partners, and reiterates that section 187(c) of the Labour Act aims to ensure that collective agreements are in conformity with the abovementioned Act. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sections 187(c) and 214 of the Labour Act are brought into conformity with the Convention.

Arbitration bodies. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 215 of the Labour Act so as to ensure that the composition of the tribunal is balanced and has the confidence of the parties in the arbitration mechanism. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will undertake, as soon as possible, the amendment of the abovementioned provision.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations. While taking note that the Labour Act refers in its section 178 to collective bargaining and social dialogue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate, in practice, the measures taken or envisaged to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations to regulate the terms and conditions working through collective bargaining. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of existing collective agreements, the sectors concerned and the numbers of workers covered by those.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tunisia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Federation of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 30 August and 1 September 2023 respectively, alleging violations of trade union rights committed by the authorities. The UGTT and the ITUC allege, in particular, that there have been arrests, accusations, criminal prosecutions and administrative measures taken against trade unionists. The Committee notes with concern the arrest of the secretary-general of the trade union representing officials of the Tunisian Motorway Association (Société Tunisie Autoroutes), Mr Anis Kaâbi, in the context of an organized strike on 30 and 31 January 2023 for causing “financial loss” as a result of opening up motorway lanes free of charge during the strike. According to the UGTT, Mr Kaâbi remains in detention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in response to these observations.

In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide the judgment of the Court of Appeal concerning the extraordinary non-elective congress of the UGTT. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the complaint against the UGTT was filed by a group of trade unionists intending to annul the extraordinary non-elective congress of the UGTT and that the executive power was not involved in this decision that led to the annulment of the congress. It is an internal issue for a trade union. The Government reports that, as of 13 October 2022, the Court of Appeal of Tunis ruled in favour of approving the non-elective congress of the UGTT, thereby annulling the decision of the Court of First Instance of November 2021.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative amendments. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take all the necessary measures to amend the following sections of the Labour Code:

- section 242, to ensure that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment (16 years under section 53 of the Labour Code) are able to exercise their trade union rights without authorization from their parent or guardian;
- section 251, to allow foreign workers access to the functions of trade union leadership, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country; and
- sections 376bis, 376ter, 387 and 388 concerning restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike (approval of the umbrella organization before declaring a strike; compulsory indication of the duration of the strike in the strike notification; and the possibility of imposing penalties in the event of an unlawful strike).

The Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has not reported any progress in bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention and that it only indicates that a revision of the Labour Code requires consultations with the social partners, and that no legislative amendment may be made unilaterally without the participation of the organizations concerned. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in response to its longstanding recommendations and in consultation with the social partners, to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee also requested the Government to report on the adoption of the decree provided for in section 381ter of the Labour Code (determination of the list of essential services by decree). In the absence of information provided by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to report on the adoption of the decree and to send a copy of it once it has been adopted.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes without interference from the public authorities. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the decree of 26 September 2018 establishing criteria for trade union representativeness at the national level and requested the Government to specify the frequency and mechanism for measuring trade union membership for the purpose of appointing members of the National Social Dialogue Council. The Committee also requested the Government to engage in inclusive consultations with all workers' and employers' organizations concerned to ensure that the determination of representative organizations at sectoral and enterprise level is also based on clear, pre-established and objective criteria. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with section 39 of the Labour Code, in the event of a disagreement regarding the greater representativity of one or several trade union organizations, the issue is settled by order of the secretary of State for young persons, sports and social affairs further to the opinion of the National Social Dialogue Council and is not subject to any specific timeframe. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, pending consensus among the workers' and employers' organizations represented on the National Social Dialogue Council, section 39 has not yet been amended. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate all measures taken to ensure that the determination of the representative organizations at sectoral and enterprise level is based on clear, pre-established and objective criteria, and it trusts that such criteria will be agreed upon in the very near future following consultations with all concerned workers' and employers' organizations.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), Public Employees Unions Confederation of Turkey (KAMU-SEN), and the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) communicated with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DISK), the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK), received on 30 August and 1 September 2023 and the Government's reply thereto, which concern issues examined in this comment.

Civil liberties. In its previous comments the Committee had requested the Government to provide its comments on several serious allegations of violations of civil liberties submitted in the observations of the KESK, the DISK and the ITUC. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in this respect as follows.

Arrest, detention, and prosecution of union leaders. Concerning the allegation of arrest in Ankara of eight leaders of the Trade Union of Employees in Public Health and Social Services (SES) on unspecified charges on 25 May 2021, the Committee notes the Government's indication that an investigation was launched against these individuals under the charge of establishing or managing an armed terrorist organization (the PKK), as defined by article 314/1 of the Turkish Penal Code. Subsequently, they were released with judicial orders that imposed international travel bans and judicial controls. However, one individual, subject to an arrest warrant following the objection of the investigating prosecutor, remains a fugitive. The Committee also notes the latest observations of the KESK in this respect, stating that the public prosecutor accuses five SES executives of leadership of an armed illegal organization (Ms Selma Atabey, co-president and former women's secretary, Ms Gonul Erden, former co-president, Ms Bedriye Yorgun, former president, Mr Fikret Calagan, former executive committee member, and Ms Belkis Yurtsever, former executive committee member); and three union officials are accused of membership in the same organization (Ms Rona Temelli, former executive of the SES Branch in Ankara, Mr Ramazan Tas, former executive of the SES Branch in Ankara and, Mr Erdal Turan, former executive of the SES Branch in Ankara). The KESK states that there is no concrete evidence upholding these accusations and affirms that as the judge decided to declare confidentiality on the file, the legal team had no access to its details until the court approved the indictment. The KESK indicates that Ms Erden was arrested on 22 September 2021 and was released on 13 March 2023, and Ms Atabey was arrested on 3 July 2022 and released on 5 June 2023. The KESK alleges that the public prosecutor uses trade union activities of the indicted union leaders to justify his accusation of their membership in the armed illegal group. The KESK indicates that these trade union activities included protesting the ISIS attacks in Syria and curfews in the south-eastern region of Türkiye. According to KESK, the accused SES leaders had organized public gatherings to ask the Government to provide health services to citizens in the curfew areas. The Committee further notes the KESK observation concerning the trial in Van of Ms Figen Colakoglu and Mr Zeki Seven, the co-presidents of the local branch of the SES, for violation of the Law on Demonstrations by participating in a press conference as part of a one-day strike of health employees organized by the Turkish Medical Association on 8 February 2022. The Government indicates in this regard that these union leaders were informed that the Governor's Office had decided to prohibit the press conference that was planned to take place in front of the Chief Physician's Office of the Training and Research Hospital, and legal action was taken against them after they did not comply with the authorities' warnings. The case is still pending. Noting the information submitted and emphasizing the importance of the right to a fair trial for the guarantee of freedom of association, the Committee requests the Government and the KESK to continue to provide information concerning the judicial proceedings against the 10 SES leaders and their outcome. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the court rulings once issued.

Freedom of peaceful assembly and demonstration. The Committee notes the general indications of the Government concerning the legal framework of exercise of freedom of assembly in Türkiye, which reproduce the previous years' explanations relating to Act No. 2911. The Government indicates that meetings and demonstrations held at designated places can occur freely, provided administrative authorities are notified to facilitate necessary security measures. The primary criterion for determining these venues and routes is to ensure that citizens' daily lives are not excessively disrupted. The Government also indicates that the data covering the last three years show that for "illegal demonstrations", namely those in which demonstrators gathered in places other than those designated by authorities despite contrary warning, or did not duly notify, the authorities had tried to resolve the matter through negotiations with the demonstrators, and that consequently the rate of law enforcement intervention has decreased over this period. According to the Government, 22 million people participated in 64'993 protests or events in 2022, out of which 697 protest events were illegal. Intervention was made in 335 "illegal" protests only, which represents 0.5 per cent of the total number of protests that took place in the country. This shows a clear decline from the two per cent in 2016.

Regarding the DİSK allegation concerning the ban on May Day celebrations in Istanbul Taksim square, the Committee notes the Government's indication that demonstrations are forbidden in Taksim square not only on May Day, but around the year, as this area is not among those enumerated in the decision of the İstanbul Governor's Office published on 27 February 2023, which designates the locations where meetings and demonstrations are allowed to take place. The Government indicates that on some occasions in the past, the administration allowed a limited number of trade union representatives to hold a commemorative meeting in Taksim square on the May Day, as the applicant had cited the symbolic importance of holding the event there. The administration limited the right to assembly and demonstration in that area, considering the security reasons against holding a meeting with large participation in Taksim Square are stronger than the disadvantage caused by banning the meeting. The Committee recalls that the issue of the ban on May Day demonstrations in Taksim was first brought to its attention in 2008 and notes that the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) has ruled on two cases concerning the 2008 ban on the May Day demonstration in Taksim and the police intervention against the unionists who had attempted to gather despite the ban. In both cases the Court found a violation of the right to freedom of assembly, because of the disproportionate character of the police intervention in a peaceful, albeit unauthorized demonstration [see Case of Disk and Kesk v. Türkiye (2012), and Case of Süleyman Çelebi and Others v. Türkiye (No. 2) (2017)]. The Committee further notes that in the first case, the ECHR took note that in 1977, during Labour Day Celebrations in Taksim Square, 37 people had died when a clash had broken out. As a result, the Taksim Square became a symbol of that tragic event, and it was for this reason that the applicants insisted on organizing the Labour Day celebrations there. The Committee notes that pursuant to the indications of the Government and the DİSK, the ban on May Day gatherings in Taksim remains effective, and the workers who wish to celebrate May Day in Istanbul are required to gather in other locations. More generally, the Committee notes the observation of the DİSK, indicating that every year during May Day celebrations, many people are detained and injured because of violent police attacks and use of tear gas. The Committee notes the Government's indication in this respect that in 2022, legal action was initiated against 222 persons who had acted illegally in the actions or events organized at the occasion of May Day, but this should be put in the context that 337 May Day events took place throughout the country with the participation of 144,262 persons. The Committee also notes that regarding the allegation of an absolute ban on all forms of public gatherings in the city of Van, the Government indicates that in 2023 the KESK organized 16 events in Van, all of which concluded without any issues.

The Committee further notes the Government's replies to 14 specific allegations concerning events that occurred between November 2021 and August 2023, in which public meetings, demonstrations or press conferences by trade unions were not authorized, because the routes chosen by organizers were not among those designated by the authorities, or the governorate had issued a specific ban decision regarding an action. The trade unions concerned were KESK and its affiliates Eğitim-Sen, TUM BEL SEN and SES; as well as Bırselik Metal Is which is an affiliate of the DİSK, and the Private Sector Teachers' Union. The Government indicates that in those cases the organizers were warned that their action is not authorized but proceeded regardless of such warnings. The Government informs that the authorities intervened in all these demonstrations. Regarding five cases the Government indicates that the action ended peacefully after negotiations between the authorities and the organizers, notably when the groups voluntarily ceased their actions or accepted to change its location, but in 9 other instances, certain demonstrators persisted to pursue their actions and "legal action" was taken against them. The Committee notes that legal action may refer to arrests of an indeterminate number of participants. In one instance an administrative fine was imposed. In at least one case participants were indicted and are currently under trial (case of two SES leaders in Van referred to above). There were allegations of police violence, including use of tear gas and pepper spray in four cases, but the Government rejects all such allegations or does not reply to them.

The Committee notes with concern that according to the Government indications, in at least 14 specific cases public meetings organized by trade unions were banned, and as the participants persisted in pursuing their action the authorities intervened to stop the action and sometimes the participating union members and leaders were arrested. The Committee notes that in relation to none of these cases does the Government indicate that the public meetings were not peaceful: these meetings were "illegal" for not taking place in the designated locations or for not having respected a specific ban on demonstrations. The Committee notes in this respect that the ECHR has considered in the Case of Disk and Kesk v. Türkiye (paragraph 29) that it is important for the public authorities to show a certain degree of tolerance towards peaceful gatherings if the freedom of assembly is not to be deprived of its substance. The Committee wishes to stress once again the interdependence between civil liberties including freedom of assembly and trade union rights, and to emphasize that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations. The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that the measures taken to protect public order do not deprive workers' organizations of their right to hold peaceful demonstrations and public meetings to defend their interests, and further urges the Government to refrain from arresting, detaining and prosecuting workers and trade unionists for participation in peaceful public meetings.

Right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial of members and leaders of the unions dissolved under the State of Emergency Decree-Laws. The Committee recalls that in follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution), it had urged the Government to ensure that the right to an effective remedy of union members and leaders who had suffered from reprisals and retaliatory acts for their membership in the unions dissolved under the state of emergency, as well as the right to a fair trial of imprisoned leaders and members of those unions are duly respected. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the individuals and legal entities subject to proceedings based on decree-laws have not suffered any harm. They could submit their applications to the Commission of Inquiry established for this purpose. For judges and public prosecutors, a domestic legal remedy within the Council of State was introduced in relation to decisions regarding "dismissal from profession" which allowed them to initiate new lawsuits related to prior cases brought before administrative courts, including those previously rejected. The persons concerned can present their defences before an impartial judiciary. Avenues for objection, appeal, and individual application to the Constitutional Court are also available. The Government also indicates that workers in the private sector who believe their employment has been unjustly terminated by their employer have the right to initiate legal proceedings at the labour courts without passing through the Commission of Inquiry. Regarding the imprisoned trade union members, the Government merely indicates in general terms that individuals found to be in contravention of the law are being handled in accordance with the rule of law and that the legislation contains significant safeguards to protect workers, workplace trade union representatives, and managers of workers' organizations against dismissal due to trade union related reasons.

The Committee notes with deep regret that once again, the Government does not indicate any specific measures taken to implement the recommendations of the tripartite committee. Concerning the Commission of Inquiry on State Emergency Measures, the Committee notes that the mandate of the Commission has ended in January 2023 after five years of operation and the persons who received negative decisions of the Commission had 60 days after notification of the decision to apply to designated administrative courts in Ankara. The Committee notes that the proceedings before the Commission of Inquiry did not present the guarantees of due process of law in terms of defence rights, and the obligation to pass through that stage delayed for a long time the access of dismissed public officials to courts. The Committee also recalls that the tripartite committee had noted in this respect that in cases brought by individuals dismissed due to their membership in a trade union associated with the FETÖ/PDY, the Inquiry Commission did not review the legality of the closure of the relevant trade union or any of the individual's own activities. Membership in a closed union was easily proven, for example, by information showing that trade union dues were deducted from an applicant's salary and considered to be sufficient ground to reject an application against the dismissal [see Report of the Committee set up to examine the representation alleging non-observance by Turkey of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), GB.341/INS/13/5, Appendix 1, paragraph 28]. In view of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) take specific measures to ensure that a full, independent and impartial review is made with regard to the cases of all the persons who suffered from reprisals, retaliatory acts and dismissals for their membership in the unions dissolved under the state of emergency, regardless of whether they have applied to the Commission of Inquiry and (ii) provide information on the number of imprisoned members and leaders of the same unions and the status and outcome of any judicial cases against them.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Senior public employees, magistrates and prison staff. For many years the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend section 15 of Act No. 4688 which excludes senior public employees, magistrates, and prison staff from the right to organize. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that section 15 was designed in line with legal regulations, judicial decisions, and ILO Conventions and that the core rationale behind these limitations rests on the significance of guaranteeing the provision of public services by these public officials in an impartial and unbiased manner. The Government also refers to the exclusion of certain public servants from the scope of the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151). The Committee recalls in this regard that: (i) under Article 1(1) of Convention No. 151, more favourable provisions in other international labour Conventions are safeguarded and Convention No. 87 guarantees the right to establish and join organizations for all workers in both the private and public sectors with the sole exception of the armed forces and the police; (ii) to bar senior public officials from the right to join trade unions which represent other workers in the public sector is not necessarily incompatible with freedom of association on the condition that they should be entitled to establish their own organizations to defend their interests; and (iii) while the exclusion of the armed forces and the police from the right to organize is not contrary to the Convention, the same cannot be said for prison staff.

Locum workers (teachers, nurses, midwives, etc.), public servants working without a contract of employment and pensioners. In its previous comment the Committee had noted that locum workers who temporarily fill in positions such as teachers, nurses and midwives in the public service, as well as public servants working without a contract of employment and pensioners, do not have the right to join public service unions under Act No. 4688 and had requested the Government to ensure their right to join or establish organizations. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous indications in this regard that: (i) only public servants as defined in section 3 of Act No. 4688 can join trade unions established within the scope of the Act and locum workers cannot be employed under any cadre or position as specified in section three; and (ii) retired public servants cannot establish or join public servants' unions, as sections 6 and 14 of the Act restrict these rights to active public servants. According to the Government, they have, however, formed several associations that can bring the issues concerning them to the attention of the Government. Noting with regret the lack of progress in this respect, the Committee once again recalls that: (i) with regard to the right to establish and join organizations, the Convention does not allow any distinction based on whether the employees are engaged on a permanent or temporary basis, or with regard to their contractual status or the lack thereof; and (ii) legislation should not prevent former workers and retirees from joining trade unions, if they so wish, particularly when they have participated in the activity represented by the union.

In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take necessary measures to review the legislation or to adopt specific legislation with a view to ensuring that senior public employees, magistrates and prison staff, locum workers, public servants working without a contract of employment and retirees can enjoy and exercise their right to establish and join organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on steps taken to this end.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Suspension and prohibition of strikes. In its previous comment the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that section 63(1) of Act No. 6356 as well as KHK No. 678 are applied in conformity with the principle that strikes can be suspended only in essential services in the strict sense of the term, for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in the event of an acute national crisis. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that the decision of the President to postpone a strike is taken within its context and the rationale is clearly indicated in it, hence this authority is exercised within clearly stated boundaries. Furthermore, pursuant to article 125 of the Constitution, this decision is subject to judicial review as an administrative decision. Noting that no strike has been suspended since 2019, the Committee trusts that the Government will apply section 63(1) and KHK 678 in a manner that does not infringe the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities free from Government interference and requests the Government to provide information on any future instances of suspension of strikes by executive authority.

Article 4. Dissolution of trade unions. In its previous comment the Committee had noted the conclusions of the tripartite committee referred to above about the situation of trade unions dissolved pursuant to Decree-Law No. 667. The tripartite committee noted that these unions were dissolved by the executive branch of the Government, and that while according to the Government, the representatives of these unions had failed to file applications with the Inquiry Commission mandated to examine their cases, the tripartite commission noted that they had a limited capacity to present their claims due to the imprisonment of their leaders and members and seizure of their funds pursuant to the state of emergency Decree-Laws. The tripartite committee had urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the dissolution of trade unions pursuant to Decree-Law No. 667 is reviewed through the normal judicial procedures, which should also enable those unions to be fully represented to defend their case. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Decree-Law No. 667 which dissolved Aksiyon-İş was approved by the Grand National Assembly, the legislative body, and it could not be annulled by an administrative court decision. According to the Government the proper place for the complainant to apply was the Commission of Inquiry on the State of Emergency Measures. Only after a negative decision of the Commission, which is an administrative decision, could the case be taken to an administrative court. The Government indicates that Aksiyon-İş did not choose to exhaust the domestic remedies. The Committee notes with regret that the Government appears to indicate that there will be no judicial remedy for the dissolved unions who have failed to apply to the Commission of Inquiry. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that 4 confederations, 19 federations and 19 trade unions were shut down after the courts found that they were affiliated with terrorist organizations. The Committee once again recalls that the dissolution and suspension of trade union organizations constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations and should therefore be accompanied by all the necessary guarantees. This can only be ensured through a normal judicial procedure, which should also have the effect of a stay of execution (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 162). Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all necessary measures to comply with the recommendation of the tripartite committee regarding all the trade unions dissolved pursuant to Decree-Law No. 667 whose cases are not yet reviewed by a judicial body and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on all the cases of dissolution of unions that were confirmed by courts and to provide copies of the judgments.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İŞ), Public Employees Unions Confederation of Turkey (KAMU-SEN), and the Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) communicated with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the Health Services Union (SAHİM-SEN) received on 4 February 2023 and the Government reply thereto, as well as the observations of the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Turkey (DISK), the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK), received on 30 August, and 1 September 2023 which concern issues examined in this comment.

Articles 1–6 of the Convention. The personal scope of the Convention. Prison staff. In its previous comments, the Committee had repeatedly requested the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee that the prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in collective bargaining. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates in this respect that the prison staff are covered by the collective agreements concluded in the public service but are prohibited from establishing or joining unions, because of the exceptional importance of impartial and unbiased delivery of the public services they must deliver. Noting the Government's indications, the Committee regrets the lack of progress in this respect and recalls that under the terms of the Convention, prison staff have the right of collective bargaining, which includes the right to be represented in negotiations by the organization of their choosing. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including through revising section 15 of Act No. 4688, to guarantee that the prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in collective bargaining.

Locum workers and public servants working without a written contract. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that locum workers, who include teachers, nurses and midwives, as well as public servants without a written contract, can exercise the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that these workers cannot join the unions established under Act No. 4688, because they are not employed in any cadre or position as required by section 3 of the law. The Committee regrets the lack of progress in this respect and recalls that all public sector workers, except members of the armed forces and the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State are entitled to the rights enshrined in the Convention, including the right to collective bargaining, regardless of their contractual situation. The prerequisite to this right is their ability to join or establish organizations that would have the right to negotiate with the public employer with a view to the regulation of terms and conditions of employment by means of collective agreements. The Committee notes that according to the Government there is no such possibility under the current Act No. 4688 and therefore these workers are deprived of their rights under the Convention. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take appropriate measures to ensure that these categories of workers can exercise their right to organize and collective bargaining, either by amending the law so as to allow them to join organizations formed under Act No. 4688, or by providing a framework within which they can create their own organizations.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Massive dismissals in the public sector under the state of emergency decrees. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on how the evidence was examined and the burden of proof applied in cases concerning trade unionists before the Commission of Inquiry on the State of Emergency Measures established to assess the applications concerning dismissal from public service, annulment of the ranks of retired personnel and closure of institutions and organizations carried out pursuant to the State of Emergency Decree-Laws following the 2016 coup attempt. It had also requested detailed and specific information on the number and outcome of applications concerning trade union members and officers before the Inquiry Commission, as well as the number and outcome of appeals against negative decisions on those applications. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Commission of Inquiry reached the end of its term of office on 22 January 2023. The Government indicates that the Commission rendered a total of 127,292 decisions (including 17,960 acceptance decisions and 109,332 rejection decisions) in respect of all the applications during the five-year period of its mandate. For each case, the Commission focused on determining whether the individuals had acted in line with the order and instructions of the FETÖ terrorist organization. The reasons for dismissal and the data gathered were assessed with due diligence having regard to the submissions in the petitions of application. The information and documents used during these examinations were obtained from the main database and following their analysis, the results were reflected in the decisions of the Commission. The data examined to decide on applications concerned: usership of intra-organizational communication software used by the terrorist organization, account activities in the Bank Asya with a view to providing support following the instruction of the leader of the organization, membership and leadership of the trade unions associated with the terrorist organization in line with the instruction of the organization, connection with the associations, foundations and media outlets shut down for their association and connection with the terrorist organization, and financial support provided to those institutions. Information concerning the administrative and judicial investigations and prosecutions were also considered. The Government indicates that dismissals from public service within the scope of the state of emergency infringements aim to terminate the existence of terrorist organizations and other structures engaged in activities against the national security within the public institutions. In this perspective, it is sufficient to establish a link between the persons concerned and terrorist organizations, structures/entities or groups determined by the National Security Council as engaging in activities against the national security of the State. The Government indicates that the individual and reasoned decisions of the Commission of Inquiry were delivered to the institutions where the persons last served, and these institutions notified the person concerned. Where the applications were accepted, the institution or the Council on Higher Education reappointed the person. The person whose applications were rejected could file an action for annulment against the institution or organization where they had last served within 60 days of the notification of the decision. The Council of Judges and Prosecutors designated nine specialized administrative courts in Ankara as competent to examine these suits. Regarding the number and outcome of applications concerning trade union members and officers before the Inquiry Commission, as well as the number and outcome of appeals, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no statistical information on these numbers, but that 4 confederations, 19 federations and 19 trade unions were shut down after the courts found that they were affiliated with terrorist organizations. The Committee also notes the observations of the KESK, stating that in total, 4,267 KESK members were dismissed from all public sectors under the State Emergency Decree-Laws. According to the KESK, the dismissals were arbitrary and non-transparent, and no effective remedy was provided. Public employees were unable to see the accusations and defend themselves. The KESK alleges that the Commission of Inquiry did not provide an effective remedy against anti-union dismissals and was instead used to punish trade unionists with no due process and proper court decision. According to the KESK, before the Commission, there was no transparent mechanism allowing the public officers to challenge any of the evidence against them. The KESK finally states that now that the work of the Commission of Inquiry is completed, the dismissed KESK members and executives must apply to administrative courts, a process that may take up to 10 years to come to conclusion. The Committee notes that, according to the information submitted by the Government, the Commission of Inquiry accepted 14 per cent of the applications submitted against the massive dismissals of public officials in application of the State of Emergency Decree-Laws. The Committee notes that the Commission worked with the outlook that it is sufficient to establish a link between the individual and the organizations, structures/entities or groups determined by the National Security Council in order to validate their dismissal and proceeded to verify the existence of such a link in each case based on the information in a "main database" concerning the communications, connections and interactions with specified financial and social entities. The Committee notes that although the Government indicates that regard was given to the submissions in the petitions of application, it appears from the Government report that during the examination by the Commission of Inquiry applicants had no possibility to be informed of, let alone challenge the information concerning them in the "main database" that was used as the basis for the decisions of the Commission of Inquiry. The Committee also notes that as the Government indicates, the purpose of the dismissals was to "terminate the existence of terrorist organizations and other structures engaged in activities against the national security within the public institutions" and the Commission of Inquiry focused on determining whether the dismissals were justified in view of this purpose. The Committee notes that it cannot be inferred from the information provided by the Government that in the work of the Commission of Inquiry, consideration was given and safeguards established to adequately examine allegations of anti-union discrimination. In this respect, it appears from the information received that the dismissed public officials had no opportunity to establish their claim that under the cover of national security reasons, their dismissal was indeed motivated by anti-union reasons. The Committee recalls that the KESK had stated in its 2022 observations that the applications of some of its dismissed members were still pending before the Commission, meaning that they had waited the decision of the Commission for five years, without being able to appeal to administrative courts in the meantime. The Committee also notes the observation of the KESK indicating that the proceedings before the courts may take many more years. The Committee recalls that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice. This general principle, which the Committee continually emphasizes, is based on Article 3 of the Convention, which provides that “[m]achinery appropriate to national conditions shall be established, where necessary, for the purpose of ensuring respect for the right to organize as defined in [Articles 1 and 2]” (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 190). Even where the law may provide adequate remedies against anti-union dismissals the slowness of procedures significantly reduces the effectiveness of protection against anti-union discrimination, as with time the circumstances change, and the available remedies may lose much of their relevance. In view of the foregoing, the Committee notes with deep concern, that the public officials who allege that their dismissals in application of the State of Emergency Decree-Laws were indeed motivated by anti-union reasons did not have access to an effective, rapid and fair procedure that would protect them against anti-union dismissals. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government, to take appropriate measures without further delay, to ensure the independent, expeditious and in-depth investigation of such allegations in the framework of effective and rapid procedures presenting all the guarantees of due process. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect.

Continued use of state of emergency powers to dismiss union members. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide its comments regarding the KESK observation, indicating that despite the expiration of the state of emergency, governors and ministries continued to use the provisional section 35 of the Emergency Decree Law No. 375, dismissing 21 teacher members of EĞİTİM SEN from Diyarbakir on 29 November 2021. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any comment in this respect. The Committee notes that the KESK again states in its 2023 observations that the Government passed Law No. 7145 on the Amendment of some Laws and Emergency Decrees, which enables governors to exercise the state of emergency powers, including dismissals. In view of the noted absence of effective and rapid remedies against state of emergency dismissals, the Committee notes with concern the information regarding the perpetuation of state of emergency powers and once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 1. Adequate protection against anti-union dismissals. Private sector. In its previous comment the Committee had noted that pursuant to the current legislation: (i) judicial authorities could in no circumstances impose an order of reinstatement on the private sector employer; (ii) section 25(4) of Act No. 6356 (Law on Trade Unions and Collective Labour Agreements) fixed a minimum amount for “union compensation” in case of acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal, which is the worker’s annual wage, but in cases of anti-union dismissal, neither a minimum amount nor a cap was fixed in the law; the issue seemed to be left to the discretion of the judicial authority; and (iii) the Government did not refer to any other existent penalty or sanction for anti-union dismissals, and section 78 of Act No. 6356 containing penal provisions was silent about anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the provisions of the Labour Law No. 4857 on unjustified dismissals are designed along the lines of Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), which similarly does not require that reinstatement be mandatory. The Government adds that in its verdict finding a dismissal invalid, the court shall also designate the amount of compensation to be paid in case the worker is not reinstated, considering the worker's past work history, seniority and the nature of the alleged reason for dismissal. Regarding sanctions applicable to anti-union discrimination, the Government indicates that both sanctions for damages and administrative fines are provided for violation of sections 17, 19 and 25 of Act No. 6356 and that actions for reinstatement and damages to be brought against the employer in cases of anti-union discrimination in employment, working conditions and termination of the employment relationship are regulated in section 25 of Act No. 6356. Furthermore, section 118 of the Penal Code No. 5237 provides that whoever uses force or threat against a person to force them to join or not to join a union, to participate in the activities of the union or to leave their position in the union or union management, will be sentenced to imprisonment from six months to two years. The Government concludes that the legislation provides sufficient protection and deterrent sanctions against discriminatory acts, trade unionists are advised to have recourse to available administrative and judicial remedies. The Committee recalls that its comment concerned not all discriminatory acts, but anti-union dismissals specifically. It notes that the administrative fine provided in section 78(1)(c) of Act No. 6356 punishes forced enrolment of members in a trade union in violation of section 17 and forcing a person to remain a member or resign from a trade union in violation of section 19. Therefore, this sanction does not concern anti-union dismissals. The same consideration applies to section 118 of the Penal Code. Concerning the amount of compensation paid to a worker dismissed for anti-union reasons, the Committee notes that while the general rule on unjustified dismissals (section 21 of the Labour Law) provides that in case of the employer's refusal to re-engage the worker, the employer shall pay the dismissed worker a compensation not less than 4 months' wages and not exceeding 8 months' wages, section 25(5) of Act No. 6356 which specifically regulates anti-union dismissals merely provides that in case of "termination of contract of employment for reasons of trade union activities", "union compensation" shall be ordered, which cannot be cumulated with the compensation provided in section 21 of the Labour Law. In view of the foregoing, the Committee notes that the law does not contain any indication regarding the amount of "union compensation". The Committee further notes that: (i) the legislation does not contain any administrative or penal sanction applicable in case of anti-union dismissal; (ii) the employer can legally refuse to apply a judicial order of reinstatement, rather opting for the 4–8 months' wage compensation or "union compensation"; and (iii) the determination of the amount of "union compensation" is left to the discretion of the judge. The Committee once again recalls in this respect, that it has always considered that reinstatement should at least be included among the range of measures that can be ordered by the judicial authorities in the event of anti-union discrimination; and that the effectiveness of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination depends also on the sanctions provided, which should be effective and sufficiently dissuasive; and that the purpose of compensation must be to compensate fully, both in financial and occupational terms, the prejudice suffered. The Committee further recalls the recommendations formulated in this regard by the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3410. The Committee therefore urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate measures to adopt effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against anti-union dismissals in the private sector. The Committee further requests the Government to collect and provide information regarding the judicial practice in the determination of amount of compensation awarded to workers dismissed for anti-union reasons. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments regarding the observation of the ITUC alleging the summary dismissal of 180 workers, all members of the Turkish Wood and Paper Industry Workers' Union (AGAC-IS), after a court ordered the company to start negotiations with the union in June 2022.

Anti-union discrimination in the public sector. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to indicate whether the law allows sanctioning those responsible for anti-union discrimination in the public sector and whether compensation can be awarded to victims. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 18 of Act No. 4688 prohibits anti-union discrimination including transfers and dismissals, furthermore, section 38/b of the same Act provides that violation of sections 8, 14, 16 and 17 of the Act shall be punished by a punitive fine. The Government also once again refers to section 118 of the Penal Code, indicating that it is applicable also to the public sector unions. Recalling that Article 1 of the Convention requires adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination “in respect of employment”, the Committee notes that the fine provided in section 38/b of Act No. 4688 does not appear applicable to acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of employment, as it does not cover violations of section 18 of the Act which prohibits such acts. Furthermore, as noted above, the same consideration applies to section 118 of the Penal Code. The Committee further notes that the Government does not indicate other legal provisions allowing the awarding of compensation to public sector workers subjected to anti-union discrimination. The Committee is therefore bound to note that the legislation does not provide for compensation for victims of anti-union discrimination (including dismissals), or for any sanctions against those responsible for anti-union discrimination. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take appropriate measures to ensure that the provision is made in the legislation for an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination in the public sector, by providing for full compensation of the prejudice suffered in both occupational and financial terms and by providing for effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect and to provide its comments regarding the observations of the KESK, alleging the anti-union transfer of 10 members of its affiliates.

Collection of data on anti-union discrimination in private and public sectors. The Committee recalls that following up on the June 2013 recommendations of the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference, which requested the Government to establish a system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in both private and public sectors, it has been requesting the Government to provide information on the measures taken to that end. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that considering the court processes and the duration of the cases, the difficulties in tracking and recording the necessary information are considerable. To obtain accurate and reliable data on trade union discrimination, the relevant institutions should make important arrangements in this regard in their records and databases, including through regulation, improvement and development of infrastructure and registration systems of institutional databases. For this reason, it is currently not possible to obtain reliable data on trade union discrimination. Noting with regret that the Government does not report progress concerning this matter, the Committee once again stresses the need to take concrete steps towards establishing the system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination and expects the Government to provide in its next report information on developments and progress in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. Collective agreement bonus. The Committee notes the observations of the SAHİM-SEN and the Government reply thereto concerning the practice of providing “collective agreement bonus”. The Committee notes that SAHİM-SEN has been established in 2016 and has 990 members. The union states that pursuant to additional section 4 of the Decree-Law No. 375 as amended by section 11 of Law No. 7429 on the Amendment of the Electricity Market Law (publication: December 2022), the collective agreement bonus is only paid to the members of the public servant unions that register at least two per cent of the total number of public servants eligible to union membership in the relevant sector. The union alleges that it is losing its members because they do not receive this bonus as members of a small union. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that members of the unions whose membership reaches the 2 per cent threshold and who have union membership dues deducted from their monthly salary or wages, receive the collective agreement bonus, while the members of the other unions receive “collective agreement support”, which is a lower amount. The Government adds that the amendment aimed at contributing to the formation of a stronger public servant unionism to ensure the right of association and collective agreement, and that it has had a positive impact on unionization rate which has increased from 72.63 per cent to 74.54 per cent after its adoption. The Committee notes the information provided. While noting that in certain countries, trade unions may receive, in application of the relevant legislation, public funding proportionate to their level of representativeness, the Committee requests the Government to clarify the rationale behind the payment of sums directly to union members.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Cross-sector bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that while cross-sector bargaining resulting in “public collective labour agreement framework protocols” was possible in the public sector, this was not the case in the private sector. The Committee had requested the Government to initiate a new consultation process with the social partners with a view to amending section 34 of Act No. 6356 to ensure that it did not restrict the possibility of the parties in the private sector to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements should they so desire. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that the existing system is a product of a long and well-established industrial relations system in Türkiye and that it does not prevent parties wishing to enter into sectoral agreements at the regional and national levels. Sections 2, 33 and 34 of Act No. 6356 introduce workplace-level collective labour agreements, enterprise (company) level collective labour agreements, group-level (multiemployer) collective labour agreements, and framework agreements, and the social partners had reached a consensus on the protection of this system during the drafting of the law. The Committee recalls that its request to amend the law is based on the principle that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels and that legislation that unilaterally imposes a level of bargaining or makes it compulsory for bargaining to take place at a specific level raises problems of compatibility with the Convention. In practice, this issue is essentially a matter for the parties, who are in the best position to decide the most appropriate bargaining level including, if they so wish, by adopting a mixed system of framework agreements supplemented by local or enterprise level agreements (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 222). Accordingly, the law should not restrict the possibility of the parties to negotiate at all levels and should allow them to decide autonomously if they wish to do so. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to consider the initiation of a new consultation process with the social partners, with a view to amending section 34 of Act No. 6356, to ensure that the parties in the private sector wishing to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements can do so. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Requirements for becoming a bargaining agent. Private sector. Determination of the most representative union and rights of minority unions. The Committee recalls that section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 sets out the following requirement for becoming a collective bargaining agent at the enterprise level: the union should represent at least 1 per cent of the workers engaged in a given branch of activities and more than 50 per cent of workers employed in the workplace and 40 per cent of workers of the enterprise to engage in collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that the lowering in 2015 of the branch representation threshold for becoming a bargaining agent at the enterprise level from 3 to 1 per cent, has had a positive impact on the unionization rate and had considered that the removal of the branch threshold would have a similarly positive impact on the rate of unionization as well as on the capacity of unions, especially independent unions who are not affiliated to large confederations, to use the collective bargaining machinery. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to initiate the consultation process with the social partners, with a view to removing the branch threshold. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that union freedoms are not limited to the right to collective bargaining. There are other tools through which unions can achieve the purpose of protecting and developing the economic and social rights and interests of employees. The Government refers to a 2015 decision of the Constitutional Court, which provides that the 1 per cent industry threshold prevents destructive competition between unions and enables strong unions to become parties to collective bargaining agreements and that this rate does not impose an excessive and extraordinary burden on employees, as having independent and strong unions as parties to collective agreements will enable employees to benefit from union rights more effectively. The Government adds that according to the Communiqué of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security on the statistics dated 31 July 2023, there are 228 trade unions in Türkiye, 106 of which are affiliated to 7 workers' trade union confederations and 122 are independent. Sixty unions pass the 1 per cent threshold required for collective bargaining, 54 of which are unions affiliated to three major confederations, namely TÜRK-İŞ, Confederation of Turkish Real Trade Unions (HAK-İŞ) and DİSK. The Government reiterates that it is ready to consider proposals to amend sections 34 and 41/1 of Act No. 6356 if the social partners reach consensus in this respect. The Committee also notes the observations of the DİSK regarding this issue, stating that: (i) the 1 per cent sector representation threshold is unnecessary and the 40 and 50 per cent workplace level thresholds are too high, especially considering the unionization level in the country; (ii) the country-wide sectoral threshold of 1 per cent should be lifted and workplace and enterprise level thresholds of 40 per cent and 50 per cent should be reduced; (iii) in cases where no union reaches this threshold, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all unions, at least on behalf of their own members, as recommended by the Committee; and (iv) in cases where collective bargaining rights will be given exclusively to one union, the majority union should be determined by a secret ballot. The Committee notes that, according to the information submitted by the Government, in 2023, 26.3 per cent of all Turkish unions passed the 1 per cent threshold, the rate being 50.94 per cent among the affiliates of the big confederations, but only 4.09 per cent among independent unions. Therefore, the Committee observes that close to 3 quarters of the unions in the country would not qualify for becoming a bargaining agent due to the application of the 1 per cent sectoral threshold. Considering that the law does not provide solutions for collective bargaining in situations where no union meets the legal requirements for becoming an exclusive bargaining agent, the Committee notes that those 3 quarters cannot engage in collective bargaining, even in the workplaces where no union qualifying as exclusive bargaining agent is present. Therefore, the Committee notes that the combination of rules governing the recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining is not conducive to the development of collective bargaining in the country. In this respect, the Committee notes that according to ILOSTAT, 7.4 per cent of employees in Türkiye were covered by a collective agreement in 2019. In view of the foregoing, the Committee once again urges the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to take the appropriate measures to: (i) amend section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 so as to ensure that more workers' organizations can engage in collective bargaining with the employers; and (ii) amend the legislation to ensure that in cases where no union meets the conditions for becoming an exclusive bargaining agent, minority trade unions are at least able to conclude a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information concerning the number of unions in the country, indicating those that pass the 1 per cent sectoral threshold, and to also provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force.

Judicial challenges to collective bargaining agent certification. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide its comments on the issues raised by the DİSK, referring to protracted court proceedings concerning employers' objections to challenge the union majority certificate, which might take up to 6–7 years, during which the bargaining process remains on hold and at the end of which the union might have already lost its majority. The Committee notes the Government's indication detailing various stages of the objection process and indicating that very short periods are envisaged for the conclusion of the objection process. These periods are 15 days for objection, 15 days for decision in the local court, one month for appeal review and one month for upper appeal review. The total period stipulated by the legislator for the finalization of the objection is three months. The reason for this limitation is that the exercise of a constitutional right should not be prevented or delayed. The Government adds however, that even though in the authorization determination letters, the Ministry gives the address of the workplace or regional directorate to which the business is affiliated and indicates the competent court, the parties file lawsuits in labour courts that have no competence to examine the matter, thus the finalization period of the jurisdictional objection is prolonged. The Government finally indicates that the Court of Cassation has initiated the imposition of administrative fines to prevent this. Taking due note of the information provided by the Government and stressing the potential adverse impact of lengthy proceedings on the development of collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to closely monitor the use of the objection proceedings, with a view to preventing and punishing abuses.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Material scope of collective bargaining. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that section 28 of Act No. 4688, as amended in 2012, restricted the scope of collective agreements to “social and financial rights” only, thereby excluding issues such as working time, promotion and career, as well as disciplinary sanctions and had requested the Government to remove these restrictions on the material scope of bargaining in the public sector. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the 2012 amendment significantly broadened the material scope of collective bargaining in the public sector and enabled public servants’ unions and confederations to participate and intervene in decisions and decision-making processes that were previously taken unilaterally by the public authorities. Many increases in the financial and social rights of public servants were adopted as a result of this process. Besides, progress was also made concerning other matters such as leave rights, introduction of disciplinary amnesty, abolition of the practice of terminating the employment of those who received reprimands during the probation period, presence of union representatives in disciplinary committees and important arrangements regarding civil servants with disabilities. The Committee also notes the observations of the KESK and the KAMU-SEN in this respect, stating that the collective bargaining framework for public employees restricts the negotiations to the economic rights and does not allow to discuss other aspects of the professional life. The Committee notes that the KESK states by way of example that there is no session to discuss women public employees’ needs and demands in the professional life and at workplaces. The Committee takes due note of the information provided and requests the Government to indicate the exact material scope of collective bargaining concerning public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, and to indicate the relevant legal provisions.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Participation of most representative branch unions. The Committee recalls that pursuant to section 29 of Act No. 4688, the Public Employers’ Delegation (PED) and the Public Servants’ Unions Delegation (PSUD) are parties to the collective agreements concluded in the public service. Even though the most representative unions in the branch are represented in the PSUD and take part in bargaining within branch-specific technical committees, their role within the PSUD is restricted in that they are not entitled to make proposals for collective agreements, in particular where their demands are qualified as general or related to more than one service branch. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that Act No. 4688 and its application in practice enable the most representative unions in each branch to make proposals for collective agreements including on issues that may concern more than one service branch, as regards public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous indication concerning the role of the representative branch unions within the technical committee established for each branch. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the current role of the most representative branch unions in the Public Servants’ Unions Delegation in respect of the conclusion of collective agreements that are applicable to more than one branch of activity.

Public employee arbitration board. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to consider reviewing, in consultation with the social partners, the method of appointment of the Board members so as to more clearly show its independence and impartiality and to win the confidence of the parties. The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates in this regard that the chairperson of the Board is appointed from among the Presidents, Vice-Presidents or Heads of Departments of the Court of Cassation, the Council of State (Supreme Court for Administrative Courts) and the Supreme Court of Public Accounts. These high courts and their judges are not connected hierarchically to the executive power and have judicial independence. Furthermore, other Board members do not represent the relevant confederation or the public employer but decide on behalf of the whole country. The Committee also notes the observation of the KESK, stating that the 7th cycle of collective bargaining that took place in August 2023 ended with a referral to the Board, where it was decided that the Government's offer was fair, and no change was made to it in favour of the public employees. Finally, the Committee notes the observations of the KAMU-SEN stating that to date, the Board has not signed off any decision other than the proposals of the public employer party, a fact which, in the union's view, confirms the concerns about the impartiality of the chairperson. Recalling that the President of the Republic designates not only the chair, but seven out of eleven members of the Public employee arbitration board, and that as the Government is also the employer in the public sector, it is therefore a party to the negotiations on which the Board will pronounce itself, the Committee notes with regret the lack of progress on this matter and once again urges the Government to consider reviewing, in consultation with the social partners, the method of appointment of the Board members and to provide information on the steps taken in this respect.

The Committee notes with deep concern the lack of action on the part of the Government to follow up on its various observations regarding protection against anti-union discrimination. In particular, the Committee regrets to note that: (i) seven years after the attempted coup d'état, the civil servants who claim that their dismissal, which was pronounced in application of the State of Emergency Decree-Laws, was motivated by anti-union reasons, have still not been able to have access to an effective, rapid and fair procedure that would adequately protect them against anti-union dismissal; (ii) the Government has not yet taken the measures requested to adopt effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against anti-union dismissals both in the private and public sectors; and (iii) it continues to receive regular allegations of anti-union discrimination. The Committee underlines that it is of utmost importance to adopt, in consultation with the social partners, immediate measures to ensure full application of Article 1 of the Convention. In light of the above, the Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 109 of its General Report for being invited to appear before the Conference.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 112th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions (KVPU), received on 31 August 2023, referring to the matters addressed below.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 3390 (see 403rd report, June 2023, paragraph 594). These matters are discussed below.

In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the allegation of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that draft Law No. 6420 on the Legal Regime of Property of All-Union Public Associations (Organizations) of the Former USSR and draft Law No. 6421 on Moratorium on Alienation of Property of All-Union Public Associations (Organizations) of the Former USSR were presented to Parliament unilaterally, and requested the Government to review these draft laws in full consultation with the most representative workers' organizations with a view to finding a mutually agreeable solution. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that draft Law No. 6420 was repeatedly sent for approval to joint representative bodies of trade unions and employers at the national level, and that the relevant interested parties were also invited to a coordination meeting. It further notes the Government's indication that both Laws were adopted through resolutions dated 4 November 2022. The Government explains that the new legislation will contribute to the establishment of a legal basis for the determination of ownership rights to the relevant property. Noting that the Government does not specify whether the approval of the most representative workers' organizations was obtained with respect to draft Law No. 6420, nor does it inform of any consultation regarding draft Law No. 6421, the Committee emphasizes the importance that should be attached to full and frank consultations taking place on any questions or proposed legislation affecting trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether a mutually agreeable solution was reached with the most representative workers' organizations prior to the adoption of the above-mentioned laws.

The Committee had also noted the allegation of the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU) and the KVPU that Law No. 2136-IX on Organization of Labour Relations Under Martial Law was adopted without prior consultation and restricted the exercise of the right to organize. The Committee notes the Government's indication that article 64 of the Constitution provides that in conditions of war or state of emergency, separate restrictions on rights and freedoms may be established. The Government also points out that the final provisions of Law No. 2136-IX specify that the Law loses its validity from the date of termination of martial law, except for its provisions relating to the compensation of employees and employers for monetary sums lost as a result of the armed aggression against Ukraine. The Committee further notes, that the KVPU, in its 2023 observations, alleges that a number of provisions of Law No. 2136-IX restrict the rights of workers and are not fully justified by the conditions of martial law. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention contains no provisions allowing the invocation of a state of emergency to justify exemption from the obligations arising under it or any suspension of their application. This is also and especially true for restrictions on civil liberties that are essential to the proper exercise of trade union rights, except in circumstances of extreme gravity and on condition that any measures affecting the application of the Convention are limited in scope and duration to what is strictly necessary to deal with the situation in question. The Committee expects that provisions of Law No. 2136-IX imposing restrictions on the exercise of the right to organize are limited to what is strictly necessary and will cease to apply once the martial law regime is lifted.

The Committee had previously noted with concern the allegations of the FPU and the KVPU that the draft Law on Labour; draft Law No. 2332 on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts Concerning the Procedure for Determining the Representativeness of Trade Union and Employer Organizations in Social Dialogue Bodies; draft Law No. 2682 on Strikes and Lockouts; draft Law No. 2681 on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of Ukraine (on Some Matters of the Trade Unions Activity) and, draft Law No. 7025 on Self-Regulatory Organizations, were introduced in Parliament without prior consultation and, if adopted, would violate the Convention by imposing state control over trade unions and by restricting their right to organize their administration and activities. As regards these draft laws, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that they were submitted by the people's deputies of Ukraine as legislative initiatives, but so far have not been considered by Parliament. The Committee further notes that the KVPU, in its 2023 observations, reiterates its concerns with respect to draft laws Nos 2332, 2682 and 2681.

The Committee notes that the CFA examined draft Law No. 2681, which intends to amend the Labour Code and the Law on Trade Unions and requested the Government to engage with the social partners with a view to bringing it into conformity with freedom of association (see Case No. 3390, Report No. 403, June 2023). As regards the application of the Convention, the Committee notes that the CFA requested the Government to:

- remove the proposed amendments to the Labour Code and the Law on Trade Unions providing for a mandatory establishment of monitoring commissions within trade union associations so as to ensure that workers' organizations are able to organize their administration without Government interference;
- review the amended definition of the term "primary trade union", which sets a minimum membership in such unions at ten, so as to ensure that the workers in small and microenterprises, who at present are able to exercise the right to form primary trade unions at their place of work, are able to continue to exercise their right to organize;
- review the amendment limiting the number of primary trade unions at a given enterprise/institution to two, so as to ensure that workers have the right to choose freely the union which, in their opinion, will best promote their occupational interests without interference by the authorities; and
- review the amendment imposing on the elected trade union bodies an obligation to report regularly to their trade union members on the fulfilment of their obligations and to submit an extraordinary report on its activities at the request of at least two thirds of the members of its primary trade union so as to ensure that the thresholds for any such requests by trade union members are left to the decision of the organization concerned and not set by legislation.

The Committee observes that subsequently to the draft Law No. 2681, the Ministry of Economy of Ukraine prepared a draft Law on Labour to give effect to the final and transitional provisions of the Law on the De-Sovietization of the Legislation of Ukraine on the need to replace the Labour Code of 1971. The Committee notes the Government engagement with the International Labour Office in this regard. The Committee observes that the draft Law on Labour, intended to replace the Labour Code as a whole, does not contain any of the amending provisions pertaining to the Labour Code set out by draft Law No. 2681. The Committee further notes the Government's indication to the CFA that draft Law No. 2681 is not in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes, however, that according to the information on the official portal of the Verkhovna Rada (the parliament), draft Law No. 2681, amending the Labour Code and the Law on Trade Unions, is still awaiting consideration and is included, by Resolution No. 3369-IX of 5 September 2023, in the agenda of the 10th session of the Rada.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the draft Law on Labour does not restrict freedom of association and the right to organize and is in conformity with the Convention. The Government also informs that the Ministry of Economy is currently conducting extensive consultations with the social partners, as well as hearings with experts, with a view to finalizing the draft Law. Welcoming the Government's engagement with the Office, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the Law once adopted.

Taking note of the above and of other draft legislation pending in Parliament, the Committee once again urges the Government to engage with the social partners with a view to ensuring that any draft legislation affecting their rights and interests is fully in line with the Convention before being considered for adoption by Parliament.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee had previously noted that article 127 of the Constitution prevented judges from being members of trade unions and had requested the Government to ensure the right of judges to establish organizations of their own choosing to further and defend their interests. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with article 157 of the Constitution, the Constitution cannot be modified under conditions of war or state of emergency. Taking due note of this information, the Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend article 127 of the Constitution with a view to bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention once the state of emergency is no longer in force.

Article 3. Right to organize activities and formulate their programmes in full freedom. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 19 of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes so as to ensure that if the national legislation required a vote before a strike can be held, account was taken only of the votes cast and the majority was fixed at a reasonable level. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a working group, which includes representatives of the social partners, is currently preparing a draft Law on Collective Labour Disputes and has taken the comments of the ILO into account in the drafting. The Committee requests the Government to specify the manner in which its comments have been reflected in the draft Law on Collective Labour Disputes, and whether section 19 of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes will be amended or repealed after the adoption of the new legislation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the Law on Collective Labour Disputes once adopted.

In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to clarify which categories of civil servants exercised authority in the name of the State and whether some or all civil servants were prohibited from exercising the right to strike, and to amend section 10(5) of the Law on Civil Service so as to ensure that the right to strike in the public service may be restricted or prohibited only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Law on Civil Service applies to public servants working in the Secretariat of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine, the ministries and other central executive bodies, local state administrations, the prosecutor's office, military administration bodies, and other state bodies, who are not allowed to strike according to section 10(5). The Government informs, however, that the issues regarding the right to strike for public servants should be settled in the draft Law on Collective Labour Disputes. Recalling once again that restrictions on the right to strike in the public sector should be limited to public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that this principle will be observed in the framework of the drafting of the Law on Collective Labour Disputes, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether section 10(5) of the Law on Civil Service will be amended or repealed following the adoption of the Law on Collective Labour Disputes.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the practical application of section 293 of the Criminal Code, which provided that organized group actions that seriously disturb public order, or significantly disrupt operations of public transport, any enterprise, institution or organization and active participation therein, were punishable by a fine of up to 50 monthly minimum wages or imprisonment for a term of up to six months, in respect of industrial actions. The Committee notes with regret that the Government limits itself to: (i) indicating that following an amendment to section 293, the amount of the fine is now between 1,000 and 3,000 non-taxable minimum incomes; and (ii) providing general information about pretrial investigations into offences under that provision. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the practical application of section 293 of the Criminal Code in respect of industrial actions.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Trades Union Congress (TUC), received on 8 September and 20 October 2023, which refer to the issues examined by the Committee below.

Follow up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (111th Session of the International Labour Conference, June 2023)

The Committee notes the discussion on the application of the Convention held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2023. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee noted the centrality of social dialogue to freedom of association and thus to the meaningful application of the Convention. Taking into account the discussion of the case, the Conference Committee requested the Government to provide information to and facilitate the dialogue between and with the social partners with a view to: (i) report on the results of the 2015 Undercover Policing Inquiry and the 2018 TUC allegations regarding surveillance of trade unions and trade unionists; (ii) ensure that existing and prospective legislation is in conformity with the Convention; (iii) limit and define the investigatory powers of the Certification Officer to ensure that these powers do not interfere with the autonomy and functioning of workers' and employers' organizations; (iv) facilitate electronic balloting (e-balloting); and (v) improve consultation of the social partners on legislation of relevance to them. The Conference Committee invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance of the ILO and requested the Government to provide information on progress made on all the above issues by 1 September 2023.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) has referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 3432 (404th Report of the CFA, October–November 2023, paragraphs 610–651). The Committee takes due note of the CFA recommendations and trusts that, as requested, the Government will provide information on the measures aimed at addressing the matters raised in this case and the outcome achieved with its next report.

Interim results of the 2015 Undercover Policing Inquiry. The Committee recalls that its previous comment concerned the allegations relating to police surveillance of trade unions and trade unionists submitted by the TUC in 2018 and the Government's reply relating to the Undercover Policing Inquiry (UCPI) established in 2015. The Committee notes the Government's latest indication that the interim report of the UCPI, dealing with historic matters, was published on 29 June. The Committee expects that a final report and any recommendations will be issued in the very near future and requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Electronic balloting. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government to provide information on the measures taken to facilitate electronic balloting (e-balloting) for industrial action ballots for several years now, including in respect of the pilots for e-balloting recommended in the review conducted in 2017. The Committee regrets to note that the Government has not provided any information on the progress made in this regard while the TUC indicates that it remains forbidden for unions to use electronic balloting in statutory ballots such as for union leadership roles or for industrial action and provides an example where this has caused a problem due to a narrowly missed 50 per cent turnout threshold required in a ballot for industrial action when the vote coincided with disruption to postal services. Along with the Conference Committee, the Committee firmly urges the Government to take measures to facilitate electronic balloting without further delay and to provide information on the steps taken in this regard with its next report.

Minimum services legislation. The Committee takes note of the detailed discussion in the Conference Committee in relation to the minimum services Bill. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Bill was passed by Parliament and has received Royal assent (Strikes (Minimum Service Levels) Act 2023, hereinafter the Strikes Act). The Government explains that, for the remainder of this year, it will be focused on finalizing regulations setting out the detail of minimum service levels in a number of priority areas while seeking to ensure that the implementation of the legislation is in conformity with all its international obligations. The Government adds that it will fully engage with UK social partners, unions and employer groups during any review of the Trade Union Act to ensure that it takes account of any evidence they wish to bring to its attention. The Committee notes however the very detailed views of the TUC in relation to this legislation, which in the TUC's view requires minimum service levels that are unacceptable in addition to the highly restrictive anti-strike laws already in place. In this respect, the TUC refers to the fact that the list of sectors in which minimum service can be imposed are largely the same as those created under the Trade Union Act 2016 which has already been commented upon by the Committee. In addition, the Strikes Act 2023 defines the education sector even more extensively. The TUC alleges that the Act: i) grants wide power to the Secretary of State to determine the scope of these services without any guidance from Parliament; ii) authorizes employers to issue work notices to a trade union in relation to a strike where minimum service regulations apply and; iii) imposes a duty on trade unions to take reasonable steps to ensure that union members who are identified in a work notice comply with its terms, all in a manner contrary to the Convention. The Committee notes that some of the services set out in the Act, may be considered essential services in the strict sense of the term where industrial action may be restricted or even prohibited. It recalls, however, that "education services" and "transport services", also included in the list, have been the subject of concerns it expressed in a previous Observation (2019) within the framework of the restrictions on strike ballots in the 2016 Trade Union Act.

The Committee observes that the Secretary of State is in the process of drafting the regulations for the Strikes Act adoption. According to the TUC, the consultations conducted by the Government on the introduction of minimum service levels in the ambulance service, fire service, passenger rail and border security were extremely light on detail, giving no suggestion of how the intended minimum service level would be structured or applied and the likely level of staffing required. As regards the work notices to be issued by the employer, the TUC alleges that while there is a duty to consult the trade union about the number of people to be identified and the work to be specified in the work notice, there is no obligation to seek an agreement with the trade union on minimum service levels, or to introduce a work notice only after an agreement has been secured. A draft non-statutory guide for employers, trade unions and workers issued by the government on 24 August 2023 stated clearly that the employer does not need to agree with the union on the number of workers and the work within the work notice as part of this consultation. This is particularly concerning as the Act expressly withdraws legal protection for unfair dismissal in cases of non-compliance with the work order and provides that the trade union must take "reasonable steps to ensure that all members of the union who are identified in the work notice comply with the notice". Finally, the TUC alleges that the government published its consultation paper on a draft statutory code on "reasonable steps" required from the union when a work notice has been issued, over-reaching the legislation. The TUC contends that the consultation paper seeks to place a series of additional requirements on trade unions, which could have wholly disproportionate consequences such as an injunction for the entire strike, significant damages, loss of protection against unfair dismissal for all participating workers and possible legal liability for the trade union.

The Committee notes these developments with serious concern. The Committee is especially concerned by the potentially wide-spread application of a series of new restrictions on workers and their organizations when considering industrial action in the transport and education sectors, accompanied by far-reaching consequences on them. While recalling that in its previous comments it had indicated that recourse might be had to negotiated minimum services for transport and education, as appropriate, the Committee must nevertheless recall that a minimum service should meet at least two requirements: (i) it must genuinely and exclusively be a minimum service, that is one which is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (ii) since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. Moreover, any disagreement on minimum services should be resolved, not by the government authorities, but by a joint or independent body which has the confidence of the parties. (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 137 and 138). The Committee observes that in its current state the Strikes Act does not assure any of these elements. The Committee expects that, in preparing its regulations and other guidance, including codes of practice, the Government will ensure that any minimum services imposed on industrial action in the transport and education sectors are indeed minimum, ensure the participation of the social partners in their determination, and where no agreement is reached, ensure that they are determined by an independent body which has the confidence of the parties. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on all developments to ensure that the legislation is in full conformity with the Convention and on the steps taken to ensure that the social partners are fully consulted throughout the process.

Requirement for strike ballot. In its previous comments the Committee had requested the Government to review section 3 of the Trade Union Act, 2016 with the social partners to ensure that the requirement of support by 40 per cent of all workers for strike ballot did not apply to the education and transport sectors. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that it intends to fully engage with UK social partners, unions and employer groups during any review of the Trade Union Act. As regards the centrality of social dialogue referred to by the Committee on the Application of Standards, the Government states that, while there are already regular meetings, at both Ministerial and official level, with trade unions and bodies representing employers, it accepts that there may be some benefit in putting these on a more structured footing and also ensuring that there are more opportunities for genuinely tripartite discussion. The Government states that it will discuss possible approaches with its social partners over the coming months with a view to updating the Conference Committee next year on how it is responding to the feedback in this area. The Committee trusts that these discussions will give rise to improved consultations with the social partners, including with respect to section 3 of the Trade Union Act. Noting that the education and transport sectors are now restricted both by this section's requirements and those to be regulated in relation to minimum services, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that the support of 40 per cent of all workers is no longer required for a strike ballot in these services.

Blacklisting. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the practice of notifying the police of the identity of activists or blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing. While noting that the Government reiterates its previous information in this regard, the Committee expresses its concern at the additional allegations of the potential impact of the Strike Act further weakening protection against blacklisting. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the practice of notifying the police of the identity of activists; the details of any complaints regarding the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action or lawful picketing, including any complaints made in this regard, as well as any plans for improving protection.

The role of the Certification officer. The Committee had further requested the Government to review the impact of sections 16-20 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners to ensure that the expansion of the role of the Certification officer does not interfere with the rights of workers' and employers' organizations under Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is committed to review the Trade Union Act 2016 and associated secondary legislation and will consider this matter more fully as part of this review. The Committee recalls the TUC's concerns that the changes to the Certification Officer's powers implemented in 2022 grant the Certification Officer undue discretion while the threshold for the exercise of the powers is extremely low. In addition, the scope of these powers is uncertain and unduly high financial penalties are allowed to be imposed for statutory breaches. While the TUC informs that the Certification Officer said she had not found any reason to use these new powers over the last year, the TUC maintains that they remain a threat to trade union rights. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide a detailed reply to the TUC observations and provide information on any use by the Certification Officer of its new investigatory powers and financial penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that since 2008 it has been requesting the Government to review the provisions of the Employment Relations Law (ERL) and its codes of practice regulating the exercise of the right to strike (right to secondary action and social and economic protests – see section 20(3) of the ERL and Code 2; picketing – Code 2; compulsory arbitration – sections 22 and 24 of the ERL and Code 3; essential services – Code 2; and conditions for protected industrial action and the application by the courts of sections 3 and 20(2) of the ERL and Code 3). The Committee regrets to note that the Government merely reiterates the information it had previously provided, and in particular, that a review of the ERL will be undertaken when resources allow, subject to the position of the Minister for Social Security, appointed in 2022, and that any such review will take into account the Committee's previous comments. The Government once again expresses the hope that it will be able to report on progress in its next report. The Committee notes with regret the continuing absence of measures to address the issues raised for over a decade by the Committee. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its request and expects that the ERL and its codes of practice will be amended in consultation with the social partners without further delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to enter into dialogue with the social partners to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of a judicial decision may be granted full compensation for loss of pay. The Committee had previously noted that sections 77B and 77C of the Employment (Amendment No. 4) (Jersey) Law, 2009 does not provide the ability to compensate a worker for financial losses such as arrears of pay for the period between the dismissal and the order for reinstatement. The Government had previously reported that public consultation with the Independent Employment Forum in 2008 had led the Forum to conclude that the Employment Law should not be amended. The Government reported that changes to available compensation would have ramifications for the Tribunal system, which thus far had not had to deal with complaints of unfair dismissal since the Employment Law came into force in 2005. The Committee reiterates that in cases of reinstatement following an anti-union dismissal, remedies should also include compensation for loss of wages for the period that elapses between the dismissal and the reinstatement, as well as compensation for the prejudice suffered, with a view to ensuring that all of these measures taken together constitute a sufficiently dissuasive sanction, as "adequate protection" under Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination must be to compensate fully, both in financial and in occupational terms, the prejudice suffered (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 193). The Committee emphasizes the importance of amending sections 77B and 77C of the Employment Law, and requests once again the Government to enter into dialogue with the social partners in order to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of a judicial decision may be granted full compensation for loss of pay and to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers, as well as provisions ensuring rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Government previously noted its intention to review Code 1 – The Recognition of Trade Unions of the Codes of Practice Employment Relations (Jersey) Law 2007 to include a provision to prohibit employer inducement. The Committee notes that although the Government has made great strides to protect against discrimination through the Discrimination (Jersey) Law 2013, it also notes with concern that there is nothing that deals specifically with acts of interference by employers. The Committee recalls the importance of adopting sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference, but also enforcing said actions through efficient procedures in practice. The Committee is therefore bound to request the Government once again to take the necessary measures to introduce provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers or their organizations in the establishment, functioning or administration of workers' organizations and vice versa, as well as provisions ensuring rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts, and this after consulting the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Legislative matters. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to ensure that, if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions should be given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members, and to provide information on any development in this regard. As there is no information from the Government, the Committee is bound to repeat its previous request. Recalling that the determination of the threshold of representativeness to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements applicable to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice, the Committee requests the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions should be given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide this information in the next report.

The Committee notes with regret that no specific action has been taken to address the different issues raised in its previous comments and hopes that the Government will soon be able to report on progress made in this respect. The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not address any of the issues raised by the Committee in its previous comments.

The Committee had requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) alleging imprisonment of two activists attempting to form an independent trade union, and the death of Mr Nuriddin Jumaniyazov, one of the imprisoned activists, while in detention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments on these serious allegations.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Distinction based on nationality. The Committee had previously noted that sections 4 and 7 of the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) granted the right to organize only to citizens. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that all workers in its territory enjoyed this right due to the broad definition of "citizens" contained in section 16 of the Civil Code, and requested it to consider amending the LTU so as to avoid any possible ambiguity or conflict in its interpretation. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in this regard. Highlighting the importance of ensuring that all workers residing in the territory of a State benefit from the trade union rights provided by the Convention without any distinction based on nationality, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Police and armed forces. The Committee had noted that section 2 of the LTU provided that specific dispositions could be established for the application of this law in the armed forces, internal affairs offices, the National Security Service, the National Guard and other military forces. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that there were no obstacles to freedom of association for civilians working in internal affairs agencies and the National Guard, where trade union organizations had been established, and requested the Government to indicate if that was also the case in the armed forces and the National Security Services. Noting that no information has been provided in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether civilians working in the armed forces and the National Security Services benefit from the trade union rights afforded by the Convention, and whether trade union organizations have been established in these services.

Right of workers and employers to establish organizations of their own choosing. Minimum membership requirement. The Committee notes that section 13(e) of the Regulations on the Procedure for State Registration of Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations provides that at least 3,000 participants are required to register a non-governmental non-commercial organization in the form of a trade union. It also notes that, according to section 6 of the Law on Public Associations (LPA), republican trade unions (whose activities and chartered goals are distributed over the entire territory of the republic) must have no less than 3,000 members. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, while the establishment of a minimum membership requirement in itself is not incompatible with the Convention, the number should be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered. It also considers that this criterion should be assessed in relation to the level at which the organization is to be established (for example, at the industry or enterprise level) and the size of the enterprise (see the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 89). The Committee requests the Government, in full consultation with the social partners, to review the minimum membership requirement established in the above-mentioned provisions with a view to ensuring that it does not hinder the right of workers to form and join the organizations of their own choosing. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress achieved in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. Financial management. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the LPA provided that financial agencies carried out monitoring of the sources of finances and income of public associations, the quantity of the contributions they received and their payment of taxes (section 20). The Committee had noted the Government's indication that this provision did not apply to trade unions on the basis of section 9 of the LTU and section 18 of the Act on Regulatory Legal Acts, and had requested the Government to indicate how section 20 of the LPA applied to employers' organizations. The Committee also notes that, according to section 8 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations, these organizations are obliged to: (i) ensure accessibility to information about the use of their property and funds; (ii) coordinate with the registration authority the holding of events, as well as the receipt of funds and property from foreign states, international and foreign organizations, or citizens of foreign states; (iii) inform the registration authority about the visits of their representatives to foreign countries; and (iv) submit reports on their activities to the registration authority, state tax service authorities and state statistics authorities. Recalling once again that the supervision of the financial management of organizations should not go beyond the obligation to submit annual financial reports, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how the monitoring set out in section 20 of the LPA applies to employers' organizations, and whether the obligations contained in section 8 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations are applicable to trade unions and employers' organizations.

Internal administration. The Committee had also requested the Government to amend section 20 of the LPA, which allowed the Ministry of Justice and its agencies to demand from the governing body of a public association an accounting of the decisions taken, to send its representatives to participate in the activities carried out by the public association, and to receive explanations from members of the public association and other citizens concerning compliance with the public association's charter. In the absence of information provided by the Government, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government amend the legislation with a view to ensuring that public authorities are not allowed to interfere in the internal administration of trade unions and employers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Right to strike. The Committee had previously noted that the procedure for resolving collective labour disputes under section 281 of the Labour Code did not explicitly provide for the right to strike, and that the IUF alleged that most strikes were prohibited and punishable under section 218 of the Criminal Code and section 201 of the Administrative Code. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend its legislation to ensure full recognition of the right to strike. The Committee notes with regret that sections 570 to 578 of the new Labour Code, which contain the procedure for the resolution of collective labour disputes, do not refer to the right to strike. Recalling the importance of the right to strike as one of the essential means available to workers and their organizations for the promotion and protection of their economic and social interests, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to modify its legislation with a view to ensuring full recognition of the right to strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4. Use made of the assets of dissolved organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that according to section 36 of the Law on Non-Governmental Non-Commercial Organizations, the property of a public association which had been liquidated by a court decision could not be distributed among its members. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that section 20 of the LTU provided that the charters of trade unions needed to contain a procedure for the management of their assets, and requested the Government to indicate how the assets of employers' organizations were distributed in the event of dissolution. Noting that the Government does not provide the information requested, the Committee requests it once again to indicate the manner in which the assets of employers' organizations are distributed in case of dissolution.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegation of the IUF that it was impossible to establish independent trade unions in the country outside the traditional structure of the Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan (FPU), which was controlled by the State. Noting that the Government does not reply to this allegation, the Committee requests it once again to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee also renews its request that the Government provide information on the number of employers' organizations registered in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers they employ.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Yemen

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide comments on the 2012 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging that striking teachers were dismissed, striking sanitation workers were injured, and that the offices of the Yemeni Journalists' Syndicate were attacked. Noting with regret that the Government provides no reply to these observations, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

The Law on Trade Unions (2002)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether employees of high-level public authorities and Cabinets of Ministers, excluded by virtue of its section 4 from the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. While taking due note of the Government's indication that since 2011 union committees have been established in all ministerial offices, the Committee requests the Government to clarify if senior public officials also have the right to establish and join their own organizations.

The Committee had also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 2, 20 and 21 of the LTU so as to repeal specific reference to the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen (GFTUY) and thereby to allow workers and their organizations to establish and join the federation of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that it imposes no restrictions on trade union activity and that there are many unions representing workers' interests that do not operate within the framework of the GFTUY (for example, Trade Union of Doctors, Trade Union of Pharmacists, Trade Union of Engineers, and Lawyers' Trade Union). Noting that the specific reference to the GFTUY remains in the legislation, and that it could result in making it impossible to establish a second federation to represent workers' interests, the Committee once again requests that the Government take necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to delete this specific reference.

Article 3. The Committee had previously requested the Government to clarify whether section 40(b) of the LTU required an authorization from the higher level trade union for a strike to be organized, and if this was the case, to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 40(b) of the LTU there is a requirement to coordinate with the higher union body to organize a partial or general strike and that the Committee's previous comment on this legislative issue is being considered for the amendment of the Act. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to ensure the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

The draft Labour Code. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had expressed the hope that the draft Labour Code would be adopted in the near future and that the Government would take into account the Committee's comments to further amend or revise some of the provisions in the draft. The Committee notes the Government's indication that due to the armed conflict affecting the country since 2011 it has been unable to complete the amendments of the labour legislation. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code is not applicable to domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, but that their rights are guaranteed by law. Recalling that the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention are members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee requests the Government to indicate all legislative provisions that afford domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, the right to establish and join workers' organizations of their own choosing and without previous authorization.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code contains no provisions denying the right of workers' organizations to affiliate with international labour organizations. The Committee recalls that it had also requested the Government to:

- revise section 173(2) of the draft Labour Code so as to ensure that minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years may join trade unions without parental authorization;
- provide a list of essential services referred to in section 219(3) of the draft Code, which empowers the Minister to submit disputes to compulsory arbitration, which will be issued by the Council of Ministers once the Labour Code is promulgated;
- amend section 211 of the draft Labour Code which provides that strike notice must include an indication of the duration of a strike to ensure that a trade union can call a strike for an indeterminate period of time.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the current legislative reform will bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union interference. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to ensure that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions that guarantee the protection of workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in trade union activities are expressly provided for in the national legislation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again that protection against interference for trade union activities is provided under the Labour Code and that it will seek to provide further legal protection when amending the Act on Trade Unions (ATU) in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect, and to provide copies of the amended legislative texts aimed at ensuring full respect for the rights enshrined in the Convention, as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 4. Refusal to register a collective agreement on the basis of consideration of "economic interests of the country". The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that refusal to register a collective agreement is only possible due to a procedural flaw or because it does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation, and not on the basis of consideration of "the economic interests of the country". While the Committee had previously noted that the Government had adopted the Committee's proposal with regard to the amendment of the abovementioned section of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's new indication that it will study the Committee's views in this respect. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the legal provisions which guarantee the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observation of the Federation of Free Trade Unions in Zambia (FFTUZ), submitted with the Government's report, alleging that the minimum requirement of having at least 25 employees in an institution before the workers can join a union of their choice has greatly disenfranchised employees from institutions with less than 25 employees, as these workers cannot belong to a union due to the aforementioned minimum legal requirement. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Revision of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act. In its previous comment, the Committee had urged the Government to take all necessary measures to amend sections 2(e), 5 (b), 7(3), 9(3), 18(1)(b), 21(5) and (6), 43(1)(a), 78(4), and 107 of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (ILRA) which pertain to the right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations, the right of organizations of workers and employers to elect their representatives, and the right of workers' organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee notes the Government's stated commitment to adhere to ratified Conventions and its indication that the ILRA will be undergoing review and that the concerns raised by the Committee will be tabled for debate during consultative meetings. Regarding section 5(b) of the ILRA, the Committee notes, however, the Government's indication that the legislation does not prohibit employees from joining unions provided they are within the same sectors, due to differing skills bases and remuneration packages in various sectors. In this respect, the Committee once again recalls that such conditions may be applied to first-level organizations, on condition that these organizations are free to establish inter-professional organizations and to join federations and confederations in the form and manner deemed most appropriate by the workers concerned. The Committee firmly expects that the ILRA will be amended in the very near future, in consultation with the social partners, so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard, and to provide a copy of the amended legislation.

Forced labour

General observation on the application of the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105)

The Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), constitutes one of the ILO fundamental conventions. Its purpose is to supplement the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), by requiring States to suppress the imposition of any form of forced or compulsory labour in five situations specified in its Article 1:

- as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system;
- as a method of mobilizing, and using labour for purposes of economic development;
- as a means of labour discipline;
- as a punishment for having participated in strikes;
- as a means of racial, social, national or religious discrimination.

Background context

The Convention was inspired by the work of the ILO–UN Ad-Hoc Committee on Forced Labour, which was established in 1951 to conduct an impartial inquiry into the existence of systems of forced labour. The report issued by the Ad-Hoc Committee in 1953 revealed the existence of two principal systems of forced labour imposed by the State that seriously threaten human rights in contravention with the United Nations Charter. The first was the use of forced labour as a means of political coercion or punishment for holding or expressing political views. The second was the use of forced labour for important economic purposes.<sup>1</sup> The negotiation and further adoption of the Convention reflected the determination of the ILO to continue and intensify its efforts to abolish such practices that were so far not explicitly covered by Convention No. 29.

More than 65 years have passed since the adoption of Convention No. 105. Nevertheless, there are still a considerable number of cases that have been examined by the Committee where compulsory labour continues to be imposed by the State in the different situations prohibited by the Convention. This is particularly the case when compulsory labour is used for economic development purposes or as a punishment for the exercise of civil and political liberties, particularly freedom of expression and assembly. Given the considerable number of situations raised by the Committee with regard to the latter, the Committee considers that it is timely and appropriate to recall the nature and scope of the prohibitions established under Article 1(a) and (d) of the Convention, as well as the Committee's requests addressed to governments in this regard. These prohibitions refer to the use of compulsory labour as "a means of political coercion or education, or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social, or economic system" (paragraph (a)); and "as a punishment for having participated in strikes" (paragraph (d)).<sup>2</sup> It must be noted that in these two cases, forced labour usually takes the form of compulsory labour imposed in the context of a penal sanction pronounced for acts that relate to the exercise of civil liberties, including the right to freedom of expression and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and association, both of which are recognized in the ILO Declaration of Philadelphia (1944) and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (1948).

<sup>2</sup> For this purpose, the Committee is taking into consideration the preparatory work of the Convention as well as the five subsequent General Surveys on forced labour instruments that have been adopted since 1962: ILO, Report III (Part IV/3), Reports of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations, general conclusions on the reports relating to International Labour Conventions and Recommendations dealing with forced labour and compulsion to labour, ILC, 46th Session, 1962; Report III (Part 3), General Survey on the Reports concerning the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), ILC, 52nd Session, 1968; Report III (Part 4B), General Survey of the Reports relating to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), ILC, 65th Session, 1979; Report

The Committee wishes to recall from the outset that the Convention does not constitute a revision of Convention No. 29 and was adopted to reinforce and complement the protection offered by Convention No. 29. At the same time, these instruments are independent of each other, so that countries which have ratified both must ensure their cumulative application. This is particularly true for the exceptions laid down in Article 2(2) of Convention No. 29, which do not automatically apply in the five specific situations covered by Convention No. 105.<sup>3</sup> Accordingly, while under Convention No. 29 work exacted as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law is an exception and does not constitute forced labour,<sup>4</sup> Convention No. 105 prohibits the imposition of any form of compulsory labour in the situations mentioned under its Article 1, even if the work is imposed as a result of a conviction by a court of law.<sup>5</sup>

The Committee also considers necessary to clarify that, in the context of Convention No. 105, compulsory labour can take place either in the form of a sanction of imprisonment involving an obligation to work (compulsory prison labour) or as a specific sanction of community, public or correctional work to which the person has not given his or her consent. In this respect, one of the main questions analysed by the Committee when assessing compliance with the Convention by the country under examination is whether any of these forms of compulsory labour is contained in the national legislation.<sup>6</sup>

Exaction of forced or compulsory labour as punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social, or economic system (Article 1(a))

Scope of Article 1(a)

The Committee has pointed out that the underlying rationale of Article 1(a) is to protect persons who, in the exercise of freedom of expression or other related civil liberties, express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, by establishing that they cannot be punished by sanctions involving an obligation to work. This is the paramount principle that has guided the work of the Committee while bearing in mind that the Convention was not conceived as an instrument to regulate freedom of expression, as such. The Committee also recalls that the Ad-Hoc Committee on Forced Labour emphasized in relation to the use of compulsory labour as a means of political coercion that “apart from the physical suffering and hardship involved, what makes the system most dangerous to human freedoms and dignity is that it trespasses on the inner convictions

III (Part 1B), General Survey concerning the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), and the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), ILC, 96th Session, 2007; Report III (Part 1B), General Survey on the fundamental Conventions concerning rights at work in light of the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008, ILC, 101st Session, 2012.

<sup>3</sup> As indicated above, the survey of the UN–ILO Ad Hoc Committee found that one of the most common forms of forced labour was forced labour as a means of political coercion and many of the cases from which the Ad Hoc Committee drew this conclusion related to labour resulting from penal legislations involving convictions by a court of law. At its 127th Session (Rome, November 1954), the Governing Body accordingly decided to include an item on forced labour in the agenda of the Conference and expressed the view that any subsequent instrument adopted by the Conference should deal with the practices which are specifically excluded from the scope of the 1930 Convention.

<sup>4</sup> According to Article 2(2)(c) of Convention No. 29, labour imposed on convicted prisoners does not constitute forced labour provided that the said work or service is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority and that the said person is not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations.

and ideas of persons to the extent of forcing them to change their opinions, convictions and even mental attitudes to the satisfaction of the State".<sup>7</sup>

In the context of the supervision of the application of Article 1(a), the Committee has examined a wide range of legislation, including provisions of national constitutions, criminal codes, laws relating to defamation and seditious acts, electoral laws, laws regulating the use of communication and social media, press laws, among others. It notes that, nowadays, the expression of political or ideological views or views opposed to the established system can take place orally or through the press or other type of publications or communication media, including social media platforms. This is also closely linked to the exercise of collective rights such as the right to organize or take part in peaceful assembly, including online assemblies, the right to freedom of association, through which persons seek to secure dissemination and acceptance of their views.<sup>8</sup> Thus, the Committee has carefully examined the scope of legal restrictions to these rights when they could lead to the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour. In this regard, it has pointed to situations in which restrictions are justified and do not fall within the purview of Article 1(a), for example, restrictions to protect public order, the security of the State, or to guarantee respect for the rights and freedoms of others. Moreover, situations where the expression of views opposed to the established system take place through recourse to violence or incitement to violence are outside the scope of the protection granted by the Convention.<sup>9</sup> It is also important to recall that, as recognized by universal and regional human rights bodies, any restriction to the rights of freedom of expression and assembly should meet the requirements of legality, necessity, and proportionality.<sup>10</sup>

Examples of legislative provisions that may have a bearing on the application of Article 1(a)

The Committee has identified different types of legislative provisions that have a bearing on the application of Article 1(a) of the Convention.

First, provisions establishing offences punishable with penalties involving compulsory labour which by their own wording are clearly contrary to the Convention, for example provisions banning and punishing all type of publications or participation in meetings or political parties advocating views contrary to the political system in place.

Secondly, provisions aimed at establishing legitimate restrictions to the right to freedom of expression or assembly, but which are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to an interpretation and application that could be incompatible with the Convention. This is the case of provisions aimed at protecting public order by prohibiting the publication and dissemination of "fake news" or information that is "likely" to prejudice national interests or disturb the constitutional order, as well as provisions prohibiting acts of subversion or engagement in agitation or propaganda with a view to "weakening" the authority of the State. In these cases, the Committee requests the Governments concerned to review the wording of the provisions to limit their scope to effective and concrete threats to public order, or the use or threatened use of violence.

The Committee has also noted that in a number of countries, defamation (including in the form of libel or slander) still constitutes a penal offence punishable with sanctions involving the obligation to perform work. The Committee observes that United Nations Human Rights Committee as well as other regional institutions have also warned against the excessive use of defamation provisions to restrict the exercise of freedom of expression, particularly by journalists and human rights defenders. In doing so they have called upon States to ensure that defamation laws are crafted with care so that they do not unnecessarily interfere with freedom of expression and that penalties against defamation are not excessive and disproportionate.<sup>11</sup> Over the years, the Committee has examined provisions penalizing defamation or press offences when the corresponding sanction involves an obligation to undertake work. In these situations, the Committee has emphasized the importance of amending the defamation provisions, so that they do not constitute penal offences punishable with sanctions involving compulsory labour.

Furthermore, the Committee has observed that the incompatibility of the imposition of compulsory labour with Article 1(a) of the Convention may also result indirectly when publications are subject to prior authorization granted by governmental authorities at their discretion, violations being subject to sanctions involving compulsory labour.<sup>12</sup> Likewise, restrictions in respect of taking part in political activities or constituting associations of a political character other than a specified movement or party, in so far as they are enforced by penalties involving an obligation to perform work,<sup>13</sup> also fall within the scope of Article 1(a) of the Convention.

Practical application of such provisions

Information on the practical application of legal provisions that have a bearing on the implementation of Article 1(a) of the Convention is crucial as it is not always possible for the Committee to appreciate their scope simply by reading them. It is only by carefully studying the way in which legislative texts are interpreted and implemented in practice that the Committee determines that the standards laid down by the Convention are being observed.<sup>14</sup> In other words, the Committee must be certain that the legal provisions in question are not used to punish persons, who express political views or in a peaceful manner oppose the established order, with penalties involving compulsory labour. For this reason, the Committee has systematically requested governments for information on judicial decisions that illustrate how such provisions are applied by the judiciary, and in which context. In addition, when conducting its assessment, the Committee takes due account of the conclusions and recommendations of United Nations human rights treaty bodies, particularly under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, judgments of regional human rights courts and information from national human rights institutions. Moreover, social partners' observations help provide essential information regarding the national landscape in which the law is applied.

Exaction of forced or compulsory labour as punishment for participation in strikes (Article 1(d))

The prohibition of the exaction of forced or compulsory labour as punishment for participation in strikes was extensively discussed during the negotiations of the Convention at the International Labour Conference. The workers' members who proposed the inclusion of this prohibition under Article 1 emphasized that "the question at issue was not the right to strike and agreed that strikes could be declared illegal in certain circumstances”;<sup>15</sup> however, they considered that the penalty for having participated in strikes should not be forced labour.

In examining the conformity of the national legislation with Article 1(d) of the Convention, the Committee undertakes a review of labour as well as criminal legislation to determine whether participation in strikes regardless of their legality is punishable by sanctions involving compulsory labour. In this regard, the Committee has requested governments to review legal provisions which expressly prohibit organization and participation in strikes when that prohibition is enforced with sanctions involving compulsory labour. It has also drawn attention to provisions which provide for disciplinary sanctions, involving compulsory labour, for civil servants for abandoning their functions or refusing to exercise any of their duties with the intention of obstructing the pursuit of business, when these provisions could be applied for participation in strikes. The Committee attaches great importance to the practical application of such type of provisions with a view to better assessing their conformity with the Convention.

Situations where participation in strikes implies recourse or incitement to violence fall outside the scope of the Convention.<sup>16</sup> When it comes to determining the scope and ascertaining the restrictions to the organization or participation in strikes for the purpose of Article 1(d), the Committee has generally followed the principles developed in the area of freedom of association.

The Committee wishes to recall that the Convention is not an instrument that was designed to regulate strikes, as such, and it applies solely to the exaction of compulsory labour, including prison labour, community work or correctional work, imposed as a sanction for having organized or participated in strikes. In this regard, the Committee has continually emphasized that no penal sanctions should be imposed against a worker for having peacefully carried out a strike and thus for merely exercising an essential right, and therefore that measures of imprisonment should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed and can be imposed exclusively pursuant to legislation punishing such acts, such as the Penal Code. Moreover, the concerns of the Committee that prison sanctions be imposed on strikers have also been shared by the treaty bodies of the United Nations, particularly the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.

Therefore, the Committee reiterates that authorities should not have recourse to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour (either in the form of compulsory prison labour or community work) for those who organize a strike or participate in it peacefully.<sup>17</sup>

Conclusions and challenges ahead

As indicated above the main purpose of the Convention is to abolish any form of forced or compulsory labour imposed in the five specific circumstances mentioned in its Article 1. Through this protection the Convention is an instrument that has also contributed to guaranteeing respect of other human rights, particularly freedom of expression, the right to peaceful assembly and participation in demonstrations and strikes. Despite being in force since 1957, the implementation of the Convention continues to face a number of challenges as new types of restrictions to fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression and freedom of association, enforceable with sanctions involving compulsory labour continue to emerge and national legal frameworks contemplate compulsory prison labour or sanctions involving compulsory labour. At the same time, the emergence of new information technologies poses new threats to State's institutions and national security that come into discussion with the national and global public order debate. Against this background, when assessing compliance with the Convention, the Committee is called upon to examine considerations related to the protection of fundamental freedoms, on the one hand, and considerations of national interest, security and public order, on the other hand. While the Committee has considered that a balance needs to be struck between these two considerations, it has emphasized that sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of expression of views or peaceful opposition to the established political, social or economic system.<sup>18</sup>

The Committee also wishes to highlight the key role of national courts in ensuring compliance with the Convention, as they are those who are called first to ensure that limitations to the exercise of fundamental rights stay within the limits of legality, proportionality, and necessity.

Furthermore, the Committee would like to stress once again the key role of social partners in the supervision of the application of the Convention. This is not only because they can provide first-hand information on the scope and practical implementation of a wide range of legislation that the Committee needs to assess, as described above, but also because the guarantees offered by the Convention are essential for their very existence and the continued exercise of their activities.

Finally, as an instrument contributing to the protection of fundamental human rights, the ILO Committee of Experts must within its mandate continue to engage in dialogue with the UN treaty bodies and other mechanisms, to ensure that the provisions of the Convention are applied in such a way to strengthen the full realization of civil, political, economic, social, and cultural rights to all without discrimination, as mentioned in the 2023 Joint statement by the ILO Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations and UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies Chairpersons.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend certain provisions of the 1976 Merchant Shipping Act under which: (i) breaches of labour discipline, such as disobedience to lawful command (section 129(b) and (c)), desertion and absence without leave (section 131(a) and (b)) are punishable with imprisonment (involving an obligation to work, under section 10 of the Prisons Act and rules 76 and 95 of the Prison Rules); and (ii) deserting seafarers from ships registered in another country may be forcibly conveyed on board the ship (section 135).

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that a new Merchant Shipping Bill has been drafted and passed in the Parliament in December 2021. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the provisions under section 129(b) and (c), section 131(a) and (b) and section 135 have not been retained under the Merchant Shipping Act of 2021.

Article 1(d). Punishment for participation in strikes. Over a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend certain sections of the Industrial Relations Act, with a view to ensuring compliance with the Convention. It referred to sections 73 and 76(1) of the Industrial Relations Act, under which the prohibition on the recourse to strike action when a dispute in non-essential services is referred to the tribunal for settlement (section 73) and the failure to discontinue the participation in a strike which, in the opinion of the Minister, affects or threatens the public interest, are punishable under sections 74(3), 77(2)(a) and 76(2)(b) respectively, with penalties of imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour, under section 10 of the Prisons Act and rules 76 and 95 of the Prison Rules).

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous statement that the Industrial Relations Act is currently being reviewed by the National Tripartite Council. The Committee, referring also to its comments made in 2022 under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 \(No. 87\), expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend sections 73, 74(3), 77(2)(a), 76(1) and 76(2)(b) of the Industrial Relations Act, so as to ensure that persons organizing or peacefully participating in a strike are not liable to sanctions of imprisonment involving an obligation to work.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. (a) Institutional framework. The Committee previously asked the Government to provide information on the results of the implementation of the Plurinational Policy against trafficking and smuggling of persons for 2013–17 and the related National Action Plan. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to various training measures for public servants, and prevention and awareness-raising activities on trafficking in persons carried out in various cities in the country by the Plurinational Council against Trafficking in Persons (established by the Comprehensive Act against Trafficking in Persons (No. 263) of 2012). The Committee welcomes the preparation by the Council of annual reports on the management of the Plurinational Policy against trafficking. In this regard, it observes that the management report for 2020 referred to the low level of coordination among member institutions of the Council and others involved in this field, and also with the autonomous territorial entities. According to the 2021 management report, the level of compliance of the measures contemplated in that year in the area of prevention was 96.15 per cent, in the area of care provision it was 62.5 per cent, for prosecutions and criminal penalties it was 67.22 per cent, for international cooperation 84.37 per cent, for national cooperation 73 per cent, and for institutional management 84.09 per cent.

The Committee notes the adoption of a new Plurinational Policy against trafficking in persons, illicit trafficking of immigrants and related offences for 2021–25 (according to a press release of 30 July 2022 from the Ministry of Justice and Institutional Transparency). The policy was formulated by the Plurinational Council against Trafficking in Persons after the systematization of inputs from departmental councils, autonomous departmental and municipal governments, the Ombuds Office, the Public Prosecutor's Office, the Bolivian police force and the judiciary. The objectives of the policy are to monitor the current situation regarding trafficking in persons and define institutional actions and responsibilities at the central, departmental and territorial levels in the context of the fight against trafficking. Moreover, it provides for the revision of the Comprehensive Act against Trafficking in Persons (No. 263), of 2012 in order to adapt it to new ways in which victims are captured for trafficking.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including through reinforcing inter-institutional coordination among the various entities involved at the central, departmental and territorial levels. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken as part of the implementation of the Plurinational Policy against trafficking in persons, illicit trafficking of immigrants and related offences for 2021–25, including information on the results of the evaluations undertaken in this regard by the Plurinational Council against Trafficking in Persons.

(b) Effective application of the law. The Committee previously noted with concern the low number of convictions related to trafficking in persons despite the substantial number of cases brought to court, and urged the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that the perpetrators of trafficking in persons are prosecuted and penalties are duly imposed.

The Committee notes that, in order to reinforce the capacities of the bodies responsible for the application of the legislation against trafficking in persons, the Government has provided training in relation to investigating and prosecuting the crime of trafficking. Prevention and awareness-raising workshops on social and labour standards focusing on trafficking in persons have been held, coordinated by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security in the cities of Santa Cruz, Oruro, Potosí, La Paz and Cochabamba (a total of 2,757 persons were trained between 2019 and 2022). Bilateral cooperation agreements relating to the investigation of trafficking cases have also been signed with Peru, Paraguay and Argentina.

The Committee notes that, according to the statistics supplied by the Government, between 2019 and 2021 the police recorded a total of 1,115 complaints for trafficking in persons. A total of 1,306 proceedings for trafficking in persons were initiated, of which 154 yielded convictions and 98 resulted in rulings following summary proceedings. The Committee observes that, between 2021 and the first half of 2022, the Ombuds Office received 72 complaints relating to trafficking in persons. In this regard, the Ombuds Office underlined the lack of inter-institutional coordination among the entities responsible for the prevention of trafficking in persons, and also noted the complaints against those institutions, including the police. Furthermore, a total of 33 complaints were received against the police for not activating search operations in line with the regulations in force (press release of 30 June 2022 from the Ombuds Office). The Ombuds Office emphasized that the number of complaints received by it increased by eight per cent between 2021 and 2022, the biggest increases being recorded in the departments of La Paz and Cochabamba (press release of 23 September 2022 from the Ombuds Office).

The Committee notes with concern the information on the lack of coordination among the bodies responsible for enforcement of the legislation against trafficking and the inaction on the part of some of them as well as the low number of convictions relating to trafficking in persons.

The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take all necessary steps to reinforce the capacities of the competent bodies, including the police, the Public Prosecutor's Office and other justice operators, in order to undertake systematic investigations to enable the perpetrators of trafficking to be prosecuted and punished. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of complaints recorded, investigations conducted, criminal proceedings initiated, rulings handed down and penalties imposed on the basis of Act No. 263 against trafficking in persons.

(c) Protection of victims. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Bolivia is primarily a country of origin for trafficking in persons, especially for the purposes of labour exploitation in agriculture, the textiles industry and domestic work in neighbouring countries, and requested the Government to provide information on the number of victims who have been identified and provided with assistance.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Department of Employment, through the Employment Assistance Programme II, provides support to improve the employability of persons who have been victims of trafficking. The Government reports the existence of a MERCOSUR coordination mechanism catering for women in situations of international trafficking, and a bilateral agreement with Argentina for the prevention of trafficking and for the provision of assistance and protection to victims.

The Committee observes that the Government has not supplied any information on the number of trafficking victims who have been identified or on the protection measures granted. Nor do the management reports of the Plurinational Council against Trafficking in Persons contain any information on protection measures for victims.

The Committee requests the Government to send detailed information on the measures taken in the context of bilateral and multilateral cooperation agreements with other countries to provide assistance and protection to Bolivian victims of the trafficking of persons abroad, and to facilitate their voluntary repatriation and reintegration. Furthermore, it requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to make citizens aware of the risks of migration and their rights as migrants. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide up-to-date statistical information on the number of victims of trafficking for both labour and sexual exploitation who have been identified and assisted, indicating the type of assistance given.

2. Forced labour of indigenous persons in the Chaco, Bolivian Amazon and Norte Integrado de Santa Cruz regions. (a) Action programmes and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted the existence of forced labour involving indigenous Quechua and Guaraní workers, including bonded labour, in agricultural and livestock areas. It noted specific programmes implemented to combat forced labour in the Chaco, Bolivian Amazon and Norte Integrado de Santa Cruz regions, and also measures taken to reinforce labour inspection.

In response to the Committee's request regarding the results of the programme entitled Progressive elimination of forced and similar kinds of labour by indigenous families in the Chaco, Bolivian Amazon and Norte Integrado de Santa Cruz regions, the Government indicates that in 2014 and 2015 training was provided on labour rights to over 2,500 indigenous workers and 230 employers, and the labour rights of 161 workers were restored. The Government also highlights the institutionalization of labour inspectorates in Monteagudo-Chiquisaca, Trinidad-Beni and Guayamerín; the implementation of integrated mobile labour offices; and the extension of the project to the provinces of Federico Román, Nicolás Suarez and Madre de Dios in the department of Pando. The Committee welcomes the fact that although the programme no longer has external funding, it has been institutionalized with funding from the State. During implementation of the programme in 2022, workshops to publicize social and labour standards with indigenous leaders were held, as were hearings for the restitution of rights with the presence of employers and workers. The Government also indicates that the Fundamental Rights Unit at the Ministry of Labour initiated a process for revising the forced labour mobile inspection protocol in order to adapt it to identified needs. Between 2018 and the first half of 2022, a total of 1,579 mobile inspections were carried out with departmental and regional labour authorities, including on livestock and agricultural ranches, mainly in the Chaco, Bolivian Amazon and Norte Integrado de Santa Cruz regions. The Committee requests the Government to continue sending information on the implementation of measures to prevent and eliminate forced labour involving indigenous persons in the Chaco, Bolivian Amazon and Norte Integrado de Santa Cruz regions, and on the results achieved. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the mobile inspection of forced labour, the number of inspections carried out and the number of cases of forced labour which have been detected by labour inspectors, and on coordination with the Public Prosecutor's Office in this regard.

(b) Strict application of criminal penalties. With regard to the application of section 291 of the Penal Code, which provides for imprisonment for the crime of subjecting a person to slavery or a similar condition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2018 a case was referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office for a violation of section 291 of the Penal Code but that the case was dropped because of the withdrawal of the worker following the payment of outstanding labour benefits. It also notes that in 2022 the National Institute for Agrarian Reform (INRA) opened proceedings for the reversion of land in relation to the case of Guaraní families who had been subjected to bonded labour for generations and which was denounced to INRA by the Ministry of Labour in 2015. Moreover, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that employers who have imposed practices akin to forced labour are referred on the basis of a decision by the workers themselves to administrative mechanisms for the restitution of rights and are not the subject of a complaint to the competent judicial authorities for the offences committed. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 25 of the Convention, the imposition of any form of forced labour must be the subject of effective and sufficient criminal penalties.

The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that all cases of forced labour which are identified, whether through action by the police or labour inspectorate or through complaints, are the subject of investigation and criminal proceedings, irrespective of the participation of victims, so that the perpetrators are duly prosecuted and punished. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to: (i) increase awareness of section 291 of the Penal Code by the authorities in order to ensure the effective application thereof; and (ii) inform victims of their rights, facilitate their access to the justice system, and protect them from possible reprisals. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of section 291 of the Penal Code (number of complaints, judicial proceedings initiated and rulings handed down).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1990)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the effect given in practice to the following provisions of the Penal Code, under which sentences of imprisonment may be imposed involving compulsory labour (in accordance with section 48 of the Penal Code) in circumstances which may fall within the scope of application of Article 1(a) of the Convention:

- section 123 (sedition), under which persons who take up positions publicly and in open hostility with a view to undermining or disturbing public order in any way shall be liable to a sentence of imprisonment of from one to three years;
- section 126 (conspiracy), under which any person who engages in a conspiracy involving three or more person with a view to committing crimes of sedition shall be liable to half of the penalty for that crime;
- section 134 (public disorder and disturbances), which provides that any persons who for the purpose of preventing or disturbing a public meeting cause riotous behaviour, disturbances or other disorders shall be liable to a sentence of the performance of work for between one month and one year.

The Government indicates in its report that it does not have data on the numbers of persons given a prison sentence as a consequence of expressing political views or under the provisions indicated above. In response to the Committee's request for information on the judicial action taken against journalists, the Government indicates that there have been no cases of prison sentences imposed in the context of judicial procedures against journalists on the basis of political opinions.

The Committee notes that, in his 2021 annual report, the Special Rapporteur for Freedom of Expression of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights indicates that in 2021, he received reports of attacks on the press by police officers and complaints about illegitimate detentions of journalists during coverage in an alleged context of violence against the press. The Special Rapporteur also refers to criminal prosecutions initiated against journalists in various media for alleged defamation offences. Moreover, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern at allegations of harassment and intimidation of human rights defenders and journalists, including the arbitrary detention of some journalists who were covering protests between 2019 and 2021 (CCPR/C/BOL/CO/4).

The Committee notes this information, which indicates the existence of a context of intimidation and detention of persons engaged in journalism on the basis of the offence of defamation. In this regard, the Committee observes that, although the offence of defamation against public servants set out in section 162 of the Penal Code was found to be unconstitutional in 2021 and was therefore repealed, section 282 of the Penal Code provides that any person who in public, in a biased manner and repeatedly reveals or divulges a fact, a quality or conduct liable to prejudice the reputation of an individual or group, shall be liable to a sentence of performing compulsory labour of from one month to one year or a fine. In this regard, the Committee observes that, under the terms of section 28 of the Penal Code, a sentence of compulsory labour cannot be imposed without the consent of the convicted person. However, the same provision provides that in the event that the convicted person does not give his or her consent, the penalty shall be converted into a sentence of imprisonment (which, under section 48 of the Penal Code, involves the obligation to work).

The Committee recalls in this respect that the Convention protects persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system by providing that they cannot be punished for these activities by penalties which involve the obligation to work. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, in both law and practice, that persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, including through their work in journalism, cannot be subjected to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour and, in this context, to revise the provisions of section 282 of the Penal Code. In the meantime, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of legal actions initiated under this provision, and on the penalties imposed and the acts that gave rise to the convictions.

Article 1(d). Penalties for having participated in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee has been observing that section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 of 6 June 1951 establishes penalties of imprisonment which involve the obligation to work for participation in general and sympathy strikes and acts of solidarity. Recalling that Article 1(d) of the Convention prohibits the imposition of sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes, the Committee has requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend or repeal this legal provision in the light of this principle.

The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that section 2 of the Legislative Decree is not applied in practice and that the Constitution guarantees the right to strike. Taking into account the Government's indication, and with reference to its comments on the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 \(No. 87\), the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention and the practice indicated, by explicitly amending or repealing section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 2565 of 6 June 1951, and to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023. It also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2023), regarding the application of the Convention by Cambodia.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee deeply deplored the continued use of the provisions of the national legislation, including the Penal Code, to prosecute and convict persons who express their political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, or to punish those who participate in strikes, leading to the imposition of penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory prison labour. The Conference Committee also noted with deep concern the arrest and imprisonment of trade unionists and others for exercising their civil liberties and expressing different political views from that of the Government. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take measures to immediately and unconditionally release, quash convictions and drop all charges brought against individuals for having expressed political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, and against individuals who were punished for having participated in strikes.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee recalls that penalties of imprisonment, which involve an obligation to work pursuant to section 68 of the Act on Prisons of 2011, might be imposed under various provisions of national legislation in circumstances falling within Article 1(a) of the Convention, including:

- section 42 of the Act on Political Parties, as amended in 2017, according to which various offences related to the administration or management of a political party which has been dissolved, or whose activities have been suspended by a court, or whose registration has been refused, are punishable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year;
- sections 494 and 495 on incitement to disturb public security by speech, writing, picture or any audio-visual communication in public or to the public, section 522 on publication of commentaries intended to unlawfully coerce judicial authorities, and section 523 on discrediting judicial decisions of the Penal Code;
- sections 445 and 437 bis of the Penal Code, introduced in 2018, relating to insult and criticism of the King.

The Committee notes that, in line with the Committee's previous requests, the Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to: (i) ensure that the right to hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system without the threat of penalties involving compulsory labour is fully respected; and to (ii) repeal or amend relevant provisions of the Penal Code and the Act on Political Parties providing for and leading to penalties of compulsory labour, in consultation with the social partners, in order to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates, in its report, that Cambodian citizens are granted fundamental freedoms, including the right to express their opinions peacefully and to engage in political activities, which are enshrined in the Constitution. It adds that there are no punitive measures for individuals who peacefully express their political views, including opposition members, human rights defenders or journalists, provided that their activities remain within the legal framework and do not infringe the rights of others. The Government indicates that the legal actions taken against activists were not predicated on their exercise of human rights and social rights or their status as activists, but for having contravened specific laws, including those related to denouncement, dissemination of fake news, incitement with a view to causing civil unrest to social security, and treason, among others. All individuals subjected to legal actions are assured of due process. It adds that the legislative provisions are fundamentally designed to uphold the order, security, safety and interests and rights of all citizens. The Government further states that the Labour Law proscribes forced or compulsory labour and that prison labour is primarily a rehabilitative process aimed at facilitating the reintegration of prisoners into society, and is not assigned based on political opposition, human rights advocacy or journalistic activity.

The Committee notes that in its observations, the ITUC deplors the current and long-standing climate of repression in Cambodia, which is not conducive to the exercise of public freedoms, including freedom of association and freedom of collective action, particularly in view of the arrests and prosecutions of opposition party members, representatives of non-governmental organizations, trade unionists and human rights defenders. It states that the above-mentioned legal provisions are used to imprison and convict political dissidents, journalists, bloggers and trade unionists, who may be subject to an obligation to work. The ITUC stresses that a thorough review of these legal provisions and of the practices of the country in the field of the enforcement of criminal law is essential.

The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the IOE reiterates the statements of the Employer members during the Conference Committee discussion and expresses the hope that progress would be made in the application of the Convention in line with the Conference Committee's conclusions and in close consultation with the most representative employer organization in Cambodia.

The Committee further notes that, in its report of 20 July 2023, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia indicates that he has continually received reports of attacks, unjustified arrests and prosecutions of human rights defenders, journalists and media personnel, political dissidents and others seen as being opponents of the authorities. He states that at the beginning of 2023, dozens of human rights defenders and environmentalists were estimated to be in detention, and that there was a rise in those numbers as compared with the previous year. The Special Rapporteur also refers to four mass trials between March 2021 and December 2022, mainly against members of the former Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP), under charges including incitement (sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code), plotting (section 453), and conspiracy with a foreign power (section 443), resulting in a number of penalties of imprisonment (A/HRC/54/75, 20 July 2023).

The Committee therefore once again deeply deplors the continued use of various provisions of the national legislation to prosecute and convict opposition members, human rights defenders and journalists as a result of their work, leading to the imposition of sentences of imprisonment that entail compulsory prison labour. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures, both in law and practice, to put an end to any violation of the Convention, by ensuring that no one who expresses political opinions or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, including opposition members, human rights defenders and journalists can be sentenced to imprisonment, under the terms of which compulsory labour is imposed. The Committee once again urges the Government to amend section 42 of the Act on Political Parties and sections 437 bis, 445, 494, 495, 522 and 523 of the Penal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour (compulsory prison labour). Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to ensure the immediate release of any person convicted to a prison sentence entailing compulsory prison labour, for peacefully expressing political views or opposing the established political, social or economic system.

Concerning the Cybercrime Bill, the Committee notes the Government's statement in the written information provided to the Conference Committee that a dedicated working group has convened a review meeting and that a collaborative process has facilitated the advancement of this initiative. The Cybercrime Bill is under deliberation with all relevant stakeholders, with a concerted effort being made to integrate and harmonize input from all parties to ensure the law effectiveness, efficiency, pertinence, and coherence. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Cybercrime Bill will comply with the Convention, without leaving any room for interpretation in its application that could lead to the imposition of a penalty involving compulsory work on persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

Article 1(d). Punishment for participation in strikes. The Committee previously noted: (i) the sentencing to imprisonment for misdemeanour and malicious defamation under sections 311 and 312 of the Penal Code of two members of the Cambodian Labour Confederation (CLC), after taking part in a protest following the dismissal of union members and after filing a complaint against two workers for violence; (ii) the arrest and prosecution of four leaders of the Workers Friendship Union Federation for having organized an illegal strike, blocking traffic and disturbing public order; and (iii) the arrest and detention of at least 29 casino union leaders and activists during a strike, nine of whom had been charged with incitement to commit a felony, under sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates that peaceful assembly, when conducted in cooperation with the authorities and in compliance with security, safety and public health measures, constitutes the exercise of rights guaranteed by the Constitution. However, unannounced assemblies or other actions that constitute a violation of the law compel the authorities to intervene. The Government states that arrests have been necessary as a result of breaches of security, safety and public health measures, as well as instances of incitement to violence and social unrest that jeopardize public order, security, and the rights of freedom of others.

The Committee further notes the Government's statement, in its written information provided to the Conference Committee, that the two members of the CLC sentenced to imprisonment referred to above are currently in employment. During the discussion of the case by the Conference Committee, the Government added that their cases were currently under appeal, and the Worker members of Cambodia specified that they had been given suspended sentences of imprisonment of six months at first instance.

As to the arrest of the Naga World casino's union leaders, the Government states, in its written information provided to the Conference Committee, that the strike led by the union leaders in question breached the legal prerequisites for the exercise of the right to strike. It points out that despite the ruling of December 2021 indicating that the collective labour dispute at Naga World had to be submitted to the Arbitration Council's procedure and mechanism, and that any new demands which had not been submitted to the Arbitration Council's procedure could not constitute a valid cause for a strike, the dismissed workers initiated their strike outside Naga World. They were held accountable for their actions and charged under sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code, as their participation in the strike, deemed illegal, had created substantial disturbances to public order and safety. The Government adds that additional arrests of these strikers had taken place following their violation of COVID-19 preventative measures during the strike. In total, the transgressions led to the arrest of 11 strikers. In March 2022, the court ordered the bail release of these former workers. In this regard, the Committee notes that during the Conference Committee discussion, a number of delegates reported that in May 2023, nine members of the Labour Rights Supported Union (LRSU) were convicted for incitement to commit a felony under sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code after engaging in peaceful strikes at the casino, and sentenced for up to two years of imprisonment.

The Committee notes that in its observations, the ITUC also refers to the prison sentences handed down to the leaders of the LRSU on the basis of provisions of the Penal Code, which are contrary to the Convention. The ITUC adds that it appears that trade unionists have suffered criminal convictions as a result of their participation in peaceful collective actions.

The Committee has continually emphasized that no penal sanctions should be imposed against a worker for having carried out a peaceful strike and thus for merely exercising an essential right, and therefore that measures of imprisonment or fines should not be imposed on any account. Such sanctions could be envisaged only where, during a strike, violence against persons or property, or other serious infringements of penal law have been committed, and can be imposed exclusively pursuant to legislation punishing such acts, such as the Penal Code (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 158). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no provision of the legislation is used to sentence a person who organizes or peacefully participates in a strike to a term of imprisonment, under which compulsory labour is imposed. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the court decisions referred to above. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to ensure the immediate release of any person convicted to a prison sentence entailing compulsory prison labour for exercising peacefully their right to strike.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations sent by the Confederation of German Employers' Associations (BDA) received on 22 September 2022.

Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Compulsory prison labour for private entities. The Committee previously noted that compulsory labour of convicted prisoners is provided for in the regulations for the execution of penal sanctions of the states (Länder) of Baden-Württemberg, Bavaria, Berlin, Bremen, Hamburg, Hesse, Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia, Saxony-Anhalt, Schleswig-Holstein and Thuringia. It also noted that in those Länder (except for Hamburg) inmates can be assigned to work in workshops run by private enterprises under the supervision of the penal authority. Except for Bremen, the state prison regulations did not specifically provide for the requirement to obtain the free, formal and informed consent of the inmates to work for private enterprises. In this respect, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that, both in law and in practice, the work performed by prisoners for private undertakings is based on their free, formal and informed consent and subject to conditions of work approximating a free labour relationship.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the situation of prison labour in the different Länder, which includes updated statistical data. It notes that, in general, the prison regulations of the Länder regulate the working time, holidays, occupational safety and health and remuneration of inmates who perform work. As regards the work of prisoners for private entities, the Government indicates that the legislation does not give private enterprises the exclusive authority to direct inmates, and that the supervision of prisoners and all decisions regarding their treatment must remain with prison staff. It adds that, in contractual agreements with private entities, the prison authority must ensure that prisoners are not fully integrated into the operations of the private enterprise. However, the Committee observes that the Government does not indicate how it is ensured that the free and informed consent of prisoners is formally obtained as a condition for their work for private enterprises in Baden-Württemberg, Bavaria, Berlin, Hesse, Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia, Saxony-Anhalt, Schleswig-Holstein and Thuringia. The Committee further notes that as of 2021, the number of prisoners working for private undertakings in such Länder was: 1,489 in Baden-Württemberg; 1,722 in Bavaria; 511 in Hesse; 24 in Mecklenburg-Vorpommern; 1,094 in Lower Saxony; 1,255 in North Rhine-Westphalia; 122 in Saxony-Anhalt; and 36 in Schleswig-Holstein. In Thuringia, 477 prisoners were assigned to work for municipal undertakings or private entities.

The Committee notes a decision of the German Constitutional Court adopted on 20 June 2023 in which the Court held that the remuneration fixed for inmates in Bavaria and North Rhine-Westphalia (which was equivalent to nine per cent of the average salary of all insured persons of the German pension insurance in the previous calendar year) was against the constitutional principle of resocialization which requires that work in the prison system receive appropriate recognition. The Court considered that the level of remuneration in the two Länder did not fit the purpose of prison labour which is to show the importance of gainful employment in society. While the Court recognized that, in fixing the remuneration for prisoners, consideration shall be made to prison costs, prisoners should be left with an appropriate amount of remuneration that gives them a tangible advantage compared to prisoners who do not work. The Court hence decided that the legislature of the two Länder must strive for a legal framework which ensures that the low remuneration is not perceived as part of the sentence to be served.

The Committee further notes that in its observations, the BDA indicates that the compulsory work of prisoners is imposed as a means of resocialization, and that prison authorities retain responsibility for prisoners and cannot transfer their custody to private entities. The BDA further indicates that, in practice, inmates cannot be sensibly employed by the State, so their employment in the private sector should be permissible provided that: (i) public authorities specify the conditions and intervene when infringements occur; and (ii) working conditions are not exploitative even though they could not attain the level of normal employment.

The Committee recalls once again that, by virtue of Article 2(2) of the Convention, the compulsory labour of convicted persons is not considered as forced labour when: (1) it is carried out under the supervision and control of a public authority; and (2) prisoners are not hired to or placed at the disposal of private individuals, companies or associations (this is not limited to work outside penitentiary establishments, but applies equally to workshops which may be operated by private undertakings inside prison premises). If either of the two conditions is not observed, the situation would fall within the scope of the Convention. At the same time, the Committee has considered that work by prisoners for private enterprises could be held to be compatible with the Convention when: (i) the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, by giving their free, formal (in writing) and informed consent to work for private enterprises; and (ii) when the conditions of work of prisoners approximate those of a free labour relationship.

Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, the work undertaken by prisoners for private enterprises (in Baden-Württemberg, Bavaria, Berlin, Hesse, Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, Lower Saxony, North Rhine-Westphalia, Saxony-Anhalt, Schleswig-Holstein and Thuringia), including within prison premises, only takes place voluntarily on the basis of the free, formal and informed consent of the prisoners concerned, and under conditions approximating a free labour relationship. It also requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the decision of the Constitutional Court of 20 June 2023 in Bavaria and North Rhine-Westphalia as regards the remuneration of prisoners working for private entities. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the decision in the other Länder.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously referred to several provisions of national legislation providing for prison sentences involving compulsory labour – under Decree No. 247/72/PREG of 20 September 1972 concerning the establishment and structure of the prison administration and Decree No. 624/PRG/81 of 13 November 1981 supplementing Decree No. 247/72/PRG, and the 2016 Criminal Code – for certain activities within the scope of application of Article 1(a) of the Convention. It noted the Government's indications that some of these provisions were applied in practice, and requested the Government to ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour may be imposed, under the application of the following provisions, on persons who peacefully express views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system:

- sections 363–366 of the Criminal Code, concerning defamation and abuse;
- sections 629, 630(1) and (2), 632(1), 634, 636(1) and (2) and 637 of the Criminal Code concerning organizing or participating in an undeclared or unauthorized demonstration or in an unarmed gathering of persons, for organizing a meeting on a public thoroughfare, and for any other related peaceful activities;
- sections 658–660, 662–665 and 739(1) of the Criminal Code, concerning insulting behaviour towards the Head of State and officers of the law, and towards the national anthem or the national or a foreign flag;
- sections 689–703 of the Criminal Code concerning breaches of public order caused by religious ministers in the performance of their ministry;
- sections 30 and 31 of Organic Act No. 91/02/CTRN of 23 December 1991 establishing a charter of political parties, concerning the act of founding, directing or administering a political party in violation of the law, or directing or administering a dissolved political party by maintaining or reconstituting it.

The Government indicates in its report that no prosecutions have been brought and therefore no convictions handed down on the basis of the above provisions. It states that, although no measure has been envisaged to limit the scope of application of these provisions, the Government will undertake a substantive reform to this end, within the framework of the restructuring of the State. The Government also indicates that no press-related offences have been punished by compulsory prison labour. It adds that awareness-raising campaigns are regularly organized by press associations as part of the dissemination of Organic Act No. L/2010/02/CNT of 22 June 2010 on freedom of the press, through interactive broadcasts and debates via radio and television channels. A significant number of judges and magistrates have participated in training in this regard.

The Committee also notes that, by decision of 13 May 2022, the transitional government prohibited any demonstration on public thoroughfares likely to compromise the social peace and the proper development of the activities in its calendar, specifying that any breach of this order would entail legal consequences against the perpetrator(s). In this regard, the Committee notes that in a letter addressed to the President of the Republic on 15 August 2022, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed his deep concern at recent developments in the human rights situation in the country, referring to a large number of arrests of demonstrators, including members of the political opposition and civil society. The High Commissioner also referred to a decision of the Government of 9 August 2022 aimed at dissolving the National Front for the Defence of the Constitution (FNDC), a collective of opposition political parties, trade unions and civil society organizations, which had initiated demonstrations.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no punishments involving compulsory labour, including as part of a prison sentence, may be imposed on persons who express certain political opinions or who peacefully express views ideologically opposed to the established system, including in the context of peaceful public demonstrations. The Committee hopes that, within the framework of the reform undertaken by the Government, the above provisions of the Criminal Code and of the Act of 23 December 1991 establishing a charter of political parties will be reviewed taking account of the requirements of the Convention, either by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing penalties involving compulsory labour. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any convictions handed down under the above-mentioned provisions, and on the acts giving rise to the convictions. The Committee also requests the Government to specify the penalties imposed on persons who violate the prohibition on demonstrations on public thoroughfares.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1954)

Previous comments

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Bonded labour. Monitoring mechanisms and effective implementation of the legislative framework. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that regular awareness-raising programmes with field level officers, such as district magistrates, superintendents of the police and Labour Department officials at district and state levels, have been held on bonded labour by the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) and the state human rights commissions. The Government adds that a total of 296,000 bonded labourers have been identified and released in the country, so far. As regards states, since 2019, 700 bonded labourers have been identified in Uttar Pradesh and 29 in Andhra Pradesh, as well as 158 bonded labourers in Tamil Nadu, between 2021 and 2022. The Committee notes the Government's statement that all of these victims benefited from financial assistance under the Central Sector Scheme for Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers, 2016. In that regard, the Committee observes that the Central Sector Scheme was revised in 2021. The Government adds that, since 2019, in Uttar Pradesh, 158 employers have been convicted for bonded labour with penalties of imprisonment and a fine. The Committee notes that, according to the Crimes in India report from the National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB), 592 cases of bonded labour under the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, 1976 (BLSA) were registered in 2021, which represented a decrease from the 1,232 cases registered in 2020. Furthermore, in 2021, 564 persons were arrested under the BLSA and 40 persons were convicted in 38 cases. While welcoming the various measures taken by the Government to eliminate bonded labour, the Committee notes the absence of information on: (i) the functioning and effectiveness of the vigilance committees established by state governments at the district and subdivisional level in order, inter alia, to assist the courts in monitoring and ensuring the proper implementation of the BLSA; and (ii) the penalties effectively applied to perpetrators of bonded labour. The Committee accordingly once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the proper functioning and effectiveness of the vigilance committees established by all state governments, and the results achieved in terms of the number of bonded labourers identified, withdrawn and rehabilitated, including through the Central Sector Scheme for Rehabilitation of Bonded Labourers, 2021. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Bonded Labour System (Abolition) Act, are strictly and effectively enforced so as to enable the imposition of dissuasive penalties on persons who involve others in bonded labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of prosecutions and convictions regarding bonded labour. It further requests the Government to provide information on the specific penalties applied to perpetrators.

Magnitude of the problem. The Committee recalls that it has been repeatedly referring to the urgent need for a comprehensive, large-scale national survey on bonded labour, in order to ascertain the scope and order of magnitude of the practice. In relation to state-level surveys to be conducted to collect data on the magnitude of the problem of bonded labour in the country, the Committee notes that, according to the Crimes in India report from the NCRB, 22 out of the 36 states and union territories (UTs) did not report identifying any bonded labour victim or filing any case under the BLSA in 2021. In that regard, the Committee notes that the NHRC, in its advisory issued in December 2021, recommended to undertake periodic surveys for the identification of bonded labour. It further notes that, in the context of the 2022 universal periodic review, the United Nations country team indicated that, decades after the enactment of the BLSA, forced labour and bonded labour continued to be prevalent in India and disaggregated government statistics on bonded labour and forced labour are not available (A/HRC/WG.6/41/IND/2, 19 August 2022). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that statistical information on the nature and trends of bonded labour is made available through compiling any relevant data collected at the state and union territory level. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will provide information without delay on the magnitude of the issue of bonded labour in the country.

2. Culturally sanctioned practice involving forced labour. In relation to lower castes and tribes often engaged, as a result of their social origin and under coercion, in manual scavenging, the Committee notes the Government's indication that under the Scheme for the Rehabilitation of Manual Scavengers (SRMS): (i) 58,098 manual scavengers have been identified and released from manual scavenging with cash assistance; (ii) 18,800 manual scavengers benefited from various skill development programmes with monthly stipend; and (iii) 2,090 manual scavengers benefited from a capital subsidy for self-employment projects. The Government adds that a National Action Plan for Mechanized Sanitation Ecosystem (NAMASTE) has also been developed with a view to eliminating manual cleaning of sewers and septic tanks, and regular workshops are being organized in municipalities on safe cleaning practices. Furthermore, manual scavengers are eligible to receive a capital subsidy for the procurement of mechanized instruments and vehicles for cleaning sewers and septic tanks. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a mobile application called Swacchata Abhiyaan was launched in December 2020 to capture data on existing insanitary latrines and manual scavengers associated with their cleaning. The Government states that the data is now being verified by the concerned district administration. The Committee however notes that, in 2021, the NHRC issued recommendations on manual scavenging, while highlighting that periodic comprehensive surveys should be conducted, as a result of several anomalies found in existing surveys on manual scavenging. The NHRC also expressed serious concern over widespread continuance of manual scavenging and hazardous cleaning, despite existing laws and guidelines prohibiting this practice. In that regard, the Committee notes that, on 22 February 2023, the Supreme Court directed the Government to place on record, within six weeks, the steps taken to implement the Prohibition of Employment as Manual Scavengers and Their Rehabilitation Act, 2013, including the steps towards rehabilitation of manual scavengers (Order W.P.(C) No. 324/2020). It further observes that, in March 2023, the Government informed the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Social Justice and Empowerment that a total number of 1,035 sanitation workers died while cleaning sewers and septic tanks. In 74 of these cases, compensation remains to be paid. In that regard, the Committee notes that as many as 347 manual scavengers died over the past five years, mainly in Tamil Nadu, Gujarat, Uttar Pradesh and Delhi states. While noting the measures taken by the Government to eliminate manual scavenging and the prohibition of such practices established in the national legislation, the Committee expresses its concern over the persistence of this practice, in situations that could amount to forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Prohibition of Employment as Manual Scavengers and Their Rehabilitation Act, 2013, and the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Amendment Ordinance (No. 1) of 2014 (SCST Act of 2014) are strictly and effectively enforced, and the effective rehabilitation of manual scavengers is ensured. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the findings of any survey on manual scavenging, including the number, age group and gender of persons who are still working as manual scavengers.

3. Culturally sanctioned practices involving sexual exploitation. The Committee previously referred to the prevalence of the devadasi system, a culturally sanctioned practice in certain states of India, under which lower caste girls are dedicated without their consent to local "deities" or objects of worship and once initiated as devadasi are sexually exploited by followers of the "deity" within the local community as they grew up. The Committee notes the Government's general statement that several laws have been adopted by the central and state governments to completely prohibit this practice, the legal framework being actively implemented in order to prevent and punish any such incidence. The Committee however notes that, on 14 October 2022, the NHRC sent notices to the central and state Governments of Karnataka, Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, Telangana and Maharashtra over the continued menace of the devadasi system in spite of laws criminalizing this practice. On that occasion, the NHRC indicated that more than 70,000 women were identified as devadasis in Karnataka, as well as 80,000 women in Telangana and Andhra Pradesh, most of whom are from scheduled castes and scheduled tribes. The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring an end to the devadasi system in practice, including through effective enforcement of the legislation adopted in the different states. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of women and girls who have been withdrawn and rehabilitated. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions relating to the practice of devadasi, as well as the specific penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established system. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been referring to several provisions of the Penal Code, under which penalties of imprisonment (which may involve compulsory prison labour under section 53 of the Penal Code, if an offender is sentenced to “rigorous imprisonment” at the discretion of the court exercised under section 60 of the Penal Code) could be imposed in circumstances falling within the scope of the Convention. It previously noted the Government’s statement that, while sections 295-A and 298 of the Penal Code on acts intended to outrage religious feelings explicitly provide for the imposition of punishment of either “simple imprisonment” or “rigorous imprisonment”, sections 124-A (sedition), 153-A (promoting enmity between different groups) and 153-B (imputations and assertions prejudicial to national integration) of the Penal Code merely refers to “imprisonment” which should be interpreted as “simple imprisonment” that does not involve an obligation to perform labour.

The Committee notes that the Government refers, in its report, to the 2021 Crime in India report from the National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB), which makes a general reference to sections 295 to 297 of the Penal Code, under which 1,475 new cases were registered in 2021. Recalling that section 124-A of the Penal Code, which criminalizes sedition, establishes penalties of imprisonment, including imprisonment for life, which may involve an obligation to perform labour pursuant to section 55 of the Penal Code, the Committee notes that, according to the NCRB, in 2021, 76 cases of sedition were registered, while 189 cases were pending investigation from previous years and 86 persons were arrested under sedition charges. Since 2019, a total of 312 sedition cases have been registered according to NCRB’s data. In that regard, the Committee observes that, according to the NCRB, in 2021, 814 cases of violation of the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act were registered, while 4,013 cases were pending investigation from previous years and 1,621 persons were arrested under the Act. In that regard, the Committee notes that, as a result of a petition made before the Supreme Court on February 2021 to challenge the constitutionality of section 124-A of the Penal Code (S.G. Vombatkere v. Union of India [(2022) 7 SCC 433]), on 11 May 2022, the Supreme Court issued an order that suspended pending trials, appeals and proceedings related to sedition charges. It notes that, on that occasion, the Government indicated that it had decided to “re-examine and reconsider” section 124-A of the Penal Code. The Committee notes that, in its report published in April 2023 (report No. 279), the Law Commission of India recommended to retain section 124-A of the Penal Code while introducing certain amendments. In that regard, the Committee takes note of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita Bill, 2023 introduced to the Lok Sabha in August 2023 (lower house of Parliament), with the aim to repeal and replace the existing Penal Code. It notes more particularly that section 150 of the Bill criminalizes “acts endangering the sovereignty, unity and integrity of India” and establishes penalties of imprisonment for life or imprisonment and a fine. The Bill also introduces a new offence regarding “terrorist acts” (section 111 of the Bill).

In this regard, the Committee notes that several United Nations experts have repeatedly highlighted grave concerns regarding the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967, which is applied as a means of coercion against civil society, the media, and human rights defenders in Jammu and Kashmir states. The Committee further notes that, in the context of the Universal Periodic Review, similar concerns were expressed by the High Commissioner for Human Rights who urged the Government to release people who had been charged under the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act for simply exercising basic human rights (A/HRC/WG.6/41/IND/2, 19 August 2022).

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the context of the ongoing legislative process for the revision of the Penal Code, to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views opposed to the established system, for example by clearly restricting the scope of sections 124-A, 295-A and 298 of the Penal Code and of the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, including copies of any court decisions defining or illustrating their scope.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. (a) National action plan; prosecution. The Committee previously requested the Government to strengthen law enforcement action regarding trafficking in persons cases. It notes the Government’s indication in its report that the handling of cases related to the illegal placement of migrant workers abroad is conducted under Act No. 21 of 2007 on Trafficking in Persons, in conjunction with Act No. 18 of 2017 on the Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers, which provides for maximum penalties for punishment of officials involved. The Government indicates that between 2017 and 2021, the National Police handled 402 trafficking in persons cases throughout Indonesia and that no cases involving government officials were reported. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection (MoWECP) provided training on trafficking for 140 law enforcement and human resources officials from 34 provinces in Indonesia in 2021. Moreover, the National Police Education and Training Institute organized special training every year, for investigators at the central and regional levels, to enhance their capacity in the handling of trafficking in persons cases. It further notes that currently the Anti-trafficking in Persons Task Force has been established in 32 provinces and 245 districts/cities with separate specialized Sub-Task Force for prevention and handling of trafficking in persons cases; law enforcement; coordination and cooperation; social and health rehabilitation, repatriation and social reintegration; and legal norm development.

The Committee also notes from the Government’s report of September 2022 to the United Nations Human Rights Council that several achievements have been made through the Bali Process Working Group on Trafficking in Persons, such as the publication of three Policy Guides pertaining to Criminalizing Trafficking in Persons, Identifying and Protecting Victims of Trafficking in Persons, and Following the Money on Trafficking in Persons cases. According to this report, the Government is in the process of drafting the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons

(A/HRC/WG.6/41/IDN/1). The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government in its report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that according to the data on trafficking in persons compiled by the Online Information System for the Protection of Women and Children in June 2022, the number of trafficking in persons cases has increased steadily and considerably. There were 226 cases in 2019, 422 cases in 2020; and 683 cases in 2021 with majority of victims being women.

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat trafficking in persons and provide detailed information on the activities undertaken to this end, in particular by the Anti-Trafficking Task Force. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures for the effective implementation of the National Action Plan on Combating Trafficking in Persons and requests it to provide a copy of the Plan as well as information on any assessment undertaken in this regard. It also requests the Government to continue to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to ensure proper identification and investigation of cases of trafficking so that perpetrators can be prosecuted and dissuasive penalties can be imposed on them. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as the specific penalties imposed under Law No. 21/2007.

(b) Protection of victims. The Committee notes the Government's information that the MoWECP issued the Women Empowerment and Child Protection Ministerial Regulation No. 8 of 2021 concerning the Standard Operating Procedure for Integrated Services for Witnesses and/or Victims of trafficking. The scope of this regulation includes complaints mechanism, health rehabilitation, legal assistance, social rehabilitation, repatriation and social reintegration. The Government indicates that from 2015 to 2019, the Sub-Task Force for the Social Rehabilitation, Repatriation and Social Reintegration repatriated and rehabilitated 1,975 victims of trafficking from abroad; provided social assistance to 3,710 Indonesian migrant victims of trafficking; and provided protection for 1,165 witnesses of trafficking. The Trauma Center Protection House (RPTC) assisted and provided social rehabilitation for 2,437 victims of trafficking from 2017 to 2020. Moreover, between 2017 and 2018, 350 victims of trafficking received assistance for Productive Economic Businesses, and 2,570 victims of trafficking received the Social Reintegration Social Guidance Programme in 2020. Currently, 16 RPTCs owned by local governments and 31 Technical Service Units located in 18 provinces which provide social rehabilitation services for victims of trafficking are operating in the country. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of November 2021 expressed concern at the absence of a standardized early identification and referral system, remedies and reintegration assistance for trafficking victims as well as the lack of understanding among police and other law enforcement officers about gender-sensitive procedures for dealing with victims of trafficking (CEDAW/C/IDN/CO/8).

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to provide appropriate protection and assistance to victims of trafficking, including measures to ensure early identification and referral of women and girls who are victims of trafficking as well as gender-sensitive procedures when providing assistance to such victims. It requests the Government to indicate the measures taken in this regard, in particular pursuant to the Ministerial Regulation No. 8 of 2021 concerning the Standard Operating Procedure for Integrated Services for Witnesses and/or Victims of trafficking. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of victims of trafficking who are benefiting from the services of the Sub-Task Force, the Trauma Center Protection House, Productive Economic Businesses and the Social Reintegration Social Guidance Programme.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers and risk of forced labour. (a) Law enforcement. The Committee previously noted Act No. 18 of 2017 concerning the protection of Indonesian migrant workers, which provides for heavier punishment for non-respect of procedural requirements regarding the placement of Indonesian migrant workers. The Committee also noted that undocumented migrants working in Indonesia are frequently subjected to labour and sexual exploitation, including forced labour, particularly in the fisheries, construction, agriculture, mining, manufacturing, tourism and domestic work sectors.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it continues to strengthen the protection of Indonesian migrant workers from forced labour conditions and the prevention of such practices and has taken the following measures in this regard: (i) launching of the Training of Trainers programme for regional government institutions that deal with women migrant workers, as well as Mental Strengthening Training for Indonesian migrant women workers; (ii) establishment of the Indonesian Migrant Workers Family Development (BK-PMI) in 14 provinces, 67 districts/cities, 95 sub-districts, and 104 villages/sub-districts, as well as 117 working groups to assist the Indonesian migrant workers and their families; and (iii) establishment of the Indonesia Migrant Workers Protection Board (BP2MI) which provides pre-departure briefing on the duties and obligations of the Indonesian migrant workers under the employment agreement. The BP2MI signed cooperation agreements with more than 80 local governments, aimed at synergizing efforts in eradicating the illegal placement of migrant workers. Moreover, the Ministry of Manpower undertook the following measures to prevent the placement of Indonesian migrant workers outside appropriate procedures : (i) socialization on the placement and protection of Indonesian migrant workers through online and offline media; (ii) encouraging and providing assistance in the establishment of the One-Stop Integrated Services; (iii) establishment and strengthening of the Task Forces for Protection of Indonesian Migrant Workers both at the center and in regions located at 25 embarkation/debarkation locations/areas of origin of Indonesian migrant workers; (iv) establishment of productive migrant villages which provide capacity-building, financial literacy training and entrepreneurship workshops for returned migrant workers; and (v) conclusion of multi-stakeholder cooperation in the Safe and Fair migration programme with the ILO, UN-Women and several NGOs. The Committee further notes the Government's information that in 2021 and 2022, a total of 21 Indonesian migrant workers placement companies were sentenced to temporary suspension of activities pursuant to Act No. 18 of 2017 and Government Regulation No. 59 of 2021 concerning the implementation of protection of Indonesian migrant workers. Furthermore, information from the ILO indicates that the Ministry of Manpower, jointly with the ILO-UN-Women Safe and Fair programme has piloted and developed the Gender-Responsive Migrant Worker Resources Center and the One-Roof Integrated Services in four districts known as the origin districts of Indonesian migrant workers so as to improve the protection of women migrant workers and their families at every stage of migration, from their hometown to returning. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect migrant workers from abusive practices and ensure that they are not placed in a position of accrued vulnerability to forced labour, including through the implementation of the various measures initiated by the Government and the Indonesia Migrant Workers Protection Board for the protection of migrant workers as well as within the framework of the Safe and Fair programme. It further requests the Government to indicate the results achieved in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of Act No. 18 of 2017 and Regulation No. 59 of 2021, and to provide information on the number of violations detected and the specific penalties imposed.

(b) International cooperation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that Indonesia signed a memorandum of understanding with Malaysia on the placement and protection of Indonesian migrant workers in the domestic sector in April 2022. According to the memorandum of understanding, the Government of Indonesia shall comply with the requirement that persons selected for work in the domestic sector: (i) are between 21 and 45 years of age; (ii) have sufficient knowledge of the law, culture and social practice in Malaysia; (iii) have the ability to communicate in Bahasa Malaysia; (iv) comply with Malaysian immigration procedures; (v) have competency certification and meet the health requirements for work in the domestic sector; and (vi) are registered in the social security programme in Indonesia. The Government also indicates that the BP2MI is making efforts to expand similar cooperation to other targeted destination countries with a focus on the placement of professional and skilled workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on its international cooperation efforts undertaken to protect and support migrant workers in transit and destination countries. It also requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the memorandum of understanding with Malaysia and the results achieved in terms of enhancing the protection of migrant workers in the domestic sector.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. 1. Penal Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code establish a penalty of imprisonment (involving compulsory labour) for up to seven years and four-and-a-half years, respectively, for a person who publicly gives expression to feelings of hostility, hatred or contempt against the Government (section 154) or who disseminates, openly demonstrates or puts up a writing containing such feelings, with the intent to give publicity to the contents or to enhance the publicity thereof (section 155). It also noted that the Constitutional Court, in its ruling on Case No. 6/PUU-V/2007, found sections 154 and 155 of the Criminal Code to be contrary to the Constitution of 1945. The Committee further noted that, in ruling No. 013-022/PUU-IV/2006, the Constitutional Court found that it was inappropriate for Indonesia to maintain sections 134, 136 bis and 137 of the Criminal Code (respecting deliberate insults against the President or the Vice-President), since they negate the principle of equality before the law, diminish freedom of expression and opinion, freedom of information and the principle of legal certainty. The Constitutional Court stated that the new draft text of the Criminal Code must not include similar provisions. Noting that the amendments to the Criminal Code were ongoing, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Criminal Code in the near future, taking into account the rulings of the Constitutional Court.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the draft Bill on the Criminal Code is still being discussed in the House of Representatives of the Republic of Indonesia. The Committee notes that according to the draft Bill on Criminal Code, acts of publicly attacking the honour or dignity of the President, or Vice-President and broadcasting or disseminating any pictures or writings in this regard (section 218); and insulting, degrading or damaging the honour or image of the government or state institutions (section 240), or national flag (section 234) or state symbol (section 236) are punishable with imprisonment ranging from one year and six months to four years. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's information that compulsory social work sanctions that may be carried out in hospitals, orphanages, elderly homes, schools or other social institutions, may be imposed: (i) for crimes punishable with imprisonment of less than five years; or (ii) where the judge imposes a maximum imprisonment of six months or a maximum fine of category II; or (iii) as an alternative to short-term imprisonment and light fines.

The Committee points out that the Convention prohibits the use of "any form of forced or compulsory labour" as a sanction, as a means of coercion, education or discipline in circumstances falling within its scope. It also recalls that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory prison labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence; but sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system, whether such prohibition is imposed by law or by a discretionary administrative decision (see General Survey of 2012 on fundamental Conventions, paragraph 303). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that both in law and practice, no one who, in a peaceful manner, expresses political views or opposes the established political, social or economic system can be sentenced to sanctions under which compulsory prison or compulsory social work is imposed. It accordingly requests the Government to review the provisions of sections 218, 234, 236 and 240 of the Criminal Code Bill to ensure compliance with the Convention by limiting the application of criminal sanctions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory prison or compulsory social work. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised Criminal Code in English, once it has been adopted.

2. Law No. 27 of 1999 on the Revision of the Criminal Code. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that under section 107(a), (d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 on the Revision of the Criminal Code (in relation to crimes against state security), sentences of imprisonment may be imposed upon any person who disseminates or develops the teachings of “Communism/Marxism-Leninism” orally, in writing or through any media, or establishes an organization based on such teachings, or establishes relations with such an organization, with a view to replacing Pancasila as the State’s foundation. It noted the Government’s statement that Law No. 27 of 1999 cannot be amended due to the mandate stated in Law No. I/MPR/2003 on the status of legislative provisions. Section 2 of Law No. I/MPR/2003 states that Decree No. XXV/MPRS/1966 (which relates to the dissolution and prohibition of the Communist Party of Indonesia and the prohibition of activities to disseminate and develop a Communist/Marxist-Leninist ideology or doctrine) shall remain valid, and shall be enforced with fairness and respect for the law. The Committee pointed out that, pursuant to sections 14 and 19 of the Criminal Code and sections 57(1) and 59(2) of the Prisons Regulations, persons sentenced to imprisonment shall perform work imposed on them, which constitutes compulsory prison labour. Recalling that Article 1(a) prohibits all recourse to compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 107(a), (d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the substance of sections 14 and 19 are no longer regulated in the Criminal Code Bill. The Government, referring to Law No. 12 of 1995 concerning correctional institutions, states that the correctional system serves to prepare correctional inmates to integrate in a healthy manner into the community and to become free and responsible members of the society.

The Committee also notes that Law No. 27 of 1999 shall be revoked and declared invalid following the promulgation of the Criminal Code Bill (section 622(1) of the Criminal Code Bill). The Committee, however, notes that the provisions under section 107(a)(d) and (e) of Law No. 27 of 1999 appear to be retained under sections 188 and 189 of the Criminal Code Bill, with punishment of imprisonment for a maximum of ten years. Moreover, under section 190, anyone who seeks to replace Pancasila as the state ideology will be sentenced up to five years of imprisonment. The Committee once again recalls the Government that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence, but sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention where they enforce a prohibition of the expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system. In this regard, the Committee emphasizes that, while convict labour exacted from common offenders, such as offenders of robbery, kidnapping, bombing or other acts of violence, is intended to reform or rehabilitate them, the same need does not arise in the case of persons convicted for their opinions (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 300 and 303). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 188, 189 and 190 of the Criminal Code Bill into conformity with the Convention, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence, or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory prison or compulsory social work thereby ensuring that persons who peacefully express political or ideological views opposed to the established political, social or economic system cannot be sentenced to a term of imprisonment which includes the obligation to work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Italy

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1934)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Italian Union of Labour (UIL), the Italian Confederation of Workers' Trade Unions (CISL) and the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL), communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Exploitation of foreign workers in an irregular situation. The Committee previously acknowledged the difficult situation faced by Italy in relation to the increase in irregular immigration flows. The Committee also recognized the Government's efforts to combat gangmastering and the labour exploitation of migrants through the implementation of various projects and initiatives and requested the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report concerning the adoption of a three-year Plan to Combat Labour Exploitation in Agriculture and Gangmastering for 2020–22. The Government indicates that the Plan was elaborated in consultation with the competent national and local institutions, workers' and employers' representatives in the food and agricultural sector and leading associations in the tertiary sector. The Committee observes that the Plan provides for priority actions in four strategic areas, including prevention; enforcement; protection and assistance; and labour and social reintegration. The Government further indicates that more than €700 million has been allocated for the implementation of the Plan. In addition, the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy, the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Forestry, and the National Association of Italian Municipalities signed a protocol of understanding to ensure the coordinated implementation of the actions set out in the Plan. As envisaged in the Plan, the National guidelines on the identification, protection and assistance of victims of labour exploitation in agriculture were adopted on 7 October 2021.

The Government further refers to the P.I.U.-Su.Pr.Eme (Individualized Exit Paths from Exploitation) project, co-financed by the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy and the European Union, which aims at providing legal, administrative, social and health assistance to third-country nationals who are victims or potential victims of labour exploitation in the southern regions of Italy. Within the framework of the Su.Pr.Eme. Italia and A.L.T. Caporalato! projects, in 2020, 758 inspections were carried out which covered 4,767 foreign workers and identified various violations of the labour legislation in relation to 1,069 workers, including 205 potential victims of labour exploitation. Furthermore, according to the Protocol signed in 2021 with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), IOM cultural mediators with expertise in different languages participated in labour inspections with a view to facilitating the exchange of information with foreign workers. As regards the application in practice of section 603bis (unlawful intermediation and labour exploitation) of the Criminal Code, according to the data from the Ministry of Justice, in 2021, there were 572 registered cases against 1,170 persons; 233 cases of prosecution against 523 persons; and 93 convictions, involving 150 persons, handed down by first instance courts.

The Committee notes the observations of the UIL, the CISL and the CGIL indicating the need to decriminalize the offence of illegal immigration established by section 10bis of Legislative Decree No. 286 of 1998 (Consolidated text of provisions governing immigration and rules on the status of foreigners). The UIL, the CISL and the CGIL point out that foreign workers in an irregular situation who are victims of labour exploitation may be reluctant to cooperate with the inspection authorities due to the risk of deportation. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's reply that inspection authorities are obliged to report identified workers without residence permits to the law enforcement bodies. The Government further indicates that inspectors may request the competent authority to facilitate the issuance of a residence permit to a victim of labour exploitation. According to the Government, for the period from January to June 2022, a total of 313 residence permits were provided to foreign victims of violence and exploitation.

The Committee further notes that in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights noted a rise in the number of irregular migrants and increased risk of their exploitation (E/C.12/ITA/CO/6). The 2022 report of the United Nations Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises refers to the cases of labour exploitation of migrant workers, particularly through the caporalato system, which is an illegal form of outsourcing the hiring and exploitation of manpower through intermediaries (A/HRC/50/40/Add.2).

The Committee also observes that in its 2023 conclusions on the application of the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), by Italy, the Committee on the Application of Standards noted with concern several issues regarding compliance with the Conventions, in essence related to labour inspection with respect to the employment of migrant workers in an irregular situation. In this regard, the Committee recalls its comments under the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143), in which the Committee emphasized the need to address migration in abusive conditions and irregular migration with full respect for migrant workers' human rights.

While taking due note of the measures taken and the complexity of the situation on the ground, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent migrant workers from being caught in abusive practices and conditions of work that could amount to forced labour and to ensure the effective and adequate protection of migrant workers who are victims of forced labour, irrespective of their legal status in the country; this protection should include access to information about their rights, as well as effective procedures to seek redress and obtain compensation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, particularly as regards the sectors where migrant workers are predominantly employed, such as the agricultural and garment sectors. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any assessment of the results achieved through the implementation of the Plan to Combat Labour Exploitation in Agriculture and Gangmastering for 2020-22. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to identify and investigate cases of labour exploitation as defined and criminalized under section 603bis of the Criminal Code in order to ensure the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive penalties on perpetrators.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend the following provisions of the Jamaica Shipping Act, 1998, under which certain disciplinary offences are punishable with imprisonment (involving an obligation to perform labour under the Prisons Law):

- section 178(1)(b), (c) and (e), which provides for penalties of imprisonment, inter alia, for wilful disobedience or neglect of duty or combining with any of the crews to impede the progress of the voyage; an exemption from this liability applies only to seafarers participating in a lawful strike after the ship has arrived and has been secured in good safety to the satisfaction of the master at a port, and only at a port in Jamaica (section 178(2));

- section 179(a) and (b), which punishes, with similar penalties, the offences of desertion and absence without leave.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Ministry of Transport and Mining, in consultation with the Maritime Authority of Jamaica, is in the process of reviewing sections 178 and 179 of the Shipping Act. The Government states that the necessary steps will be taken to ensure that the provisions of the above-mentioned Act are in compliance with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that Article 1(c) of the Convention expressly prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of labour discipline. Therefore, the punishment of breaches of labour discipline, such as desertion, absence without leave or disobedience, with sanctions of imprisonment involving an obligation to perform labour is incompatible with the Convention. Noting that the Government has been referring to the revision of the above-mentioned provisions of the Shipping Act for a number of years and that it has indicated that they were not applied in practice, the Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the amendments of the Shipping Act are adopted without any further delay so as to bring the legislation in line with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Japan

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1932)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU) and the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) received on 20 September 2019; the observations of the Labour Union of Migrant Workers (LUM) received on 28 September 2021 and 28 September 2022, as well as the Government replies to these observations. It also notes the observations of the Japan Business Federation (NIPPON KEIDANREN) and the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) communicated by the Government with its reports.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Technical Intern Training Programme. The Committee previously noted that labour rights violations amounting to forced labour were found within the Technical Intern Training Programme, under which foreign nationals could enter Japan as "interns" for one year and remain for another two years as "technical interns".

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the LUM indicates that the number of technical intern trainees in Japan was estimated at 276,123 as at the end of 2021, which represents a decrease of 100,000 trainees from previous years due to the immigration restrictions enforced during the pandemic. The Committee notes that, in their respective observations, the LUM and the JTUC-RENGO highlight that, in 2021, violations of labour law provisions were still found in 70 per cent of enterprises participating in the Technical Intern Training Programme inspected, mainly as a result of non-compliance with safety standards, long working hours and unpaid wages, a percentage that remains almost unchanged since 2015. The LUM adds that, in 2022, 1,974 cases of non-compliance with safety standards were detected, out of which only 0.5 per cent were sent to prosecutors. The LUM highlights that, according to a report from the Ministry of Justice, there were 199 deaths of trainees between 2018 and 2021, of which 33 per cent were caused by disease, 35 per cent by accident and 13 per cent by suicide. In its observations, the JTUC-RENGO further indicates that approximately 20 per cent of cases of unknown whereabouts or deaths of technical trainees that occurred between April and September of 2019 had not resulted in an on-site inspection being performed within six months of the occurrence of the event, with a risk of the dissipation of objective materials leading to the event. The JTUC-RENGO recommends increasing the frequency of on-site inspections and strengthening initial responses in case of violations, such as by the suspension of licences for supervising organizations and the revocation of accreditation of technical intern training plans for implementing organizations.

The Committee notes that the Government acknowledges, in its report, the persistence of several issues in relation to the implementation of the Technical Intern Training Programme. The Government indicates that several measures have been implemented in order to ensure appropriate working conditions and the safety and health of trainees, such as: (i) the review in February 2022 of the Operational Guidelines for the Technical Intern Training Programme, which sets out the necessary measures to be taken by supervising organizations and implementing organizations in order to ensure the proper and smooth operation of the programme; (ii) the handing of the Technical Intern Trainee Handbook containing information on relevant regulations and support services to all trainees at the time of their entry to Japan; (iii) the establishment of consultation services in trainees' native languages and, since April 2021, of a Technical Intern Training SOS/Urgent Consultation Counter to respond to particularly urgent cases, such as assault and intimidation, and quickly identify cases of human rights violations; (iv) support for changing training sites in case of human rights violations, and the provision of appropriate protection to interns with temporary accommodation; (v) the strengthening of the human resources of the Organization for Technical Intern Training (OTIT) with 587 staff members as of 31 March 2020; and (vi) the conclusion of memoranda of cooperation with 14 countries of origin, as of 31 March 2021.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the OTIT regularly conducts on-site inspections of implementing and supervising organizations based on the Act on Proper Technical Intern Training and Protection of Technical Intern Trainees, 2016, and, also, upon the occurrence of fatal accidents with a view to preserving materials related to the cause of death. The Government states that, from April 2020 to March 2021, 20,671 on-site inspections were carried out by the OTIT and violations were observed in 63.4 per cent of the inspections, mainly regarding poor accommodation facilities, inappropriate payment of remuneration, inadequate notifications and reports and inadequate preparation and keeping of books and documents. The Government adds that, in 2021, the Labour Standards Inspectorate provided supervision guidance to 9,036 workplaces where violations of labour laws were initially identified, issued corrective recommendations to 6,556 workplaces where violations were confirmed, and referred 25 cases to the Public Prosecutor's Office. The Government adds that, in 2021, the prefectural labour offices, the Labour Standards Inspectorate and the OTIT jointly conducted inspections and investigations in 37 implementing organizations suspected, inter alia, of forced labour under the Technical Intern Training Programme, and corrective recommendations were issued in 30 cases.

Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Advisory Panel of Experts for the Ideal Form of the Technical Intern Training Programme and Specified Skilled Worker System was set up under the auspices of the Ministerial Conference on Acceptance of and Coexistence with Foreign Nationals to review the implementation of the programme, identify issues and discuss ways to properly accept foreign workers. The Advisory Panel submitted an interim report to the Minister of Justice in May 2023, which suggests abolishing the current Technical Intern Training Programme and establishing a new programme because of the discrepancy between the current programme's objective and the reality. The Advisory Panel pointed out that the guidance, supervision and support provided by supervising organizations and the OTIT are currently insufficient in several aspects. In that regard, the Government states that it will consider constructively dissolving the current Technical Intern Training Programme and establishing a new programme based on the Advisory Panel's further discussions in the future. More particularly, several measures are currently under consideration, such as: (i) allowing trainees to change employers while keeping some restrictions; (ii) providing assistance to foreign workers so that they can acquire the necessary language skills before they start working in Japan; (iii) raising the capability level of supervising organizations and supporting recipient companies and trainees by making eligibility requirements for supervising organizations stricter from the perspective of preventing and eliminating human rights abuses; and (iv) reorganizing the operating structure of the OTIT.

The Committee takes due note of this information. The Committee notes that in their observations, the NIPPON KEIDANREN and the JTUC-RENGO highlight that any new system should not be merely a name change, but a fundamental reform of the current system in order to adequately protect migrant workers' rights. As regards the Special Skilled Worker visa programme, established in 2018, the JTUC-RENGO indicates that it has received several inquiries regarding the programme, similar to those received regarding the Technical Intern Training Programme, in particular relating to wages, working hours and harassment. The JTUC-RENGO therefore also recommends undertaking an effective review of the Special Skilled Worker visa programme, together with the establishment of a new system for technical interns, in order to avoid creating the same vulnerabilities to labour abuses. In the view of the JTUC-RENGO, the Government should also foster a multicultural environment, including through a national debate on the acceptance of migrant workers.

The Committee takes due note of the efforts made by the Government but notes with concern the persistence of labour rights violations and abusive working conditions of technical training interns that could amount to forced labour. The Committee urges the Government to continue to take all necessary measures to ensure that technical training interns are adequately protected, including through capacity-building activities for law enforcement officers, effective inspection activities at receiving entities and accessible channels to report abusive situations, as well as prompt responses to such reports. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the recommendations made in that regard by the Advisory Panel of Experts for the Ideal Form of the Technical Intern Training Programme and Specified Skilled Worker System in its final report, as well as on any follow-up actions implemented by the Government. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of the violations of the rights of technical training interns reported, the number of cases that have led to prosecutions and convictions, with an indication of the situations that gave rise to these convictions.

2. Wartime sexual slavery and industrial forced labour. The Committee recalls that it has been examining the issue of sexual slavery (so called "comfort women") and industrial forced labour during the Second World War since 1995. It notes that, in their joint observations, the FKTU and the KCTU refer to a decision handed down on 30 October 2018 by the Supreme Court of the Republic of Korea that required two Japanese companies to pay compensation to Korean victims subjected to forced labour during the Japanese occupation of Korea (Case No. 2013 Da 61381). The FKTU and the KCTU add that it is estimated that at least 800,000 Koreans were mobilized into forced labour and conscription at that time, and that there is an urgent need for the Government of Japan and involved companies to provide a comprehensive range of measures to respect and restore the victims' rights, whose number continues to decline with the passing years. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, in its view, the decision from the Supreme Court clearly violates the 1965 Agreement concluded between Japan and the Republic of Korea which settled such issues.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in March 2023, the Government of the Republic of Korea proposed a third-party compensation scheme for South Korean victims of forced labour during the Japanese occupation of Korea to be funded by voluntary contributions from the private sector of South Korea. The Japanese Government states that it officially welcomed the announced measures.

As regards the issue of "comfort women", the Committee notes the Government's repeated statement that it has no intention of denying or trivializing the issue. The Government adds that it dealt sincerely with issues of reparations, property and claims pertaining to the Second World War, including the "comfort women" issue, under the San Francisco Peace Treaty and other bilateral instruments, such as the 1965 and 2015 Agreements concluded with the Republic of Korea. In that context, the Government indicates that it cooperated to establish the Asian Women's Fund (AWF), dissolved in 2007, which gave atonement money from private sector donations to 285 women, and contributed to the Reconciliation and Healing Foundation established by the Republic of Korea which provided financial support to 35 of the 47 former “comfort women” who were alive at the time of the 2015 Agreement, and to the bereaved families of 64 of the 199 former “comfort women” who were deceased at the time. It adds that, in 2018, the Republic of Korea unilaterally announced the dissolution of the Foundation. The Government indicates that, since 2018, Japanese courts have not dealt with any new case relating to “comfort women” or former civilian workers from the Republic of Korea.

Recalling that several wartime victims refused to accept the arrangements under the 2015 Agreement, the Committee notes with concern that no concrete measures have been taken since 2018 by the Government to resolve the issues of “comfort women” and industrial forced labour during the Second World War. It further notes that, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee also regretted that the Government had made no progress and continued to deny its obligation to address the continuing violations of the victims’ human rights and the lack of effective remedies and full reparation to all victims of past human rights violations (CCPR/C/JPN/CO/7, 30 November 2022). Given the seriousness and long-standing nature of the case, the Committee urges the Government to make every effort to achieve reconciliation with the surviving victims, in particular those who have refused to accept the 2015 Agreement, and to ensure that adequate measures are taken, without further delay, to respond to the expectations and achieve resolution of the claims made by the aged surviving victims of wartime industrial forced labour and military sexual slavery, the number of whom is continuing to decline with the passing years.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 3(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Vulnerable situation of domestic workers to forced labour. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the Government’s information, in its report, regarding the measures it has continued to take to protect migrant domestic workers from abusive practices and conditions of employment that could amount to forced labour.

(a) New legislation. The Committee takes due note of the adoption of Regulation No. 63 of 2020 governing agencies for the recruitment of non-Jordanian domestic workers, which provides for a number of measures aimed at ensuring better conditions of recruitment for these workers. These include:

- Sections 3(a) and 8(a)(i), allowing the recruitment of non-Jordanian domestic workers only through licensed recruitment agencies that operate in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation, and prohibiting agencies from recruiting workers other than through a licensed entity in a country of origin that has signed agreements or memoranda with the Kingdom of Jordan.
- Sections 8(b)(vii) and 9(e), requiring these recruitment agencies to secure private accommodations for domestic workers and prohibiting agencies and homeowners from charging worker fees or deducting any part of their wages to cover recruitment costs.
- Section 12, empowering the Ministry of Labour (MoL) to inspect the agencies at any time to ascertain and verify the extent of their compliance with the law, and allowing the head of the Directorate of Domestic Workers to take action and issue sanctions against a violating agency, including suspension, and the MoL to impose harsher sanctions, such as fines or permanent closure of the agency’s license if the violation constitutes a serious breach of human rights or of the legislation in force (exploitation or employment of domestic workers as daily labourers, seizing of their wages, physical or sexual assault, mistreatment).

In addition, the MoL has issued instructions for agencies operating the recruitment of non-Jordanian domestic workers pursuant to Regulation No. 63 of 2020, which provide additional protection for non-Jordanian domestic workers through the regulation of their conditions of employment. For example, under section 13, the MoL may refuse to grant or renew a work permit if it is found that the homeowner or whoever resides with the worker has violated any of his or her corporal rights; found to have sexually assaulted him or her; delayed payment of wages; or mistreated him or her in any way. The Committee also notes that Regulation No. 90/2009 regarding domestic workers, cooks, gardeners and similar categories, as amended in 2020, specifically regulates the working conditions of these workers, without distinction of whether or not they are Jordanian, and sets the responsibilities of the homeowners/employers in this regard, as well as the domestic workers' rights.

(b) Procedure to change employers. The Committee takes note of the Government's detailed information relating to the procedure to transfer to another employer in case of a complaint for violation of the Labour Act and/or the Regulation on domestic workers, as well as in cases of sexual or physical assault.

In the former case, a procedure is in place which entails the possibility of an amicable settlement or, otherwise, a report against the violating homeowner and a judicial procedure during which he or she is forbidden to recruit or arrange the transfer of a worker to work for him for a period determined by the Minister (section 11(d) of Regulation No. 90/2009). In the latter case, the workers are entitled to leave the employment and claim their rights. If the domestic worker wishes to work for another homeowner, the agency may transfer the worker to another homeowner without the current homeowner's consent. If the worker refuses to work for another homeowner and wishes to return to the home country, the homeowner will then be denied the right to renew the worker's work permit; to recruit another domestic worker or to have another domestic worker transferred to him/her for the period determined by the Minister of Labour; or to replace the domestic worker within a 90 day period from the date of the worker's entry into the country or within a 30 day period from the date on which the homeowner receives the worker. The Government indicates that, in 2021, there occurred 8 153 transfers from one homeowner to another, although the nature of and reasons for these transfers have yet to be classified.

(c) Complaints. The Committee notes the Government's information and statistics regarding the complaints received by the Directorate of Domestic Workers of the MoL, both in cases directed against homeowners and the recruitment agencies. The Government also refers to the electronic platform "Hemayah" ("Protection"), launched in Arabic and English in 2020 and being translated into ten different languages, which is being developed to allow complaints to be filed electronically. The form includes questions related to forced labour indicators; if more than one indicator is signalled, the complaint is referred to the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU). The Government indicates that, in 2021, four complaints concerning suspected cases of trafficking in persons falling within the remit of the Ministry of Labour were received by the AHTU. In addition, 18 complaints were received in the framework of which action was taken against recruitment agencies (i.e., warning or suspension), and there were 92 complaints relating to the withholding of female domestic workers' travel documents, all of which were resolved.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect migrant domestic workers from abusive practices and conditions of work that could in certain cases amount to forced labour. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the application of the new regulations in place, in particular on the number and nature of: (i) inspections and controls conducted of recruitment agencies and households; (ii) violations identified and penalties imposed on both recruitment agencies and employers/homeowners; and (iii) complaints made by domestic workers. The Committee also encourages the Government to compile and classify the nature, reasons and circumstances of the cases leading to a transfer of employers, and to provide more information in this regard. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on cases in which indicators of forced labour have been identified and the cases have been referred to the AHTU, as well as on the penal action initiated as a result.

2. Trafficking in persons. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the various measures adopted by the Government to strengthen the action to combat trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation. In particular, it notes the following:

- (i) Legislative and institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons. The Committee notes with interest the Government's information that the Anti-Human Trafficking Act No. 9 of 2009 was amended by Act No. 10 of 2021, which amongst others, increases the penalties under section 9 of the Act; provides that victims receive appropriate assistance and care, including for their rehabilitation and reintegration; provides for the establishment of the Human Trafficking Victims Assistance Fund to grant the requisite assistance to victims and those affected by human trafficking crimes (section 14). Furthermore, under section 17 of the Act, a number of public prosecutors or specialized judges will be designated in each court of first instance to hear cases of human trafficking. The Committee also takes note of the adoption of the National Strategy and Action Plan to Prevent Human Trafficking (2019-2022), which includes several dimensions such as awareness-raising, including among refugees; ensuring the prompt identification of potential victims; providing full and adequate protection and assistance to victims; and broadening the scope of partnership with civil society organizations.
- (j) Identification and protection of victims. The Committee notes that the MoL continues to hold training courses for labour inspectors throughout the country, including a training that enabled twelve labour inspectors to become trainers in dealing with trafficking in persons cases. The labour inspectors who took part in the course for trainers have conducted seven training courses for 75 labour inspectors, covering how to identify victims of trafficking and to refer them to service providers and the competent authorities. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a draft National Referral Mechanism and Standard Operating Procedures for dealing with and protecting victims of trafficking (NRM SOPs) has been prepared which lays down a set of indicators for identifying victims and sets out the subsequent procedure for sheltering, protecting and assisting victims.
- (k) Investigations and prosecutions. The Committee takes note of the statistics provided by the Government regarding the number of cases of trafficking in persons: in 2021, there were 35 cases (12 for sexual exploitation, 19 for forced domestic labour, and 4 for forced labour); between 1 January and 30 April 2022, there were 11 cases (4 for sexual exploitation, 6 for forced domestic labour, and 1 for forced labour).

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken for the effective implementation of the different dimensions of the National Strategy and Action Plan to Prevent Human Trafficking, as well as on any assessment of the results achieved, the difficulties encountered and the measures taken thereon. The Committee also encourages the Government to further strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to identify and prosecute cases of trafficking in persons, for both labour and sexual exploitation, and to provide information on the cases referred to the public prosecutors or specialized judges and on the penalties applied to the perpetrators. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made in relation to the adoption of the NRM SOPs and the number of victims of trafficking identified and provided with assistance, either through these procedures or through the Human Trafficking Victims Assistance Fund.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex, received on 31 August 2022.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Forced labour of migrant workers. The Committee previously referred to the situation of migrant workers who were victims of abuse and exploitation that could amount to forced labour and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to protect them. It notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain specific information in this regard. The Committee nevertheless notes from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) website the launch of a project, entitled Labour Migration Programme–Central Asia, covering Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, in 2022. The project aims at contributing to improved management of labour migration and harnessing human mobility for development in both countries of origin and destination. The Committee further notes that according to the Concept of Migration Policy for 2023–27 adopted by Government Decree No. 961 of 30 November 2022, deficiencies in the monitoring system for migrant workers and the growth of illegal labour migration are among the main issues in the field of labour migration.

The Committee further notes that, in its observations, the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex indicates that migrant workers are at risk of exploitation and often subject to abusive employer practices such as retention of passports, physical abuse and non-payment of wages. These observations refer to several cases of forced labour exacted from foreigners from the Russian Federation, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. The Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex also points to complicity and corruption among law enforcement officials involved in forced labour cases.

The Committee also observes that, in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) expressed concern over reports that migrant workers face abuse and recommended increasing measures to prevent and fight exploitation of migrant workers, including by increasing labour inspections (CERD/C/KAZ/CO/8–10). The Committee also notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed concern at reports of forced and bonded labour of some migrant workers in the tobacco, cotton and construction industries, as well as of some female domestic workers subjected to domestic servitude (E/C.12/KAZ/CO/2).

The Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all migrant workers, regardless of their legal status, are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions of work that could amount to forced labour. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that migrant workers have access to information about their rights, effective procedures to seek redress and obtain compensation, as well as adequate protection and assistance. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of inspections and investigations carried out in economic sectors in which migrant workers are mostly occupied, including in the tobacco, cotton and construction industries and domestic work, and the results of such inspections.

2. Trafficking in persons. In relation to the action taken to ensure the protection of victims of trafficking and the prosecution of perpetrators, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on: (i) the adoption of the new Action Plan to Prevent and Combat Crimes Related to Trafficking in Persons (Action Plan) for 2021–23; (ii) the establishment of the Interdepartmental Commission to Combat Trafficking in Persons; (iii) the elaboration of a bill on combating trafficking in persons which adopts an integrated approach to prevention and the protection of victims as well as the investigation and suppression of trafficking in persons; (iv) the adoption in 2020 and 2021 of amendments to the Supreme Court Decree No. 7 of 29 December 2012 on the enforcement of the legislation establishing liability for trafficking in persons to clarify the elements of the offence of trafficking in persons and the elements which differentiate it from other offences related to trafficking in persons. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, under section 128 (Trafficking in persons) of the Criminal Code, in 2021, five cases of trafficking in persons offences were investigated and eight persons were convicted, of whom six were sentenced to imprisonment.

The Committee notes that in its 2022 concluding observations, the CERD expressed concern that despite the efforts to fight trafficking in persons, the number of persons subjected to forced labour and sexual exploitation continued to grow in Kazakhstan. It further expressed concern over reports of complicity among some law enforcement officers in trafficking in persons (CERD/C/KAZ/CO/8-10).

The Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons for both labour and sexual exploitation. The Committee hopes that measures will be taken for the adoption of the bill on combating trafficking in persons which would assist with the adoption of a coordinated and systematic approach to combating trafficking in persons and requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to take measures to effectively implement the Action Plan for 2021–23 and provide information on any assessment of its implementation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on investigations, prosecutions and convictions as well as the specific penalties applied under section 128 of the Criminal Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex, received on 31 August 2022.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Criminal Code. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that under section 174 (incitement of social, national, tribal, racial, class or religious hatred) of the Criminal Code, 19 persons were convicted to the sentences of restriction of freedom or deprivation of liberty, both involving compulsory labour, during the first five months of 2022; 19 persons in 2021; and 14 persons in 2020. No persons were punished with the sentences involving compulsory labour under sections 400 (violation of procedure for organizing and holding peaceful assemblies) and 404 (forming, leading and participation in activities of illegal public and other associations) of the Criminal Code from 2021 to the first five months of 2022.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex regarding the application in practice of section 274 (spreading of false information) of the Criminal Code. In particular, the observations refer to the case of a political activist who, in 2020, was accused of publishing some negative information about the ruling party, and sentenced to three years of restriction of freedom and 100 hours of community service. Furthermore, the Committee notes that in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern that the broadly worded provisions of section 174 of the Criminal Code may lead to unnecessary or disproportionate interference with the right to freedom of expression (CERD/C/KAZ/CO/8-10). The Committee further notes that in its opinions No. 33/2021 and No. 43/2020, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention concluded that the arrests and detentions of the nine individuals resulted from the peaceful exercise of the rights to freedom of opinion and expression and that the detentions were arbitrary as they were based on overly broad and vague provisions of section 174 of the Criminal Code (A/HRC/WGAD/2021/33; A/HRC/WGAD/2020/43).

The Committee also notes that in the joint communication of 18 January 2022, the United Nations independent human rights experts expressed concern over the reported wide-scale arbitrary arrests and detentions of over 9,900 individuals, including civil society representatives, journalists and human rights defenders during the protests of January 2022. In its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee against Torture expressed deep concern about many consistent reports indicating acts of intimidation, threats and arbitrary detention of human rights defenders in connection with their human rights work (CAT/C/KAZ/CO/4).

The Committee notes with deep concern the information relating to the arrests, detentions and convictions of persons who express opinions and views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, which have led or may lead to penalties involving compulsory labour. The Committee once again recalls that under Article 1(a) of the Convention, persons holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system shall not be subject to punishments that would require them to work, including compulsory prison labour, community service and correctional work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, no one who expresses political views or opposes the established political, social or economic system in a peaceful manner, can be sentenced to penalties under which compulsory labour may be imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to review sections 174, 274, 400 and 404 of the Criminal Code, for example by clearly restricting their scope to situations connected with the use of violence, or by suppressing penalties involving compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as information on the application of sections 174, 274, 400 and 404 of the Criminal Code, including the number and grounds for prosecutions and convictions made under each section, and the type of penalties imposed.

Article 1(d). Penalties for participating in strikes. Criminal Code. The Government indicates that no cases have been considered by courts under section 402 of the Criminal Code, which provides for penal sanctions for incitement to continue a strike that has been declared illegal by a court. The Committee notes the Government's indication that within the framework of the Action Plan for the implementation of the recommendations of the ILO Committee on the Application of Standards in relation to the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), it is being considered to amend section 402 of the Criminal Code by limiting its scope to the calls for continued participation in a strike recognized illegal by a court when it has inflicted substantial harm to the rights and legitimate interests of citizens or organizations or legally protected interests of the society or the State or has entailed mass disorders.

Recalling that the imposition of compulsory labour as a penalty for the mere fact of organizing or peacefully participating in strikes is prohibited by the Convention and referring to its comments made under Convention No. 87, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal sanctions involving compulsory labour under section 402 of the Criminal Code. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard and to continue to provide information on the application of section 402 of the Criminal Code, including the number and nature of the penalties applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2024.]

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Action Plan. Implementation and monitoring. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that within the framework of the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons 2013–17, 800 law enforcement and criminal justice officers as well as 60 trainers of trainers were trained and several public awareness-raising campaigns through vernacular radio stations, drama, community involvement, social media and television and print media were undertaken. The Government further indicates that the Counter Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee has: (i) developed the draft National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons 2021–26; (ii) introduced a module to collect data on trafficking of adults; (iii) trained about 1,700 officers in the criminal justice system and other law enforcement officers; (iv) carried out community engagement and awareness-raising programmes especially in communities vulnerable to trafficking in persons; (v) ensured that bilateral labour agreements were signed between Kenya and the United Arab Emirates, Qatar and Saudi Arabia, in order to reduce fraudulent employment opportunities abroad. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, and requests it to take the necessary measures to implement the National Plan of Action 2021–26. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard as well as on the assessment undertaken by the Counter Trafficking in Persons Advisory Committee of the results achieved and the difficulties encountered in the implementation of the National Plan of Action and the activities relating to combating trafficking in persons.

2. Protection and assistance to victims. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the Counter Trafficking in Persons National Assistance Trust Fund has been operationalized and that since 2019 the Government has been providing funds to this end. The Trust Fund has been used to repatriate 81 victims of trafficking in and out of Kenya and another 30 victims of trafficking are being rehabilitated through a non-governmental organization, with support from the Trust Fund. The Government further indicates that the National Referral Mechanism Guidelines for assisting victims of trafficking, developed in 2016, have been disseminated in 23 counties.

Regarding the assistance provided to victims by the Advisory Committee, the Government states that 350 returnees from Gulf Cooperation Council countries were screened at the coastal area and potential victims of trafficking were sent to appropriate services. The existing Government facility is being refurbished to serve as a shelter for victims of trafficking. The Committee also notes that the National Employment Authority has a feature on its website for overseas workers to report exploitation, including potential trafficking crimes, and to request assistance. The National Employment Authority has also launched a toll-free helpline to enable migrant workers in distress to report their challenges and difficulties.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of May 2021, expressed concern about Kenyan nationals, predominantly women, being coerced by employment agencies to work under exploitative conditions abroad (CCPR/C/KEN/CO/4).

The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect Kenyan nationals from being exploited abroad, in particular by further developing awareness activities on safe recruitment processes and monitoring the activities of employment agencies. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that victims of trafficking in Kenya and victims returning from abroad are provided with adequate protection, assistance, rehabilitation services and compensation, as provided for under the National Referral Mechanisms Guidelines and the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act No. 8 of 2010.

3. Prosecution. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Police Standards of Operations (SOPS) have been prepared with the aim of guiding police officers in handling trafficking in persons cases at the pretrial stage. In addition, the Prosecutor's Manual gives direction to prosecutors on how to categorize cases related to trafficking in persons, charge offenders and impose the appropriate penalty for each offence. The Government also indicates that Guidelines for Identification of Victims of Trafficking have been developed to help the police as well as other authorized public officers to identify, screen and interview victims of trafficking, which would eventually contribute to rescuing victims, assist in the arrest of perpetrators and ensure enough evidence for court proceedings.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of May 2021, expressed concern at the inadequate implementation of the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act No. 8 of 2010 and at the low rate of convictions for trafficking in persons (CCPR/C/KEN/CO/4).

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure the adequate identification of cases of trafficking and prompt investigations so that the perpetrators are prosecuted and punished. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information in this regard, including on the number of persons prosecuted and convicted and the nature of the penalties applied.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1). Compulsory labour in connection with the conservation of natural resources. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend sections 13–18 of the Chief's Authority Act (Cap. 128), as amended by Act No. 10 of 1997, which go beyond the exception provided for under Article 2(2)(e) of the Convention concerning "minor communal services". Under sections 13–18 of the Act, able-bodied male persons between 18 and 50 years of age may be required to perform any work or service in connection with the conservation of natural resources for up to 60 days in any year.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Chief's Authority Act was repealed and replaced by the Fair Administrative Act No. 4 of 2015. The Committee, however, observes that the Fair Administrative Act No. 4 of 2015 does not explicitly refer to or repeal the Chief's Authority Act, and that the copy of the Chief's Authority Act, Revised Edition 2017, communicated by the Government, retains the above-mentioned sections 13–18. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the specific provisions which repeal sections 13–18 of the Chiefs' Act or otherwise to take the necessary measures to ensure that these sections are repealed, in order to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention and with practice, since the Government previously indicated that these provisions had never been enforced.

Article 25. Adequate penalties for the exaction of forced labour. The Committee has previously referred to section 266 of the Penal Code, under which any person who compels a person to labour is guilty of a misdemeanour, punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or with a fine, or with both (section 36). However, if this offence is committed for the purpose of exploitation, the person committing the offence shall be charged with the appropriate offence as specified in the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act (section 266A). According to section 3 of the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act, the offence of trafficking in persons for the purpose of exploitation is punishable with imprisonment for a term of not less than 30 years or to a fine, or to both. The Committee takes due note that in its report on the application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), the Government indicates that it has drafted an amendment to the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act to remove the option of a fine in lieu of imprisonment.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that when the sanctions envisaged to punish forced labour consist of a fine or a very short prison sentence, they do not constitute an effective sanction considering the seriousness of the violation and the fact that the sanctions need to be sufficiently dissuasive. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt the amendment to the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act so as to ensure that trafficking can not be punished with a simple fine. It also requests the Government to clarify how the provisions of section 266 and section 266A are applied in practice, giving examples of court decisions handed down on the basis of these sections and indicating the type of penalties imposed.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that the first report of the Government on the application of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, has not been received. The Committee requests the Government to provide the first report on the Protocol of 2014 along with its next report on the Convention due in 2025.

The Committee notes the observations of the Kyrgyzstan Federation of Trade Unions (FPK), received on 1 November 2022.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Implementation and assessment of the action plan. The Committee notes the Government's information on the adoption of the Programme to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2022–25 and its Action Plan by Cabinet of Ministers' Resolution No. 227 of 2022. The Government also indicates that through Cabinet of Ministers' Decree No. 252 of 2021, the Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Migration has been designated as the State executive body responsible for the development and implementation of the national policy in the field of trafficking in persons. Coordination councils have also been established in the regions to serve as an effective mechanism for interdepartmental cooperation between State bodies and civil society to combat trafficking in persons at the local level. The Committee notes that both the Government and the FPK recognize that despite these measures Kyrgyzstan remains a country of origin and transit for trafficking in persons for the purposes of sexual and labour exploitation and, to a lesser extent, a country of destination.

The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, through the effective implementation of the Programme to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2022–25 and its Action Plan. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as on the results of any monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the Programme and its Action Plan, and the action taken as a follow-up.

2. Identification and protection of victims. The Committee notes the Government's indication concerning the lack of effective measures to ensure early identification of victims of trafficking, including among vulnerable groups of women. The Committee also observes that the Programme for 2022–25 aims at developing the professional capacity of relevant bodies to identify victims of trafficking and ensuring effective collaboration of departmental agencies in the identification and referral of victims of trafficking (section 6 of the Programme). Section 4 of the Action Plan for 2022–25 contains various measures to improve protection and social assistance services provided to victims of trafficking, including the establishment of a shelter.

The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts with regard to the identification of victims of trafficking for purposes of both sexual and labour exploitation, and to ensure that appropriate protection and assistance is provided to such victims. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims who have been identified and on the nature of the assistance and protection granted. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the information provided to victims relating to safe migration and fair recruitment.

3. Law enforcement. The Committee notes that according to the Government and the FPK, effective measures are needed to address the lack of effectiveness of prosecutions and the root causes of corruption among law enforcement bodies with a view to combating trafficking in persons. The Committee further observes that the Government's report does not provide information on investigations, prosecutions or convictions handed down for cases of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all cases of trafficking in persons are adequately identified and subject to thorough investigations, so as to facilitate the prosecution and imposition of effective and dissuasive penalties on perpetrators, including complicit officials. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard, as well as on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and specific penalties applied under section 166 of the Criminal Code of 2021, which criminalizes trafficking in persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its 2022 concluding observations, expressed concern about reports of undue government pressure on human rights defenders, lawyers, politicians, journalists and other individuals for expressing their opinion, including the initiation of criminal proceedings against bloggers and journalists (CCPR/C/KGZ/CO/3). The Committee also notes the statement of the United Nations Human Rights Office spokesperson of 26 October 2022 indicating the arrests and initiation of criminal charges against more than 20 people, including activists and bloggers, for organizing mass riots.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of forced or compulsory labour as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In this regard, the Committee has stressed that the range of activities that must be protected from punishment involving compulsory labour, includes the right to freedom of expression, which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media, as well as various other recognized rights, such as the right of association and assembly (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302).

The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in practice persons who peacefully express certain political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system are not punished with penalties involving compulsory labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL), which were received with the Government's report. It also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023, in which the IOE reiterates statements made by the employer delegates in the discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference (Conference Committee) in June 2023. It further notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee takes note of the detailed discussion that was held by the Conference Committee, regarding the application of the Convention by Lebanon.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant domestic workers to conditions of forced labour. (i) Legal protection. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the lack of adequate protection for migrant domestic workers in law and practice who continued to face abusive working conditions that amount to forced labour, such as passport confiscation, high recruitment fees, non-payment of wages, deprivation of liberty, and physical and sexual abuse. The Conference Committee urged the Government to provide migrant domestic workers with adequate legal protection, including by ensuring the reinstatement and effective implementation of the revised Standard Unified Contract (SUC). It also requested the Government to provide information on any legislative changes adopted or envisaged to replace the Kafala system with a work permit system that allows domestic migrant workers to change employer. The Committee notes that the CGTL indicates, in its observations, that it considers that the Labour Code should be amended to include domestic workers.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that the latest draft Labour Code, prepared and sent to the Cabinet of Ministers in 2022, includes domestic workers in its scope of application, according to the new section 15, "in everything that does not contravene the Standard Unified Contract (SUC) for domestic workers, issued by a decision of the Minister of Labour". The Committee recalls, as indicated by the Government in its written information to the Conference Committee, that the implementation of the revised SUC, which was adopted by the Ministry of Labour (MoL) in 2020 and included new protections for domestic workers, was suspended by the State Shura Council. In the meantime, the SUC of 2009 still applies. Most importantly, the revised SUC would allow workers to terminate their contract without the consent of their employer. The Government indicates that the MoL is in the process of reviewing the previous draft SUC, taking into account the rights of all stakeholders. The Committee also observes the Government's indication that the MoL has issued Order No. 1/1 of 5 January 2023 regularizing the status of women migrant domestic workers who perform jobs other than those specified in the work permit.

The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to provide migrant domestic workers with adequate legal protection. To that end, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures, to ensure the adoption of the draft Labour Code. It requests the Government to indicate whether a revised SUC will be adopted or the suspension of the revised 2020 SUC will be lifted, with a view to allowing workers to terminate their employment at certain intervals or after having given reasonable notice during the duration of the contract, without the consent of their employer. Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to provide concrete information on the situations covered by Order No. 1/1 of 5 January 2023, for example, the number of workers concerned, the possibility to change employers, and information on its application in practice.

(ii) Access to complaints mechanisms. As requested by the Committee in its previous comments, the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure that migrant workers who are victims of abusive practices and working conditions amounting to forced labour have access to justice, including adequate protection, assistance and remedies.

The Committee observes that workers can submit a complaint to the Department of Labour Inspection, Protection and Safety and to the MoL's regional labour offices and that, by virtue of Ministerial Decision No. 1/168 of 2015, recruitment agencies are required to report disputes between workers and employers to the MoL and when appropriate to file a complaint. The Committee notes the Government's information that, in 2020, it activated a hotline to enable foreign domestic workers to communicate directly and easily with the MoL to lodge complaints. The Government indicates that a media awareness campaign to promote the hotline was delivered in English, Arabic and in other relevant languages. According to the Government, 77 complaints were received by the MoL in 2020 through this hotline. Throughout 2022, 89 complaints concerning women migrant workers were sent to the MoL: (i) 62 were made by an employer against recruitment agencies; (ii) 20 were made by embassies, consulates, associations and trade unions, the bulk of which concerned employers' failure to pay women migrant workers their wages (15 were resolved); and (iii) 7 were made by women domestic workers themselves against recruitment agencies, 6 of which were resolved.

The Committee observes that the number of complaints reported appears to be low, especially considering that the vast majority of complaints are lodged by employers against agencies. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that migrant domestic workers can easily and effectively lodge complaints with the competent authorities and seek redress in the event of a violation of their rights or abuses, without fear of retaliation. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of migrant domestic workers who have had recourse to complaints mechanisms, as well as more specific information on the violations denounced, the follow-up given to the complaints, and the remedies obtained.

Article 25. Enforcement and penalties. (i) Violations of labour rights. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to hire and train additional labour inspectors and increase their material resources to carry out labour inspections in the domestic work sector and provide details to the Committee on the training received by labour inspectors, the number of inspections in the domestic work sector, the number of offences detected, and the penalties imposed with regard to infringements of the labour legislation. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information in this regard but indicates that while migrant domestic workers are not covered by the Labour Code, they may still file civil suits on the basis of the Obligations and Contracts Act.

The Committee recalls that the effective imposition of penalties for violations of labour rights is an essential element in combating forced labour, as forced labour practices are, in most cases, characterized by the combination of a number of violations of labour legislation which must be punished as such. Moreover, taken as a whole, these violations may constitute the offence of forced labour, which in itself gives rise to specific criminal penalties. The Committee observes that the SUC of 2009 which contains provisions on domestic labour rights is applicable and that compliance with these rights needs to be effectively monitored. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors, or any other relevant law enforcement body, to allow for the effective monitoring of the working conditions of domestic migrant workers. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as information on the number of inspections carried out, number and nature of violations detected, and penalties applied for such violations.

(ii) Monitoring of recruitment agencies. The Committee notes the Government's information regarding the recent adoption of certain decisions by the MoL pertaining to recruitment agencies and the status of women migrant domestic workers, in particular Decision No. 41/1 of 11 May 2022 on the regulation of the activity of agencies for the recruitment of women migrant workers for domestic service (article 28 of which prohibits them from charging fees to domestic workers). The Government indicates that a number of administrative measures were taken against agencies specializing in the recruitment of women migrant domestic workers for violating Decision No. 41/1, including the suspension of their activities or revoking of their licenses, following the receipt of complaints. The Committee notes in this regard that the Government representative had indicated, during the Conference Committee discussion, that 77 recruitment agencies (20 per cent of all registered agencies) were closed. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to monitor recruitment agencies and to ensure that recruitment fees are not charged to workers, and to provide information on violations detected in this regard. It encourages the Government to take measures to build the capacity and raise awareness of recruitment agencies on migrant workers' labour rights and the need for fair recruitment. It requests the Government to provide concrete information on the types of violations committed by the recruitment agencies that led to their suspension or closure and the procedure in such cases.

(iii) Penal sanctions for the exaction of forced labour. Concerning the obstacles faced by migrant domestic workers when seeking to report abuses, the Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to introduce and apply effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties on employers and labour recruiters who engage migrant workers in situations amounting to forced labour, and to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies in this area.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the General Directorate of General Security (GDGS) investigates any complaints involving domestic workers and, under the supervision of the competent public prosecutor, has the authority to initiate court proceedings on a case-by-case basis and takes the "requisite administrative measures" against those persons who are found to have committed abusive acts against domestic workers. The Government also refers to Act No. 205 of 2020, which provides for sanctions for the offence of sexual harassment by all employers, in particular in the context of a dependency or employment relationship.

The Government also shares the information received from the Human Trafficking Repression and Morals Protection Bureau regarding the number of cases of forced labour of migrant domestic workers that have been investigated and prosecuted. The Committee notes that the data provided does not relate to investigations, prosecutions and convictions of employers who subject domestic workers for abusive practices or forced labour. It observes that according to the data, some victims in cases of trafficking or sexual offences have also been arrested for desertion of the home of their employer or have remained with their employer. There is no detailed information on the circumstances of the cases reported in these statistics. The Committee notes in this regard that a 2020 ILO, IOM and UN Women report entitled "Women Migrant Domestic Workers in Lebanon: A Gender Perspective" shows that women migrant domestic workers have rarely been able to hold their employers to account by filing criminal complaints and that a study from 2020 revealed that 91 per cent of hearings in cases involving migrant domestic workers were conducted in absentia, suggesting that women are deported before their case is even referred to the courts. The same report reveals other violations of these women's right to access to justice, including regularly convicting domestic workers of "running away" from their employer even when they are facing severe abuse and overlooking cases of human trafficking or forced labour.

The Committee observes with concern the lack of information on sanctions against employers who subject domestic workers to abusive practices or practices amounting to forced labour. The Committee recalls in this regard that Article 25 of the Convention requires Governments to ensure that penal sanctions are imposed for the exaction of forced labour. The Committee considers that the lack of sanctions imposed on employers, coupled with the challenges faced by migrant domestic workers in effectively lodging complaints and the lack of effective monitoring over conditions of work of domestic workers, may result both in migrant domestic workers being placed in situations of accrued vulnerability to forced labour, and victims of forced labour not being identified, recognized and protected as such. Underlining the importance of sufficiently dissuasive penalties being applied to those who impose forced labour practices, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to investigate and prosecute employers who subject migrant domestic workers to practices amounting to forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies in this area, as well as on the number of cases of forced labour of migrant domestic workers investigated and prosecuted, and the number of convictions handed down and penalties imposed on the offending employers. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the victims in such cases are adequately supported, rehabilitated and compensated.

While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee notes with deep concern the lack of adequate protection for migrant domestic workers and urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure they benefit from the protection of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee trusts that the direct contacts mission requested by the Conference Committee will be carried out in the near future, and that it will help the Government to expedite its efforts to eliminate the forced labour practices faced by migrant domestic workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's first report concerning the application of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930.

Articles 1(1), 2(1), and 25 of the Convention, and Article 2(a), (b), (c) and (f) of the Protocol. Effective abolition of the tenancy system. Over a number of years, the Committee has raised the issue of the existence of forced labour in tobacco plantations, in the form of debt bondage, based on a tenancy system (a practice in which a landowner grants access to land to a tenant and his family, who oblige themselves to pay back by producing crops for the landowner). In its latest comments, the Committee noted the Government's recognition that the tenancy system constituted a gross violation of human rights and its intention to review the Employment Act to abolish this practice.

The Committee notes with interest that section 4 of the Employment (Amendment) Act, 2021, introduces a prohibition against the exaction or imposition of forced or tenancy labour. According to this provision, any person who exacts or imposes forced or tenancy labour on another person or causes or permits another person to perform forced or tenancy labour, commits an offence and shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine and imprisonment for five years. For this purpose, tenancy labour is defined as "work or service performed by a person on a piece of land for the purpose of growing a crop where an employer pays remuneration to that person at the end of the growing season or after the sale of the crop" (section 4(3)).

The Government indicates in its report that it has commenced work on the implementation of section 4 of the Employment (Amendment) Act by conducting quantitative and qualitative surveys to collect information for the design of the interventions required. It further indicates that measures to prevent forced labour include economic empowerment programmes and social protection programmes for vulnerable groups, including cash transfers.

The Government also indicates that, while labour inspections may be conducted at any workplace, including in the informal economy, in practice, labour inspectors face difficulties in carrying out inspections due to limited human and financial resources. In order to strengthen the inspection services, the Ministry of Labour has concluded memoranda of understanding with some employers to intensify labour inspections and promote decent work in the tobacco sector.

The Committee also notes a study produced by the International Labour Office in 2021 that assesses employment and labour trends in the national tobacco sector, with a focus on the tenancy system according to which there is a broad consensus among stakeholders on the need to secure land tenure for tenant families as part of the policy response to abolish tenancy. There is also agreement that the design, implementation and monitoring of a timebound national policy road map for the abolition of tenancy will require intense and inclusive dialogue and coordination among all tobacco sector stakeholders, including growers and tenants. The Committee further notes that the Office has been implementing a project entitled Addressing decent work deficits and improving access to rights in Malawi's tobacco sector.

Lastly, the Committee observes that in their joint statement made in December 2022, various United Nations experts indicate that, despite the abolition of the tenancy system, serious concerns persist in relation to risks of forced labour and that reported cases affect over 7,000 adults and 3,000 children. The statement further highlights that tobacco farms in Malawi are usually located in remote areas where access to assistance and protection against labour rights abuses is limited, and action to prevent trafficking in persons is weak (UN press release, 21 December 2022).

While taking due note of the adoption of legislative measures prohibiting forced labour practices under the tenancy system, which constitutes an important first step, the Committee considers that these measures need to be accompanied by further coordinated and systematic action for the effective elimination of situations amounting to forced labour in the agricultural sector, especially in tobacco plantations.

Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen its efforts and take effective measures, in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, to:

- raise awareness about the prohibition of forced labour under the tenancy system among the public as well as relevant stakeholders;
- reinforce the capacities of the labour inspection services in order to ensure that they can adequately perform their duties, including in remote areas, and provide information on the number and periodicity of visits carried out by labour inspectors as well as on the violations detected. The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under the labour inspection Conventions;
- carry out the necessary qualitative and quantitative studies to identify the root causes of forced labour in agriculture, particularly in tobacco plantations, and design interventions to address such causes, including in relation to access to productive land by small farmers, access to regular employment and the fight against poverty;
- protect victims of forced labour and ensure their access to remedies;
- investigate and prosecute cases of forced labour and provide information on the number of prosecutions initiated, convictions handed down and sanctions applied in accordance with section 4 of the Employment (Amendment) Act, 2021.

The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made and the challenges faced in this regard.

Article 2(e) of the Protocol. Supporting due diligence to prevent and respond to the risks of forced or compulsory labour in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes with interest that according to section 41 of the Tobacco Industry Act (No. 10 of 2019), every registered grower shall, within a prescribed period, furnish a report to the Tobacco Commission (an entity established by the Act to regulate the production, growing, processing, importation, exportation and marketing of tobacco) containing information on growers' undertakings on issues of forced labour, fair treatment and safe environment for their workers. If the registered grower fails to comply with this obligation, or if the information provided does not satisfy the Tobacco Commission, their registration as a grower can be cancelled. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to support due diligence by private entities to prevent and respond to the risk of forced labour in the agricultural sector. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of section 41 of the Tobacco Industry Act, including good practices reported.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2013)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee previously noted the issue of abusive practices faced by migrant workers, such as confiscation of identification documents, non-payment of wages and inhumane treatment. The Committee also noted that most migrants are unaware of the procedure to lodge a complaint, or are reluctant to do so because they fear deportation due to their undocumented status.

The Committee notes that the Government provides in its report information on: (i) the adoption of the Regulation on Employment of Foreigners in the Maldives No.2021/R-16, by the Ministry of Economic Development which sets out the procedures for issuing work permits to foreigners, including the amount of fees to be paid by employers, as well as occupational safety and health requirements in the workplace; (ii) the Regulation on General Standards for Accommodations Arranged by Employers for their Employees No. 2021/R-15, which establishes the requirements for the accommodation provided by employers as regards lighting, air circulation, size, sanitation and water supply; (iii) the Regulation on Employment Agencies No. 2016/R-21, which sets out the procedure for the recruitment of employees by employment agencies, as well as the conditions for the registration and licensing of employment agencies. The Government indicates that the number of complaints lodged by foreigners with the Labour Relations Authority was 407 in 2019, 742 in 2020, 294 in 2021 and 298 in 2022. The Committee also notes that 24 employment agencies remained on the blacklist as of 2019 (2022 Government report on the application of the United Nations International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination).

The Committee further notes that in its 2023 report, the United Nations Working Group on discrimination against women and girls expressed concern that migrant workers lack special protection against exploitative conditions of work and that without adequate legal protection, migrants are not willing to report incidents of labour violations or violence to the authorities (A/HRC/53/39/Add.2). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts and take all necessary measures to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected against abusive practices and conditions that could amount to forced labour and are provided with effective and adequate protection, including redress and compensation. It further requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to monitor the effective implementation of the regulations adopted; carry out workplace inspections; and inform migrant workers of their rights and the complaint mechanisms available. The Committee also requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the number of complaints that have been lodged by or on behalf of migrant workers who are victims of abusive practices, as well as the number of violations detected and sanctions imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mexico

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1934)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes Mexico's ratification of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee notes the observations made by the Authentic Workers' Confederation of the Republic of Mexico (CAT) and the Confederation of Workers of Mexico (CTM), sent with the Government's report.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Systematic and coordinated action.

The Committee requested the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking, in particular with a view to strengthening the capacity and cooperation of the competent bodies. The Committee notes the adoption in 2021 of the internal regulations of the Inter-ministerial Committee for the prevention, punishment and eradication of crimes relating to trafficking in persons and for assistance for victims (Inter-institutional Committee), which is responsible for defining, coordinating and evaluating the implementation of State policy on trafficking in persons. This Committee adopts annual reports and a work programme (PACTI) to determine the activities to be carried out during the year.

The Committee also welcomes the detailed information provided by the Government regarding: (i) strengthening social and economic support programmes, with a view to reducing marginalization and poverty, which increase the risk of people falling victim to various forms of forced labour; (ii) the various communication and awareness-raising activities carried out by the authorities and the production of information materials; (iii) the adoption of the National Training Programme on trafficking in persons, the main objective of which is to develop skills and knowledge to improve the authorities' efforts to prevent, identify and prosecute offences and to protect victims; (iv) strengthening the legislative framework and/or establishing coordination committees at state level (20 out of 32); (v) the adoption of the Simplified Guide for victim assistance, which outlines the process to be followed, the Protocol on consular assistance for Mexican victims of trafficking in persons abroad and the Protocol for identifying and assisting migrant victims of trafficking in persons in Mexico; (vi) measures to inform and assist migrants in transit through the country.

The Committee notes that the CAT, in its observations, emphasizes that despite the laws in force, trafficking in persons remains a problem in the country and that the Government must continue to carry out controls in high-risk areas and pursue its efforts to inform and raise awareness among the population, the business sector and government institutions of the issues involved in trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes that in its 2023 report on trafficking in persons, the National Human Rights Committee (CNDH) emphasizes that trafficking in persons remains a complex challenge as Mexico is a country of origin, transit and destination for victims of trafficking. This complex situation calls for a global response and greater collaboration. The CNDH also considers that the lack of information and consensus on the true scale of trafficking is one of the greatest obstacles to its eradication.

In this regard, the Committee notes from the information available on the website of the Inter-ministerial Committee that a National Programme for the Prevention, Punishment and Eradication of Crimes relating to Trafficking in Persons and for the Protection of Victims has been adopted, covering the period 2022–24 (the last programme was adopted in 2018). The programme is based on the observation that, as has been established in a number of analytical studies, gaps exist in the manner in which trafficking in persons has been addressed in Mexico, both in terms of the application of the General Act of 2012 aimed at preventing, punishing and eradicating trafficking offences and protecting and assisting victims, and in terms of operational responses in a country where situations such as migration, historical discrimination against certain populations, gender inequality and the criminalization of poverty coexist. The Committee is pleased to note that, on the basis of the various assessments produced and the competent authorities' annual reports, the National Programme seeks to respond to the ongoing challenges and directs national action towards the following five priority objectives:

- promote reform of the legislative framework;
- establish the basis for coordinating the eradication of trafficking;
- increase the support, social reintegration and full reparation of victims through the implementation of new instruments;
- promote the production of data on trafficking;

- promote the human rights of victims and potential victims from a gender perspective.

While welcoming all the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the implementation of the five strategic objectives of the National Programme. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard and on any assessment of the measures taken in this context by the Inter-institutional Committee and in the reports of the National Human Rights Committee, indicating the recommendations made, the challenges identified and the measures envisaged to address them. Recalling that the country is subject to significant migratory flows, both of its own nationals and of workers from neighbouring countries, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to inform workers of the risks of exploitation at work involving forced labour and to provide them with assistance and protection where they are victims thereof in order to enable them to assert their rights. Finally, noting that it is mentioned in the National Programme that the Protection and Assistance Fund for victims of trafficking in persons provided for in the General Act of 2012 has not been established, the Committee requests the Government to indicate how reparation for victims is ensured.

Article 25. Enforcement and adequate penalties. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government concerning the judicial proceedings opened for the crime of trafficking for the period August 2017–July 2021, taken from the 2021 annual report of the CNDH. It notes that the crime rate doubled between 2017 and 2021. The 32 public prosecution agencies of the different states and the Prosecutor General's Office recorded a total of 3,226 cases under investigation, 2,863 at local level and 363 at federal level. In seven such cases, the person under investigation is a public servant. At the local level, 296 persons received final convictions, including 187 men and 109 women. According to the report, a total of 292 victims were reported, including 225 women, 29 men, and no information is available as regards the remaining 38 victims. In addition, 62 final convictions were handed down at the federal level. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2019 a former police officer was convicted of trafficking and sentenced to a lengthy prison term. The Committee also notes that the Government has carried out a large number of activities to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement authorities to identify and prosecute cases of trafficking in persons for both labour and sexual exploitation. It notes in particular the action taken in this area by the Unit specialized in offences of violence against women and trafficking in persons (FEVIMTRA), which has adopted a road map for coordination between the Prosecutor General's Office and the states' public prosecution agencies in order to respond to suspected cases of trafficking and to rescue victims.

The Committee notes that, in its report, the CNDH refers to fear of reporting trafficking in persons and a lack of a culture of reporting, which leaves the door wide open to impunity for this crime. There are also no appropriate victim support or complaints mechanisms in place. In addition, the National Programme reports a high level of injustice and impunity in relation to the various forms of trafficking in persons, due to difficulties in applying the legislative framework. According to the Programme, the General Act of 2012 includes a number of offences relating to trafficking in persons, creating confusion for justice officials. Certain situations involving trafficking are classified as related offences and vice versa.

The Committee urges the Government to continue to take the necessary steps to strengthen the coordination and capacity of the police authorities, the labour inspectorate and the Prosecutor General's Office to ensure that cases of trafficking, both for sexual and labour exploitation, are properly identified, investigated and prosecuted. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to overcome the difficulties identified in the National Programme with regard to the use of the General Act of 2012 by justice officials to prosecute and try cases of trafficking, as well as statistical information on proceedings initiated and convictions handed down. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take all necessary measures to punish instances of complicity by public servants in cases of trafficking.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. (i) Implementation of the National Action Plan. In response to its previous comments concerning the implementation of the National Programme on Combating Human Trafficking 2017–21, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report on the amount of the resources allocated to the National Programme. As regards the final evaluation of the National Programme, the primary objective of organizing work to prevent and combat trafficking in persons through the study of this phenomenon and its root causes was assessed as being 93.9 per cent complete. Between 2019 and 2021, nine national studies were conducted, while three nationwide public awareness-raising campaigns were organized. The Government and civil society organizations have independently and jointly carried out several activities including, capacity-building and training of personnel, sharing experiences with foreign counterparts, improving the legal framework, organizing nationwide awareness-raising campaigns and producing/distributing advocacy materials with the support of programmes and projects funded by international organizations. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons, including through developing and implementing a new national programme. It requests the Government to provide information on any assessment of the national action to combat trafficking carried out by the National Sub-Council on Combating Trafficking in Persons and any recommendations made in this context, as well as on the measures taken or envisaged as a consequence.

(ii). Identification and protection. The Committee notes the Government's information that resources were allocated to non-governmental organizations (NGOs) for the provision of primary services including shelter, psychosocial rehabilitation, medical care and legal services and repatriation services to victims of trafficking. In 2021, two NGO-run shelters to accommodate victims of trafficking were furnished for the needs of child victims. Moreover, under the project Preventing Violence Against Women and Supporting Victims implemented by the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection, guidelines to identify victims of human trafficking were developed and adopted by Order No. A/57 of 5 April 2022. The Mongolian Gender Equality Center, an NGO, provided shelter, healthcare services, food, clothing, legal and psychosocial counselling to 46 victims of trafficking in 2020, 41 victims in 2021 and 21 victims in the first half of 2022. In addition, skills development training and assistance to start businesses were organized for victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to provide protection and assistance to victims of trafficking in persons and to indicate the number of victims who have been identified and those who were granted assistance for their rehabilitation and/or repatriation, as well as the nature of such assistance.

(iii). Law enforcement and penalties. The Committee notes the Government's information that within the framework of the National Programme, specialized training manuals for police officers, prosecutors, border service officers, immigration officers, judges, lawyers, social workers and health practitioners were developed. The Government indicates that between 2019 and 2021, 31 cases of trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation were registered under section 13.1 of the Criminal Code, involving 49 perpetrators and 130 victims of whom 40 per cent were children. In the four cases resolved in 2021, ten perpetrators were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment ranging from three to 15 years. During the first quarter of 2022, the police investigated four cases involving six alleged perpetrators and nine victims. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that all cases of trafficking are properly identified and subject to thorough investigations with a view to ensuring that perpetrators are prosecuted and that dissuasive penalties are imposed. It further requests the Government to provide statistical data in this regard as well as information on the measures taken to continue to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement officials, including labour inspectors, prosecutors and judges, particularly by providing appropriate training.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a significant number of migrant workers from China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea worked in Mongolia in conditions tantamount to forced labour and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to address this situation.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the revised Law on Labour Migration, adopted by Parliament in December 2021, contains new provisions to protect the rights of foreign/migrant workers. According to this law, the State administrative body shall issue an employment permit to the foreign worker based on his/her employment contract with the employer. An employer who has failed to pay the wages of, or caused any damages to the previously employed worker, shall be denied the right to invite foreign workers for two years (section 25.1.2). According to section 26, an employer's permit to employ foreign workers shall be cancelled, if: (i) the terms and conditions agreed in an employment contract including wages, working environment, working hours and rest period have not been met; (ii) the employer has violated the labour or occupational safety and health legislation; (iii) the employer fails to provide preparatory training, health check-up and medical examination of workers; (iv) the employer has withheld the foreign worker's documents or wages; or (v) the employer has employed a foreign worker for purposes or at locations other than those specified in the employment permit. Moreover, section 34.2 provides for the establishment of a State administrative body to advise employers, conduct regular inspections and supervise the employment and working conditions of foreign workers and compliance with the law.

The Committee notes the Government's information that in 2021, the General Authority for Labour and Welfare Services launched an electronic platform to enable an integrated registration system of entities that receive foreign workers, and to improve oversight of compliance with the relevant legislation. The Government further indicates that according to the National Statistics Office, 6,200 foreign citizens from 88 countries were working on the basis of an employment contract in Mongolia as of the second quarter of 2022. It stresses that no cases of forced labour of foreign workers were prosecuted and that, in September 2020, three citizens of Myanmar lodged a complaint with the Mongolian authorities of labour exploitation, which was later dismissed. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the new provisions of the Law on Labour Migration and encourages the Government to continue to take measures to protect migrant workers from abusive practices and prevent them from being trapped in situations that could amount to forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken for the effective implementation of the Law on Labour Migration, indicating the measures taken to inform migrant workers of their rights, the number of inspection visits carried out by the State administrative body established under section 34 of the Law, the violations observed and the number of employer's permits that have been cancelled and the reasons for such cancellation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In response to the Committee's request regarding the application in practice of Act No. 27-14 on combating trafficking in persons, the Government indicates in its report that the National Committee for the Coordination of Anti-Trafficking Measures (hereinafter the National Committee), which was set up in 2018, presented its first national report in 2022. According to this report, 723 persons were prosecuted for trafficking in persons between 2017 and 2020. In 2019, 17 persons found guilty of trafficking in persons received prison sentences of under one year, 27 persons received prison sentences of one to five years and 24 persons received prison sentences of six years or more. Also according to the report, 719 trafficking victims were identified between 2017 and 2020 (414 men and 305 women; 536 Moroccan citizens and 183 other nationalities). Furthermore, among the victims identified, 367 persons were victims of trafficking for sexual exploitation, 63 of exploitation through begging and 44 of trafficking for servitude.

The Government also indicates that a draft integrated national action plan involving all governmental and non-governmental actors is being prepared by the National Committee.

The Committee also notes that the Government, in its report of August 2022 submitted to the United Nations Human Rights Council as part of the universal periodic review, refers to a number of measures taken to combat trafficking in persons and provide care for victims, including: (i) the setting up of a unit in the Public Prosecution Service for monitoring cases of trafficking in persons; (ii) the establishment at the appeal court level of a network of deputy public prosecutors specializing in trafficking cases; (iii) the creation of a special team of social assistants in the courts to provide care for victims; (iv) the provision of healthcare for trafficking victims; and (v) the holding of training courses and workshops for persons involved in combating trafficking in persons (A/HRC/WG.6/41/MAR/1). The Committee further notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of July 2022, refers to insufficient protection for trafficking victims, including in terms of availability of specific shelters for victims, and a lack of information on the identification and registration of migrant victims of trafficking (CEDAW/C/MAR/CO/5-6).

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to reinforce the identification of cases of trafficking in persons, for both sexual and labour exploitation, and to provide effective protection and assistance for victims. It requests the Government to indicate the actions taken and the services established for this purpose. In this context, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft national action plan to combat trafficking in persons will be adopted in the near future, and requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and on the action taken by the National Committee for the Coordination of Anti-Trafficking Measures. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary steps to ensure that the perpetrators of trafficking in persons incur criminal penalties that constitute an adequate deterrent, and to provide information on the number of investigations conducted and prosecutions initiated with respect to trafficking in persons, and also on the penalties imposed pursuant to Act No. 27-14 on combating trafficking in persons.

Article 2(2)(d). Requisitioning of persons. The Committee previously urged the Government to repeal or amend the Dahir of 13 September 1938 authorizing the requisitioning of persons to meet national needs, so as to limit powers of requisitioning only to circumstances that would endanger the lives or normal living conditions of the whole or part of the population.

The Committee observes that the Government merely indicates once again that the application of the Dahir of 13 September 1938, although belonging to the category of legal texts dating back to the protectorate period, remains closely linked to the Constitution of 2011, which establishes the principle of solidarity in bearing the burden arising from situations of force majeure. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not appear to envisage measures to repeal or amend the above-mentioned Dahir. The Committee recalls that when the provisions authorizing the requisitioning of labour in cases of force majeure are formulated in such broad terms that they could be applied to a wide range of circumstances other than force majeure in the strict sense, they go beyond the exception provided for in Article 2(2)(d) of the Convention. The Committee expects the Government to take measures without delay to amend or repeal the Dahir of 13 September 1938 so as to strictly limit powers of requisitioning of persons to circumstances that would endanger the lives or normal living conditions of the whole or part of the population.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving the obligation to work as a punishment for participating in strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 288 of the Penal Code provides that any person who, through the use of threats or deception, causes or maintains, or endeavours to cause or maintain a concerted stoppage of work with the objective of forcing an increase or decrease in wages or jeopardizing the free exercise of industry or work, shall be liable to a sentence of imprisonment involving the obligation to work (under the terms of sections 24, 28 and 29 of the Penal Code and section 35 of Act No. 23-98 on the organization and operation of prisons). Noting that a basic Bill on the exercise of the right to strike and a draft reform of the Penal Code were under preparation, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that the new legislative texts were in conformity with the Convention.

The Government indicates in its report that a social agreement concluded on 30 April 2022 sets out a schedule for the adoption of the basic Bill on the exercise of the right to strike. The Government adds that the revision of section 288 of the Penal Code is still on the agenda of the overall reform that is being undertaken of the Penal Code. The Committee notes in this regard that, in its 2022 annual report on the situation of human rights in Morocco, the National Human Rights Council recommends the Government to accelerate the adoption of the Bill to amend and supplement the Penal Code and to complete the procedure for the approval of basic Bill No. 97-15 on the conditions and procedures for the exercise of the right to strike.

Recalling that Article 1(d) of the Convention prohibits any type of compulsory labour as a punishment for participating in strikes, the Committee expects that the basic Bill on the exercise of the right to strike and the Bill to amend and supplement the Penal Code which are to be adopted will take into account the obligations deriving from the Convention and the above comments so as to ensure that no sentence involving compulsory labour (including compulsory prison labour) can be imposed as a punishment for peaceful participation in a strike.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1955)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee notes that in the context of its follow-up to the situation of Myanmar as regards the elimination of forced labour (following the 2013 Resolution of the International Labour Conference concerning remaining measures on the subject of Myanmar under article 33 of the ILO Constitution), in March 2022, the Governing Body decided of its own motion to establish a Commission of Inquiry concerning non-observance by Myanmar of the Convention as well as the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee notes the detailed report issued by the Commission of Inquiry on 4 August 2023, which was noted by the Governing Body in its 349th Session (November 2023).

The Committee notes that in its report the Commission of Inquiry concluded that the following violations of the Convention existed (paragraphs 595–634):

- The continuing systematic and widespread use by the Myanmar military of residents, including members of the Rohingya community, to perform a range of different types of work or service, including as porters, guides, and human shields, as well as for cultivation, the construction and maintenance of military camps or installations, and the provision of transport, accommodation, food, or domestic work; such practices not falling under the scope of the exception of Article 2(2)(d) nor any other exceptions provided for under Article 2(2) of the Convention.
- The exaction of prison labour from persons, in particular those having expressed opinions opposing the military, who have been convicted following legal procedures that manifestly lacked independence, impartiality, and due process of law, which is not covered by the exception contained in Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention.
- Services required by the military authorities from businesses during days of “silent strikes” (people staying indoors on a designated day and not engaging in any outside activity) that amount to forced or compulsory labour within the meaning of the Convention.
- The lack of review of article 359 of the Constitution which allows for the exaction of forced labour in the context of duties assigned by the Union in accordance with the law in the interest of the people, and of the People’s Military Service Law (2010) which allows for the use of military conscripts for work that is not of a purely military nature.
- The lack of adequate and dissuasive criminal sanctions for the exaction of compulsory labour under section 374 of the Penal Code and section 27A of the Ward or Village Tract Administration Law which provide for a penalty of imprisonment of up to one year or a fine.
- A deteriorating enforcement of the legal prohibition of forced labour and the fact that victims of forced labour imposed by the military fear retaliations if they bring forward complaints.

The Committee also notes that based on the above-mentioned findings, the Commission of Inquiry urged the military authorities to (paragraph 644):

- Act to end the exaction of all forms of forced or compulsory labour by the army and its associated armed forces and groups, including any forced labour exacted from ethnic, religious or other minorities; and to end any forced recruitment into the military.
- Cease any action interfering with the freedom of business to open and close their establishments.
- Cease with immediate effect the exaction of prison labour as a consequence of a criminal conviction imposed since 1 February 2021 through procedures manifestly lacking independence, impartiality and due process guarantees.

The Commission of Inquiry also recommended that Myanmar (paragraph 650):

- Assess the functioning of the national authorities and mechanisms responsible for the suppression of forced or compulsory labour and the enforcement of the relevant legislation, with the participation of workers’ and employers’ organizations, and take the necessary measures to strengthen their capacity and cooperation; and ensure that workers and employers’ organizations have access to such authorities to report any practice contrary to the Convention.
- Take specific measures to end the exaction of forced labour from Rohingya women and men and other ethnic or religious minorities.
- Ensure that any future system for compulsory military service or any other national service obligation and any restrictions on civil servants, including military personnel, to resign from their positions are implemented in accordance with the Convention.
- Revise its national legislation prohibiting forced labour to ensure that it provides for penalties that are really adequate and dissuasive.

The Committee notes that in a communication dated 29 September 2023, the military authorities indicated to the Governing Body that Myanmar's position regarding the Commissions of Inquiry's recommendations would be communicated within three months.

The Committee deeply deplors that although the imposition of forced labour on the population in the country has continuously been the subject of close examination for many years by this Committee, the Committee on the Application of Standards of the Conference, two Commissions of Inquiry, as well as by the Governing Body, this practice has continued and has even exacerbated after the military takeover on 1 February 2021, as indicated in the report of the Commission of Inquiry of 2023.

Therefore, the Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take all the necessary measures to immediately put an end to all forms of forced or compulsory labour identified above; ensure without delay full compliance with the Convention, both in law and in practice; and take steps to fully and effectively implement the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry. In this regard, the Committee specifically recalls the importance of reviewing article 359 of the Constitution that allows for the exaction of forced labour to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee strongly urges the military authorities to take the measures commensurate with the extreme seriousness of the situation and ensure that victims of forced labour are duly recognized as such, given access to the appropriate complaint mechanisms and granted compensation and protection against reprisal. The Committee expects that the military authorities will provide detailed information on the measures taken for the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

Niger

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention and Article 1(1) of the Protocol. Effective measures to combat slavery and similar practices. Systematic and coordinated action. The Committee previously underlined the importance of adopting a national policy and a specific action plan to combat slavery and slavery-like practices, in view of the persistence of these practices in Niger and the complexity of their underlying causes.

The Government indicates in its report that a process is under way to incorporate the issues of forced labour, slavery and similar practices into the National Plan of Action 2022–26 of the National Commission for the Coordination of Action against Trafficking in Persons (CNCLTP). In this context, capacity-building workshops for members of the CNCLTP and of the National Agency for Action against Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants (ANLTP/TIM), the operational structure for the implementation of policies and strategies adopted by the CNCLTP, were organized in 2022 in the context of the ILO Bridge technical cooperation project. These workshops enabled a better understanding of the various forms of forced labour and the relevant legal texts and of the roles of stakeholders and possibilities for cooperation with a view to the coherent implementation of the National Plan of Action.

The Government also indicates that several capacity-building workshops for the most representative employers' and workers' organizations were held in 2020 and 2021 in the context of the Bridge project, with a view to promoting their participation in the preparation and implementation of the National Plan of Action. The Government explains that it plans to amend Decree No. 2012-

082/PRN/MJ of 21 March 2012 establishing the structure, composition and functioning of the CNCLTP so that employers' and workers' organizations are represented in it.

The Committee notes that the ITUC emphasizes in its observations that although the Government has expressed a strong political will to tackle slavery based on descent and the discrimination associated with it, the lack of sufficient resources to implement and apply laws, policies and programmes against slavery is a major problem. The ITUC notes that the mandate of the ANLTP/TIM does not cover slavery based on descent and stresses the importance of implementing a specific national strategy and action plan to eradicate slavery and slavery-like practices.

The Committee notes that the National Human Rights Committee (CNDH), in its 2021 annual report, highlights the surviving vestiges of slavery-like practices and the socio-cultural dimension of slavery. In addition, the Committee observes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), in its concluding observations of 24 May 2023, expressed serious concern at reports of the persistence of slavery practices and of harmful practices against women, including those of slave descent, such as the slavery-like practice of wahaya, which entails the purchase of a girl, usually of slave descent, to become a "fifth wife" (CERD/C/NER/CO/22-25).

In light of the information giving evidence of the persistence of slavery-like practices and practices similar to slavery in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to adopt a national policy and plan of action for the effective suppression of slavery and slavery-like practices. The Committee trusts that the competent authority which will be designated to implement this policy will have the necessary resources to perform its functions throughout the country.

Article 2 of the Protocol. Clauses (a) and (b). Prevention. Awareness-raising, education and information. As regards the current situation of slavery-like practices and awareness-raising activities undertaken, the Government refers to a number of recent studies dealing in particular with judicial prosecution for engaging in slavery and slavery-like practices. However, the Committee notes that these studies are not accessible. The Government also indicates that the National Day of mobilization against trafficking in persons has explicitly incorporated the issue of slavery since 2020. As part of the National Day, the ANLTP, with support from the Bridge project, organized a number of public conferences on slavery. Training activities for journalists were also organized in 2020 and 2021 to promote communication on forced labour and slavery. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to educate, inform and raise the awareness of the public, in particular at-risk population groups and traditional and religious chiefs, regarding the reality of slavery-like practices (for example, by reporting on the various forms of slavery and similar practices, the manifestations and consequences thereof, existing legislation, penalties incurred and the rights of victims). The Committee also requests the Government to send a copy of the most recent studies on the current situation of slavery and slavery-like practices.

Clause (f). Action to address the root causes of slavery. As regards measures to tackle the root causes of the vestiges of slavery-like practices, the Committee welcomes the implementation, in the context of the Bridge project, of a programme of support for the development of means of subsistence, which has benefited 400 women of slave descent in 22 villages in the regions of Tahoua and Agadez, with an anti-slavery association. The programme is based on a series of activities aimed at the economic reintegration of beneficiaries and making them autonomous, including through vocational training, the provision of capital for income-generating activities, training in life skills and entrepreneurship, and literacy. The Government also indicates that various measures promoting schooling for children of slave descent, including children of wahaya women, have been implemented, resulting in the establishment of 848 birth certificates for children in eight villages, the enrolment of 201 of these children in school in 2021/22, and the provision of school kits for these children. In addition, 352 adults of slave descent were issued with national identity cards and another 457 with birth certificates during sessions organized at fairs for this purpose.

However, the Committee notes that, according to the observations of the ITUC, communities with slave origins are subjected to widespread stigmatization and discrimination and that because of their marginalization and the distance of their places of residence, these communities are generally neglected by government services and poverty reduction programmes. Descendants of slaves can be given away as gifts or bequests, are denied recognition of their civil status and have no access to identity documents, and most children who are descendants of slaves have no access to education. The ITUC underlines the need to pass legislation providing total and effective protection against discrimination in all areas and containing an exhaustive list of prohibited grounds of discrimination, including on the basis of slave descent.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to combat stigmatization of, and discrimination against, former slaves and descendants of slaves; in this regard, it also refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts to tackle the root causes of the vestiges of slavery-like practices, including to ensure effective access to services dealing with the registration of births, education and employment; in this regard, the Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122).

Article 3 of the Protocol. Identification and protection of victims. The Committee notes the absence of information on the identification, release and protection of victims of slavery. It notes that, according to the 2020 edition of the compendium of statistics of the Ministry of Justice, attached to the Government's report, no victims of slavery or similar practices were recorded in 2018, and two victims were recorded in 2017. The Committee notes that the ITUC in its observations highlights the fact that victims of slavery have no access to adequate rehabilitation measures, and that there is no procedure for identifying and supporting victims and survivors of slavery. The ITUC underlines the need to devise a plan for the identification and release of victims and survivors of slavery-like practices, and to develop a comprehensive rehabilitation programme, including prompt access to a safe place of refuge, to medical and psychological care and to legal and social services. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary proactive measures to identify, release and protect the victims of slavery-like practices, including by putting in place and publicizing a procedure for the identification of victims and by establishing a care structure for the psychological, economic and social rehabilitation of victims. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims of slavery-like practices who have been identified and on the number of victims who have been the recipients of assistance and protection measures.

Article 4 of the Protocol. Access to justice and compensation. The Committee previously asked the Government to indicate how the legal assistance mechanism operated by the National Agency for Legal and Judicial Assistance functioned and how the various actors cooperated to ensure that victims can assert their rights in practice. The Government indicates that the anti-slavery association Timidria, with ILO assistance, recruited 17 paralegals who are deployed in areas where slavery is prevalent, whose role includes informing victims of their rights and of procedures for access to justice as well as helping them to compile a dossier with a view to recourse to the competent judicial or administrative authorities or to obtain documents showing civil status or identity, and, if necessary, to direct them to the competent services. The Government explains that the local legal and judicial assistance offices, representing the National Agency for Legal and Judicial Assistance, have a presence in the ten high courts.

The Committee also notes that the ITUC underlines the need to establish a specific compensation fund for the victims of slavery. The Committee observes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern at the difficulties encountered by victims of slavery practices in accessing the services of the National Agency for Legal and Judicial Assistance, owing to the inadequacy of its means and resources (CERD/C/NER/CO/22-25).

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that the victims of slavery-like practices know and can assert their rights, including by continuing to facilitate their access to justice and ensuring that legal assistance and compensation are actually granted to them. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims who have obtained legal assistance and compensation.

Article 25 of the Convention and Article 1(1) of the Protocol. Suppression and imposition of effective penalties. The Committee previously noted the lack of information on the application in practice of sections 270-1 to 270-5 of the Penal Code relating to slavery, and urged the Government to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies. The Committee duly notes the training activities carried out for the judicial authorities and law enforcement agencies in the context of the Bridge project, aimed in particular at achieving a better understanding of slavery and practices similar to slavery, perfecting procedures for the identification of cases of slavery and strengthening the role of each of the actors concerned in the penal system. The Government also indicates that two capacity-building workshops for labour inspectors on combating forced labour were held in 2021 and 2022. It explains that the inspectors will participate actively in the implementation of the CNCLTP National Plan of Action.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2020 edition of the compendium of statistics of the Ministry of Justice, attached to the Government's report, one new case of slavery was recorded in the high and lower courts in 2018–19, and this case was prosecuted. The Committee also notes that, according to the 2022 edition of the compendium of statistics, no new cases of slavery were recorded in the high and lower courts in 2019–20, and five were recorded in 2020–21, including three which were prosecuted. As at 31 December 2020, seven persons had been convicted for acts of slavery, and five as at 31 December 2021.

The Committee notes that the ITUC emphasizes in its observations that the number of prosecutions is low and that only a few dozen slavery cases have been brought before the national courts. The ITUC also indicates that because of the distinction made between the "crime" of slavery, for which the penalty is 10 to 30 years' imprisonment, and the "offence" of slavery, for which the penalty is 5 to 10 years' imprisonment, the sentences handed down do not reflect the seriousness of the violations. The ITUC insists on the need for judicial officials and the other actors concerned to receive training with respect to the provisions of the Penal Code concerning slavery.

The Committee urges the Government to continue taking steps to boost training activities for bodies responsible for applying the law (labour inspectorate, law enforcement agencies, prosecution authorities and judicial authorities) in order to enable these authorities to identify cases of slavery, conduct investigations and initiate judicial proceedings against the perpetrators of such practices. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that the perpetrators of violations involving slavery are subjected to sufficiently dissuasive penalties, and to continue providing information on any cases of slavery identified, complaints filed and judicial proceedings initiated, and also on the number of convictions handed down and the penalties imposed under sections 270-1 to 270-5 of the Penal Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Republic of Moldova

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Unions of Moldova (CNSM), received on 17 August 2022.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Mobilizing of labour for purposes of economic development. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the incompatibility with the Convention of certain provisions of the Act on mobilization, No. 1192-XV of 4 July 2002, the Act on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest, No. 1352-XV of 11 October 2002, and the Government decision to approve regulations on mobilization at the workplace, No. 751 of 24 June 2003, under which the central and local authorities, as well as military bodies can exact compulsory labour from the population under certain conditions as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of the development of the national economy.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not provided any information on this point in its report. The Committee further notes that, in its observations, the CNSM points out that the Government should take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, to amend the provisions of the abovementioned acts, to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(b) requires the abolition of any form of forced or compulsory labour as a means of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development and that, as previously noted section 3(b) of the Law on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest clearly provides that one of the aims of such requisitioning is to create conditions for the good functioning of the national economy and public institutions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure the amendment of the Act on mobilization, No. 1192-XV of 4 July 2002, the Act on the requisitioning of goods and services in the public interest, No. 1352-XV of 11 October 2002, and the Government decision to approve the regulations on mobilization at the workplace, No. 751 of 24 June 2003, in order to bring them into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Rwanda

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, on the adoption of Act No. 51/2018 of 13 August 2018 relating to the prevention, suppression and punishment of trafficking in persons and exploitation of others, which repeals the provisions of the Criminal Code criminalizing trafficking in persons. The Committee welcomes the fact that, in addition to provisions criminalizing trafficking in persons and establishing stringent penalties of imprisonment (section 18), Act No. 51/2018 also includes provisions on the prevention of trafficking, and on providing protection and assistance to the victims (sections 7 to 15). It notes the Government's indication that several awareness-raising and training activities were undertaken on trafficking in persons, more particularly for law enforcement institutions regarding the identification, investigation and prosecution of cases of trafficking in persons. The Government adds that, in 2019, the Rwanda Bureau of Investigation opened 63 cases of transnational trafficking in persons (41 for forced labour and 22 for sexual exploitation). Furthermore, 64 individuals were arrested for trafficking in persons, of whom 9 were prosecuted. Two individuals were convicted and sentenced to 20 years of imprisonment and a fine.

The Committee notes that, according to the findings of research undertaken in collaboration with the Ministry of Justice and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), in 2018, Rwanda is a transit country and, to a lesser extent, a country of origin for trafficking in persons. Data from the Department of Immigration and Emigration (DGIE) show that the majority of the suspected victims of trafficking in persons identified were women (77.67 per cent) and were mainly from neighbouring countries, and that Middle East Countries and East African Countries are the most frequent destination. The Committee notes that, in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Government indicated that the findings of this research informed the drafting of the National Action Plan on counter-human trafficking which was at the stage of adoption by the Cabinet in November 2020 (A/HRC/WG.6/37/RWA/1, 9 November 2020, paragraph 107). It further notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Migrant Workers expressed concern at the limited knowledge about trafficking in persons and the challenges in evidence-gathering as one of the main causes of the low conviction rate for the crime of trafficking in persons as compared with other crimes (CMW/C/RWA/CO/2, paragraph 53). The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons for both labour exploitation and sexual exploitation, including through the swift adoption of the draft National Action Plan on counter-human trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this context to ensure adequate protection of victims of trafficking and strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement authorities to identify, investigate and prosecute cases of trafficking. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases investigated and prosecuted, the number of convictions handed down and the penalties imposed.

Article 2(2)(e). Minor communal services. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that sections 2(2), 3, 5 and 13 of Act No. 53/2007 of 17 November 2007 on community work, go well beyond the exception allowed in Article 2(2)(e) of the Convention for minor communal services. It noted that, pursuant to Act No. 53/2007, community work, referred to as Umuganda, shall aim to promote development activities in the framework of supporting the national budget and that every Rwandan from 18 to 65 years old shall have the obligation to perform community works, which shall take place on the last Saturday of every month. Persons who fail to participate without justified reasons are punishable by a fine. The Committee noted from the information provided by the Government that infrastructure construction was one of the main activities.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Umuganda is the gathering of efforts of many people in order for them to carry out a general public interest activity. These community works shall be considered a civic obligation for Rwandan citizens, as provided for in Article 2(2)(b) of the Convention. In that regard, the Committee emphasizes that the exception of "normal civic obligations" provided for under this provision of the Convention should be understood in a very restrictive way. Three kinds of such "normal civic obligations" are specifically mentioned in the Convention as exceptions to its scope, namely: compulsory military service, work or service in cases of emergency and "minor communal services". Thus, it is not possible to consider, within the meaning of the Convention, "normal civic obligations" to be work undertaken for public purposes, such as compulsory public works of general importance or compulsory national development service, which is prohibited by the Convention (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 277). Furthermore, the Committee recalls that "minor communal services" do not constitute forced labour only if certain criteria are met: (i) the services must be "minor", such as relating primarily to maintenance work; (ii) the services must be performed in the direct interest of the community and not relate to the execution of works intended to benefit a wider group; and (iii) the community which has to perform the services, or their "direct" representative, must be consulted in regard to the need for such services. Noting that the large-scale participation in Umuganda is compulsory and infrastructure construction is one of the main activities, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review the provisions of Act No. 53/2007 of 17 November 2007 to ensure compliance with the Convention, whether by ensuring that participation in community works is voluntary or by limiting their scope to the exception of "minor communal services". It requests the Government to continue to provide examples of the types of community works that can be required of the population under Act No. 53/2007.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour imposed as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted that several sections of the Penal Code (Organic Law No. 01/2012/OL of 2 May 2012) provide for sanctions of imprisonment, which involve compulsory labour, in circumstances falling within the scope of the Convention (sections 116, 136, 451, 462, 463, 468 and 469). It expressed concern regarding information on prosecution of opposition politicians, journalists and human rights defenders as a means of discouraging them from freely expressing their opinions. The Committee requested the Government to ensure that no penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed on persons for peacefully expressing political views.

Concerning compulsory prison labour, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that a draft law regulating correctional services is currently under the enactment process. The draft law would repeal the obligation of prisoners to perform activities for the development of the country, themselves and the prisons, provided for under section 50(8) of Act No. 34/2010 of 12 November 2010 on the establishment, functioning and organization of the Rwanda Correctional Service, in order to avoid any abuse that may result from its application. While noting this information, the Committee observes that section 35 of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018 determining offences and penalties in general, which replaced the Penal Code, provides that the court may order that the convict serve community service as a principal penalty in lieu of imprisonment when an offence is punishable by a term of imprisonment of up to five years. The Committee observes that the legislation in force continues to provide that persons sentenced to imprisonment are under an obligation to perform activities.

Legislation related to civil liberties and political freedoms. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that, pursuant to Act No. 69/2019 of 8 November 2019 amending Act No. 68/2018, defamation against the President of the Republic and humiliation of national authorities are decriminalized. It notes, however, that, under a certain number of provisions of Act No. 68/2018, sanctions involving compulsory labour may still be imposed for acts related to civil liberties and political freedoms and through which persons can express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The provisions in question are as follows:

- section 161 concerning public insult;
- section 164 concerning the crime of "instigating divisions";
- section 194 concerning the spread of false information or harmful propaganda with intent to cause a "hostile international opinion" against the Government;
- section 204 on causing uprising or unrest among the population; and
- section 225(1) and (2), concerning demonstration in a public place without prior authorization or illegal demonstration or public meeting (when security, public order or health is not threatened).

Legislation related to press and media freedoms. The Committee further notes that, pursuant to Act No. 02/2013 of 11 March 2013, regulating media, "the freedom of opinions and information shall not jeopardize the general public order and good morals ...". In that regard, it notes that several legislations adopted in recent years also provide for sanctions involving compulsory labour for acts through which persons express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. More particularly:

- Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 on prevention and punishment of cyber-crimes imposes up to five years' imprisonment and a fine for publishing "rumours that may incite fear, ... or that may make a person lose their credibility" (section 39); and
- Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016, governing information and communication technologies, prohibits the dissemination of "grossly offensive" or "indecent" messages, as well as the use of information and communications technology to cause "annoyance, inconvenience, or needless anxiety" (section 60), and provides that any person who, knowingly or wilfully, publishes, transmits or causes to be published in electronic form, any "indecent" information commits an offence punishable in accordance with the provisions of the Penal Code (section 206).

The Committee also notes that, as recently highlighted in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council, several UN treaty bodies and Special Rapporteurs continued to express serious concerns at prosecutions of politicians, journalists and human rights defenders, as a means of discouraging them from freely expressing their opinions (A/HRC/WG.6/37/RWA/2, 13 November 2020, paragraph 45; letter dated 30 May 2018 from the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; and CAT/C/RWA/CO/2, 21 December 2017, paragraphs 52–53). In the framework of the UPR, a number of recommendations formulated by the Working Group, and supported by Rwanda, referred to the elimination from the legislation of provisions that undermine freedom of expression and the protection of journalists and members of the media and civil society against harassment and intimidation (A/HRC/47/14, 25 March 2021, paragraphs 134-136).

The Committee notes with deep concern this information. The Committee observes that the above-mentioned provisions of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018, Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 and Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016, are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to their application as a means of punishment for peacefully expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In so far as these provisions are enforceable with penal sanctions which involve compulsory labour, they fall within the scope of the Convention. The Committee recalls that legal guarantees of rights to freedom of thought and expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, freedom of association, as well as freedom from arbitrary arrest, constitute an important safeguard against the imposition of compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political or ideological views (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302). The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that persons who, by means of methods that neither use violence nor incite to violence, express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system do not incur penal sanctions involving an obligation to work. It expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to review the above-mentioned provisions of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018 determining offences and penalties in general; Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 on prevention and punishment of cyber crimes; and Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016 governing information and communication technologies, for example by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour (such as compulsory prison labour or compulsory community service). In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, including on the number of prosecutions initiated and convictions handed down, as well as information on the facts that led to them.

Article 1(d). Sanctions for participating in strikes. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 66/2018 of 30 August 2018 regulating labour, which provides for a number of restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike, by considering a strike as being legal only when the arbitration committee has exceeded 15 working days without issuing its decision or the conciliation resolution on collective dispute or the court award being enforceable have not been implemented (section 105). It notes that section 118 of Act No. 66/2018 provides for sanctions of imprisonment for a term of not less than six months, involving compulsory labour, for employees who go on strike illegally. The Committee further notes the adoption of Ministerial Order No. 004/19.20 of 17 March 2020, determining essential services that should not be interrupted during strikes or lock-outs, which repealed Ministerial Order No. 4 of 13 July 2010. It observes that services related to communication, transportation or education are still considered as essential services, and that section 6 of the Ministerial Order provides that other services may be considered as essential services “for public interest”. Furthermore, employees are prohibited from exercising a strike within ten days preceding or following elections in the country (section 8). The Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that the right to strike may only be restricted or prohibited in essential services in the strict sense of the term (namely, in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population), in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, or in situations of acute national crisis (see General Survey, paragraph 314). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, both in law and in practice, to ensure that no worker who participates peacefully in a strike can be liable and sentenced to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour.

Senegal

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee notes the adoption of Decree No. 2020-2064 of 27 October 2020 establishing the National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons and the Smuggling of Migrants (CNLTP), replacing the National Anti-Trafficking Unit, and extending the competence of the national coordination mechanism by formally assigning it a role of prevention and coordination in the fight against migrant smuggling. The Government adds, in its report, that a bill revising Act No. 2005-06 of 10 May 2005 on combating trafficking in persons and similar practices and the protection of victims was sent by the CNLTP to the Ministry of Justice. Similarly, a compensation fund for victims of trafficking was established by Decree No. 2023-920 of 26 April 2023. The Committee notes the adoption of the National Plan of Action to Combat Trafficking in Persons 2021–23, developed by the CNLTP. In this regard, it notes from the report submitted in 2023 by the Government to the United Nations Committee on Migrant Workers that a number of activities have been organized under the Plan of Action, including training workshops aimed at members of the judiciary at the regional level, organized by the CNLTP, to facilitate the identification of and psychological assistance, care and psychosocial support for victims of trafficking. The CNLTP also developed a Handbook for law enforcement officials, which facilitates the identification of trafficking victims, as well as Standard operating procedures for law enforcement services, on the identification and referral of victims of trafficking and their treatment in investigations and prosecutions. With regard to the data collection system on the various aspects of legal action taken in cases of human trafficking in Senegal (SYSTRAITE), the Government indicates that although the system was deployed in five pilot regions (Dakar, Kedougou, Saint-Louis, Tamba and Thies), the information available is fragmented and inconsistently collected (CMW/C/SEN/4, 19 July 2023). The Committee also notes the adoption, on 27 July 2023, of the National Strategy against Irregular Migration 2023–33, with particular emphasis on tackling exploitation and trafficking in persons.

The Committee welcomes the different measures adopted to strengthen efforts to combat trafficking in persons. It nevertheless notes with regret the absence of more specific information on the impact of these measures in practice, including the number of cases of trafficking in persons detected and of prosecutions and convictions in such cases. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2022, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women expressed particular concern about: (1) the fact that Senegal is a country of origin, transit and destination for trafficking in persons and that internal trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation is equally prevalent; (2) the absence of data on the number of victims, investigations, prosecutions and convictions relating to trafficking in persons, particularly for purposes of sexual exploitation, forced labour and forced begging in Senegal and for purposes of domestic servitude in foreign countries; (3) the low rate of prosecutions and convictions and the lack of adequate mechanisms to identify victims of trafficking and refer them to appropriate services; and (4) reports of harassment by the police of women exploited in prostitution (CEDAW/C/SEN/CO/8, 1 March 2022).

The Committee urges the Government to continue its action against trafficking in persons, both for sexual exploitation and labour exploitation, and to provide information on activities undertaken to this end by the National Committee to Combat Trafficking in Persons and the Smuggling of Migrants (CNLTP), including under the trafficking component of the National Strategy against Irregular Migration 2023–33. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the most recent annual report of the CNLTP containing data and statistics on action against trafficking in persons as well as any evaluation of action taken in this area. The Committee further urges the Government to continue to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officials and to ensure that persons who engage in trafficking are effectively prosecuted and victims can receive adequate protection and assistance to assert their rights and reintegrate. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out, specifying the penalties applied pursuant to Law No. 2005-06; and (ii) the number of victims of trafficking who have benefited from protection and assistance services and the nature of such services, including through the compensation fund established by Decree No. 2023-920 of 26 April 2023, and to provide a copy of the Decree in question.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work for breaches of labour discipline. For several years, the Committee has been referring to the need to amend sections 624, 643 and 645 of the Merchant Shipping Code (Act No. 2002-22 of 16 August 2002), which provides for prison sentences (involving compulsory labour in accordance with section 692 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and section 32 of Decree No. 2001-362 of 4 May 2001 on the execution and organization of penal sanctions), in the case of unapproved absence from the vessel, verbal insults, gestures or threats towards a superior, or a formal refusal to obey a service order. The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication, in its report, that fines have always been preferred for breaches of discipline, even though the Merchant Shipping Code leaves the choice of whether to impose a fine or a custodial sentence to the judge. The Government adds that, insofar as judges are bound to respect the principle of proportionality between the offence and the penalty when handing down a penalty, persons receiving the penalty always have the possibility of appealing to a high-court judge if they consider that the penalty against them is disproportionate.

The Committee recalls, in this respect, that in view of the fact that the scope of the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Code mentioned above is not confined to cases in which the breach of discipline would endanger the ship or the life or health of persons on board, these provisions are contrary to the Convention, which prohibits recourse to forced labour, including in the form of compulsory prison labour, as a means of labour discipline. With reference to its 2021 comments on the application of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), in which it noted that a revision of the Merchant Shipping Code was under way, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the above provisions of the Merchant Shipping Code and to thereby align national legislation with the practice indicated and the Convention. The Committee hopes that this revision will be carried out shortly to ensure that, in conformity with Article 1(c) of the Convention, breaches by seafarers of labour discipline which do not endanger the ship or the persons on board cannot be punished with prison sentences, under which prison labour may be imposed.

Article 1(d). Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work as punishment for participation in strikes. 1. Requisitioning in the event of a strike The Committee recalls that section L.279(m) of the Labour Code provides for the possibility of a prison sentence, including compulsory labour, to workers who do not comply with a requisition order in the case of a strike, under section L.276 of the Labour Code, which allows for the requisition of workers who are engaged in jobs that are essential for the security of persons and property, the maintenance of public order, the continuity of public services and the satisfaction of the essential needs of the nation, with the list of jobs concerned to be established by decree. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the current reform of the Labour Code should be finalized by 2024 and that, in the interest of coherence, the implementing texts of the Labour Code will be adopted after revision of the Code. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Decree implementing section L.276 of the Labour Code has still not adopted since the entry into force in 1997 of the current Labour Code. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that a suspension of the right to strike enforced by sanctions involving compulsory labour is compatible with the Convention only insofar as it is necessary to cope with cases of force majeure in the strict sense of the term – namely, when the existence or well-being of the whole or part of the population is endangered (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 314). The Committee recalls in this regard that the Government previously indicated that pending the Decree implementing section L.276, Decree No. 72-017 of 11 March 1972 establishing the list of posts, jobs and functions the holders of which may be requisitioned continued to be applicable, and that this Decree targeted posts, jobs or functions which do not constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term. In this regard, it refers the Government to its 2022 comments under the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention by ensuring that the Decree to implement section L.276 of the Labour Code limits the list of posts, jobs and functions the holders of which may be requisitioned, to posts, jobs and functions which constitute essential services in the strict sense of the term. Pending the adoption of these measures, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections L.276 and L.279(m) of the Labour Code, particularly on the number of prosecutions brought or court rulings handed down, specifying the penalties imposed and the acts that led to these convictions.

2. Occupation of premises in a strike. Recalling that the last paragraph of section L.276 and section L.279(o) of the Labour Code provide for the possibility of imposing imprisonment involving compulsory labour for striking workers who have occupied the workplace or its immediate surroundings, the Committee notes with regret the absence of measures taken by the Government to ensure that, in both legislation and practice, no sanctions involving compulsory labour should be imposed for the mere fact of organizing or peacefully participating in strikes (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 315). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, particularly within the context of the revision of the Labour Code, to amend the last paragraph of section L.276 and section L.279(o) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that striking workers who peacefully occupy the workplace or its immediate surroundings are not liable to prison sentences during which prison labour may be imposed. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of strikers who have been prosecuted and convicted under sections L.276 and L.279(o) of the Labour Code.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2012)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted section 282 of the Penal Code of 2008 which criminalizes trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation outside South Sudan. It requested the Government to indicate the provisions in national legislation that would prohibit trafficking for labour exploitation, including within the borders of the country, as well as information on the measures taken to prevent and suppress all forms of trafficking in persons. The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to section 11 of the Labour Act of 2017 which prohibits any person from organizing or assisting in the organization of illicit or clandestine movement of any persons into or out of South Sudan for performing work. The Government also indicates that no information is available concerning any decision or sanction imposed by the courts under section 282 of the Penal Code.

The Committee notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Trafficking in Persons, in her report of May 2023, highlights the prevalence of trafficking in persons occurring in the context of extreme poverty, insecurity and continuing conflict and violence in South Sudan and the urgency for strengthening coordinated action to prevent and combat trafficking in persons for all purposes of exploitation. She also emphasizes the very limited assistance and protection available to trafficked persons and the need for urgent action to ensure safe accommodation, appropriate assistance and protection to victims. The Special Rapporteur indicates that South Sudan currently hosts 377,000 refugees and over 824,000 migrant workers and an estimated 2.3 million South Sudanese refugees are living in neighbouring countries making it the largest refugee crisis in Africa. This migration context, combined with limited access to livelihoods and safe, regular migration opportunities, both inward and outward, contribute to increased risks of trafficking in persons. There are reports of women and girls who are abducted and detained by State and non-state armed groups for sexual slavery and forced labour (A/HRC/53/28/Add.2).

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent and combat trafficking in persons for both sexual and labour exploitation by (i) adopting a legal framework encompassing all forms of trafficking in persons; ii) ensuring comprehensive prevention and awareness-raising activities, with a particular focus on refugees and returned refugees; (iii) ensuring appropriate assistance and protection to victims of trafficking; (iv) enhancing the capacities of the law enforcement bodies to identify situations of trafficking in persons, undertake prompt investigations and initiate prosecutions. It also requests the Government to provide information on the prosecutions carried out, the convictions handed down and the number and nature of penalties applied to perpetrators of trafficking in persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Abductions for the exaction of forced labour and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the practice of abductions for the purpose of forced labour in the context of armed conflict. It noted the Government's indication in its last report that no evidence had been found regarding cases of abductions. The Committee further noted the United Nations Independent Expert's indication in 2016 that fighting continued, particularly in Darfur between Government forces and the Sudan Liberation Movement-Abdul Wahid, causing killings, abductions, sexual violence and displacement of civilians. The Committee noted the appointment of a Special Prosecutor for Darfur crimes, and the Government's information that no prosecutions undertaken by the Special Prosecutor were related to cases of abductions for forced labour. The Committee accordingly requested the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the imposition of appropriate criminal penalties on perpetrators of abductions for the exaction of forced labour.

The Government indicates in its report that there are no records of abductions for the purpose of compulsory labour, and that the Special Prosecutor for Darfur crimes has not received any cases of abductions for forced labour. The Government states that the security situation in Darfur is stable thanks to the efforts of the transitional Government, which has made peace its priority.

The Committee notes the United Nation's indication available on its website that a transitional Government was formed in August 2019 by the Transitional Military Council and the country's main opposition alliance, for a three-year period leading up to democratic elections. The Committee notes that the General Framework for the programme of the transitional Government sets as one of its priorities to put an end to the war and build fair, comprehensive and sustainable peace. In this regard, practical measures include: (i) establishing and activating the Transitional Justice Commission and building the relevant compensation and reparation institutions; and (ii) creating units for psychological support and assistance for the victims of violations. In addition, the Committee notes that Article 6(3) of the Transitional Constitution, signed on 17 August 2019, provides that despite any provision in existing laws, there shall be no statutory limitations on war crimes and crimes against humanity, extrajudicial killings, violations of international human rights law and international humanitarian law, and offences relating to corruption and abuse of power committed since 30 June 1989. The Committee welcomes the formal signature of a peace agreement on 3 October 2020 in Sudan between the transitional Government and opposition groups. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that no cases of abductions for the exaction of forced labour occur in future and to guarantee that victims are fully protected from such practices. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the establishment of the Transitional Justice Commission, the compensation and reparation institutions and the units to support and assist victims of violations, and to indicate the activities that they have undertaken for the reparation and reintegration of victims of abductions for the exaction of forced labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1970)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted that sections 50, 66 and 69 of the Criminal Act provided for penalties of imprisonment, which might involve an obligation to perform prison labour, for committing an act with the intention of undermining the constitutional system, for the publication of false news with the intention of harming the prestige of the State, and for committing an act intended to disturb public peace and tranquillity. It took note of the report of 2016 of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Sudan according to which repressive measures, including arrests and detentions, had been used by Sudanese authorities against political opposition groups, civil society organizations and students. The Committee accordingly urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sections 50, 66 and 69 of the Criminal Act were repealed or amended so that no prison sentence involving compulsory labour could be imposed on persons who, without using or advocating violence, expressed certain political views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system.

The Government indicates in its report that the Criminal Act is currently subject to review. The Committee notes that the Criminal Act was amended by the Act on various amendments of 13 July 2020. The Committee notes with regret that sections 50, 66 and 69 do not appear to have been amended.

The Committee further notes that the Human Rights Committee indicated in its concluding observations of November 2018 that the 2013 amendments to the Armed Forces Act introduced the possibility for the trial of civilians before military jurisdictions for crimes such as the spreading of false news (section 66 of the Criminal Act) or undermining the constitutional system (section 50 of the Criminal Act). The Human Rights Committee also pointed out that political opponents have been prosecuted before military jurisdictions (CCPR/C/SDN/CO/5, paragraph 39). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation is amended without delay so that persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system cannot be subject to sanctions involving compulsory prison labour. For instance, the Government could restrict the scope of application of sections 50, 66 and 69 of the Criminal Act to situations of violence, or could repeal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the specific penalties that have been imposed on persons under sections 50, 66 and 69 of the Criminal Act, including by the military jurisdictions. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the 2013 amendments to the Armed Forces Act.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Syrian Arab Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Situations of forced labour arising from the armed conflict. Trafficking and sexual slavery. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that according to the 2016 Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic to the Human Rights Council, credible information indicates that women and girls trapped in conflict areas under the control of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) face trafficking and sexual slavery. Some specific ethnic groups are particularly vulnerable, such as Yazidis and those from ethnic and religious communities targeted by the ISIL (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 65). The Committee also notes that, according to the 2017 Report of the UN Secretary-General on conflict-related sexual violence, thousands of Yazidi women and girls who were captured in Iraq in August 2014 and trafficked to the Syrian Arab Republic continue to be held in sexual slavery, while new reports have surfaced of additional women and children being forcibly transferred from Iraq to the Syrian Arab Republic since the start of military operations in Mosul (S/2017/249, paragraph 69).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, pursuant to the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act of 2010, a Department to Combat Trafficking in Persons was established. However, since the conflict has erupted, trafficking of persons and sexual slavery have increased because of the presence of terrorist groups in the country. The Committee must express its deep concern that, after almost six years of conflict, trafficking in persons and sexual slavery are practices that are still occurring on a large scale on the ground. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to put an immediate stop to these practices which constitute a serious violation of the Convention and to guarantee that the victims are fully protected from such abusive practices. The Committee recalls that it is crucial that appropriate criminal penalties are imposed on perpetrators so that recourse to trafficking or sexual slavery does not go unpunished. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures in this respect, and to provide information on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to certain provisions under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour, pursuant to sections 46 and 51 of the Penal Code (Act No. 148 of 1949), may be imposed in situations covered by the Convention, namely:

- Penal Code: section 282 (insult of a foreign State); 287 (exaggerated news tending to harm the prestige of the State); 288 (participation in a political or social association of an international character without permission); and sections 335 and 336 (seditious assembly, and meetings liable to disturb public tranquillity); and
- the Press Act No. 156 of 1960: sections 15, 16 and 55 (publishing a newspaper for which an authorization has not been granted by the Council of Ministers).

The Committee also previously noted that the abovementioned provisions are enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year which involves an obligation to perform labour in prison.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Press Act of 1960 had been repealed and replaced by the Media Act No. 108 of 2011, under which the penalty of imprisonment has been replaced by a fine. The Government also indicates that a draft Penal Code has been prepared and is in the process of being adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, during the process of the adoption of the new Penal Code, the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that persons who express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention and that, in any event, penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour cannot be imposed on them.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that there are eight persons convicted under section 137 "Public insults of the President"; two persons convicted under section 137-1 "Public insults or defamation of the Leader of the Nation"; 137 persons convicted under section 189 "Incitement of social, racial, national, regional, religious enmity or discord"; and one person convicted under section 330(2) "Insult of a representative of authority" of the Criminal Code. The Committee also takes note of the examples of the court decisions handed down under sections 137, 189, and 330 of the Criminal Code provided by the Government.

The Committee notes that the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee, in its 2023 report on follow-up to its concluding observations, regretted that individuals had been deprived of their liberty on a number of charges related to insulting or libelling the President/Leader of the Nation and insulting other State officials (CCPR/C/137/2/Add.4). With respect to section 189(1) of the Criminal Code, the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, in its Opinion No. 89/2020, expressed concern that the provisions of this section are vague and overly broad and may be used to punish the peaceful exercise of human rights. In its other Opinions, the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention referred to the arbitrary arrests and deprivation of liberty of political opposition activists which resulted from the legitimate exercise of their rights and freedoms (Opinions No. 48/2021 and No.23/2020) The Committee also notes that the UN human rights experts expressed concern about the use of extremism- and terrorism-related charges against human rights defenders and minority activists (the communication of 12 May 2023). The UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination regretted that the national counter-terrorism legislation, including the provisions of the Criminal Code, contains an overly broad and ambiguous definition of "terrorism" and related offences (CERD/C/TJK/CO/12-13).

The Committee recalls that while Article 1(a) of the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence, it protects those who, in a peaceful manner, express their views or oppose the established political, social or economic system (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 303). The Committee further observes from the examples of the court decisions provided by the Government that the application of sections 137, 189 and 330 of the Criminal Code in practice is not limited to cases of violence. The Committee notes with concern that the provisions of the Criminal Code are used to arrest, prosecute and convict human rights defenders, opposition members and journalists who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, leading to the imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour, particularly imprisonment, corrective labour and public works. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review the provisions of the Criminal Code punishing extremism and terrorism-related offences, in such a way that, both in law and practice, no penalty involving compulsory labour can be imposed on persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee further urges the Government to amend or repeal sections 137, 137-1, 189, and 330 of the Criminal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of prison sentences involving an obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. 1. Penal Code and Charter for political parties. The Committee recalls that a number of provisions in national legislation may give rise to the application of prison sentences involving an obligation to work under section 68 of the Penal Code, for offences related to activities through which persons express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, namely:

- Penal Code: sections 290 to 292 (defamation), 301 and 302 (insulting the President or members of the Government or other public authorities), 491 and 492 (insulting representatives of public authority, or insulting the flag or anthem), 540 (organizing demonstrations on public thoroughfares that fail to comply with legal requirements), 552 (seditious cries or chants uttered in public places or gatherings) and 665 (the publication, dissemination or reproduction, by whatever means of fake news).
- Act No. 91-4 of 12 April 1991 establishing a charter for political parties: section 25 (persons who lead or run a political party in violation of the provisions of the charter).

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information from the Government on the application of these provisions in practice, and on any measures envisaged to ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views or of opposition to the established order on the basis of these provisions.

The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations of 2021, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern in relation to: (1) the existence of a number of vague legislative provisions that impose excessive limits on the content of speech, notably in the Press and Communications Code; (2) a number of sections of the Penal Code that criminalize activities linked to the exercise of freedom of expression, such as seditious chants and cries in public places or meetings, the publication of fake news, and defamation; (3) allegations of the use of these penal provisions to hamper the activities of journalists, trade unionists, opinion leaders and human rights defenders, and to curb their freedom of expression; and (4) reports concerning numerous incidents involving threats, intimidation, harassment and arbitrary arrests of human rights defenders (CCPR/C/TGO/CO/5, 24 August 2021).

The Committee notes this information and expresses concern at the continuing existence in the legislation of provisions that can be used to restrict the exercise of the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media) and that can result in the imposition of penalties involving compulsory prison labour.

The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of compulsory labour as a means of political coercion or education or as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The range of activities which must be protected, under this provision, from punishment involving forced or compulsory labour thus comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media, or through the exercise of the right of association, including the creation of political parties or societies). However, certain limitations may be imposed by law on the rights and freedoms concerned, which must be accepted as normal safeguards against their abuse, examples being laws against incitement to violence, civil strife or racial hatred (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 302 and 303).

The Committee urges the Government to take steps, both in law and in practice, to ensure that any person expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system cannot be sentenced to penalties involving an obligation to work. It requests the Government to amend these sections of the Penal Code and the charter for political parties, clearly limiting the scope of these provisions to situations involving the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing the penal sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect and to indicate the number of prosecutions initiated on the basis of these provisions, the nature of the penalties imposed, and the events giving rise to the prosecutions or convictions.

2. Act No. 40-484 of 1 July 1901 concerning contracts of association. The Committee recalls that a number of provisions of Act No. 40-484 of 1 July 1901 concerning contracts of association provide for prison sentences that include the obligation to work for offences related to the exercise of freedom of expression and which may therefore fall within the scope of the Convention, namely:

- section 8(1), which provides for a fine, which may be commuted to a prison sentence for non-payment pursuant to section 76 of the Penal Code, in the event of failure to comply with formalities relating to prior notification of changes in the administration or management of an association, and any amendments to the statutes;
- section 8(2), which provides for a fine and imprisonment of between six days and one year for the founders, directors or administrators of an association that has been maintained or reconstituted illegally after a ruling of dissolution, and section 8(3), which provides that any persons who have facilitated meetings of members of the dissolved association by granting them the use of premises available to them shall be liable to the same penalty; and
- section 15, which provides for the penalties established in section 8(2) for the representatives or directors of a religious congregation who have not complied with the provisions concerning the keeping of a list of the congregation members and the presentation of such a list at the request of the prefect.

The Committee notes with regret the repeated lack of information in the Government's report on the practical application of these provisions. The Committee also notes that a draft bill on freedom of association to replace the 1901 Act was launched in 2020 and that it provides for prison sentences. It notes that several United Nations Special Rapporteurs have expressed concern about this draft bill, particularly with regard to the penalties imposed (OL/TGO 3/2021, 13 August 2021).

The Committee trusts that in revising Act No. 40-484 of 1 July 1901 concerning contracts of association, the Government will take account of the requirements of the Convention and ensure that no penalty involving compulsory labour may be imposed on persons who exercise rights through which they express opinions or oppose the established political, social or economic system. It requests the Government to provide updated information on this legislative review process and to send copies of any new legislation adopted in this regard. Meanwhile, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice and to communicate any court decisions handed down on the basis of these provisions.

3. Press and Communications Code. With regard to the Press and Communications Code, the Committee notes the Government's indication that progress has been made leading to the adoption of a new Press and Communications Code (Act No. 2020-001 of 7 January 2020). The Government indicates that section 157 of the Code, replacing section 86 of the previous Code, no longer provides for prison sentences for journalists, technicians or media assistants who incite the public to violate the laws of the Republic, but rather stipulates that this offence shall be punished in accordance with the provisions of ordinary law. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the provisions of ordinary law that would be applicable in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's report received on 31 August 2023. It also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2023. Moreover, it notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 27 September 2023, and the Government's reply to the ITUC's observations, received on 27 October and 9 November 2023. The Committee further takes note of the report on the implementation of the 2023 road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government of Turkmenistan (implementation report), produced following the visit of the independent ILO mission on the observance of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers during the 2023 harvest.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 111th Session, June 2023)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee), which took place in June 2023 during the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development. Cotton production. The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2023, the Conference Committee deplored the persistence of the widespread use of forced labour in relation to the annual state-sponsored cotton harvest in Turkmenistan and the Government's failure to make any meaningful progress on the matter since the Conference Committee discussed the case in 2016 and 2021. The Conference Committee further urged the Government, in consultation and cooperation with the social partners, to: (i) ensure the full implementation of the road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government; (ii) reinforce its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of public and private sector workers, as well as students, in state-sponsored cotton production; (iii) eliminate the compulsory quota system for production and harvesting of cotton; (iv) issue clear instructions on the prohibition of the use of forced labour and strengthen labour inspection and law enforcement; (v) prosecute and sanction appropriately any public official who participates in the forced mobilization of workers for the cultivation or harvest of cotton; and (vi) promote social dialogue in cotton production and continue engaging in cooperation with the ILO and relevant organizations of workers and employers to ensure the full application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee takes note of the Government's information in its report concerning the measures taken in the framework of the implementation of the road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government for 2023 (road map), which was adopted in March 2023 following several ILO high-level technical assistance missions. This road map covers activities in the following six areas: (1) a review of the policy and administrative framework governing the cotton harvest; (2) improvement of labour inspection and law enforcement; (3) promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment in the cotton sector; (4) improvement of cotton production and harvesting; (5) design and implementation of awareness-raising activities; and (6) promotion of social dialogue in cotton production. In particular, the Government indicates that: (1) an analysis has been carried out of the current legislative framework with regard to the application of the Convention and the resulting draft legislative acts were submitted to Parliament; (2) meetings were held with the participation of the relevant ministries and agencies, social partners and ILO representatives to discuss compliance of the legislation and law enforcement practices with the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), and to proceed towards the ratification of these Conventions; (3) there are ongoing efforts to produce a qualitative study of recruitment practices for the cotton harvest and a quantitative study to assess cotton harvesting trends over the past five years; (4) a technical workshop was held during the ILO mission in July 2023 to discuss seasonal and casual employment in Turkmenistan's agricultural sector; (5) in 2021–22, more than 200 awareness-raising meetings, workshops and round tables were held to address fair employment issues throughout the country; and (6) the social partners are actively involved in implementing all the measures set out in the road map.

The Committee further notes from the ITUC's observations that despite the Government's engagement with the ILO and the adoption of the road map, forced labour practices in cotton production are still prevalent on a massive scale in Turkmenistan. Moreover, the ITUC points out the increased pressure on the heads of state-owned enterprises to mobilize workers to the cotton fields in 2022. In particular, tens of thousands of public sector employees, including teachers, doctors, cultural workers, and civil servants, were mobilized to pick cotton to meet the State's cotton harvest plan. Cotton pickers were forced to work under hazardous and unsanitary conditions, including in temperatures ranging from -10°C in December to +40°C in August with no shade and an inadequate supply of drinking water. While cotton pickers were exposed to chemicals, they received no warning or protective equipment, and no medical care. They had also to pay for food, water, transportation, and accommodation. The ITUC further indicates that persons were forced to pay for replacement pickers in order not to participate in cotton harvesting. In 2022, the replacement fee varied between 20 to 60 manats per day (about US$1–3), while the average teacher's salary is between 1,300–1,400 manats per month (about US$65–70).

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the ITUC's observations reiterating the measures taken to ensure the implementation of the road map and indicating its intention to discuss the prospects for long-term cooperation with the ILO in the event of the successful implementation of the road map. The Government further refers to the information prepared by the National Centre of Trade Unions of Turkmenistan (NCTU) which indicates that the NCTU did not receive any complaints about the use of forced labour from workers during the cotton harvest. The NCTU further indicates that in some regions of Turkmenistan, local authorities and farmers, in collaboration with employment services, organize the voluntary recruitment of cotton pickers, who are provided with transport and food and receive wages depending on the amount of cotton harvested.

The Committee notes that the IOE, in its observations, expresses hope that progress will be made in the application of the Convention, in line with the Conference Committee's conclusions and in close consultations with the most representative employers' organization in Turkmenistan.

The Committee further notes that in its 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed remaining concern about the widespread use of the forced labour of civil servants during the cotton harvest (mainly women) under threat of such penalties as the loss of wages or salary cuts and the termination of employment as well as other sanctions (CCPR/C/TKM/CO/3).

The Committee also notes that, with the acceptance of the Government, an independent ILO observance mission of the conditions of work and recruitment of cotton pickers, by ILO staff and independent consultants recruited by ILO, took place during the 2023 harvest in October 2023. The Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the implementation report, initial findings from this observance mission indicate direct or indirect evidence of mobilization of public servants in all regions visited (Ahal, Lebap, Dashoguz and Mary provinces) except for Ashgabat City.

While taking due note of the Government's collaboration with the ILO in the framework of the road map and during the observance of the cotton harvest in 2023, the Committee reiterates its deep concern about the continued practice of forced labour in the cotton sector. The Committee strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of workers, particularly from the public sector, in cotton production. In this regard, the Committee urges the Government to continue to engage with the ILO and the social partners, within a cooperation framework, to ensure the full application of the Convention in practice. It requests the Government to continue to take measures to implement the various components of the road map and to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this respect, including measures to further raise public awareness on this subject and to monitor the cotton harvest.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1944)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), and the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), received on 30 August 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Massive migration flows. The Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report, that the coercive unilateral measures imposed on Venezuela result in an uncertain economic context and migration of the Venezuelan population. It notes, however, that the Government has not provided specific information on measures taken so that this situation does not contribute to an increase in cases of trafficking of Venezuelans among the high number of persons who migrate.

The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE and the CUTV highlight that this phenomenon is only getting worse owing to the generally impoverished population, the lack of education and job opportunities, and the poor living conditions, which have provoked widespread exodus of the population, which travels often with an irregular status and in dangerous conditions, continually exposed to human rights abuses and violations in the border areas and migratory routes, including trafficking in persons. In this respect, the trade union organizations indicate that, because of the urgency of this situation, CTASI has launched a campaign, entitled "We have the right not to migrate", demanding that an agreement be drawn up on Venezuelan migration, with the support of the ILO and the International Organization for Migration, as the most urgent priority is to prevent and mitigate the causes of migration and its link with trafficking in persons, through social dialogue and a coordinated action to promote the right not to migrate. The trade union organizations also regret the absence of measures taken by the Government to regularly collect and publish information on the number of persons concerned by this phenomenon and likely to be affected by trafficking.

In this regard, the Committee notes that according to the Regional Inter-Agency Coordination Platform for Refugees and Migrants from Venezuela (R4V), managed jointly by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Organization for Migration, to date, approximately 7.7 million persons have left Venezuela, more than 80 per cent of whom have migrated to Latin America and the Caribbean. The Committee notes the adoption of the Return to the Homeland Plan 2018–25 (Plan Vuelta a la Patria) which aims to facilitate the repatriation of Venezuelan nationals by air, sea or over land. It notes, in this regard, that in its 2022 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families noted with concern that: (i) there is the lack of accessible information on returns, which is key to developing social protection and reintegration policies for returnees; (ii) according to the requirements for registration, persons who are considered to have participated in public acts of violence or acts of hatred against the Venezuelan people may not be able to participate in the plan for return; (iii) in order to benefit from socio-economic reintegration and social protection measures, registration in the Carnet de la Patria (Card for the Nation) system appears to be a prerequisite; and (iv) there has been harassment of people who returned outside the framework of the Return to the Homeland Plan. The United Nations Committee also noted with concern the deterioration in consular services for Venezuelan migrants due to the closure of several consulates in foreign countries, and the difficulties migrants have experienced in acquiring and renewing their passports – a basic requirement for access to the regularization procedure and to health, employment, education and financial services in destination and host countries (CMW/C/VEN/CO/1, 27 October 2022).

Given the massive and ongoing migratory flows, the Committee urges the Government to take specific measures to ensure that the actions taken by the national authorities to address this situation do not contribute, directly or indirectly, to increasing the vulnerability of Venezuelans at risk of trafficking, inside or outside the country. It requests the Government to provide information on any bilateral agreements signed with the biggest host countries to this end, as well as on the situation of migrants who return to the country, within the framework of the programme for assistance to return or by their own means, specifying the support and follow-up provided to those repatriated when they return, including to facilitate their reintegration.

2. Legislative and institutional framework. The Committee takes due note of: (i) the adoption of the National Plan to combat trafficking in persons for 2021–25 and the establishment of a National Council to combat trafficking in persons, responsible for ensuring the follow-up, evaluation, implementation and enforcement of the plan (Presidential Decree No. 4.540 of 21 July 2021); and (ii) the establishment in November 2020 of the Special Division of the Ombuds Office for the protection of migrants, refugees and victims of trafficking in persons. It notes that, in their joint observations, the trade union organizations regret the lack of information from the Government on the specific actions implemented by these institutions to combat trafficking in persons, including within the framework of the National Plan, in particular in the Orinoco Mining Arc (Arco Minero del Orinoco, AMO), which covers the states of Bolivar, Amazonas and Delta Amacuro, where the situation is worrying and is deteriorating. The trade union organizations add that with the rise of illegal mining in Bolivar, the state has become not only an area of transit and origin, but also a destination for human trafficking; Venezuelan jobseekers who come to this region are forced to work in the mines in conditions akin to slavery, and women and girls from indigenous communities are victims of trafficking for the purposes of sexual exploitation in the mining areas. The trade union organizations add that in July 2023, the Government launched Operation Autana to expel 10,000 miners from the Orinoco Mining Arc.

The Committee notes that, in their 2023 concluding observations, the United Nations Human Rights Committee and the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women both expressed concern about the increase in contemporary forms of slavery, including sex trafficking and child labour in mining areas, particularly in the Orinoco Mining Arc, in the context of the presence of non-State armed and criminal groups linked to extraction activities. The Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women also noted with concern that the Special Division of the Ombuds Office for the protection of migrants, refugees and victims of trafficking in persons lacks the human, technical and financial resources necessary for the implementation of its mandate (CCPR/C/VEN/CO/5, 3 November 2023; and CEDAW/C/VEN/CO/9, 31 May 2023).

The Committee notes with concern this information. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to combat trafficking in persons, both for the purposes of labour exploitation and sexual exploitation, in particular in the Orinoco Mining Arc, and in the mining and agricultural sectors. Noting that the National Plan to combat trafficking in persons for 2021–25 has still not been published, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Plan, as well as information on the actions implemented within its framework, and on the evaluation of the results achieved and the difficulties encountered. It also requests the Government to provide information on the functions and activities of the National Council to combat trafficking in persons and the Special Division of the Ombuds Office, and on the measures taken to ensure that sufficient resources are made available to them. It once again requests the Government to indicate whether the bill against trafficking in persons is still on the agenda.

3. Prevention and awareness-raising The Committee notes the Government's general information that various strategies, policies and programmes have been developed in coordination with the different national agencies aimed at preventing and eliminating trafficking in persons, particularly by identifying the geographical areas where this crime is likely to occur, such as border areas, by strengthening their presence through prevention and awareness-raising actions for vulnerable groups of the population. The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the trade union organizations highlight the limited impact of the preventive measures implemented by the Government, which indirectly contribute, according to the organizations, to the massive migratory flows of the population. The trade union organizations add that despite the efforts of the National Bureau to Combat Organized Crime and the Funding of Terrorism (ONCDOFT), its preventive activities implemented between January 2022 and April 2023 reached less than 2 per cent of the population, thus failing to recognize the scale of the phenomenon of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to implement large-scale prevention and awareness-raising activities, concerning trafficking in persons, both for the purposes of labour exploitation and sexual exploitation, at the national and local levels, in particular in the areas where most cases of trafficking are identified. It also requests the Government to provide information on the content of the activities carried out to this end, the preventive tools put in place, the results achieved and the difficulties encountered.

4. Identification and protection of victims. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Victim Assistance Unit (UAV) under the Public Prosecutor's Office, which is a department attached to special high-level prosecutor's offices in each State. The service is entirely free of charge and aims to provide guidance to victims of crime, including trafficking, inform them of their rights and provide them with personalized support, particularly psychological, to ensure that they are able to participate during the criminal proceedings. Specifically, regarding Venezuelan presumed victims of trafficking identified abroad, the Government indicates that a mechanism for assistance is in place within consulates to provide the necessary assistance and refer these potential cases to the national authorities. The Government adds that the National Office for Comprehensive Care of Victims of Violence (ONAIIV) is the body responsible for establishing institutional policies in this area and acts in four fields: health, psychological support, social and legal assistance. ONAIIV has developed a protocol for standardizing criteria and procedures for the assistance, follow-up, supervision and evaluation of care for victims of violence. The Government adds that, between 2022 and 2023, 57 victims of trafficking were identified, including 47 adults.

The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the trade union organizations highlight that these figures do not reflect the scale of trafficking, and testify to the absence of adequate mechanisms for detecting and identifying victims of trafficking. They add that the actions of ONAIIV are, in practice, limited as it does not have local offices throughout the country and is mainly dedicated to addressing violence against women in general.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that all victims of trafficking receive protection and assistance adapted to their situation. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of victims identified who have received assistance and the type of assistance provided. It once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the protocol for assistance for victims of trafficking formulated by ONCDOFT, once it has been revised.

5. Punishment and enforcement of effective penalties. The Committee welcomes the establishment within the Public Prosecutor's Office, of a special unit to investigate trafficking in persons, particularly of women and girls; and within the Scientific, Penal and Criminal Investigating Body, of the investigation unit for trafficking in persons for reporting, investigating and dismantling trafficking networks. With regard to the activities of ONCDOFT, which is responsible for developing training programmes for officials from the judiciary, the Public Prosecutor's Office and law enforcement, the Government indicates that a series of actions was carried out with police officers and officials from the immigration services to better identify cases and victims of trafficking in persons. In addition, training activities in trafficking were carried out by the Special Division of the Ombuds Office set up in 2020, as part of its national training plan concerning the rights of victims of trafficking, including for judiciary officials, police officers and immigration services officials. To date, 869 persons have benefited from these actions. The Government adds that training for labour inspection officials was carried out by the People's Ministry of Labour, in cooperation with the International Organization for Migration (IOM), in order to address the identification, detection and referrals of presumed cases of trafficking. The Government adds that it participates in various initiatives launched at the regional level to combat trafficking in persons, such as the Regional Platform against trafficking in persons and smuggling of migrants, and the Network on trafficking and smuggling of migrants of the South American Conference on Migration.

The Committee notes from the statistical information provided by the Government that legal proceedings for cases of trafficking in persons were brought against 26 persons in 2022 and 21 persons in 2023. Furthermore a total of 51 persons were convicted of the crime of trafficking in the same period. The Committee observes that only one of these persons was convicted of trafficking for the purposes of forced labour, and once again notes that the Government does not specify the nature of the penalty imposed in this respect. The Committee notes that, in their joint observations, the trade union organizations highlight the need to increase the number and effectiveness of anti-trafficking activities, as this phenomenon is becoming worse and more complex. They also underline the lack of information concerning the actions taken by the new above-mentioned structures within the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Scientific, Penal and Criminal Investigating Body to fulfil their mandate against trafficking.

The Committee requests the Government to take action to strengthen the capacity and the competence of the various authorities that contribute to combating trafficking in persons, so that these authorities can effectively identify situations of trafficking, carry out adequate investigations and initiate prosecutions against the perpetrators of trafficking and any complicit public officials. Recalling that Article 25 of the Convention provides that the exaction of forced labour shall be punishable by adequate and strictly enforced penalties, The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number and nature of investigations carried out, prosecutions initiated, court decisions handed down and penalties imposed, specifying the provisions of the national legislation under which the criminal proceedings were initiated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers

(CTASI), the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE) and the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), received on 20 August 2023. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political opinions or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee recalls that several provisions of the national legislation can result in the application of custodial sentences (presidio or prisión) – involving compulsory labour under sections 12 and 15 of the Criminal Code and section 64 of the Basic Prison Code – for infringements that could be linked to activities in which persons express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, in particular:

- The Criminal Code: sections 147 and 148 (offending or showing a lack of respect for the President of the Republic or for a number of public authorities; section 149 (public denigration of the National Assembly, the Supreme Court of Justice, and so forth); sections 222 and 225 (offending the honour, reputation or prestige of a member of the National Assembly or a public servant, or of a judicial or a political body); section 226 (proof of the truth of the facts is not admitted); and sections 442 and 444 (defamation).
- The Constitutional Act against hatred, for peaceful coexistence and tolerance (Act No. 41.274 of 8 November 2017): sections 20 and 21 (inciting hatred, real or alleged membership to a determined political group constituting an aggravating circumstance to the infringement).

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it categorically rejects any allegations of infringements of the right to freedom of expression within its territory and specifies that social movements aimed at expressing political opinions opposed to the established political, social or economic order are not criminalized. It states that Venezuelans can exercise their right to freedom of thought, the free development of their personality and their right to protest in full freedom, as guaranteed by the Constitution. It highlights that the State is nevertheless bound to ensure respect of the rights of others, and that certain limitations to the rights in question are provided for in the legislation for this purpose. It falls to the judge to penalize the conduct prohibited by the legislation and to impose a penalty proportionate to the offence found and the damage caused, as part of a due process. With regard to compulsory labour for persons who receive custodial sentences, the Committee notes that the Government provides detailed information on the possibility of receiving alternative penalties to imprisonment. The Government also adds that, since the entry into force of the Constitution in 1999, no penalty of presidio has been handed down. The Committee notes this information and observes that the Government has not referred to the penalty of prisión, which, like the penalty of presidio, is a custodial sentence including compulsory labour. Furthermore, it once again notes with regret the absence of information from the Government on the use in practice of the national legislative provisions referred to above and the penalties imposed in this context.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in their joint observations, CODESA, the CTV, FAPUV, CTASI, UNETE and the CUTV underscore the purely normative nature of the information provided by the Government which merely refers to the current criminal procedure without mentioning any measure taken to put an end to the violations of the Convention. The trade union organizations indicate that the criminalization of peaceful social protests and the expression of political views other than those of the party in power has continued, with the Centre for Justice and Peace (CEPAZ) documenting 523 cases of persecution and repression in 2022 alone. The trade union organizations add the many trade unionists and trade union leaders, as well as workers, especially in the public sector, have been arrested, prosecuted and convicted for having organized or participated in protests in defence of their labour rights, particularly for "treason", "terrorism" and "inciting hatred". According to the trade union organizations, the above-mentioned laws are used arbitrarily to criminalize legitimate trade union activities and the exercise of the right to freedom of expression and peaceful protest.

The Committee also notes that since its last examination in 2020, several United Nations bodies have expressed their increasing concerns at the allegations of intimidation, reprisal and criminalization of persons who are considered voices dissident to the Government and its programme (annual reports of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the situation in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela - A/HRC/53/54, 4 July 2023; A/HRC/50/59, 12 August 2022; and A/HRC/47/55, 16 June 2021; United Nations Special Rapporteurs on freedom of association and peaceful assembly, and on promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism – communication reports VEN 4/2022, VEN 9/2021, VEN 7/2021, VEN 5/2020; treaty bodies of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Universal Periodic Review). The Committee notes in particular that, in its report on terrorism and human rights, the United Nations Secretary-General highlighted that in Venezuela, vaguely formulated criminal offences related to organized crime and terrorism have been used to stigmatize and criminalize civil society and the media (A/76/273, 6 August 2021). It also notes that, in its concluding observations of November 2023, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed its concerns about various sources of information referring to serious restrictions to freedom of opinion and expression in the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, in particular to political opposition to the Government, such as harassment, intimidation, surveillance, persecution, excessive use of defamation, arbitrary arrest and detention of journalists, human rights defenders and political activists considered critical of the Government and its programme, and recourse to above-mentioned Act No. 41.274 to restrict freedom of expression (CCPR/C/VEN/CO/5, 3 November 2023).

It also notes that, in its report published in September 2023, the independent international fact-finding mission on the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela indicated that: (i) in at least 58 cases since 2020, people have been arbitrarily detained as part of a selective crackdown on real or alleged opponents of the Government; (ii) trade union leaders continued to be persecuted, with six trade union leaders sentenced on 1 August 2023 to 16 years' imprisonment for terrorism; (iii) relatives of the main suspects in these cases, particularly women, have been arbitrarily detained on serious charges such as treason and terrorism; and (iv) in several cases, people who received custodial sentences remained in prison even after a judge ordered their immediate release, a trend that disproportionately affects those convicted of opposition to the Government. The independent international mission also indicated that it had reasonable grounds to believe that, in the context of the ongoing humanitarian and economic crisis, the criminal justice system in Venezuela has been used to punish, silence and quash criticism, or real or alleged opposition to the Government, in particular journalists, trade unionists, human rights defenders and political activists, by charging these individuals with arbitrary, and often serious, criminal accusations, based on provisions of the Criminal Code, the Basic Act against organized crime and the financing of terrorism of 2012, and Act No. 41.274 (A/HRC/54/57, 22 September 2023).

Lastly, the Committee notes the decisions and discussions held at the 344th, 345th, 346th and 347th Sessions of the Governing Body (March, June and October–November 2022 and March 2023) on the developments concerning the social dialogue forum that aim to give effect to the recommendations made to the Government by the Commission of Inquiry on the application of the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). It hopes that these developments will also all ensure progress in the application of Convention No. 105.

While welcoming the dialogues under way, particularly in the social dialogue forum, the Committee deplores the continued criminalization of social movements and the expression of views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, as well as the repeated absence of information from the Government in this regard, which denies the existence of such acts. In the light of the foregoing, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures, both in law and practice, to put an immediate end to any violation of the provisions of the Convention by ensuring that no one who, in a peaceful manner, expresses political views or opposes the established political, social or economic system can be sentenced with penalties involving compulsory labour. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application in practice of the provisions of the Criminal Code, the Basic Act against organized crime and the financing of terrorism, and Act No. 41.274, referred to above, and to specify the number of prosecutions brought on the grounds of these provisions, the nature of the penalties imposed and the acts that led to the legal proceedings or convictions. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to ensure the immediate release of any person sentenced to imprisonment involving compulsory labour for having, in a peaceful manner, expressed political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system and to provide information on any progress achieved in this matter.

With reference, lastly, to its previous observation, the Committee takes due note of the adoption of the Act on the partial reform of the Basic Code of Military Justice of 17 September 2021, which provides that no civilian may be judged in the ordinary criminal courts and that all cases concerning them must be referred to the ordinary criminal jurisdictions (section 6 of the Act).

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 29 Bahamas, Bolivia (Plurinational State of), Comoros, France, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Germany, Greece, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Malawi, Maldives, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, North Macedonia, Norway, Papua New Guinea, Republic of Korea, Republic of Moldova, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Lucia, Senegal, Singapore, Solomon Islands, South Sudan, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Togo, Turkmenistan, Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of), Yemen Convention No. 105 Afghanistan, Barbados, Comoros, Gabon, Gambia, Georgia, Grenada, Guinea, Honduras, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Kazakhstan, Kiribati, Kyrgyzstan, Maldives, Mauritius, Mongolia, Morocco, Namibia, Niger, Papua New Guinea, Republic of Moldova, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Senegal, Solomon Islands, South Sudan, Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Togo, Turkmenistan, Viet Nam, Yemen.

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 105 Guinea-Bissau.

Elimination of child labour and protection of children and young persons

Afghanistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the implementation of the various measures taken by the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled (MoLSAMD) to prevent child labour, including: the National Child Labour Strategy, 2012, followed by a National Action Plan to prevent child labour in brick kilns; a National Strategy for the Protection of Children at Risk; and a National Strategy for Working Street Children, 2011. However, the Committee noted, that children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labour and often in hazardous conditions, including in agriculture, carpet weaving, domestic work, street work, and brick making. Moreover, 27 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years (2.7 million children) are engaged in child labour with a higher proportion of boys (65 per cent). Of this, 46 per cent are children between 5 and 11 years of age. At least half of all child labourers are exposed to hazardous working conditions such as dust, gas, fumes, extreme cold, heat or humidity. Moreover, 56 per cent of brick makers in Afghan kilns are children and the majority of these are 14 years of age and below.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information in this regard. The Committee once again notes with concern that a significant number of children under the age of 14 years are engaged in child labour, of which at least half are working in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities, both in the formal and informal sectors, and requests that the Government provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee noted that according to sections 5 and 13 of the Labour Law, read in conjunction with the definition of a "worker", the Law applies only to labour relations on a contractual basis and, therefore, that the provisions of the Labour Law did not appear to cover the employment of children outside a formal employment relationship, such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard in the Government's report, the Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship. The Committee therefore requests, once again, that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that all children, including children working outside a formal employment relationship such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection laid down by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages, once more, the Government to review the relevant provisions of the Labour Law in order to address these gaps as well as to take measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to the informal economy with a view to ensuring such protection in this sector.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that section 13(2) of the Labour Law sets 15 years as the minimum age for employment in light work in industries and section 31 prescribes a weekly working period of 35 hours for young persons between 15 and 18 years of age. It observed that the minimum age for light work of 15 years is higher than the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years, specified by Afghanistan.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard by the Government, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that Article 7(1) of the Convention is a flexibility clause which provides that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons aged 13– 15 years in light work activities which are not likely to be harmful to their health or development and not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.

The Committee notes the lack of information contained in the Government's report and recalls once again that Article 7(4) permits member States who have specified a general minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years to substitute a minimum age for admission to light work of 12–14 years to that of the usual 13–15 years of age (see General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 389 and 391). In view of the fact that a high number of children under 14 years of age are engaged in child labour in the country, the Committee once again requests that the Government regulate light work activities for children between 12 and 14 years of age to ensure that children who, in practice, work under the minimum age are better protected. The Committee also requests that the Government take the necessary measures to determine light work activities that children of 12–14 years of age are permitted to undertake and to prescribe the number of hours and conditions of such work, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2017, and the in-depth discussion on the application of the Convention by Afghanistan in the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 106th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2017.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 106th Session, June 2017)

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery and effective and time-bound measures. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Law on prohibiting the recruitment of child soldiers criminalizes the recruitment of children under the age of 18 years into the Afghan Security Forces. The Committee also noted that a total of 116 cases of recruitment and use of children, including one girl, were documented in 2015. Out of these: 13 cases were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security forces; five to the Afghan National Police; five to the Afghan Local Police; and three to the Afghan National Army; while the majority of verified cases were attributed to the Taliban and other armed groups who used children for combat and suicide attacks. The United Nations verified 1,306 incidents resulting in 2,829 child casualties (733 killed and 2,096 injured), an average of 53 children were killed or injured every week. A total of 92 children were abducted in 2015 in 23 incidents.

In this regard, the Committee noted the following measures taken by the Government:

- The Government of Afghanistan signed an Action Plan with the United Nations on 30 January 2011 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Security Forces, including the Afghan National Police, Afghan Local Police and Afghan National Army.
- A roadmap to accelerate the implementation of the Action Plan was endorsed by the Government on 1 August 2014.
- The Government endorsed age-assessment guidelines to prevent the recruitment of minors.
- In 2015 and early 2016, three additional child protection units were established in Mazar e Sharif, Jalalabad and Kabul, bringing the total to seven. These units are embedded in Afghan National Police recruitment centres and are credited with preventing the recruitment of hundreds of children.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended that the Government take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children into armed forces and groups. It further recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in law and practice. Finally, the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are forced to join armed groups.

The Committee notes the IOE's indication that children are engaged in armed conflict in Afghanistan. The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Law on the Prohibition of Children's Recruitment in the Armed Forces (2014), along with other associated instruments, has helped prevent the recruitment of 496 children into national and local police ranks in 2017. Moreover, the Ministry of Interior, in cooperation with relevant government agencies, was effectively implementing Presidential Decree No. 129 which prohibits, among others, the use or recruitment of children in police ranks. Inter-ministerial commissions tasked with the prevention of child recruitment in national and local police have been established in Kabul and the provinces, and child support centres have been set up in 20 provinces, with efforts under way to establish similar centres in the remaining provinces. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Directorate of Security has recently issued Order No. 0555, prohibiting the recruitment of underage persons and that the Order is being implemented in all security institutions and monitored by national and international human rights organizations. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts in taking immediate and effective measures to put a stop, in practice, to the recruitment of children under 18 years by armed groups, the national armed forces and police authorities, as well as measures to ensure the demobilization of children involved in armed conflict. It once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, it requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and armed forces and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Articles 3(b) and 7(2)(b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee previously noted that concerns remained regarding the cultural practice of bacha-bazi (dancing boys), which involves the sexual exploitation of boys by men in power, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces' commanders. It also noted that there are many child victims of bacha bazi, particularly boys between 10 and 18 years of age who have been sexually exploited for long periods of time. The Committee further noted that some families knowingly sell their children into forced prostitution, including for bacha-bazi.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi. It also recommended the Government to take effective and time bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are sexually exploited.

The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Child Protection Law has been submitted to Parliament for adoption and makes the practice of bacha-bazi a criminal offence. The Committee also notes the new Law on Combating Human Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants of 2017 (Law on Human Trafficking of 2017). It notes that section 10(2) of this Law punishes the perpetrator of trafficking to eight years' imprisonment when the victim is a child or when the victim is exploited for the purpose of dancing. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the prohibition contained in section 10(2) of the Law on Human Trafficking of 2017. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved to effectively eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi, to remove children from this worst forms of child labour and to provide assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Child Protection Law, and its effective implementation.

Article 7(2). Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and taking into account the special situation of girls. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that as a result of the past three decades of conflict, insecurity and drought, children and youth are the most affected victims, a majority of whom are deprived of proper education and training. The Committee noted that Afghanistan is among the poorest performers in providing sufficient education to its population. A large number of boys and girls in 16 out of 34 provinces had no access to schools by 2013 due to insurgents' attacks and threats that lead to the closure of schools. In addition to barriers arising from insecurity throughout 2015, anti-government elements deliberately restricted the access of girls to education, including closure of girls' schools and a ban on girls' education. More than 369 schools were closed partially or completely, affecting at least 139,048 students, and more than 35 schools were used for military purposes in 2015. Finally, the Committee noted the low enrolment rate of girls, in particular at the secondary school level, high dropout rates especially in rural areas owing to a lack of security in the journey to and from school, and the increased number of attacks on girls' schools and written threats warning girls to stop going to school by non-state armed groups.

The Committee notes the Government representative's statement at the Conference Committee that many households respond to poverty by taking their children out of school and forcing them into labour. The Government indicates that child labour is not only a law enforcement matter but a fundamental problem which requires a comprehensive understanding and a robust response mechanism. With a view to providing preschool support to children under the age of six, the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled has established over 366 local kindergartens which house over 27,000 children. The Government also indicates it is taking strong action against the exploiters as well as the families who knowingly force their children into prostitution and expects a sharp decline in the practice in the coming years. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that school burnings and the imposition of bans in Taliban-controlled areas prevented girls and children from attending school. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to raise awareness among households that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Additionally, it once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the education system and to ensure access to free basic education, including by taking measures to increase the school enrolment and completion rates, both at the primary and secondary levels, particularly of girls.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the unions and employers' federation were consulted regarding the activities and occupations which should be prohibited to persons below 18 years of age. It noted that although a recommendation was made, it was not submitted before the National Labour Board, as it was the Government's aim to revamp the occupational health and safety legislation. Thereafter, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the proposed amendments to the provisions of the Labour Code on occupational health and safety have been circulated to Cabinet, but have not yet been adopted. It further noted the Government's indication that technical assistance was sought in relation to new and separate occupational health and safety legislation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the National Labour Board is currently reviewing the occupational health and safety legislation. The Government states that it has noted the Committee's comments and that it will act accordingly. The Committee notes with regret that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age has still not been adopted. The Committee therefore once again reminds the Government that Article 3(1) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety, or morals of young persons, shall not be less than 18 years. It also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Observing that the Convention was ratified by Antigua and Barbuda more than 30 years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a list of activities and occupations prohibited for persons below 18 years of age is adopted in the near future, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard through amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation, and to provide information on progress made. Lastly, it requests that the Government provide a copy of the amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation once adopted.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the National Policy for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (NCLP) was adopted in 2021 by the National Tripartite Council (NTC), in collaboration with the ILO Office. The Government further indicates that the second Decent Work Country Programme (2021–26) (DWCP) was launched in December 2021, the aim of which is the general promotion of decent work, particularly in the framework of the recovery and reconstruction in the aftermath of Hurricane Dorian and the COVID-19 pandemic. Consequently, the DWCP should contribute to the elimination of child labour by mitigating some of the push factors that are inducing children to work (such as poverty or lack of decent work opportunities for their families). Moreover, the Committee observes that one of the outputs of the DWCP is to enhance national statistics on priority areas, including on the economic activities of children and youth. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made and results achieved, in particular in terms of the effective reduction of the prevalence of child labour, through the implementation of the NCLP and DWCP. It also requests the Government to provide updated statistics on the employment of children in economic activities in the Bahamas.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the amendments to the Employment Act that the NTC and Department of Labour will undertake are expected to strengthen the powers of the labour inspectorate to increase the protection of children from child labour. This is also highlighted as an objective of the DWCP. The Committee requests the Government redouble its efforts to ensure that the capacity of the labour inspectorate is strengthened, and its reach expanded into the informal economy. It requests the Government to continue providing information on specific measures taken in this regard, as well as on the results achieved, including the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate.

Article 2(2) and (3). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work and the age of completion of compulsory schooling. Following its previous comments, and in response to the Government's information in its report, the Committee recalls that there is no disparity between the age of admission to employment or work and the age of completion of compulsory schooling in the Bahamas, which are both 16 years of age according to national legislation. The disparity exists between the minimum age for employment or work in national legislation (16 years by virtue of section 7 of the Child Protection Act of 2007) and the minimum age for employment or work specified by the Bahamas at the time of ratification of the Convention (14 years). The Committee therefore encourages the Government to consider the possibility of sending a declaration under Article 2(2) of the Convention, thereby notifying the Director-General of the ILO that it has raised the minimum age to employment or work from 14 to 16 years of age.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the NTC and the Department of Labour will review and amend the Employment Act in a manner to satisfy the Committee's request with regard to the adoption of a list of types of hazardous work. Considering that the Committee has been raising this question for more than ten years, the Committee urges the Government take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 years is elaborated, in consultation with the social partners, and adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and as to supply a copy of the list once it has been adopted.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of types of light work activities. The Committee notes, as it did in its previous comments, that section 7(3)(a) of the Child Protection Act provides that a child under the age of 16 may be employed by the child's parents or guardian in light domestic, agricultural or horticultural work. It further notes that, under section 50 of the Employment Act, children under 14 years of age may only be employed in the undertakings listed in the First Schedule, which are: grocery packers, gift wrappers, peanut vendors, newspaper vendors, or any firm as may be approved by the Minister of Labour. The Committee therefore considers that, when these two provisions are read together, the minimum age for admission to light domestic, agricultural or horticultural work should be 14 years. On the other hand, the Committee observes that there is no minimum age set for light work of children under 14 years employed in the undertakings listed in the First Schedule of the Employment Act.

The Government indicates that it is anticipated that the NTC will amend the Employment Act to include a clearly defined category of "light work". In this regard, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Article 7(4) of the Convention which allows for a lower minimum age of 12 years for light work, only if the specified minimum age is 14 years as per Article 2(4) of the Convention, while Article 7(1) sets 13 years as the minimum age for light work, if the minimum age declared is 15 years or above. The Government should therefore take into consideration that when the minimum age for admission to employment or work is raised from 14 to 16 years, as per Article 2(2) and (3) of the Convention, the minimum age for light work should also be set accordingly. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to bring the national legislation in line with the Convention by clearly determining the light work activities that may be permitted to children of 13 years and above, and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Previous comment

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, and direct assistance for their removal from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child sex tourism. In response to the Committee's previous comment noting the lack of awareness-raising activities among the actors directly related to the tourism industry in relation to children, and particularly girls, engaged in sexual exploitation in the tourism sector, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Tourism has been given the mandate of disbursing training and information to prevent commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector. In particular, the Ministry of Tourism works with other governmental departments to raise awareness on human trafficking and, along with the Ministry of Immigration, monitors 29 ports of entry. Public awareness efforts are also currently being exercised through anti-trafficking campaigns by the use of posters at all ports of entry, conducting training sessions with Foreign Affairs, hotels, other tourism-related businesses, NGOs and the public in general. The Government further indicates that measures to ensure the detection, prevention and remediation of children engaged in child labour and its worst forms in the tourism sector are included in the 2021 National Policy for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (NCLP). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures, including awareness-raising measures, to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children and to provide information on their impact. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of sexual exploitation in the tourism sector who have been removed from this situation and given appropriate protection through rehabilitation and social integration measures.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act in 2011, section 8 of which criminalizes the trafficking of persons for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's information in its report that the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act of 2011 was repealed and replaced by the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, which contains comprehensive provisions addressing the issue of trafficking. According to section 4, the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation is punishable by a fine of 2 million Barbadian dollars (BBD) (about US$990,099), life imprisonment or both. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Government's written replies to the list of issues of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of 2017, since 2015, no new arrests and charges have been made in relation to trafficking (CEDAW/C/BRB/Q/5-8/Add.1, paragraph 52). In its concluding observations of 2017, the CEDAW expressed its concern that Barbados remains both a source and a destination country for women and girls, including non-nationals, who are subjected to trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour, as a result of high unemployment, increasing levels of poverty and the weak implementation of anti-trafficking legislation. The CEDAW was also concerned about the lack of information on the number of complaints, investigations, prosecutions and convictions related to the trafficking of women and girls (CEDAW/C/BRB/CO/5-8, paragraph 25). The Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) similarly expressed its concern at the high level of internal trafficking of children, the lack of information on the situation in general and the lack of effective measures to address and prevent the sale and trafficking of children in its concluding observations of 2017 (CRC/C/BRB/CO/2, paragraph 58). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, particularly in relation to the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 4 of the Act in practice, including the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 8(1) of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act prohibits the employment of a young person in any work that by its nature or the circumstances in which it is done is likely to cause injury to his/her health, safety or morals, the national legislation does not contain a determination of these types of work, as required under Article 4(1) of the Convention. The Government indicated that the formulation of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age was being considered. The Committee also noted that the Safety and Health at Work Act 2005 entered into force in January 2013 and that draft regulations under the provisions of this were forwarded for comments to the representative employers' and workers' organizations.

The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age are addressed in specific pieces of legislation, including the Factories Act, the Pesticide Control Regulations, the Protection of Children Act and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act. However, the Committee observes that these provisions together do not constitute a comprehensive determination of the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that none of the draft regulations under the Safety and Health at Work Act deal with this issue. Considering that it has been referring to this issue since 2004, the Committee must express its deep concern at the absence of a comprehensive list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Article 4(1) of this Convention, according to which the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) must be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 is included in national legislation, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

(ratification: 1973)

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1973)

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comments: Conventions Nos 77 and 78

Previous comment: Convention No. 124

In order to provide an overview of the issues concerning the application of the Conventions on the medical examination of young persons, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 77, 78 and 124 in a single comment.

Article 2(1) of Conventions Nos 77 and 78. Medical examination for fitness for employment. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, the adoption of Law No. 1139 of 20 December 2018 which amends the Code for Children and Young Persons 2014. It notes with interest that section 131 of the Code for Children and Young Persons 2014, as amended, provides that young persons of at least 14 years of age who wish to engage in employment: (1) must freely express their willingness to carry out any labour activity or work, (2) whether it relates to work on their own account or on account of another, must obtain the authorization from the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents; and (3) in either case, the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents, before granting the authorization to work, must order a comprehensive medical assessment certifying the young person's health and their physical and mental capacity for the performance of the corresponding work or the work activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on how the application of section 131 of the Code for Children and Young Persons is ensured in practice.

Medical examination for fitness for employment and periodic re-examinations required for persons under 21 years of age in underground work (Article 2(1) of Convention No. 124). Periodical medical examinations (Article 3(2) and (3) of Conventions Nos 77 and 78). Medical examinations required until the age of 21 years in occupations which involve high health risks (Article 4 of Conventions Nos 77 and 78). Appropriate measures for the vocational guidance and physical and vocational rehabilitation of young persons found by medical examination to be unsuited to certain types of work or to have physical handicaps or limitations (Article 6 of Conventions Nos 77 and 78). Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with concern, the Government's indication that the Bill on occupational safety and health, is still waiting to be adopted by the Parliament. It notes the Government's repeated statement that it undertakes to monitor the status of this issue in front of the Parliament and promote discussions on the matter in the legislative body. Recalling that the Government has been referring to the Bill on occupational safety and health since 2011, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the Bill is adopted without delay and to ensure observance of these provisions of the Conventions. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2) of Convention No. 78. Supervision of the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents. Noting that the Government remains silent on this point, the Committee requests it to ensure: (i) the adoption, without delay, of the Bill on occupational safety and health; and (ii) that it will contain provisions determining the measures of identification to ensure the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried out in the streets or in places to which the public have access, as well as any other methods of supervision to be adopted to ensure the strict enforcement of the Convention, in accordance with Article 7(2) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Application of the Conventions in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that all authorizations to work need to be recorded in a Register of authorizations and must contain compulsory information, including but not limited to, the name, age and activity of the child, as well as the medical examination report and the official Form of authorization signed by a parent or legal guardian and issued by the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare (MTEPS) (section 42 of the Supreme Decree No. 2377 regulating Law No. 548 on the Code for Children and Young Persons). The Government also states that section 138 of the Code for Children and Young Persons provides that it is the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents who is responsible for the Register of authorizations of all children engaged in work, and upon request, the Ombudsperson shall submit copies of the Register to the MTEPS for the purposes of inspection and supervision. The Committee notes that, in 2022, the MTEPS issued a request to all municipal authorities to provide copies of their Registers of authorization of children in work and received information from 21 municipalities. Out of the replies received, only four municipalities had dealt with procedures of authorization of work of young persons, for a total of 48 authorizations. The Government indicates that all these 48 cases complied with the requirement of medical examinations. However, the Committee notes that it is not clear if this includes the requirement of periodical medical examinations (Article 2(1) of Convention No. 124 and Article 3 of Conventions Nos 77 and 78). The Government adds that it will endeavour to obtain the requested information from all municipalities and ensure that further information is provided on the type of work authorized to be performed by young persons, in order to provide comprehensive statistical data to this Committee. The Committee requests the Government to continue to collect and provide information on the number of children and young persons who are engaged in work and have undergone the periodical medical examinations envisaged in the Conventions. Considering the low number of registered authorizations, the Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that all young persons who work in the country will progressively be covered by the protection afforded by the Conventions, including children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents, in itinerant trading or in any other occupation carried out in the streets or in places to which the public have access. Please also provide extracts from the reports of the inspection services relating to any infringements reported and the penalties imposed.

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee requested that the Government amend section 129(2) of the Code for Children and Young Persons and its related sections (130(3); 131(1), (3) and (4); 133(3) and (4); and 138(1)) and that it raise the minimum age for work from 10 years back to 14 years, to bring it in conformity with Decision No. 0025/2017 of the Constitutional Court of 21 July 2017 and the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report on the adoption of Law No. 1139 of 20 December 2018 amending the Code for Children and Young People, which amends sections 130, 131, 132, 133(3) and (4), 138(1) and (2), 140(b), 188(ff) and (gg) of the Code. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 131, as amended, provides that only children of at least 14 years can apply for authorizations to work to the Ombudsman for Children and Adolescents. It further notes the Government's statement that taking into consideration Decision No. 0025/2017 of the Constitutional Court of 21 July 2017 and Law No. 1139 amending the Code for Children and Young Persons, the minimum age for admission to work has been raised to 14 years, in line with the Convention. However, the Committee notes that Law No. 1139 does not explicitly amend section 129(2), which sets the minimum age for admission to work to 10 years for own-account workers, and to 12 years for children in an employment relationship. In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Right of the Child and the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights have noted with satisfaction the adoption of Law No. 1139 and the increase of the minimum age for admission to work or employment to 14 years (CRC/C/BOL/CO/5-6, 6 March 2023, para. 44 and E/C.12/BOL/CO/3, 5 November 2021, para. 32). The Committee further notes that article 133 of the Political Constitution provides that: "the ruling that declares the unconstitutionality of a law ... makes the challenged norm inapplicable and has full effects on everyone". The Committee requests the Government to confirm that section 129(2) of the Code for Children and Young Persons is effectively inapplicable.

Article 6. Apprenticeships. With regard to sections 28 and 58 of the General Labour Act, which allow children below the age of 14 years to work in apprenticeships, the Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report still does not provide any new information on the steps taken to prohibit children under 14 years of age from engaging in apprenticeships, and only refers to information already provided in previous reports. The Committee therefore once again recalls that sections 28–30 of the General Labour Act do not prescribe a minimum age for signing an apprenticeship contract and that section 58 of the Act explicitly prohibits work for children under the age of 14 years, except for cases of apprenticeships, while none of these provisions make any reference to section 129(1) of the Code for Children and Young Persons on the minimum age for admission to work. The Committee also notes the Government's information that, in 2019, 12,000 children were working as apprentices (compared to 124,000 in 2016), but it notes that this data is not disaggregated by age. Recalling that it has been drawing the Government's attention to this matter since 2001, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to harmonize the provisions of the national legislation with Article 6 of the Convention so as to set, without delay, the minimum age for admission to employment or work in apprenticeships at 14 years.

Article 7(1) and (4). Light work. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that Law No. 1139 repeals section 132(7) of the Code for Children and Young Persons and amends section 133, with the effect of removing the provisions authorizing children between the ages of 10 and 14 years to be employed, under the condition that it does not endanger their life, health, safety or image, and does not interfere with their access to education. The Committee notes that while these amendments have repealed the express authorization for children to be engaged in light work between the ages of 10 and 14 years of age, sections 132 and 133, as amended, no longer provide a lower minimum age for admission to light work. The Committee therefore requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to take the necessary steps to ensure that the Code for Children and Young Persons is amended so that a minimum age for admission to light work is clearly provided, which should be no less than 12 years, in accordance with Article 7(1) and (4) of the Convention.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1), following the adoption of Law No. 1139, establishing the minimum age at 14, the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents, in charge of delivering work authorizations for children, will only grant authorizations for children aged 14 and above; (2) efforts must be made to strengthen both the authorization and registration procedures of young workers, to guarantee the protection of their rights, and that, through the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Welfare (MTEPS), it will insist that the legislation is applied by the Autonomous Regional Governments; and (3) section 138 of the Code for Children and Young Persons provides that the Ombudsperson for Children and Adolescents is responsible for keeping the Register of work authorizations for children aged between 14 and 18 years who are engaged in work. The Committee notes, however, that section 138 does not address the obligation of the employer to keep and make available registers or other documents of persons whom he/she employs or who work for him/her and who are less than 18 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all employers keep a register of the persons whom they employ who are less than 18 years of age, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 3(a), 7(1) and 7(2)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Debt bondage and forced and compulsory labour, penalties and effective and time-bound measures. Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour and providing direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industries. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the prevalence and conditions of exploitation of children working in hazardous conditions in sugar cane and nut harvesting plantations. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication, in its report, that in the ten years since the implementation of the programme on Eradication of Child Labour in the department of Santa Cruz, led by the Government and in cooperation with UNICEF and private and public institutions, 5,000 children were removed from work in the sugar cane industry. The Government adds that 90 per cent of children who come from sugar cane harvesting families have stopped engaging in daily work in harvesting, while 10 per cent of children, generally adolescents, continue to engage in such activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate undertook 225 inspections of child labour in 2021, and 252 inspections up until July 2022.

The Government states that the concrete impact of these inspections, whether regular or unscheduled, can be seen from the continuing reduction of child labour in the sugar cane and nut harvesting plantations. While taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee notes once again with regret the absence of information on the number of violations identified from these inspections or the penalties imposed. The Committee strongly urges the Government to ensure that persons using the labour of children under 18 years of age in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industries, under conditions of debt bondage or forced labour, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are applied. It requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations detected and the penalties applied. The Committee also strongly encourages the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to: (i) prevent children from becoming victims of debt bondage or forced labour in the sugar cane and Brazil nut harvesting industries, and to remove child victims from these worst forms of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration; and (ii) provide information on the measures taken to this end and the results achieved.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Hazardous types of work and effective and time-bound measures for prevention, assistance and removal. Children working in mines. The Committee noted previously that over 3,800 children work in the tin, zinc, silver and gold mines in the country, and that the Government also referred to the establishment by the Ministry of Labour of Integrated Mobile Offices (Oficinas Móviles Integrales) in remote areas where the presence of the worst forms of child labour is suspected, including in mining areas. Noting that the Government is silent on this point, the Committee again requests the Government to indicate the effectiveness of the action undertaken by the Integrated Mobile Offices in preventing children from being engaged in hazardous work in mines, their removal from such work and their rehabilitation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH). Regarding the by-law that shall define the types of work referred to in section 57 of the Labour Law of the FBiH No. 26/2016 (work likely to create a hazard or increased risk to the life, health, development or morale of underage persons), the Government indicates, in its report, that it has not yet been adopted, considering other legislative priorities (particularly the new by-laws on the new Law on Occupational Safety and Health, 2021). The Government indicates that the by-law in application of section 57 of the Labour Law could be adopted in the next legislative period.

The Committee further notes the Government's detailed information regarding the Rulebook on "requirements for establishing positions with special working conditions and physical examinations of employees occupying such positions" (the "Rulebook") (Official Gazette of the Socialist Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, No. 2/91), which is in force in the FBiH. The Committee notes with interest that the Rulebook establishes an extensive list of 55 workplace risks/types of work that can be performed only by employees who are at least 18 years old. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Rulebook as well as information on its application in practice, in particular whether there have been instances of children under the age of 18 engaged in the types of prohibited hazardous work listed and, if so, whether penalties have been imposed to those who have employed them. In addition, the Committee once again request the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, pursuant to section 57 of the Labour Law of the FBiH, that a list of activities and occupations prohibited for persons below 18 years of age is adopted, after consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Brčko District. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that no progress has been made regarding the adoption of a list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children and young persons under 18 years of age pursuant to section 75(1) of the Labour Law of the Brčko District No. 34/19 of 2019. Observing that it has been raising this issue since 2005, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt a regulation determining the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 years, after consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2024, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Compulsory schooling and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that child labour was a visible phenomenon in the country, particularly as a result of poverty and of the low school enrolment rate in some cases. In this regard, the Committee noted that the capacity of schools was very limited and that some primary and secondary schools were obliged to refuse to enrol certain children of school age. Consequently, a large number of children, particularly from poor families and disadvantaged backgrounds, were deprived of an education.

The Committee noted the Government's indication that there had been a positive trend towards gender parity in school, standing at 0.87 at primary level. However, it was less satisfactory at secondary level, where the numbers of girls in school had fallen significantly. According to the Government, particular problems in the educational situation for girls involved late enrolment, a very high repetition rate – around 30 per cent in primary school and 23 per cent in secondary school – and a high drop-out rate, with only 32 per cent of pupils completing primary education.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it is taking steps to reduce the disparity in school enrolment rates for girls and boys. The Government indicates that the school mapping system is being revised by the Ministry of Education, in conjunction with the education offices and UNICEF, with a view to boosting educational coverage and ensuring better access to education for children living in rural areas. Moreover, the Committee notes that a UNICEF country programme has been adopted for 2015–19, which aims, among other things, to support the Government's efforts to enhance children's right to education. One of the main objectives of the programme is to ensure that all children are enrolled in and complete inclusive, high-quality education, with the focus on equity and achievement.

However, the Committee notes that section 2 of Framework Act No. 94/035/AF of 20 December 1994 provides that schooling is only compulsory from 6 to 12 years of age, which is three years earlier than the minimum age for admission to employment or work, namely 15 years. Referring to the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee observes that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, a vacuum may arise which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (paragraph 371). The Committee therefore considers it desirable to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it coincides with the minimum age for admission to employment or work, as provided for in Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to make education compulsory until the minimum age for admission to employment, namely 15 years. Moreover, the Committee requests that the Government intensify its efforts to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate, especially among girls, in order to prevent children under 15 years of age from working. The Committee requests that the Government provide information on the results achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee notes, in the Government's report, statistics on the rates of school enrolment and attendance compiled during the development of the sectoral education strategy 2021–30. They show a total primary school completion rate of 78.86 per cent and a total secondary school completion rate of 67.35 per cent.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's information that, within the framework of the sectoral education strategy 2015–30, 104 preschools, education, training and apprenticeship centres, and a national centre for vocational rehabilitation for persons with disabilities have been built in the country. The Government also indicates that a rehabilitation centre for vulnerable children has been established, as part of an informal literacy and education initiative, with a view to providing alternatives for out-of-school children.

It also takes due note of the information that the national action plan to improve the quality of life of indigenous populations 2022–25 provides for training for indigenous teachers, in order to adapt education to their way of living, under the provisions of Decree No. 2019-204 of 12 July 2019 on special measures to facilitate access for indigenous children to education and adults to literacy. The Committee notes, however, that, according to the Report on the right of indigenous peoples of the United Nations Human Rights Council, of 10 July 2020, the Special Rapporteur expressed deep concern at the percentage of indigenous children who were out of school (65 per cent des of indigenous children aged 12 to 15 years, compared with 39 per cent in the general national population) (A/HRC/45/34/Add.1, paras 45 and 49). Recalling once again that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that children who have not yet reached the minimum age for admission to occupation or employment, set at 14 years, are included in the education system. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the specific measures taken in this respect, within the framework of the sectoral education strategy and the national action plan to improve the quality of life of indigenous populations, as well as on the results achieved. The Committee also encourages the implementation of appropriate measures to improve completion rates, which remain relatively low. In this regard, it requests it to continue to provide detailed statistics relating to the rates of school enrolment and particularly completion rate of children under 14 years, in both rural and urban areas, and disaggregated by age and gender.

Article 3(2) and (3). Determination of hazardous types of work and age of admission to hazardous work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the Government's information that one of the strategic priorities is the revision of the list of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, in all economic branches of activity. It also notes the Government's information that a preliminary study was deemed necessary to appropriately determine the types of hazardous work by sector of activity, following the complexity of the revision of the 1953 regulatory text, and the rejection of a draft decree drawn up solely by the Minister of Justice. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the decree determining the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, under section 68(d) of the Child Protection Act, in consultation with the social partners. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Articles 4(4)(a) and (b) and 5 of the Convention. Records of persons who are employed or work underground. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that under section 295 of the Labour Code, the employer must keep a constantly up-to-date record at the workplace containing a complete list of the workers which must be kept available for the labour inspectorate. The information which it must contain is fixed by regulation. The Committee notes that section 295 of the Labour Code does not specify that the records must also be made available to workers' representatives, at their request. The Government indicates that a committee drafting the implementing regulations for the new Labour Code is updating General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953 establishing the model for employers' records. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to require that lists established in accordance with Article 4(5) shall be made available to workers' representatives, at their request. It also requests the Government to ensure that these lists indicate in particular the date of birth of all workers under 21 years of age and the date on which persons were employed or worked underground for the enterprise for the first time.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. X-ray film of the lungs. The Committee notes the adoption on 19 November 2021 of Act No. 22/2021 issuing the Labour Code. It notes the Government's indication in its report that an X-ray film of the lungs must be made on the occasion of the initial medical examination, in accordance with sections 245 and 246 of the Labour Code. However, the Committee notes that sections 245 and 246 merely refer to a "supplementary medical examination", without stating that an X-ray film of the lungs is compulsory. Recalling that it has been raising this matter for nearly 30 years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that an X-ray film of the lungs is required during the initial medical examination of any person under 21 years of age with a view to their employment or work underground in mines and, if considered necessary from a medical point of view, during subsequent re-examinations.

Article 4(4) and (5). Records of persons who are employed or work underground. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953 establishing the model for employers' records has still not been amended. The Government indicates that a committee drafting the implementing regulations for the new Labour Code has started work to bring Order No. 3018 into conformity with the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to bring General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953 into conformity with the Convention, and to require that the employer must make available to workers' representatives, at their request, the records of persons under 21 years of age employed or working underground, with these records obliged to indicate the date of birth of the aforementioned persons, details of the nature of their work and a certificate of fitness for employment, but not providing any medical information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2010)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes the adoption on 19 November 2021 of Act No. 022/2021 issuing the Labour Code. It notes the Government's indication in its report that section 214 of the new Labour Code lays down the principle that, unless an exemption is granted, no child under 16 years may be employed in an enterprise. The Committee notes, however, that under the terms of section 1 of the Labour Code, the Code continues to govern only labour relations between workers and employers, and between the latter or their representatives and apprentices and trainees placed under their authority. It therefore appears that the Labour Code and the provisions on the minimum age for admission to employment or work do not apply to work performed outside a formal employment relationship, as in the case of children working on their own account or those working in the informal economy. The Committee therefore notes with regret that the Government has not taken the opportunity of the revision of the Labour Code to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not these are governed by a contractual employment relationship, including work in a family enterprise. The Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary, in the very near future, so that all children under 16 years of age who engage in economic activities outside a formal employment relationship, particularly children who work in the informal economy, including in a family enterprise, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work and determination of such types of work. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 003/2018 of 8 February 2019 issuing the Children's Code, section 74 of which prohibits the engagement of a child (defined as any person under 18 years) in work that is paid or is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. However, the Committee notes that section 7 of the Labour Code provides that before 16 years of age, children may not be engaged in work that is not appropriate for their age, health, physical or psychological condition, or development, unless exemptions are granted under the present legislation. The Committee also notes with concern that section 214(2) of the Labour Code prohibits the engagement of children under 16 years (and not of children under 18 years as stipulated in Article 3(1) of the Convention) in work considered the worst forms of child labour, particularly work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize their health, safety or morals. This particularly includes: (1) work which exposes children to physical, psychological or sexual abuse; (2) work with dangerous machinery, equipment and tools, or which involves the manual handling or transport of heavy loads; (3) work underground, under water, at dangerous heights or in confined spaces; and (4) work in an unhealthy environment which may, for example, expose children to hazardous substances, agents or processes, or to temperatures, noise levels, or vibrations damaging to their health. In addition, section 214 provides that a decree will determine the nature of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited to children, as well as the minimum age that applies to this prohibition. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in the near future, to amend section 214 of the Labour Code and prohibit the performance of work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of all children under 18 years, in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to adopt a decree determining the nature of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited to children under section 214 of the Labour Code, and to guarantee the application of this decree to all children under 18 years.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee notes with regret that, contrary to the information previously provided by the Government, the new Labour Code does not contain provisions governing the rules for light work by children. It notes therefore that Decree No. 0651/PR/MTEPS of 13 April 2011 determining individual exemptions from the minimum age for admission to employment remains the rule in force and that, under sections 2 and 3, subject to the agreement of a parent or guardian and of the works doctor, individual exemptions from the minimum age to employment may be granted for the performance of light work not likely to jeopardize the health, development or education of the minors concerned, or their participation in vocational orientation and training programmes. The Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 7(1) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may permit the employment of children aged at least 13 years in light work and that, under Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority, and not the persons exercising parental authority, shall determine the activities in which light employment or work may be permitted and shall prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) set the minimum age for admission to light work at 13 years; (ii) adopt a list of types of light work in which children between 13 and 16 years of age may be engaged; and (iii) ensure that the competent authority determines the conditions for such employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this regard.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee notes that, under section 295 of the Labour Code, the employer must keep updated, at the work premises, an employer's register, containing a full list of his or her current employees. The information that must be kept in the register is set through regulations. The Committee notes, from the Government's report on the application of the Minimum Age (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 123), that a drafting committee for the implementing texts for the new Labour Code is in the process of updating General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953 determining the model of the employer's register. The Committee reminds the Government that, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention, national regulations or the competent authority shall prescribe the registers or other documents which shall be kept and made available by employers, containing the name and ages, or dates of birth, duly certified, wherever possible, of persons whom they employ or who work for them and who are less than 18 years of age. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in the near future, to bring General Order No. 3018 into conformity with the requirements of Article 9(3) of the Convention, by providing that the employer must keep registers and make them available.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the revision in 2019 of the Criminal Code. It notes that section 342 of the revised Criminal Code defines trafficking in persons as: the recruitment, transport, transfer, accommodation or reception of a person in exchange for remuneration or any other consideration, or for the promise of remuneration or other consideration, in order to place that person at the disposal of an identified or unidentified third party so as: (1) to allow the commission against that person of the offences of procuring, sexual assault and the exploitation of begging or living or working conditions inconsistent with human dignity; or (2) to compel that person to commit any such offence, or to assist him or her in immigrating or emigrating. The Committee notes the Government's indications, in its report, that section 343 of the revised Criminal Code provides for penalties of imprisonment of up to seven years with a fine of 1 million CFA francs (approximately US$1,700) for crimes of trafficking involving adult victims and imprisonment of up to 15 years with a fine of up to 100 million CFA francs (approximately US$173,000) for trafficking involving victims who are minors.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that measures have been taken to improve the functioning of the justice system and that some 50 magistrates received training to strengthen their competence in ruling on crimes of trafficking in persons under the Criminal Code. The Government also indicates that in order to improve intersectoral coordination, 70 actors from law enforcement, social services and civil society received training in investigations into trafficking in persons. The Government indicates that the police opened 17 investigations into reported cases of child trafficking in 2018, and three into forced labour of children in 2019. The Government adds that, in 2019, the Ministry of Justice referred 20 cases of child trafficking to the Prosecutor's Office. Also in 2019, one perpetrator of trafficking was found guilty by the court and another presumed perpetrator of trafficking was absolved.

The Committee notes the Government's acknowledgement that there are difficulties in applying the Convention in the informal sector. The Committee notes that, according to the concluding observations of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), Gabon continues to be a country of transit and destination for trafficked women and girls, mainly for purposes of labour and sexual exploitation, including in mines, disproportionately affecting migrant women and girls (CEDAW/C/GAB/CO/7, 1 March 2022, paragraph 20). While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary steps to ensure that thorough investigation and robust prosecution of perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children, including government officials suspected of complicity and corruption, are carried out and completed, and to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on them. The Committee requests the Government to provide concrete information on the application of provisions relating to this worst form of child labour, by transmitting statistics on the number of convictions handed down and the criminal penalties imposed.

Articles 5 and 6. Monitoring mechanisms and programmes of action. The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to its previous requests, particularly on: (1) the measures taken to ensure that the watchdog committees, which are responsible for monitoring and combating the trafficking of children for exploitation within the country, can better detect cases of trafficking of children under 18 years of age; and (2) the role and activities of the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children and the Interministerial Committee to Combat the Trafficking of Children. It notes the Government's indication that, in 2019, it: (1) organized an awareness-raising campaign to combat trafficking and other forms of violence against children, reaching 861 people; (2) provided training for social workers and first responders on child protection issues, particularly trafficking in persons, in the province of Ogooué Ivindo, in the north-east of the country; and (3) supported the awareness-raising campaign of a Gabonese NGO in Libreville by providing access to official sites. The Government also indicates that it approved the national action plan against trafficking in early 2020. However, the Committee notes that, according to the 2022 concluding observations of CEDAW: (1) there is a lack of data on the extent of trafficking in persons and an absence of specific procedures in place for the early identification of victims and national referral mechanisms for protection and assistance; and (2) there is an absence of a national anti-trafficking plan and of a functioning interministerial committee to coordinate the national anti-trafficking response (CEDAW/C/GAB/CO/7, paragraph 20). It also notes, according to the Government's report under the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that in 2017, the authorities identified 65 child victims of trafficking and, in 2018, 50 child victims. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report to the Human Rights Council for the Universal Periodic Review, a text on the establishment, powers, organization and functioning of a national commission to prevent and combat trafficking in persons in Gabon is being drafted. The goal is to have a single national body responsible for dealing with trafficking in persons in Gabon that will implement the existing national programme (A/HRC/WG.6/42/GAB/1, 28 October 2022, paragraph 72). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the watchdog committees have the capacity to detect situations where children under 18 years of age are victims of trafficking. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been identified, and on the activities undertaken. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the role and recent activities of the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children and the Interministerial Committee to Combat the Trafficking of Children; and (ii) the progress made in establishing a national commission to prevent and combat trafficking in persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Reception centres and medical and social assistance for child victims of trafficking. The Government indicates that in 2018, 30 children were removed from situations of forced labour. The Government also indicates that it is funding two reception centres run by NGOs for comprehensive services for victims of trafficking, orphans and street children, in particular by financing social workers, medical assistance, psychological services, legal assistance and school fees. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report for the Universal Periodic Review, the responsibilities of the Centre for Children in Difficult Circumstances henceforth include the provision of support for child victims of trafficking, and that qualified civil servants have been seconded to a private transit centre that takes in child victims of trafficking (A/HRC/WG.6/42/GAB/1, paragraph 69). While noting the number of children removed from trafficking circuits, the Committee recalls the importance of measures for the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims of trafficking and requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that all children withdrawn from trafficking are effectively rehabilitated and integrated in society. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have actually been removed from this worst form of child labour and placed in reception centres.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that specific cooperation agreements with Togo, Benin and Burkina Faso are being drawn up to improve coordination in combating child trafficking. The Government adds that draft trilateral agreements are envisaged to include transit countries, thereby strengthening the legal effects. In its report for the Universal Periodic Review, the Government indicates that it faces major challenges, including lack of genuine cooperation among countries of origin, transit countries and Gabon – as the country of destination – with regard to prevention, and the weakness of tools and services for support and protection, the effectiveness of which essentially depends on cooperation among all national and international actors (A/HRC/WG.6/42/GAB/1, paragraph 70). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that bilateral agreements on trafficking in persons are concluded with neighbouring countries in the very near future, particularly with a view to boosting the numbers of border police officers. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Compulsory education. In response to the Committee's previous request to indicate the legal provisions which provide for compulsory schooling, the Government indicates, in its report, that a provision setting an age of completion of compulsory schooling, aligned with the minimum age for admission to employment or work, will be introduced in the framework of the revision of the current Children's Act, 2005. Considering that the Committee has been raising this issue since 2009, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the revision of the Children's Act will introduce compulsory schooling up to the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years, in compliance with Article 2(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that sections 78 and 79 of the Labour Bill, which regulate apprenticeships, remain silent regarding the minimum age for admission to apprenticeships. This means that the issue of the minimum age for admission to apprenticeships (currently 12 years of age in the informal economy by virtue of sections 50 and 51 of the Children's Act, 2005, and no minimum age for apprenticeships in the formal economy under the Labour Act, 2007) remains unresolved. The Government indicates that the National Steering Committee on Child Labour has made recommendations to raise, and provide for, a minimum age for apprenticeships, and that the age of admission to apprenticeship will be considered in the Labour Bill in parallel with the review of the Children's Act, with a view to aligning the provisions of the two laws. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a minimum age for admission to apprenticeships of at least 14 years, in both the formal and the informal economy, is established by law, in conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 7. Light work. In response to the Committee's previous request to determine the types of activities, number of hours and the conditions in which light work may be undertaken by children as of the age of 12, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the minimum age for light work will be raised to 14 years under both the Labour Bill and the Children's Bill, and that the types of activities, number of hours and conditions under which light work may be performed, will be integrated in these two bills. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the new provisions regulating the minimum age for light work and determining the types of light work activities, the number of hours and the conditions in which light work may be undertaken by children, are adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspectorate. In response to the Committee's previous observation that the enforcement of the law remained a challenge in the country, and its request to strengthen the labour inspectorate to ensure the detection of cases of child labour, the Committee observes with concern that, according to the statistics communicated by the Government for the first quarter of 2022, the labour inspectorate conducted only seven inspections in the greater Banjul area and 28 inspections in the rest of the country, and that it did not conduct any inspections in the second quarter of 2022. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Inspectorate Unit of the Labour Department is severely understaffed and lacks material resources, including vehicles, and cannot therefore effectively carry out routine inspections. While the ILO has supported the training and continuous capacity-building of labour inspectors, the Government states that it requires more technical assistance. While taking note of the difficulties faced by the country in this regard, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services and to ensure that labour inspectors have sufficient resources and adequate training on child labour issues in order to improve their capacity to detect cases of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and nature of violations recorded by labour inspectors in the course of their work involving children working below the minimum age for admission to employment, including those who are working on their own account or in the informal economy, and on the number and nature of penalties imposed.

The Committee encourages the Government to take its comments into consideration during the ongoing review of the Labour Act, 2007, and of the Children's Act, 2005, and while taking measures to improve the capacity of the labour inspectorate. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in order to bring its legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children and child sex tourism. The Committee previously noted that section 39 of the Children's Act, 2005, prohibits child trafficking, and that this offence is punishable by life imprisonment. It also notes that the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2007, prohibits all forms of trafficking and provides a penalty of 15 years to life imprisonment.

The Committee takes note of the report of the Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution, child pornography and other child sexual abuse material of 22 January 2021 (A/HRC/46/31/Add.1), in which it is revealed that the Gambia remains a source and destination country for children subjected to trafficking for sexual exploitation purposes. The Special Rapporteur heard allegations of trafficking of children, in particular Senegalese children to, and Gambian children from, the Gambia, for exploitation in international or domestic labour, domestic servitude, prostitution, apprenticeships and the fishing industry, and as beggars or shoe shiners. She also heard about instances of Gambian girls being trafficked to the Middle East for labour exploitation and domestic servitude (paras 9–10).

The Special Rapporteur also describes in detail the information she received concerning the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the context of travel and tourism (paras 15–18). It is reported that the Gambia is listed as a major destination for both male and female perpetrators of child sex offences. Incidents of commercial sexual exploitation of children are reportedly occurring in the tourism development areas, which comprise the areas around the major hotels, beaches, restaurants and nightclubs, and where children from poor communities are brought to meet tourists. Some perpetrators come into contact with children and develop relationships with them through organizations registered as philanthropic or as charities; others approach children under the guise of sponsoring their education or through intermediaries known as “bumsters”, who can be tour guides, taxi drivers and hotel workers. There are also allegations of existing organized sex-trafficking networks, reportedly operated by overseas and Gambian travel agencies, that promote Gambia as a destination for child sex tourism.

The Committee notes that, according to the Special Rapporteur, perpetrators of child trafficking and of commercial sexual exploitation of children are rarely brought to justice and punished. Enforcement is hampered by several factors, including a lack of awareness of existing laws and penalties; inadequate human, technical, financial and administrative capacity to oversee and rapidly respond to reported cases; and significant gaps in capacity and expertise for providing victims with the necessary child-friendly services and assistance, including at the first point of contact with children (para. 33). Moreover, the Special Rapporteur heard that reports of sexual abuse are often not taken up by the authorities for further action. In the rare instances where complaints are lodged with the police, they are not duly acted upon, the gathering of compelling evidence is delayed, and investigation and prosecution are stalled, resulting in victims or witnesses withdrawing their complaints. Reportedly, cases have been dismissed on the grounds that child victims' statements were allegedly inconsistent. In some cases, the police or even the judiciary have encouraged the parties to settle a case in the community to the detriment of the child and in the interest of protecting the family's honour. At the time of the visit of the Special Rapporteur in 2019, 15 new investigations were reported by the Government, six of which involved allegations of sex trafficking and nine involved allegations of forced labour in domestic work in the Middle East. Three prosecutions were still pending. No convictions were known to have been obtained on charges of trafficking of persons (paras 59–60).

The Committee notes with concern that, according to both the Special Rapporteur (para. 9) and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 1 November 2022 (CEDAW/C/GMB/CO/6, para. 23(b)), the trafficking of children is drastically underreported, owing to, inter alia, the lack of confidence in the administration of justice, lengthy investigations and court proceedings, the lack of prosecutions and convictions. Recalling that the established sanctions are only effective if they are actually applied, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out of persons who violate the provisions related to the sale and trafficking of children and that effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed on them in application of the Children's Act, 2005, and of the Trafficking in Persons Act, 2007. In this regard, it urges the Government to take the necessary steps to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement bodies to combat the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, including by means of training and adequate resources. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur, that the Government has adopted some measures to prevent the sale and trafficking of children, as well as their commercial sexual exploitation, such as setting up children's courts and putting in place a manual for training on the eradication of child labour and sexual exploitation in the tourism industry, as well as a tourism code of conduct in hotels, motels and restaurants (paras 18 and 32). However, the Committee notes the observation of the Special Rapporteur according to which Government measures have had a limited impact on the prevention of the sale and sexual exploitation of children and the protection of child victims, notably due to the lack of a comprehensive strategy to effectively tackle the sale and sexual exploitation of children, including the root causes (para. 34). Those root causes include rampant poverty, limited access to education and economic opportunities for girls in rural areas, a lack of awareness of the relevant laws, existing societal barriers, the stigma and shame related to sexual exploitation and abuse, a deeply embedded culture of silence, compounded by weak law enforcement and inadequate child protection responses, the reportedly high number of children not immediately registered at birth, particularly in rural areas, and more (paras 21–23). The Committee requests the Government to take measures to develop and adopt a comprehensive plan of action to combat and eliminate child trafficking for labour and sexual exploitation, which takes into consideration and addresses the root causes and factors that are pulling and pushing children into becoming victims of trafficking. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

Clause (b). Providing for the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to its previous comments, that the Directorate of Children's Affairs of the Ministry of Gender, Children and Social Welfare is involved in the provision of all support to child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. Moreover, the National Agency Against Trafficking in Persons developed a National Referral Mechanism for victims of Human Trafficking and the Gambia Tourism Authority for the Protection of Children trained hotel staff on the commercial sexual exploitation of children. There is also a case management system that is intended to facilitate the identification, referral and care for children who are victims of all abuses.

The Committee notes, however, that in its concluding observations of 1 November 2022, the CEDAW expresses its concern regarding the lack of an effective national referral mechanism to appropriate support services for victims of trafficking for purposes of forced labour and sexual exploitation, including sex tourism (CEDAW/C/GMB/CO/6, paragraph 23(b)). The Special Rapporteur also highlighted the need for a functional referral system and effective case management to ensure efficient service delivery and connect victims to support services, as well as the urgent need to establish additional shelters for child victims of sexual exploitation that are properly funded and staffed by well-trained personnel who can offer integrated psychological, legal, medical and other services (para. 66). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that child victims of trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation and child victims of commercial sexual exploitation are removed from these worst forms of child labour, rehabilitated and socially integrated, including through the establishment of additional shelters for child victims. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of children removed and provided with support.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1986)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE) received on 30 August 2022. The Committee requests the Government to reply to these observations.

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Authorization to carry out hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee takes note of the Government's information, in its report, regarding the adoption of the new Law No. 4763/2020 on the national system of vocational education, training and lifelong learning. It notes the Government's statement that section 7(5) of Decree No. 62/1988 – permitting the employment of young persons from the age of 15 in work that is liable to prejudice their health, safety or development where such work is necessary for their vocational training – is the only exception to the general prohibition of the engagement of minors under 18 years in hazardous work.

The Committee notes the GSEE's observation that the Government has not taken the necessary measures to amend section 7(5) by raising the age of admission to hazardous work in vocational training to 16 years of age.

In this regard, the Committee must once again underline that, according to Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority may only authorize employment in hazardous work as from the age of 16 years, regardless of whether or not this employment takes place in the framework of vocational training or apprenticeships, on condition that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or training in the relevant branch of activity. Considering that it has been raising this issue for more than 20 years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, to ensure that the minimum age for the exemptions from the prohibition on the employment of young persons in hazardous work, as laid down in section 7(5) of Presidential Decree No. 62/1998, will be raised to at least 16 years, so as to be in compliance with Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guyana

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy for the elimination of child labour, labour inspection and application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the National Child Labour Policy towards the elimination of child labour 2019 and the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour 2019–25 continue to be implemented. The Committee takes due note of the various activities undertaken by the Government under the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour 2019–25, including: (1) the review of the laws governing child labour with a view to strengthening the legislative protection and enforcement in combating child labour, and the subsequent recommendations made for legislative amendments to fill gaps and clarify or strengthen the effects of offences and penalties; (2) the training of 22 labour inspectors to better investigate, coordinate, monitor and respond to child labour; (3) various poverty eradication measures to create jobs and provide a better income to families; and (4) measures aimed at increasing school enrolment and attendance rates. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate conducts regular and frequent inspections across the country (960 inspections in industrial establishments in 2021 and 1,600 inspections between January 2022 and August 2023), but that no case of child labour was observed during these inspections. The Government adds that one of its labour inspectorate unit conducts checks for child labour whenever inspections are done, but that there is no separate child labour inspectorate unit. The Committee further notes with interest the Government's indication that, according to the Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey 2019–20, there was a decline in child labour across all regions of Guyana. In 2019, 6.4 per cent of children aged 5 to 17 years were engaged in child labour compared to 18 per cent in 2014. The Survey also highlights the decrease in the number of children, aged 5 to 17 years, working under hazardous conditions, from 13 per cent in 2014 to 8 per cent in 2019, and that boys are still more likely to be involved in hazardous work than girls. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts towards the effective elimination of child labour, including hazardous child labour. It also requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical information on the employment of children and young persons below the age of 15 in the country and on the number of children under 18 years engaged in hazardous work.

Article 3(3). Authorization to work in hazardous employment from the age of 16 years. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it intends to amend the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act (chapter 99:01) to ensure that persons from the ages of 16–18 years may only be authorized in hazardous work on the conditions that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they, in practice, receive adequate specific vocational training, in line with Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Government indicates that it is seeking the assistance of the ILO to this end. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts, in cooperation with the ILO, to ensure the amendment of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act with a view to bringing it into conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the Act once they have been adopted.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it considers that all businesses are captured by the definition of "industrial establishment" of section 2(1) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act (chapter 99:06), as it includes "a factory, shop, office, or workplace and any, building or other structure or premises appertaining thereto but does not include premises occupied for residential purposes only". The Government adds that it has taken note of the Committee's observation that the legislation should be amended to ensure that all employers, including non-industrial undertakings, should be obliged to keep registers of all employed persons under the age of 18 years, and that the necessary attention will be given to this observation when the occupational safety and health regulations are next reviewed. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national legislation or regulations be adopted to ensure that all employers of non-industrial undertakings are also obliged to keep registers of all persons below the age of 18 years who work for them, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention.

Honduras

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Non-Industrial Occupations) Convention, 1946 (No. 78) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP) received on 30 August 2022. It requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Article 4 of the Convention. Medical examination until the age of 21 years. In its report, the Government once again indicates that, without prejudice to the fact that the Protected Adolescent Work Regulations and the Child Labour Regulations do not apply to young workers aged between 18 and 21 years, these workers are protected by the applicable Labour Code, as well as the General Regulations on measures to prevent occupational accidents and diseases. Section 46(2)(a) of these Regulations, applicable to all enterprises and workers, determine the conditions under which medical examinations are required. However, the Committee notes with concern, from the observations of the COHEP, that there is still no provision in the national legislation requiring young persons between the ages of 18 and 21 years who are authorized to carry out unhealthy or hazardous work to undergo medical examination and re-examinations for fitness for employment. The Committee once again recalls that Article 4 of the Convention sets the requirement that national laws or regulations shall either specify or empower an appropriate authority, not the employer, to specify the occupations or categories of occupations in which medical examinations and re-examinations for fitness for employment shall be required until the age of 21 years. The Committee urges the Government to give effect to its engagement, contracted 50 years ago, and take the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation lays down an obligation for young persons between the ages of 18 and 21 years who are authorized to carry out unhealthy or hazardous work to undergo a medical examination and re-examinations for fitness for employment.

Article 7(2). Ensuring the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children employed either on their own account or on account of their parents, and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes, from the observations of the COHEP, that there has not been any tripartite dialogue held with the view of establishing a system of medical examination for fitness for employment for children and young persons employed on their own account or on account of their parents. However, the COHEP refers to the Protected Adolescent Work Regulations, approved by Executive Agreement of 14 December 2020, in which the procedure for the medical examination of young persons is set out in section 9, and the Committee notes that, in application of section 119 of the Code for Children and Young Persons, this also applies to children working on their own account. Indeed, the Committee notes with interest that section 119 of the Code for Children and Young Persons provides that the employment of children is subject to the prior authorization of the Secretary of State in the Offices of Labour and Social Security, and that the same authorization is required for “children who intend to carry out independent work, that is, those in which there is no remuneration or a contract or working relationship”. However, the Committee notes that neither the Code for Children and Young Persons nor the Protected Adolescent Work Regulations set out measures of identification for ensuring the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that measures of identification are adopted in national laws or regulations with a view to ensuring the application of the system of medical examination for fitness for employment to children and young persons engaged either on their own account or on account of their parents.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1980)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 30 August 2022.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes, from the observations of the COHEP, that according to the 2022 Report on the Characteristics of the Labour Market, published by the National Institute of Statistics, 65.2 per cent of children aged between 5 and 17 years dedicate their entire time to studying, 11.2 per cent are engaged in some type of work (this includes those who study and work and those who work full-time), and 23.6 per cent neither study nor work. The Report highlights that, out of the 256,526 minors engaged in work or employment, 64.8 per cent are in rural areas. The Committee also notes, from the observations of the COHEP, that in 2020, consultations and tripartite workshops took place for the preparation and approval of a Road map for the elimination of child labour in all its forms 2021–25, containing 10 strategic action points, including: (1) joint efforts with the education system to combat, in a coordinated manner, education exclusion and child labour; (2) the establishment of an inter-institutional and intersectoral common integrated care protocol for child labour and children engaged in hazardous work; and (3) strengthening of the operational and budgetary capacities of key institutions towards the prevention of child labour and protection of adolescent workers.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, on the labour inspections undertaken with regard to child labour: 2 inspections in 2020, 45 inspections in 2021 and 22 inspections between January and March 2022. However, the Committee notes that no information is provided on the findings of these inspections. The Committee further notes, from the Government's third periodic report on the application of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: (1) the reactivation, in 2017, of the National Commission for the Gradual Elimination of Child Labour; and (2) the Protocol for the Organization, Training and Certification of Committees for the Prevention of Child Labour (CCPR/C/HND/3, 9 January 2023, para. 209). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including within the framework of the Road map for the elimination of child labour in all its forms 2021–25. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on: (i) the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, and to include in particular statistics on the employment of children under 14 years of age, extracts from the reports of the labour inspection services and information on the number and nature of the violations detected and penalties imposed; and (ii) the activities of the National Commission for the Progressive Elimination of Child Labour.

Article 2(1) and (4). Scope of application and minimum age for admission to employment or work. With regard to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's reply that it adopted Executive Agreement No. STSS-578-2020 on 14 December 2020, which approved the Regulations of protected adolescent work. The Government states that section 3 of the Regulations stipulates that: (1) the Secretary of State in the Offices of Labour and Social Security through the General Directorate of Social Welfare, is the only authority with the capacity to grant authorization for the work of adolescents, in accordance with the provisions of section 119 of the Code for Children and Adolescents; and (2) no authorization will be granted for the work of a minor under the age of 14 years. The Committee notes that the COHEP also refers to the regulations of protected adolescent work to indicate that no child under the age of 14 years is authorized to work in the country. While it welcomes the adoption of the Regulations of Protected Adolescent Work, the Committee notes that the Government has not taken any measures to amend section 2(1) of the Labour Code which excludes from its scope of application agricultural and stock raising undertakings that do not permanently employ more than 10 workers. Nor does it amend section 32(2) of the Labour Code which provides that the authorities responsible for supervising work by persons under 14 years of age could authorize them to engage in an economic activity if they considered it indispensable for their subsistence or that of their parents or brothers and sisters, and provided that it did not prevent them from attending compulsory schooling.

The Committee further notes, from the observations of the COHEP, the reform of section 8 of the Regulations on child labour 2001 by Decree No. 125-2015, published in the Gaceta on 28 January 2017, which updates the list of hazardous types of work. The Committee notes however that this update does not change the terms of sections 4 to 6 of the Regulations on child labour of 2001, which continue to provide that these Regulations only apply to contractual labour relations.

The Committee therefore once again recalls that, under the terms of Article 2(1) of the Convention, no one under the minimum age specified shall be admitted to employment or work in any occupation, subject to the exemption set out in Articles 4 to 8 of the Convention. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the Labour Code and the 2001 Regulations on child labour into conformity with the Code for Children and Young Persons of 1996 and the 2020 Regulations of protected adolescent work so as to ensure coherence in the legislation and that no child under 14 years of age is authorized to work, including children working in agricultural and stock-raising undertakings which do not permanently employ more than ten workers, and those who work on their own account. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Honduran National Business Council (COHEP), received on 31 August 2021 and 30 August 2022.

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, use of children for prostitution or for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, and penalties applied. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree 93-2021 which amended section 291 of the Penal Code to increase the imprisonment sentence from 5 to 8 years to 10 to 15 years in cases of trafficking in persons. The Committee further notes the statistical information provided in the Government's report on the number of complaints of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation received, as well as the number of convictions and penalties imposed for 2018 to 2021. The Committee notes that according to the statistics provided, in 2021, a total of 75 complaints were received, 68 of which concerned commercial sexual exploitation and 7 related to trafficking in persons for forced labour or begging. A total of 29 persons were convicted to sentences of three to 21 years of imprisonment and fines of between 75 and 221 times the minimum wage for acts of trafficking in persons and commercial sexual exploitation. Among these convictions, the Committee notes that 4 persons were convicted of child pornography and 2 persons were convicted for commercial sexual exploitation of a minor. The Government further indicates that, in 2021, of a total of 101 victims detected, 51 were underaged victims (41 girls and 10 boys), the main crimes related to child pornography (9 girls and 2 boys), begging (3 girls and 5 boys) and sexual exploitation (6 girls). The Committee further notes from the COHEP's observations that, in 2021, public officials were prosecuted for being involved in trafficking of persons and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government, which highlights the serious problems of child trafficking prevailing in the country. The Committee welcomes the measures taken by the Government to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and their trafficking for that purpose. It requests the Government to continue to take all measures available to tackle this problem and to provide information on the impact of the measures taken. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide up-to-date information, disaggregated by the gender and age of the victims, on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions launched and convictions and penalties imposed relating to child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee takes note of the information provided in the Government's report under the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) on the measures taken to improve the functioning of the education system, with the aim of increasing school attendance, such as: (1) the implementation of the Plan for the protection of educational trajectories of pre-primary, primary and secondary level students (2021–23); (2) the launch of the "Training of the Educator Towards a Sustainable Human Development"; (3) the continuation of the National School Food Programme (PNAE) which provides a supplementary nutritional ration to all children at school; (4) the continuation of the deworming programme for children in private and public schools; and (5) the adoption and implementation of the Strategic Plan for the Education Sector 2018-

2030. The Committee also notes, from the COHEP's observations, that: (1) the Government is working on improving school infrastructures and developing a new enrolment system that will simplify the formalities for parents to enrol their children in school; and (2) in the report on Progress in Education in Honduras (2022) in 2020, the net school attendance rates were at 84.8 per cent for primary education and 46.7 per cent in lower secondary education. In 2021, the net school attendance rates were 77.2 per cent for primary education and 42.2 per cent for lower-secondary education; the report also states that, in 2021, 700,000 children aged between 5 and 17 years were out of the education system.

The Committee welcomes the measures taken but nevertheless notes with regret the decrease in the net school attendance in both the primary and lower secondary education between 2020 and 2021. The Committee notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, that despite the efforts made to ensure equal access to quality education for all, there is a low enrolment rate among girls compared with boys (CEDAW/C/HND/CO/9, 1 November 2022, para. 34). The Committee further takes note, from the concluding observations of the Committee for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, of the high school drop-out rate among indigenous and Afro-Honduran children and adolescents (CERD/C/HND/CO/6-8, 14 January 2019, para. 32). In these circumstances, the Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system with a view to achieving an increase in the school attendance and completion rates of children at the primary and lower-secondary level, including of girls and indigenous and Afro-Honduran children. It requests the Government to provide information on the assessment of the above-mentioned measures, as well as the results achieved.

Clause (b). Direct and necessary assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Rapid Response Team (ERI), a specialized operational body of the Inter institutional Commission on the Commercial Sexual Exploitation and Trafficking of Persons (CICESCT), responsible for providing assistance to victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation, assisted 25 victims of trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation of less than 18 years of age (19 girls and 6 boys) in 2018, 23 victims (21 girls and 2 boys) in 2019, 43 victims (35 girls and 8 boys) in 2020, and 51 victims (41 girls and 10 boys) in 2021. The Committee notes that the intervention of the ERI focuses on the victims, their families and, in some cases, on their community in order to ensure their recovery, rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes, from the 2021 Annual Report of the CICESCT, that: (1) victims who were rescued from trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation received psychological and medical care, as well as legal assistance, social reintegration (with their family), and provision of education or vocational training; (2) victims were provided with food and kits of basic hygiene as well as clothing, and received help to lodge complaints; (3) the CICESCT carried out awareness-raising actions aimed at groups in vulnerable situations, including girls, boys, students, women, people with disabilities, the indigenous population, migrants and the LGBTI population; and (4) in 2021, the CICESCT prepared and approved a Standard Operating Procedure (POE) and developed a road map for the identification, assistance and protection of victims in different municipalities throughout the country.

The Committee notes, from the Government's third report under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that, between 2017 and 2020, the ERI, the inter-agency team of experts and the 24 local committees coordinated more than 500,000 comprehensive primary and secondary assistance services for victims of trafficking and their families. These services encompassed: protection, support, shelter, food, clothing, psychological, social, legal and medical assistance, housing, education, vocational training, documentation, asylum, transportation, employment, family assistance, treatment for addiction, financial loans, entrepreneurships, repatriation, follow-up and family visits (CCPR/C/HND/3, 9 January 2023, para. 196). Noting the effective and time-bound measures taken by the Government to remove children from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures in this regard. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children who have been removed from trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation and who have benefited from rehabilitation measures, and the results achieved.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Indigenous children. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it carried out consultations with the relevant stakeholders regarding the measures to be taken to protect indigenous children against the worst forms of child labour, but that no response was obtained in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in the framework of the Vida Mejor Programme and the 20/20 system of grants, which provided grants and conditional cash transfers for children attending school. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any other measures taken or envisaged to protect indigenous children from the worst forms of child labour.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Child domestic workers. The Committee notes that one of the strategic goals of the road map for the elimination of child labour in all its forms 2021–25 is the formulation of a specific line of work for the prevention of child labour and the protection of adolescent female workers with a focus on domestic work in third-party homes, and in the hospitality and food service industries. The Committee requests the Government to report on the implementation of the road map for elimination of child labour in all its forms 2021-2025, with an indication of the number of children engaged in domestic work who have been removed from situations of worst forms of child labour and have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration measures.

Article 8. International and regional cooperation. Commercial sexual exploitation and trafficking for that purpose. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it continues to work in cooperation with the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC), for the strengthening of the capacities of officials for the provision of immediate assistance to victims of trafficking and sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that at least five cases of trafficking of persons are being coordinated binationally with Belize, Mexico, Guatemala, Spain and Argentina. The Committee also notes the signature of a cooperation agreement between the CICESCT and the International Centre for Disappeared and Exploited Children (ICMEC), with the aim of strengthening the capacities of the staff from government institutions and civil society organizations, and the cooperation with the countries that make up the northern triangle of Central America, in the fight against trafficking in persons. The Government further indicates that the CICESCT has signed a cooperation agreement with the International Children's Office (IBCR) with which it implemented a strengthening project for the CICESCT, the Supreme Court, the Honduran National Police and civil society organizations between 2019 and 2022, for the prevention of trafficking in children.

In addition, the Government, in cooperation with "End Child Prostitution, Child Pornography and Trafficking of Children for Sexual Purposes" (ECPAT) Guatemala, is undertaking a study of identification of the vulnerabilities of children and adolescents in the countries of the northern triangle and Mexico migrating to the border between the United States and Mexico. The Committee also notes the various strategic alliances formed to strengthen the CICESCT's response in the prevention and attention to victims, including with the CYBERCRIME Programme of the UNODC, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) and UNICEF. The Committee notes, from the observations of the COHEP, that during 2019, among the services provided to victims through the ERI, 120 negotiations were carried out with other countries for the documentation, asylum, repatriation, attention and follow-up of legal cases. The COHEP highlights the effective coordination of the CICESCT and the International Organization for Migration (IOM) which, despite the restrictions due to the COVID-19 pandemic, were permitted the repatriation of 16 victims in 2020 and 20 victims in 2021. The Committee welcomes the Government's efforts at the international and regional levels to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and their trafficking for that purpose, and requests it to continue its efforts in this regard. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved in the context of the implementation of these agreements, and particularly on the number of children repatriated to their country of origin, disaggregated by gender, age and nationality.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Islamic Republic of Iran

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and penalties. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Law on Protection of Children and Adolescents was enacted in 2020 and aims to prevent violence against children and related crimes. Sections 11 to 13 of the Law prohibit the sale and trafficking of children for sexual and labour exploitation and provide for severe penalties against the perpetrators (third degree imprisonment). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of the country's anti-trafficking legislation, including the new Law on Protection of Children and Adolescents, as regards the sale and trafficking of children. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information, in its next report, on the number of persons responsible for the trafficking of children who have been subjected to thorough investigations and prosecutions, as well as the number and nature of penalties imposed in practice.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that over 70 per cent of Afghan opiates are trafficked via the Islamic Republic of Iran and Pakistan every year and that children, particularly those living in border areas, were employed by criminal groups and individuals for cross-border trafficking of drugs.

The Committee notes with regret the lack of information, in the Government's report, regarding the prosecution and conviction of perpetrators of the use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. It notes, according to the Independent in-depth evaluation of the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) Country Partnership Programme in the Islamic Republic of Iran, that one of the achievements of the programme is the new training curriculum and breeding programme of the Anti-Narcotic Police K9, as well as the support given to the Customs K9 unit by UNODC. According to the evaluation, however, the implementation of the Programme met with many challenges and its effectiveness was very limited. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its measures to ensure that children are prevented and protected from being used for the purposes of trafficking of drugs, and to provide information on the results achieved. It also once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons who use, procure or offer children under the age of 18 years for trafficking of drugs. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of reported violations, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed in this regard.

Article 8. International cooperation and assistance. Regional cooperation concerning the sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes that the Government has partnered with UNODC and International Organization for Migration (IOM) in 2020 to launch the European Union-funded Global Action against Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants (GLO.ACT – Asia and the Middle East) in the country. The GLO.ACT is a four-year (2018-2022) joint initiative being implemented in four countries: Afghanistan, Iraq, Pakistan, and Iran. Through targeted, innovative and demand-driven interventions, the project will support the selected countries in developing and implementing comprehensive national counter-human trafficking and counter-smuggling responses. By the end of the project, Governments and civil society partners in the target countries should have the skills, capacity, and mechanisms in place to identify and screen victims of trafficking and smuggled migrants, and to refer them to the relevant service providers for protection and assistance, in line with international standards. The project will also ensure that trained protection actors have access to and understanding of global standards and resources on assistance to vulnerable migrants. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to enhance international cooperation to combat the sale and trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation and to protect and assist the victims of these worst forms of child labour. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the results obtained from the implementation of the GLO.ACT to prevent the trafficking of migrant children.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Italy

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's report and of the observations of the Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL), the Italian Confederation of Workers' Trade Unions (CISL) and the Italian Union of Labour (UIL) of 16 November 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee takes note of the Government's detailed information, in its report, regarding the measures taken to combat school dropouts and focus on school integration, with a view to breaking the cycle between child labour and school disaffection due to various causes, such as poverty, social hardship, immigration status, or belonging to certain categories at risk of social exclusion. A number of measures have also been taken to ensure the integration of pupils with non-Italian citizenship and the inclusion of students with disabilities. Moreover, the Committee notes the detailed information shared by the Government under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), regarding the measures it has taken to combat poverty. These include the Citizenship Income (Reddito di cittadinanza – RdC), which replaced the Inclusion Income (Reddito di inclusion – REI) in 2019 as the instrument for combating poverty, inequality and social exclusion and expanded the pool of beneficiaries, as well as the Single Universal Allowance for dependent children (AUUF), instituted by Legislative Decree No. 230 of 29 December 2021, which is a financial contribution to families. Further actions to combat poverty and social exclusion include the implementation of the Council of Europe's recommendation of 14 June 2021, establishing a European Child Guarantee for the effective access of children and adolescents at risk of poverty or social exclusion to effective and free access to high quality early childhood education and care, education (including school-based activities), at least one healthy meal each school day and healthcare, with special attention to gender factors and specific forms of disadvantage.

The Committee takes note of the observations of the CGIL, CISL and UIL according to which attention needs to continue to be paid to situations of marginality and vulnerability of families, which lead to an increased risk for minors to abandon their education before reaching the legal minimum age for work or employment, also giving rise to exploitation due to illegality. Moreover, they indicate that there is a need to take due account of the exponential increase in recent years of child poverty which, already on the rise following the 2007 economic crisis, has had a further upsurge as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. The percentage of minors in Italy at risk of poverty has risen significantly, the latest data on absolute poverty by the Italian National Institute of Statistics (ISTAT) showing that 1.382 million children do not have the necessary income to live in decent conditions. Furthermore, the CGIL, CISL and UIL indicate that exclusion from education and training is often systemic and is also at the root of child labour. A correlation between early school leaving and child labour exists, which particularly affects 14–15 year-olds, but the CGIL, CISL and UIL indicate that, in general, this phenomenon remains under the radar due to the lack of statistical surveys and administrative data in Italy. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of the measures taken and their impact on the progressive elimination of child labour in the country, including through combating the issues that have been identified as the main drivers of child labour, mainly: poverty, social vulnerability and exclusion, and early school leaving. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard and to provide information on the results achieved. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the employment of children and young persons below the age of 15 in the country.

Articles 2(1), 3(1) and 7(1). Minimum age for admission to work, hazardous work and light work. The Committee notes the Government's information according to which article 3 of Law No. 977 of 1967 on the Protection of Children and Adolescent Labour, amended by Legislative Decree No. 179/2009, provides that the minimum age for admission to work is 15, but that children may be admitted to work in agriculture and family services from the age of 14, provided that this is compatible with the special requirements of health protection and does not lead to a breach of compulsory schooling.

In this regard, the CGIL, CISL and UIL indicate in their observations that special attention must be paid to occupational health and safety also with respect to underage employees, and that according to the most recent statistics, the incidence of accidents in the youngest age groups is very high. Out of a total of 536,002 accident reports submitted to the National Institute for Insurance against Accidents at Work (INAIL) in the first 9 months of 2022, 28,781 were in the age group up to 14 years and 20,927 in the 15–19 age group.

The Committee therefore observes that it appears that the requirements of health protection for children working from the age of 14 to 18 appear either insufficient or not adequately applied in practice. The Committee reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 3(1) of the Convention, children from the age of 15 to 18 may only engage in work that is not likely to jeopardize their health or safety. The Committee also reminds the Government that the exception provided for in Article 7(1) of the Convention – which allows to set a lower age for admission to certain types of light work from the age of 13 or above – is intended to cover light work which is not likely to be harmful to their health or prejudice their school attendance. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to ensure that children who are between 15 and 18 years of age are protected from engaging in work that is likely to harm their health and safety. It also requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the employment or work of children from the age of 14 to 15 is permitted only for light work and to ensure that the health and safety of the children who engage in such light work are protected. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information according to which supervision in the field of labour and social legislation is ensured by the National Labour Inspectorate (INL), established in January 2017. The Government indicates that, while supervisory activities were reduced due to the COVID-19 pandemic, inspections carried out in 2018 identified 263 illegally employed minors; 243 in 2019; 127 in 2020; and 144 in 2021. Violations concerning the employment of minors were found mostly in the following sectors: accommodation and catering services; wholesale and retail trade; vehicle and motorcycle repair; manufacturing; agriculture; art, sport and entertainment; and other service activities. The Government indicates that the percentage of minors found to be employed in violation of the requirements concerning the minimum age for admission to employment in the period 2018–21 was 17.6 per cent of the total number of minors identified through these inspections. The Committee encourages the Government to ensure that labour inspections are undertaken on an expanded basis, and to provide information on the number and nature of the infringements identified by the INL in relation to the employment of minors under the age of 15 in all sectors, disaggregated by gender and sector to the extent possible. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on violations identified, penalties imposed and collected, and any prosecutions in this regard.

Jamaica

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee notes that, according to Jamaica's national report of 18 August 2020 submitted to the United Nations Human Rights Council in the context of the Universal Periodic Review (A/HRC/WG.6/36/JAM/1, para. 101), the National Plan of Action (NPA) on Child Labour was developed in 2019, in the context of the Country Level Engagement and Assistance to Reduce Child Labour II (CLEAR II) project. The CLEAR II project is a four-year United States Department of Labor (USDOL)-funded project that aims to support a global reduction in child labour. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat child labour and to provide information on the specific measures taken, particularly within the framework of the NPA, and the results achieved in this regard.

Articles 3(2), 7(3) and 9(3). Determination of hazardous work, determination of light work, and registers of employment. Following its previous comments, the Committee observes, from the Government's report, that:

- the Hazardous Work List is still being amended, following consultation with stakeholders, and based on feedback received. Subsequently, Cabinet's approval will be sought to append the list to the Child Care and Protection Act (CCPA) or Occupational Safety and Health (OSH) Bill, after which the Parliamentary proceedings will follow.
- amendments to the draft Light Work List, to be adopted pursuant to section 34(1) and (2) of the CCPA, are still being made based on stakeholder consultations and feedback received. Subsequently, Cabinet's approval will be sought to append the list to the CCPA or OSH Bill, pursuant to which the Parliamentary proceedings will follow.
- amendments to the CCPA to include provisions prescribing registers to be kept by employers hiring children under 18 years of age, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention on registers of employment, are now at the Legal Reform Department of the Ministry of Justice and at the Chamber of the Attorney General for their review. Parliamentary proceedings will follow.

While it takes note of this information, the Committee notes with concern that the Hazardous Work List, Light Work List, and amendments to the CCPA relating to registers of employment, have yet not been adopted, although the Committee has been referring to these issues for many years. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption, without delay: (i) of the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age; (ii) of the list of light work activities permitted for children between 13 and 15 years of age; and (iii) of the amendments to the CCPA so as to include provisions prescribing registers to be kept by employers hiring children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide copies of the relevant lists and amendments, once adopted.

Labour inspection in the informal economy. In response to its previous comments regarding the challenges faced by the labour inspectorate in monitoring the informal economy, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it continues to engage in the training of the labour inspectorate to better aid inspectors in identifying and reporting cases of child labour. This is also done in the framework of the Transition to Formality Action Plan for Household Workers and Fisher Folks (TFAP) 2021–24, which among its key strategies includes: (1) the improvement of the capacity of staff within the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to undertake inspections in the sectors in question, not being limited to commercial buildings and factories; and (2) building awareness for the elimination of child labour in household work and the fishing industry. The Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen the functioning of the labour inspectorate to enable it to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, in particular in the informal economy. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number and nature of violations detected by the labour inspectorate related to child labour, and penalties assessed.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously took note of the statistics of 2016 according to which 5.8 per cent of children (38,000) between the ages of 5 and 17 years were engaged in child labour. Among these, 68.6 per cent of children (26,000) were involved in hazardous work. A vast majority of children were employed in private households (50.1 per cent), followed by wholesale and retail (20.7 per cent), and the agriculture and fishing sectors (17.4 per cent). The Committee requests the Government to provide updated statistics on the child labour situation, such as recent statistics disaggregated by gender and age, relating to the nature, extent and trends of work done by children under the minimum age of 15 years.

The Committee expresses the hope that the Government will continue to take its comments into consideration during the ongoing revision of the CCPA. It reminds the Government that it can avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee takes note of the information shared by the Government in its report regarding the four cases of child trafficking for sexual exploitation that were prosecuted and convicted between 2016 and 2021, and the three cases of child trafficking for labour exploitation that, in 2022, were still in progress before the courts. The penalties imposed on the perpetrators convicted range from severe fines to three to eight years of imprisonment. The Committee requests the Government to continue to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice for the offence of child trafficking for both labour and sexual exploitation. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of prosecutions and penalties imposed for these offences.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee took note of section 39 of the Child Care and Protection Act (CCPA), 2004, which provides for penalties to any person who employs a child under the age of 18 years in a night club or in any manner, uses a child for purposes contrary to decency or morality. The Government also indicated that amendments to the CCPA would explicitly address children being used for prostitution.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate whether the amendments to the CCPA have been adopted. Moreover, the Committee observes that the cases of sexual exploitation of children, to which the Government refers in its report, all deal with persons who have recruited, forced or lured children into prostitution, and that the Government does not indicate whether the persons who have used these children for prostitution, that is the clients, have been prosecuted and convicted. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to ensure that persons who use a child under 18 years of age for the purpose of prostitution are submitted to thorough investigations and robust prosecutions, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. In this regard, it requests the Government to take measures to explicitly set out in law the prohibition of the use of children under 18 for prostitution, either through the amendments to the CCPA or otherwise in the country's penal legislation. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Trafficking of children. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Task Force Against Trafficking in Persons (NATFATIP) has continued its efforts in the areas of prosecution, protection, prevention and partnership throughout 2019 to 2022, resulting in hundreds of investigations regarding trafficking for sexual exploitation and forced labour, and leading to six cases in which the victim was a child. Furthermore, the Government is continuing to build the capacity of its officials, including customs officers and justices, as well as of other stakeholders, including NGOs, foster parents, unions and employer associations, through trainings on anti-trafficking enforcement, policies, laws and standard operating procedures. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the protection of children from trafficking for both labour and sexual exploitation, including through the activities undertaken by NATFATIP. It also requests the Government to continue to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of perpetrators of child trafficking are carried out and to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of trafficking. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it continues to build the capacity of its workers and other stakeholders to identify and protect victims of trafficking in persons. The Committee notes, however, the Government's indication that the statistical data on the number of children reached by the measures taken are not available, as this information is not being recorded, and that efforts will be undertaken to address the gap. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent children from falling victims to trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation and to provide for their removal from such situations and subsequent rehabilitation and social integration, and requests it to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that information is available on the results achieved, in terms of the number of children reached through such measures, and to provide this information in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jordan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. In response to the Committee's previous observation that a significant number of children under the minimum age were engaged in child labour and in hazardous work in Jordan, the Government communicates, in its report, detailed information on the policies it has adopted to combat child labour in the country. The Committee takes note, in particular, of the National Strategy to stop child labour 2022–30 and its 2022 implementation plan, which includes various dimensions and strategic objectives for the prevention of, and protection from, child labour. Its three main components are: (1) prevention, awareness-raising and advocacy, to foster a public attitude that considers child labour as socially unacceptable; (2) interventions aimed at implementing the measures contained within the National Framework to Combat Child Labour and Begging of 2020, according to which the identification of child labourers and their protection is managed on a case-by-case basis; and (3) reintegration of child labourers, through support and social protection for the families of children at risk. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour and to provide information on the specific measures taken, particularly under the framework of the National Strategy to stop child labour 2022–30, and the results achieved in this regard.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. Following its previous request that the Government take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate and to expand the labour inspection services to all sectors, the Committee takes note of the Government's detailed information regarding the activities of the labour inspectorate, including the establishment of an Inspection Department to Stop Child Labour and the holding of several trainings to develop the capacity of labour inspectors for the identification, prevention and case management of child labour. It notes with interest that the Instructions on procedures for inspecting agricultural activity of 2021 – adopted pursuant to the new Agricultural Workers Regulation No. 19 of 2021 that sets a minimum age of 16 years for employment of any kind in agricultural work and of 18 years in hazardous agricultural work (section 6) – establish detailed procedures for labour inspections in the agricultural sector. According to section 6 of the Instructions, labour inspectors are authorized to enter not only the agricultural establishment, but also worker accommodations and private homes within the agricultural holding, if such exists. Labour inspectors are authorized to issue warnings or violation reports to the agricultural employers who are in contravention with the law (section 5). In addition, the Committee notes the Government's information on the other measures taken to strengthen the labour inspectorate, including to monitor recruitment agencies for the potential recruitment of underage non-Jordanian domestic workers and the surveillance of establishments operating in the textile and garment sector to verify their compliance with international labour standards, including on child labour.

The Committee further takes note of the statistics shared by the Government on the number of child labour-specific inspection visits made from 2021 to July 2022 in all sectors, including in agriculture: 36,714 visits revealed 1,291 cases of child labour; 452 warnings were issued to employers and 170 violation reports were issued. It observes, however, that there is an absence of information regarding the application of the penalties provided under the Labour Code (section 77(a)), or any other applicable legislation, on employers who have employed children under the minimum age. The Committee reminds the Government that it is necessary to ensure the application of the Convention by means of penalties set out in the legislation (General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, para. 409). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons found to be in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are prosecuted and that adequate penalties are imposed. It also requests the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the functioning of the labour inspectorate to enable it to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, including children working in agriculture, domestic work and in the textile and garment sector. Finally, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number and nature of violations detected by the labour inspectorate related to children engaged in child labour, as well as on the penalties applied.

Application of the Convention in practice. Statistics on child labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice. In particular, it requests the Government to provide statistics on the employment of children under the age of 16, as well as on the employment of children under the age of 18 in hazardous work, disaggregated by age, gender and sector of economic activity.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Refugee children. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the Government's information, in its report, regarding the measures taken to protect child refugees from the worst forms of child labour. The Government indicates, firstly, that inspection visits do not discriminate between Jordanian and other children and that complaints are followed up regardless of the applicant's nationality. Moreover, the Department to Stop Child Labour, of the Ministry of Labour, oversees and implements various projects, including a project to combat the worst forms of child labour in agriculture and the Case Management Services project for the protection of children in host communities (with the support of UNICEF). The Committee also takes note of the ILO's cross-cutting development-focused strategy, adopted as part of the wider UN-response to the refugee crisis, which supports both refugees and host community residents in order to preserve social and economic stability as well as realise the rights of both to decent work and social justice.

The Committee notes, however, that according to the UNICEF report on Socio-Economic Assessment and Practices in Jerash Camp of 2021 (which houses over 31,000 refugees), many socio-economic issues are still prevalent among child refugees. The report reveals not only that child labour is a prevalent issue in Jerash Camp (21 per cent of households reporting child labour in the six-months reporting period in 2021), but that all the children working in the camp are involved in some kind of hazardous work: 65 per cent reported that their children are exposed to extreme cold or heat; 62 per cent reported long working hours; 54 per cent are exposed to fumes or dust; 49 per cent have to carry heavy loads; 31 per cent work with dangerous tools; and 31 per cent work on heights. Also, 14 per cent of the households reported that their children were exposed to dangerous chemicals.

Moreover, even in the households where children were not working, 42 per cent reported that they would accept to work, should the opportunity have been offered. As a result, the report indicates that child labour figures, including in hazardous work, were underrepresented during the reporting period. This can certainly be explained by the variety of vulnerability factors which affects the residents of the camp, including particularly high poverty rates due to several legal restrictions related to their non-citizen status that limit their rights and add to the barriers that stand between them and their access to employment opportunities, health care, educational opportunities, and other social services. In fact, nearly 60 per cent of the households reported education as their priority need, and health and child protection are key services that households in the camp prioritize. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to improve the socio-economic situation of refugees in the country, in order to reduce the vulnerability of refugee children and protect them from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, from the various projects being implemented with the support of the ILO and UNICEF, in terms of number of refugee children who have received the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Children in street situations. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of the National Framework to Combat Child Labour and Begging of 2020 which aims to identify children who are at risk of engaging in some form of work and/or being on the streets for begging and/or for the purposes of selling, regardless of their affiliation or origin, or whether they are refugee children and/or in host communities and/or other conditions and circumstances, including those who drop out of school. The National Framework defines four response phases to identified cases of child labour: (1) detection and reporting; (2) immediate response; (3) intervention; and (4) procedure of closure of the case file. The National Framework is accompanied by the 2020 Manual on applied measures for its implementation, which sets out the detailed procedures, institutional coordination, referral mechanisms and communication networks for the case-by-case management of child labour and child begging cases and the reintegration of these children into education. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures adopted in the framework of the National Framework to Combat Child Labour and Begging of 2020 on the protection of children in street situations from the worst forms of child labour, including information on the number of such children who have been rescued and provided with assistance.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex, received on 31 August 2022.

Labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that in 2021, nine cases of the use of child labour involving 29 children were identified. The Government further indicates that children involved in child labour usually work as sellers, waiters and at car wash stations. In addition, the Government indicates that in 2022, more than 7,000 raids were carried out during the annual National Information Campaign "12 days against child labour".

The Committee notes from the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex that despite the prohibition in law, child labour continues to exist in practice, particularly due to the lack of effective coordination between state agencies and insufficient trainings of the relevant bodies. The Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex also refers to the findings of a sociological survey undertaken in the Pavlodar region of Kazakhstan, according to which 50 out of 76 respondents aged 12 years and above were engaged in employment.

The Committee further observes that in its detailed comments made in relation to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) and the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), it had noted various limitations and restrictions of labour inspections, including the introduction of a temporary moratorium on labour inspections, which applies to private and state-owned enterprises belonging to the categories of small and micro-enterprises. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to adequately monitor and detect cases of child labour in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect as well as on the number of inspections on child labour carried out by state labour inspectors as well as by other agencies, and on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties imposed in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex, received on 31 August 2022.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Trafficking of children. The Committee observes the Government's indication, in its report, that Kazakhstan remains a source, transit, and destination country for victims of trafficking in persons, including children. The Committee also observes that the Plan of Action to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons Offences for 2021-2023 provides for activities to prevent, detect, and suppress offences related to trafficking of children. The Committee further observes from the Government's report that the maximum term of imprisonment for trafficking of children was increased from seven to nine years by the Act No. 292-V of 27 December 2019 amending section 135 of the Criminal Code. The Government indicates that in 2021, there were 10 cases of investigations under section 135 of the Criminal Code resulting in the conviction of 21 persons, out of which 15 persons were sanctioned to imprisonment. The Government also refers to the elaboration of a draft Act on combating trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that all cases of child trafficking are subject to thorough investigations with a view to ensuring that perpetrators are prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any developments made in respect of the elaboration and adoption of an Act on combating trafficking in persons and indicate its provisions as regards child trafficking. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of section 135 of the Criminal Code in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions applied.

Article 3(c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes that the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex, in its observations, refers to cases of the recruitment of children as distributors of drugs and a lack of information concerning the measures taken by the Government to prevent and suppress such practices. The Committee further notes that according to section 132 of the Criminal Code, the involvement of a child in the commission of a criminal offence is punishable with imprisonment of three to six years. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure the elimination of practices of the use, procuring or offering of a young person under 18 years of age for the production and trafficking of drugs, in accordance with Article 3(c) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 132 of the Criminal Code in practice as regards the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production and trafficking of drugs, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions applied.

Article 3(d) and application of the Convention in practice. Hazardous work on tobacco and cotton plantations. The Committee observes that the Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour for 2020-2022 and the Plan of Action to Prevent and Combat Trafficking in Persons Offences for 2021-2023 provide for activities to prevent child labour, including in cotton fields, tobacco plantations, construction and other sectors. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that measures have been taken to eradicate child labour in the tobacco and cotton industries.

The Committee further notes that the Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex refers to the findings of a sociological survey undertaken in the Pavlodar region of Kazakhstan, according to which 34 per cent of respondents aged of 12 years and above were engaged in the agricultural and construction sectors, including working excessive working hours. The Committee also notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR) expressed concern that, despite the efforts made by Kazakhstan, child labour by migrant and Kazakh children persists, including in tobacco, cotton and agriculture farms (E/C.12/KAZ/CO/2, para. 38). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children from hazardous work in agriculture, particularly in cotton and tobacco plantations, and provide information on the number of inspections carried out in these sectors. It further requests the Government to provide information on the results of these inspections, including the number of violations detected and penalties applied.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee observes from the Government's indication that children of foreigners and stateless persons permanently residing in Kazakhstan have equal rights to education as citizens of Kazakhstan (section 8(2) of the Act on Education of 2007). The Government also indicates that the local authorities ensure school placement of migrant children. According to the Government, in the 2020-21 education year, 20,367 migrant children studied at schools in Kazakhstan.

The Committee notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the CESCR expressed concern, while recognizing the efforts made by Kazakhstan, that there are large regional disparities in access to and the quality of education and many children of unregistered migrants do not have access to education or schoolbooks (E/C.12/KAZ/CO/2, paras 48(a)(e) and 49(a)). The Committee further observes from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) Institute for Statistics that the total number of out-of-school children of primary and lower secondary school age increased from 17,080 in 2019 to 145,271 in 2020. Recalling that access to free basic education is key in preventing the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all children have access to free basic education, including migrant children. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on school enrolment, completion and dropout rates at the primary and lower secondary levels. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age, gender and national extraction.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, in which the Committee had taken note of the Policy on Elimination of Child Labour (NPCL) and of the National Plan of Action for Children 2015–22, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide information, in its report, on the development of a new national policy on child labour. The Government does, however, provide information on measures taken to combat child labour in the country. In particular, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Steering Committee, chaired by the Principal Secretary State Department for Labour and Skills Development, in coordination with the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection's (MoLSP) Child Labour Division, and comprising employers' and workers' organizations, is the apex body that formulates policies and monitors the implementation of child labour policies and action plans.

The Committee also takes note of the child protection measures taken by the Government which can contribute to the elimination of child labour by mitigating certain factors that could lead children to work. For instance, the Government indicates that social protection programmes providing cash transfers to some of the most vulnerable families, continue to help preventing children from entering the workforce. In addition, the Committee takes note of the adoption of the Children Act No. 29 of 2022 and of the establishment of the National Council for Children's Services (NCCS), which is its implementing body, which seek to ensure the protection and rights of children, including through such programmes as the National Care Reform Strategy 2022–32.

The Committee notes, however, that according to a press release from 14 March 2023 from the MoLSP, the figures of the last Child Labour Analytical Report developed in June 2008, which then indicated that 1.01 million children were in child labour have likely increased mainly due to the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic and the severe drought being experienced in the Horn of Africa. Indeed, according to a press release published jointly by the ILO and UNICEF on 12 June 2021, data from the Kenya National Bureau of Statistics (KNBS) shows that 8.5 percent of children, or 1.3 million, are engaged in child labour. The highest child labour rates, at more than 30 percent, are in the arid and semi-arid land (ASAL) counties. The COVID-19 pandemic also had an important impact, with a growing number of families at risk of resorting to sending their children to work given massive job losses. In this regard, the Committee notes that the MoLSP announced that, in collaboration with the ILO, Kenya was set to conduct a Child Labour Survey in 2023 in order to produce accurate and reliable data on child labour in the country and ultimately, to inform planning and implementation of targeted programmes. While taking note of certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee must once again express its concern at the significant number of children who are involved in child labour, including in hazardous work. The Committee accordingly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation of children under the age of 16 years and to provide information on the impact of these measures on the progressive elimination of child labour in the country. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to develop, adopt and implement targeted plans of action on the elimination of child labour, based on the information collected through the new Child Labour Survey. It also requests the Government to communicate the data collected through this survey, in particular on the nature, extent and trends of child labour, and indicating the sectors of economic activity where child labour is most prevalent. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of its child protection policies on the elimination of child labour.

The Committee is also raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking of children. In response to the Committee's previous observation that child trafficking constitutes the main category of trafficking cases reported in the country and that children are trafficked to work as domestic labourers, work in farming, fisheries, begging and for sex work in the coastal region of Kenya, the Government indicates, in its report, that it is instituting stringent measures to dissuade child trafficking. In this regard, the Government indicates that an amendment to the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act was drafted to remove the option of a fine in lieu of imprisonment for the offence of trafficking. According to the Government's information in its report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the review of the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act is in its final stages.

Moreover, the Government indicates that, in 2020–21, the Office of the Director of Prosecution reported 17 cases of child trafficking under the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act, 2010, and that there were six convictions, one acquittal and six withdrawals.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee (UNHCR), in its concluding observations of 11 May 2021, expressed concern about the low rate of convictions for child trafficking (CCPR/C/KEN/CO/4, para. 34(b)). Indeed, the Committee observes that both the number of reported cases of child trafficking and the number of convictions appear to be low considering the prevalence of the phenomenon in the country, and the fact that the incidence of trafficking, including child trafficking, appears to be on the rise in the country (according to the National Council on Children's Services (NCCS), an estimated 17,500 Kenyans are trafficked annually for domestic work, forced labour, and commercial sexual exploitation, of which 50 per cent are likely to be minors). The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that cases of trafficking of children under the age of 18 are detected and that investigations and prosecutions are conducted against the perpetrators. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved, including with regard to the number and nature of convictions and penalties imposed. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in, and removing them from, the worst forms of child labour, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. In response to its previous observation regarding the significant number of children engaged in commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in travel and tourism, the Committee notes that, in the framework of the National Plan of Action against Sexual Exploitation of Children 2018-22 (NAP-SEC), several activities were planned, namely in the focus areas of identification; prevention; protection; and rescue, rehabilitation and reintegration. The Government indicates in this regard that it has sensitized hotel operators in tourist destinations and developed a Tourism Child Protection Code, which binds the 40 signatory hotels to protect children from commercial sexual exploitation. Moreover, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has established child protection units in police stations to respond to crimes against children and continued to partner with counter-human trafficking NGOs to create awareness, rescue and reintegration of child survivors. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take targeted effective and time-bound measures to protect children from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in the coastal regions of Kenya. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who have been reached out to, removed and rehabilitated, as well as on the types of services they have benefited from for their rehabilitation.

Article 7(2)(d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Child domestic workers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is taking several measures to protect children from hazardous work, including in domestic work. The Committee observes that the Government refers to measures related to the general protection of vulnerable families, such as cash transfer programmes, and the improvement of education rates.

While such programmes can contribute to preventing the engagement of children in hazardous domestic work, the Committee stresses that the Government should also take measures to identify the children under the age of 18 who engage in such work and remove them and socially integrate them. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children engaged in domestic work from hazardous working conditions and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information according to which the Cash Transfer Programme for OVCs continues to be operational and is currently supporting 278,188 beneficiaries across the 47 counties. The Government also indicates that it is allocating a significant budget to education and that it has made gains in reaching remote areas and disadvantaged communities at primary and pre-primary levels.

The Committee observes, however, that according to the UNAIDS 2022 Kenya country factsheet, there remain an estimated 590,000 child orphans of HIV/AIDS in the country. Once again recalling that OVCs are at a greater risk of being involved in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that they are protected from the worst forms of child labour and to facilitate their access to education. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the effective and time bound measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved in terms of number of OVCs who have benefited from such measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Kiribati

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2009)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy for the effective abolition of child labour. In response to its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government in its report on the measures taken to protect children from child labour. It also notes that Kiribati's Child Labour Task Force, which was established by the Decent Work Advisory Board (DWAB), met in April 2023. The meeting was attended by representatives from the Ministry of Employment and Human Resources (MEHR), the Kiribati Police Service (KPS), the Kiribati Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the Ministry of Justice, the Ministry of Women, Youth, Sport and Social Affairs (MWYSSA), the Office of the Attorney-General, the Ministry of Education and the National Statistics Office (NSO). During the meeting, the priorities identified included the finalization of the terms of reference of the Task Force and the formulation of a National Action Plan against child labour, for which the stakeholders requested ILO technical assistance. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the National Action Plan against child labour is adopted in the near future, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously expressed the hope that the Government would take the necessary measures to ensure that the minimum age for admission to employment or work (which was 14 years of age) was not less than the age of completion of compulsory schooling (15 years of age), in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes with interest that the section 115(1) of the Employment and Industrial Relations Code (EIRC) was amended in 2021 and raises the general minimum age for employment from 14 to 15 years, thus linking it with the age of completion of compulsory education.

The Committee further notes that Kiribati initially specified a minimum age of 14 years upon ratification. In this regard, it takes the opportunity to draw the Government's attention to the provisions of Article 2(2) of the Convention which provides that any Member having ratified this Convention may subsequently notify the Director-General of the ILO, by a new declaration, that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified. The Committee would be grateful if the Government would consider the possibility of sending a declaration of this nature to the Office.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. Regarding the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee notes the Government's information according to which the Hazardous Work Regulations, elaborated pursuant to section 117 of the EIRC, are currently being finalized at the Office of the Attorney-General and will be endorsed before the end of the year. The Committee further notes that, during its April 2023 meeting, the Child Labour Taskforce identified that the adoption of the Hazardous Work Regulations was an immediate priority. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age will be adopted and enforced without delay, and to provide a copy of the list, once adopted.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Light Work Regulations, elaborated pursuant to section 116 of the EIRC (as amended in 2017), are currently being finalized at the Office of the Attorney-General and will be endorsed before the end of the year.

Regarding the removal of the requirement, in amended section 116 of the EIRC, that light work not prejudice the child's participation in vocational training nor his or her ability to benefit from vocational training, the Government indicates that this is due to administrative directives relevant to prioritizing formal education in lieu of vocational training. Further consultations will be made to consider the re-inclusion of the requirements pertaining to vocational training in this provision of the EIRC. The Committee trusts that the list of light work will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to supply information on the progress made in this regard, as well as on the results of the consultations held to consider the re-inclusion of the requirements pertaining to vocational training in section 116 of the EIRC.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. Regarding the Committee's previous request that the Government provide information on the application in practice of the penalties provided for in sections 115(6) (minimum age for employment) and 117(4) (minimum age for hazardous work) of the EIRC, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that there is nothing to report. In this regard, the Government highlights the need to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies. It further indicates that there are plans in place to conduct awareness-raising on the EIRC to police stations to ensure better enforcement and monitoring of the application of the provisions of this Convention.

The Committee further notes that, during the April 2023 meeting of the Child Labour Task Force, the MEHR confirmed it still lacks capacity to carry out labour inspections regularly to specifically monitor and eliminate child labour issues. The MEHR has no designated labour inspectors as such. There are only two or three labour officers within the MEHR for the entire country, who are attributed many other tasks and lack capacity to carry out regular labour inspections. Moreover, the MEHR stated that they have not been able to recruit more labour inspectors who would be able to work throughout the outer islands in Kiribati. The MEHR is talking more closely with other Ministries, including MWYSSA whose social welfare officers have wider reach in the outer islands, so that the issues relating to the Convention, including monitoring and enforcement, can be included in training sessions for social welfare officers. The MEHR also stated that it needs further support to develop labour inspection regulations and systems, including checklists and pamphlets. While taking note of the challenges encountered by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate, with a view to effectively implement the penalties under sections 115(6) and 117(4) of the EIRC. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the application of these penalties in practice, indicating the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed. It also requests the Government to report on the impact of the awareness-raising conducted on the EIRC to police stations on the better enforcement and monitoring of the provisions giving effect to the Convention.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a recent Child Labour Survey, conducted by the NSO, reveals that one in four children aged 15 to 17 in Kiribati experience child labour. The Government indicates that the NSO is willing to consider amending future National Census questionnaires to cater to the needed data on child labour and include all children up to 17 years of age. It further indicates that the KPS, through funding support from UNICEF and UN Women and the assistance of a technical consultant, are currently working to develop a database that will centralize data on offences and issues reported to the KPS, and that will provide another means to centralize and store data on child labour. Finally, the Committee notes that, during the April 2023 meeting of the Child Labour Taskforce, one of the priorities identified was the collection and collation of data on child labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to develop a statistical database including information on the number of children below the minimum age of 15 engaged in child labour, and requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of children engaged in child labour in the country, disaggregated by sector.

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee takes note of the Government's information, in its report, communicated in response to its previous comments regarding the practice of child prostitution and sexual exploitation, in particular on foreign fishing vessels and among vulnerable populations. It notes the Government's indication that, to prevent the exploitation of children in prostitution and to help the Government address this issue, the relevant authorities have initiated certain activities. For example, the Ministry of Fisheries and Marine Resources Development (MFMRD) has recently amended its Fisheries Act to restrict unauthorized personnel from boarding local and foreign fishing vessels licensed in Kiribati, including for prostitution. Moreover, the Ministry of Justice (MOJ) has established the Kiribati National Human Rights Taskforce to monitor the implementation of the Penal Code and other laws against those who facilitate and benefit from the exploitation of girls and young women in prostitution and to ensure that law enforcement officers are in full compliance with the principles and provisions of the law against exploitation of prostitution.

However, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that there are still no official records of children in prostitution, which the Government acknowledges and points to the need to strengthen and implement its laws and regulations. The Government indicates that recent consultations with relevant authorities such as the Ministry of Women, Youth, Sports and Social Affairs (MWYSSA) and the Kiribati Police Service (KPS) have revealed that one reason for lack of enforcement is due to lack of awareness of the Employment and Industrial Relations Code, 2015 (EIRC), more specifically on its provisions that are in line with this Convention. Moreover, the Committee observes that the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 12 September 2022, expressed concern that the commercial sexual exploitation of children, in particular girls, is increasing and that there are no formal procedures to identify children who are victims of trafficking and no information on cases against traffickers (CRC/C/KIR/CO/2-4, para. 55). The Committee requests the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies in order to ensure the identification, investigation and prosecution of perpetrators of the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years for prostitution. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made and results achieved in this regard, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and penalties applied.

Clause (d) and Article 4. Hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work. Regarding the determination of hazardous types of work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Regarding the Committee's previous request that the Government provide information on the establishment of the Child Labour Taskforce, the Committee notes that the Taskforce was established under the authority of the Ministry of Employment and Human Resources (MEHR). A meeting was held in April 2023 gathering the relevant stakeholders, namely the MWYSSA, the KPS, the Ministry of Education and the Office of the Attorney General, during which the adoption of the terms of reference of the Taskforce was identified as a priority.

Regarding the Committee's previous comments on the pilot inspection project throughout South Tarawa with a focus on places of high risk of child labour, the Committee notes that the MEHR stated, during the April 2023 meeting of the Child Labour Taskforce, that the outcome of this project was the confirmation of the prevalence of children working in the worst forms of child labour, including in hazardous work, and the need for increased capacity and awareness for MEHR, the KPS and MWYSSA. In addition, the MEHR stated they require further resources to commit to inspections, to cover allowances (particularly for night-time inspections) and transport. Moreover, while the Government indicates that consultations and awareness-raising on labour laws for concerned law enforcement bodies are anticipated, especially the KPS, the Committee notes that there have not been any specialized trainings for the labour inspectorate to identify the worst forms of child labour. The Committee once again strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the labour inspectors, the KPS and other relevant law enforcement bodies are provided with the appropriate training, sufficient resources and capacities to effectively monitor the worst forms of child labour, including in the informal economy and in areas where there is a high risk of the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these worst forms and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, while the MWYSSA and other relevant ministries provide support to children who are sexually exploited for commercial purposes and have initiated programmes to prevent this phenomenon, the lack of resources (financial and human) is affecting the motivation of the relevant official personnel from undertaking their role in mitigating the issue of child exploitation and child labour. This is further exacerbated by the lack of data implicating the development of measures and appropriate care and assistance to be provided in this case. The Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its measures to prevent the engagement of children in commercial sexual exploitation, and to remove them from this worst form of child labour as well as to rehabilitate and socially integrate them. In this regard, it strongly encourages the Government to take measures to strengthen the capacities of the officials in charge of providing support to the child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, through the provision of financial, human or any other necessary resources. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the indication provided by the Government in its report concerning the elaboration of a draft Program for the Protection of Children for 2023–26 and a plan for its implementation. The Government also indicates that the draft plan contains measures aimed at the elimination of child labour, including awareness-raising activities. The Committee further observes that according to the 2020 publication of the National Statistical Committee of Kyrgyzstan “Monitoring of the Sustainable Development Goal Indicators in the Kyrgyz Republic”, the percentage of children aged 5–17 years engaged in child labour amounted to 26.7 per cent in 2018. The Committee notes with concern, from the same publication, that the largest proportion of children engaged in child labour is in the 5–11 years age group (27.9 per cent) in comparison with the 12–14 years age group (23.3 per cent) and the 15–17 years age group (26.6 per cent). While noting some measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to step up its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, particularly within the framework of the Program for the Protection of Children for 2023–26, and the results achieved. It further requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly updated statistical data on the employment of children and young persons by age and gender.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously requested the Government to ensure the protection of children in the informal economy and children working on family farms, including by strengthening the labour inspection services. In this respect, the Government refers to the establishment of the Service for Control and Supervision of Labour Legislation (the Service) in 2021. According to the Government, labour inspectors of the Service annually conduct inspections of all enterprises and organizations, regardless of the form of ownership, to ensure compliance with labour legislation relating to the labour of young persons and children. In addition, labour inspectors of the Service, together with officials of district departments of internal affairs and social workers, carry out inspections to detect cases of child labour. The Committee, however, notes the Government’s indication that labour inspectors are not entitled to carry out unannounced inspections since an employer shall be warned in writing about the inspection at least 10 days in advance. Therefore, according to the Government, even in the presence of the use of child labour, by the time of the scheduled inspection, the facts of child labour are almost impossible to detect. Referring to its detailed comments under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), on the various limitations and restrictions of labour inspection, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate in order to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, including in the informal economy and on family farms. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government’s report concerning the measures taken to determine light work activities permitted for children aged 14–16. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to determine light work activities permitted for children aged 14–16, as required by Article 7(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that in Kyrgyzstan, there is no practice of keeping, by employers, of registers of persons under the age of 18 whom they employ. The Government further indicates that this issue will be considered by a tripartite national commission. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to ensure that employers in all sectors are required to maintain a register containing the names, age (or dates of birth) of all persons under the age of 18 years whom they employ, as required by Article 9(3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Kyrgyzstan Federation of Trade Unions (FPK), received on 1 November 2022.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report regarding the measures and results achieved in preventing and combatting trafficking of children within the framework of the Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2017–2020. The Committee further notes the adoption of the Program to Combat Trafficking in Persons for 2022-2025 (the Program) and the Action Plan for its implementation by the Cabinet of Ministers' Resolution of 15 April 2022, No. 227. As indicated in the Program for 2022-2025, the issues of detection and identification of child victims of trafficking remain a problem due to the low level of knowledge of public officials about the specifics of the identification procedures. The Committee also observes that the Action Plan for 2022-2025 provides for measures to guarantee the rights and interests of child victims of trafficking. The Committee further notes that according to section 167(1) of the Criminal Code adopted in 2021, trafficking of children is punishable with imprisonment of from five to eight years. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking of children, including by strengthening the capacity of law enforcement agencies in identifying child victims of trafficking under 18 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of the monitoring and evaluation of the implementation of the Program for 2022-2025 in relation to combating trafficking of children, as stipulated in section 9 of the Program. It also requests the Government to supply statistical data on the application of section 167 of the Criminal Code in practice in cases of trafficking of children for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation, including the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions applied.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Criminal Code of 2019 punished the organization or maintenance of dens for prostitution or procuring for debauchery or pimping by persons, with the involvement of children who they know have not reached the age of 16 years. The Committee requested the Government to ensure that the corresponding provisions of the Criminal Code cover children between the ages of 16 and 18 years. The Committee notes with interest that the new Criminal Code adopted in 2021, in its section 160(2), read together with section 9 of the annex, punishes with imprisonment from seven to 15 years and confiscation of property, the use of children under 18 years of age in the organization or maintenance of dens for prostitution or procuring them for debauchery or pimping. The Committee further notes that section 159(3) of the Criminal Code sets out imprisonment of 10 to 15 years, with confiscation of property, for the involvement of a child under 18 years of age in prostitution. The Committee however notes once again the absence of the legislative provisions criminalizing clients who use children under 18 years of age for the purpose of prostitution. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to criminalize clients who use children under 18 years of age for prostitution, and to establish penal sanctions for this purpose. It further requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 159(3) and 160(2) of the Criminal Code of 2021, including the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penal sanctions applied, as well as the number and age of child victims of prostitution who are identified.

Clause (d) and Article 4(3). Hazardous work and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. Children working in agriculture. Further to its previous request to ensure the adoption of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee notes with satisfaction that such a list was adopted by the Government's Decree of 13 November 2020, No. 565. The Government indicates that the list contains 579 hazardous types of work, including work in agriculture.

The Committee further notes the FPK's observations indicating that, in 2019, 229 children under 18 years of age, including 209 boys and 20 girls, were identified as working in hazardous or arduous conditions during the 64 joint raids by law enforcement and social services agencies. The FPK also indicates that with a view to preventing children from undertaking hazardous work on tobacco plantations, measures were taken to reduce tobacco production and decrease the tobacco-growing areas. As a result, the areas under tobacco cultivation decreased from 2,000 hectares in 2014 to 400 hectares in 2019. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that children under 18 years of age are protected from hazardous work, particularly in the cotton, tobacco, and rice-growing sectors. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to ensure the effective implementation of the Government's Decree of 13 November 2020, No. 565 issuing the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for young persons under 18 years of age, and to provide information on its application in practice, including statistics on the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed for engaging children under 18 years of age in hazardous work.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking in children. Noting the absence of information in the Government's report, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to pursue its efforts to provide the necessary direct assistance to child victims of trafficking, and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. In this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking under the age of 18 who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration assistance and the establishment and operation of specialized shelters for victims of trafficking in persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, on the various measures taken by the Government to eliminate child labour, including: (1) the publication of posters and brochures on child labour for the general public; (2) capacity-building and training on the implementation of the National Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014–20) for government organizations, tripartite organizations and the private sector to allow these actors to better recognize and understand child labour; (3) coordination with partners to monitor the implementation of the National Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour at the central and local levels; and (4) cooperation with the ILO to re-evaluate the implementation of the National Action Plan in the period 2016–20 and jointly create a plan for the period 2021–25. The Government also repeats the information that it has collected data and created a report on the prevention and elimination of child labour, but once again it does not provide the corresponding data. The Committee further notes, from the ILO Decent Work Country

Programme 2022–25, that: (1) overall, women and children in rural areas were most affected by the negative impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic, including increased child labour; and (2) a Labour Force Survey was conducted in 2021–22, which includes a child labour component, but it has not been published yet. Recalling that, in 2017, 41.5 per cent of children aged 5–14 years were engaged in child labour, including in hazardous work, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities, and to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide: (i) detailed information on the results achieved through the implementation of the National Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014–2020); (ii) a copy of the updated National Action Plan once adopted; and (iii) a copy of the updated Labour Force Survey once it is published.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare adopted the Agreement on Labour Inspectors No. 2803/MoLSW, dated 13 September 2022, which provides for the deployment of a total of 159 inspectors, up from 77 inspectors in 2019. However, the Government also states that child labour inspections at workplaces across the country did not find any cases of child labour. Recalling the high number of children engaged in child labour in the country, including in the informal economy and in hazardous work, the Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts, without delay, to adapt and reinforce the capacities of the labour inspection services so that they can adequately monitor and detect cases of child labour, in the formal and informal economy. It again requests the Government to provide information on the practical implementation of inspections conducted by labour inspectors with regard to child labour, including information on the number and nature of offences reported. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that section 4 of the Ministerial Decree No. 4182/MoLSW on the List of Hazardous Works for Young Persons, of 2018, permits children from 14 to 18 years to engage in hazardous work provided they receive sufficient training, technical guidance, instructions and safety tools. It notes the Government's indication that it is working on updating the list of hazardous work. Recalling that pursuant to Article 3(3) of the Convention, this exemption is only permitted for young persons from 16 years of age, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the Ministerial Decree of 2018 into conformity with the Convention, by ensuring that children under 16 years of age may not, under any circumstances, be authorized to perform hazardous work. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved to this end.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 9.10.11 of the Law on Technical and Vocational Education and Training of 2013 does not set a minimum age for engagement in apprenticeships. In this regard, the Committee emphasizes the importance of setting a minimum age for admission to apprenticeship of at least 14 years to ensure that no child under that age undertakes an apprenticeship, as required by Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Law on Technical and Vocational Education and Training of 2013 is amended so as to set a minimum age of at least 14 years for entering an apprenticeship programme, in accordance with the Convention.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that section 215 of the Penal Code (as amended) provides a penalty of 15 to 20 years imprisonment and a fine for the offence of trafficking in children. It notes, from the Government's report on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) that, between 1 June 2022 and 10 January 2023, 128 cases relating to trafficking in persons were prosecuted, 228 offenders were brought to trial, 56 cases were sent to the prosecutor, 51 cases were received by the people's court and 50 cases were decided. The maximum sentence imposed by the court was 15 years and 3 months, and the maximum fine was LAK600,000,000 (approximately US$30,000). The Committee notes that this information is not disaggregated by age of the victims.

The Committee further notes, from the Government's report to the United Nations Human Rights Council (HRC) Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, that the Government is taking measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement officers to prevent and combat human trafficking. In this report, the Government also indicates that it is taking measures to raise-awareness of relevant international treaties and domestic law in efforts to strengthen village authorities and those working in the area of anti-human trafficking at the local level, to have a clear and common understanding of the work to be done (A/HRC/WG.6/35/LAO/1, 11 November 2019, para. 35). The Committee recalls that in its conclusions adopted in June 2019, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) urged the Government to establish a monitoring mechanism in order to follow-up on complaints filed and investigations carried out, as well as to ensure an impartial process of prosecuting cases that takes into account the special requirements of child victims, such as protecting their identity and the ability to give evidence behind closed doors. The Conference Committee also recalled that the sexual exploitation of children, mainly girls, by both locals and foreigners, and the sale and trafficking of children for sexual and labour exploitation, both internally and externally, are issues of utmost concern in the country. The Committee notes the absence of information from the Government on this point. While taking note of certain measures to raise awareness of law enforcement officials about trafficking in persons, the Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, by ensuring that traffickers, including complicit officials, as well as child sex tourists, are held accountable, through thorough investigations and prosecutions, as well as through the imposition of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. It requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken to this end; and (ii) the application in practice of the relevant provisions of the Anti-Human Trafficking Law and section 215 of the Penal Code, indicating in particular the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offences of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children under 18 years of age.
